Be the Best Version of Yourself

2/16/2016

Accept all. Never settle for anything less than your best work. Be the best version of yourself. And never sell yourself short in life. -We are not required to love or be loved in order to be happy feel whole all that is required of us is to be accepting of ourselves and others. -Acceptance is key to happiness. When we accept others as they are and ourselves more dreams come to fruition because we see what we have not [what we] have not. -It's impossible to be happy when all you do is harp on the negatives and what you have not. You've got more than you think even on empty. -Emptiness and solitude [are] a product of hard work, appreciate your time alone to reflect but don't waste that time beating yourself up. -We are best social when we feel whole have had time to reflect and correct our mistakes in life and step forward anew. Out with the old in with the new. -We are constantly being tested in life it's all apart of learning and growing up. Cut your losses, learn from your mistakes, and never give up. -What may seem difficult now will pass, eventually we see all things clear we had not before once a lesson is learned. Growing up is a process. -Solutions only become apparent once we do the work we need to accomplish in order to see our dreams become a reality -nothing occurs with regret. -When we live in regret and with resentment all we do is absorb pain not the reality of the present moment which we have to build a better future. -We cannot build a better future for ourselves worrying about the past, living with regret, and carrying resentments. Eventually one must let go. -It is important to let go if and only when you have sought help from others or reflected on your own what it is that bothers you to move forward. -Nothing forward can be achieved if problems are left that turn into unsettling distractions later on, deal with everything one day at a time. -No problem is too big for any one person to handle who is willing to seek help and be willing to open themselves up to change and acceptance. -Sometimes problems are not evident on their face but clearer to an outsider who has just met you, nothing alarming, just a fact of life. -Do not be insulted by anyone who tried to help you, or cure a defect of character. They are going out of their way to care [for you]. -Be thankful for everyone who comes into your life whether forever or just a moment -a lesson is always to be learned through human interaction. -For every interaction you become stronger as a person, the more people you meet the more you learn about yourself. -The more you isolate the more you suffer because you are restricting your ability to adapt to people, change, fear, and social anxieties.

Never be afraid of anything that challenges you

Never be afraid of anything that challenges you in life. Good things come to those who least expect it, those who try the hardest despite the odds. Anything worth trying for and achieving in life [rarely] comes easy -anything worth trying for [is worth it] because it changes us challenges us. You are only at your best when you are doing your best. Your best cannot be achieved languishing and loathing but only by sheer sweat, pain, [and determination]. Discipline is pain because you are forced to withdraw from those realities which create highs fully self-absorbed, step outside of yourself. Step outside of yourself and be disciplined Professional it's the only way to achieve with a purpose greater than yourself is for the best purpose. -We are only knowledgeable based on what we absorb, nothing can be learned by self absorption alone, reading and listening is required to grow. -Self absorption fuels hatred for self. The more we know about ourselves the less we like ourselves because then we compare ourselves to others. -If you focus on others, learning about others, helping others, the better off you'll be; the more accepting of self and others you'll be. -Based on my experiences -I'm the most in tune with others while helping others and the least in tune when I'm only helping myself not growing. -Like Trees (I read about earlier on Twitter) [1] Humans cannot grow alone but are dependent on one another to grow. -Best to absorb your surroundings not yourself. Best to love yourself only so far as it enables you to love and have love for others. -Love for self is not required to love another. It's a sad truth that we can love another but not love ourselves enough to care for the same. -If you cannot love and care for yourself you cannot love and care for another to your full potential nor receive the love you think you deserve. When you do not love yourself more love is required from another/others in order to feel loved -that's too arduous for the other to compensate. -Never require others to compensate their needs to fulfill the needs of yours. -Be respectful of that individuals need to be fulfilled -fulfilling the needs of others other than [your own]. -If that's where the satisfaction comes from then allow that to be ... you cannot change a persons source of satisfaction in life, if its not you. -Only by our own intelligence and experiences can we write and create Artificial Intelligence (and/or write a Book).

Simply Stylist Fashion & Beauty Conference 3/19/16

3/29/2016

By: Leslie Fischman

Simply Stylist LA by Leslie Fischman | MYMOLLYDOLL

On March 19, 2016 I attended the long awaited Simply Stylist LA Fashion and Beauty Conference at The Grove Los Angeles. I arrived in the Afternoon for the Brand Discussions, Pink Wrist Band, and entered the main Lawn by the Fountain to a Festive Day filled with Music, Champagne, Fashion, Beauty, and Jewelry. They had everything from Fashion Drawn Selfies by an Artist, to Contouring Make-Up Stations, a Nail Salon, and Free Samples of Tinted Shampoo for your Hair.

As I made my way through the festivities, I came across a Make-Up App, that does your Makeup for you. While waiting in line for a Rose Water infused Glass of Champagne compliments of the Event. In addition, there was a Home Décor Station offering a Cash Prize for the Best Photo'd Layout, and Brand Influencer Partnerships thru RewardStyle. Next were the Selfie Stations, I had my Photo taken by the #OOTD Poster, where a Polaroid was printed and taped to the wall behind me along with others who had their photo taken. I kept a sticker print out as a souvenir I featured on my blog earlier this morning.

Next, I made my way upstairs to the Speaker Series on Branding. The First Speaker was Erin Armstrong, aka The Accounting Sage. She made reference to Tyra Bank's earlier statement that Fashion Blogging was about "opening fields to empower other people." She then went on to talk strategy and job placement explaining that "if you take a low paying job you can't take a higher paying job," which is why many of her "clients in the industry work for themselves." These "feelings resonat[ed]" with many of the members of the audience, who similarly have "fears worrying too much" and that starting her own Business was a way for her and likewise many of the audience members to "start making money having more ideal clients."

Getting started in the Industry does "require you do to some work for free." But always be able to "take something away from it." Building Professional relationships in the Fashion Blogging Industry is a two way street, you "get something in return, you give them a lot ... negotiate a Professional Price." At the end of Erin's Presentation she opened up for Questions from the Audience and I rose my hand, asking her what her "best advice for monetizing your blog" was and "what do Brands look for in Influencers" and if she had any tips what were they. Erin responded that Fashion Blogging is all about "authenticity, sell from you at a Business Perspective, if you know all your Followers gives you more negotiating power." - She concluded with an Announcement that she is offering a course entitled, "Money for Bloggers" that begins April 1st on basic tax deductions terminology and her creative business partnership with an Attorney.

The next Speaker was Calli Cholodenko @somethingsocial, who started Something Social, a Lifestyle Brands Company that represents Companies online thru Social Media. She is a USC Graduate who majored in Communications, who gained experience through fitness and Beauty Internships. She recalls her first Interview, for a Social Media Position, in which she was asked to recall who her Favorite Fashion Bloggers were. She has always loved Photography and has had a passion for aesthetics. In doing Social Media for different Brands her goal is to help them find their “distinct voice” and help them to develop. Some advice she offered to the audience members was that “you just gotta do you, [set] actual attainable [goals] action terms ... [take] small steps, then work your way up.”

Today Something Social boasts a roster of 25 Brands in Lifestyle, Fashion, Fitness, & Nightlife Events. She explains that her job requires a high “attention to detail” while “lifestyle brand[ing]” the Brands she works with. She describes success as “finding what your vision and aesthetic is.” She goes on to emphasize that “social media is the first thing that they see of your Brand. -What is gonna be that driver ... see a little more of what this person is about.” Through your Social Media is where (she explains) your audience and potential Followers “see what you like and what you’re about.” She says that it is important to “find your aesthetic and do it over and over again,” key traits of a “recognizable Brand.” In term of Aesthetic, Calli encouraged audience members to “keep it consistent” in your “social feeds” and find your voice. She goes on to state that, the “more you show people who you are and what you’re about [they’ll] start to trust you.” When building your content, consider the time it will take to build your content and how to stay consistent. Consistency, trust, and loyalty were three factors she considers to be important to be a successful Blogger, and to “show [that you are] well-rounded.”

The next speaker was Kristen Phillipkoski @stylenik, who lead a Discussion entitled “How to Evolve Your Blog Like a Boss.” Kristen is from IFB, which is a Fashion Organization which started in 2007. Kristen has been a News Blogger and Freelance Writer since 2008. She then introduced Callivintage.com (2008) Personal Style Blogger, who began her Career posting 5 Outfits a Week. Calli started Fashion Blogging because it “allowed [her] to connect with people who are doing what you’re doing.” She would post outfits and then write about them Monday thru Friday. Kristen asked her “when did you realize [this was] a Career?” Calli replied, she was just “in the right place at the right time.” Calli was among a select group of Fashion bloggers who were chosen to go to Fashion Week when she just got started Blogging. Calli started out partnering with various Brands, taking small jobs here and there, and now works with Agencies to get Corporate Sponsorships. In order to get Sponsorships “you need to have a large Following.” This is based on, as she explains, “how well you’ve represented yourself on Social Media... [in terms of the] general content, high quality content.”

Kristen Phillipkoski writes for Forbes.com (and doesn’t allow gifting). She advises the audience to “be honest about everything -let them know you are writing about something for a blog, and what they want from [that] interaction.” -They then go on to discuss how it is “important to network with people who are doing what you’re doing.” “How you connect” determines your “agency” and ability to grow within this profession, and they encourage us to “reach out.” They explain that it is a lot of work to make a deal with a Brand, “not all [of us] know how to make deals, [but] always reach out.”

The Next Speaker were The Mane Addicts Team, who led a Discussion entitled “Turning A Vision Into Reality.” She emphasized the use of Professional Photography in your Blog Work. And “finding people” to work with to help find that balance, and knowing what your strengths are. For many Bloggers, that team up, they have separate writing and art departments, which is common. Some Blogs even have Editorial Directors. She describes when building your Core Team, knowing “what is going to keep you growing the quickest.” She encourages us to “think about your audience” and to “always think about how you can engage the reader.” She explains that making money from your blog is all about Engagement, “look at your engagement its all about them.” She then advises the audience to “find your niche and attack it, think about -what you and your girlfriends need ... it’s a lot of work.” You have to think about your content, taglines, network, connect with people, email, or face to face [interaction], work ethic, get the job done, respond right away, [these are all examples of traits of successful bloggers] and “important to the success of every Company.”

The Branding Seminar ended with a Speaker on Blogging 101. Overall I learned a lot from this Speaker Series, reminded to pick and choose my battles online while maintaining authenticity and building trust amongst my Followers. Speaking my mind while at the same time maintaining a Professional front representing the Brands and Blogging Communities I have built Partnerships with along the way. This was a great learning experience to put myself out there, and introduce myself to the Vendors and hand out my Business Card. This was the first time I entered the Fashion Arena as a Professional in face to face interaction and I think I did a good job, for the most part. I wish I wasn't shy and introduced myself to the Speakers after each session but was so caught up taking notes that I was not able to in between Speakers. I hope that this was the first Conference of many to come and look forward to introducing MYMOLLYDOLL to the Fashion Blogging Community and Beyond as a Friend Online, Professional Confidant, LookBook Connoisseur, Blogging Tips Resource, and newly selected Style Curator for Sassique. I look forward to the road ahead and continuing to building Partnerships within the Fashion Community and hope that the relationships I build online will continue to translate into budding Business relationships off and online. Thank you for taking the time to read my Article on The Simply Stylist LA Fashion and Beauty Conference and hope that you have learned as much about Branding as I have from this Speakers Series.

Sincerely,
Leslie Fischman

How to Start a Blog and Maintain an Audience

3/29/2016

By: Leslie Fischman

Although we like to think we are perfect writers not everything we write is going to be a masterpiece. It's important to cite and make reference to Professional sources throughout your Blog to maintain a certain level of Professionalism. If you don't have a Blog, try citing to other people's Blogs. When I first started blogging I relied heavily on those sources for material everyday on my Blog (i.e. Bloglovin, Tumblr). However, eventually you must incorporate your own work too. One of the first places I went to upload my work to was Weebly. Weebly is a great, easy to use website, for beginners with no coding experience. There you can build a website and show case your work and writing via the various formats and tools they have to offer. Once you build and create a website then you can post from your website and blogs to your other newsfeeds on Twitter, Facebook, Bloglovin, Pinterest, etc. - When you post to your newsfeeds make sure you use links, links that come with boxes, if there are no boxes, find and upload a photo to accompany your post and link, to help make everything look complete. Links with photos not only look more Professional but it also captures the attention of your followers and potential followers via hashtags you incorporate, on a newsfeed. When you post don't forget to include a "via" indicating the source, if not your own, to give credit to the original source of the post. -All of these skills are important to maintaining an audience: Professionalism, organization, citation, knowledge, and adequate use of the various social media platforms to promote your blog.

How to Be a Successful Blogger Online: Be Yourself

By: Leslie Fischman

Figure out what's important to you in your life, and stay on topic. It's not about what you write that counts it's how you write. Nobody is perfect and no one expects you to know everything but always do your best. You will get docked points by your Audience for Presentation. Make sure you always include clear headings and topic sentences. Sounds pretty basic, right? You'd be surprised once you start writing it's easy to get carried away. -Being yourself requires that you know what you're about, never make it apparent that you care too much about what others think of you, signs of weakness in writing are apparent by too much negativity, lack of confidence in self, tells your reader you also lack confidence to write Professionally. The more honest you are, the more likeable you become, and keeps your reader coming back for more. No one expects you to be a robot Online, only write as much as you can, quality is better than quantity. On that note, that's all I've got -see you at the next post. Sincerely, Leslie.

21 Tips for Getting Started on Twitter as an Influencer

By: Leslie Fischman

Tips for Writing on Twitter and Maintaining a Following

Blogging Tip #1: Keep a journal to Record your Progress and Set Daily Goals

Blogging Tip #2: Keep Track of all your Used Material & Don't Re-Blog anything more than 3 times.

Blogging Tip #3: Never count your Followers per day just sign up for Sprout Social – what matters most is that you have a Schedule to stick to.

Blogging Tip #4: Don't over Mention your Favorites, once in awhile is okay but not too much. Remember your Twitter Etiquette.

Blogging Tip #5: For every Follower I lose, I edit, delete, and change Tempo.

Blogging Tip #6: Retweet Sparingly, to maintain a Following don't overwhelm them with Retweets they are Following you because they want to hear from you.

Blogging Tip #7: Be careful what you write on Twitter because it shows up in your Google Search. Represent yourself well at all times.

Blogging Tip #8: Its important to keep a Journal to track your progress so you can #blog about it later once you find success!

Blogging Tip #9: Twitter is a very specialized kind of Blogging you are the traffic controller of people short on patience, be contentious.

Blogging Tip #10: The easier you can navigate the Web the easier your viewer can navigate, don't share crap only the best research, be thoughtful.

Blogging Tip #11: The Quality of your content determines your success as a Blogger. Know your sources, be mindful of your Audiences needs.

Blogging Tip #12: Handwriting is a good way to slow things down and focus on your writing itself. Its easy to get carried away at the computer being too wordy. To put your best foot forward, write sharp, clear, and concise, online it is especially necessary to do so. -

Handwriting forces me to do everything twice. For Publishing Online that's a great trait! - Handwrite, type, then Post!

Blogging Tip #13: If you can, you should always condense your material to one Tweet if possible, avoid series Tweets, helps to stay organized.

Becoming a Brand Ambassador

Blogging Tip #14: Prior to registering for any Influencer Campaigns make sure you are first Registered as an Ambassador with an Organization. (Example: Glambassadors).

Blogging Tip #15: Once you are registered with an Organization (i.e. Glambassadors, Bloglovin Activate) make sure you apply with your Website (i.e. Wordpress, Weebly, Tumblr, Twitter) not an Affiliate Marketing Website (i.e. Shopify unless it is complete with a Blog and appears as any of your other Websites demonstrates your work ethic as a Writer and Love for Fashion). To be an Influencer you must have a Blog, that can be viewed at the time of Application. This is a requirement for places like (Example: ShopStyle, RewardStyle).

Blogging Tip #16: Image is everything. Make sure you are put together and well organized have a clear vision on paper before you apply, so they know you're ready.

Blogging Tip #17: Make sure your contact email on your website is different from all your other emails to keep track of Inquiries, and know from which Websites they are inquiring from.

Blogging Tip #18: It's okay to have multiple identities Online, so long as you are organized have a cohesive vision (i.e. School, Personal, and Fashion).

Blogging Tip #19: myshopify is a New Platform -you need to razzel dazzle them if you're trying anything new out of the ordinary.

Blogging Tip #20: When a Company asks for an Influencer they want you as a Brand be put together not an empty Storefront.

Blogging Tip #21: Nothing is obvious about Affiliate Marketing it sounds simple but very complicated hard to get into, don't give up, and regroup.

Thinking Out Loud by Leslie Fischman @lesliefischman

I just retitled my new Twitter Blog. Put my name. It was Thinking Out Loud with a heart. I think that at times like these conforming helps rather than trying to be different. Say something thoughtful. #BrusselsAttacks. We do everything we can to stop these attacks from occurring. We put up Flyers, we protest online, we march, we participate online via hashtag, and we donate. But sometimes, there is no explanation. I was at a job Interview on the day of the attacks. Far way from the Nail Bombs. That's a very painful way to die. Everyone is still mourning. But as a Campaigner online it is my duty to respond and reach out. I have won many awards and accolades in school and sports Campaigning is simply something in my heart I feel is necessary to help combat Violence in School and in Communities World Wide. Im just one voice. Not a big deal. But everything helps, and every bit of support no matter how small helps to contribute towards a solution to this problem, Terrorism. Ive never been a victim of Terrorism so I would not know what it feels like to have such a loss of control of my surroundings, but I can imagine that it has caused a lot of fear among everyone. Be there for one another during times like these, don't turn on one another. Assume that we are all doing our best, and do so yourself too to contribute to the solution not the problem, and so will I. Sincerely, Leslie Fischman.

My last day of Law School (January 2013)

My Last Day of Law School – January 2013

By: #LeslieFischman

Date: 05-16-16

I began my journey in 2013, first visiting the US Supreme Court. I Google Searched US

Supreme Court prior to flying to DC, printing out locations I'd like to visit and establish an Itinerary prior to travel. I was really organized at the time. Always with purpose I led my life, positive purpose. After attending the first day of school that semester January 2013, I left class early and requested to speak to my Dean, Professor Frykberg was there too, seated to my right in a chair beside the Dean's desk, who sat opposite to me. The room was empty and there was nothing but a fan on the desk in the upper left corner. To my left. I told them I was not feeling feeling well. I had decided to switch Campuses and attend Constitutional Law II in the Valley instead of at LAX with the rest of my new Class and friends. I guess I got paranoid at the other Campus and thought that things would be different in a new class, but they weren't, just the same awkward. The Professor waving her hands in the air, starting the first day with a lecture that I already heard about cases the previous semester. I was immediately annoyed, I go this isn't even the right material, unless they flip flopped their coursework in the Valley and did not teach the same material at the LAX Campus. Already I knew there was an error on my part, registering for the wrong Campus. Should have just stayed at the LAX Campus. The Professor waving her hands in the air, blurts out 90210 the remake. I immediately froze. Hacking really. Into my Computer, a document titled list of favorite childhood TV shows. She kind of looked like an old childhood friend through a friend, Franchesca, but an older version, Faye's daughter, Father lives in a home in Beverly Hills the color of clay.

New Website? Wordpress? .org? What do you mean by "Member Site"?

Why do you have a new Website? mymollydoll.wordpress.com is a way for me to connect to other Bloggers in the Community via a Social Blogging Platform, that is Wordpress, which is a very popular Platform for Fashion Bloggers. I thought I would join and participate. Upon joining I realized that there were really cool tricks I could do with the Website to help tie together all my Blogs, on a Bigger Social Blogging Platform, with more creative space for my Blogs to interact with my Audience, and an easy space from which all my Blogs can be easily accessed and material retrieved for Re-Blogging.

Wordpress? I chose Wordpress to connect my Blogs to, because (1) It is Popular (2) Easy to use by phone (3) Is an option for posting and blogging to on my phone via icon; and (3) Is separate from my Weebly Accounts which I keep simple and more specialized and do not update on a daily basis usually, and try to keep things neat (here forward).

.org? .net was already taken by my lesliefischman.weebly.com website I created. But I do have an email address to .net which is lesliefischman@mymollydoll.net. Similarly I have an email for my new .org Website lesliefischman@mymollydoll.org. Why so many emails for your Websites ... lets jump to my response to the next question.

Member Site? Why would you create a Member Site? A Member Site enables me to stay in contact with my Audience Members and notify them of any deals and updates to my Website. Send Newsletters Weekly/Monthly or send out Announcements or Referrals to Articles I may find along the way which I think they would, as a whole, be interested in too. Usually if they are following me, means they like my taste in Fashion, Culture, Literature, etc. and creating a Member Site enables me to connect with them in that way, via Newsletters, and maintain an Email Database. - Which supplies a further response to your third question regarding Website Email Addresses. Website Email Addresses enable you access to additional tools for formatting Emails, Newsletters, Blog Photos, Updated Blog Pieces to send to your Audience, whose Emails you are able to retain via sign up on their behalf.

Hope this helps clarify a few questions about the sudden changes to MYMOLLYDOLL and why dispersed onto so many Websites. I'm not being experimental for study, I am learning as I go, so as I learn as I go, there of course will be a trail of that learning curve, which I have the responsibility at the end to provide a coherent space from which to share new content, showcase old content, and build new spaces that accurately reflect my drive and dedication to Fashion, Blogging, and the rest of the Community Online, to be a helpful contributor of organized content for viewing, sharing, and review by my peers online at their leisure. All of which I hope will enable me to continue donating to Brady Campaign and earn a living working online for Cizo.com and beyond. Thank you for following, look forward to getting back to Writing on mymollydoll.com and mymollydoll.wordpress.com.

New Website is up for Fashion Bloggers

Online Communications Whats Appropriate and Whats Not
by: Leslie Fischman

For those of you with a love for Fashion, please visit my "NEW" Fashion Blogging Website mymollydoll.wordpress.com. This content is separate from mymollydoll.com because it is to highlight my Professional Work Online as a Fashion Blogger and Quotes Blogger. I would like to create a Member Website one day from which to Blog your favorite Twitter, Tumblr, Facebook Posts to in an environment without cross-talk, commentary, comments, and Mentions -a place to post for just the art of posting not for the art of communication. I have thought a lot about how I communicate online, and via mention is simply not the best way to communicate your thoughts to another or to highlight an accolade of another, without their permission, I think this puts too much trust into the hands of the Bloggers and not enough simple credit to the owner or creator of the content (which is the original purpose for enabling mentions on Blogs -I believe -not to tag people to posts to include them as a third party to a conversation online). I think blogging via widgets/embedding is the best way to Blog and Re-Blog from Websites and would like to one day create a space from which others can also embed their favorite posts, simply, like on Wordpress and Weebly for Fashion and Quotes Bloggers, that keeps track of credits to whom and from which site. Right now I think Pinterest does a great job of keeping track of credits and origins, which is why I prefer to Re-Blog from Pinterest.

This post is dedicated to my Communications Online Mentor @Luke360 Lucas Bean.

Ch. - Washington DC 2013 (Book) by #LeslieFischman

6/13/2016

January 2013. After attending my first day of classes, I decided to take time off from School, and fly to Washington DC. I flew back and forth twice that month. Visited with an old friend Harry Morgan. I mostly needed to get away. I had been separated from my then Boyfriend for a few months while he was studying for his Bar Exam, and when we reunited it just wasn't the same, a part of me just wanted to be alone at the time. Mourning, after the School Shootings, and not doing well in Law School, almost failing out of Law School. Thought it would be a good time to take a couple weeks off Soul Searching and then return to School. –When I visited the US Supreme Court, as I had planned to prior to departing for DC, I had no intent of writing to them. However, after sitting alone in the Cafeteria prior to walking around the Court house, and being stared at by the other Students, I felt compelled to write about my experiences in Law School and the many oddities. Like the photo of Alice and Wonderland posted on Facebook by a student who hooked up with me during finals, tagged everyone in the class including the now Dean except for me. In reply one of the Students wrote on the now Deans wall a bunch of things only they would understand what the contents of the conversation were. –I blogged for a little bit in Law School on Twitter but not enough to gain Followers like I do now, or be well known. I never shared my Blog with anyone, just wrote and then deleted my Account when School started. I cant do two things at once, blog and write. I had a near heart attack when I noticed that my Blog was put back up while I was in School, the password changed without my permission. –This was not why I flew to DC. I was still in Law School at the time. While court was in session we were allowed to take notes. So I brought a notebook and pen with me, and when stared at again in the Courtroom, under-dressed in black jeans and a gray cardigan, I started writing. For the same reasons that people looking at me funny would make me on any other occasion, I wrote to cope with the discomfort, about everything else that caused me discomfort and why I was now not doing well in Law School and struggling, grade wise. –After Court I felt much better, I think that I got a lot out of being present, meeting the US Supreme Court, and writing –I did not do much arguing, but mostly reporting. For me it felt like a safe place to vent, ask questions, and figure out whether there was something wrong with me or something wrong with everyone else, or whether I was the cause for people being weird towards me and why. At the end I cried, overwhelmed –crying occurs when so much has happened that you cant go backwards and do things differently, and you feel helpless, wishing I was able to finish Law School and be like the Woman arguing before Justice Ginsberg, and not the failing Law Student in the Audience writing about why she was not doing well in Law School and why she was having trouble finishing Law School. I think it was at that point I decided to leave my no Ex-Boyfriend Aaron Brown. We dated in Law School since 2010, against my initial hesitancy, not ready yet as I had just left a serious relationship earlier that year in January (2010) to someone I had dated since Fall 2007. I don't really want to get into details, but when I returned from my trip I was interrogated by my Ex, who was accusing me of cheating on him, I never cheated on him I was in Washington DC for two weeks. That is the point at which we broke up. January 2013.

Chapter: Relationships (con'd) Paragraph #3 by #LeslieFischman

One question you always ask yourself when confronted with disillusion, is whether or not you were at fault for the demise of a relationship, which dissolved before you had a chance to save a relationship from falling apart. Sometimes things occur when we least expect it. Not always in our favor but sometimes, to do us a disservice in life, these life experiences we call challenges in life. When circumstances, persons, or things occur to which we do not have a finite understanding of why or how, and we just have to learn how to accept things the way they are without further investigation. I am never one to investigate the faults of others or reasons for the demise of relationships and always move forward and let go. However when the harm resulting from that loss is recurring, then I know it was not me that was at fault if he is still so affected after I have already let go and moved on unaffected by him. When there is room for discussion and discussion is not made, than at no later point in time is discussion or continuation for discussion required on your behalf to anyone who has not given you the opportunity to be heard or left room for discussion. Where one assumes and one is harmed as a result of those assumptions, than the other is not liable for the harm resulting from those assumptions made upon the character of another.

Re: Chapter - Relationships

The purpose of my Book is not to highlight negatives in my life or draw unwanted attention to people in my past to which a relationship no longer exists. Why I may make no mention of people who I have had difficulties with in the past, for that would defeat the purpose of taking a positive from those interactions and moving forward, as I have and will continue to, that is move forward. What I will discuss are the points at which I experienced difficulty with these individuals, who will remain anonymous and what I did to overcome those difficulties and move forward, positively.

Chapter: #Relationships (Draft) (Book) by #LeslieFischman 061016

Not all relationships begin the same way and each has its own stages. Not occurring the same in every, but unique to each individual we meet in life. Why is that? For every experience that we have we have a new beginning in life, the lessons we learn from previous interactions with others, help to improve the basis upon which we make decisions in future interactions and relationships. A relationship is not defined solely on the intimacy that exists between between two people but can also vary in terms of closeness. In some relationships we desire closeness in others the opposite distance. It does not matter who attaches to us, for every relationships fosters our personal growth, both positive and negative. What does matter is to whom we attach to. To whom where and why we attach may often time baffle us, why attach to negatives, and why so few positives. Why are we so affected by those we do not get along with, and why is it so difficult to develop healthy attachments to those we do get along with. What is it about negative interactions that gets under our skin, that interferes with our ability to attach to the positives in our life. This is one area of relationships that has constantly created disturbance in my life and to the relationships that helped foster my growth, interfering with my ability to attach, because relationships to which negatives resulted from interfered with my ability to maintain current positive relationships and form new bonds and positive relationships. What I learned from these experiences was to not be too concerned with why I did not get along with these individuals and instead focus my attention on what it is that they said to me that caused me disturbance and interfered with my ability to achieve happiness in my life.

It Never Helps to Quit by #MYMOLLYDOLL

07/27/16 - It Never Helps to Quit by #MYMOLLYDOLL #LeslieFischman

It never helps to quit. When things are not going right and negativity kicks in, we are allowed to take a step back but its never appropriate to start a project and then quit when we experience a loss of direction and/or focus. Never say anything that will cause more harm than good. If it hurts to say it then it hurts to hear it, a good rule of thumb for decision making when it comes to making decisions for yourself and for your Campaign. Once you start Campaigning dont stop no matter what. This is something I must now remind myself of, even when ridiculed, or experiencing loss of focus and or ability to succeed. My personal success is not as important during times such as these. What is most important is that I am present and contribute generously and with good intent to help others. Always look out for everyone, do what is in their best interests, which is to continue making sense not of the past or the present or future but just of myself and my experiences. The better able I am to understand myself -the better able others will be able to understand me and interpret things I have written in the past. I feel like when we are paranoid we get defensive and think only of what others think, this is what causes delusions, instead of seeing what is and by memory what has occurred, we absorb the negative interpretations which become apart of our disposition. When our disposition is messed up, we experience difficulty seeing the positive and sound like we have an attitude or ungrateful and negative not appreciating what we do have only seeing what we do not have. When this occurs we have difficulty being present and demonstrate happiness for others, our own unhappiness interferes with the ability for others to connect with us empathize with us, seeing us only in terms of problems. -You may not see the benefit in criticism or differences of opinion at the get go, but be assured that people would not share their feelings or opinions if they did not care about you want to help you succeed in life find happiness too. When you are lost it is important to listen. The more you listen the better suited you are to lead and help others by sharing your experiences. Achievement means nothing when it comes to alcohol and drug addiction, you will also be seen in terms of your failures. How you will be able to reverse those judgments is by demonstrating a clear understanding of why you are where you are now and that it is because of your own decision making not because of anyone else thats come into your life, or harmed you. You choose where you go from every experience you have in life, whether to self harm or rehabilitate be strong. Quitting is not the correct response. At least be present Sober & Clean and sleep every night. Deal. That is why you are not feeling well Leslie, not taking on a leadership position today, backing out. True. Sorry. I'll do some research today and find some worksheets homework for us to look through individually as guidance when we experience loss, sadness, or lose faith. Quitting is not the answer. Sorry.

My Background in Marketing via Smart Circle Sessions

7/17/2016

By: Leslie Fischman
Date Posted: 07/17/2016

I'm building a Company. That's how I was taught Marketing.

I was taught to be aggressive as a Business Woman. That's how we were taught at Smart Circle. -We were taught to be energetic rehash rehash rehash product in hand intro self over and over again give them options, etc. I then applied to my Blogs. Maybe unusual writing, but that was a job I made for myself to keep busy [productive]. -I didn't even have a product when I started [but School Outlines] why I made an App with a Twitter Widget, and published my Twitter Newsfeed with Amazon.com.

I started out disorganized because I was trying to get organized on the brink of aha that's how you are manic puzzling stuff together brain mapping. I keep everything in my head. Then you have to perform hope it comes out pretty and you made the right choices focuses [and] where.

I'm calm now because I have a routine. Then I did not have a routine brainstorming. Order of importance how to market self with what kinds of items why what's important and how to integrate jobs as I go and with what a re-blogable space like we discussed. I can hashtag all my Brands on Wordpress and re-blog once a week Ads. That's so cool to me but I can't see that if I don't know how to work something. -Or hook up my Tweet Jukebox to my Newsfeed and put Ads out automatically once a week like I did my Shopify Ads.

This is how I learned Marketing and Applied it to my Blogging Online.

Since opening its doors in September 2013, mymollydoll.com has been a consistent provider of information and scholastic achievements (writing samples). The purpose of MYMOLLYDOLL online has always been to provide an accurate picture of who Leslie Fischman is by placing her Portfolio Online for public viewing and reference. During the period leading up to the launch of her first website, Leslie Fischman struggled with Alcoholism after leaving Law School, and the mental illness that follows from Alcohol Abuse. Focusing on School and building her Online Portfolio is how Leslie Fischman has managed to stay Sober, put together, and represent MYMOLLYDOLL her first Campaign online.

Today, MYMOLLYDOLL and her Blogs have acquired 10,000+ Followers, while her Websites have carried up to 1500 Visitors in one day. She's been able to maintain positive momentum in the very competitive field of Blogging by staying true to character and being herself online, whether recovered or experiencing mental illness due to past drug and alcohol abuse, she continues to show signs of improvement as her anxieties about the future and insecurities wane. By continuing her legal education online, MYMOLLYDOLL has been able to grow both professionally and personally, even setting aside time away from school to launch her second Campaign online for Brady Campaign, a Blogging Campaign (i.e. bloggingcampaign.wordpress.com) formerly known as #BradyMusicCampaign for @Bradybuzz.

As a Masters Student MYMOLLYDOLL has had three jobs paid: two jobs in Law and one job in Tech. When Leslie Fischman lost her second job in Law, due to a falling out with her Boss Ron Hacker, due to the disapproval of her Parents (Leslie was paid as a Host and Housekeeper to Airbnb Properties) -she had a nervous breakdown and started running again. Her best runs were on Santa Monica Beach, Leslie ran in the Sand for up to 2 hours and 30 mins multiple times a month, beginning in October 2015. She then met with Rhubarb Studios after attending a Holiday Party Fundraiser for The Hacker Fund (who raises money to teach Kids how to Code) -and pitched her first Campaign mymollydoll.com her first Database Online -Schoolwork Portfolio and Personal Journal Entries (many of which were written while she was experiencing mental illness and paranoia due to current events).

While working Leslie Fischman continued to build MYMOLLYDOLL's Following via her Twitter Blogs and Hashtags. And while unemployed MYMOLLYDOLL built several new websites including her Professional Work Portfolio leslifischman.weebly.com. She is a self taught Fashion and Quotes Blogger and registered Journalist with Muckrack.com and registered Style Curator at Sassique.com. As a Style Curator and Journalist MYMOLLYDOLL decided to form her own Corporation under her Website's name MYMOLLYDOLL. *A "Publishing" Corporation has since been established, instead of a Non-Profit, because MYMOLLYDOLL seeks to raise funds from outside sources for Brady Campaign via her Blogging Online (#BloggingCampaign Hashtag Campaigns) (Reference: <http://www.legalzoom.com/business/business-formation/inc-overview.html>).

MYMOLLYDOLL (including #BloggingCampaign & Hashtags) are now a Registered S-Corporation with LegalZoom.com, and the paperwork is currently being processed.

Learning Affiliate Marketing by #LeslieFischman

7/15/2016

I was first introduced to Affiliate Marketing January 2016. I had just returned from a Family Vacation in New York and was talking to my Cousin about my plans Blogging and selling items from my Blog. I wanted to make a Store Online. At the time I was a Quotes Blogger on Twitter and wanted to do more to reach out to the Community and provide access to Websites via links. I started with links from Google to Quotes and slowly learned about the process.

That was when I decided to join Shopify and open a Shopify Store (mymollydoll-2.myshopify.com, mymollydoll.myshopify.com). Only one problem, I had no items to sell in the Store. That is when I started researching Affiliate Programs Online and the various ways to gain access to Stores already existing Online and sell their items from my Blogs and Websites, and earn a commission or percentage. That is when I started applying to Affiliate Programs. Two great Affiliate Programs are Shareasale and Commission Junction. I am a Member of both organizations. However, once you join you must apply individually to each Brand you wish to represent and sell products from. That's the not so easy part. Every Brand has their own set of requirements, and listed criteria they are looking for from their Affiliate Marketers to join their Programs.

Luckily after applying to a few Brands I found Zindigo (shops.zindigo.com/mymollydoll). At Zindigo you can open up your own store on Facebook and on the Web and sell items from their Store in your own Zindigo Store and earn a commission from those sales. That's great I thought, but then how do you drive sales. That's where the importance of Blogging comes into play. The majority of my Web Traffic to my Shop is from Ads posted on my Twitter Blog, without which would be hard to get customers to come to my Store. Which is why Shopify is so helpful, because through Shopify you can list your items Online so that it shows up individually in a Google Search under the search terms that you input. In the same way, sometimes Affiliate Marketers will turn to ebay to sell their items, in a higher traffic zone, and listed among many like products to get more people to view and potentially buy their product.

Fast forward, it is now July. I am still in the same place, a few steps along, but re-applying to Affiliate Programs I applied to back in March, because unprepared as a Fashion Blogger, with the Following, Traffic, and Content they were looking for. It took me some time, but I finally learned how to use Wordpress. I think that will be the Blog that I apply with, my main website (mymollydoll.wordpress.com). And listed as supporting Websites from which to sell, I will share my Twitter, Instagram, Pinterest, Polyvore, and Weebly accounts information with them, to explain how I plan to drive traffic to my Blog and/or drive traffic to the point of sale which is their Website, or a Website I have created from which purchases from that store can be made. -That is the one thing I have yet to figure out. How to place items in my Shopify Store and create a button that sends them back to the main Store, like is done with Pinterest buy buttons. I'll have to inquire.

Good News is that since applying I am now an Ambassador to 5 Organizations which I am proud to represent: (1) Shopify Affiliates (2) Amazon Associates (3) Zindigo Ambassador (4) Sol Theory Ambassador; and (5) LUCALUC Affiliate. With the exception of Sol Theory, I had to apply to these organizations individually and receive approval first prior to being admitted to their Affiliate Programs. Sol Theory luckily found me on Instagram and asked if I would like to be one of their Ambassadors, I gladly accepted. Similarly, Sassique scouted me on Tumblr at mymollydoll.tumblr.com and Twitter at @lesliefischman - recognized as among the Top Bloggers they have seen and asked to be one of their Style Curators. I have just signed up and look forward to contributing to the content on their Website, citing to sources (looks) that I save on my Pinterest Daily, and plan to do additional research online via other Web Channels.

For anyone currently struggling, learning Affiliate Marketing and how to start their own Business Online, you're not alone. For many people who are just beginning in Tech, building Websites is not easy, and applying for, gaining access to Ads, and placing the Ads on your Websites is no easy task either. But stay on top of it and don't give up, I promise you, you only get better at these steps over time, and soon enough you'll be building Websites with ease, not confused about where to go for what, and seizing every opportunity you have to earn a living thru your Websites and the items that you sell on your Websites. Two great Ad Programs to go through are Google AdSense, and Wordpress who has their own built in Ads that come in a package upon purchasing your Website or Domain, I highly suggest both Programs.

If you have any questions along the way or need help getting started just search Affiliate Marketing on Google, like I have, and read all the articles. Shopify has some great Articles too about starting your own Business Online. Good luck ... I hope this helps!

Domestic Violence and Gun Violence

By: Leslie Fischman

Research Study (1)

Bradymusiccampaign.tumblr.com

Bradymusiccampaign.com

As a Researcher one is required to obtain approval from the HRC of their Academic Institution if the study involves interaction (via Interview) of any at risk populations. Victims of Crime always fall under the category of at risk populations that would require such approval -the bylaws of the organizations which provide services to them usually promise privacy which disables their ability to share with you either as a researcher or member of the helping professions their experiences or the way in which they were helped by members of the helping professions. Which is why for my Honors Thesis I decided to study Certified Crisis Hotline Counselors (such as myself, 2004) and with signed informed consent reviewed and received by them, interviewed them confidentially and included those findings and quotes in my research study via a fictional name I created for them to maintain their privacy and anonymity. This was suggested as commonly practiced among researchers who's job is to protect the privacy of their participants, to ensure they are neither harmed nor retaliated upon for sharing their experiences with me, especially those who have been forced to handle very difficult calls from inappropriate callers who frequent the hotlines and are not members of the population at risk of harm to which the hotline generally provides services to.

#BradyMusicCampaign is a new service online that connects individuals from the Entertainment Campaign to Blog Posts, thoughts, ideas, concerns, and general information about the Campaign and the Campaign to which the Hashtag supports, via re-blogging (Definition: When you post a blog post from another's blog on your own blog). The goal was to present a clear picture and general overview of current trends, news, and issues being debated, and share ideas "openly" online through a Blogging Service that enables me to reach a high number of qualified professionals who participate on personal accounts alongside company accounts such as the accounts managed and blogged to by MYMOLLYDOLL by #LeslieFischman.

Domestic Violence affects everyone, and Gun Violence is a type of Domestic Violence. According to everytownresearch.org, "more intimate partner homicides have been committed with guns than all other weapons combined [over a 25 year period]." Obtaining a "Restraining Order" is one way in which Victims of Intimate Partner Violence can "prohibi[t] ... [loved ones from obtaining] buying or possessing firearms, and for good reason." Terrorism is not just a World issue but is also experienced within the home, that affects Victims their "every waking moment" fearful that they will be retaliated upon if they "contac[t] the police" (everytownreesrach.org).

#BradyMusicCampaign seeks to support Brady Campaign via Hashtag, and create familiarity and identification via a catchy named Campaign for a Campaign that helps shape Laws in this Country as they are directly related to Gun Violence and Gun Violence Prevention. Some Laws which have already been enacted (i.e. Brady Bill 2.0) required the expansion of background checks for gun purchasers to prevent individuals such as those with a history of intimate partner violence from obtaining guns, from "unlicensed seller[s]" such as the ones mentioned by everytownreesrach.org, that enable known offenders to obtain guns on Websites while failing to perform a "background check" which is required by them as sellers.

"Weak gun laws" are to blame, says everytownresearch.org. While #BradyMusicCampaign for @Bradybuzz supports Gun Violence Prevention via Lawmaking, it is our responsibility as suggested by everytownreesrach.org to provide additional assistance updating everyone (i.e. the general public of these changes in law) as well as the sellers which provide access to known offenders when they fail to abide by the law and perform the required background checks. "Keeping guns out the hands of domestic abusers" requires that we ensure the "laws ... designed to protect Women [and/or Men]...[under these] circumstances" do exactly that and are well known and enforced. "Laws [which] are poorly defined and poorly enforced" can have very "devastating" consequences –increasing the "like[lihood] of murde[r] [by] guns" and accounting for "53%" of "gun violence [homicides] in America" (percentage reflecting those "killed by intimate partners or family members"). (everytownresearch.org). That being said, laws which are poorly enforced cannot make the positive difference they seek to provide via enactment of those laws. Which is why we have Brady Campaign to continue to modify current language "weak" language as suggested by everytownresearch.org to which Federal Laws still have not been able to curtail violence as it relates to: (1) "abusive dating partners or convicted stalkers, (2) those "convicted of misdemeanor domestic violence crimes Subject to restraining order orders from buying or using guns," and (3) "in most states" ... Federal Law does not address well prevention of "domestic abusers and stalkers [from] easily evad[ing] gun prohibitions by purchasing guns from unlicensed private sellers" [such as those online as we mentioned above]. Everytownresearch.org.

This Research Proposal is hereby presented by #LeslieFischman on behalf of everytownresearch.org to Brady Campaign and #BradyMusicCampaign to further study the consequence or usage of "weak" language while establishing Laws and take into consideration current "loopholes" as suggested by everytownresearch.org that have yet to address clearly how and by what language within the law these individuals will be prevented from in the future from obtaining or having access to such weapons, and committing homicides within the home as a result of what they believe is caused by "weak" language or "loopholes" in current law (everytownresearch.org).

Dear everytownresearch.org: On behalf of #BradyMusicCampaign which supports Brady Campaign, I would like to thank you for composing this very valuable entry and overview of Domestic Violence as is relates to Gun Violence and Violence Against Women. We assure you that no laws created to prevent gun violence are ever created purposefully with "weak" language that would "know[ingly] allow domestic abusers ...[from obtaining weapons] by enabling them to "evade gun prohibitions." Its never the Laws themselves that enable this type of transaction to occur but result from general lack of oversight that keeps track of "unlicensed private sellers" by whom those presently restrained or with history of stalking would be able to "easily evade gun prohibitions ... [and] purchas[e] guns" from "unlicensed private sellers" (everytownresearch.org). We (i.e. #BradyMusicCampaign MYMOLLYDOLL) assure you that the cause for these unregulated gun sales are not the product of loopholes or failure on the part of Federal Law to outline specifics as to who these Laws seek to prevent access to weapons, but that your concern is with gun sales that occur during the commission of a crime which is that of an unlicensed private seller selling a gun to a known offender domestic abuser. That loophole is not caused by the Law itself, but requires that certain oversight be issued, addressed, and required, that limits the number of unlicensed private sellers from existing online and providing unauthorized access to these individuals of concern. Thank you for sharing and I hope to present the following findings to Brady Campaign, when I meet with them at the LA Chapter.

If you have any questions or would like additional research, and or updated findings, statistics, and laws (i.e. Bills enacted) which currently address your current concerns that present language does not include such purchases via loopholes as you suggested, then I would be more than happy to research and compose a follow up study that addresses your concerns and what is currently being done in response to your findings. Thank you for sharing on your Website and I am glad I read this article and can continue helping your Campaign and Brady Campaign accomplish their shared goal of preventing gun violence in the future, especially as it relates to Domestic Violence and Violence Against Women.

Sincerely,
Leslie Fischman

Living a Purpose Driven Life by #LeslieFischman

7/6/2016

The quality of the life you lead depends upon two things: (1) How well you play your cards in life; and (2) How hard you work towards achieving your goals in life. A certain bit of street smarts is required to succeed in this day and age. Without which you often find yourself walked all over like a doormat, wondering how you got there. Never underestimate the intentions of others, which for the most part do not involve you or concern for your successes in life but for their own. Therefore if you cannot contribute to the whole or the sum of its parts than often times you'll find yourself not included. Don't worry about how many times you're included or how many times you've felt left out in life. These are but temporary occasions and usually you learn from these experiences and situate yourself so that you are better able to help yourself, help others, and contribute to whole or sum of its parts. For example: Drug Addiction and Alcoholism are two kinds of diseases that prevent you from participating or being invited to participate in Social Events which require one of the two or in which one of the two is plentiful. That is normal. When you're needs, i.e. Sobriety are different from the needs of the whole or the sum of its parts, those are situations in which you may not be included, and sometimes not being included is not to your detriment at all but to your benefit. Always look on the bright side, when one opportunity ceases to exist sometimes other opportunities arise either from that interaction or from the falling out of that interaction or one opportunity to your benefit creates another opportunity what we call a Social Connection, an additional attachment from the initial positive attachment, that's how Networks are formed, a series of positive attachments which make up a whole, the sum of its parts being positive attachments between individuals working together to achieve some goal. –Dating doesn't quite work the same way, for every attachment is usually severed at the end of a relationship and often times they do not help but hurt or interfere with your ability to move forward, by trying to come back into your life, make amends, or promise for reunification. These times will pass, so long as you know you have no plans to resume the relationship, these types of interactions will not be viewed as a threat to your potential to form bonds in the future or hurt your chances of acquiring a new relationship in the future. Whether for dating or for friendship or for professional networking, Social Media Networks are great for connecting individuals to Platforms and Agencies which assist with creating these new bonds in life. But do not be dependent on Social Media Platforms to create these bonds, there's always a certain amount of leg work on your part that needs to be done in order to make certain, be clear, show enthusiasm, show purpose, and identify self online to those who you network with. Be present, follow up, be courteous, be proper, be professional, and be yourself always online and offline when networking, these are basic common courtesies and etiquette that is required of you in order to build and maintain relationships. Part of being included requires you to do so i.e. get put on email lists, get invited to events, receive notices of events, follow organizations to stay up to date on networking events, and post social profiles to meet individuals in fields within which wish to network. For example: Since I am in Tech I am Online. Example Number One. Example Number Two since I am interested in Affiliate Marketing and have had a nack for Fashion my whole life I Fashion Blog. These are two examples of how I have (1) decided to play my cards in life; (2) and demonstrate my work ethic, how hard I have worked, in order to get a job, which was achieved by 1 and 2, playing my cards right in life and hard work in order to get to the point where I was recognized in a new field via Vanicy.com and selected to be a Style Curator for Sassique, and able to Market online for Zindigo and Campaign for Sol Theory, who found me on Instagram and asked if I would be interested in being one of their Ambassadors. These are opportunities I created for myself through Blogging, which I would not otherwise have been able to achieve coming out of Law School without experience Blogging. Therefore there was always a positive purpose for Blogging. So long as your purpose is positive, you will always seem to have played your cards right in life, that's the trick and a general rule of thumb for being successful in life and achieving your goals in life. When you waste time chasing after achieving what comes from those successes like being included and being selected to date, you lose sight of whats most important to you and why that is the case. It is because people are successful is why they are popular. It is because people excel or succeed in life is why they are successful. It is because people are put together and goal oriented and have achieved some success in life and have jobs or demonstrate discipline is why they are chosen on dating sites, these are all desirable qualities: Dependability, Reliability, and Ability to Succeed. Given this we all experience setbacks, we all have disabilities, we all have made mistakes, and we all wish we were more successful than we currently are, that is normal, but you don't have to be the best and you don't have to be the prettiest in order to get jobs or to find dates online, all that is required is that you 1 and 2. Work hard and play your cards right. –I hope this helps for anyone who is struggling right now to achieve and find themselves in life. Don't worry, that was me 2013-2015, struggling to earn a paycheck while finishing "a" Law School. Success doesn't happen all at once, but if you appreciate all the milestones you make along the way, you will value yourself enough to make better decisions for yourself so that you can achieve the kind of success in life you think you deserve and form relationships with individuals Professional and Personal, you think you deserve. Hope this helps.

Sincerely,
Leslie Fischman

When I First Started Writing Online by Leslie Fischman

8/31/2016

When I first started writing online I was nowhere near where I am now, in terms of introduction of content, subject matter, and displays. I was a rookie. I wrote to write but my presentation was awful. It takes a long time to develop as a writer online and it takes a long time to develop in terms of your presentation and ability to write qualified pieces for review by your peers on social media. I am grateful for my experiences on Twitter, I learned a lot about my writing style, and learned a lot about how to write online. When in Rome ask for help. -In many ways I have developed online, and improved upon my professional demeanor online, which needed a lot of work. I thought that I could just be myself and write whatever I wanted to write and whatever crossed my mind. That only works for so long, to maintain an audience online. What is required of you is that you always discuss issues that are relevant to you and helpful for others to read about. This requires careful reflection of your life, and the impact that you wish to make online by sharing your experiences online. There is nothing artificial about writing online, nor writing online about your own experiences, this is real intelligence. As a student I am required to read and write about the topic assigned to me, however online is the first place in which I was able to share my mind, without a textbook or desk reference nearby, and simply share what was on my mind, and what I have logically put together in my mind, in careful reflection of my life. I hope that the stories I've share have been helpful. And I hope to continue writing online, in an educated way, not artificially, or comedic, so that I am well received and so that my audience appreciates how far I've come and benefits from having read my writing, not waste their time. Thank you for following and I look forward to writing my next entry.

Why Deletion is Bad by Leslie Fischman

It is not in anyone's best interest to delete or destroy any first permanent record of any disclosures which have yet to be heard. It is to each his own, Victims right to come forward when they feel necessary and are ready and willing to come forward and share whatever information they feel is pertinent to the case and those who have been directly affected by the case and how so. Any type of activity to which I myself am harmed or anyone around me is harmed is to be reported in a safe place, such as in a publically observable space, from which the proper authorities can be notified that their informant (Leslie Fischman) is being harmed in private and that her ability to come forward and prevent the harm that is occurring to her, is being disabled, so that she cannot protect nor defend herself and which she is continuously harmed and put at a disadvantage in life and harmed to the extent that she is not able to achieve in life and disabled.

Why is it Important to Share Your Story? by Leslie Fischman

Its never required that we share our stories online. Some of us may feel compelled to share at our own expense, the loss of privacy that comes with sharing our stories online. Which is why I generally refrain from sharing my stories on Facebook, because it is the one place left that I consider private and separate from my Blogging life online on Twitter and Weebly, where I am an open book and willingly share my stories online to help others cope. I am by no means a role model to others but I am in every way an advocate for those who suffer from being misunderstood and discriminated because they are misunderstood. Misunderstandings occur, and often times our judgments of others are not perfect and flawed in many ways because (1) judgment is passed because we do not know the other well so assumptions are made as to why a person is behaving or is a certain way; or (2) we are misinformed of the reasons for why a person is a certain way or behaves a certain way or responds in a way that we do not understand because we do not understand the causes for the way in which they respond to events because again we do not know the person well enough and assumptions have been made. Assumptions are like judgments we pass on others, except they are the excuses for the behavior of others we use to justify the behavior of others in the negative. Be careful of doing so, judging others in the negative causes harm to their reputation and can be considered defamation if information about a person is misused to cause them harm or harm to others, others directly related to them or distant, which in turn causes harm to the person being wrongfully judged in the negative. Facts are facts, and no facts shared by me are with the intent to cause any harm to others or myself, in fact I share because harm has been caused to my good reputation which requires me to share in order for my story to be heard which would not otherwise be necessary nor proper to do so at a time like this when everything has settled down and I am now resuming my coursework in Law School. –Loss of privacy is my number one concern, in fact loss of privacy was the reason I reported to #FBIDC for further investigation. Because I am related to a very big case, I feel as though I was put at risk of harm and my sense of peace and privacy was being invaded for the personal purposes of others to get a birdseye view on current circumstances regarding the case and individuals involved in the case. That is not my job to provide a birdseye view and nothing contained in my computer provides for that because that was not the purposes for which I attended Law School, I took my LSAT and applied long before the case was reopened and a certain accused individual was sent to jail for a different crime. Similarly that was not the purpose for attending a US Supreme Court hearing, my purposes for being there were strictly to visit, but later felt compelled to write about whats been bothering me like I am doing so here, same tone and style except by the sharing of facts. –When misunderstandings occur it is important not to defend oneself by reinforcing any and all negatives about an individual to support your position, this only puts you and the person you are harming at further risk of harm. Its always best to leave things alone. When our judgments are in error and when we come to the wrong conclusions, its always best to just leave things alone and allow the facts to speak for themselves. It is not our responsibility to take facts and argue why they are the way there are and argue for what purposes facts exist which either support or negate a persons disposition in life and purposes or explanations regarding their decision making, choices, and reasons for why they are situated in positions in life that cause us to pass negative judgments on them or support campaigns to ensure negative judgment is passed on them. There are two misunderstandings regarding the causes for my condition (1) why I committed suicide; and (2) why I got a DUI. I committed suicide because my medication was flushed down the toilet and I went into withdrawals became bipolar and suicidal and swallowed a bottle of prescribed medication (Kolonopin) and do not remember anything afterward, woke up in the Hospital. Secondly, I got a DUI because I had 3 drinks and drove on the freeway (2 long island ice teas, and 1 double cranberry vodka) and this was my second DUI that Spring 2013 and could not get out of it, so I requested to just spend the night in Jail and not take the Sobriety test because I knew that I had had too much to drink that night. Prior to my DUI I have had no problems with the Law and a perfect and clean record. I now have a misdemeanor on my record, and am in the process of finishing my community service. I could not get back into Law School after I took 2 weeks off, my petitions were denied. That is why I could not finish my JD, and then I became suicidal and alcoholic, drinking every week. These stories are not important and do not explain why I have been discriminated because the discrimination and people being mean to me and being dumped occurred long before the DUI. That’s why I was drinking because my life was ruined. My Dream was to be an Attorney. My Dream was to go to Law School and finish Law School that was my purpose for being there and when I was not able to finish Law School I was heartbroken. Because I kept getting sick in Law School that made it difficult for me to finish, I started off strong with As and Bs and after dating, I got Cs and Ds and kept getting dumped by my boyfriend at or near or during finals weeks, which was very devastating and traumatic for me, so much so that several times I did not take my finals and withdrew from courses the day before exams, because I did not feel as though I was at my best and could do better. This was to protect my GPA, which needed to stay up in order for me to finish Law School. At this point I do not think I will finish my JD. But can still sit for the Bar Exam if I decide to the exam after I finish my LLM and study on my own, I believe I still have the opportunity to do so, with petition. –It is never required that we share our stories online. Sometimes it is best to just keep quiet and allow your professional work to speak for itself. Confrontation is never best when put under unreasonable pressure to defend oneself and ones reputation in public, is a very traumatic experience and causes me much mental disability. It is at my expense to share my story online and defend myself. It is at my expense and peace of mind to confront individuals who have harmed me. It is at my expense to address anything that I have already moved forward from. It is at my expense to expose myself to risk of harm and loss of privacy as a result of overexposing myself. If I was never trashed and dumped in the first place I would not be where I am today. If I was never trashed and dumped in the first place I would not have gotten a DUI and would not have been harmed during the time I was an Alcoholic and reputation damaged. What we do in private is our own business, who we sleep with is our own business, who we hook up with is our own business and never the business of others or their right to know, that is our privacy protected by the Constitution, our Right to Privacy, and there is good reason why we are afforded that privilege in life. Therefore if already dumped and trashed then why is it of any concern to anyone else if I trash myself. To me, why was it okay for others to harm me but not okay for me to harm myself, why was that so shocking. If someone is behaving a certain way it is because they have been caused to behave in that way and means that they have been harmed in some way, which causes them to harm themselves. That’s what it means when someone is suicidal and they are harming themselves, its because they have been harmed and that harm cannot be undone. *Be careful not to take explanations that are being used in application to my particular circumstances and then apply that rationale to a different set of facts that is wrong and results in a misinterpretation of facts and illogical conclusions. For every set of facts different arguments exist and must be made and no analysis of facts is universal and can not then be universally applied to any other set of facts containing sides in which good or bad character traits are sought to be proven. Only in my particular situation was my present circumstances of bad luck and being single being used to say that I am damaged goods and that I somehow deserve to be in the position that I am in now. I have no problem finding a boyfriend, I choose to be Single. I can go on Tinder anytime I want to find a date and move on. I choose to be Celibate. I do not have a job because (1) there was no job in Century City, he had to make a job for me, that was separate from my work in the office; and (2) my second job was taken by 3 engineers more qualified for the work that needed to be done for this particular startup. This type of required explanation in order not to pass judgment not only violates my own sense of privacy, but also violates my required duty to maintain the privacy of others during the regular course of my business dealings with them and terms of employment I agreed and signed to. But under these circumstances where harm continues and my luck does not turn around professionally, requires me to backtrack and discuss why I am being discriminated behind my back in chatter and for what purposes and what needs to be spoken about in order for those judgments to pass in terms of the gravity of harm they are causing to my current condition and ability to function and live a normal life. Otherwise the law does not protect us against people who simply talk shit about others, and pass judgments upon others in error, those are forgivable offenses and if can be explained and reversed and no damage is done and condition can be removed then there is no cause of action that can justifiably be maintained on that persons behalf. This is my ideal conclusion, to not take anything to court and to resolve as much misunderstanding as possible outside of court without filing additional papers with the court explaining what kind of reoccurring harm is continuing and discussion in detail of how I am being harmed and the losses I have experienced as a result of people talking shit about me behind my back since before I got my DUI. I am already at a disadvantage in life. The advantages I have been afforded in life are because I am a great decision maker and a very honest and hardworking person. Please do not make my life more difficult than it already is to function daily, maintain a job, and finish Law School. I already left two relationships due to mental illness, which is why I am single. I am only positive online because my job as an advocate online requires me to be positive and present the best version of myself. Away from the Camera I struggle, I do not look well everyday, and I have my own ups and downs which I choose not share out loud because it is not helpful at a time like this and it interferes with my ability to do my job online which is to make people feel safe, not to cause harm to myself or others, or present any information which could be misused to cause harm to myself or others. That is an ongoing concern, and has been a concern throughout my campaign which is why I have not shared my writings online, because there is too much room for misinterpretation without explanation and argument, purely facts presented, not open for argumentative purposes, which I believe they were misused for to cause me harm or inadvertently used to cause others harm behind my back. Now I know that whenever facts are presented on behalf of myself or others to also at that same time present arguments on behalf of myself or others, for the purposes of abiding by my duty as a law student, I am legally not allowed to represent others, so the best way I could present facts were to present facts in which the arguments were self explanatory, and which the innocence of others was preserved and never intended to result in a negative judgment. Evidence of this is obvious in the outcome of the decisions I have made which have been for good purposes. I am still at Thomas Jefferson School of Law, finishing my LLM I only have 12 Units left (a Degree that requires you have completed a JD in order to get into, I qualified for via the numbers of years and units of Legal Coursework completed); and my Brother got a job at Harvard as a Professor and Doctor. My Family is very proud of us I think we have come a long way, we don't fight anymore, we understand eachother better, and I think we are doing a much better job of representing one another in our own way by doing our best to excel in our chosen fields and adhere to exemplary standards of ethical decision making and the manner of professionalism we apply to the work completed by us for review, in order to continue achieving and be able to provide for ourselves one days, and Families one day. Always note that when you cause harm to one you cause harm to many and when one is harmed by themselves that requires no additional harm be justified to further highlight or argue that that harm was caused to themselves. We know this I committed suicide, that's a harm caused to myself, not by others, which is what I have been saying over and over again since 2009 and moved forward why is it again be readdressed now or being questioned, for what purposes, in application applies to no arguments for or against which would justify the usage of such facts to argue why my present circumstances are the way they are. I am not suicidal, and my present circumstances if not doing well are for different reasons not the same reasons for which I was not doing well in 2009. Therefore irrelevant to readdress old information and apply it to new information or old argument to a new set of facts, as we discussed before that results in misinterpretation. When someone causes harm to themselves no one else is harmed, usually people are mad at that person for harming themselves, but they themselves suffer no emotional harm or broken hearts, just get turned off by that person and lack empathy for their struggles in life. That is understandable. That I understand, when I cause harm to myself or commit suicide that is no ones fault but my own that is harm caused to myself as a means for coping with my present circumstances, I've never placed blame on anyone for my present circumstances. I was not raised that way to blame others for my misfortunes. That's called a cop out, when you do not take responsibility for your own decisions and choices in life and misfortunes, it is then to no one's benefit including one's own to blame others for the sake of misplacing guilt or causes for harm upon another to somehow alleviate the guilt or harm being experienced by one for causing harm to themselves. I am a great decision maker, just because I hurt myself does not mean I have been a bad decision maker or responsible for the harm caused to me, experienced by me, or responsible for the harm caused to others as a result of the reoccurring harm experienced by others who talk shit about me behind my back, that is not my responsibility to correct, I can only perfect my own position in life, not the positions of others, it is not my responsibility to perfect the positions of others to help them live in a morally righteous way in which they can move forward from whatever ills they are currently suffering from that cause them to cause harm to others or reinforce harm causing agents to another. Why is that the case? Because when I am experiencing harm, my only responsibility is to take care of myself and correct that harm which I am currently suffering from which I take responsibility for as a product of my own decision making and not wrongfully place blame on others for my present circumstances. Therefore it is not my responsibility then to address any potential harm caused to others by my condition if not caused by me but a condition caused to me which is my responsibility to deal with on my own, because my decisions are what I am responsible for not the decisions of others who have caused harm to me. Just because something is my responsibility to address and cure on my own, whether a product of my own decisions or the decisions of others, as stated earlier is only the responsibility of the one harmed to help themselves cure that condition or current defect or undo the harm currently being suffered by doing their best to represent themselves. One cannot best represent themselves or undo harm caused to them by their decisions or the decisions of others if they are placing blame on others or not taking responsibility for their own decision making. Therefore it is wrong to place any individual who is currently curing their own condition and perfecting their decision making skills in a position to accuse or defend themselves or others, for the sake of applying current facts to previous facts to argue the causes for conditions, that again results in misinterpretation of facts and wrongful application of information provided to cause harm to an individual who has already stated that their current condition is a product of the choices they have made (i.e. me – drinking, drug use, DUI, and suicide attempt in 2009) unrelated to my present circumstances, in which I am not suicidal and I am not sexually active, and I am not being raped, and I am not using drugs, and I am not using alcohol, and I do not have a boyfriend, and I am not in law school, and I am not working, and I am not going out, and I am not social, on its face, nothing is that same or similar as the time when I committed suicide or to any time in my life for that matter. I am making great decisions in life right now, if I become suicidal it is because my health is failing because I am 31 and Single and wish to be Married and with child and a job, and it is taking longer than necessary in order for that to occur. Simple. Not complicated understandable, any other application of information or misinterpretation in the negative is being done so to cause me harm and therefore is not necessary as discussed previously for me to address, my only responsibility now is to take care of myself, by law that is my only responsibility and has been my only responsibility to do so given these facts, in which a condition has been caused by harm to myself which no other persons are affected because I hurt myself and we know that I hurt myself and because I hurt myself my condition fails. No one is blaming anyone right now, and providing that reassurance out loud puts me at risk of harm and puts at risk of harm the privacy of myself as well as those who have harmed me which then subjects me to retaliation.

It's never too late to start over in life. Everyone deserves a new beginning. No failures in life are irreparable. The only permanent damage you can cause is to yourself when you don't let go of the past. The less confident you are in life the more people turn on you the more confident in life you are the more you attract the attention of others and the more accepting others are of you. If you feel misunderstood know that you are the cause for that misunderstanding and that it can be repaired online via Social Media.

Tips for Working While Single by Leslie Fischman 082416

Always be traditional/formal in your approach towards relationships. Being a Professional requires you to do so. Even when it comes to dating and friendships. Never let your emotions get the best of you or allow your racing thoughts to interfere with your decision making. So long as you are Professional and honest in your approach you should never worry about what others think or beat yourself up over acceptance and/or rejection. Miscommunications often occur during the formation of any relationship business or otherwise personal. Always be respectful of the feelings of others whether reciprocated or not when others are open with you just be kind and always set firm boundaries with them so they know where you are at emotionally/Professionally. Sometimes when Single as a Professional you have to turn down opportunities to make way for others in the future. No job should ever require you to overcompensate your needs or allow others to overstep your boundaries -you are always the best judge of character and decision making skills sharp when Sober be sure to be Sober at most if not all any Work related events. If I think of any more "Tips for Working While Single" I'll let you know. Be well everyone.

My Decision to Write a Book by Leslie Fischman 082816

After 4 years of writing online everyday I have decided to write a book. Why? There are a few obvious reasons, but mostly because Books provide the gift of permanency of shared thoughts, which may otherwise be lost through systems of writing online (i.e. word counts, and forums). Writing in a private space gives the writer a much different room to express oneself, in which the energy derived through the process of writing is calm versus experiencing anxiety (such as what I experienced) writing online in a live environment. This is a new phenomenon, writing in live environments, I suppose research has been done on the effects (personally) such as the ones I've experienced while writing online. Often times to cope with such social anxiety I would just erase what I wrote (which I would hear negative replies to in my head). Writing for School is much different than writing for an audience online, this I quickly learned. Online commentary is automatic versus writing in a private space, commentary is triggered at your leisure, upon review of your written work, there are no spaces below for which people can write feedback or commentary can be anticipated or audience insights and thoughts can be read aloud in the mind. These are obvious distractions for any writer trying to compose themselves and their material online. It is not the best way to get down on paper your thoughts when under any kind of pressure, anxiety, time constraint, or word count constraints. However, despite these setbacks I experienced as a writer online, I did learn the value of word counted boxes in which to write, they forced me to compose myself in a few amount of words, which required I make sense (as I chose/adapted to) without the risk of being taken out of context. Meaning I wrote so that my words could not be taken out of context and could be read and understood with or without the submission following or preceding each entry. This was important to me as a writer, because I know that each submission does not always stay in sequence once distributed to a master mixed feed to my recipients (audience). That was one of the benefits I experienced writing in a word counted space. –Today I blog on Instagram and Facebook, in addition to Weebly, Twitter, and Wordpress. Adapting to each space has been challenging, I realize that each audience has a different set of expectations of you as a writer, where some spaces accept less formal contribution and greater leniency on use of humor, some spaces require a more serious tone and generic form of presentation in order to be read, such as standardized boxing of shared websites (i.e. ads for your space and blog post posted in another arena) and standardized formatting (i.e. created via Apps such as Quotes Creator and Over). These are things you learn Professionally as a Writer over time. Of course you want your material to be read. I think I've come along way from handwritten pieces photographed and published online, or notepad screenshots from my cellphone. I've enjoyed writing online and I look forward to continuing my journey as a writer in a more professional space in book form, following the completion of my Dissertation for my Masters in Law LLM. Be well, and thank you for following.

Difficult Times by Leslie Fischman 08/24/16

Whenever someone is going through a difficult time its important to take a moment and step back. The immediate response is generally to be avoidant of that person that is understandable. Often times what does not make sense to us or any conditions to which we lack empathy for, are situations in which we are not inclined to help. Those that do we applaud, those who don't we neither shun nor regard as unempathetic or insensitive people but share with them the same understanding as we do for those who are currently suffering from whatever illnesses may be. We are having this discussion because during difficult times, the only way in which that person can be helped or the only way for those in helping positions to be able to help that person is through compassion, patience, and not passing judgment on others for their current conditions, neither sympathizing or assuming they are the cause for their conditions or assume that others are the cause for their conditions. We instead take a step back and allow people to come forward when they are ready and willing to discuss whatever is bothering them. That is why we have AA, a confidential space in which people can share their problems in a trusting and loving environment for which they can share and get the appropriate feedback they need to begin moving forward and healing themselves. When another comes to you for help and you do not know how to help them it is always best to redirect them to the appropriate outlets for support, hotlines, hospitals, and AA/NA Meetings. Those are three of the best places in which someone suffering from illness can get immediate help without overwhelming those around them and without causing additional harm to themselves or others during the process of healing. When someone is ill, that does not mean that they are contagious nor a threat to the well being of others. It simply means that they are ill, have identified by themselves or others that they are ill, and what is needed then is support and professional feedback. It is not the responsibility of friends to help those who are ill and it is not the responsibility of friends to care for those who are ill or responsible for the outcomes of not helping those who are ill when they become ill. It is to each persons responsibility to get help when they become ill never the responsibility of others to get them help unless they are a dependent or unable to get help themselves because of preexisting disability or circumstances which disable their ability to get help themselves. Why are we addressing this topic, because often times when people become ill we feel obligated to help them and that if anything bad happens to them we take responsibility or feel bad that when and if they don't get the help they need and suffer additional harm become more ill that it is our fault for not helping them or finding the necessary support for them needed when they become ill, recognized by themselves or others that they have become ill. –In todays day and age with Social Media do not be alarmed by those who share their problems, this is a normal response to being in a group of trusted individuals, to share what is on our mind, nothing to be surprised about. No one requires that you be open to anyones sharing of their mind agreeable or not to those shares, but you are required to report if any of those shares have the potential to cause harm to themselves or others, whether currently a threat or a potential threat or currently causing harm or have the capacity to cause harm to any and all individuals with respect to those shares affected by and apart of the audience to those shares. This is called being an Adult. Reporting any behavior or suspicious posting that has the potential to cause harm so that that harm does not occur. This is why we have private avenues for reporting, messaging capabilities, and reporting stations at each and everyone of our Social Media outlets, and functioning capabilities to block and or otherwise hide from anyone we feel has the potential to cause us harm or be harmed by through the process of interacting with them and being apart of the audience to their shares. One of the best features on Facebook is to cancel receipt of posts in your newsfeed from Friends. As discussed earlier avoidance is the first step toward dealing with anyone we feel has become ill who we do not want to help or who we do not know how to help but if continually exposed to that person may feel obligated to help, so we avoid those types of individuals. That is understandable. Why are we having this discussion, because these are issues to which I can personally relate. That when I became ill and would not attend AA meetings, Social Media was the chosen outlet for me to share and share to others what was currently bothering me or subjects I felt necessary to discuss with others not necessarily in public but in a space I felt left with to discuss what was bothering me, that I did not feel that AA could help me with. Why because these were not alcohol related circumstances, or circumstances as we discussed above cause by me or happened to me, but circumstances which when affected by caused me to become ill. For many years I was able to manage those emotions and discussions with the potential to cause me harm, but sometimes others cannot avoid broaching topics that have the potential to harm you, and that's unfortunate for everyone affected by the discussion of topics which cause us illness, confusion, despair, and dysfunction as a society, such as discussions of why people harm people, cases existing and preexisting, homicides, gun violence, and GLBT issues. For me those are issues which cause me mental illness, which I have dealt with on my own. That being said, be as avoidant as you want, others issues should never become your issues, and you have every right to avoid being affected by the problems of others. But if you can help, and are given the opportunity to help, the best you can do is be present and refer them to professionals such as hospitals, rehabs, and AA meetings and politely suggest to them that sharing their problems in public spaces such as Social Media are not the best spaces to discuss their illnesses or problems to protect them from additional harm and also to protect the audience from harm having heard discussed their issues out loud, whether existing preexisting or non-existent, that is for the professionals to interpret when treating those with illnesses which we avoid discussion of or helping. I hope this was helpful at this time to address my own experiences, and share this thoughtful reflection from the standpoint of my audience, being as understanding and compassionate as I assume they have been towards me, present. Thank you for all your help. Be well everyone and if you have any questions as always please do contact me or go to your nearest professional for feedback.

So thankful for all my friends, and friends Ive made along the way, during my time online on Social Media. Thankful for the jobs Ive had and the Bosses who have hired me even though I remained active online Blogging. I know that Blogging is not an easy Profession. And I know that Blogging is a trait that is hard to accept amongst your friends. Not an easy attribute to accept or get used to. Despite losing friends. For the most part I got all my friends back Blogging. I think it allowed them to be close to me again after separated for so many years while in Law School. For that I am thankful. As for my new friends who do not know me and still not accustomed to my Blogging habits, thank you for your patience while getting to know me and giving me a chance (i.e. #TaylorAdamsAM). It has not been easy for him liking someone and then feeling so distant from someone. I think that Blogging for awhile kept myself apart from everyone, because I was discouraged from Blogging on Facebook not my choice. I think that my journey on Twitter was a great journey in life in which I learned a lot about myself. Now returning to Facebook, regardless of what anyone says, I think I have a much better head on my shoulders now because of my experiences in life, so much so that now nothing that anyone thinks should affect the decisions I make in my life or dictate who I meet or how that relationship turns out. I realize its no ones fault but my own if relationships don't work out and that never because of interference by another or others. That was something that took me a long time to realize. Nothing to be suicidal over. Just something I realized. That being said. Just as I forgive others for their shortcomings or wrongs towards me, I expect the same from others. I don't think it's the Blogging that is the reason why #TaylorAdamsAM and I cannot date, but because he is probably dating someone else. Which is something I will just have to accept. Its hard when you love someone and you cannot be with them. I have kept myself available for him nonetheless. Because when dating another or on Tinder he has responded in the negative worried or upset, defriends me (i.e. and called my Mom). So Im still kind of blind as to whether he likes me or not, but I haven't given up faith yet. And will wait for him, and in the meantime get my life together back on track and finish my LLM and work.

Relationships by Leslie Fischman 081716

I think its really difficult to be in relationships when you are working on yourself and trying to come up in life and find your way. Its really difficult to be close to anyone and at the same time find a job, maintain a job, and still find time to enjoy a social life. Right now my social life consists on writing online and keeping in touch with the friends I make along the way who have been very supportive of me, followed, liked my posts, and corresponded with me, checked in. Its really unfortunate when you are doing well and you are not able to share that happiness with another and for whatever reasons the one you love is not able to share that happiness with you. Everything takes time to develop including what it and what is not, who we are, and who we are in the lives of others, particularly our significant others if and when we find them. Not everything in life in times perfectly and most of the time everything occurs at the wrong time due to poor timing. In order for things to occur on track and on our own best timing, well that is different for every individual. For me my best timing is when everyone around me is happy. But life doesn't always work out that way. I wish that my life was different than it is today. I wish that I never Campaigned and just lead a normal life. I wish that I never dated in Law School and stuck to my gut instinct which was that I was not able nor ready to maintain an intimate relationship and at the same time focus on school. But at the time I put the needs of someone else's before my own. When this occurs we are told that everything will come back to us tenfold and that our good deeds do not go unnoticed and that when we put others before ourselves that this means that in the end or somewhere down the line we are to benefit from that experience and those choices we made in life (to put others before ourselves). Eventually you get tired. When this occurs its important to step back, breathe, reassess things, and move forward. Pretending like everything is okay when its not. Or pretending like your feelings are not hurt when they are. Solves nothing. Particularly in terms your ability to communicate with loved ones or significant others. Less is more. The more we try to fix things and the more we try to buffer misunderstandings with excuses, and the more we try to be accepted the less likely those things are to occur. Why is that? Because a person who tries to hard is seen as compensating for some weakness or trying to hard to overcome some obstacle (negative) or trying to overcompensate make positive a life which they assume was not going well (or negative) which is the cause for their current circumstances. Not everything that goes wrong in our lives is to our own fault or at our own expense, usually when bad things happen not only may we be harmed but also those around us may be harmed too. Its important never to play Victim when you are the Victim, this usually breeds animosity towards you as trying to situate yourself as disabled or less capable than the rest and in need. People who are in need are generally characterized as physically or mentally incapacitated to the extent that they need or rely on others to take care of them, guide them, help them, for instance Victims. If you do not fit the mold of someone who could potentially be Victimized, you will not be seen as a Victim, but as a cause for your current circumstances and a product of the choices you have made in your life which you are expected to take responsibility for and correct on your own best timing. This is unfortunate. Many opportunities in life are wasted or passed when we are misunderstood and when we are harmed. Its really not the responsibility of the Victim to defend themselves. But here I am. Goodnight everyone, and hope you have a great day tomorrow. And remember to smile and be appreciative of all your blessings in life and those who are in your lives and not to worry about those who chose not to be apart of your life. Ive always been the most popular whatever school I go to or whatever town Im in. That's just me. So I know something is wrong when someone who is kind to me at one point, chooses not to associate with me at another point in time. And that's for me to figure out and is really none of anyone else's business but mine. All I can do is be myself to the best of my ability and live life without or without people in my life. Without or without their guidance, acceptance, love, understanding, or consideration. When you are down, when you put yourself out there, you can only be harmed, not benefit when situated in a weakened stance by failure, mishap, rejection, or misfortune. Bad luck occurs and its to ones own responsibility to turn their luck around, not rely on others to help enable that to occur. You are what you attract in life.

Please Move Forward by Leslie Fischman

Key Characteristic of People Who Try to Harm You

A key characteristic of people trying to harm you, are people who begin with a conclusion and then do everything they can to create circumstances to justify the conclusion they have come to. When what they create and when what they say does not add up to the conclusion they seek, is when they become frustrated and when they become hostile toward the one they seek to dismember or otherwise render insignificant, troublesome, or of harm to anyone, including themselves. Those with mental illness face stigma. That is understood, I am not mentally ill. I have been caused to become mentally ill because people are trying to say I am mentally ill and because I am mentally ill that is why I am threatened by them. No I am threatened by this person because they hit on my boyfriend. Its been 4 years, get over it, no one cares, no one has been harmed, and no one cares what you do or who you date or what you are doing in your life so long as you are happy and able to move forward, that does not mean attack me and hurt me because you cannot move forward from a situation that you are being defensive about, no one said you were wrong, these things happen, just move forward.

When is enough enough? by Leslie Fischman

When it comes to love and detachment there are a few simple things you must remember, what is important to you, what your values are, and what your priorities in life are. Sometimes no matter how hard you try to focus on one thing, other issues arise during the course of bonding with another, and if you have not yet dealt with what is required to be taken seriously, then in that event, you risk the loss of not being heard as sound, and seen as someone who is defending themselves or seeking a relationship to cure a defect that is not currently present, or a defect that has placed upon you by another in order for a certain result to occur in their favor. People who are weak rely on others in order to make sense of their places in life and what they can do in order to improve their places in life. More often in not it is through the taking of power away and by displacement of power upon others or to themselves that they feel a heightened sense of self. This occurs during the sharing of ourselves, is when we are most vulnerable, that we are harmed by those who seek to use information provided to cause harm to the one who is sharing. When someone is trying to harm you they will relate everything you say to themselves and try to make sense of anything you say in relationship to themselves and their agenda and what story fits best to cause a series of reactions to occur to bring about a consequence or a causal chain to prove that when such and such is the case then such and such is the reaction and the reaction is intended to such and such and therefore I was harmed. Whenever anyone loses their cool in life it makes everyone uncomfortable that is not a debatable issue but understandable and makes sense. Not something personal. When someone wishes death upon another it was because in my case I was harmed to the extent that I became disabled and unable to function, at a loss, without my boyfriend who I loved and thought I was going to remain with during the course of my employment, which was abruptly ended upon hire after I had two surgeries to remove HPV from my Uterus, which turned into Carcinoma Cancer. My life was put in jeopardy and at risk because someone decided to steal my boyfriend. No one ever accused this person of misconduct simply stated that I was insulted and felt disrespected and my feelings were hurt and felt like this person hit on my boyfriend, and as a result interfered with our relationship and changed its course. We never know why people make decisions in life regarding who they choose to associate with. Usually it is because of things they have in common or share common beliefs or share some kind of experience in life to which they feel bonded and from that bond trust is formed. We value those kinds of relationships. And usually those are not the kind of relationships anyone would try to interfere with, especially by someone who was in a relationship already, met her boyfriend who offered me pizza one day at the bar. Who I did not talk to, briefly replied no its okay got up and changed seats, out of respect for her and when she tried to talk to me was brief as well. When people try to create fights or negative interactions where peaceable relations ones existed then this causes hardship. There was no bond at that bar, and there were no friendships. I was alcoholic and mentally ill and would listen to my iPhone, whether empty or crowded and mind my own business, write.

Social Media Campaigns & Gun Violence by Leslie Fischman

#BloggingCampaign (www.bloggingcampaign.wordpress.com) is just one Social Media Campaign founded by Leslie Fischman for Brady Campaign, which is Entertainment based, figuring out ways to raise money for Gun Violence Prevention Campaigns via Entertainment. Right now I Entertain via Quotes and Fashion Blogging, and used to Entertain via story telling in the form of iMovies and Dialogue on Twitter everyday, as Comedian and Story Teller. By focusing on Entertainment and not the Violence itself, I hope to assist others in the Helping Professions, who work directly with Victims, without re-traumatizing them by discussion of events. Other Campaigns who support Brady Campaign are Million Mom March and Women Against Gun Violence.

Yesterday's quotes on Instagram.com/leslie_fischman talked about Suicide. In fact, Suicide deaths account for two thirds of the deaths due to Gun Violence. [1] 8 out of 10 deaths among adolescent are due to "firearm suicide," with guns found in the home. Which is why Brady Campaign started www.suicideproof.org, offering tips on how to suicide proof your home. [2] For more information about Suicide and Gun Violence, read the report on Brady Campaign's Website, entitled "The Truth About Suicide & Guns Report." [3]

If you are active on Social Media, and want to help protest gun violence, you can now do so by taking a selfie. That's right, taking a selfie with the Hashtag #GunsOut. The #GunsOut Campaign was started by DoSomething.org, "one of the largest org[anizations] for young people and social change in the world." [4] Want to start a Campaign but don't know where to start or where to promote your Campaign? Go to <https://www.dosomething.org/us/campaigns> to check out current listings and create your own Campaign. Recently DoSomething.org has created a Page called "How to Stand with Orlando, which offers "resources on supporting the LGBTQ+ community, paying tribute to the victims, and practicing self-care in the wake of tragedy." [5] And if you need to talk to someone immediately, you can now text HELLO to 741-741. [6]

Other Campaigns seeking to prevent Gun Violence, have addressed issues such as the trafficking of illegal guns in the United States. This is why Advocates to reduce the flow of illegal guns into their neighborhoods launched the Social Media Campaign #FollowtheGun, to track where crime guns come from. [7]

In recent news, Governor Jerry Brown of California signed a bulk of sweeping gun control package into law, and vetoed 5 bills! [8] Other Social Media Campaigns, run in the State of California include School Districts hiring "Social Media Listening Services" to monitor Student's pages for threats of violence. In response, the ACLU drafted legislation via #TakeCTRL Campaign to "prohibit schools from compelling students to allow access [by] provid[ing] login credentials for their private social media accounts." The issue here being invasion of students privacy. [9]

Another Social Media Campaign run by Everytown, is through the use of "Social Media Graphics." [10] Everytown's Social Media Campaign: "brings together existing advocacy groups (Moms Demand Action for Gun Sense in America; Mayors Against Illegal Guns), along with survivors of gun violence, gun owners, faith leaders, and Americans from big cities and small towns alike, to both educate and drive action." [11] For more information on Social Media Graphics check out: <https://echo.co/blog/cheat-sheet-images-social-media>.

Hashtags have become quite the phenomenon on Twitter and Facebook, for communicating ideas and sharing posts in a comingled feed online, via hashtag. It's a way for everyone to contribute and for groups to share their ideas, material, stories, and posts with one another on the same topic, designated by hashtag. That is why I initially created #BradyMusicCampaign for Brady Campaign, which is now #BloggngCampaign, that currently supports Brady Campaign (#Enough), Everytown (#EndGunViolence), and Million Mom March (#WomenAgainstGunViolence, #EndGunViolence). –Recently Senator Chuck Schumer and his daughter Amy, have created their own Hashtag Campaign to Stop Gun Violence, entitled #aimingforchange. [12]

Together we can accomplish a great many things and help make change happen!

What is Blahgging? by Leslie Fischman

Blogging is very taboo. And often times, people discourage blogging as a form of therapy or self-help. Blogging to me is an outlet from which I can support myself and support others, as I grow and learn from my troubles in life. I don't think that blogging is a waste of time. While some may see it as blahgging, I think that blogging has a great deal of value. It really helps you to get to know yourself and helps others get to know you better. Not on an intimate level, not on a personal level, but for me, on a Professional level. Blogging has been a way for me to demonstrate my work ethic, my dedication, and my interests in writing and being a professional writer (a Paralegal).

I hope that you enjoy reading my blog and that it is helpful to you on your journey in life. As always if you have any questions please do not hesitate to leave a comment or you can email me via the contact box on mymollydoll.org. Take care and look forward to writing my next post.

Poem #1: Finding Yourself by Leslie Fischman

Half asleep at the assembly line
Another day another dime
Mislabelled and tossed cant even feel my face
What happened nevermind nevermind

New in town new office
Which room this room adjacent to mine
Among piles on the floor lightheaded
His tie undone he smiles and says goodbye

Weeks past and put on platforms
The rented house a kickback spot
Given an assignment and given another
Who huh what another crowd another life
Did my chores and said goodbye

I cried and cried I thought a friend
A cure that hurt, not the solution

A broken heart, and my job gone
I put up flyers, and pleaded to the town
Give me my job back _____

No life is ruined when your 0-1 single & 30
Never let them win, never let them take your power away
That's what they say, but love love me made me cry
Maybe that's why I couldn't stay

You only live life once –its short
Don't waste time living it to its fullest
Your potential is found in enjoying the simple
The simple things life has to offer can only be found
When you're good and ready and sound
Sound of mind, sound of heart
Until then keep trecking, don't worry about time
You get what you give and give only what you get
You cannot be both until youre found

Therapeutic Story Telling by Leslie Fischman

There's a difference between therapeutic story telling and telling stories for personal benefit or gain. The second is not the purpose for #BloggingCampaign. A story is only told for therapeutic purposes and with good purpose, and with a lesson that has been learned by me, usually a hardship that I have endured, which is of no detriment whatsoever to anyone else in the telling of a story by me. In fact the reporting of such incidences, actually subjects me to greater risk of harm and retaliation by unnamed parties, who either aggravated my condition, or caused me to become mentally ill, disorganized, & strained. Since I have gotten better, I do not tell stories anymore. With previous reference to Jay Carney, watching on CSPAN, in the immediate response to crisis, it is normal to reiterate the same things over and over again until clear, that does not apply to the stories shared themselves but more so to the lessons that have been learned. My purpose is never to harm anyone, through the sharing of story or life lesson, and usually makes them look like the bigger person, and me undergoing stress and strain understanding why I was treated a certain way and what I could have done differently to not have been treated that way. Discrimination is an unfortunate experience in life, and usually not something you ever plan to encounter in your lifetime if you are a perfectionist and do everything right. But sometimes, when you are not paying attention people can take advantage of your good nature, and if you enable them to, to harm your reputation and make you look like something you are not, and encourage you to become something that does not accurately reflect your values or how far you've come in life. That is really disappointing for anyone to be in the shoes of the loser in life. No one plans for it, but it occurs, if you are not careful and if you do not stay on top of your life and responsibilities, your future becomes more difficult to achieve at the present than it otherwise would be had you not made mistakes in life or exercised poor decision making skills. Luckily, I have never experienced such a set back in life, to which my life has been ruined, luckily God puts me back in place achieving in life, like I am now. Why? Because I am a good person, I've worked hard to become successful, and I have harmed no one in my lifetime, but constantly been under threat of harm or harm to my reputation, but individuals who think its entertaining to put another as disease in life, simply because they don't think that they deserve the recognition or level of success they have been able to achieve in life. You often see this with overachievers who are constantly being put down or criticized, people tend to be more critical of those who are successful and in positions of power than those who are not as successful and not given leadership positions in life. You would hope that once success has been achieved that others will be happy for you, but in order to continue on that path of achievement in life, you can only maintain footing by staying true to your values, knowing your limits, and not allowing anyone to pull you off center or cause you to make decisions you do not feel comfortable making. For example (STORY TIME GET EXCITED), in 2013 after Boston (Purpose: Lesson Learned) my friend #JayWest offered to hang out with me and invited me out for drinks with him and his friends. I wasn't hungry, but drank and later partook in drug use. Today, that is not how I deal with problems or feelings of being overwhelmed, and no one should, because drugs and alcohol only make things worse when used as a coping strategy for dealing with unwanted emotions, trauma, or life challenges. How do you get through to a Terrorist? And if you could get through to one, what would you say to get them to stop from carrying out the act of terror planned by them? I built a website and write everyday, promoting #BloggingCampaign and my ideas, beliefs, and lessons learned in my lifetime, hopefully to help all, not directed toward those who harm others. That is again, not the purpose of this Campaign to help offenders, or people who have harmed others, I joked briefly about being forced to run a scared straight program, because my Attorney mixed me in with Criminals, to whom I have no relation with otherwise in my daily life. They are not a population I specialize in or am trying to help, right now I'm Victim centered helping those who have been harmed by others and or have unwanted emotions (anger, resentments, etc.) and how to deal with those feelings constructively and move forward. My experience? Relationships. Romantic Relationships. And Breakups. How it relates to everyone else, that is for your understanding not mine, it's not my job to apply my knowledge to areas to which I have no expertise. –That's all for now. I just wanted to clarify a few remaining issues concerning my agenda, motives, life philosophy, campaign objectives, inspirations, and motivations for putting together a Campaign, its for the most part to help everyone move forward, and better understand one another, through understanding one who has been through many life challenges and been able to overcome them all, despite being suicidal or experiencing mental illness, but having a strong sense of faith that if disciplined and by making good decisions for oneself, that God would reward this hardwork not continually trash me, but let me get to the other side finally in life.

What is Normal? by Leslie Fischman

Everyone wants to be normal, this is not always easy and difficult to achieve at times. The longer you isolate the more difficult this becomes and the more skewed your interpretations of others gets. You may think your thoughts are correct, but sometimes they are not. Having a better understanding of our thoughts, triggers, and misinterpretations can only be achieved through talk therapy via writing and speaking among trained professionals, whether in therapy, psychotherapy, or member groups that specialize in helping you understand yourself better and begin the healing process. Change is traumatizing, any change is traumatizing, it forces to adjust your settings and adapt to new settings, peoples, places, and circumstances. It's normal to want to escape under any type of conditions, or changes, that cause you discomfort. That is a normal process of adapting to change, hitting the normal button and regaining positive momentum and routine. Particularly when we experience any kind of loss in life, adjusting to life may become very difficult, this is an example of trauma we experience in response to change, the experience of loss, that may cause us discomfort and difficulty adapting to our current settings. How so? The experience of loss may cause us to withdraw completely from life, from living productively, and may have a dramatic impact on how we see ourselves and affect our relationships with others. What type of loss am I talking about? Rejection and Breakups. After a breakup and whenever you feel rejected its important first to think about what you (1) are doing right in your life, (2) how far you've come, (3) remember that you are worth it and never to give up, (4) that something better will always come along, (5) to let go of the negative and focus on the positives what you've learned from that relationship and the happier times, and (6) be appreciative of where you are now always and what you need to do in order to maintain steady ground and keep growing as a person so that new opportunities may open up for you in the future. If you fixate on the negative, and don't allow yourself to grow, and fail to see the positive, you end up hurting yourself twice as much as the person who broke up with you or rejected you. No one person's acceptance of you should dictate how you feel about yourself, or make you feel like you are unworthy of being loved. When someone hurts you, it is never your fault, sometimes people move on in life, and it may have nothing to do with you, nor should you think any less of yourself if certain relationships don't work out. That doesn't mean that your whole life is trash and that nothing you're doing is going right, it's just that one relationship that did not go right, that doesn't mean that there is something wrong with you. Never interpret any rejection or loss such as a breakup as a reflection of something that you are doing wrong in your life or understand it to mean that there is something wrong with you, you are only hurting yourself when you allow others to hurt you in this way. Remember to love yourself first, before anyone can love you. And I guarantee that when you finally love yourself, people will be happy for you, come back into your life, and be glad that you didn't give up on yourself and allow them to win.

Re: #BarackObama's "Patch" #911 Memorial Speech

Dear #TeamUSA:

It's true that on days like this we are reminded of how precious life is and how short it can be. We are reminded to be thankful for how far we have come, how much we have grown, and how important it is to stick together during times of Crisis. There is nothing that a great many cannot accomplish on their own, when in a group of likeminded individuals who share likeminded goals, peace. This I believe we have achieved. It took many years of persuading but I think that running Campaigns for Campaigns has been the best strategy toward achieving our goals, and getting everyone on the same team when the time comes to push forward and support bills, enact legislation, and pass laws which bind us and laws which help prevent acts of terror and violence from occurring. There is no negotiating with terrorists or with violent criminal offenders, or convincing that need be made to not carry out those acts of harm upon others, the purpose of creating stability is so that those attacks are not initiated in the first place, so that their capabilities for initiating such attacks are limited, and so that overall if every preventative measure is taken those attacks cannot occur, will not occur, and overtime cease altogether from occurring. That is the ultimate goal. To ensure that proper care is provided and that proper care is continues to be provided to each and everyone who seeks out that care and assistance, and lend a hand when care and assistance is needed, not shun those because they are sick, mentally ill, or at a disposition less than what we deem acceptable or worthy of adequate care and treatment necessary and required to improve not worsen the conditions of those who experience illness during their lifetimes. As a person with disabilities and mental health issues, it was so important that I help cure these defective conditions I saw, and obvious problematic behavioral health issues that was interfering with our ability to think as a collective whole and with the urgency required to tighten our ship and tighten the reigns on known and unknown offenders planning attacks on our Nations Soil and in our Schools. It's important to have fun, but within reason. It's important when necessary to take life seriously and be respectful of the futures of those around you and their need for seriousness and professionalism at work and in school. The more in control we are of our surroundings the better control we will have over our Country's overall surroundings and the general population. This I think is necessary in order to achieve our goal of peace and to continue maintaining our achieved state of peace. What we cannot find in our own homes, what we cannot achieve by ourselves, and what we have yet to achieve on our own, can always be achieved when in groups that support similar causes and when each member contributes ideas toward achieving those goals and future endeavors, peace. Once we are able to achieve on our own, or amongst others in groups, it then becomes our responsibility to teach the mechanics of achieving that state of mind with others, with those closest to us, and create the same stability and peace outside of the home, inside the home too. Peace comes from within, and when peace cannot be achieved from within, it is okay to turn to others in order to similarly achieve that state of mind, required to find peace from within, by focusing outside ourselves and immediate surroundings, and learn how to achieve by listening, educating ourselves, learning, reading, and writing -all skills so important towards the achievement of inner peace outside of the home, inside our homes, and within ourselves. Thank you for listening and I hope that you enjoy your day of rest in remembrance.

Sincerely,

Leslie Fischman

Managing Outlines Online by Leslie Fischman

It is for no one to judge the personal and professional dealings of another without authorization and permission. If you are the audience to whom a comment is directed or critique is given, then humor may seem off. That is a given. These are what we call inside jokes said out loud, to an outsider is does not make sense, but to those within is like comradere and show of support for one another's efforts to achieve a common purpose to end gun violence and stop school shootings. This we have achieved and are doing well. If you cannot be happy for a Campaign that works on positivity and light heartedness, then you are not someone in need of help, and energy is best suited for helping those in need. It is not our responsibility to correct the behavior of others or to tell others how they should think or live their life, that is arbitrary and up to each ones person how they choose to live their life and the viewpoints they choose in understanding what they read online and the stories that are shared. It's a waste of positive energy to spend time helping those who are negative and cause harm to others including myself and cause damage to this Campaign and interfere with this Campaigns to achieve its positive purpose with or without me, has always been a prime staple, a given, since I have been chronically suicidal since 2009 and write as though everyday is my last, introspective reflecting on life and thinking out loud on my own in the privacy of my computer and in the privacy of my diaries my whole life since age 5. Its really for no one to judge me when I'm having a good day and being silly. I'm still in Law School I have every right to enjoy life enjoy my youth and be young. When it comes time to work in a Law Office and to be uptight Professional then when that time comes that's how I've been and always will be. Online requires a different kind of tact and use of humor to offset the intensity of entries, postings, and required content per post, depth. Nothing comes easy in life including writing. And in the process of recovery this was something I had struggled with especially online, clarity of thought and depth. I have not always been my positive self and this is something I have continuously worked on throughout my entire life, and while it may look easy for me it is a skill I have achieved through hardwork, to train my mind how to think, when to think, when to concentrate, when to reflect, when to think harder, and when to produce. There is time and a place for everything. Now is the time to share, because everyone else has been able to share. One who is responsible for helping others is naturally inclined to share last and give everyone an opportunity to be heard first on their own best timing, then one can respond, and share out loud why they support Brady Campaign and what they have done to help provide much needed support to a Campaign that ends gun violence. I decided to go a much different route, by creating, outlining the principles and justifications for an Entertainment Campaign. That is how I decided to help. There is no one way to help during times of crisis, and anything that anyone can do to help alleviate a problem that grew out of control is appreciated at this time, not criticize those on the front lines in charge of managing an outline of a campaign online.

What Defines a Relationship by Leslie Fischman

A Relationship is defined by two people co-existing in space and time and sharing the company of one another romantically, friendship, business, professionally, or otherwise defined by being in the same space as one another for any specific period of time, that is how I would define a relationship in short. When you spend any amount of time with another person, a relationship is formed. Any time after that relationship is formed, and further established online via Social Media, is further evidence of a relationship between two persons existing in space and time, by one of the above-mentioned identifying characteristics.

When a relationship ceases, online, via blocking or unblocking, the unrestricted setting “to unblock” would be considered a waiver of the former condition which was “to block” or in other words sever a relationship. The unsevering of a relationship which has been blocked occurs upon being unblocked. Whenever a relationship is severed and no explanation is given, and no commentary, conversation, or behavior would properly justify the severing of a relationship online, it is reasonable for one to question and wonder why and inquire. Try to mend a bridge or figure out what went wrong, that’s normal.

Whenever a Professional relationship is formed, or inquired about “requesting to apply for employment to a person or persons” that Professional relationship first established endures the expectancy of that interaction and is applied further to any future relationships with that person formed, such as on Social Media. Social Media adding does not change the status of the relationship first formed which was for Professional purposes, and any correspondence for Professional purposes, should not be ignored, rejection of any Professional work is never taken lightly and insult is always interpreted and felt in response. There is no rational explanation for why anyone would defriend me, I have never been defriended in my entire life. Clearly there must be some misunderstanding. Where one is dating publically online, one is understood to be taken, therefore any interested parties, therefore have a right to date and date publically too. That is not odd behavior that would justify defriending someone who is dating another and who sends a Professional memo and update as to current status of Campaign and Schooling recommended to be registered for. Why block someone who does not follow you or message you. Why defriend someone who does not even check your Profile, ask Mark Zuckerberg (Facebook) or Instagram, they can vouch for me that at no time prior January thru March did I ever check you account more than once, 1 visit per only in a 3 month period. It would be one thing if I was pursuing you, its another thing if Im not pursuing you to assume Im pursuing you if you get sent a friend request. If you accept that friend request that means that you are okay with establishing a friendship online, a relationship beyond that initial first interaction. I’m sorry I posted to you Online. Usually when I post to others they respond, or post in response to messages received, are appreciated. Comedy or Professional tone and demeanor accepted, this is a lofty Campaign, with big dreams and high expectations, goals to achieve. 1 year FREE of School Shootings. If you are nervous and do not wish to participate than just say so, don’t call my Mom, upon leaving you after questioning, to then say I am delusional think there is a relationship that doesn’t exist. There is a relationship that existed in time and space, in person and online, and I am not delusional. Why would you argue otherwise. Unless interested in creating problems in my personal life or cause me hardship. Why if when talking everyday to you reporting to you as though you are my Supervisor, there are no problems experienced by you in response to that correspondence that would cause you to call my Mom. What type of correspondence is okay with you and what type do you disapprove of? This would be an easier conversation to have if you would just reply. Rather than talk to everyone but me and cause me additional hardship and embarrassment guessing what it is Im doing wrong, why you defriended me and blocked me in the first place. I don’t like you photos, I don’t message you, I don’t bother you. Your behavior caused me to question you, and by questioning you a relationship was established in private. That’s why I am trying to walk away. Because this is too embarrassing and does not reflect well on me only reinforces the behavior of others towards me, who lure me in then reject me make me look like a paraia. I am not a paraia. I am very popular. Have been popular my whole life. Just because I do not want to be with someone, does not mean they have the right to retaliate and make me look like I'm the crazy one. When I need help no one helps me. You were the only one to help me not take advantage of me or be mean to me. Clearly Lucas does not understand what its like to be desperate for work, depressed, and Single for many months. That is how you are hyper, needy, and talkative. From here forward I will establish no future relationships. I'm done trying. No one is willing to give me the companionship that I deserve, so I will stop trying to find companionship in life. Its simple #TaylorAdamsAM, I don't understand why you wont just let me walk away, clearly you do not love me the way I love you, so there's no point in sticking around after I am feeling better and feel whole again. That would be using you as a crutch, I'm independent fine on my own, I lost all confidence and was not strong when I met you, because of failure not due to my own poor decision making but failure due to taking care of others, upon which I was weakened and harmed not by my own doing.

How Do You Know if You are a Blogger? by Leslie Fischman

Finding yourself is one thing. Identifying yourself as a Blogger is another thing. "You don't know what you've got til its gone". (Lyrics to an Erykah Badu or Janet Jackson Song). As a Writer on Twitter for many years I had no idea that what I was writing was considered blog worthy material. Never underestimate yourself. What is trash to some may be of value to others. I first learned this sharing on Instagram and Facebook. You don't always get the most likes on Twitter, and participation often comes in another form –visits to your website. Twitter is more of a promotional tool than a tool for accurately measuring popularity rankings via likes and reblogs, but by Impressions (Twitter Analytics) & how many Followers you have. Getting a new Follower on Twitter is like the equivalent of likes and comments on Instagram. Valuable.

Here are The Steps I Took to Identifying Myself as a Blogger Online:

(1) Is what you have to say of value? If what you have to say is of value than you may consider yourself a blogger. And choose to one day start a Wordpress or build a Weebly website to showcase your work. A worthwhile investment. I'm glad I did so.

(2) Have you been writing your thoughts Online for more than a year? If so, then blogging may be a great job for you Online.

(3) Are you an unemployed Writer looking to make money or support a Campaign? It takes time but there are ways you can make money Online. Usually by blogging material prescribed to you by a Website that will pay you to blog for them, on topics chosen by them, some of these positions you must apply for. Another way you can make money via blogging is by running Ads on your website. Im not quite sure how this works yet, as this has not been my focus but something new to me, is measured by traffic and clicks. Working on it, I'll let you know when I start earning.

(4) Are you able to Write and Compose pieces on your own without the help of anyone or any Online resources? If so, then Blogging on your own Website may be a great idea for you, and may help open doors for you in the future. When I first started blogging, I noticed everyone around me on edge, but overtime they got used to it. It definitely helped me get jobs, because it enabled my Employers to get to know me on a deeper personal level, see what I'm about, what issues or Campaign I support, and what jobs I may be best fit for, as an employee.

(5) Do you have the personality for Writing in a Public Space? Are you Sensitive to Criticisms? This was the most important question I had to ask myself. As a shy person, blogging online was not something I participated in throughout School, seldom on Facebook and had opened a Twitter Account but never participated or wrote a single Tweet. To be honest I wasn't sure how to use Twitter. Just like when I started using Instagram this year, I didn't understand that the only way to communicate was by hearts, those were the like button. Now Twitter uses hearts so it's a more universally accepted understood symbol for liking something online. This just changed in 2015/2016. – Main Point: It takes a long time to adjust to writing online and the professional and social anxiety that comes with it. You subject yourself to a lot of unnecessary and unwanted feedback and attention, and that is just something you will have to get used to, and learn how to respond to. Overtime as you become a stronger writer, you get more positive feedback and less criticism (Thanks Instagram!). That comes with the territory. Online people expect the utmost professionalism of you, but in a space that's so quick to write print and publish from, for the writer it doesn't feel like that same expectation is there, but it is. Be careful.

(6) Are you Organized, Able to Keep Up with the Demand? Never start a project that you cannot finish and cannot continue to contribute to, perfect, improve, and grow. Once you generate an audience, that audience stays with you, don't lose those members, they were they first to notice you out of everyone streamlining their pieces into the mix on hashtags. When you start blogging you want to keep your audience and you want to grow your following. This usually occurs by momentum. That is, positive momentum, which is generated by blog posts you contribute to your feeds and publishing platforms. If you can't keep up, don't start publishing until you can, or write a few in advance to then publish later, to help maintain momentum and consistency. Your audience is always looking for quality not quantity. Blogging everyday reblogged pieces is fine and dandy, but when it comes time to wow them do you have unique pieces that set you apart, that can help you grow your following and maintain an existing fanbase. These are things you should prepare for before starting any type of blog.

(7) Do you have some kind of Vision and Purpose for your Blog? As we discussed above, before starting any type of blog you should be prepared and have achieved a quality of composition that sets you apart from the other bloggers so that you stand out and gain new followers, and maintain uniqueness to your work product. Some people are able to achieve this by logos. Some people are able to achieve this by stylistic preferences, and some people are able to achieve this by putting their name on everything (that would be me). That would be your vision, how you see yourself and how you want others to see you, is that vision clear? If not, there are plenty of spaces to experiment to see what your audience likes best, start with one social platform, but do not experiment on all social platforms. You want to always present your best work to each, so make each introduction strong, with new material, and with that added edge of experience you were able to achieve from the previous social network you blogged from. The purpose of your blog, sometimes you know right off the bat, mine was to create an entity MYMOLLYDOLL from which I could create a Campaign for a Campaign. Sometimes this purpose evolves. I know on Instagram and Tumblr, I started with one account, and as I tried to organize my materials, I realized that my presentation of reblogs was best suited for separate blogs, to maintain consistency and theme. That was important to me, to separate my blogs by theme, categories or types of pieces shared, this can also be done through the use of tabs on a Website (something I have just considered doing for mymollydoll.com). Right now I keep everything on separate Blogs (Websites) lesliefischman.tumblr.com, mymollydoll.com, lesliefischman.weebly.com, facebook.com/leslie.fischman, Twitter.com/mymollydoll, and Instagram.com/leslie_fischman ... the list goes on. (See mymollydoll.org). –The only problem is that if you are concerned about traffic points, you may want to stick to one Website, otherwise your 10,000 Followers get spread among multiple accounts on different Websites, making it more work for you to share and keep track of on a daily basis or update weekly.

(8) Do you have any Conflicts of Interest that Prevent you from Blogging? This is an important question to ask yourself if you are currently employed. Some employers have specific guidelines outlined in your employment contracts that specify preference as to whether blogged about online and whether any work related interactions are blogged about. If so, then it's best not to blog in any space, where you compose any impulsive writing off the top of your head, but blog only in spaces in which you compose one draft prior to publishing. For example: A Space Space to Blog for impulsive people would be Weebly or Wordpress, writing on Microsoft Word first and then publishing your final draft on your Weebly and Wordpress. That would be the smartest choice, to ensure that no information regarding work is shared online that would interfere with your contract or signed responsibilities of what not to include in your blog online, which is to write about work.

(9) Do you have a particular interest in a genre commonly blogged about? If so, then blogging may be a great fit for you as a Writer or Composer. The more common, the easier it is to join and contribute to, blend in, without standing out or looking out of place. For me, when I started blogging on Twitter, they had just added the photo feature, and I blogged like I was on Facebook, putting all my photos up and talking about my personal life and what I'm up to. Have no fear, what was once uncommon is now common, and I am no longer one of few but one of many who blog about their personal lives in public on public publishing platforms that get Google indexed and tossed around online in places I've never visited on Websites like Twicys, that duplicates your account on a completely different website I don't even have an Account to. This happens online, do not be alarmed. What you share in public becomes public information and public knowledge and can then be reused. Make sure you are cited and that you maintain uniqueness to your craft and put your logo, emblem, or web address, and/or name on your work, so that when it gets redistributed you are credited to your work, and can get business that way.

(10) Are you qualified to blog about the topics you wish to write about? This is perhaps one of the more personal questions you must ask yourself, however discouraging it may be to realize that you need credentials to write about certain topics, that is why we have referencing abilities, and the purpose for citations. For knowledge that does not come from within but must be obtained from outside of yourself, is why we cite and do research. You can also compose blog posts in that way, via citations, there is nothing wrong with that, but make sure you cite. What are my credentials? I'm a BA with Honors in Sociology, have Composed & Published an Honors Thesis (A Qualitative Research Study on Hotline Counselors, about Crisis Management and Emotion Management, with approval by my attending University's HRC (Human Research Committee) which I had to apply for, qualify for, and complete several online exams testing my understanding of the risks involved when studying at risk populations [Note: Similarly in 2013 I had to submit a proposal for future study to CU's HRC prior to beginning Blogging Campaign for Brady Campaign –which was forwarded to the US Supreme Court for Review, and stamped by them reviewed]) ... my Honors Thesis was later published with an Academic Publishing Company. In addition, I attended Paralegal School & Law School JD for 5 years, and I am now finishing my LLM and will compose a Dissertation, which I plan to Publish with an Academic Publishing Company when I finish. These are my Writing Credentials as a Professional, not including writing experience throughout my work experience, which included composing Legal Motions on behalf of Clients, composing Legal Research on my own, drafting Letters on behalf of Companies and Tenants, Composing Client Letters, Legal Memorandums, Drafting Legal Documents, Formatting Legal Documents, Indexing sorting and filing legal documents, and the list of responsibilities goes on as a Paralegal, Law Clerk, and Legal Secretary for many years (Since 2008). Based upon my experiences as a Legal Professional, I thought why not Blog and start a Blogging Campaign, I'm certainly qualified to lead a Campaign, I may not have the experience running a Non-Profit or Corporation (Now Officially Registered in CA: MYMOLLYDOLL as of 2016), but that is something you learn through experience putting together a Company online and Startup.

I have registered my Corporation, [and pay taxes and legal fees monthly], I [own] multiple Websites, but that does not mean that I am making any money doing what I am doing right now, or earning a Profit from my work completed online. That is because my focus was to Campaign for a Campaign not to earn a Profit, I just put Ads up on my Website after maintaining a Website Online for 3-4 years (Since September 2013). Everything takes time, and just because you are advised as to what is required of you, or make friends along the way, does not mean that those friends can help you earn a living one day doing what you are doing or with the Company you put together, that is for you to figure out on your own, just like everybody else does online. It is a very risky investment of time to Blog, and is best done in a forum or on a social blogging platform that is already established and has ongoing traffic and participation for feedback. I hope this helps, and if you have any questions feel free to leave me comment here or email me on my contact page. Good luck!

Best Interests by Leslie Fischman

It is not always in your best interests to over involve yourself in the businesses of others. Sometimes it important to trust the decision making skills of others and by their education and experience have faith in them that they know what they are doing, are prepared, and have received all required permissions to be where they are today. The purpose for #BloggingCampaign (formerly #BradyMusicCampaign) have been founded upon those principles. To know ones place, and to contribute in a way that does not retraumatize nor add additional hardships to any one person's plate, but helps to alleviate the problems our Nation faced after a series of School Shootings we all had difficulty responding to. That is why I created #BradyMusicCampaign. It was a Campaign to support a Campaign, which diverted attention away from the point for trauma itself, discussion of the Shootings and ongoing Terrorism, and focus on something positive a Creative #EntertainmentCampaign whose purpose was to help raise money to support #BradyCampaign.

If You Could Write a Book (Interview) by Leslie Fischman

If you could write a book, what would you write about? It would probably be a self-help book of some sort. Check out my Instagram for details Instagram.com/leslie_fischman

What inspired you to start #BloggingCampaign? After a series of School Shootings I left law school to do some soul searching and wound up, marching around brainstorming in DC for two weeks (January 2013), thinking of a way to bring us all together and help out, alleviate the trauma, and help stop gun violence.

Who are your inspirations in life? My Family first and foremost, and Barack Obama. These are people who I grew to love and respect and who have helped me mature and grow as a person, taking on more responsibilities in life, and living my dream, being someone who has helped make a positive difference in the World and contributed to causes which affect us all, by starting a Campaign for a Campaign.

#BloggingCampaign -The Hashtag & *Rules for Participation

About #BloggingCampaign

#BloggingCampaign is a hashtag that was started by MYMOLLYDOLL (Leslie Fischman) sometime in 2016, after meeting with the President of Brady Campaign LA. After pitching my Campaign idea, excited to hear about my goals, was asked to meet the President for Coffee. We discussed my Campaign goals – after review of my Website's bloggingcampaign.wordpress.com, bloggingcampaign.tumblr.com, Twitter.com/bradymusicbuzz, and the hashtag that was created. We both decided to change my hashtag to a name that did not include Brady Campaign, so as not to bother the DC Office and Dan Gross (The President of Brady Campaign). The hashtag that was used was #BradyMusicCampaign (which is now #BloggingCampaign – a more general approach to my Entertainment based Blogging Campaign).

What is an Entertainment Based Blogging Campaign?

An Entertainment Based Blogging Campaign is a:

1. A Campaign for a Campaign (i.e. Brady Campaign (Primary and First Campaign for a Campaign), #EndGunViolence, #MomsDemand, #StopGunViolence, #GunsinAmerica, #WomenAgainstGunViolence, #EachMindMatters to name a few).
2. That focuses on Entertainment as a means for Crisis Intervention and Prevention, by focusing on something positive other than the trauma itself and issues for which the trauma has been experienced (i.e. Gun Violence, Terrorism)
3. Where participation is anonymous so as to protect the participants from harm, whereby donations only are the only accepted form of admission for participation to a Campaign for a Campaign that is Entertainment based (i.e. #BloggingCampaign formerly #BradyMusicCampaign).
4. Where participation occurs online, at an online “meetup,” that is situated on Websites created by me for MYMOLLYDOLL and #BloggingCampaign (i.e. bloggingcampaign.wordpress.com, bloggingcampaign.tumblr.com, mymollydoll.com, Twitter.com/bradymusicbuzz, Facebook, and any other creative space created by me, from which I am able to hashtag from to a general Newsfeed separate from each account, that summarizes the most important information and posts from each account, as it relates to #BloggingCampaign (that is my goal and purpose for hashtagging – to summarize and highlight the most important posts related to the Campaign to give a birds eye view (gist) of what the Campaign is about (Methodology and Purpose) from which others can decide at will whether or not to participate and for the causes this Campaign seeks to support i.e. Brady Campaign (and see above).
5. Participation is completely at-will, meaning anyone can choose to participate or not, participation is not mandatory, and the Campaign for which you choose to Campaign for is not required to be the same Campaign for which I Campaign for (i.e. See Above -1). #BloggingCampaign is simply:
 1. A model Campaign I created to show how blogging can be used (creatively) to support a Campaign and also, through mixed media, assist with the production and creation of material which can be used and re-used (re-blogged) for Entertainment purposes (what goes on beyond that initial participation on the blog is purpose #2)
 2. A Creative Campaign for a Campaign in which the material provided for and created by its user (writer and developer MYMOLLYDOLL, Leslie Fischman) can later be used (re-worked) through Film and Music, or any other Entertainment based compatible forum. (For Example: I Blog Quotes and Fashion, which can be used to assist with Film and Music Production)
6. All that is required of participants is to donate to a Campaign of their choice, relevant to the causes for which they support, in my case I donate to Brady Campaign, and hope that those who participate alongside my blogs do so to, or to a like or similar Campaign whose causes reflect the issues they currently face as it relates to their specific issues or concerns, beliefs, and/or recommendations they believe will help us to reach future goals, for the benefit of society, for the betterment of the people and general public, to protect the safety and general welfare health and well being of the population of concern (For Example: The Population I seek to assist by launching a Social Media Campaign for a Campaign, are the bloggers on Social Media to whom I participate online with on Twitter, Tumblr, Wordpress, and Facebook –better situate themselves to be there for those in times of Crisis including themselves).

First Draft – Summary of the Rules for Participation by Leslie Fischman 10/06/16

As previously stated on bloggingcampaign.wordpress.com, bloggingcampaign.tumblr.com, mymollydoll.com, and Twitter.com/bradymusicbuzz.

Purpose - Writing a Book by Leslie Fischman

1/27/2017

People write books for many different reasons. Mine is just personal. When you experience a lot on life, and go through hardships, its only natural to want to share those experiences with others as therapy required, or for the purposes of helping others. My purposes would involve both, to help myself and to help others.

To maintain anonymity, names will not be mentioned, nor specific stories or anecdotes from my life, which describe and or provide example as to my current outlook in life. That would defeat the purposes of moving forward. My goal is to help provide insight, not to teach, to help provide guided thought processes I have found best when coping with certain issues, but not to recommend that my thoughts are the best way of interpreting events. Always see as you see best fit.

What is Intelligence? (Profanity Free, Not Upset Anymore) by Leslie Fischman - Im more positive now, positive outlook. Im prude, so its really insulting to be called names, no Im not a pervert I dont give blow jobs, ask my boyfriends.

What is Intelligence?

Today on Twitter we talked about intelligence as it relates to my experiences and in jest, called myself retarded, and even made CRA CIA jokes, Center Retard Agency. This was to normalize the use of a term I was called by someone in a caretaking position, to justify the usage of the term, as not derogatory but factual in its application as to me, my past, my experiences and my future. This has nothing to do with Benjy, giving him a blow job on my 21 birthday, which was embarrassing because my best friend Danielle told everyone i.e. Daniela who used to like him in middle school, goes “you hooked up with Benjy.” I was blackout drunk, and had no problems at CU Boulder in love or finding love, recently having broken up with a Boyfriend, had just started using Cocaine recreationally, introduced to by a friend, Lauren Koepp. No she is not the reason I was bicurious, or went through phases of uncertainty. No that is not why I punch my head or slam it into the wall, it’s the bullying and teasing that causes that. Those are unjustified uses of force against me to cause me to self-harm during periods in life to justify causes for events or behaviors as being associated to causes for use of force against me, my persons, or livelihood. Its called hate crime, and discriminatory or retaliatory acts to commit some harm that serves no greater good, but further causes one to feel out of place suicidal. No that is not why I did not attend the march I overslept, has nothing to do with me being bicurious, trying to figure out whether I am Gay or not. Aaron asked me if I was Gay, so I questioned it myself, because I loved him insulted, I began experimenting on my Computer alone, in 2010. Just because someone tries to convince you you are something that you are not, does not mean I am retarded and is not the reasons for why I called myself retarded, and no I am not therefore trying to say that when anyone else does anything Gay towards me that they should likewise be defined as retarded similarly based upon reasons assumed I called myself retarded in the first place. Any type of confusion as to identity, sexual or not, does not make one retarded. What makes someone retarded? Genetically that is determined by your chemical makeup, experience, exposure, and how you develop psychologically, environmental factors play a role, more is needed to be studied to determine what causes retardation. In my mind retardation is when you are a slow developer, or have an inability to develop, or some deficit that interferes with your growth, maturity, and ability. These are scientifically proven definitions but my own, if you need to cross check with professional sources I suggest googling the term retard to see exactly what the term means, not question my usage or definitions that I make up to identity with terms their meaning, in questioning your application and calling me names, such as retard. –What is intelligence, on a more positive note? Intelligence is by education, level of education attained, but not limited to education alone, a lot of things constitute intelligence and intelligence can be gained not only from education in a professional environment but through other means. Intelligence is not arbitrarily determined by Country or by groups of people, but is something earned not given something you work for towards and achieved not handed to you. Traditionally that is what has defined intelligence. It is information gathered, acquired, and assembled in a way that makes sense, that would be an accurate test of ones intelligence and ability. –Given my education I am always analyzing and interpreting, that is one of my gifts, special abilities, not something taught to you in school but through education, experience, and adaptation a skill you acquire, you either know how to assemble information and interpret it in the right way or you don’t, its like cooking, something you learn on your own how to get good at, hard to teach, much like writing. This is why I focused on creative writing, and writing on Twitter, its not important that I assemble huge chunks of information in my unique writing format online in order to be understood, make sense, or deliver information important for others to better understand me, and I don’t think that one another should discriminate each other based on ability to write in huge portions or submit information in a more condensed format, if it carries the same meaning. It was intended for me to write a book, that would be how I was planning to showcase my writing talent and unique style. But now it has been normalized and like a philanthropist not squandered but put to a greater purpose, what purpose, I'm sure God has a plan. That is not my purposes for assembling information and providing information and detail about my life, to prove something, it's because this information is asked of me, why did I commit suicide, of course it is something that has always bothered me and highly embarrassing, and not its not like wondering if you are Gay or not, dying is not the same as wondering or being questioned whether or not you are Gay. People going through your things was equally traumatizing, especially your significant other, who you are just dating not married to, to give sex to and they go through everything, it's all in your head, can hear him now what's so special it sounds like how I think now, that's because I have been writing for 4 years dumped but an Ex is still reading my writing, for what purposes, you have your code I have mine, I don't interfere with your code, I don't know music. Frozen, I need to run now, process.

Why I was not present at the Women's March by Leslie Fischman

My sincerest apologies that I was not in attendance, I overslept. Unlike other Women who have shared online why they did not March, I do not share a similar sentiment or excuse for not marching. –Why I blog. For those of you who were not invited to March and attend, it was not made known to us (Invitees) that it would be such a momentous and historical occasion. Why I would March: I would March for those of us who have died overseas fighting for our Country and protecting our rights and civil liberties, and freedom to march and express ourselves, or blog. I would march for those who have died due to gun violence and for the volunteers and victim advocates who provide advocacy daily to them online and behind the scenes with legal teams drafting legislation and bills to be passed, to enact laws that help prevent gun violence. I would march for human rights, and counterterrorism efforts to curtail violence and stop terrorism. There are many reasons why I would have marched but did not, because I overslept. What does it feel like to have not marched? I am disappointed in myself, I do not feel complete, I am upset that I am now having to deal with defamatory hate speech towards me and my campaign, I am upset that I have to now defend myself, that in no way was not attending part of a political agenda, or statement in opposition to women, or the purposes for women marching that day. I am upset that I have to now defend myself, or provide reasons for why I did not march -which there are none, I overslept. I'm not going to make up a bunch of reasons, or defend a bunch of reasons for not marching that do not exist, that would only make me look bad. I'm sorry I did not attend for any disappointment I may have caused to those who invited me to attend personally and professionally, I had no intent to cause harm or appear not in support of your causes, which I was not present to march for. I support women, and I support their march, and for every reason women decided to march that day. I wish I was apart of that group that day that marched in LA, very impressive, I missed out. I was looking forward to marching, work up at 10am.

What does Gender Identity Mean to Me by Leslie Fischman

What does Gender Identity mean to me. It's how you identify yourself in relation to those around you, it's the characteristics that accentuate or define your gender, based upon, affected by the way others treat you, based on your appearance, dress, and demeanor. We all blend, naturally to one another, adjust our settings to accommodate one another through interaction, during this process of adjustment, our features traits also become adjusted accordingly, either to highlight another's best traits or features, and not compete or outshine those we interact with. Some of us adjust in this way. Overtime, you become accustomed to any settings you feel most comfortable with in relationship to others, during interactions with others, and this how you identify your gender, which gender you most assimilate with, recognize similarities with, identify best with. That would be your chosen gender. For Women, Tomboy, for Men Metro. Tomboys and Metros are balanced, both identifying best with males and females, however the opposite characteristics shine dominate in their dress, appearance, and demeanor.

#WorldPeace: When a writing is removed from my blog it is cause for much pain unnecessary hardship when it starts with a positive such as: introducing myself as a prominent Paralegal and writer online and any and all justifications thereafter for ceasing to engage in bodily contact and communications (readings - correspondences) with people who's needs though important not paramount to my own whom when addressed first and leave last main points of reference necessary to achieve solutions from running ationale basis of thoughts coming from within in presently - get convoluted or misstepped or devalued by prior statements triggered by coordinated efforts to affect first responses upon entry to any public speaking platform of what's at issue present before me is obviously what's before me before me so let's just move forward and be in the here and now understand better not one another is not so important as to understand how to help others or self professionally but it's more about how you feel about yourself in relationship to your goals and accomplishments in life abilities and avenues for achievements what it is that you need to get done in life in order to achieve that that takes time and a lot of effort and patience and constant testing (Sociology, Psychology, Fashion Otis, Art History & Drawing American University of Paris, UCLA Basketball Camp MVP, JD 3/4, LLM 3/4) #StopSchoolShootings Please visit my website: Thank You #Columbine

I think it's best to save humanity for the sake of being positive not all is lost in love and war #leotolstoy we have what we have to work with is what we've got we can only do what we can what we know is all we've got. It's today's promises that tomorrow will bring and the future is what propels us forward is the past and fear of failure and defeat time lost and loss in general that sends us waves of energy present moving forward that propel us, what we do with that energy, well that is by choice, for good, better or worse, to produce positive outcomes or negative. 9/26/2017

I was gonna make a Coupon Website: lesliefischman.weebly.com but it never worked out, back to mymollydoll.com. I was never really gonna build a mymollydoll.yooco.org, just a thought. But #MarkZuckberg totally got started at the right time (2004). I built my Website (2013) #MYMOLLYDOLL. It's actually a lot of work to build a coupon website, I had to apply individually per banner, to each company on an affiliate marketing website, and apply to the affiliate marketing website itself. For #FashionBlogging, clothes, those are separate markets for clothing brands, it took for ever to be accepted to #ShopStyle, I eventually wanted to connect it to #Shopify, a click thru shopping website, but that became to complicated trying to learn software, individually manually connecting items to pages, and adding links buttons. I grew to enjoy Fashion Blogging on Tumblr how I got into Street Style Photography and collected many photos got to know the regulars, and recognized by #Sassique. It made for a great addition and beginning point for #bloggingcampaign as a Fashion Blogger a popular starting point as a Blogging Category Type Blogger, and a Writer, and Built a Corporation I Certified in California because Petrocelli does International Corporation Defense and I committed #Suicide because of him.
Building New Positives Forward by Leslie A. Fischman

Points of Reference

Argument

By: Leslie A. Fischman

09/26/17

Submitted to: US Supreme Court

The best focal points and points of reference should be built from your memory, what makes you feel good, based upon what you know to see forward, don't create a future based on the past that gets us nowhere. #tipoftheday Why I write new everyday like a Newspaper of Thoughts Theories Memories Relevant. Thank You #LATimes #NYTimes etc, they care help us. The best life is not lived by teams and sides. #Energy Core Team: #NASA #ColinPowell #DalaiLama #PopeFrancis = Good Baselines for Sound Rationale And #God Loves Me Protects Me = #SCOTUS > #MonaLisa #France.

I had a talk with President Trump earlier today about projects for MIT and NASA, one being for NASA to focus on Positivity Tangents, such as points of reference we use for sound decision making, our jumping off points for sound rationale and judgment making, rule making, and basic decision making about ourselves and others pre-judgments or otherwise positive or negative. And for MIT to focus on the concept of unearthing wheels of forward. We had a discussion, joking about at this time all we should really care about is whether humans had wings on their backs or not, and if so should we feel from there to tell the future or from our hearts forward, from where and why? Why is it that we feel lighter when our backs feel airy and our hearts feel full, why is it that we can read more when we sense less behind us, feel more in front of us. What is going wrong that is keeping us from feeling or sensing what's to come. I jokingly then stated, why do people keep doing stuff, that makes us fear tomorrow, that's stupid. You should always live life looking forward to the next day, wake up feeling like coffee. I then started complaining outloud to my neighbors speaking it doesn't matter whether Aaron read what I shredded in 2009 about seeing war overseas over this, he would have never put everything together in between anyways or where we are now, only I am capable of that, seeing now, only we are capable of seeing now, everyone who is here now, among us, apart of now, here now, is why where we are now for better or worse. It doesn't really matter from which point anyone starts, does it? If we all end up here and now? I had a discussion with Justice Sotomayor about my website and purposes for my website and necessity for upkeep as stating that its necessary to have something up, better than nothing at all, just like physics, we need a huge wave forward, if we are to help both undo the wrongs of the past occurrences and help build a new future forward.

I write people in if people get hurt, forgot to mention stuff about myself. I'm sorry a Gay Club got Shot Up, not something I talk about. I do tributes. To prevent recidivism. Issue #1: I think its stupid people are killing people to get in the #news, that's really retarded preventable actually. All crimes are senseless, why I don't watch TV focus on being positive, believe in #positivity not #Einstein. When you relate bad events to good causes illness occurs, when you hurt good people to cause bad to occur you cause illness, when you assume wrongs exist where none do you cause illness, when you project onto others your wrongs to feel right you cause illness, when you don't correct problems you cause illness, don't contribute to proving anyone wrong or right, any errors result in illness cc: #SCOTUS (New Deductions for 09/14/17) Always be #Good (Code) (Facebook).

New Rule

AP: If you taint an image you MUST repair that image at some future point or at the time being with a positive representation prior.

Lifestyle (definition) a way of life that produces functioning and satisfaction in life provides basic needs and helps you achieve goals.

Everyone's definition of fulfillment is different some demand more or less depending on what their goals in life are.

All of which are based upon the standards we set for ourselves high or low depending on the level of importance that need provides.

I set very high standards for myself why I'm a leader not a follower no matter where I go who I'm with unless I choose to relax.

Too much bonding time might be suspect.

If it feels too good and if my stomach hurts that means my body is telling me to step away come back be reintroduced calm.

Um my vibrations are off need to hit the reset button.

Too confident. Need to take it down 10 notches come back in listening mode absorb more.

Negative energy that picks up when I'm positive need to step outside of the room use the restroom shake like a dog come back.

I don't represent myself well but represent others perfectly always to another's benefit I speak difficulty for my own.

Positivity Speech by Leslie A. Fischman

Do not be deceived success cannot be achieved without first recognizing failure either by oneself or others how we prevail survive succeed.

Failure occurs when while one attempting to achieve success fails to meets the standards required to excel minimally meets expectations.

Not all failures are viewed upon with the same degree of abhorrence as that who fails reflects upon themselves to achieve we see forward beyond failure.

Why waste time loathing in failure stirring up negative emotions and giving in to sin that carries no positive momentum for us forward,

No shortage or values and good character results from the wrongs of others but only by our own wrongs do we limit our satisfaction in life.

All dialectical considerations need be made where poison that thrusts so deep we rot in sin blinde to causes for which we feel emptied shot.

These truths we hold certain for that which grows in sullen sanctity of the fruits we bear blindfolded devalue with consideration we stifle.

How can we see positive buried in negativity to the blinde masses we fold and shake with dishonesty lie until our teeth yellow with shame.

We lean not to anyone under circumstances where trust cannot be make we shriek and cry helpless when we lean on anyone but ourselves co-dependent.

Independence is the key ingredient our forefathers have lent us to achieve peace from within amongst ourselves only achieved by consensus.

Be not who you think you should be but be all that you can be with the World at your disposal harm no one help only when able to help one self.

We map when lost when our tools for success are broken we build new tools hand off to those in power to build a new for us to thrive positively.

Communication without consensus can bear no cohesion necessary for positive life skills achieved if blinde in darkness we rot and drown lost.

God is happy when we are working together to achieve some positive end otherwise God punishes us for lack of productivity.

We are but a product of ourselves can control what values carry on by what we carry out and value in our lives other will follow lead not be lead.

We have no one to blame but ourselves when we cannot achieve no recognizable success but unforeseen failure results from lack of faith in ourselves.

If I can achieve by thought a better life for myself by providing a stronger vision of the future for others then I hope God will be happy.

1 does not equal anything outside of what is proven within 1 and 2 and 1 and 2 does not provide insight to anything other than what its written for and stated for and addressed for. When a 1 2 is written 1 2 exists for 1 2, if it applies to a 3 not written in 1 or 2 that does not prove support any existence of 3 for what? If you need anything to exist not written to cause a 3 what was your 3 for? To misuse a clearly stated 1 followed by a 2 to see if 3 now is because of a 1 or a 2? If 2 follows 1 and any 3 follows a 2: 3 follows 2, 2 does not cause 1 if 2 does not cause 1 then how can 3 cause 2 or 1. Whether we have a 3 or not should therefore make no difference to 1 or 2, 3s are made when a 2 is made, everything that follows follows the preceding because the preceding was written a 2 was written with[out] or without a 3 necessary because a 3 cannot be written if 1 and 2 are not made, any 3 independent can not exist without a 2 just like 2 cannot exist without 1. cc: #USSupremeCourt (Point 3) of (2): (1 of 2)

II.

Main Point: Smart or Retarded does not prove either Smart or Retarded, Proof of one Smart does not make any or all or some or one Retarded, Smart is not for identifying or Disproving Retarded. Who hurts who? Neither Smart or Retarded should effect one another unless purpose is to attack a status to achieve the opposing sides status, if one does not cause the other, establishment or destruction of either side cannot therefore cause the other to be right or wrong better than justified or not. Bad does not Prove Retarded. And Bad causes, Retarded is Bad's purpose is to justify being what Bad. Bad does not equal Retarded. You cannot use another's position in life to achieve, take away, switch, take place of, prove, displace, to justify (define) make clear any #misuse of a term often occurs when it's needed to make clear a difference from right and wrong. If wrong is at issue then its clear Bad is at issue, whether caused by Retarded or Bad bc of whatever Bad thinks justifies being a Bad for, NEVER equates to Bad = Retarded (Don't misinterpret a vulnerable population to justify a wrong, existence of a wrong, to explain or identify whether: Bad or Retarded. If we know of one known purpose (justifications of wrongs) than not right EVER to explain or define sides clear to who's right or wrong unless necessary to do so. Idiocracy by Leslie A. Fischman (Film: Idiocracy) Watched 2006

9/8/2017

Why use the term “idiocracy”

In 2006 I was flown to Klamath Falls, Oregon to see our Family Psychic. I was recovering from Cocaine Addiction, and that was the film she had me watch: Idiocracy. How would I define the term idocracy, anything less than or detrimental to a high functioning society, which causes civil unrest and discord, and/or mental illness. Consisting of bad ideas, distractions, focus on negatives, anything that leads to emotional disturbance and or has a likelihood for causing or influencing unsound minds, during a time of violence, it would be therefore stupid to support anything that separates us, that’s not what rights are for. Rights are for enabling peaceful communications, bringing people together, to resolve problems not create problems. What is democratic? Anything which can be voted on, and approved by others, supported, that is the best way I believe to determine what is best, what is liked, and how to move forward during difficult times, during controversy, and during points in time, when support is needed, how leadership positions are determined, by vote in this Country, any other way, would not be democratic.

FIRST ARGUMENTS IN SUPPORT OF

BY: LESLIE A. FISCHMAN

Main Point: Smart or Retarded does not prove either or Smart or Retarded, Proof of one Smart does not make Any or All or Some or One Retarded, Smart is not for Identifying or Disproving Retarded. Who hurts who? Neither Smart or Retarded should effect one another unless purpose is to attack a status to achieve the opposing sides status, if one does not cause the other, establishment or destruction of either side cannot therefore cause the other to be right or wrong better than justified or not. Bad does not equal Retarded. Smart does not Prove Retarded. And Bad causes Retarded is Bad's purpose is to justify being what Bad. Bad does not equal Retarded. You cannot use another's position in life to achieve, take away, switch, take place of, prove, displace, to justify (define) make clear any #misuse of a term often occurs when it's needed to make clear a difference from right and wrong. 1 and 2 does not equal anything outside of what is proven within 1 and 2 and 1 and 2 does not provide insight to anything other than what it's written for and stated for and addressed for. When a 1 2 is written 1 2 exists for 1 2, if it applies to a 3 not written in 1 or 2 that does not prove support any existence of 3 for what? If you need anything to exist not written to cause a 3 what was your 3 for? To misuse a clearly stated 1 followed by a 2 to see if 3 now is because of a 1 or a 2? If 2 follows 1 and any 3 follows a 2, 3 will follow 2 If 3 follows a 2: 3 follows 2, 2 does not cause 1 if 2 does not cause 1 then how can 3 cause 2 or 1. Whether we have a 3 or not should therefore make no difference to 1 or 2, 3s are made when a 2 is made, everything that follows follows the preceding because the preceding was written a 2 was written without or without a 3 necessary because a 3 cannot be written if 1 and 2 are not made, any 3 independent can not exist without a 2 just like 2 cannot exist without 1.

Don't make things about you, or assume anything is about you, no one is pointing any fingers at you, that's not the purpose for this blog, if you are paranoid before anything bad happens that means I need to help everyone else fix problems #moreworktobedone paranoia is not indicative of misconduct or wrongdoing toward yourself or others don't take one definition of paranoia used by me and take it out of context to apply to a different set of issues or points of discussion to argue a point with the misuse of my words. This is definition (2) of paranoia: occurrence existing within an unstable environment or (1) (previously discussed in another post) paranoia resulting from ones own wrongs harm caused to self. I understand no one is trying to say you are paranoid bc you were wrong or feel wrong, that's not my place to tell anyone when they feel unstable that it's their own fault, I usually back-off and try to make a positive difference, read everyone instead of one when things get weird. That's my nature, normal face to face always. What I understand or read is really none of your business when I'm stable and everyone gets stable then accuse me of any wrongdoing. If everyone is calm quiet that means they feel safe, I did a good job. If sex doesn't work & not good enough for you, then maybe I should do my best to make everyone feel safe calm to take care of you. And work on myself.

Key Point: "Peaceable Assembly of Ideas"

I Crisis Counsel multiple interests online, ensure everyone feels safe, functioning at their best, interpret problems & solutions, provide: feedback, insight, & deductions from my limited knowledge of news I've read and understand, education, work history, certificates, and share. I've been like this since 2013, smart retarded or on point, I try to write everyday something of value to help establish neutral sides embedded in story, comedy, fashion, titles, and my theories my deductions to help promote peaceably assembly of ideas that help everyone move forward. Who the F cares replies #NYCY relates to what. Stop f-king gluing negatives to positives THEN try to understand existence of a negative point to PROVE OR JUSTIFY anything that is clearly Wrong on its face right or wrong Smart or Retarded, Guided by who probably by some Wrong to Prove estb cause understand a Bad to see what?!?! #FrankGehry Whether Bad causes Good? Rights and Wrongs don't create standings in life to prove or justify wrongs or rights. If trying to prove wrongs to estb Bad identify bad, You ARE Wrong to achieve set up circumstances until a Bad occurs to Justify a Cause needed to prove bad. If Bad caused Retarded then we already know a Bad existed at some point in time which caused Retarded. If you think identifications are required to improve disprove establish displace result in Wrongs to: Good Smart Bad Retarded or Blinde. Who's wrong? You were wrong, neither nor any side need be established to prove anything if Bad exists Wrong exists a (Cause) cannot therefore prove in reverse existence of Bad for what? Never justify wrongs of others who are Bad to See if Wrongs occur them blame Causes as resulting from your establishment of Wrong to Show Bad See Bad Understand Bad See if Caused Bad see if why what's the point of clarifying Bad Caused anything Wrong if clearly Wrongs are Bad who the f-k cares whose Wrong: If Bad Causes: Retarded Smart Wrong Right #whothefuckcares what you think if it f-king caused Bad and Bad Caused Retarded then Establishment of Anything should have no effect on: Smart, Retarded, Right, or Wrong. Unless Wrongs continue then Causes MUST be because of a Bad, sides do not establish disprove establish reinforce causes for Bads or Wrongs, if we already understand Wrongs are Caused by Bad, obviously if Retardation Exists then some Bad occurred to Cause that. Who's bad? Therefore cannot be proven if a Wrong is necessary or a Result is necessary to Prove any side or causes. That's Wrong. Wrong does not Equal Retarded!!!! If Bad caused Wrongs Retarded that has no effects on Smart, Rights, or any other Wrongs. Sides don't justify Sides if they exist on their own, any connections needed to be made to see anything is obviously caused by whatever was Wrong or Needed a Wrong to Justify Bad or Retarded I, or whether Bad caused Retarded as it relates to a later Wrong, later Wrongs are f-king Wrong, if you need a Wrong to Justify Past Wrongs then you are Wrong, Bad not Retarded clearly if you Caused Bad Bad was caused by Retarded, and Bad is Wrong Retarded is proof of existence of Bads and Wrongs existing whether Retarded or Smart. #whatsyourpoint if a Point need be proven to show rights and wrongs to prove wrongs justify wrongs then clearly you were wrong: Retarded, Smart, Right, or Wrong. Bad does not Cause Wrongs if Bad caused Retarded, Retarded is then being misused at any later point in time to Understand Causes to Identify Bad to See Causes is not Right, Causes for Retardation do not justify ANY Wrongs past or present. CHP knows the light code why they're mad at me right now. Sometimes good lights up and sometimes it creates a space upon recognition of an object. Sometimes good is in the foreground and sometimes good appears in the background to us, that is based upon us individually to identify, not by law written or previously discussed elsewhere, new MIT Soul Technology by MYMOLLYDOLL who specializes in perfection likes perfectionists like me, neat and tidy, clear, why graded hard. Dear You Guys:

So you know its not all about being one with one, bigger or small to achieve same equal, mature, immature, better, leader, follower, likeness, cool, smart, in the know, or apart of. It's all about being smart, inventive with your emotions toward positive. Delusions "I think not" more like how th[e] F do I dig myself out a mess or a hole someone else put me in before the bugs crawl all over me and I hate myself forever. That's why you gotta talk about your feelings. I once heard in an AA Meeting (2011) that "feelings" and "emotions" don't kill people. To that I go (space). Something to think about, hm, I never really thought about a word describing a category of something inside of me, and what it produces something at me back that kills me. I've got scars, non to do with homicides, and put a knife in a box over war overseas Chris Sonia knows, backup EXIT PLAN (A): Fight! That's how I know if I need to go to war or not or stay in a cubicle. Existing or not existing, avenues of blame directed or misdirected toward my family, so achieved by anything pre-existing to confirm belief. Hold up! Dudes: Invent a Religion. Throw a tree at me and wrap me up in lights and throw balls at my face, who cares. The moral of the story is gifts, what you put under a tree that matter, something special wrapped and uniquely id'd to and from the recipient: the gifted (in need of help). Of course I'm in need of help: "where do you go" to a f-king cubicle jazz dancer swing my hips and f-k me Trump down a pole I go #LAFD. Super hazardous behavior misdirected toward others or thought to be directed at you is cause for paranoia and delusion. Always focus on oneself, no communications public are meant to dismember one or any one group unless you let it so.

To whom and all that it may concern, upon what is built and what is remembered is upon the things that stand out to those who remember and to whom is affected by the standards of achievement of others, and what is had and what has not yet achieved one cannot see, do not judge those who's foundations do not remind you of self of what is known to be true as existing within you may be different from person to person, depending upon the recommendations chosen by oneself of oneself for oneself as to importance and the importance of power and privileges in life, not to be abused, in times of need, concern, loss of trust, or otherwise, loss of family member jailed, no disconnect so far bearing as responsible as connections made and connections lost, should never interfere with good purpose or anyone's ability to achieve in life or see different, better than one or the other, within a group or disjointed, together or apart, to each his own, value oneself first and upon recognition of that virtue all other value can be found. Anything lost, is dropped, anything found is supplied, and anything forgotten, mislaid, abandoned, or rejected will one day bear the fruits of the concern by those who care see good, help lift good, deplete the bad, and the overall consciousness and left product is what is to be determined by society as worth living, dying, chosen, or to lead those future forward.

Who Codes Best? #MYMOLLYDOLL Tip #1: By Southwestern School of Law

Date: 09/30/17

Only the educated can fathom the wrongs to humanity from the consequences of doubt and misconduct of any one following belonging to any one man group or persons of any given trade or profession. These things are clear upon their face not of issue. The only solutions at best are ones created not ones destined. To create destinations upon inference of any one point is considered a manipulation of path in life, to create a destination for any one person in life, not path driven by the heart belonging to the one who guides self self, then there is an error in deduction which is obvious upon its face, when proven (future consequences) to which do not affect or interfere with the progress of those who are innocent on their face and about face since (2009) by handwritten application to the US Navy #Wilshire.

Date: 09/30/17 – Written First on #Microsoft Word – Meaning of Life: Letters.

My Car is something made with thought, thought to be had, thought to be made, when misused for a purpose other than for what it was created, to transport the living to and from a location for survival destination and departure, sin occurs. For what purpose is it to communicate a feeling inside something for which a car was not made or communicated for, used for a purpose other than for what it was made, as a shelter, not a system of transportation, high class transportation. BMW made the back seat bigger in my new X3, great predictors, if this ones this way she'll get this one when that X5 dies, from #Colorado. Love You Guys. The Religion of Letters by Leslie A. Fischman

Written First in Microsoft Word – Saved for Last: First to Web the World Wide Web

WWW Stands for War, when in the event war occurs one must respond. How so, in a way to which when communicated back, messages that carry symbols of what the designed meaning and work product stand. For every diffusion equals a pour, of power whether inflicted through pain or dysfunction or a junctior will flow positive in one way or another, to whom where and why, that is for society to decide. “We hold these truths to be self evident” that what we hold so dear to heart, comes true, in the event of loss, whats designated purpose transcribed will shine, that is a promise our Founders of Letter kept, and what will be known and transcribed upon the evidentiary losses in time of people places and things. Those we punish, who we remember, and who we idolize matter, to what extent is it that purpose be given in life other than to oneself, not for the purpose of others or for the lives of others, prayers best kept for self knowledge and purpose to blossom at ones own will in time and not for the time of others.

For every letter and for every number was designed in a way to help one achieve in life, whether through empowerment or through support. Thesis links we so bind historically remind us of those who have past and what is to come when unity of purpose is not established that is recommended so which reinforces the purposes for which any one thing is made. We think that things are made unique to stand out, for good reason we should always assume so, the unique binds of mankind, were so established by letters, of sound and might that trigger so deep to the heart, that they are to spur the same kinds of feelings to that which they were made, to help the fallen rise and to help the strong propel us forward, ever so lasting as an eternal ring of peace. Anything in motion so set for peace, which is used for a purpose other than to achieve good purpose is sin and rightfully punished so. It is not your job to understand the writer an predict that is a misnomer, why not focus on something unique which binds such as the reinforcement made upon each letter typed and the numbers that sound.

How Not to Achieve Wrong in Life by Leslie A. Fischman #WorldPeace #Pulitzer #Nobel Rights v. Wrongs in Loving Memory of #SCOTUS Justices Past #RIP

For every wrong we correct with someone who does right, we set back the basic principles upon which humanity was built, for preservation of good. One should not undo the wrongs of others, through self sacrifice or self harm, that serve no justice forward, only sets back, when we give in to the anger and hostility of others toward us for our gifts in life, are earned not through respect or admiration but by inward appearance and recognition of self and purpose in life: which is based upon not beliefs but upon what sticks out to us, sends us messages back, of whats at issue. Rights were created not for equality of purpose or for equality of thought or for equality of religion, but when all foundations are lost upon the science of anything that demoninates one group or the other, by adherence to tightened principles that bind toward inward implosion of self and torn thoughts: depression, we regress and think twice and move forward asound of disappearance of self and replace with anew. When there is nothing back right and nothing forward clear, we feel lost. That is a called a transition, usually occurring after war, commonplace for there to be a period of regrouping our cushion that surrounds us, and everything lights up expect for oneself, that is not delusion, it's a shifting of humanity from positive to negative driven corrections, and toward acceptance of all.

Pop Star Speech by Leslie A. Fischman - The Creator of #MYMOLLYDOLL

There are waves of virtue, curiosity, moral, and insight that lead one forward to the future, all of which bind and bound on positives that know, either pulling us back or propelling ourselves forward like a train, lead or connected, we will always be bound by knots of strength, courage, despair, and loss, these are natural consequences of the loss of mankind in any war, we must learn to deal with constructively on a case by case basis, one being ourselves first before others. No one affects you, you should never let anyone affect you. As a SCOTUS and US Military Applied Special Operations Unit Since 2009, I know clearly the wrongs & consequences, strong – in charge of safety and distribution of those things that help manifest themselves positive forward or negative within selves to identify which people places and things have been affected by the war, what needs change. Why flag down #PresidentTrump online on Twitter, interested in running for President. I hold keys to truth, so anointed upon me by study and care to attention to detail such as: The Department of Treasury, who upon exposure to, grew fascination to coins and sheets of dollar bills printed and saved and bought by my Family for My Recordkeeping. What is made and misused for a purpose other than to create positives in the world, is corrected perfected and improved by those who founded this type of intelligence: combinations of positives and negatives to lead to future positive outcomes. Be lead by what you have, to teach us, be lead by what you have. There is a mountain top, that if you reach without appreciation you ski down and have trouble coming up in life, that's called: investigation of trade secrets to dismantle a founder = me.

Encyclopedia Britannica Volume I: Ghosting The Science of Ghosting

Whenever there is something left to be unfinished or something missing which is dark nothing remaining should ever feel less than equal to those deserved of power and privilege these are gifts given to sacred martyrs of sin and wealth taken to achieve the same or better than, get ahead > if to stop, job well done, heart returned (i.e. #AcademyAwards). War is not easy by the time its over you just arrive. That's because those in power: do a lot of work backstage crunching history to ensure for good purpose history is used not to stop time or to return back but to play back heart the best of memories > not to be consumed for use of breaking > that is sin. What comes before us is always sent to the future to hold back pain, that is the purpose for which stories were originally told, to heal heart or teach valuable lessons. Ghosting occurs not by haunting or civil unrest but by nervousness for the future, if all things possible know self, and always give further reassurances to those past a job well done > to be completed with flying colors. They are always watching, only when a certain high is achieved by strict adherence to principles or religious good and welfare of all: through disciplined study in school, do they support sometimes clock in right. To which door do they exit, they never leave you once sent, they are sent by those who matter to them to whom attention is paid. i.e. the psychic baby next door who was reading #PresidentTrump worried, who misses me used to text him non-stop, without a phone for 3 days in the #AppleShop, #SteveJobs just left Amici #Brentwood last night, he's on my team. We've had this discussion before that life is not about winning or losing in life. It's not about sides or creating sides in life that matter but your life that matters most. This is not a creation station for sides, hate, or dismemberment of people or groups. I believe in social responsibility not individualism. That is clear upon my face, always to myself, a recluse and steady workhorse. Whats What About by Leslie A. Fischman #NASA

10/1/2017

It's of grave sin to compartmentalize the lives of another's into anecdotes and antecedents to predict future of self through self impression or projection onto the soul of another to affect to the become apart of their identity. That's an unwanted interaction of someones negative beliefs thrust upon you to test to see whether you are good or bad and how you react: the moon was not made in one day and neither was I. What we say is always clear upon its face and should always be accepted in that way, not about whats at issue and who is at fault, its of grave sin to take information put together originally in time and space, current, live, and with heart > and then translate it to encompassing a past story shared about one's life as being about what? What is created forward is tied in knots back, obvious.

For every atom there is an action and a reaction, not one spent, but one given or blocked by another atom, that is how electrons work, not to bind but to strength atom. That is the law of physics for mankind, and should be understood in that way, that those who participate socially should always strengthen one another not harm one another, that does not good. Get to the bottom of what? As a Victim in a very Famous Homicide Case, a Mother close to me gone, a certain light about me existed, because of her passing, a gift given to me by someone who I loved and admired dearly. That is where strength comes from fear of loss, and what you do in the even of loss to preserve self and hopefully if raised to achieve enough take good care of others, as well as their safety needs, warn should the collision of any disasterous thoughts come to mind, that should so inhibit hope to inspire hatred toward any one person or group of people as sources of blame for lost hope, or sight of future, is a gift given to those who are trusted achieved disciplined and focused on self achievement for bettering self for the purposes of achieving in the future, simple, not an identity have or have not or not yet achieved, but known to oneself as being.

Outside of Coffee Bean today, I held up a C in my Left Hand: Representative of Cancer, and the consequences of ill fated thoughts of others and for the future by those who are so blessed socially and with money in the bank, hope lost among wealthy comes first before hope among all is lost, and hearts broken unnecessarily over the puttings on and takings off of titles to authority and blessings earned in life rightfully so, no one can achieve criminally, not I.

It times of War, there is a period of processing: (1) Recognition of Self (2) Fear (3) Deafness (4) Hyperactivity (5) Delusion – (4)(A) Cushion #Safety Needs Met (Sometimes confused by those guilty: as Heightened States, but really its others calm that lights them up, and because they don't know why think its calm there is something wrong with calm because not hyper or empty. Cornerstones of Victim Advocacy by Leslie A. Fischman

One of the cornerstones of victim advocacy is that thou shall not send victims back in time. That thou shall not regurgitate the past to recreate events to see or justify past events already known or proven likewise or so, to see if like so know or justify appearing so. It is a bad omen to do so, to cause harm to those who have already suffered, to bring about past events. A famous prayer has once said to forgive those who trespass against us, it is for those reasons I believe this prayer stands. Unless the only way forward is through a personal account, of one's experience being done to, mine, my life forward.

Just Went for a Run for Humanity by Leslie A. Fischman

Chokeholds are representative of someone you hurt in your past who prevents you from moving forward in life, they usually send negative waves through you when you're up to bring you down as undeserved, usually by family or someone close to you, that is normal, a group that protects you, and keeps you moving forward restrained and grounded, that is just human nature, to not let those grow who appear out of control, abnormal, or unlike. Unusual occurrences are due to currents we send forward both positive and negative, we either take responsibility for as representatives of past occurrences or present forward new information to keep currents quelled, not dismembered, or apart, or together [but] calm. By who? Someone experienced in victim advocacy such as I. The calm on your mind, is a reminder to always be present, there will always maybe not be things that occur which scare and prevent us from moving forward in any unified state and that is okay. That is understandable. Whats most important always is how you feel and process, how you crunch bad information, and set self forward anew, to be better than yourself yesterday, not others, or by "comparison principles" I think I've once stated, is the wrench that gets thrown in the wheels of positivity forward, when we compare.

I waded across my eyes foggy running south, and threw up a C clear running north on Ocean Ave, at the LAPD watching, ran by them warm, I'm sure their infrared can tell whether a source of guilt or not, no present. NOT GUILTY.

No one can steal steam forwards or backwards from you no matter what anyone throws at you good or bad should not affect you moving forwards. It's the connections that are made along the way that hold vision back, negative connections. Each story bears its own weight, we have our own, and there are stories outside of us in the news, I am not in the news, I am not famous, those stories, none are about me. What is cold and connected to warm is wrong. Always. What you chase you become and into fruition is what you see, bears the fruits of the concepts put together in your mind that help you see forward present forward and past forward, there are two Us, one future past and one present past (or present forward = psychic) that when thrown forward into 4 points sends us forward holding us back, or pulling us forward, by negatives and or positives both contribute always. Who makes it, is up to you. Chase what admissions, I'm not gay, giving in to criticism is but one solution. What kernel are you after, but anything grose you project, becomes, take ownership of any tweaking to my personal history and or past, deal with the consequences. This is why I do not hook up anymore, for the sake of evolution forward, be me, empower no one but all first, and one second #PresidentTrump, love you so much be good.

My Belief System by Leslie A. Fischman
10/03/17

For all things possible the only things fundamentally flawed are the negatives that get thrown within and seen from outside of ourselves carried inward and misdirected towards others. It is the courts decision who to punish and for what reasons, no case can be duplicated by precedent forward, only cases bearing weight are what hold negatives back, that is the value of precedent.

I just noticed, my love for architecture and engineering, those are the hearts to whom m[ine] connects, based on a similar foundation of trust. Why #PresidentTrump and I get along, hearts connect on a spiritual level built upon trusted foundations.

How to Be Psychic by Leslie A. Fischman
10/03/17

Psychic works in the same way, much like Karma, by worries, fears, and positive thinking forward. What you throw back carries through you forward. Like playing Yahtzee these are combinations of truths forward we throw forward based upon past recognition of truths and falsehoods. One should always be wary of what they believe as this affects your future forward. Always see the best in oneself as well as "the good in others" how I was raised, not to be paranoid about my future or others. Called it in Westwood, something crazy coming to town, and spoke to a bird just now, something falling I motioned, then a leaf fell. And yesterday motioned to the cop, I see two Os, and then pulled up behind a truck two tagged Ows on the two planks behind the truck bed, two circles. Timing is everything forward. I'm always on time with my predictions and deductions, and always warn if something bad is coming, plant forward positive to hold back innocent and safe, from flipping forward negative into the future, that is my duty.

#washingtonpost speech by #mymollydoll (#lesliefischman)

#washingtonpost (speech): Life is like Yahtzee, sometimes we roll even sometimes we roll odd, sometimes everyone rolls over excited forward, sometimes we all fall down, and sometimes we stop, pause, start again, back in wonder. > Its important to slow down, careful decisions are best decisions. Some of the best professionals are those most prepared by experience working with and among those within the industry to whom is of concern and or at risk of harm or at service at this time, by chance that occurs, who is at odds, and who is at evens among who? We should all support one another, no matter what side we appear on, that is called teamwork, not all sides are successful at once, some grow faster than other industries, money pours best where money is trusted. That is something we have yet to figure out, what is needed, lets do our best to prove we are worthwhile and hardworking, is what I think is best right now, how everyone can do their best to move forward positively through all of this, there is no purpose wondering how and why things or people achieve placement in life and by what accords, or accolades, Linkedin is a simple measurement to test spot check, lets appreciate the simple things in life, if all things were made special, felt that way, would we not feel that way if we appreciated life as is, what we see is how we feel, you are a product of what you see always, always think positively of yourselves and others, this is why, no explanations are ever required, this is why we have right to privacy. Not to protect anyone from harm or to protect private spaces, but because whats important is work produced and output is a traditional measurement and an accurate measurement and accurate reflection representation of positive behaviors exhibited behind scenes as well. That is a given: gifts are never achieved, success is never achieved, through drug use, alcohol use, or abuse of medication, that is a given. WSJ Headings Speech (As Promised) by Leslie A. Fischman

10/10/17

What makes a good Social Media Heading? Something that gives. Importance to what? I was just asking myself that very question, whether we should leave importance up to the reader or include it ourselves, whether its our professional responsibility to spell things out clearly or leave it up to the reader to pick things up and fill things in for themselves, to what degree makes people feel smart upon reading and how to achieve positive minds and minds that feel benefited from having read anything that's been written, for good purpose, for good purpose writers write. It's very challenging, time consuming work, not something, we take lightly criticism, if anything, we joked on Facebook, why are you texting President Trump like a New Yorker, because he's a New Yorker, like I'm talking to WSJ like a New Yorker, because they're New Yorkers, I'm funny in that way. Just being cute.

Social Media I once joked as writing on Twitter (2013-2016) as though I was "straight retarded" I shouted in Westwood, that was not the case, never, in a lawsuit, I had to take down all my writings, about life and all my famous quotes, my first quotes, as a writer. What is lost is lost, has only just begun, and everything meaningful forward, is what counts, and anything back which is to be protected or forgotten, rightfully so has been dealt with in such a way to cause grievous consequences to my health, to what understanding only my Attorney knows, only he knows, not of concern to me now, but trust him always, he knows best. I think I'm a much better writer now, cognizant of myself and others, more concerned with image, better suited now, conservative. We learn lessons, best from our own experiences, not the experiences of others, why slow learners are the best learners.

Pick Up Topics of Discussion:

1. Whether Headings Should Be Smart
2. Whether Social Media Should Be Left Reading Level: Stupid or Detail Oriented
3. Whether We Should Leave Gaps in Headings: Make You Go Huh

Unwarranted Intrusions Into the Mind by Leslie A. Fischman
10/08/17

Unwarranted intrusions into the minds of others are considered wrongs against humanity and to self-growth. To each his own. We are all allowed to grow at our own paces. Read into what, you should say to yourselves. There is never more to anything, back, in any one persons life that you should be entitled to knowing, that is called right to privacy that we are all entitled to that others are NOT entitled to knowing. Please be respectful of my right to privacy. Nothing back is important. Not that it is negative not that is it helpful or important or unimportant, but because not relevant to the times, and the whole purpose of writing is to focus on now, because now is what I need to focus on. In order to provide advocacy to others, it is important that I be present. It is not helpful to me or to others, if I am sucker punched into the past, focused on myself, or others, that is helpful to no one.

1. I never predict the future.
2. I am not psychic.
3. I am an accurate reader of the present.

Victim Advocacy Theory Deductions by Leslie A. Fischman

10/07/17

Co-Dependency is very unhealthy for self-growth, and in fact discouraged. By all means in-group and out-group methodologies are what brought us to this point of figuring out what terrorizes the mind, keeps us together and apart, like-minded, apart of, detached, and left out. For the sake of not undermining any privileged deductions we set a new code, nothing past is ever obvious looking back, we can only set forward and put together something new and achieved to create peace forward, that is my theory of like minded individuals forward, not necessary to pick apart like minded individuals past and point blame. That does no good forward actually. Detachment occurs, through the separation of self from others, occurring during alone time, this can occur by self study, reading, writing, cubicle time, continuing education either professionally or academically, schooling, internet study, or nowadays social media if you so choose to, through the study of others taboo if you might, but some prefer to, not my chosen methodology if you ask. Sociologist study populations of people not individuals, we study group methodologies not interpersonal relationships, but macro-level theories of interactions, physics on a macro-level not on a person-to-person basis, that is not as important. Self study comes last, as whats most important to us, is benefit to all, we are selfless in that way, we do not look for flaws in others or ourselves, that is not how we think, at least that is not how I am, and hope others will view me the same. For many years, I have taken photos and kept a running log of my progress, written and by photos healthwise, these are my documentary evidentiary records of my health, for medical reasons. Not for public record or discussion, or criticism actually. The best way to protect the safety of others, is to keep them flies on the wall, that is my duty, and so keep it that way, I'm very professional, good at what I do.

Attitude is everything, something that may change from day to day that is not something new. It is integrity that stands. Something that someone cannot take from you. I learned that in 5th Grade, a couple of hippies and a guitar came to class, and taught us that lesson, and handed out these Japanese candy sticks dipped in chocolate, and passed them out. Pockys. I think they were called. Anyways. Everyone attacks life and its plain from a different standpoint and with a different set of standards and with a different tool belt, a certain gusto toward life and drive, its not for anyone to say what it is to motivate any one person in life, or how so, what is to drive human kind, what is good purpose in life, for good, that is up to you, what you define as good purpose in life, to build or put down others to achieve good or better, that is up for debate, real estate shrugs its shoulders "we don't know" #whocares. What Does Forwards Require by Leslie A. Fischman

Forwards always requires, backing in fundamentals. Something written prior to establish a set of ideas, brought forward into the future which later come to fruition that justify the underpinnings of its establishment, and in its place a document can be place which so supports the foundation upon which it is laid future forward, in a continuous fashion, overlapping positives, regroupings of positives, however layered, past present or future, however, based, these are the foundations upon which justify anything built, something written prior which so consumes its presence and existence now. That makes sense. Anything else later, would be superfluous, or not binding, not as binding as something written beforehand.

#iMove 282: Cave Ballerina (Two and Two) DiCaprio & Portman
By: Leslie A. Fischman (Your Founder: #AcademyAward Faxer 2013)

From which all things are lost, I got the job at DC Law Students in Court Summer 2011, and was sent to Rehab, because I went to the Psych Ward, because Suicidal Dumped The Night Before My Evidence Final by My Then Boyfriend. And Dropped Two Courses and Got a Witken Award and an A instead. Course Work Completed, Westlaw Only Available During Non-Business Hours, At Night, A Night Writer.

I Blogged 2012, and began reporting incidences of Weird. First reports on 2008 on Facebook which went to mixfeed shortly before I committed Suicide February 2009 after the Grammys aired, Kanye stole the Award from Taylor Swift's Hands. She was my favorite, listened to her everyday on my way to work, her an a Techno Song, from my Psychic's Son made me, "I wanna feel your touch." Fell in love with my Supervising Attorney Will Jay Pirkey, who told me after reading my personal statement, "maybe one day you can be President." #PresidentTrump (#Twitter).

I just met with my Psychopathologist/Psychiatrist and told him I was put on three teams that's the problem, OJ's, Nicole Brown Simpson's, and the DA's all of which I now have a shared obligation to represent, and take care of, while fighting Petrocelli's wrongs, why I sent my box to HRW, that is Human Right's Watch. I wear a tear drop ring matching the tattoo of Nicole Gordon Farnoosh a classmate who has a tear drop back tattoo who works for the law firm he is now employee'd to, O'Melveny and Meyer's. I committed Suicide February 2009 because of his Deposition, thrown questions and thrown back responses, dictating open doors in directions toward my brother and I. #Harvard, how he got in. Be very careful where you point blame, Mr. Petrocelli, Fox made a whole Cartoon, and the Mona Lisa Louve concurs we support Leslie Fischman's concerns and so does Lance Armstrong's dramatic entry at the Tour de France when she was in town in High School in France. Hence 9/11. Too much Conspiracy. No trading of teams, not because of loss of any one teams or because of any one fault or any blame to any one person or party is to blame for those events. Victim blaming is not the way out or proper exit to any war mind you. Only a source of error forward. Think about it. Bad things happen to good people, to make you think good people are wrong. Or good people are at fault or to get you to get mad over the little things in life to concentrate on bigger purposes in life other than yourselves. For all things that matter, no conclusions are brought forward by concentration on the faults of others including your own, that includes the faults of others, past, present, and possibly the futures anger back at us like us today over Dinosaurs and Columbus and Boats. What sails and what floats, that is membership upon which choices made and agreed upon depend upon purpose enabled, individually, and by rules made, and laws provided, by the intelligent, and committees sound, sound of reason and sound of virtue, and by those who lead exemplary lives. Not to be changed or judged by those who do not measure up, they have no right to take away those powers, that is a sin on mankind's ability forward > Aurora + School Shootings = #BloggingCampign.

“Surveillance systems” not only cause paranoia, but they are invasive to our sense of feelings of safety and privacy dear Google Earth, when not ready to Mona Lisa quite yet. i.e. be available for Study, what do you think President Trump are our buildings ready for study, perfect yet, my old house is yellow, Fox News, do explain.

Whatsapp, the future of messaging services what does it all mean to us, and the value invested in communications systems, on time, I just developed the letter code addition to EMC2 regarding evolution, of the use of letters to communicate. Value.

“Many think Facebook’s $22bn purchase in 2014 of WhatsApp, a messaging app with fewer than 60 employees, falls into this category of “shoot-out acquisitions” that eliminate potential rivals. By providing barriers to entry and early-warning systems, data can stifle competition.”

The Economist argues that “two ideas stand out”: (1) mergers and the sizes of corporations when determining whether the blend ideas, such as: “data assets when assessing the impact of deals” and (2) “The second principle is to loosen the grip that providers of online services have over data and give more control to those who supply them.” They then bring about the idea of “transparency.” To what extent does transparency play a role in the value increased value of communication sets. For the purposes of, “consumers what information they hold and how much money they make from it” to what extent does mymollydoll.com play a role in improving fundamentals to communications in mass media and marketing, a Smart Circle girl.

The article ends with forewarning tech giants of the importance of privacy and transparency, such that: “It will entail new risks: more data sharing, for instance, could threaten privacy. But if governments don’t want a data economy dominated by a few giants, they will need to act soon.”

The Top Tier, What’s It Like by Leslie Fischman

Working at the top of any profession is very competitive both psychologically and emotionally, to stay centered and be approved of, these are not givens by resume or by connections, but by constant earning power given each day, day in and day out, how well you stay on top of things and how accurate your abilities and read of events are that help your readers to keep turning those corners everyday forward, that is what newspapers were made for, during times of war, to keep us updated and abreast of the key issues of concern, make widely known sides, and settle sides of disclosure convinced wrong or right by the acceptability of error or coordinations made by others, effort to improve social functioning or set back social functioning and communications, general several minute amongst against within and from outside of us, what sets people free and flowing moving forward and current, current as the times, is what they decided then and why what works best now, people to be trusted not questioned, and people to support not undermine, people who can deal constructively with paranoia over the years, and quell concerns well that is their general duty, and that is the type of professionalism they demonstrate. This has been learned and recognized, throughout my experiences as a writer online 2013-2017 what makes news, and how to control news, develop new news stories, and convert bad acts, to then get others to focus on good acts and why to follow #good stories, not bad stories, and why recurring hardships are a result and result from fixation wrongful fixation and key central focus on bad acts, acts of terror, violence, miscommunications, errors, faults, focal points, and points of reference which deduce make less of others, not build others including themselves set back in time, its your choice whether to move forward says Barack Obama and your choice to chose purposes in your life that help you make sense of your general health and well-being not be concerned with the health and well-being of others including my own which is not affected or a result of any interactions with others but results from my own choices made in life, having nothing to do with others, to undermine my abilities and set me back by “comparison principles” which suit your needs and understanding of others, is not of concern to me right now sorry, I am very selfless and always put myself last in order of importance why I am not doing well to date.

Investigations and Deductions by Leslie A. Fischman

Investigations to me occur when any wrongs occur, to set back a negative pattern of thinking or behavior that can or had resulted in recidivism looking back, these things only come to light upon disclosures, and upon knowing such can assemble correct ways of thinking forward. There are no givens in life, information known, that if made known would change any circumstances, everyone is responsible for the decision they make in their lives and the consequences that come about for them or against them, in their given trades and professions, respect is by merits and work product produced, whether helpful or not, I think is the best measurement of any given point of success we can now identify and hopefully help lead us forward to better decisions in the future. I have chosen to now be alone, because when with any one person, things do not seem to go right for me in life, and often led astray. It is not their fault I am a writer online now, that would have happened anyway as bookstores are no longer in existence and writing online is a very positive venture for many in the writing professions to both display their work, portfolio their work, and become well known and accepted among the best writing professionals as acceptable and worth a read, that took four years of writing online, not by story or association or connections but by sheer hardwork and talent I am an accepted read.

Don't Cause Harm to My Psyche by Leslie A. Fischman

My Physical Health by Leslie A. Fischman

10/17/17

No I don't run anymore, I power walk. I cannot run anymore with a bounce after 4 years of running everyday, tired. I tried hiking but its much too difficult for me now. I used to be a very successful athlete, 12 pull-ups record in 2nd grade a gymnast. I don't think it necessary to provoke feelings within me that don't exist such as anger toward others, or manifestation of issues within that do not exist outside of me nor of concern to anyone else. I think people make others hurt themselves and others, by the words they choose to share to cause discriminatory conduct toward others, and discriminatory feelings toward any one person, group, or kind of individual. These things don't matter, for the sake of humanity, we are all important. -For those reasons I do not talk to anyone anymore, nor socialize, nor wish to date at any point in the near future, nor ever, choose to marry. I will be alone, can take care of myself, don't need marriage or money, can find work on my own, always with a job and in school, I don't need anyone for that matter. I don't run anymore because I get discriminated as healthy and better than dissed.

What is called and interpreted in the later is not my responsibility to resolve, but the responsibility of those responsible for causing harm to me, to grow up and move on. Not deserved for whatever reasons trashy towards me, not deserved, no credit given where no credit is due for suicidal ideations, head slamming into walls and cutting my wrists because of two grow individuals who caused harm to my psyche and well-being, grose.

Wrist Cutting by Leslie A. Fischman
10/15/17

When any hate is directed to any one person a chain reaction occurs in the positive or the negative stemming from the sender to the receptor. I am an isolated unit. I have been independent my whole life, someone that people lean on to for support, a stable unit. This usually occurs because people who are unstable rely on stable people to provide insight into their feelings and emotions, to help translate back positives to help create reassurance of self amongst them, that is how stable people are relied upon in society as support systems, to whom I support on a daily basis.

There are many reasons for why anyone would subject themselves to harm, sometimes not purposeful, but because circumstances warrant such occasions to occur that disfavor parties to transactions or interactions to favor sides. That is a normal reaction to any situation not understood to think there is a situation where non-exists that misconception then comes to fruition by causing the reactor to then justify, explain, march, or dissent and argue why that is not the case, and dealt with already (2013). These bearers of responsibility are nothing but horses, on mountains, not as important as the maintenance of the surrounding environment which requires stability in order for these horses to travel to and from these mountain tops to, rest stops, to sources of stability they find fitting to their ideals.

We are not all mirror images of self and others or those we surround ourselves with. That is not what makes a society, idolization, jealousy, rancor, status, or travelocity. Why not send boxes and cush stuffed dunks to the US Supreme Court or pack CD's with heroine in the bindings from the Boulderado Hotel, that's taking advantage of someone in a trusted position. Usually people in trusted positions are misused to create ease among those who carry disease. What human genome project? Write.

Never a Nuisance Never a Clown by Leslie A. Fischman
10/15/17

Never a nuisance never a clown said I. What are true events and causes draw much distain and apathy when expected result occurs contrary to intended recipient, to whom credit worth for, and why. Any misunderstanding breeds such childish animosity and hatred toward self and others, that unexplainable circumstances occur to counter those thoughts of yours. When is tomorrow? Tomorrow. Let's recall the first and the last time we ever did have such recollections shared, amongst a few for whatever consequences seen occurred, for truth or for courage or for what? None positive said I. Love is a waste of time, a momentary but a momentary quest for candy bars, like Rand Paul described when they are stumped, is how this occurs, rummaging and rampaging and batlettoing they go, like moths to a flame, to see what becomes of you, to turn them sane and beautiful, when made to look or appear any way they see wrong or in error, is their own fault not ours. Run and cry out of the meeting in clear black platforms > #France smoked a pipe in my face. #LasVegas shouted with horror shooting hotel rooms door by door like the Matrix, why don't we build a stage instead and sing > where is my voice, gone. Lost to someone who thought I had none. Things saved and preserved are but for occasion when ready and due and prepared just right, that is how a story is told and brought to light, when it is deserved, otherwise when a job well done and peace achieved there should be no cause for consequence in any direction whatsoever to achieve what? My next-door neighbor in West Hollywood worked in Special Effects at a very fancy office I once visited in Santa Monica, a beautiful space, full of balconettes.

For reference (Kodak we love you! > No worries we were all once fat says iPhone 2017 who supports Kodak makes everyone fatter now > Models use Droids! FYI).

We all know very well, how to interpret, and to which misinterpretations cause illness, must we thermometer check actors and actresses between scenes to get readings of cold, sick, and warm, levels of empowered, drained, or retarded. What transfers. To any one unit of focus, i.e. focal point, a deduction is made, or a cast shadow across eyes, this causes blindness, and absorption of the surroundings, why Film is such an interesting industry of study: taking on paintings, in motion, is a very tedious and time consuming job, there is much at risk of harm, health concerns, as to audience emotions and feelings, they have been in control of for a Century to come or more, so lets all get along, past present and future, and try to embark on some journey more ordinary or sort, or lighten up the surroundings and let the actors and actresses glow, and match what surrounds them, these level can improved upon, reduced, enlarged, or set back, these are your options, for focus. It is not the actors nor the actresses responsibility to make feel good others, but the scenes themselves, the overall effect is the interpretations of the viewers. That they cannot control. I was a Turner Classic Movie Fan in College, then dated a PA.

Fundamentals of Maintaining Peace

By: Leslie A. Fischman

Given 10/14/17.

Fundamentals of peace are ascribed by trade, given trades and professions to which we are taught, by those curriculum choices we make, and points we choose to focus on. We call these points “points of reference” a term I have described and assembled in the past, as meaning > that to which we bond and that to which we believe and that which belief make deductions that help us then to achieve. What? Peace is that main goal. No need for ousting or belittling as those are givens, anything forward and turned back retarded, is not of threat to anything forward, that is something that only smart knows, never threatened by others, our key characteristic and trait, never angry, saddened or disheartened, empathetic, sensitive, and positive readers of self and the future. A high belief in self is achieved by good merits, good merits, are through disciplined practice and endeavors which represent our strengths and better our weaknesses we realize along the way. I’ve been told by my Father “to better [myself] everyday.” That’s the best advice he ever gave me, and advice I heed to all. –If not for my strength and courage exuded over the years and leadership through everyone’s alcoholic and suicidal ideations, my Brother would not be a Harvard Professor and Doctor now, always reassuring #strong > well kept, a positive representation of our family always, a catalyst.

Obligations Speech by Leslie A. Fischman

Never obligate yourself to become concerned with matters to which do not affect you or have no affect upon you to then be affected by things that don’t matter. What concerns us are things that matter to us and what matters to us is up to each individual by likes to determine for themselves, there is no correct order for the choosing and the liking of public options in life, to be liked or unliked, is a determination set by your characteristics which you exhibit in public spaces determined by the level of confidence and output you produce when in public settings, your personal performances in life, in the end determine the level of success you are able to achieve in life. These things are not certain, not all together fitting for any one person in any one given trade or profession, but ability is achieved by disciplined and thorough study of self, knowledge of weakness and strengths that upon which one learns and moves forward in life, that is how we grow, that is how one grows, that is how one achieves, that is how one matures.

Obsessions are a manifestation of weakness that we endure when not made strong, when we think we need to be something we are not, or that someone has something that we do not, never obsess over others as that is bad omen to your sense of self, self-esteem, and personal development. Be whole.

Communications Speech by Leslie A. Fischman

Given: 10/13/17

If the World were flat, and every time the Sun came around under to heat and light us up, in Theory, we would all be connected to one. That explains tanning I thought, why people spent so much time with the Sun, there must be something about Light and Tan that will lead us to some new information at some later point in time, once we can figure out why we like the Sun so much, and spend so much time under the Sun to then color ourselves by One. As I ran yesterday, dimming and lighting photo by video, I realized to whom do I connect and why, and for what reasons do I do dim and light up, it must be by some connections. What if we broke things down to two big connections: The Sun and The Moon, or ordered vice versa. Level of importance not necessary to establish comfort as one being better than or either or better than. The Moon controls water, our bodies, most of which is composed of liquid mass, similarly are affected by the Moon, historically, emotionally, why is that, to what degree does the movement of waters within the body and around the body matter, Continents, Masses: Including Organs. Masses meaning Solid Matters, Solid Matter meaning something bound, to which elements flow within, and to which elements are affected within and from outside of such, the Liquid surrounding these Solids.

When I first came to Social Media, the only Theories I was most familiar with was a Monsanto Video shown in class on 4/20 at CU Boulder, did not attend the Smoke Fest on Farrand Field that day, but did bump into a friend Bauer, who asked, "are you coming?" I had a quick chat and walked off, not sure if attended, did not want to insult his excitement and make clear not attending, but might. Watched a Video instead, I think I got a B+ in Nutrition for Health and Performance in Undergrad.

In that Video, they talked about Seed Germination, the making of Seeds, and Cross-Pollinization of Farm Land, by Air which carried Seeds, from body of land to body of land, Seeds, I thought later as applied to the flows of communication, within and without, how best to start and why, protect classes, and one by one strengthen classes. The best way to strengthen any one set evenly, is by participation, adding an agent me, and connecting to agents existing people (i.e. via Mentions on Twitter).

For what purpose does it serve to communicate in that order, easy to communicate amongst strangers but not friends, who is easier to talk to and why? At certain points in time, what is familiar is preserved, and what is new becomes better when communication, new communications, a new set of communications are made.

2012 I had yet to achieve fame online, not known, as Sydney Simpson's best friend, publicly, it took many years of blogging online to achieve Fame and Success become well known, a trusted source of insight into matters relevant to the times.

Everything works in C's I've discussed this in my Car, the key to empowerment, is for those above to lift all, light all, or light one Giggles the Sun, and for the Supported to rise up and help one another, this is how a cahoots is made, an even cahoots. Or a House: MYMOLLYDOLL, like playing Poker in Mammoth with my Dad, 3 Aces! Wow. While everything in the middle is not affected by those sick at the bottom or sick at the top, this is how everything is strengthened, foundations are strengthened, when one is made. By who, by me. To benefit who, all, for what reasons, good purpose, how do we know? 5 years successful combatting violence online since leaving Law School. Success monetarily, well that comes in time, not a prerequisite for happiness in my book.

Edge is not Important for Achievement in Life

I save everything AOL Boxes included - well prepped - paranoia is never coming from me > I am always professional > never in the know or in cohorts > in a cubicle in solitude > please let me do my job, and be professional > why must I create a website for everyone to calm down and behave peacefully toward one another in assembly, and not commit wrongs toward one another unnecessary > is bearing weight toward the futures shoulders turning back > already sound minded is nodding yes > time to move forward > past is nowhere behind sound of rationale, forward is everywhere smarter at this point, that is why past is not discussed out of appreciation and gratitude of the past not for discussion or critique of how better a job the past could have done to have brought us more quickly toward any future point in time > is an evolutionary concern and evolution argument of concern, something of personal consequence for each individual to determine on their own how they develop and under what guidance they so choose to trust, not for others to decide for them. #Pulitzer #Nobel > by: #lesliefischman #mymollydoll#WorldPeace (Edge is not important for achievement in life something I said out loud to myself in my car trying to deduce on my own often time before writing out loud I make deductions prior to writing them out. The Use of References by Leslie A. Fischman

10/24/17

The use of references and citations are best suited when they are used properly and not by inference or by pun to leave room for error or for misconception or for rebuttal or for assumption in the negative toward any one group or persons. That is called leaving an innuendo for discrimination upon a person or set of persons. And is highly frowned upon, and is never the purpose for mymollydoll.com. I am very careful to always cite and always explain carefully, from where such deductions are made from what movies or songs are cited from, and what is being used to help paint what, never used to bring forward an idea, only used to help show an idea. Life occurs on its own timing never because of a movie or a song, life occurs by itself. Be very careful not to blame others including songs and films for why life occurs. That is not why life occurs, everyone is responsible for their own actions in life, it is never appropriate to blame others for your own actions, when you cause harm to others or yourself, that is your own fault, never the fault of others. That is clear. Whether appropriate or inappropriate, conduct is usually dictated by how we feel at the time, never promulgated by the conduct of others or the feelings of others toward or against us, that is not the motivating factor, in terror, or not, whether there is sadness or death around us, should not dictate whether ones light up, we are all human, and therefore we should all light up, that is for the sake of humanity, equality. –Things are left burdensome whenever there is an ending that does not consume some ending that satisfies some distaste among us, some response or something that gives us something we feel missing or something to explain some concourse within us, whether that is something evil, that is something to which I cannot relate and to which something I refuse to help with, I am sorry, not my expertise, and not something I talk about because something I do not have experience with, evil. That is not something I understand, evil people. Not my gift.

Criminal Investigations by Leslie A. Fischman

10/24/17

Putting ourselves into the shoes of one another in one way is which crimes can be solved, knives in boxes and the liking, photos of Brunos, and the liking, even red painted Louboutin's why not, and call them Batlettos. All these items help paint a picture, while everyone replies, we never thought that, well subconsciously, if so, let's do our best to rule out alternatives, before anything bad comes to fruition that's called a rock solid investigation, of ruling out alternatives, to prevent negative outcomes. That is my job at mymollydoll.com. One purpose for this website. To rule out alternatives prevent crime.

I used to sit in the front of my class in college, and raise my hand to speak called upon to speak, that is the order or speaking, just like when Barack Obama sent me an invitation to his Inauguration and then I built mymollydoll.com and began speaking. That is the order of speaking. Just like I wrote in my lap for 3 hours in front of the US Supreme Court for notice, approval, and in person performance.

It is really unfortunate that when all things are put together that everyone thinks that everything is pre-planned or that there is some manual or direction or proper procedure for handling such matters and or controversy there is not, just someone with enough nerve and agency such as myself, to step forward and take the initiative. That takes (1) bravery (2) gusto (3) confidence (4) skill (5) education (6) properness (7) kindness (8) professionalism (9) innocence; and (10) positive purpose.

Write Everything in the Positive is My Belief System by Leslie A. Fischman

It is my belief that for everything to stay true and correct must be written in the positive for any one thing to be carried forward is a testament forward for centuries to come and hold certain to these truths we hold self evident. What comes before us is laid down with certainty that is what is expected is what is accepted and what we hold certain is only what we can stomach and what makes well not sick. There are certain bearings to truth and certain groundworks which must be laid in order for acceptance to be brought, there are tones which are made, and theories which are drawn to convert any one set of ideas forward to fruition we call this painting. Painting is used not to ascertain delusion to fruition but to set back past to create present certainty and present fact forward presence of attitude and capability forward. Fear is nothing but a present state of uncertainty made by anything uncertain a future that is made uncertain by something that catalyzes us backwards. Backwards toward any period state of fear to which we were uncertain of fate forward. Why go back to any period of time in which certainty was yet established and fate was uncertain such as times when there was death or times when people died, those are consequences of uncertainty and consequences of lack of togetherness of values, ideas, and appreciation of worth in society of each other. When any one person does not value the life of another one kills. We lock those people up, we do not regard them or acknowledge them, all crimes are senseless. They are not smart, all criminals are retarded. That is a misnomer to think criminals are smart, if criminals were smart they would not have been locked up, it is for their stupidity they are punished and get locked up, that is why criminals are punished.

I do not believe in the illuminati or the Davinci Code, for the reasons that it leads to destruction of purpose of religious purposes to create safety of mind and spirit, causes grave hardship to the value of religious sanctity and knowledge of peace, that has been bestowed for centuries upon us, sanctuaries, for peace, just like schools for study, for the mind, to be at peace, for good decisions to be made, good lives be led.

Just like others feel disappointment, and feel left out upon learning about 2013, why not I included in this movement, what would I have created had I known help was needed, its never over, there is always a way to help says Human Rights Watch, help is always needed in the field of the Helping Professions, that is my field Since 2004, trained.

When Things Become Illuminated What Is Lost? By Leslie A. Fischman

10/23/17

When things become illuminated what is lost? Fear of loss explains my marketing team, there is always fear of loss, what is sold, what is not sold, ideas, just ideas, when marketing, they are just ideas, products sold, taken bought and sold, ideas. I had a chat with Adele, my middle name is Allison, my Sister's Adele, something like the William's Sisters, she asks me to play Tennis, I decline, met Larry David at the ball machine once at The Riviera Country Club on a Lesson with Todd Yoshitake. Said Hello. Then walked off with my bag. (Hid a broken knife tip off in a hole puncher box in law school committed suicide over war overseas ask Chris Sonia). One of the William's Sister's Cousin's was shot in Compton (OJ was rumor'd to have picked one up from a FL Airport once - No OJ picked me up from the Airport once, why are people trying to plant stories in my memory bank rumors in my memory bank to make me repeat false stories to make me look like I spread rumors that is hurting my image to make me look like a rumor mill why I get suicidal I am a very honest person rumors cause homicide toward me not toward you or others that's not funny to watch me die! #Stop that now please dear Family. That's not a good solution please stop that, where did you learn that behavior from? Aw. Crying) I was a VWAP in Compton, for a Summer 2012, by a MLK Memorial photo similar to one in DC made.

When a time period is made, such as a Campaign begun 2013 for World Peace by speech written August 2013, and just begun to launch, after leaving Law School 2013 by decision and march in protest by me, because Marilyn Manson stole my Sister-in-Law from a New Years Eve party, possessive, I marched down Sunset Blvd.

I then left my boyfriend and flew to DC for two weeks, and it snowed. And carved in the sidewalk CU Buffs, and slammed my matching watch to Sydney Simpson sent outside the sidewalk 200 yards away from Barack Obama's house, to signal help. And sat outside his house for hours thinking, and pacing outside his house until I left peeing my pants alone in the cold, no restroom nearby in the snow alone, walking.

Just because others are left behind, out cold, does not mean not included to not include, but as protection, nothing is left hidden known, we are still figuring things out as we go, that does not mean that anyone is not being professional, that is apart of life, life is much to be discovered, that is called science, life is a learning process. We are to make better life, so that everyone lives longer and stronger, lives a better life, with less room for error, and less room for hardships and self-harm and chaos.

Much of illness results, from people feeling like things could have turned out differently or that things should be different than they are now, or better than. That is not a good way of looking at things. You should always be thankful for the way things are and accept that everyone is always doing their very best, we are at our best possible always, and that there is no better best that is possible we can be now.

Some think, or wish they were around to experience 2013, if they were present how they would have executed that year differently to have been apart of that journey with us, well we are sorry that no one was around to be there with us, but those that were around 2013, well they are in leadership positions today and shining, good job! We are so very proud of them that they followed me and listened closely! Thank you for lending an ear, we are so very proud of you all and for your service to everyone, it's been a very long journey, we have many leaders in many industries.

Writers Drive by Leslie A. Fischman
10/22/17

Where does writers drive comes from? I'm really tired right now. But to explain. Writers drive comes from education. You have to be very well read and educated to be able to be well written and to write well. In order to be an A writer, you have to have written many papers graded and well studied, well versed in research and writing, patterns and very articulate in order to write seamlessly without error, in one stream of consciousness and without, having to rewrite, in one draft, such as in a blog, and not have to go back. It is not a freestyle. Spoken speech, comes with practice, I learned to speak outloud in bars, after 3 drinks, I was an iphone writer first, by phone, then to emails, then to Twitter, then to blogs and Facebook. It all takes time to eventually hit the stage and become a world renown public speaker. I have only made it to a few Countries outside of the US by stats on Twitter not many yet, when I last checked my Analytics, just trickled out, not that big yet, if there is any concern. It takes a long time to become famous. I just hit 800K in the US 2016.

Building a Website by Leslie A. Fischman (Since 2013)

Prior to Achieving Fame 2016 800K by Leslie A. Fischman
10/22/17

Prior to achieving fame 800k, I was not sure how to go about generating a following, and attending a meeting at a local studio in Downtown LA and pitched my Campaign I was running online. I had already built a website and written a speech 2013, and held a few accounts, was planning on writing a quotes campaign, and running a fashion blog, even pitched to a Google Executive at a Mixer and then joined Shareasale and got more banners and began running ads on my websites. Everything takes time to build a website and nothing comes pre-packaged, nothing happens overnight. From the outside it looks like these things come this way, but that is not the case, everything must be done handmade, and inserted, and applied for individually, to a parent company, you must apply for ads, banners, and web addresses, and links and connections and html must be inserted and connected. These are all skills that must be self-taught and takes a lot of time many years to achieve, I had to teach myself how to build websites it took me about a year 2016, to build from scratch HTML on Wordpress, and took 5 years to build my Weebly website, which is a compilation of all my websites, I separated to hold ideas concepts, one being my company: mymollydoll and one being my campaign: #bloggingcampaign and one being the beginning replaced: #bradmusiccampaign (founded 2015 after their Founders passed away).

Nobel Pulitzer Submission #1 by Leslie A. Fischman 10/22/17

10/22/2017

Theory for Nobel & Pulitzer (RIP to ALL) by Leslie A. Fischman Submitted: (09/08/17-10/22/17)

1 does not equal anything outside of what is proven within 1 and 2 and 1 and 2 does not provide insight to anything other than what its written for and stated for and addressed for. When a 1 2 is written 1 2 exists for 1 2, if it applies to a 3 not written in 1 or 2 that does not prove support any existence of 3 for what? If you need anything to exist not written to cause a 3 what was your 3 for? To misuse a clearly stated 1 followed by a 2 to see if 3 now is because of a 1 or a 2? If 2 follows 1 and any 3 follows a 2: 3 follows 2, 2 does not cause 1 if 2 does not cause 1 then how can 3 cause 2 or 1. Whether we have a 3 or not should therefore make no difference to 1 or 2, 3s are made when a 2 is made, everything that follows follows the preceding because the preceding was written a 2 was written with[out] or without a 3 necessary because a 3 cannot be written if 1 and 2 are not made, any 3 independent can not exist without a 2 just like 2 cannot exist without 1. cc: #USSupremeCourt (Point 3) of (2): (1 of 2)

II.

Main Point: Smart or Retarded does not prove either Smart or Retarded, Proof of one Smart does not make any or all or some or one Retarded, Smart is not for identifying or Disproving Retarded. Who hurts who? Neither Smart or Retarded should effect one another unless purpose is to attack a status to achieve the opposing sides status, if one does not cause the other, establishment or destruction of either side cannot therefore cause the other to be right or wrong better than justified or not. Bad does not Prove Retarded. And Bad causes, Retarded is Bad's purpose is to justify being what Bad. Bad does not equal Retarded. You cannot use another's position in life to achieve, take away, switch, take place of, prove, displace, to justify (define) make clear any #misuse of a term often occurs when it's needed to make clear a difference from right and wrong. If wrong is at issue then its clear Bad is at issue, whether caused by Retarded or Bad bc of whatever Bad thinks justifies being a Bad for, NEVER equates to Bad = Retarded (Don't misinterpret a vulnerable population to justify a wrong, existence of a wrong, to explain or identify whether: Bad or Retarded. If we know of one known purpose (justifications of wrongs) than not right EVER to explain or define sides clear to who's right or wrong unless necessary to do so. Smart or Retarded (Causes) as it relates to Bad (and use of bad to clear wrongs establish sides whether purposeful is will never be wrong if Bad causes Retarded. Not all wrongs are based on Smart or Retarded, that's an assumption of causes as it relates to what you find relevant. Tip: Know yourself, Trust yourself, Report Everything, Let #LawEnforcement Know when you see Bad to protect who (Causes for Retarded) if that so matters to you to prove or disprove wrongs you identify with see know hear think #whocares you know you best. #ThinkforYourself nobody's struggles or hardships or disabilities NEVER affect Smart, Retarded, Well, Sick etc? Your focus is your focus no one is ever #wrong because of focus issues, if you earn a place or position in life, everything else is obvious to right, wrong, smart, retarded etc. We see and know ourselves best others understandings of us should never be important to argue for existence of what: rights or wrongs #bywho #whocares #lawenforcement knows everything. Retarded is not caused by Wrongs obviously if its clear Bad causes Retarded. (New Focus: Existence of Bad clarifies what wrongs, to whom and why? If any justification of Bad is made something Wrong any Wrong is easily identified needs not be proven. Just because Bad (Shows Wrongs) does not mean Wrongs caused Bad or establishment of a Bad. There's no causal connection if you state Bad causes Retarded, Retarded is Automatically Not Bad. #whatsyourpoint? Point at Issue: Retarded caused by Bad does not justify any or all or some or one Wrong, if no position is necessary to identify prove not either or the other need be clarified by destruction proof of any side (See Above). Wrongs exist even if Bad, Smart, Retarded, or Blinde if used to Prove Rights and Wrongs then why weaken any sides waste of time proving or disproving any side. That's not my job. cc: #USSupremeCourt #IdentifyYourself.

III.

(Point 2 of 2) by #leslifischman aka #mymollydoll (1 connects to 2, because 1 was written, 2 was written, 2 was not written because of 1, if 2 follows 1, how can 1 connect to 2 only if 1 is written does 2 later make sense in any way as it applies to 1 because if 1 of 2 and 2 of 2 are stated connections obviously 2 follows 1). Who the F cares replies #NYCY relates to what. Stop f-king gluing negatives to positives THEN try to understand existence of a negative point to PROVE OR JUSTIFY anything that is clearly Wrong on its face right or wrong Smart or Retarded, Guided by who probably by some Wrong to Prove estb cause understand a Bad to see what?!?!? #FrankGehry Whether Bad causes Good? Rights and Wrongs don't create standings in life to prove or justify wrongs or rights. If trying to prove wrongs to estb Bad identity bad, You ARE Wrong to achieve set up circumstance until a Bad occurs to Justify a Cause needed to prove bad. If Bad caused Retarded then we already know a Bad existed at some point in time which caused Retarded. If you think identifications are required to improve disprove establish displace result in Wrong to: Good Smart Bad Retarded or Blinde. Who's wrong? You were wrong, neither nor any sides need be established to prove anything if Bad exists Wrong exists a (Cause) cannot therefore prove in reverse existence of Bad for what? Never justify wrongs of others who are Bad to See if Wrongs occur the[n] blame Causes as resulting from your establishment of Wrong to Show Bad See Bad Understand Bad See if Caused Bad [to] see if why[,] what's the point of clarifying Bad Caused anything Wrong if clearly Wrongs are Bad who the f-k cares who[s] Wrong: If Bad Causes: Retarded Smart Wrong Right #whothefuckcares what you think if it f-king caused Bad and Bad Caused Retarded then Establishment of Anything should have no effect on: Smart, Retarded, Right, or Wrong. Unless Wrongs continue then Causes MUST be because of a Bad, [BREAK 7:55PM], sides do not establish disprove establish reinforce causes for Bads or Wrongs, if we already understand Wrongs are Caused by Bad, obviously if Retardation Exists then some Bad occurred to Cause that. Who's bad? Therefore cannot be proven if a Wrong is necessary or a Result is necessary to Prove any side or causes. That's Wrong. Wrong is necessary or a Result is necessary to Prove any side or causes. That's Wrong. Wrong does not Equal Retarded!!!! If Bad caused Wrongs Retarded that has no effects on Smart, Rights, or any other Wrongs. Sides don't justify Sides if they exist on their own, don't justify Sides if they exist on their own, any connections needed to be made to see anything is obviously caused by whatever was Wrong or Needed a Wrong to Justify Bad or Retarded [omit "I"], or whether Bad caused Retarded as it relates to a later Wrong, later Wrongs are f-king Wrong, if you need a Wrong to Justify Past Wrongs then you are Wrong, Bad not Retarded clearly if you Caused Bad Bad was caused by Retarded, and Bad is Wrong Retarded is proof of existence of Bads and Wrongs Existing whether Retarded or Smart. #whatsyourpoint if a Point need be proven to show rights and wrongs to prove wrongs justify wrongs then clearly you were wrong: Retarded, Smart, Right, or Wrong. Bad does not Cause Wrongs if Bad caused Retarded, Retarded is then being misused at any later point in time to Understand Causes to Identify Bad to See Causes to Identify Bad to See Causes is not Right, Causes for Retardation do not justify ANY Wrongs past or present. Expansions are all about broadening your horizons. After the Laker Game by Leslie A. Fischman (So What)

There Are Things Said and Things Not Said That Don't Matter by Leslie A. Fischman
10/21/17

Who's class matters. What class ends and what class matters, high or whether not high, is the question, you think I'm high on what life or others, or sex or drugs or alcohol, or cocaine or adderrall or abilify or any medication updates, social media trends or power or people, that is absurd. It's called life. What matters to me is none of your business, what inspires me is none of your business, what motivates me is one of your business, what my goals and aspirations in life are none of your business, do not change or dictate or change the direction in my life to acquire or circumscribe to suit your needs or validate your judgments about me to suit your interests or your sides, that is not a good purpose, to misuse another's life purpose.

It's really insulting when my tone is changed by others to sound in a way that looks or sounds retarded to test me to see whether true and correct sounding a previous or prior argument made as to "retarded retorts." If the argument made by me then argument sounded in full blown made by me and reinforced by me on purpose not because one is retarded or because I am on drugs or because I am now retarded or on drugs or high or on drugs. That is not the case. I have no money and no means to purchase alcohol or drugs clean and sober celibate since 2014 continuously sex but 2 times once with Jay once with Hadrien. That is all. Once after France and once before Rhubarb Studios. After that the rest was history. My life ruined. I was better off running and doing my lover by iPhone from Sicily Marchello. Laugh all you want.

I have never been a homewrecker, Phil I sent back to his Wife, I did him once inside a Wells Fargo I was an A student he got me high on Cocaine and Alcohol, it was a mercy f-k he has a 2 inch dick it was no big deal in a rolly chair, and s-kd his dick in my car, where Michael Jackson is buried now, what's the big deal. None of your business. After a Laker Game, I had some beer, and drove to see him, he called me.

How to Build a Trusted Website by Leslie A. Fischman

How to Feng Shui Your Website

Headings are everything not only do they indicate importance to content but they highlight your assets including the photos and ads you chose to display alongside your content, add value to your interior settings and add value to your overall content. Like chandeliers to your dining room set, what lights up your space, adds value.

How to Control the Content Your Audience Reads

Every word your add or subtract adds value, time editing is everything, I write in one shoot, one reel like a typewriter, nothing backwards, everything forwards why nothing sits for long, and everything digests and nothing sinks per work or hinges, that is my style, not to dictate direction, or leave stuck, or huh your mind, but keep everything going and flowing moving forward, how I maintain and keep my audience. That is my trick of my trade, learnt best by public speaking in bars, in phone, outloud, then on Twitter, on Facebook, and on permanent site website Weebly. Where is my Lacie: Tumblr, sh, needs to be backed up > #bloggingcampaign. Not everything is perfect, not everything is saved, some things lost, I do my best to save everything of value, lives lost, sometimes material taken.

Hence: bloggingcampaign.wordpress.com and bloggingcampaign.tumblr.com

Maintenance Tip: Anything automated leaves a stick. Anything taken leaves a gap. Anything cut leaves a space. Anything missing leaves an airiness. Leave everything as is. That is my best advice for keeping a full valued website that has longevity forward and something that is built to last with the times relied upon a trusted source of value and something that feels safe and something that people trust.

Two Traits I Carry and Why by Religion by Leslie A. Fischman

The Things We Forget and Why by Leslie A. Fischman
10/20/17

The things we forget are usually things past accomplished positive when focused on something present negative that we are unhappy with that is or has been keeping us from moving forward in the positive. We tend to fixate on negatives when we are stuck on perfections rather than acceptance of self and others, losing sight of importance of things we call values. Values are basic principles of acceptance and self worth. Self worth are things we base things to be or base value upon. Such denominating factors such as: class, inclining, declining, improving, disproving, redoing, volumizing, disclosing, hidden, observed, kept, secret, known, or unknown. These generalized factors are the basis upon decisions made: we accept or reject things about self or others, and upon which acceptance is granted and generated in favor or disfavor towards one another or to ourselves. In the most basic sense. How can we undo this? Anything occurring naturally cannot be undone but only accepted as part of human nature, that we are all trying to better each other and ourselves. The best way to look at things always in in the positive. Why? I was raised to always see the good in others. Is this why you are so successful. Well in part. No matter how trying my circumstances may be no matter how negative others are toward me or around me, I always manage to see the good in others, raised that if I have nothing nice to say to say nothing at all, and to that others chagrin, well now what? To please all we counterattack those advisements, true and correct, true and correct Mom, tis true and correct, a Catholic who raised me, by Bible. Awe. And like a Jew take everything too far (try until direction forced differently) and never know when to stop (until choices limited), carrying two traits, awe. Why I am so successful at marketing. Listen. I have studied law for 10 years to know rights from wrongs, why so steady at marketing ideas.

How to Stop Terrorism by Leslie A. Fischman
10/20/17

We are still trying to figure out how to stop recidivism toward me and people spreading rumors about me. I am a prude. Not sexually active since 2014, and had no sex in High School and seldom in College, and only for one Summer in Law School, a prude. Not social for the majority of my life, go out but a few times a year, and everytime I do go out, someone tries to take me home to bed me, not my fault, if I get left at the bar, why I stopped hanging out with my friend, nothing personal.

Anyways to whose fault is that, blame their friends, Google and some Comedian. Whatever. Anyways. Says Marty Bauer, my Sister sent me a Surf Board and Gun Ad before Las Vegas and Eminem lived in a Trailer, just like Heather's friend works for a Trailer Surfer, who she lived with at the time I was playing club soccer in law school when Paco Lomma did me and my light went out my sister spreading rumors across town that I do random people? Who a Simoan and A Tech Ads Guy 1/2 Irish Josh from the Whaler? I met on St. Patrick's day, kept a poster from the Bathroom.

When I got firevaulted out from my computer passwords in my La Mer kit zip up in my desk, during Criminal Law, finished 3rd under John Rogers who asked for my notes As on all essays, I was heartbroken and then didn't finish strong after he fucked me on a Wednesday at Brennans and took my Jurisprudence Final on a Friday that week and finished with a C+ I think, assigned to read Antigone by a so-called FM Radio Station owner. What is Love? by Leslie A. Fischman

Let's minus the dramatic wolf scene #Disney > its because their pitcher left me out to dry 2009 kidnapped my Mom and I committed Suicide about to pass out in 5 point restraints at UCLA slamming my head into the walls because still alive, why? I killed myself why the fuck am I here now > shouted at my Mom go be with Christopher and they stabbed a needle in metal casing into my neck and the lights flickered and fogged and it went black, couldn't feel my chest. So anyways.

Love is like being on a bed of rose petals on my front lawn, stabbed with kitchen knives, while President Trump walks by trying to figure out what the 9/11 Memorial means. Steve Job's ghost walked up to me with a Hoover Vacuum. Ya so we never met, but since I thought he was in my cat, I drove to Palo Alto and parked outside his house, and he showed up in Las Vegas to meet me and greet me, no he's not the Google Executive who got killed by a Whore, Im not a Whore, and she's in jail. Nothing to do with me, then signed up for Google AdSense. Get your timelines right. Love is most like the Movies: Cinderella, The Little Mermaid, and Beauty and the Beast Fables that have been around for Centuries, tragedies, who died and made you Shakespeare? William Shakespeare, befuddled and befogged my dearest, to whom does love write and why, to those that shine my clementines, to those that shine, fucking corn beans and animosity helmets and book stores be gone, wonder why, wonder walls, grab a guitar a golf set and king me, legally retarded got him in, and nobody says anything, from island to land to Harvard, of course, what ginger bread house, nothing but porridge and robinson's flee, like mice to holes, I learned at a young age, throwing roly chairs at my walls, while Warner died of Cancer sad, could hear us screaming from the chimney tops, running in puddles by electric pool sets, and poop in rose bushes, nowhere to shit retarded, everybody poops. Sea monsters and the liking, remember what, key elements, build some squares. Chemistry is everything > I love #PresidentTrump its meant to be like Fisher Price home my room closet foreplay with a lifesize bunny at 2 and barbies to pre-school in my ballet shoe box, tap dancing like a taxi cab driver when I was little, doing backwalkovers on the balance beam, embarrassment to whom, bought a watch of course, like the one matching sent to Sydney and slammed on the sidewalk, I handled sidewalk cases at LA City Attorneys office and jam packed my cubicle locker above my desk with a painting from my School I painted and DVDs Changeling a CD Jason Mraz with twisted eyes, and a bunch of articles on Childhood Trauma I studied. Im doing just fine and so is everyone else, gifted and blessed, by Parents. I did a back flip once off my diving board and hit my head on the board, never again.

Buildings and The Symbols They Communicate by Leslie A. Fischman

Buildings were the first sanctuaries, post caves to shelter mankind. The Dinosaurs grumble, well you stole them from us, why we got fogged out and died, and Christopher Columbus carried us by ship back to others for food. How we became food, we died naturally, claims historians past, ya ya, we all know you guys knew when they were gonna be in town on vacation and set up traps, like you do in the Amazon and catch wildlife from the trees dropping nets and gathering up your bounty. Who invented that method of capture, people who have jungles duh, there are no jungles in USA, silence and crickets, your diet is all protein, shouts T-Rex. To match me and preserve me in your systems, they all know you ate me, it was my job to run around scaring everyone state to state away from the weather, like Leslie August 2017 marched before all the storms hit, marched 2-4 hours everyday for a month, something is coming you guys better skit skit scadadle. So anyways, they hide in their caves guilty, and develop art, lets photo capture what happened, and how we messed up, we stole the caves because we thought they were beautiful and didn't want them to sleep in bat poop all day and become infected with fumes. Oh okay now that makes sense. Who invented rats with wings anyways, that was stupid, so the mice were running around, and the crows, guilty bark at us trying to scare us still, because they ate the rats and made rats with wings, just like shamu ate a hammer head shark and made a blue whale, which don't exist anymore because of Sea World, affected wildlife production, the secrets of the deep sea, they eat eachother to make new animals, you messed up their test tubing bottom of the ocean sea made creatures, just like man improved by eating animals and developed organs like the animals they ate, lion hearts, snake brains, backs like wings, what exists and stays in the system, something new, why we can't eat sheep anymore. Bad luck shouts the film industry, sit and hold on like Knotts Scary Farm stop complaining, its not us, we draw in caves and explain that is our duty, war is not the answer to food.

#Economist Speech by Leslie A. Fischman

Any article produced online, serves a function to communicate an idea or a set of ideas that transpire to create a greater knowledge at some point in the future, to help direct thoughts towards avenues, built for peace like the City of Los Angeles. They just added two new white cones outside of Vicente Foods, thank you for acknowledging my 9/11 Theory, New York City just got warm with aw, how cute.

I first outlined the article then shared a few deductions outloud that came to mind while reading this article in particular, chosen because is of something of value to which concerns me, data management. When I first built my website it was because of computer loss, I wanted to archive and save my best work online, like a portfolio.

In the middle of everything, I built a new account on Facebook "mymollydoll blogging campaign" let's give this a second time a go, let you know I'm human not a machine, like all writers we experience burn out and always do our best to provide to our readers, but there is a limited understanding of our skills, and how acquired.

The benefits of research are tremendous toward self-discovery and oease within, why we have search engines such as Google, so that when an idea comes to mind we have a place to go to further that understanding or search for terms that befog us, that need clarifying or build better understandings within us, that's my philosophy. They grab the air around them, that's what we were thinking, I wink back.

The future is not clear for MYMOLLYDOLL a company that was once a Registered Corporation in California approved (2016) with stock certificates thanks #LegalZoom! How cute, my very own company. This is my first company, growth is apparent each year I write, always bettering myself everyday, like my Father has recommended to me, and don't throw Mom from the train she warns me, like the Movie: Mommy Dearest. Aw they're so cute. Going on a date tonight with someone I met in 2013, from Cornerstone OnDemand, defending two is tough, to keep moving forward, that's how I played the game, reflect no behaviors back, defend all.

Poignant Recall by Leslie A. Fischman

Poingnancy is what you choose to remember it is your selective recall of things that matter to you and which you find of evidentiary concern to prove your points to the matter who is guilty, innocent, and to blame for whatever purposes you think justified to hurt me, nothing will get done forward and I'm telling you that right now, and if you don't listen to me and are harmed that is not my fault, if you do not trust me or find me helpful than read something else. It is really no one's business for the reason's why I write it is to curtail violence in the community and around, and for those reasons and for those reasons only I write, what occurs outside of me, I have no control over, and it is never the victims fault. I am victim #1: 1994. If you choose so whatever clever to think that I put others in danger upon meeting me, justify crimes, in shock whether to, hurt others or not think to than you are in the wrong, clearly this is a very sound base station of rationale and good judgment, not for entertainment purposes, this is mymollydoll.com. Because there was such positive reaction to my stories I became #bloggingcampaign an entertainment campaign with no desire to work within, my dream is to live and work in DC since 2011. Work in the field of law not politics, there are the most lawyers per square footage in DC, where I should live. I was born in California, I love California, I could not get into schools in California, went to school in Colorado and have lived in California since, doing great! I'm not sure what the problem is, I'm not a side show, or a clown, or to be hurt.

How Does ESP Work by Leslie A. Fischman
10/31/17

I just washed my hands and typed the title after eating taco bell: 4 donuts and 2 taco supremes. Can you tell? There's a sudden tone change before any attack. There's deafness, followed by a heightened state of turmoil, oddities, and erratic retorts. This is a pattern to be studied and understood, how we react to environmental stimuli is so important, for us to always be in control of our emotions says the DA and not give into our environment, words spoken to us, or words read to self and out loud. What makes sense is only what feels certain and true, unique to you, and your concepts of reality at best suited toward your safety needs, is the voice you should listen to. We argued out loud at UCLA square, whether to reset by education is that what that's for, and hopscotch to stay centered. Well now we are in a different field, much akin to Shakespeare, whenever tragedy strikes, we have a duty to call upon our own minds for comfort not the minds of others, which often much too often lead us astray toward sides, we become then become defensive to says the DA. It is to your beliefs you hold true and evident, whenever someone is wrong, on its face it is shown, not to the faces of those who are offended. When one becomes offensive toward others that signals: (1) not liked (2) not trusted (3) seen as devalued or (4) not good enough to be valued or to write for mymollydoll.com, why not another girl? Well I went to school in a cubicle chaste 2003-2017 to present continuously studied, why I have built mymollydoll.com with success and of high virtue for self and others. That is considered God's work, when we help others selflessless, with no monetary award, that is a good effort, an effort well spoke, always without error.

Wealth Management Systems

By Leslie A. Fischman

Dissertation Prospectus: TJSL

10/29/17 (First Draft)

Wealth management systems reflect value placed on goods and services and the maintenance of those goods and services provided, and to whom. The structures provided to the individuals to whom those goods and services are provided to are who matter to both the representatives of those structures and to the systems created to support and provide to those individuals on a need by need basis, their interests served, their private interests disclosed, based upon their beliefs, what they choose to invest their time, money, and energy to, is their choice, [by] their recommendation, and the service[s] to be provided are [based upon, reflect] the structures created for them, such as banks. All of which play a role in creating a network of safety, trust, and value which every individual investor carries with them, to others, throughout their interactions with others, based upon trust. Trust can only be created when there is a higher volume of networks outside a smaller volume of individuals per unit, banking works like social media, very similar.

Being Apart of The Solution by Leslie A. Fischman

Being Apart of the Solution by Nobel and Pulitzer by Leslie A. Fischman

10/28/17

Everyone wants to be apart of the solution, that is a given, an opportunity to shine and an opportunity to lead, an opportunity to be given credit to and to make points. This is what we call achievement and sense of purpose, driven toward callings in life. It is to each his own, purpose chosen in life, we call callings in life, not to be chosen or driven by others, but chosen from one's own upbringings. It is not to be dictated nor narrated or read outloud or back or gifted to anyone by connection.

Commandments and Rules of Order to Set in Motion Good Purpose:

1. Thou shall not trigger hate toward any one group or individual.
2. Thou shall not steal nor identify with any one person's identity.
3. Thou shall not compare or privy a side to justify a side.
4. Thou shall not justify a side to make side stronger better than another.
5. Thou shall not make use of commentary to justify or shed light on ones own.
6. Thou shall write to explain and help strengthen not weaken another's side.
7. Thou shall not defame or otherwise dismember any persons or groups sense of selves or purposes in life or abilities and senses of agencies in life purpose.
8. Thou shall not interfere with the ability of others to achieve in life.

The Past and How AA Has Affected Me by Leslie A. Fischman

The Past and How It Affects Us by Leslie A. Fischman

It is our constitutional right to privacy to be protected from unreasonable searches and seizures, this includes unreasonable searches and seizures from our persons from our identities, our pasts. There is something therefore fundamentally flawed in the practices of the AA Twelve Steps that has since changed since 2011, the through inventory taken of my sexual history, fears, and resentments, which upon disclosure, lists created, created severe hardships among members of my inner circle who upon peer review, became bitter toward me, it was an assignment, not a heart felt write, or thought by me to write, but upon assignment written not by the times written, or felt to write, but upon assignment, that's what was not clear.

I think that all things personal shared out loud have the opportunity to be taken personally and all things said outloud, one person back to whom attachment made, upon reading bears: (1) resentment, (2) hardship, (3) animosity, (4) attitude, (5) lack of pleasure upon reading, (6) disbelief, (7) discriminatory retorts, (8) dissent, (9) defensive tone, (10) waiting for ammunition to sue, (11) looking for justification so thinks that suit was because of blogging, or texting, or suicide, no hole in the wall.

The Meaning of Jealousy and Personality Displacement by Leslie A. Fischman Discussion Inspired by Jimmy Fallon and Stephen Colbert on Twitter: Profile Photos
10/26/17

Jealousy Definition [4] “ ... feeling, disposition, state, or mood” on Dictionary.com is described in this way. (<http://www.dictionary.com/browse/jealousy>). I have selected this definition and focus for good reason.

A changeable state or disposition is what comes to mind when a jealous position is created in a person when looking at another, is what I first thought when jealousy the word jealousy came to mind, personalities and how they change too, or how personalities change when others are mentioned on Twitter, picked up.

I thought this was very interesting, I called it the <comedy code> when in reality it is called channeling I believe in acting when you see a character and then channel their character in yourself, and try to become them. Interesting, like putting on a suit replies Stephen Colbert quickly changes his Profile photo to a third account shows up, him in a suit, to the second profile photo of him kissing his wife. Aw, blushed.

Now shake off all characters and be you, how so? Write put my mind back in me. I think some people like to read books to separate self from reality or separate self from self and enter other worlds or minds of people too sometimes, or become others. I mean this is a new phenomenon or old, I'm not really sure if talked about.

The History of Railroads in California by Leslie A. Fischman

The History of Railroads in California by NBC News by Leslie A. Fischman
10/25/17

Quote:

“This project, the railroad, going through the mountains was the largest engineering project in the country at the time,” Hilton Obenzinger, associate director of the Chinese Railroad Workers in North America Project at Stanford University, told NBC News.”

<https://www.nbcnews.com/news/asian-america/150-years-ago-chinese-railroad-workers-staged-era-s-largest-n774901>

Much like railroads built in California by Chinese laborers, Social Media has experienced many changes since 2013, as evidenced through the changes underwent on Twitter 2013, via post advancements adding photos to posts and then to Facebook posts, who were the first to eliminate word counts, which were not replaced and kept on Twitter for good reason, to keep up the pace, of distribution.

There is a simplicity to distribution that is of significance to each media central, one by squares Instagram, one by press Facebook, and one by reel Twitter, each with its own voice and tone, feedback is given, one louder and some more encouraging than others, the most supportive networks I've found are: Instagram and Tumblr. The most advocate driven and vocal voices I've found are on Facebook most assembled.

Facebook is still in its development stages, pages are not yet assembled, as they should be, with the majority of tones on individual based distribution centers, and most distributions too from professional outlets which mainstream to us. Small businesses have since tried to include themselves, but have had difficulty sounding to us vocalize themselves over the tones of these more powerful companies in existence for longer who's voices are much stronger better suited for squarespace. Weebly, shopify, amazon, ebay, Shareasale, or spaces annexed to highly read sites, become an ad, not a site, may be the future for websites, to just become an ad on a site, is the future I believe for website, to make ads for themselves on existing sites.

It's like how I put a Facebook Ad on my mymollydoll.com in the column to the right. That was a cute idea. To send back following back to Facebook. That was a great idea actually now, looking back, but instead, took it down, because I wasn't sure what was going on, but I will look to see if Mark is on Shareasale, I don't think so.

Pages on Facebook are most helpful like a Wikipedia, to key focus ideas identity of a person, individual, or company slogans and main points for #bloggingcampaign and Leslie Fischman, get a first impression, a good first impression, background information based check if what in full does not make sense, get a summary.

The Pack Thickens by Leslie A. Fischman

10/25/17

For every solution, there is no ending but reversing of negatives toward positive endings, that is to undo hardships toward those offended by the luck toward others who reverse the luck toward themselves and their interests in life, not all is fair during times of war, when it comes to sides, beliefs, and who is who, and what is what, and what is why, and who is why, and what needs be, and why is why. That is understandable. It is cause for concern, when things and words are mixed around to communicate in a way to cause confusion or error of thought in the negative toward others, groups of people, or individuals, for their belief systems, or profession. That is not the proper use of communication, to sound better or smarter than, but one should always encourage the sharing of thoughts of others, better one another. That is the main purpose for communications not to be condescending or negative, but to supply information, that is helpful to coordinate thoughts in a positive direction. –We had a discussion in my car, which I said I would later clarify: (1) Clear (2) Confrontation (3) What is now considered Delusion i.e. Negativity. It is very commonplace to be non-accepting toward the value systems of those who carry viewpoints that do not match our own or who come from backgrounds we deem not deserving such as I 10 years of Law School, well deserved, worked hard for these skills in communication and writing, trained professionally self-taught how to write. This is my style of writing I developed over the years to communicate in my tone.

Plado What We Pick Up and Why by Leslie A. Fischman

10/25/17

It used to be that we picked up things that we were attracted to or that we could relate to or were similar [to our] interest[s] or to our liking, but things have changed. The process of learning is continuous, much like traveling, its impossible to be everywhere at once, its not humanly possible to be in multiple locations at once and to center one's self environmentally, read one's surroundings accurately, picture the thoughts of everyone. If we could maybe we would all better get along, but usually it is the case that we are who we are surrounded by or to whom we interact with. That is who we are most influenced by and from where our ideas or mindsets are affected and from where and to whom and why things or energies are picked up. It's not that we are purposefully experimental with one another, but we pick up from our surroundings, that is human nature, to read what is around us, whether through eye sight, reading or through our senses, whether from what is looking at us, or from what we are looking at, whether from within or from looking at ourselves from outside of ourselves, that is always a unique feeling, when we feel separate from ourselves. Why does that occur, such displacement of self, usually occurs when we feel odd or something is off, that is our body telling us that something is wrong, either around us or within us, maybe we need to shower, paint our nails, brush our teeth, comb our hair, simple things sometimes, tidy our room, organize our closets, fold laundry, do chores, who knows, get work done, read books on shelves we bought but have not finished 20 pages in like Guns Germs and Steel just to look smart. Whatever it is that makes you feel good about yourself is all that matters and stick to it, what you pick up is your choice, your intelligence, your right to privacy, your mind, your puttings together of your surroundings, your ability to think, and should not be dictated to you nor directed to you of what is the right way or wrong way to think, any way of thinking is acceptable says the US Supreme Court and all freedoms of expression through writing and so long as no harm to others is allowable, unless to do so causes harm to self or others, is frowned upon, <oh we get it> Sometimes people do not want to be included in minds, sometimes people do not want to be included in texts, Im doing my best, even given capabilities of mentions, I don't think necessary to utilize anymore, but at the time was really helpful, just like mail or instant messaging on AOL how else would we have contacted one another? It is through the assembly of good people that good ideas come to mind, and good people set forward into motion, good plans of action to further good in the World #HRW, its not just me, it was just one 25lb box to set forward something better (2013) Im sure they took care of us all, lets just have better faith that we should focus on ourselves and trust the Professionals in all matters related to lives saved.

Political Ideologies and Entertainment by Leslie A. Fischman

It is my belief that Politics are for leadership and for purposes of making sense of what is and what is not. That is for leadership purposes, to protect, preserve, and to provide for each other, systems of support, that bring people together not apart.

Entertainment is one system, stage and audience that has been built initially for this purpose, where there are performers, and there are audience members. Today we have blogging, where there are listeners and there are writers. Providers and consumers. Once any one thing is consumed, it is devalued, as not special. That is an unfortunate fact of life, that once something is said, it is understood, not new anymore. Anything that is shared, that has not been shared before, is not new.

In order for anything to continue to be built, new systems of support need be integrated in order for any one structure to be maintained, there is a great system called laws which have been built, I believe from the practice of medicine. Which came first? Medicine. There was illness, decisions were made (law) and people were helped (medically). That is where Law and Medicine came from, two professions (through the practice of maintaining one another, they evolved and so have we).

The Basis for Discrimination by Leslie A. Fischman

The Basis for Discrimination is Understanding (Key Point) by Leslie A. Fischman

10/25/17

The most basic point to any understanding is what is at difference between two things at odds or two things alike, that is what most basic people comprehend as composed of as meaningful interactions or points of things that constitute togetherness or apart, to bunch or to separate, to pile, compile, or separate.

Okay we have since evolved, I'm not trying to undermine that logic, but there are better ways to be accepting of people other than by denominations or by characteristics or how they identify by race color creed (religion) gender sexuality suicidal or not, these are not things that should matter to anyone we call all of these things as falling under one's right to privacy, anything that constitutes part of any one person's identity I would argue is their constitutional right to privacy.

For these reasons, I argue that when one's identity is used and mismanaged to argue rationale to denominate, or to rationalize why one is one way or not one way one day or the other or toward one person or not toward another or when one instance and not another whether having to do with race or sexuality has nothing to do with either has everything to do with flirting #France, why I left, flirting #France, why I left flirting #France, why I left flirting #France, why I left flirting #France, why I left.

I did everything to help this individual get the job, hired her, my Boss flirted with her, brought her to parties, favored her over me, put a sticker on my car, made me park in front of a Holocaust Museum, hostile toward me, put flyers up and down his Street when he let me go, and after she left him. After I got f-d on his couch. My job given to a company. I managed an #Airbnb 4 Million dollar home and a Paralegal.

Sheltered Minds by Leslie A. Fischman > [#mymollydoll]

Sheltered Minds (Pun to Movie: Dangerous Minds) by Leslie A. Fischman
10/25/17

There is no better solution to the war on terrorism than to shelter the mind from all things negative and create a positive environment from which thoughts can thrive. The best way forward is not to focus on negatives and not to talk about what it is that is bothering us so much so, and talk about what instead is: (1) what we are working on (2) what we are up to (3) what we are doing (4) where we are going (5) what we are planning to do (6) what we are doing (7) what we are thinking (8) what we like (9) what we want (10) what we hope (11) what we wish for (12) what we are thankful for (13) what we pray for (14) what we think can happen. Why not focus on possibilities rather than certainties such as history based logical assumptions, that is rather futile don't you think? I think not positive at this point. -I was thinking in my car driving down San Vicente, about two things: (1) faith based thinking, rationale; and (2) it will come back to me, memory. I have a very strong belief that when you (1) do as you are told (2) follow directions (3) do not question self or others, follow your instincts know the difference between right and wrong you make good decisions for yourself, and from those decisions luck is derived in the positive or the negative - good or bad. That is how you achieve good or bad luck. When it comes to memory "com[ing] back to me" when you achieve a strong handle on 1 thru 3 usually it follows that memory through faith based principles you will end up in your thought processes right back where you were thinking or started from or forget or right where you left off and remember, where you were. It's funny how life works out that way, when you are good, your gifts are given back to you. No matter how much alcohol, tries to interfere with your gift, if you are disciplined enough to refrain, your body will heal and your gift of higher ordered thinking will return, that was my hope.

Developing Value Systems by Leslie A. Fischman #Religion

10/24/2017

Developing Value Systems by Leslie A. Fischman

10/24/17

Anything of value, requires: tact, system support, backing, fundamentals, and bearings. What connects, and what is logically binding, adds weight, adds value.

Religion is a similar system of support that has been built. Built as a story base[d] syste[m]. Stories that were put together to build theory to base decisions from. Stories that ring true, that we can relate to, from which we value, adhere to and from which we understand, comprehend, and appreciate from where we come from.

Today, we have new stories, new hardships, new struggles, and new understandings, new ways of thinking, it only makes sense, that we require new systems of thought, and fundamentals, to bind, and systems of support to back.

There is no hierarchical privilege when it comes to leadership in systems of thought and religion, every thought that comes to us, is of importance, and every person who shares their thoughts is of significance, even the greatest thinkers, will always be remembered for having shared their thoughts, without whom, we would have had no guidance today, we will always love and appreciate them for their thoughts.

My favorites? Shakespeare and Plato and Kant. Plato because he was a philosopher namd after a planet Plato and Kant “I think therefore I am” and Shakespeare because he thought it was comical and dramatic to mix words around so dramatically in trying times that people watched and listened in aw and it was exciting and playful to hear him roar and his audience loved him for it and his actors for illustrating these stories in a way that was digestable to the times, and helpful.

#bloggingcampaign is a great place for everyone to start and provide systems of support for one another and a way for everyone to be apart of this journey forward as suggested by Barack Obama who was a very popular President Worldwide, other than my Real Estate Mogul President Pseudo Boyfriend President Trump who shares a love for Architecture the inside joke my house is now Yellow Fox News.

Being independent of others, requires a great deal of belief in one’s self first and foremost. Confidence comes from within, and that can only be achieved by sound decision making, through excelling both academically, and getting along well with others both professionally and socially, always be cordial with others, never fighting, that is how I am and always have been. Unfortunately once you become successful you attract a different crowd of people, a crowd I am not used to, and that is why I get suicidal, not used to being treated as something I am not, people treat you as something they want you to be like, so you become something you are not, so they can be better than you to try to take your place in life, and achieve more than you, well what is the point of that, to try to be me? That is impossible, there is only one of me, I cannot be replaced. I am only one, there is no one like me around.

Uniqueness of character is maintained through longevity of maintaining interpersonal relations with others as both an active listener and speaker. When at the top, it is difficult to socialize because one is unwilling to be like, and trying to maintain self and individualism of character, that is understandable, and something that people should recognize and appreciate about us, need for space, alone time. It’s not personal, it’s for professional reasons, I am a recluse, it is because I am a professional writer, very focused, not on reading others, but on the creation of new material, and new thoughts.

Over the Last Laughs by Leslie A. Fischman

11/01/17

When its over the last laugh, always goes to the victims, that is the correct order of lines drawn, lines of fault, lines of blame, and lines of truce, and matters certain. It is an unfortunate consequence of competition when others are quick to judge on false merits the merits rightfully earned by others who succeed in positions of trust such as myself, over a good laugh. That is never the correct purpose for decision making or reflective of sound rationale judgment but for personal purposes these lines are drawn, and indicate guilt within the pack to who provides such. Disney, as a stockholder since the 80s with a certificate on my wall has done everything possible to undo the consequences of hardship caused by The Simpson's Cartoon, came out with Beauty and the Beast, to defend my Father, maybe it happened that way. -I have attachment issues, because I am a victim of homicide and abandonment by my Mother in the 90s, so I have problems letting go, and thought my Father the same, why I committed suicide, I had not yet achieved success. I had to become a Forbes Under 30 Billion Dollar Asset online to understand homicide, and why my Father is innocent, professionals do not commit homicide when they have everything lose one person from their life, who they used to called "pea brain" or small minded. I take care of everyone now, my Father looks "pea brained" innocent and me the Forbes 500 Kid, who as a result of my suicide and 2OJS>waroverseas theory in West Hollywood he died too in 2009, we died together, as a result of one poor deduction. Why it was later shredded when I got out of the psych ward UCLA told me I was delusional, upon telling them I was in the middle of applying to Law School.

Casting Clowns by Leslie A. Fischman

Whenever something bad happens, the best remedy and recipe for success is positivity, remain positive says the FBI, that's the cure for mental illness. Upon all things negative only harm can result from those actions and the actions of others, its not words, but people who shed light on characters, and cast them over identities, like shrowds, to place blame, that is a natural human error, to misidentify positives.

Usually people who are negative, explains Greg Gutfield of Fox News, are by association related to something or someone negative toward someone positive. This occurs when an identity is made, a new identity, to shatter a founder of identities, positive, to claim status, is one way guilt is produced, usually shrowded upon the one from whom powers are given, and success is attained, influenced by.

Its for no one to misjudge the character of others other than court officials, they are always responsible for correcting the behaviors of those who have fallen sin. Trust that system, it is not the commoners job to reduce recidivism by theft upon one, a founder, it is clear to whom power is given, sources get cut from teams, that's very noticeable and understandable, no one ever wants to be found out a second to one.

Secondary Victims of crime are me, a Victim from 1994, a woman who was like a Mother to me was murdered. That is how we relate, #PrinceHarry, and on those grounds upon speeches given, that is the identity compared to #PrincessDiana, or maybe a #Kate Middleton of the #USSupremeCourt, new Grandma Queen: #JusticeGinsberg. A Matriarch system was formed by accident, much in the same way walking down a runway, he fell in love and had kids #PrinceWilliam.

It is only with permissions and acknowledgement anything well versed is accepted with tactical considerations for any one leadership position, trust is required, earned. Trust is earned when forthcoming, and announced, planned in advance. Peace is made through the expression of good interests, that's our Constitution.

The Quality of Comfort We Provide by Leslie A. Fischman

The Quality of Comfort We Provide by Leslie A. Fischman
11/15/17

The quality of comfort we provide is based on two things: (1) what we know and (2) what we see. For all things known if made certain, than this is the comfort that has been provided, what is to be trusted, is only what is to be believed, never stop questioning yourself and others, it is by (1) observation and (2) intellect that any (3) trust can be achieved. That is based upon (1) how things are built and (2) how things are categorized. Always be in control of the obvious assumptions, to lay any one future forward positive.

Good can only occur, by the strikings of rights, occurring in any one period of time. That is how future is buil[t], but upon trust, is the only way forward, which times should we focus on, the best of times, or the worst, that is for [the] people to decide, which era knows best. When any [one] thing becomes unstable, the best way forward is to focus on the positives, not the negatives, that is how instability occurs, obviously, by focus on negatives.

Always have faith in your abilities to achieve, nothing great or successful every came easy, and those who second guess, are some of the most careful decision makers in time. We call them builders, they build (1) foundations (2) layers and (3) engineered scapes [or spaces]. That is how trust is built and that is how trust is achieved, through architecture, first in the mind, then on paper, and then we see, who is to be trusted, and who is to be ignored, [success is not nor never accurately measured by sums].

I never believed in the silent treatment, it never made sense to me, sometimes the greatest minds, occur during times, when the most backs are turned, on one, that must be how positivity is achieved, through disbelief, and beliefs, the constant push and pull, between the past and the present, and the constant depth required to predict the future, that is a [or the] basic [or basis for the] [omit and] natural human struggle, to be (1) prepared and to (2) predict the future.

There is no recipe for psychic gifts, this I've thought long and hard about, a gift I wish I had. I had to go to so much school to be a careful decision maker, and trusted #[I]nfluencer. Money brings cushion, but education is the best trust created, for all things equal.

#snapchat (Speech) by Leslie A. Fischman
11/15/17

As a general consensus. We all agree we are much too late to build the Internet but do our best, replies #SnapChat, one of the first Tech Giant Apps in the Game, a new idea, based off a few ideas, of good omen, a great study of a study in trauma & PTSD. Anything based off a good idea, or a good thinker, will always render positive results, that is the other case, that it is never too late to try, communications, all are best, never one at fault, but the when the dissent is too quiet, the obvious occurs, war. Whether snapped, or beckoned, or reversed when called upon by a man in a vest who shouted back in my face that I was weird, a Lyft was sent, two bouncers to calm me down, after shutting myself out in the back room to write, like being backstage, at a show. Everyone watched, only one complained, just like in front of Peet's Coffee, for some reason my odds are a million to one when a speech is given, there is always one who shouts at my face or from behind my back, disagrees. That is normal, not something I fear, Ive studied many case, I write to appease three sides always, the opinion, (i.e. general consensus = "we're too late") and the concurring and dissenting opinions I always anticipate beforehand while writing for everyone.

Thank you #BungalowSM = My next goal is to remain 1 year sober, keep trying.

Our mediators last night ADR specialists were two bouncers, thank you! Be good, I will, here forward, says Barack, move forward, you got it babe, into the trees, I go.

Chapter 11: Online Interactions by Leslie A. Fischman

Chapter 11: Online Interactions by Leslie A. Fischman

Once you build a relationship online, that lasts, that relationship exists forever, documented, endures expectancy (11/13/15, Twitter). Chemistry is built on trust, recognition and value of one another's strengths, nurturing one another's weaknesses, and feeling important (11/27/15, Twitter). I'm the kind of person where no one ever rarely takes my side always jumps first to argue the winning side even if on the other (12/25/15, Twitter). I support the restoration of values on the internet and positive change in music, film, and television for Bradybuzz, as a community service, I produced the hashtag #bloggingcampaign which is operated under CA Corporations Code, Registered under MYMOLLYDOLL by Leslie A. Fischman, a individually run corporation, I founded Summer 2013, while watching CSPAN, after hearing Barack Obama's "golly" speech. Thought of the lyrics "good golly miss molly" and changed my name online to MYMOLLYDOLL. My indicating ownership of self, and my indicating future ownership battles, claiming title to the ideas shared from this title created by me: mymollydoll.

#bloggingcampaign was retitled with help from the President of Brady Campaign LA, over a Starbucks Coffee meeting we had Summer 2016. #BradyMusicCampaign was the first hashtag I created November 2015, after the Founders of Brady Campaign passed away, wanted to help create a cause, where something other than guns would be talked about. As a certified crisis hotline counselor from Boulder, CO since 2004, this is the idea I came up with, and entertainment based campaign, for good cause, after writing a Motion for World Peace August 2013. I've come this far, and don't plan on stopping at any point soon. I have an excellent track record, going into this Campaign created by me, and nothing thus far has interfered with my progress, other than my own decision making. Why I am sober, clean, and celibate since 2014, a virtue I maintain Professionally, to keep a clean slate, while promoting ideas for World Peace to share.

Life goes on. Do not blame others for your misfortunes in life shortcomings or hardships, you are always a product of the choices you make (6/24/15, Twitter). No one is expected to help you in life and if they do offer to help you usually they are just being nice open to conversation or interaction with you (6/30/16, Twitter). Why is that? Some of the most successful people in life are those that help others or provide a business or service that does, know others well (6/30/16, Twitter). Successful people are some of the most understanding, genuine, naïve, and sensitive people you'll meet in life. Know that don't overwhelm them (6/30/16, Twitter). Don't be intimidated by the successes of others they too were once beginners in life –so they understand you're struggling learning still (6/30/16, Twitter). Suicide is an option not a choice, caused by those who do not believe in you, just ignore them, allies are few and plenty, when it comes to success.

On rare occasions are we given the opportunity to communicate on neutral grounds, it is at these times we should be thankful for both what is helpful and or of no use but relevant nonetheless. Be grateful for those who share their stories. Without purpose to harm anyone or be benefited themselves in doing so but because it helps shed light on something, a situation, or present circumstance in a way we would not otherwise see had they not shared given their insights into how and why these crimes occur and what has been done to stop them. We have done everything we can and we will continue to do everything we can which includes improving upon our systems of communication crisis response and timing of such responses and prepare those who are new to change how best to cope with the present times not live in fear but understanding of the basic ebbs and flows of human progress and communicate effectively with one another in a way that fosters development not stifle one another's growth. We will continue to do our best to implement new sources for coping, provide resources, and strengthen existing strategies while trying new means of communicating once those previously used means cease to be effective in combatting terror. We have few resources when limited and many when we act as one. You can choose to continue disagreeing or realize once you turn on one you turn on all. Now's not the time for criticism. Now's not the time for complaint over selfish needs. Now is a good time to work diligently. Be prepared everyday for the next and do your best to contribute to the safety of those around you not put anyone on our soil in harms way because you think deserved or not your problem. Make it your problem to keep one another on track and do what you can in order to promote that positive development in one another. I will do my best to improve. Be strong. And continue providing services online to those in need. I'm sorry for your losses I wish there was more I could do, but I have to be cautious not erratic and be Professional which requires me to process, produce, and proceed slowly so that in the event of an emergency we can all proceed swiftly. That's how you prepare one another by adhering to basic standards of professionalism. There are rules and requirements for good reason you either choose to dismiss or follow. If you are harmed as a result of not sticking to those rules and scripts than we apologize if our services are of no value to you we can only help those who honor and respect those traditions we hold dear. Our set of laws that bind and protect our best interests – Goodnight everyone. (Moms Demand Speech, Given 11/12/17).

If you understand others learn first and great at learning understanding concepts and risks well you are then fit to lead a high-risk campaign (5/15/16, Twitter). Whenever there is a terrorist attack we all have a shared responsibility to respond and mend what ties we have not burn bridges (11/13/15, Twitter). MYMOLLYDOLL is a Campaign for Campaigns as stated on my APP Mission Statement (On APP Founded 2016). To have no enemies in life requires tact and self-restraint to know wrong from rights as well as ones own weaknesses not bestow onto others (5/26/16, Tumblr). –Good things come to those who least expect it, those who try the hardest despite the odds, face the most challenges in life, but always feel anyways that life is worth trying for, any life is worth trying for that matter. Always with purpose I led my life, positive purpose. In life people will create problems for you based off their own problems. Don't allow other people's problems to become your own. Always put the interests of others before your own, life selflessly, that's the most positive route to success. The harder it is to turn your life around, the less likely others will expect the most from you, and the more likely they will expect the worse from you, be led by your choices not the expectations of others, near or far. People rarely surround themselves with problems, when to do so causes negativity within or toward others, be someone who represents your best interests first to be accepted by others, more often than not. As negative people are generally avoided, as of or concerning themselves for the most part, with a higher likelihood of being problematic to association, why disassociation occurs, when problems arise, to diminish chances of failure, by deleting those who face odds, from positions of trust, a fair trade off, why dismember one, when one can dismember oneself, that's an even fairer trade off. It's not about what you write that counts its how you write, what's important to you in your life. To be accepted as honest, stay on topic, the more you jump around from issue to issue, the higher your likelihood as being misunderstood as mentally ill, or problematic, retarded, not capable of helping others and making a positive difference, but appear disoriented, the slower you talk the better, the more you write the better, that's how one is most clearly perceived, by length of verse and shared thought patterns, for proper interpretation and measure of intelligence, accurately understood, accurately interpreted. –Nobody is perfect and nobody expects you to lead any one but yourself, never all, unless you are President of a Country, therefore no expectations can deem guilt, but by the expectors, have no one to blame but themselves for their expectations, visualize failure and you will achieve, cut your losses, and worse adverse to fears of failure, that differentiate those who find success, and confidence in life, from those who don't and have yet to achieve. Matter most to yourself first to avoid suicide, than put others interests before your own, that's how one fails, easily misguided by fears of others. –Nothing comes easy in life, and anything that looks simple took a great deal of care and attention to detail to achieve. Nothing good lasts, when you are running on full steam, the only life that can be appreciated is when one is at rest and has time to observe, those in motion are the most susceptible to harm, and put in harms way, the catch 22 of focus. How do you consciously make an effort to decrease risks during times of over focus, to focus less on yourself and others, and stand back in time and see through your hardships, and appreciate now and the life you have, not what is missing, that's recipe for disaster. You steer the course of your life best lived in which no parties feel harmed or dismemberment upon interaction with you but positive results.

Ch. 10: Understanding Questions & Responses by Leslie A. Fischman - Positivity (Speech)* - Completed

Chapter 10: Understanding Questions and Responses: Positivity

By: Leslie A. Fischman

11/11/17

Whenever something is stated, certain prompts come to mind, as to what each statement concerns:

That's not it
Expectation of replied replied
Waiting for reply when it occurs
Reply given is what's expected
What's expect is what's expected
What's generated is what is heard
What is heard is what is stated
What is stated is what's understood
What's understood is what's assumed
What's assumed is what's heard
What's heard is what's known
What's known is what's thought
What's thought is what has
What has is ones side
Ones side is ones beliefs
Ones beliefs is ones intuition
Ones intuition is ones expectation Ones expectation is ones interpretation and ones assumption
What's heard then if matches equals feels good or bad or off putting then equals correct sound right or wrong

Whenever something negative is stated or whenever there is an expectation and reply waited for in anticipation to - the (a) reply given is with knowing the expectation had given in reply to knowing. (b) affected, influenced in some way.

Positivity

If you taint an image you must repair that image at some future point or at the time being w/a positive representation prior, or just fix yourself, for whatever it's worth 2003 was not my shining moment. -

Lifestyle (definition) a way of life that produces positive functioning & satisfaction in life provides basic needs & helps you achieve goals. Everyone's definition of fulfillment is different some demand more or less depending on what their goals in life are. All of which are based upon the standards we set [for] ourselves high or low depending on the level of importance that need provides. I set very high standards for myself why I'm a Leader not a Follower no matter where I go or who I'm with, unless I choose to relax. In order to relax I must trust my surroundings.

There are energy givers & receivers in life. It's the energy givers who's energy gets poisoned that makes them volatile be then they repel. Energy which replenishes comes from without not from about and in due time these positive changes arise from positive reinforcement [[Assemble – to-Do] I think the alone time is good. There needs to be a bond (trust) then I'm good with you in groups no one can interfere w/my confidence. Positive and negative thoughts can be foundation for positives ITS IMPORTANT ONLY TO SEE THROUGH THE NEGATIVES TO SOME + THAT + IS YOU.] - "turning a positive into a negative" - A CENTRAL PERSON OF INTEREST TO "hit up" for daily opinion thoughtful prose INTENDED TO HELP YOU VALUE WOMEN as leaders too. - THEORY (WOMEN IN GANGS): That hitting on 1 chick ("running a train on her") will make her stronger.]

This is the most difficulty I have experienced in my life getting along with another usually get along well with others. I took your feedback along the way, way too personally, way off base to be threatened by anything or anyone, and cold toward you. You are the one patient enough to help me. I'm really sorry for days I have been sick not motivated giving up not being appreciative happy like when I started work excited enthusiastic and positive outlook. I don't know what happened. I'm really sorry I disappointed you or if I offended you in any way or felt like a waste of time, I am lucky to receive guidance from you in the right direction. I just want to work, I'll clean houses, help everyday in the office and work for my Parents until I stay 100% no relapses. Really disappointed with myself. I'm sorry I embarrassed you or Bag Fund as a whole.

You first submission, it's never pre-planned. When you are looking to achieve a goal in life it just happens. Life happens to those who make an effort, beyond what is considered normal, excel beyond expectation, those are the ones who become successful. When you fear you are at your worst, chances are your best is only a few steps away. The moment you give up hope, is usually when you take your first step back. The future you see is only what you know, if what you know is not clear, you can always see through the lense of another, from what they know see more clear. This is why no one's perspective should dominate, if combined perspectives enable us to see the future more clear, a combined positive will create a better future, if what we see becomes, if what we know is, if what will be can only be if what we see is positive. If positive can be achieved best combined, then combined perspective is best, reduce the percentage of negativity seen moving forward, the greater the likelihood for positivity to occur, the greater the percentage of positivity seen, if combined.

People will try to get you to say or explain –rationalize behavior and things that you say as having some purpose to benefit you or others, - deemed with necessity to provide closure. There is no closure. People think by their experiences. They are more knowledgeable or know best by confidence. That comes from within or without. Who always knows better? You the writer or those affected. Reading is at will not a requirement not important for me to be heard at this moment in time, or the point this was written, was just trying to make a positive difference.

Coming up in life isn't always easy. It takes a lot of hardwork, dedication, commitment, adherence to values, positivity, focus, purpose, and perseverance. We call that guts, knowing the difference between right and wrong, facing challenges head on, self-growth, and taking risks in life (while guided, supported, and supervised by those who care for us) whether in public or private, performing well under pressure is often a prerequisite for success. Milestones, setbacks, or failure one must continue to achieve in life in order to become successful. Maintaining a good track record, being professional, are required to create new opportunities for yourself in the future. When one door closes another one opens, so long as we have faith in ourselves, our abilities, listen to others, respect one another, everyone has the opportunity to follow their dreams. Main Point: Overcoming learning disability has been one of the greatest achievements I've made in my life. Learn from your mistakes, and build a better future for yourself, easy does it, one step at a time. #Sober guide us along. We move fast. When moving Fast in the wrong direction it is extremely noticeable to everyone but when we are moving in the right direction others follow. May not have it all. I may not have found success in the Work Force in a PAID position but I've found success day in & day out for years. Success is built from Trust. Trust is earned not given. I'm not the most Famous person. But I'm Popular online. W/that comes Responsibility.

When people are working hard and there is some strong cohesion among us and positive consensus opinions to

Responsibility requires you to be a Leader in thought. To help make people feel stable when under attack trying to affect out stability. Do not allow others to impede negatively on your personal growth, we are not Actors we are Human, therefore in control at all times. It is important not to blame others when things do not work out for you personally whether you are right or wrong it only makes you look bad. That is the exact purpose for which people try to get under your skin bc your success interferes with their happiness & ability to succeed

That is unfortunate when others cannot be happy for another but only try to interfere w/the happiness & success of another to their advantage. It is to their advantage to succeed in breaking down something positive & turning them into a negative so that they appear better feel greater than. One of the most important things I've learned in Sobriety is to appreciate how fortunate I am in life & not to be easily affected by those who are not. In order to not be easily affected requires a certain degree of maturity & consistency in thought, demeanor & decision making skills demonstrated.

It is most advantageous for us to step aside under those circumstances and not fight & just allow them to shine. It was to my Detriment to step aside & let another Shine at work in Century City, she was from France, I interviewed her and assisted with the hiring of her, choosing our firm to work for over other paid positions offered to her, she mentioned upon asking. -But I know if valued appreciated & worth it -I'll get the paid position one day. People who Blog are very shy about sharing their Blog with others. It's not something you talk about. Bloggings not Taboo, but like being a Journalist,so to not make people uncomfortable keep everything in its natural state you don't say much Sometimes it takes time for two People to be in similar places in their lives in order to do well together both on a upswing. Blogging occurred while I was on a Downswing coming up and others have already come up, watching me as I maintained momentum, to where? I was just writing my thought outloud. Sometimes I feel like I need to catch up in life, as though my loyalty to others is in constant question, second guessed as a: traitor, a follower, or someone worthwhile getting to know, and hear me out -I've always been a loyal companion, always a source of positivity, never a source of negativity, and someone who can be relied upon, a trusted companion and friend in life. -New material everyday??? Everyday. Okay. -Learn to let go in life & don't hurt over your losses just make us Stronger. After computer loss, I was so devastated. But I just need to move forward schedule a MacBook Appointment with @applenws and let them put together the pieces.

The Internet (Description)

Living in the Abstract describes life Online, when you are distant from Reality and in Dream mode. It's normal to want to get away. Be patient w/yourselfes. Why is the Internet so Abstract. Because when you log on and log off you decide where you spend your time in between not routine, changes. Abstract, because it's easy to get carried away Online, time goes by fast. Probably why people enjoy being online it helps pass the time. Learn to let go of your fears in life there is always a window of missed opportunity that exists when your insecure. Carpe Diem Seize the day. Everyone stay calm. -----Don't be so easily offended and give time to allow problems to resolve themselves & clarity to arrive.

Don't miss opportunities in life taking your time or pre planning how you want things to be just be whether perfect or on track, live for the moment. It is to my readers beneficial interest, I write, not to my own best interests as this is an APP & online Newsfeed. An Original Composition.

The times call for us to respond. All monies aside, it does not matter to me whether or not I make money writing only to help those in need. As a Writer I am challenged to come up with new material everyday since 2013. Assembling a Book is a matter of need, monetary need. -First ... The goal is to make sure everyone has someone to talk to everyday a #FriendService Online for those in need. #Facebook

Once that need is met ... And I find stability writing online like I have now. -Now I can continue to provide a Service & Produce on the side. Which means...To continue to write everyday online as promised by my APP, & write a Book on the side that Summarizes the contents of my APP. To the Entertainment Industry ... I keep an ongoing daily Memoir Online. They utilize in Producing Film, Television, & Music for Everyone. Keeping a Journal is nothing new to me, I've kept a Diary since I was 5 years old, filling up Journals front to back Writing my Thoughts. An Original Composition Broken up into pieces. It is more work for me as a Writer to Produce Online than at home in Private.

Remember, there's no such thing as a Stupid question. Just avoid the negatives & stay positive, positive thoughts prayers breed what? Positivity. In life ... Always best to learn how to be a Team Player not Co-Dependent and not Self-Serving and Diplomatic & Professional not Casual. I feel like they expect me to be something I'm not. Successful people work. Why I'm successful online bc I'm Sober & I don't go out. Usually when one has a lot of positive energy they go out&socialize I stay home bc I then drink or do drugs & go back to Square One #LostTrust

I think bc I'm a strong person it gets mistaken as though I'm trying to lead or take charge or be number one, no just feel equal blend in. Yes ... I have to try this hard to achieve happiness in life, be well liked, and blend in. Most people don't need to try this hard to break even in life. But it's worth it now I'm glad I tried bc now I can @Bradybuzz Online. Help. Everything else is up for interpretation. Your belief systems are your choice. I just choose to share mine, which are mostly general.

Life occurs on its own timing not always your best timing why it's important to be flexible be spontaneous & take chances in life, have Faith. Having Faith means knowing the difference between right & wrong & trusting that if you do what's right for you & others good will come. One does not require others to have Faith in them in order to be successful have Faith, to require others to would be Selfish on our Part. It is not required for others to have Faith in us in order to be successful have Faith, to require others to would be Selfish on our Part. All that is required of us is to have Faith in ourselves to achieve some purpose greater than ourselves by giving back & not be a burden. When we overburden others with our troubles we can be draining best left to Professionals for Feedback, & we become vulnerable insecure. To not be draining always make certain that what you share about yourselves strengthens your good character not weaken you sense of self. Sharing & ability to strengthen your good character not weaken occurs once you have processed on your own or w/Professional guidance. Friends make great sounding boards when we are not sure of ourselves or what is troubling us they help point out what we can't see yet. Example: I was so caught up beating myself up I missed my #Facebook Birthday wishes which would've turned me over faster back to the light. Why Friends make great sounding boards. When we can't see positive it's important to look towards those who can.

I think everything happens for a reason. Now that makes sense to me. It's important to always be proactive like me. Everything you do either helps or injures your ability to move forward if you keep worrying about the past you'll never meet future goals. If you stop worrying about right now so much you'll get closer to meeting your daily goals to get to where you see yourself in the future. -You only have one life to live make the most of it, no life worth living is worth living in regret enjoy every moment the good and the bad.

Positivity Speech by Leslie A. Fischman (Written: 10/31/15, Twitter)

Do not be deceived, success cannot be achieved without first recognizing failure either by oneself or others how we prevail survive, succeed. Failure occurs when while one attempting to achieve success fails to meet the standards required to excel and minimally meets expectation. Not all failures are viewed upon with the same degree of abhorrence as that who fails [to] reflect upon themselves to achieve, we see forward beyond failure. Why waste time loathing in failure stirring up negative emotions and giving in to sin that carries no momentum for us forward. No shortage of values and good character results from the wrongs of others but only by our own wrongs do we limit our satisfaction in life.

All dialectical considerations need be made where poison that thrusts so deep we rot in sin blinde to causes for which we feel emptied shot. These truths we hold certain for that which grows in sullen sanctity of the fruits we bear blinde folded devalue with consideration we stifle. How can we see positive buried in negativity to the blinde masses we fold and shake with dishonesty lie until our teeth yellow with shame.

We lean not to anyone under circumstances where trust cannot be made we shriek and cry helpless when we lean on anyone but ourselves co-dependent. Independence is the key ingredient our forefathers have lent to us to achieve peace from within amongst ourselves only achieved by consensus.

Be not who you think you should be but be all that you can be with the World at your disposal, harm no one help only when able to help oneself. We map when lost when our tools for success are broken we build new tools, hand off to those in power to build a new for us to thrive positively. Communication without consensus can bear no cohesion necessary for positive life skills achieved if blinde in darkness we rot and drown lost.

Lost Essay (Peet's Coffee) August 2017 by Leslie A. Fischman

There is no such thing as being lost. So long as you are doing your best to better oneself everyday. Then there is no reason for one to feel lost. The feeling of being lost occurs when you either lose direction and purpose in life as a result of choices made, or possibly because one is misdirected in life. Whatever the course, it is our own responsibility to get back on track. We establish the points of reference from which decisions are made by us and we are responsible for the judgments passed about is, based on what we put out there. If what you see becomes, similarly what other project onto you may become, but only if you allow yourself to be controlled by others. Self-fulfilling prophecies occur in one or two ways (1) how you see yourself; or (2) how others see you. You are always in control.

Trustworthiness by Leslie A. Fischman (Definition of, triggered by Attorney JWS in passing) 12/26/12

Cannot be trusted means to me that someone has something to hide, or one who does not fully disclose or withholds or lies, or misleads, the opposite of cannot be trusted to me means honesty and open-ness, right or wrong for better or worse, without hesitation or fear of another's interpretation or mis-interpretation but in trust in another which is reciprocal by another's point of view, but speaks when clear and when not clear not able to speak clearly and disciplined. Cannot be trusted to me means that gaps in ones statement cannot be filled by any words which would otherwise render the persons worth, irreparable, and rendering something of value worthless by the words of another. Somewhere in this I forgot where I was going with this. Even if someone answers a question wrong or does not answer it in the way one wants the question to be answered does not render someone untrustworthy, but maybe someone who is trying their best to speak without error, so better to speak less, and work harder as a granule of sand than tr[y] to be anything in life they are not but only what they are capable of, and what is learned from direct experience and exposure, not sure where I was going with this but just writing from the heart, what other people think matters to me, call that stupid but it does. I guess that's what makes me immature, the opposite of mature, perhaps my biggest defect, or another way to look at it means hat awareness is important to me, another way to look at it, in the positive.

WIIDC Personal Statement

By Leslie A Fischman

11/11/17

I am currently establishing a Corporation online as a Masters in Law Student, and Blogger online, who seeks to combat gun violence via fashion and quotes published online by me daily, for entertainment purposes. I am in need of leadership training in the arena of public speaking and display of issues, for comprehension, among my audience, members of groups traumatized by recent events, concerning causes of death and violence onland and how to help online. –I am in the process of completing my LLM Dissertation in International Law, Risk Management and Compliance, as a current Volunteer for Moms Demand, and previous volunteer to a Crisis Hotline in College.

I have always wanted to make a positive difference, and it is through my writing I shine best, nominated as Best Integrated Campaign at the Shorty Awards 2016. It has never seemed impossible to me, to change the course of discussion, by helping others to focus on the positives in life, that is my upbringing as Sydney Simpson's best friend since age 4. It is through that experience and loss, I have gained strength, and been able to help others similarly situated online, cope with trauma and loss.

I applied to WIIDC Summer 2011 and got the job at DC Law Students in Court, but was unable to attend that Summer. Given the changes I underwent after leaving Law School, I needed time to myself, to reconsider what my life objectives are and how to make those life objectives a reality, by trying again to live and work in DC for the Summer, to see if this is where I belong, in law not politics, in a trusted environment to learn and grow, attain skills, which I can apply to my jobs in the future, wherever they may be, here in California, or anywhere for that matter alongside Moms Demand and Brady Campaign whom I've supported for years since leaving Law School, upon original recommendation by WIIDC Fall 2012, when reapplying.

It took me a long time to gain enough the strength and courage to return to the workforce, while managing my time as an LLM Student and Blogger online, perfecting my image, and for admission back to the workforce, without hostility, from other Professionals, who do not understand my campaign, what for, its purpose, or for who for that matter. Whatever tools I had, I used, and that is the campaign that was created unplanned. The reactions of others I have no control over, but it is what I do at the present that matters towards the future possible for me to achieve, and can only be achieved while helping others, that has always been my prerogative in life, and will never change, no matter what the circumstances may be.

MYMOLLYDOLL (Yooco)

By: Leslie A. Fischman

11/10/17

Welcome to MYMOLLYDOLL. Here is where I plan to collect my best work and share what is important for me moving forward, while helping others to move forward. I have tried many different systems of support while coping with mental illness, however, none of which seemed to address the topics which were causing me and those around me illness, conspiracy and sudden death, and death by drugs and alcohol. To combat this issue, not punish those who have been harmed and may come across as mentally retarded or not the brightest, we should as a society do our best to strengthen the good characteristics that bind us, while selectively discouraging those characteristics we abhor or find troublesome by simple ignoring and/or not shedding light upon the negative, by instead focusing on more positives to produce more positive outcomes overall. What you see becomes and everything you project onto others is an effort to manipulate and or change their disposition in life toward you or others toward them, you are responsible for those reactions which manifest themselves in social interaction healthy, unhealthy, safe, unsafe, and if necessary and proper to do so, report whenever misconduct or foul play is apparent on its way or inviting it where it need not be, that is my duty, to protect, and ensure the safety and well being of those around me, I learned this at work, The Government is responsible for doing so and I support them.

The poorness of guilt [from those who violated privacy live in masters of sinful tide]
In our salty clementines of taverns raid [because they thought you incompetent to lead]
Of heavens scent sought[, like blinde drivers abound]
What words are so created but equal in time[, do sound]

Historians sent, back to time we go [first come first serve]
Like lemons on a tree or oranges to Pluto [they went]
How does one behold on earth we stand [cradle to grave ship to shining sea]
True and correct our virtues have been told [no story left aback, just tears & crowns]

We search and we waver wands like clones on trees [spiritual gifts and bookstores gone]
Branches to light did shatter a million dreams ago [bonsai trees and gack on holes to bottoms]
How hath one stark lithographs upon shelter [like shedding light or sifting sand on dynamite]
We shrwod in peace a sorrow lament, lamentos anyone? [another hospital lets doll this one too]

When clues upon clues so did highlight [like a scene from a movie]
We wandered and sulked and pointed like clay molds [when she cha cha chias we'll cry]
What cave ballerina, wandered into a hold, and so spiraled left [and stood center stage anyways]
Anything but a dream, two ends on books, to comprehend [negative upon negative Kodak cries]

What links and crickets like bees to a hive [no network recalled, one built in its place]
Is one networks sorrow a hall of one [we left aside, and clicked and cried to one instead]
Never grip the reigns to anything but solid [knocking reindeers down, to replace all with one]
And so did foil one after the other without but one award [never a pariah never a hero just a site]

We listen to these cravings like beams upon beams [my life unfolding like switches I fell]
Sheltered and clouded and spun around like webs [from box to box until we launched]
They shout and cry hand in hand and surround the moon [a driver, perhaps?]
Back in the sky, never fallen, just a dream to be surrounded by [by whom, by you, lifeless safe]

When left to one's own guns, what did become [plants and gardens we sang and we cried]
Like a Christmas tree they surrounded the moon [just like instruments made and songs of mankind]
Your gifts within them, and upon us they see looking up [to what teacher be told, the bellies of sin]
But what glass and letters in the ocean, did monsoon [books after books, but one left untold]
Nothing but a cricket and a false evolution, they feared [my highest piano lesson row row row your boat]

What comes up must come down, first to the star I climbed [when you get here think this not that]
And with tethered might hit face with comfort [swung round the pole, and smashed me, hold tight]
They bagged me, and showed my knees to clay with all their might [Jail 4 times, for what? Sins of hollow]
And when I stood unsounded the wind, and blew one cloud [Your aura cleansed roomed with whom? Bi]
Like a train in the sky, they appeared, boxcar children to whom [Don't chatter their minds, be yourself]
To us they cried, never give up, when one branch breaks another will bloom [displaced ethnicity changed]
Like serpentines in the sky, surrounding one bloom, to wither and wane [hath love love me not is why].

Not by obsessions, no obsessions rarely get you far in life, but cause misfocus and loss of direction when the oneself, is how you tether the might of negativity, rise above, and become well known, nuanced, indifferent to causes, stand your ground, and everything positive that reverberates from you core and center, mimics and reflects those peaceful and positive sentiments, illustrates a positive core: truthful not fabricated, real, not make believe.

How People Treat You by Leslie A. Fischman (#PresidentTrump)

How People Treat You by Leslie A. Fischman
11/09/17

How people treat you is a reflection of themselves. I've been told that, but never quite understood it that much. How people feel has much more to do about them than you, always remind yourself of that upon interaction with others. When someone treats you like a piece of $hit, it has much more to do with their own unhappiness in life, and less to do with you, always remind yourself of that. –As I reflect on this past year, and my interactions, I realize that I could have done better, and wish that I would have handled things differently. But under pressure there are certain things you can't control, your reactions and the reactions of others, sometimes things must occur naturally in order for any learning to provide itself to us, for the futures sake. A lot of learning comes through our experiences, not just our interactions with others. You learn as you go. This makes more sense as you get older, the more interactions you have the better suited you'll be to react properly given any circumstances in life, and given any experiences you may have.

I relapsed a few nights ago, after maintaining 7 months of sobriety continuously, I first got sober 2003, and go out a few times a year, not a big drinker, but abstain. I threw up in a bathroom stall at the Bungalow, and did the hokey pokey, like a scene from the Movie: The Social Network, but alone. Sometimes we think that art imitates reality, and sometimes later on reality imitates art, such as movies, but my life is not a movie. That is understood, kind of takes the fun out of things, for startups, as though everything happens in that fashion, from idea, to highs, to reality, to fathoming the consequences of our creations. In social media there is a lot of responsibility when it comes to assembling networks of people, a lot of responsibility.

#southkorea: Speech Follow-Up by Leslie A. Fischman

We cannot move backwards we can only move forwards from this point on. They know their Country best. Just like I know California best, drove to Palo Alto Spring 2013 (February) and now we have Silicon Beach. For a long time they just couldn't give up the punch line from Clueless "highlight here" and created Silicon Valley. That joke has now been put to rest. I applied to 200 jobs 2015 and got 3 interviews in Century City and 1 interview in the Valley for a Marketing Job. Everything is pre-situated already, jobs, success, and monetary confinement of individuals we deem worth it, and those professions who need to try harder. It is for those reasons I think MYMOLLYDOLL turned out to be such a huge success online, very likeable. My traits are based upon my education and my background, how I was raised: Catholic, Jewish, Asian, Israeli, Ukranian, and Russian –was my upbringing. My Grandfather Lewis Fischman an LT in World War II saved everything, an Accountant, I remember and so I followed suit during times of war, and have a storage unit to boot. Lacie can save some things, but everything hard worked for, I kept, including all the research composed for my Witkin Award, which is two boxes long. Printed and saved as proof of my hardwork and discipline, and love for school. That is my heart.

#foxnews: Negotiations (Speech) by Leslie A. Fischman

11/07/17

"Censorship of Twitter" is no new subject, and to many Americans, we now see why. Like many Countries, English overseas is a huge problem, and cannot be undone. This is more than a language barriers problem, but a problem with the globalization of the English Language, and religious institutions failing, under the sights of technology who is ill prepared for disaster when it strikes, too focused on being better than other industries and forgetting the value of their purpose, to help strengthen mankind, not weaken its prospects, such as life expectancy. Thankfully, we have brought a Dinosaur back to life, after much urgency by my comrade and Sister-in-Law Skylar Grey of trouble ahead, left law school and went straight to The US Supreme Court, I voted for Mitt Romney, the problems we have now, are no one's fault but Barack Obama's, which we now have to undo, not President Trump's fault. Please be patient and head his advice as he is an Engineer and has helped build cities, knows well enough the power of human progress and the importance of structure. This is why I created MYMOLLYDOLL online for everyone to benefit. Not just the English Language, but for everyone to excel, on the same basis and understand how f-ked up the Movies and Music were to our psyche, and kept defending themselves and made us all sick, the power of Education wins! And for that truth I hold certain that all else should quickly fall into place. Right now we need to set new principles forward to which the majority can agree, and allow people to take their places on issues, whether agreed upon or not. Just speaking to my boyfriend who scared me while taking a nap, I decided to give a speech too in support of his words he will now share. Our Country is living in fear, and we have no one to blame but HOLLYWOOD which is why we have MYMOLLYDOLL online.

Agenda and Politics by Leslie A. Fischman = #mymollydoll

Agenda and Politics by Leslie A. Fischman

11/06/17

Agenda (definition): Includes any purposeful conduct directed toward any one persons, or group of people, to generate a reaction forward from its base.

Agenda's theoretically are plans that are set forward into motion, including lists and drawings, and mappings. Anything thereafter, is included in such plots to reinforce matters certain, and matters, true, matters we call self-evident upon their face.

The best way to handle any situation, is by starting from its base, such as the Washington Monument, represents this theory. From where does lightning strike and why, from the apex, or point of misconduct, is what this theory is based upon.

Errors (definition): Anything wrong that stands out, which is clear upon its face. Tribute campaigns and prayer in a cemetery is legal in this Country. I can pray wherever I want and can write my World Peace Speech from wherever I choose to lay to rest these issues of war and misconduct of better thans, is not as important than lives lost. I prayed there, I wrote there, and it was always to make a positive difference.

Whenever a foundation is laid, or whenever a foundation is disrupted, purpose is questioned, for what reasons did Leslie go to Law School: to make a positive difference. When this foundation was irritated by someone who is not me, confusion resulted as to my purpose in life, and as result people suffered misdirected thought I was obsessed with a case I knew nothing about, ask Google, had to study later in life.

It is never too late to clarify, one's purpose in life, and never too late to make a difference. For these reasons I believe President Trump is now President. Never did he let us down. Never did his purpose change. And never did his obsessions get the best of him, nor are reflected in his set of ideals, which have now come forward.

Your Surroundings by Leslie A. Fischman

Where you are going in life, is much to do with what surrounds you and who you are exposed to. "For every action there is a reaction" I think I've heard this once before. I grew up in a home that was highly volatile. A lot of emotions, a lot of possessions. But you just have to keep moving forward, and be sturdy, not allow others to take over your body and personality, that's the trick. Talking with the President he was telling me about how upset his Wife is, I understand, took him awhile to get back to normal, but do my best, my sincerest apologies. Needed to get the offender out. I'm very chaste and prude, why we make a good team, just a sounding board to him.

Where my yellow people at! Lisa Lisa Lisa, his tan is all wrong, and he's got no song to sing, but a huge banner behind him, and no one to bow beside him, who is he The President of the United States of America. He has no idea why he is on stage, but his team sets everything up for him in advance, we are very smart, please trust him. We have a serious mental health crisis on our shoulders, I once shouted "stop teaching English overseas." Too late, then came up with the Alphabet Code, safe. Okay so don't feel that bad that you're really good at numbers, my Mom sent me to Kumon when I was little next door to Sanrio, and Apollo 13'd Alphabet Code is what happened Texas. My Lawyer is retarded and mean, but that's okay, to bring who back to life, a sequel to a flyer movie, that's not why Sunset Blvd, that was up and down Venice, up and down Sunset every pole to Hollywood, and up and down Wilshire on every pole, then someone hit #France, how I became the Mona Lisa online. Fighting what, retards, is what. Retardation spreads through verses, then retarded behavior contributed to, like dick in a box by Justin Timberlake, before I committed suicide, then put a knife in a box, like The Last Samurai, to solve crime. Traitors, we are full of traitors, and bullies, and this is why we have not been able to achieve the level of intelligence required to make money in Asia, too many Japanese Suicides, I know, stay calm, in the field of Business. They're just psychotic ads, we have them all under control, I scream at Billboards, and racism daily, achieved. Z to A Barack Obama, and took over USA 2013, and stopped school shootings.

Where People Are Going in Life and Where they Have Been (Are you Reading my Mind now when you think about me? No _____ I am not reading your mind).

Usually people who leave you either: (1) do not know where you are going in life, (2) do now know where you have been in life, or (3) do not accept you as you are.

For these reasons I marched for 2-4 hours everyday for a month (August) and now back online writing, questioning still whether actions speak louder than words, words are the best form of communication other than sound, better than by actions and reactions.

Last night the clouds came together and there was one big cloud and then two sparks and all the clouds scattered, and the moon looked like it was about to fall from the sky and hit earth, but held my phone up to the moon, to push it back into the sky, actually an orange cradle held the moon in place, now does, I called Pluto.

Whenever there is a void, which needs to be filled, it is to each and everyone's responsibility to fill that void themselves, not by attachment to others. That is the most unhealthy point to attach, when weak, this not only strengthens the trusted, but there is a high likelihood of being hurt by anyone not attached back #BEWARE! This is how you get hurt in life, when you trust people, who do not yet know you well enough to love you and care for you and your best interests, f-k you over before you've even had a chance to say hello. That's the main joke, to the top of what? Just put up a MYMOLLYDOLL sign on the Internet like a HOLLYWOOD sign on mountains, and call it #worldpeace. Fit for everyone, a safe space, not the cause for terror. The causes for terror are from our surroundings, immediate and from our interactions with people in trusted positions to whom we grow concern and care for. Never care for those who are not responsible enough to take good care of themselves. Those with the best hygiene are the best boyfriends and girlfriends. Um, I think we need a Jewish Asian Housekeeper! Here as I arrive to DC White House 2013 in reply to Barack Obama's Invitation, where to begin. Back online he points. Wow, a memorial, I have not even written that much yet, slammed my watch into the sidewalk behind his house 500 yards away, by Marc Jacobs in LA Times iron curtain like the movies: the wrestler and enchanted, knocking on the sky to #googleearth we go Barack, his friend rides by on a skateboard holding a ribbon.

Systems of Communication by Leslie A. Fischman #usnavy

Systems of Communication by Leslie A. Fischman

11/01/17

Systems of communication are banded and bound. Banded (definition): of or pertaining to its contents reflected back toward sources and points of references sought to be brought forward made clear, reflective of purpose toward, behavior toward others, thought justified. And Bound (definition): evidentiary purposeful conduct toward others to generate reactions from, toward, against, and between.

It is for these purposes I communicate. To simplify what has been made too complex for rationale judgments to be made upon me and others, and for those reasons I write, a self-help writer since 2016, and in recovery since 2013, from alcohol.

When a path is drawn by others, it is our choice to communicate back, listen to, and see forward the same, justify, senselessness, and place blame on others, including ourselves, that does not help situations for individuals, but promotes hatred.

There is a purpose for hatred toward me, it is to protect my interests, not to reflect meaningful interactions, which is too interpersonal a base for a crisis station. There is always a tone, underlying purpose, for people's behavior toward others, though understood and rationally evident of guilt, quietness, that is not the case.

Why do bad things occur? Not by my communications, we do not understand Y, that is for the FBIDC to resolve, not my duty to fight crime or attract criminals, that is not nor ever has been my audience who I cater to, I'm very positive, #teamusa. So to attack me and my grounds and purposes for communication in life, is futile, destructive. You should not be abusive toward me or others, to hear sing, what?

Positive Anchors by Leslie A. Fischman #mymollydoll

Positive Anchors by Leslie A. Fischman

11/30/17

In order to campaign for anything, the anchor must always be positive. Positive visions equal positive outcomes, and that's the bottom line. When we worry too much nothing seems to work out in favor of us, or to those we seek to support. Why its so important to remain positive, when growing any number of following to any one campaign of your choice. Positivity is everything.

When I first started campaigning, my best friend dropped out, I then took it upon myself, to try harder. After the Founders to Brady Campaign passed away, I created a separate account @bradymusicbuzz, to draw more following, by followers to the original @bradybuzz, that way people interested in searching for them would find me, an alternate music campaign against gun violence, and that was the plan. –Overtime it became more and more difficult to stay positive, I got a job in Century City, and I even tried Fashion Blogging my outfit everyday to work. I couldn't quite figure out how to get followers, it took some odd 4 years to gain 2,000-400K followers, on my own as @mymollydoll a name I made up, with no connections.

It wasn't until I got noticed by Sassique a Fashion Company online composed of Fashion Bloggers, on Tumblr, that I realized my potential to blog for a bigger audience than anticipated. –I've had my share of mental illness, thinking the wrong things about myself and/or others, and paranoia! That's the worst, especially while taking adderrall or relapsing on cocaine or alcohol, that's the worst feeling in the World, to let yourself down and others down. I hate when that happens to me. #Sober #Clean #Celibate.

Why must the anchor be positive? Whenever you are representing yourself or others, theres a lot at stake. Especially image wise. People generally don't want to associate to people who do not represent themselves well or others. –It took me awhile to figure out why. –I think my blogging style has changed a lot over the years, from out there, to just right, this all takes time. –It's really difficult to integrate many ideas onto one platform one branded name, and I hope that where I am now, is acceptable for the most part to my viewers and readers. I do my best always.

Sincerely,

Leslie A. Fischman

How to Make Things Happen For You in Life by Leslie A. Fischman
11/29/17

One day ... while standing outside of Chipotle on Melrose, this thought came to mind: What you put into motion and what you get back [is] the opposite inverse reaction [to what you get back] from others. You must always [therefore] prepare for the opposing viewpoint, [by] respond[ing] in [a way that is] advance[d] [to the opposing opinion] [taking others, and their viewpoints, always] into consideration. With that in mind: Always speak with anticipation of responses (Based off @mymollydoll004, Twitter 11/29/17 #quote).

It's never that important to make things happen for others, by what you cant make happen for yourself in life. The influences you have on the opinions of others, is always based upon how you present yourself to others, be accepting of the opinions of others in return, as they reflect who you are to them, how you react to them, how you respond to them, and how you appear to them, that is always the basis for scrutiny, that is public opinion, and harsh scrutiny of others, including me.

Be careful of what causes you hashtag and promote within your campaign, as causes for discord, easily dismember good and sound rationale, I think this is why they freed him, because of a past association, was hurting my campaign and my causes. I think we all are in a much better place now, its unfortunate, but its okay, better now. –I think leaving Law School was the best choice, as resulting hardships incurred while as a Law Student, were adverse to my interests, and my good health, that is why I left Law School, to pursue other objectives, back to my research and writing roots, what I'm good at. I have enjoyed the study of Law, but due to trauma suffered as a young child, it was difficult for me to be in Law School at the same time he was in jail, because people thought I went to Law School because he was in jail, no, I made the decision to go to Law School 2006, before he went to jail.

Making things happen for you in life: (1) Drop your Identity, (2) Forget About Self, (3) Put Others Best Interests Before Your Own, and (4) Always Have a Positive Attitude in Life. –This is how I was able to make things happen for me in life, by staying positive, no matter what hardships I endured as a Law Student, never lost faith in others, including myself, -which is so important to positive progress.

1. Drop Your Identity: I learned this best as @mymollydoll on Twitter it took me nearly 4 years to get 2,000 Followers, then run a series of hashtag campaigns to gain 400k some followers and 90k per hashtag on Facebook (2016). -I've been a writer, for many years, under a different name, with no associations, none pitched initially at least not in person. -When I got to Las Vegas 2013, I called his jail and told his warden "I do not want to get involved in Conspiracy" and let them know my position. I made the call from Las Vegas in Las Vegas because I got a D in Civil Procedure, I had to drive to Las Vegas February 2013 alone, just to make a phone call, in state, not to get confused as a jurisdiction shopper, not involve the Feds yet, keep it California based.
1. Forget About Self: When you think too much of yourself, you obsess, and when you obsess, you never feel good enough by comparison. Aging is a process, and everyday you are older than you were yesterday, and in order to maintain self, you must appreciate you at the present, not lament yourself as you were in the past, not to your liking, but like yourself now. When you like yourself now, you have a higher likelihood of accepting others. And when you are more accepting of others, it just so happens you become more accepting of yourself. Why sometimes, if you don't like yourself, its okay to help others.
1. Put Others Best Interests Before Your Own: Like we just said, "when you are more accepting of others, it just so happens you become more accepting of yourself. Why sometimes, if you don't like yourself, its okay to help others." (See 2 above). When you put the interests of others before your own, you become selfless. Selfless is important, as a strategy to maintain peace with yourself and others, when you forget about you, and think of others, positive change can occur, when others are happy around you, so can you be too.
1. Always Have a Positive Attitude in Life: When you are negative not only do opportunities in life get missed, but you yourself, miss the point to everything, and have a higher likelihood of facing illness and failure in life. It's important therefore to not only speak positively of: (a) self, but also to (b) speak positively of others. That's how you maintain a positive attitude in life.

I hope that this helps. I have done a lot of thinking about these very points, as I fix and make better my life. I hope that I can do the same for others one day too.

Dealing with Anger and Resentments by Leslie A. Fischman
Re: The Fight at Bungalow Santa Monica 11/14/17 (Relapse after 7 months Sober)
11/28/17

Its unfortunate whenever you give up your sobriety date, its usually due to: (1) lack of acceptance of self or (2) lack of acceptance of others. When in combination, the two issues collide you: (1) go into depression and (2) hurt yourself and or (relapse).

Relapses for me usually occur during quiet moments in time, when I am at peace, I relapse, and when (if) that peace is disturbed, I write. I had a great evening, was journaling and drinking quietly, and then when I spoke talking to myself, someone insulted me not in agreement with me or my methodologies, and insulted me, out of the blue for no reason, I wasn't even talking to him, I was standing alone, talking to an empty table. Attacks never occur in close quarters, its usually someone comes up to you an insults you, this was the first time this has ever occurred to me.

Its never appropriate to fight with anyone, even upon insult. That is not the strategy toward peace, and that is not the correct response, and almost had to talk to the police that night. I'm instead going to talk to police tomorrow, at coffee in West Hollywood, between 8 and 9 am, if anyone is interested in attending to discuss, alcohol and defamation, and what to do if someone picks a fight with me.

I personally do not have any anger or resentments, but upon people insulting me, then these issues, come out. Instead I am starting therapy on Monday to discuss private issues, with others and about myself, in a private and protected space. That does not cause unreasonable hardship to myself or others. The President just got back from Asia and the Philippines in support of my causes, and really doesn't have time for negativity right now, from me or others. He cried yesterday to me.

Obsession and The Causes For by Leslie A. Fischman

11/26/17

Obsessions for anything, including for oneself, is never a good idea, and usually leads to paranoia, and over concern with self not others. To be like-minded is to be well liked, understood, and all things favorable to your interests, are and should be the interests of others in order to find success in life.

When we feel like we are being watched, usually we have trouble performing. Worried about what others think of us, usually follows suit. Best to always "keep a good head on your shoulders" and be mindful of others, and their feelings too. Being mindful requires, that we not only care about what others think, but that we act in ways that generally shows or reflects that care for others too.

God-Complexes occur when we think that everything is about us, or that everyone is thinking of us, in a way that reflects our: fears, paranoias, and obsessions with self. In order to undo the trauma related to self-obsessions, best to "keep a good head on your shoulders" about your day, the progress you make, and how you treat others. Never when you are mean to others does anything get done, in the positive for yourselves or others. Never when we are cold to others, do things work out to our benefit and does anything get done. Always be respectful of the spaces of others, including your own private spaces, where you think and produce your material each day, for "show and tell" to others. These are basic understandings of performance anxieties that follow, from the sharing of our ideas with others, learn to let go.

The Winning Tone by Leslie A. Fischman

The winning tone is by those with happiness always, not by those with unhappy dreams or unhappy driven purposes in life, the winning tone is all that can be, something stronger than its counterparts or opposing regimes. What we call life is something about virtue, and pleasantries, not about subtle negativities. When all is one, is when all is sound, when all is in parts, that's when there is something unsound. What is kept hidden is called right to privacy, what is shared is called clear, clear upon presentries, and clear upon bases, and clear upon truths shared. That's all that can be shared at any given point in time. What is not shared is always what is yet sound, or has the capability of causing unreasonable hardships upon one, some, others, or all, that is what is unclear. What is made clear is always what is shared. That is my strategy for peace, not to be unsound, but to represent the majority. Minority opinions at any given time, are not shared for these reasons, because of suicide and unreasonable hardship, no, because of conflict of interest not shared. –Who you represent matters, and who you are connected to matters, and that is the bases for discrimination upon me, and unreasonable hardship, defamation, and suicide, reoccurring, for those matters certain, which cannot be changed about me, like a middle name sounded backwards, President Bush, nothing new about me, we started with World Peace and that's where the tide ends, at World Peace, Since 2013.

Come On by Leslie A. Fischman

“Come on and knock on my door we’ve been waiting for you” popular lyrics to a hit TV Show. Ya we’ve all seen the Movie: Matrix, they’re gonna jump on this train like me doing a back flip on my diving board as a child, and hitting my head on the board. Go nuts when they figure this all out. Build a Hall of Doors, or a website. Biggie we all know what happened its okay, they’re building a Museum now next door to you. Everybody knows it was because of the lyrics to Biggie a CD I never had in my Ford Explorer with a kicker. The meanest movie of all time was actually: Office Space. But we’re not gonna talk about tagged up cubicles right now, like at CU Boulder, where I studied and took a million smoke breaks. Computer left in my cubicle with no password, lord help us all, Rudolf you couldn’t be more retarded, legally retarded that is. Someone handed me their dog outside the library, where I studied, in Norlin Quad, a dog in my computer, a Terrier, I always wanted one, but got a cat instead, Leo, I named him after my birth month, August 7th 1985, the year of the ox, I held balloons once in an ox ox ox ox covered dress, with one arm up like the Statue of Liberty, how cute says #NYCY, and here I am talking to Prince Harry on Messenger everyday, who would’ve thought of this ending, no way Jose, Biggie, no way Jose. It turns out that “its just my luck” another famous movie, that things have turned out this way, revolving doors, are not the new fad at hotels, but we get it now, one comes before two and so the others follow, can we get a 5 in the beginning, dear Constitution, and then let the other numbers follow? I mean, we’re a new Country, underdeveloped says Hollywood, Leslie rearranged the mics so many times, our chairs lit up. So anyways, movie chairs? Shouts CSPAN, DJ Movies, I joked once. Life isnt about winning, bottom line.

Points of Reference and The Need for Consolidation of Ideas

Points of Reference and The Need for Consolidation of Ideas by Leslie A. Fischman
11/23/17

Points of Reference (definition): How ideas collide and transform, come to fruition based upon what we see and believe to be true and correct perspectives in life.

Its not for any one person to judge how one another sees in life, behaves, or achieves. Its everyone's responsibility to behave in a manner that is not offensive nor derogatory toward self or others, that is how peace is achieved, when we represent ourselves and others well. -When we focus on negatives, we are the only ones who hurt, and when we hurt, we have a higher likelihood of hurting others.

#mymollydollquote (As Featured on #Twitter):

How you handle life is a reflection of your upbringing. The choices you make reflect what you value. What you value is based upon your self-worth. Until you value yourself can you properly value others. -You can't reverse the times, you can only move forward get strong or fall apart its your choice always, nothing comes easy in life including image and esteem must always be earned rightfully so never given not handed out. -Sometimes not all the time is many yet few however sums is equated only by parts to whom concerns but by those who do. -If you realize how f-ked up people were you'll never arrive at the present in time to enjoy life, don't scar yourselves, see the good in others, how to remove fears that hold you back from achieving in life. -There are two types of people: the helpers and those in need of help. -No problems can turn things right it's the over focus on problems that cause problems why we have places for discussion of problems not in the public sphere but in private confidential environments. - Future progress is dependent upon one thing and one thing only remaining positive, you choose what side of the coin to be on, its your choice like flipping a coin whether to be a leader or a follower led by you or others, that [is] your choice. -Its what we see that becomes, chaos occurs in tiers the least affected by problems should always be the children, that's our professional responsibility and duty to serve the blinde and ensure services are rendered to maintain that peace [and stability]. -The point is never to give up keep correcting backwards to move forwards peaceably. -Unfortunately it takes time to put together and assemble ideas for peace (201[3]-2017) it takes time, to fix everything, have faith. -People never forget how you made them feel, rejected or not with class or trash treat all with kindness. #pointatissue. -These are called nothing but awkward dispositions in life, respect is earned not a born trait to each ones responsibility to work towards everyday to maintain requires constant maintenance [and] cleanliness. -The key to success with others is respect and acknowledgment of concerns, interests, or upheaval, always respond with good virtues whether direct or not best to be indirect toward negativity. -You help others when youre focused on yourself not others. -Just accept reality its no ones fault but your own for your negative outlooks and your own unhappiness in life, life isn't about winning or losing its about living. -Life is about choices what you want in life what you believe is no ones business but youre own, there will always be (1) sick and there will always be (2) well, that's a sad reality, just accept all as is. -The worst thing you could do to yourself is to live life in regret with could've should've wouldves and not feel accomplished by comparison or upon new realizations in life, we know what we know and that's that. Life wouldn't turn out [any] differently had anything been known [otherwise]. - *Don't misinform yourselves by reading between too many lines, by making negative inferences, and poor assumptions about others. You only make yourselves sick when you think negatively of others, and it makes others sick when you talk $hit about others." Then it follows by stating at The #ussupremecourt we believe in: (1) public safety, (2) public consciousness, (3) preservation, (4) positivity, and (5) creativity.

Acceptance, Public Acceptance by Leslie A. Fischman

11/22/17

I once stated that: “Whenever we have a problem that has no end, usually someone comes up with a solution, to go in place of a negative ending, that is called good cause for action, to stop negative reactions, to reduce recidivism, and to cure crime and hate upon one another, that is called domestic violence and restraint, to prevent harm causing agents from causing harm to one another, to eachother, to others, and to ourselves. Anyone who has not responded to any communications by me are not membered as part of any communications herein, nor the cause for communications throughout, I respect all people.”

It is for those reasons I am now writing this post on acceptance for one and acceptance for all, that is the cause of my current concerns, lack of acceptance for me, based upon associations. I do not talk to Sydney Simpson anymore, but on rare occasions, and we have not been close since College, since she became best friends with my Brother and Sister, and for those reasons I cried to her on voicemail, as a Law Student in Beverly Hills, at my place of work. I believe this occurred over a Yearbook, defamation.

Acceptance is about ownership of self and ownership of wrongs, and respect for others. That I think is the basis for acceptance, of others, and for acceptance of self. I’ve already lost motivation to write this piece, with expectations of “oh its about me” no “oh its about them” or “oh its about this.” Those are not the reasons for which I write, I write first for myself, and for others, not the other way around, I’m not a defensive person, I’m kind always to others, and always respectful of the needs of others, a natural adjuster to the needs of others, that is who I am, that is who I have been, and that will never change.

Causes for Unhappiness by Leslie A. Fischman

Whenever we have a problem that has no end, usually someone comes up with a solution, to go in place of a negative ending, that is called good cause for action, to stop negative reactions, to reduce recidivism, and to cure crime and hate upon one another, that is called domestic violence and restraint, to prevent harm causing agents from causing harm to one another, to eachother, to others, and to ourselves. Anyone who has not responded to any communications by me are not membered as part of any communications herein, nor the cause for communications throughout, I respect all people.

Problems Occur in Phases: I have been trying to fix problems since 2009, an applicant of the US Navy for Barack Obama, this is not something new I have been a Certified Crisis Counselor since 2004, trained, to help suicidal and mentally ill people cope, and some are called inappropriate callers.

There are three types of people with problems: (1) happy (2) unhappy and (3) regretful.

(1) Happy: Happy people tend to compartmentalize problems, and few with regret, do not worry much, or abstain from activities, but keep themselves busy. Sound minded, and positive minded, usually get through problems in a piecemeal fashion, with guidance, advice, always seeing the glass as half full.

(2) Unhappy: Unhappy people are usually people with regrets in life, people who have problems usually in the past they cannot mend, so far back that everything forward feels too heavy to burden, these people are called people with (i) bad luck or (ii) self-harmers. They are people who cannot undo the past, once realized, feel like life is difficult, and often fall into stages of depression, upon realization of their (a) self-worth or (b) worth of others.

(3) Regretful: Regretful people are people who underachieve in life, wish they could have done more in life, more for others, or themselves. Sometimes hastily causing problems for themselves or others, faulty decision-makers, quick to judge, and stomp on others forward, that's because they feel behind in life, not yet achieved goals, or the type of wealth and achievement they see fit for themselves or others, will promulgate campaigns against others talk $hit, that's a normal reaction to their unhappiness, should not offend anyone.

Twitter Quotes:

Life is about choices, what you want in life is what you believe is no ones business but youre own, no matter how many fans in life you have, your health comes first, first to anyone else, no one with an unsound mind, can help others with ease, and usually by dis-ease you make others feel uncomfortable around you. There will always be (1) sick and there will always be (2) well that's a sad reality, just accept all. -Just accept the reality that its no one's fault but your own for your negative outlooks and your own unhappiness in life, life isn't about winning or losing its about living. -It's because people get hurt they commit suicide, usually not because of people present in their lives, but because of people in their past who have hurt them. Usually people who commit suicide are victims, of something they cant say out loud. When one is mentally disturbed it usually means unable to communicate their thoughts. I am on medication because I get suicidal, because my life is hard.

What is certain is always true, and what is true is always certain. Is what is certain what is ascertained meaning what is interpreted from any given situation. That is true and that is correct, why [what] we believe certain as to fame, is incorrect, with study one can only achieve fame, and through study, can fame be maintained. That is certain, and that is true. Image quality is everything, and it's the images you share that identity you best, and are the basis for which others judge you, by how you look, how you maintain your image, that is for certain. Of General Concern by Leslie A. Fischman

Of general concern should only be your interests not the interests of others. Usually what you make of things is a product of your interpretation of events and others, what you think is related. Only by direct connections are things related, and that is not the fault of individuals but those that house them, create those connections. We call them Schools and Businesses, places of establishment, that control who enters and who remains, and who stays, and who goes, and who leaves and why. That is why we have Jobs, and Applications, and Resumes, for hire and fire of people, from companies, institutions, and to promote the overall health and well being of its constituents, people are made a part of or people are separated from membership, that is always understandable, and that is the causes for action against me, against my premonitions for World Peace, and my hard earned effort toward those goals Since 2009, an applicant of the US Navy. My private life is not to blame for my successes and failures in life, that's a given, to each his own, that is not the responsibility to care for the private lives of others, do not and should not affect their work ethic, and their general health and well being, everyone is entitled to their own opinions, it is never the responsibility for others to make changes to the opinions others, about people, based upon their negative interactions with. If a positive interaction later becomes a negative interaction, it is because of lack of faith, and duty, and concern for someone in need, that is why people get rejected. Generally, people who are rejected are to fend for themselves in life not others.

I have never hurt anyone my entire life, I have never had any problems or fights with others my entire life, have always been on the A Team, why so successful online and well liked, not because of an idea picked, but because of an idea maintained, that is my honor, that is a reflection of my respect for myself and others.

A Blinde Reading About a Comment About "Talmud" by Leslie A. Fischman
11/21/17

What is Talmud? (Need to Research This) I asked myself, then responded: "Interesting take on sub-divisions. And power of authority and self righteousness and value will blog about this. In my own words what comes to mind having read this. Sincerely, #bloggingcampaign."

First a blinde take on this statement, in part: "dictatorship entirely based on fables ... 2000 years ago ... written in Talmud."

When I grew up we had Marty Bauer, who made Ace Ventura Pet Detective Jim Carrey his client cut his bangs to the middle of his forehead like I did by accident in 5th grade, cutting my hair when wet, and when I woke up they shrank to the middle of my forehead. These things happen, but use of likeness is one thing, toward keeping one another blinde, its by identities we discover ourselves, upon meeting others, with differing viewpoints, we hopefully can see clearer ourselves in relation to, not necessarily required to self-identify always, but by respect of one another's belief systems, that I think is what can help stop racism and disbelief in higher powers other than oneself, selfishness, never leads to anything good, it shrinks the ego, makes it too tough and stubborn to blend in, and easily fades away with the time, constantly trying to change itself, to be better than, that's a life led by ego not beliefs. Everyone must be careful not to vote for people with too many problems and anyone who is self-centered, its people who care that lead well, that's the bottom line, and is always self-evident in the causes for concern, their causes, and what they do to help make a positive difference in the World, that is true, and forthcoming, and does not offend others in the past, that is called tact, not coverage, but respect.

Do we want a Talmud version? No, stay blinde! Okay deal #teamusa we all know what happened after I listened to Rap Music, Im easily influenced by others, an adjuster.

Business to Business Communications by Leslie A. Fischman
11/20/17 (Applied to the #USNavy 2009, but didn't get the job as a Paralegal).

Business to business communications should be about philanthropy not about money and here's why. Unfinished business is never the answer to problems, if it requires you to go backwards in time to correct a present problem. That means you are attached to problems, and less likely to generate business good business relations forward. Here's why: (1) unfinished business (2) guilty bases and (3) negative attachments cause (a) problems forward (b) unnecessary relationships and (c) desperation which equivocates and denotes either (i) failure or (ii) weaknesses to (ja) conduct (ib) denotes fear retained (ic) causes for retaliation paramount and (id) reason for unnecessary disclosures to reinforce negative outputs toward.

These are reasons for problems, not solutions. We can go backwards and show cards, but that doesn't make anyone feel better, what goes right past, if it does not go right forwards, some things are better left unsaid, who was prepared and who was ill prepared for success now, makes no difference, those with faith survive, and those with good faith, are well liked. Those with negative outlooks, usually don't do well business wise, as their negative judgments towards others, if negativity results, are always responsible for those tertiary reactions toward, against, or for.

My Brother went out last night and had a talk with Larry David. It's really not our fault, we were raised by Warner Brothers Cartoons. Our neighbor down the street Warner a Founder, lived on the corner of Rockingham and Highwood. I'm sure he could hear us screaming from the house, fighting as children. He died of Cancer. I once threw a roly chair so hard at the entry way wall under a painting it made a dent, much like I did to my head inside the Towers at Waldorf, after my brother chastised me for being a cokehead (Summer 2006 to Fall 2006 cc: Harvard) with the then heroin addict Marty Bauer's son, who I wrote a poem about, which was later quoted by Eminem, a fan of #mymollydoll, he feels bad I got titled "voted most shady" in a yearbook 2003, I never saw the ballot, maybe because I put my free period next to lunch and went home to take naps before soccer practice, I was a team captain we were one game away from winning CIF, I was 1st team all CIF a center mid-fielder. The really Ary from the Show Entourage was out last night at the same bar, it was quiet, and the Dinosaurs were upset, moody, that's normal nothing personal not to worry. We are under a lot of stress, covering for the movie Legally Blonde right now, its absurd. You know theres a book called Absurdistan, Davinci Code, and Guns Germs and Steel, these are books that accurately paint the picture for solving issues with identity and crime. I read one crime book once about criminals, a characteristic of them was described as "grandiosity" something we avoid as a Family Corporation.

My Father, when I talk about writing my book with him, doesn't think it will make any money, that's okay, Jay Carney works for Amazon now, money to SCOTUS I agreed last night with The now President Donald J. Trump who prayed with me last night via text message, his apologies Prince Harry, we are not ready to be crowned quite yet. -In other news, my ex Cornerstone OnDemand Ex-from 2013 text messaged me, maybe I need practice having a boyfriend again before dating anyone special Prince Harry, still working on my image, perceived as retarded or a slut, that is simply not true. One does not become successful or well spoken by those terms.

It is because I have remained very chaste that I have become so educated and well spoken. It is for those reasons I get jobs and put in positions of trust, because I am very trustworthy and confidential ask The US Supreme Court, protect them at all costs to my identity and to my hardships, are always of my own making.

Larry I don't know why my ex-boyfriend sold my Disney Stock, but later gave up on our relationship, and pursued educational goals instead, at UWLA, 3rd in my Class. He did this a year after I committed suicide, this is why I became a Disney iMovie Pitcher.

Poor Katie Couric's Boyfriend my neighbor died of Cancer. He felt bad for us.

What the World is About by Leslie A. Fischman

What it's not about is impeding negatively on rights, human rights. "That is the question" (William Shakespeare) to that which does not agree or to that which agrees, "whether it" (William Shakespeare) should be placed on the forefront of our minds moving forward. You are responsible for the World you create in your mind, and it is to your responsibility to take care of self first not others, that is how Justice is made, through the rights of mankind, not over focus on the wrongs of others. What is focused on gets replicated, and what is wrong is never made right, by overfocus on wrongs. That is the truth. It's not about trust, or privy to knowledge for knowledges sake, but its what rings true to your individual persons' as digesters of information, what you call right and what you call wrong. It is never the responsibility of any one person for you to decide who is right or who is wrong based upon trust, or based upon justices done past. That is not how to move forward, by provoking, and belittlings, that always results in causes for concern. Do not dismember trust and expect trust to be made, that is an avenue and recipe for disaster, not the solution. To provoke me, causes no rights to humankind, that is kindness and popularity, goes to those well known, not to I, this is why we hire representatives for our Country by votes, this is why we have the voting system. No one is trying to make me popular by trade and votes that is clear I did not win the Shorty Award in 2016, and there is nothing to stop for, or in retaliation resulting from provocation for, that is not my esteem, that is not my guilt, the wrongs of others, and that is not my responsibility to correct others when wrong toward me or others, that is not why I write. I am not a fighter, and I am celibate, I do not date anymore for those reasons. I'm not a pawn for trade, and I'm not the solution for peace, when provoked, why we have so many other representatives for World Peace, now, that is to my liking, that is because of what I am doing, writing for it.

Problematic Behavior by Leslie A. Fischman

Problematic behavior is easily identifiable. I once stated "when moving fast in the wrong direction it is extremely noticeable to everyone –but when we are moving in the right direction, others follow" (2016, Twitter). It is not evident always when wrongs occur, whether misguided or not, is to each one person's responsibility to mend, fix, address, and make better present circumstances, to reduce recidivism. People obsessed with hypocrisy, we call the dissenters, they take and dump ideas, that is how they operate to minimize risk on their grounds, state risks elsewhere upon others, denote failures, so that one can achieve, sometimes they make sure others cannot. It is clear that whenever a wrong is pointed out, it is by the believer of rights, that wrongs have occurred. This is why we have a system of determining wrongs and rights, called laws. It is behavior corrected that justifies the purposes for laws existing, and those who abide by laws, often times become the most successful, whereas those who do not, find failures so grave and face hardships for the rest of their lives, that is a consequence of breaking a law, arrests ruin identities, for good reason, denote causes for misfortune ahead, and determine who is to be trusted and who is not to be trusted, a good fit for leadership or not, that right taken away.

How You Interpret Things Matter for Success by Leslie A. Fischman
11/15/17

Whenever something bad happens, the only way to undo that harm is to be good. Being bad when others are bad, is cause for over consumption of the feelings of others, not accepted as your own, and that's how non-acceptance occurs. The exchange of guilt, like rotting trees, from the Movie: Blairwitch Project. Or a homemade Movie by Sydney and I, running in the grass at my house, and then collapsed in the front entry way of my home, diagonally, the camera fell over the painted flowers in the wood, that was my childhood Movie, my first one we made.

How you see the World depends on two things: (1) what you believe and (2) what you see. Everything must always be in good spirits and good humor to resolve. Tempers run riot like the Book: Outrage says Dan Brown, was simply retarded. Then Guns Germs and Steel came out. Then a NASA Diaper Everyday Girl wrote, the Dinosaurs were on vacation, the orange one was from Pluto, how we got our wings.

Usually what is missing = cause for concern. I was raised by a WW2 LT my Grandpa, was a hoarder just like me, saved everything in his loft, and so did I. Followed suit.

Why did he save everything? Because he was an LT and an Accountant, Jewish, very smart.

Crush Therapy: The habit of crushing occurs, when someone has something you have not achieved, a likeable quality about them, you wish you saw within yourself, how a crush occurs. Generally speaking crushes are nothing more than mentors in life, at that, now this makes sense. I've always been one to crush, never to date, never good enough, that's my personality trait, forever a beginner at life, how rookies are made, reserved gifts, is how you find talent, something special is around, its if you see everyone but yourself, is how special traits are acquired, through the gift of giving, not receiving.

What goes warm must come down, the shrieks of melancholy despair, is nothing but lost hope upon rhymes of shrowded guilt, we call these "Freudian Slips" what is not said, is often times something so obvious on its face, nothing to fear about, how that occurs, warmth, is everything positive and from that more positives occur says #FBI. It's really simple, nothing like chess, and kings on queens or pieces, its all about reserving your gifts in life, a preservation specialist, my Mom and Brother, reserved me, always chastised me, never encouraged being boy crazy, why I am this way, a tomboy. Speak in a heavy tone, not a likeable tone, desensitize my audience. There's a reason for that, I'm not sure why this happens, its not trust, but certainty. That is why I am well liked, there's something very certain about me, proper, raised that way properly. Why my writing is clean cut.

Addiction, Social Media, and Propaganda by Leslie A. Fischman

Addiction, Social Media, and Propaganda by Leslie A. Fischman
12/01/17

Propaganda is defined by Google as, “derogatory: information, especially of a biased or misleading nature, used to promote or publicize a particular political cause or point of view.” –In my point of view, PROPAGANDA is information used to provide a point of view, that is counterproductive to the needs of the majority, to present a minority opinion, which is placed above in public sight, to undermine hindsight, to give strength to a current perspective, that is not widely accepted, and stirs the pot, that is the fundamentals of any given trade or profession, which seeks to help not undermine the needs of others.

Social Media is a great place to share ideas, however is very addicting. Im sure there have been articles written about Social Media addiction, but I am now choosing to share from my perspective, how I became addicted to Social Media, as a place of work and as a place to write. When one is not heard, there is a strong sense of purpose to be heard. That is understandable, when one is not equal, one has arrived at a place to become equal minded to ones cohorts, that is respected as those around them are respected, why blogging on Twitter is great for people with low self-esteem, a place to learn how to fit in, be well liked, and find one’s place in reality, among, not separate from others.

As a Law Student, I became separated from my friends, as addiction relates to me, now we are talking about here. In case anyone was wondering as to what this discussion will entail here forward, my addiction to social media, not the addiction of others, I always talk from my own perspective, not the perspective of others, as these are my ideas for peace, not the ideas of others, clearly if being shared by me, then with positive good purpose, not for myself, not for others, but based on the principle of sharing for sharings sake, that is why I share my thoughts, to be apart of, included, well that’s a side-effect. –I’ve never not felt included, that has never been the case, always included, invited to every party, and always apart of, the most popular everywhere I go, I have a nack for assembling people, friends, and now professionals, that is my calling in life, to help others, as has been stated in my personal statements since 1997, to “make a positive difference” that is my motto and that will never change, I was born in 1985, so I was probably 11 or 12 when I came up with that, what is now a slogan, widely held by all.

Addiction is defined by Google as: “the fact or condition of being addicted to a particular substance, thing, or activity.” Addiction according to me, is the use of a substance to feel good, beyond that which is required by the average or normal person to feel good. I do not use social media to feel good, it makes me nervous and paranoid, its just a place for me to promote my blog and my writing, with no beginning purpose to be famous, only to write a book. I am not a Lawyer, therefore I do not and have never represented others legally only myself, and by image good image, may one day represent others well too, not just myself. Addiction is viewed as engaging in risk taking activities, I am not a risk taker, however I have abstained from the sue of alcohol and marijuana since defamed in a yearbook 2003, that is why I chose not to drink or do drugs, and that will never change about me. I clearly understand first hand, the consequences to your image if you drink or smoke weed, why I do not drink nor smoke weed, because that is the basis for others, enabling them to trash you and your image. I was awarded best female athlete at graduation, therefore it never made sense to me why on the last day of school I found out I was defamed, it broke my heart. –I had gained weight senior year because of soccer injuries the years prior, was always a top athlete, however was overweight only 2003, and still tried out for the CU Club Soccer team Summer 2003, and was selected 1 of 5 on the B Team, that is 1 of 5 Freshman on the B team, the A Team was all upper-classmen, and the C Team was all Freshmen. –I made the team, and when I made the team I decided not to drink or smoke weed, so that I could play soccer, another reason why I became sober and clean, a professional club soccer player 2003 in the State of Colorado, a mile above sea level. The altitude is so high, and air so thin in Colorado, I could not drink or smoke weed AND play soccer, that would be humanly impossible, why I abstained.

1. Addiction, Social Media, and Propaganda

Social Media is obviously a place to represent yourself. When you learn how to represent yourself well, then you are fit to represent others on your blogs, until then, it makes sense why people go private on social media, and keep their social media's private. I have kept my friends list private since 2008, after a terrorist attack occurring on the 10 freeway after I defriended someone who wrote songs about me, we dated briefly in College. Its really not a big deal, just culture shock actually, when you realize someone cared for you, and then wrote about you, and you realize many years later, what that was about. It hurts, and its embarrassing, and theres nothing you can do about it, I was his biggest fan, attended all his shows in Boulder Colorado. I realize now that that is a compliment when someone writes about you in public, to accept it as compliment, not be defensive or embarrassed by any acknowledgment of you in a public space, how you made them feel.

When you defame yourself, and misrepresent yourself, well that's not propaganda, but pure stupidity on your own behalf. Misrepresentations are not the same as propaganda, one word is about self and others, and one word is strictly as it relates to political tidings. So ... which word best describes my biggest faux pas in life? Misrepresentation, of ideas, and image. When you are overweight, there is really nothing you can do to fix public perception about your health, you are seen as grose, and because you are grose, others offend you on purpose, insult you, and degrade you, to make you feel less than. That's unfortunate, that was my Senior Year Yearbook, hurt beyond belief, went into a state of depression, and put on adderrall by Sophomore year, and switched majors to Sociology.

Why am I on Social Media? Because I love to write. I decided to become a writer, 2004, when I switched majors to Sociology. That's when I decided to become a writer. My favorite course in High School was American Literature. Writing is my Passion. I was even in AP English but didn't read the books and graduated with a 3.2, getting As in Chemistry, Physics, and Algebra, my strengths in Math and Sciences, but chose to write instead. I think you stick to what youre good at, as applied. Social Media is one of my favorite places on earth! It's where I found my voice, and improved socially, academically, and spiritually, and could not pick a better place to share my thoughts.

What is Fear? by Leslie A. Fischman (FWD: Text to Jack Dorsey)

Text Message to Jack Dorsey (Fear Speech) by Leslie A. Fischman
12/01/17

“Fear is a disease of the mind unwilling to accept reality and the current state of affairs unwilling to accept truth, that who hold[s] certain falsehoods[,] lives in fear, seeing negative[ly] until negative [occurs and/or] comes to fruition[,] are not people of concern to me but cause weakness to humanity and cause injury to mankind [are those] who contribute to these ills we call fear.”

“Direction in Life (definition): The points you choose to focus on [that] make you who you are, based upon what you believe, see fit, is what becomes of you. You cannot control what others think, just be yourself, the rest should fall into place.”

When others are “tripping too hard” its because of those who are “quiet” and those who “work” who do not speak up, that results in: “loss of faith, on edge, unhappy, rude, obnoxious, not disciplined, values falling apart ...[,] and competi[tion]” that’s how you figure out when to speak, when there is something wrong, why its important to “listen” to one another, including our leaders in any Country.

“The worst thing you could do to yourself is to live life in regret with the could’ve should’ve would’ve and not feel accomplished by comparison or upon new realizations in life, we know what we know and that’s that. Life would turn out no differently had anything been known or [if I had] reached fame long ago, that’s not how fame happens its earned by self merits not by who knows who.”

Medication Stigma by Leslie A. Fischman aka #mymollydoll

Medication Stigma by Leslie A. Fischman
12/01/17

There’s a lot of stigma faced, when it comes to taking medications. Why you’re not supposed to tell people which medications you are taking, that leads to assumptions as to what your problems are, which could be completely unrelated to the purposes for which any one brand of medication was made. It’s the Doctor who prescribes medication based on what I tell my Doctor, and based on my Medical Records, which are private documents, not for public circulation or to be read that’s my Right to Privacy. –Often times people think people are on medications because there is something wrong with them, it could also be that there is something wrong with their environment why they are put on medications. Just accept all, be accepting always, of the difficulties and life challenges that people face, and meds they’re on.

Usually people go through struggles with their identity early in life, some go through changes later in life. That is a product of their interactions, and their experiences, that is one’s own right to privacy, how they find themselves, and who they become is a result of their interactions with others, not necessarily a product of their choices, but what is left to them. It is very common for people who are victims of assault, to them become members of different groups in society, or like different people. That is a normal consequence of rape, sex assault, to bind with those trusted, who do not hurt them, or their esteem. Women will be women, and some hook up with them. You don’t own our class, you can’t tell us what to do, we are Women.

Just because I have a girly website does not make me Gay, in fact I’m not Gay. And the purposes for this website is to empower women, not belittle them, why I created a website, because I have inferiority complex, because I grew up put down. That’s me, this is me now, this is me then, I’ve been keeping a diary my whole life, sound the same. I’ve always been this way, a writer, and talkative, easy to talk to.

Always Think of Yourself by Leslie A. Fischman

Always Think for Yourself by Leslie A. Fischman
01-13-18

Always think for yourself, you never know whos watching. Just got two new followers today @redcrossla and @navy_airpower_usa. –Best to always represent yourself well, and the rest should follow. What is trust? Trust is when you are put in a position of power, and you do not abuse those trusts and confidences. That can be achieved by doing your job, and by helping others as you say you will, not by overstepping boundaries, knowing your limits, and your place in life as a worker. There are some things we can and cannot talk about, and for everything else, we have the internet, to share our opinions on. Fears and resentments are things you share in private, under the confidences of licensed professionals and for good reason. Whenever we go backwards in life, we run the risk of reliving past traumas, and facing those traumas head on at the present. In order to overcome those traumas, we need assistance, medical assistance sometimes, in order to grow past those traumas, without inheriting disabilities along the way from our past or from others to whom we discuss our past with. I don't believe in ethnic cleansing, but as an individual of mixed ethnicity, I understand how easily my health can go in and out over the years, and by the difference in my weight, up and down, which is all dependent upon my self-esteem and how I feel about myself. How you feel about yourself, is based upon how you interact with others, as well as how others perceive you. Lifes not an STD, covered in disease, and neither are people, by communication. That is not how gay is spread or bad ideas, by communications, but by a person's unwillingness to follow general laws of common sense conduct and courtesy for others. How you treat others is how you will be treated in return. –The difficulty with disability is trying to be something youre not able, and then trying to fit in again. I never thought that my disability would get worse overtime, but it had, and now I am doing everything I can to overcome those hardships, and stay focused. Playing up to what people think a disabled person looks and sounds like, is fun, to just be yourself, and listen to your inner retard, however the writing world is very judgmental these days, and some days you have to always give your best. Theres a time and a place for everything, Im not an actress, so I can only give my best. People who are performers, are good at hiding issues within them, Im not one of them, my biggest weakness perhaps is that I can barely keep a secret, if made known would help others to better understand me, and my previous responsibilities as an advocate to others. You have to be very well, in order to help others, and in order to be well and get well, you have to understand yourself first before others. That is what I am currently working on building a better understanding of myself, so that I can best be there for others, professionally, and by learning, and maintaining my academic integrity –that is my strengths in academics, where I shine most.

Life's not all about Blogging by Leslie A. Fischman

01-12-18

Lifes not all about blogging, and it certainly is not all about you or the faults of others, blame rarely gets you far in places, complaints often frowned upon. Theres a certain state of helplessness, that follows in any addictive or malapadative behaviors that cause you to question yourself or others. According to Dr. Martin Seligman “The feeling of oppression and not being in control or in charge is the opposite of the top of the UpSpiral which is “feeling good and feeling free” (<http://appliedneuroscienceblog.com/learned-helplessness-way>). -Theres a condition of loss that occurs, loss of self, loss of standards, and loss of care. That's how you know you have addiction, when you become dependent upon a system of support, and that support when overused, creates a condition of self hate. That is the trouble with Social Media, is when to stop, look up, and look around you. What is it that you're trying to do in life, and never lose focus, not to social media, not to others, and not in place of self, and your life goals. One can be easily led astray online, and on the internet, and even while blogging, its hard to maintain footing in life, without the internet some days, if so then blogging may not be the correct profession for you, if unable to achieve your goals in life while blogging. Sometimes too much exposure, is cause for consequences, that flip back onto you, on your feet, on your side of the grass. What can you do to make your grass greener, by representing yourself well at all times, that requires not to share too much what is inside of us, and share more about what represents ourselves best. The outer layer.

You Cannot Predict the Future by Leslie A. Fischman

01-11-18

You cannot predict the future, best you can be is prepared. That is the key to success preparation, and stability. The stability provides you with the footing you need to achieve in life, not leveling over or under people, in order to achieve, that is not how one achieves by comparing oneself to others, that only causes disillusionment. Best to stay focused on oneself, how to achieve in life. When you are too worried about others, or the thoughts of others, this can cause illness, franticness. –During periods of turmoil we are especially prone to being concerned about others, that is only natural, if you already have a pre-existing condition, that causes you anxiety, social anxiety, or fear of the thoughts of others about you, this can become amplified during crisis, and times of need, why its important to slow down, and think twice. According to Richard K. James, in Crisis Intervention Strategies: “When people confer their focus of self-evaluation on others, they become dependent on others for validation of their being.” (12) This explains how blogging and likes help people in crisis, identify both whats bothering them, read about it, and also self-identify what their thoughts are for the day, or share how their feeling and get feedback, positive affirmations back, via likes. Social Media is a “macrosystem” still in its developmental stages, and a growing field where “There is great value in looking at crises in their total social and environmental settings –not simple as one individual being affected in linear progression of cause-and-effect events.” (12) There is much “interdependence among people and between people and events” that shrowd our relationships with one another in reality, on a person to person basis through interaction and via the “relationships” we develop with others. (12) A “situational crisis” is described as an “occurrence of uncommon and extraordinary events that an individual has no way of forecasting or controlling.” Such environmental concerns, and catastrophes, resulting in death of persons, and loved ones. These are events outside of our control, often times “sudden, shocking, intense.” (13) It is common during crisis for there to be “abnormal responses.” Do not be alarmed, by your peers, they are probably just voicing their opinions, but anything urgent is important to report, if they themselves are in danger of hurting themselves or others. Sometimes a crisis can be personal, “a state [of] ... impediments to life goals that cannot be overcome through customary behaviors.” (11) This is described as a “disturbed equilibrium” that requires “grief work” and an expressed willingness by the “clien[t] [to] wor[k] through the problem or grief” causing circumstances, in order to restor[e] [their] equiliubirum.” (11) Sometimes the “crisis service[s] never ceas[e].” (8) Especially on “suicide hotlines in major cities.” He further notes that “suicide prevention is probably the longest running intervention program” in the mental health field, and serves as a “benchmark for crisis intervention” in today’s times, to help “understand the several social movements [that] have been cricitcal to its development” such as the “women’s movement in the 1970s.” Grassroots advocates in the past have been known to assist people with PTSD. (7) There is a such thing as “transcrisis states” in which there is “unfinished business” (5) or where the “original crisis event” is “submerged below awareness.” This differs from PTSD in that it is caused “by an extremely traumatic event, and very specific criteria must be present for a diagnosis of PTSD to be made.” This condition is not limited to just those who suffer from PTSD by “so-called normal individuals” too experience these malapadative contiions, such as those who “quit taking their medicine” and therefore “capable of functioning at some minimal level” as a result. One of the “key differentiating element[s] of a transcrisis state is ... whether it is due to [some] trauma” or personality traits, substance abuse, psychosis, or chronic envionemental stressors, the state is residual and recurrent and always present to some degree.”

I don’t think that discrimination lasts forever, but if it does, it is doable and momentary, and can be lived with, its not a big deal, you just go on in life, and find somewhere, where you are accepted, and treated as human, and intelligent. Anyone who dehumanizes you and treats you as bait, or less than, probably doesn’t respect you and that's okay, you just move on. There is no excuse for suicide, even if everyone tries to convince everyone that your off and they're smart, it's not your responsibility to convince others, that you are intelligent, and doing well, just do well, and the rest should follow. We all have our own beliefs in life, and often times they do not change, even over time, there will always be blame and blame avoided. Never blame others for your current hardships I was raised to believe and never play victim. I did not grow up with fighting, never have been in a fight my whole life. When there was fighting, to talk about the negative, I become suicidal, not able to cope with fighting, because I grew up in a disorganized state, and had to make things better for everyone, that required a tremendous amount of focus on self, not others.

What to Talk About by Leslie A. Fischman

It's not always necessary to share your two cents or to say what's in your mind, that is for a particular time and place, and among certain groups of people, or persons. Be wary of to whom you are speaking and who is in your audience, is affected by your speech and what you say. Some audiences come, and some are connected. Be careful not to connect information to people or existing connections but on your own, assemble and put together information, and then people can go to that information. I see now why we have blogs and links from blogs, not blog directly. It is offensive to others in direct communications, when communications outside do not accurately reflect communications inside, sometimes we need an outer layer of communications that supports positive communications within why we have Twitter, a group of professionals, who communicate outside of Facebook back to us. Minimalism Amplifies by Leslie A. Fischman
01-10-18

There's a subtle difference between what is accepted said, and what is accepted past, and what is accepted presently, as in accordance with virtues set forward into motion. What is accepted is not the past, but in favor of the future, that exemplifies good bearings on current turmoils. When there is a rush, there is energy, and that energy must then be transferred to positives, positive focus points. When there is energy and that energy is applied to negatives, negatives result. Why it's important to always stay calm, and to focus on what's within, not without, when in crisis. The common thing to do, is to focus on what you do have, not what you have not, when in crisis. Not to think of self, but to think of others, what are your needs, and what can you do to best assist others in crisis, is not to focus on self, but to focus on others, that is counterproductive when you change focus away from you to others, that shows that you yourself are not stable enough, and reliant upon others for assistance. Who is strong and who is not, is not important during times of need, but your own choices are much more important, as to who you go to for assistance. That is always important to go best to sources of support qualified to assist you. Redirection of focus is because some want to direct focus away from them, sometimes redirecting of focus occurs, because one wants to direct their own focus away from themselves, and their current troubles, escape from reality, that is called fantasy. There are such things as fantasy campaigns, I am not one of them, I am real. –Minimalism amplifies, because it suggests to focus on a few things rather than see the big picture, and what's in place, is what is left, that is minimalism to me, what remains, what is gone, is junk from our lives, why there was a minimalist movement to help us focus more on what's important, and what matters most to us, to get from point A to point B, positivity, and not go backwards, and relive the past over again. When you are reliving your past, you are making amends to get to your future self, a better self, and that is why amends are made. Never be too apologetic as accepting yourself as wrong, you are always right, the victim is never at fault, always remember that, in times of crisis, the one who suffers most is considered the victim. –I was raised never to play victim in life, and to always move forward, be strong. That is from a political standpoint best, when victim blaming occurs its because fault is placed on the victim, as to the victim's current circumstances as asked for. I have never asked for any help or assistance my whole life, able to always work alone. How I was raised, to be independent of others, eventually you date and fall apart. That is the difficulty of being a Woman, giving your body to someone else, and trusting your body with another. You don't realize the repercussions until too late.

Commentary is for Professionals by Leslie A. Fischman

Commentary is for Professionals, and there is a reason for this. I am just a MuckRack.com Writer, not a professional commentator. I will always have my opinions, politically correct or not, always share how I feel about any given situation, and how that makes me feel, and how I have responded, and will continue to respond. Whether under stress, or not, or doing well, I will always be a writer. I have kept a journal my whole life, this is something about me, that will never change. I will always have my thoughts, and likewise, the reader will always have their thoughts. How are thoughts made, based upon exposure, and based upon how you feel about yourself, that will gear your thoughts, always be positive minded. When you are negative minded, your thoughts will wander to places, that cause you illness, yourself, and hopefully but not sometimes others illness. Always be mindful that things are not what they seem, and even if you hear something, about someone, to still respect that person, when you see them, that's how you know whether anything bad has been said about someone behind their back, usually they look better than. I was once told, "haven't you ever noticed that when someone talks $hit about someone it always makes them look better" laying in bed next to my ex #RobDebakey. Be very careful with your words, as they may be used, to portray something else about you, your likeness to others. In addition, always be careful what you say about others, can be used to pass judgment upon you. Ive said this before I'm someone who's side is rarely taken in an argument or agreed with, they always take the other side, knowing this I built a campaign, in which all could foster. A mutual sense of humor, to begin focusing on whats important the weather, not just to make conversation, but because it matters. #LeonardoDicaprio. –Its funny once you begin to write in public, how much is memorized, and what is remembered that you cannot control, you only hope that people see positive, and trust you as a writer. They may not agree with all your opinions, and its not betrayal that hold back, but caution. Its not fame that retards, but behavior while famous. Always be kind to others, as everyone is doing their very best to represent all. All crimes are senseless, if there is one quote you should remember, that is the media's choice.

Anything ending with more, means, a good suit, lightly taken, not disturbing. I'm learning as I go what can be talked and joked about and what cannot be. On the otherhand anything that breaks confidence, causes one to question, decreases esteem. Always be thankful for your places in life, without whom we'd be lost.

What you think is wrong, if so, is wrong, only if you think it is wrong. Always play by the rules, and go from there #CHP. -There is nothing we can do when we experience any type of loss, usually follows a period of powerlessness. I'm not a Doctor but I know well enough the difference between right and wrong. -I have grown a lot since 2013, spiritually, and academically. I am still working on finishing my LLM at Thomas Jefferson School of Law, and work part-time on and off. I realize that during my time away from work and school is always a time to regroup and get strong again, so that I can be there for others. -You cannot move forwards without going backwards, that doesn't mean stay there, you can reflect, life involves constant reflection without going through the motions. -Everything is always clear backwards moving forwards have faith.

Some Ideas by Leslie A. Fischman

01-08-18

Some ideas help us move forward in life and some don't. There's a stopping point, at what point to we stand back and look at everything as it is, either accepting of the times or rejecting our present circumstances as real and true. That is a judgment call based upon those who upon viewing either choose or decide to accept anything said as proper philosophy. It's all about acceptance, that's how one moves forward. It's all about integrating ideas, that when it settles, it settles well to all. That's how good ideas are made. They're the type of ideas, that make us stand back in life, and look at life in aw, those are considered good ideas, something needed, and necessary. What's unnecessary, are attachments, and promotions, those usually hurt ideas, now looking back, as ideas get applied, to the promoter of a work or an idea. I see now. The meaning can change depending on who is promoting an idea, how it will be viewed. At the same token, when viewed, the viewers reaction is interpreted, and understood as connected, screen to audience, or work of art to audience. What you pay attention to is what matters, to you, but something else might stand out to your audience, that you have no control over, best to always be a perfectionist. Regret occurs when we don't do our best and we settle for less in life, we hold back regret. Wish we would have tried harder, or wish that things would have turned out differently, that's called regret. What is read into is what comes out in the readers mind. Those are not subconscious results, but a matter of how well read and what's being read into, is what will come out of any given piece of writing or work of art. The overall feel and the overall message is what gets taken away, always think positively of others, without connections to mainstream media, when interpreting.

Whats Important to You by Leslie A. Fischman

Whats important to you matters, however it may not always matter to others. What you project about yourself personally, is how you fail, in the image department. That cannot be removed from your record, how others see you, that is something that you cannot control. In the grand scheme of things, how you will be viewed and judged will be a matter of principles based, not gusto or energy, but by your nature and value and givingness to the trade, that is your writing. Overall how you will be perceived is how you are judged by others, as worthy of attention, put together, a cohesive idea, or something that needs more work. That is called acceptance. What matters to you may not matter to everyone, but that doesn't mean that you or your ideas don't matter at all. With proper training and instruction you too can make a difference in the lives of others, its all a matter of manifestation, and willingness to learn and try, always doing your best. How you represent self matters, and based upon those judgments and first impressions, a judgment is passed upon you, accepted or declined, mattered or fabricated, together or not, or picked apart. You should never be insulted by the input of others, and that should not change you or your feelings about yourself, or cause you to question yourself or others. That is your instability, a reflection of your own instability, when you feel judged. To think positively of oneself, is how to undo negative opinions about oneself.

What We See We Remember by Leslie A. Fischman

01-06-18

What we see is what we remember is what gets promoted about us, not by whats in our closet, or in our bedrooms. That is not how people see us, by our private spaces. Is not how you judge a cover by its book, its by how you remember identify yourself, not by the baggage of others, or by your things in life. You cant go backwards and try to be a better you, you have to just be you as you are now. That's how to build a better you, from here forward, not by going backwards. Your past picture is always your best profile picture, as you remember you best. Ive found that that has helped me, gear myself back to reality, and how I understand my direction and self in life, and where I am headed, not by the direction of others, headed in life. Its important to stay true to your character, not be easily impressed upon or molded, slightly stubborn, but cautious, is the best way to lead yourself in any public environment. I have found that to rehabilitate my character it takes time, by good merits only. When I infuse myself with the troubles of others, bear burdens, that's my weight. Not the weight of others upon me, but my instincts, errors, failure, to overcome. Perfection is a job, not a hobby, when you perfect yourself, you understand your own intrinsic value, that no other person's value should affect you in communication. Its not contagious, stupidity, its just a recognized failure, always do your best to repair yourself separately.

Being Raised Conservative by Leslie A. Fischman

01-06-18

When you leave the woodwork you realize what you have, I was raised very conservative, and now I understand why. It was to protect me from harm, that when we let loose we will be judged by others, its how we are taken seriously, that others will judge us, based upon our own merits, and what we bring to the table, skills. Those skills are by education and background, those build the backbones to companies, and from there a company grows. What is independence. We chatted today before the meeting, to me that means a Corporation that is independently run, by its employees, who are independent of one another, not co-dependent. In the real world, I see that individuals, base selves on their accolades and based upon their merits, how confidence is made, not by being inside a group but by what they bring to the table, that is how confidence is made. You can only see yourself, when you are in a group of people, who is accepting of you not hard on you, know your worth. Sometimes in close relationships, people are hard on us, that's to protect us from harm. When we understand the value of self, in relationship to others, we will know ourselves best. How to behave in front of others, whether to be known for our present or our past, and from that point determine how well known, know you best, not others, how to get to know yourself among people, how to self identify. When people look at you and think you are something you are not, that is because they know you based on what they hear, not based on what they know, or see, and that is always understandable, we give thanks to others, for acceptance always, how to move forward, and not discuss our private lives out loud, or professional selves, in order to maintain a positive outlook in life, is by our work ethic not others points of views. This is clear upon meeting people very well adjusted, I too was once well adjusted, and now struggle because of my relationships gone sour, while attending law school. I will never understand the pressure perceived until I undergo it myself. What you say about yourself, is by what rumor is known about you, always be truthful, and give value to your life presently, everything is a matter of correction. When you are a perfectionist and corrected, then you should know better how to behave is how one is treated, who looks or appears mentally ill, that's called passing judgment upon another's circumstances, and adding fruit to the table of concerns. What is concerning is what alarms, people should never be alarmed by adjusters. Adjusters are people who are accepting of all people, they themselves must be conservative minded, if to be a backbone to others, to mirror conversation behavior. That is how trust is built, not by surprises, but by dialect, being conservative minded. Conservative minded means being a defensive driver in life, watching out always for concerns, addressing concerns accordingly, and by offering reassurances. Reassurances are guaranteed by behavior present, and behavior continued, elsewhere. It is known that I struggled with alcohol after law school, its never been a problem in my life professionally, always sound, and never a threat to my environment, or to others,

I'm not a loose canon, its by judgments threats to me, that occurred (once), said something back under the influence (once), that is not me but a product of my circumstances, I was judged as something I am not, and because they thought I was a whore, I was treated like that, Im very chaste, never dressed like a whore, never behaved like one, always conservative toward others.

Moving Forward and Backtracking by Leslie A. Fischman
01-05-18

Whenever we move forward in life its common to backtrack and review ourselves, our strengths our weaknesses, and try to better our self and our image. Life is all about perfection. How we view ourselves, much to the same effect is how others will view us. If we do not go backwards and make our amends, and edit, then we as writers, subject ourselves to harsh and unnecessary scrutiny. Writing is all about perfection, no spelling errors, and no typographical mistakes. All of which affect the readers understanding of what is written. It is very important as a writer and publisher to always be unique, and to always be neat and tidy, that is how to make a good blog, one that is read, with ease. When there are errors, and blocks this causes the reader to question the source, and that is why people are blocked, and questioned, when they themselves are not tidy and neat looking they will be judged. It is by how we present ourselves, that we are looked at, manage your presence at all times well, in order to be well received, that is how to be best approachable.

Life Isn't About Image or Connections by Leslie A. Fischman

01-03-18

Life isn't about image or connections, its upon your own basis you become you, based upon your own merits in life, not the merits or good merits of others. How you self-identify and what becomes of you is how you will be judged by others. Always be yourself, you need not justify why you are the way you are or for what reasons you are ill is no ones business but your own. If you are doing everything you can to be well, than no people or persons should make you sick. People are not contagious, its bad ideas that are feared as being contagions, everyone is responsible for themselves, you cannot control others, it is not by our ideas that make us who we are but by our thoughts which control our actions and behaviors that make us who we are, how we are in public, how we address others, and how we ourselves are addressed, is a manifestation of how we see ourselves is how others will see us in reply, always be appropriate in public dressed and around others. That is how to be well-liked. When you are judged that is no excuse for self hatred or for upset, you can only do your best, and if your best is not well received than acceptance of self is required you cannot be accepted by all, that's called discrimination. You just have to accept that some people will not like you for whatever reasons, whether by your associations connections what you represent or what they think you represent or by where your headed in life, they think deserving or not. Intimidation and wins are for the weak, life's not a competition, take life easy, and always be there for others, when you help yourself, others will be helped too.

Ideologies and Happenings by Leslie A. Fischman

Who you put in charge of ideologies matters as to happenings, is by popular opinions and by likeness whether imitated or consumed. There are consumer trends which we identify which tell us the likes of our audiences, and by those trends dictate the material that is produced for our audiences. That is the only mathematical way in which to please all. People in the entertainment business cater to their audiences, by listening services, understand what are the likes and dislikes of individuals so that they can best provide for their audiences. Based upon those numbers provided by servers like Google, we can tell what is in demand and what is not in demand, by what is helping us to cope and what is hurting our abilities to cope. –How things happen is by choice, the choices you make, are what influence your thinking and what makes up your mind, is how your life happens, what happens around you is your environment, and that you cannot control what people think about you and what happens around you, you can only control you. –When you are in control of you, then everything around you seems in control. When you are not in control of you then everything around you seems out of control. Its important to always maintain a level head about you, why those in positions of power, with earning power, are put in caretaking positions of trust to help us.

Whats in Good Taste Whats in Bad Taste by Leslie A. Fischman

01-01-18

Its never in good taste to speak poorly of others, including oneself, whether it be in jest, or to paint a picture. You can never build yourself up by telling stories about self or others, it just makes you look like a gossip or a yenta (Jews call it).

Always be respectful of others, and do not make mention of the problems of others, or have pity for those who do not need your pity nor ask for it, that's you subjecting yourself to harm, by speaking negatively of others or at others to generate a reaction from them to please yourself, that's called selfish behavior, in poor taste.

What is bad taste, in bad taste is called to be disrespectful toward others, whether it be the customer, or the consumer, or of the work product of the writer, always be respectful of others, for their craftsmanship and their bravamente. Without whom we would not be here today, those who give us life, and protect us from harm. They are people generally in positions of trust who we admire, and hold dear, everyone else is subject for scrutiny that is a given, not one more important than the other.

People will often times try to make things about themselves to cause hardship to others, that is called unwanted solicitation and unwanted adherence to comment. It is never ones responsibility to respond to any outside commentary, outside of the arena of a writing space, there are plenty of spaces to comment herein. –My following is not very big, I have calculated numbers, and it has not risen to the level where anyone should treat me as famous or hold me to that expectation I'm not.

I am a private citizen, I do not currently have a job, was recently hospitalized because they thought I was suicidal when I was not suicidal, and am beginning work for my Mom this week. I am an on and off again Law Student at Thomas Jefferson School of Law, studying Risk Management and Compliance in Finance.

In my free time, I study trauma, trying to build a better understanding of trauma victims, including myself, and how to build better coping mechanisms suited to my individual needs as well as to the individual needs of those responding to others. That's always in good taste to put yourself before others when sick, and to put others before yourself when well. What causes sickness, is God's understanding.

Always Stay Calm by Leslie A. Fischman
01-31-18

They say that social anxiety is: “Also known as social phobia, social anxiety disorder is the excessive and unreasonable fear of social interaction. Having the fear of being criticized, judged or closely watched, people with social anxiety tend to avoid social communication, especially when offered through online services.” (<https://www.learning-mind.com/social-anxiety-disorder/>).

If so ... how can social media help curtail these disorders thoughts, not make worse, these conditions, that are already pre-existing, that are not heavily interacting in person, but interact online heavily, and have social anxiety, usually people who should be social online, should be being social in real life, and able to therefore adjust online well. That would only make sense in the long run. Therefore its best to practice and run the risk of losing these positive life skills, with too much online interaction and not enough in person interaction, this may worsen and trauma therapy is another, and blogging is one thing, but interaction, social interaction, seems to be vital a key component to normal

Balance and Esteem by Leslie A. Fischman

Balance in life and esteem are important for positive functioning, without which, we often times feel lost. Sometimes its companionship, sometimes, its relationships that make us feel whole. And sometimes its work that makes us feel complete. Whatever it is always make balance, so that one does not fall part, and so that each life does not affect the other. –When you are nervous its usually because things are not going right in life, or you are not doing something right, this causes nervousness, imperfection. There is only so much you can do to be perfect before when and if so, that is what therapy is for and that is what friends and companions are for talking and sharing emotions with. Publically considered taboo, no one wants to hear your problems, usually people only want to hear good news, theres a reason for that, maintaining balance is so important, problems, can cause disarray, and disarray can cause mental illness, mental illness is caused by fighting, and fights start before a fight there is tension, that’s the assumption of a fight about to begin, an anticipation of a fight, an anticipation of negativity, or but always see the positive in life, anticipate well.

Be in Control of Your Own Problems by Leslie A. Fischman
01-31-18

Always be in control of your problems, in your life, and never make your problems the business of others, or interfere with your relationships with others to know your problems in life or your problems with others, that only causes discord and rumor and distrust and paranoia. Paranoia are upset with yourself, a perfectionist, wanting all relationships to be sound and well, when one relationship or another falters, then you do this may cause one to self-harm. Self-harming can result from failures, fighting, or from mistakes in life: sometimes caused by the use of judgments on others while under the influence of drugs or alcohol as they may be skewed or off base with reality when you are up or hurt in touch with the realities of situations present in another world, that is based upon your personal viewpoints or recollections. Sometimes what we know and see, such as on social media, and sometimes our recollections may be based upon what we know, by experience, what that means we have a foundational problem, our interests are to [criticize] and when [those opinions held] cannot rest one may feel like [not right], [and] not getting to the bottom of something, that means you are [hurting] the wrong person [you should never hurt anyone right or not], why people are turning on you [always be nice to people whether you think they are deserving or not of a good life, a job, or a business but that person living their life, should not bother anyone else's image or livelihood]. Its important not to prosecute people, and not to accuse people of misconduct. That is the job of law enforcement. Not the job of civilians to involve themselves with. There are TV Shows discourse to inflict pain upon others or dissect the minds of others, or to pick apart the genuineness of others hurt one another, you cannot do that only makes one sick.

The Confidences of Your Own by Leslie A. Fischman

01-31-18

Always keep the confidences of your own in your best interests. Never allow the confidences of others, to bolster your own insecurities, to function or work in congruent to your best interests. When you are sound your mind is sound, when your best interests are met you are sound. Don't overlap two negatives to build a positive inference for another's to interpret you in the negative via adaptation of something said purposefully, that is a wrong interpretation a forced saying of two stories at once to build an inference, and is wrong. Its two stories heard at the same time in a separate space to build an additional inference or wrong or allude to any wrong present, future, or past, or ongoing presently, or others to build confidences off of your achievements in life, or off of what gives you courage in life, and esteem, that's a misrepresentation. It does not help all, and the replace you. The writer in life, or take away my life, and hurt my ability to live and function, that's a misuse of my life, a causal consequence of the misuse of my writings , for the purpose of causing harm to my mind, to my psyche, and to my well-being, that's wrong. And should be stopped. It is wrong to harm, stalk, molest, or otherwise harm others in a professional space, unknowingly. You cannot help others as best you can function well.

When you give your confidence away to others, it can be misused and taken from you. When your confidence is taken from you, you are a confidence expert that is something that everyone figures out for themselves in life.

Knowingly in the Wrong by Leslie A. Fischman

01-22-18

When you are knowingly in the wrong, own it. There is nothing you can do to make things right, by harping on the negatives, best you can do is your defenses to idiocracy or stupidity, you just have to represent yourself, well enough to keep up with the pace of life. No one can help you with the illnesses of others, as they are a product of their own minds, not yours. You are always responsible for yourself first and foremost, for the wrongs of others. As directed means as directed means as directed. No one on medication should drink alcohol for those reasons, as directed by your Doctor or Pharmacist should you take medications, in which the combination of alcohol, impairs any of your abilities, why I don't drink. I am knowingly retarded, Ive had a learning disability since I was little, learned multiplication tables by tracing my hands, numbers on the tiles in Kindergarten, there is no news flash for those struggling with learning disabilities, you just need to be kind to all. How I was able to succeed was through hard work and effort, and with a strong faith in myself and others, as well as those around me, trusting their decision making skills, never paranoid. To hang out with the best of them, you have to do well in life, that means following rules of order, and doing your best to be apart of, not just a bystander to the wrongs made by others, only defenses. You cannot blame people for the wrongs of others, that is clearly wrong, you cannot blame people period when bad things occur, that is not the responsibility of people to be blamed, accept blame, place blame, or worry about it. You should always take responsibility for yourself in life, you are NEVER responsible for others in life, just yourself. When you represent yourself well, that is the point of image. Image is when of and concerning you, you represent yourself best. Nothing that I have written has been influenced by my experiences I know best, and respond well, to circumstances, always see clearly. When you do right in the World, you will foster a better world. To do well in life, you cannot represent the best interests of others well, that's plain and simple.

Accept People for Who They Are by Leslie A. Fischman

Accept people for who they are, they know best themselves, it's a waste of time to question others on their paths in life, everyone is re life. Deserved or not, sometimes we fall victim to the choices we make in life, and then have to make amends with ourselves, and move exhibiting behavioral health issues, associated to what pains us about our past lives. There is always time to move forward, no one is p hurts, that just re-instigates the cycle of violence, and enables people to harm you again and again, and again. Just move forward. Whe never be acceptance again. That's how you know whether or not you have ruined a relationship or messed up in life, when you can't g backwards, or a friendship or professional association breaks. Not always resulting from a break of trust, but usually resulting from a b foot is not forward in life, you are more susceptible to relationships broken, increased odds against the maintenance of those relationsh then becomes easier to maintain those relationships both professionally and personally, how to keep going in life.

You Cant Change the Past by Leslie A. Fischman

You cant change the past or what others think of you, why you should just be, rather than try to convince others you are something tha that come and go from our lives, but we must always remain the same. Not one person won or lost in life, should make or break you, s going in life, and think positively of others, that even without them in your lives, they would still want whats best for you. Its when yo wrong for you in your life, its when you think positively of self and others that things go right for you in life. Never take into question breaks you down. –Sometimes a little give and take goes a long way in life, assembling whats to keep and assembling whats to trash in us, in order to put our best foot forward in life. It takes time to understand what is wanted in life, and what is rejected in life, for some others in life. Nothing trashy ever gets returned, and nothing trashy ever gets respect or gains notoriety in this lifetime, but everything the faults of others, they are known by, their weaknesses, not their strengths, even after they achieve success, this you learn the hard w achieve post trauma of seeing someone you admire get trashed, that's the sad part. Theres always room for forgiveness, forgive all.

Everybody has a mind of their own. It's not up to you to decide how people should think about you or others, never persuade others to individuals or groups of individuals in life, as that is holding prejudice toward any group of people or set of individuals within a group meaning, we cannot control the thoughts of others, only our own. What we see best fit is a matter of manifestation of how we see the V we feel as though we are wronged we may behave differently. When we feel that others may be wrong to others or toward us, we may that you are not your associations in life, and only you can be you in life.

Always Focus on What Matters Most by Leslie A. Fischman

Always focus on what matters most, during times of controversy, never assume that everyone knows your whole story but what you sh That is an assumption, that others can read you, or know what you are thinking, or what's going on in your head, and in your life at an illness is a daily struggle, something that must be managed everyday and cared for, its like diabetes, you have to take your medication you are not well, it is difficult for you to be strong and to be there for others and likewise do well. Drugs and alcohol may amplify this your progress health wise, recovery time takes time, especially from drugs and alcohol.

Whereas, Recovery is defined by Google as: “a return to a normal state of health, mind, or strength. [or] the action or process of regain something stolen or lost.” This is a loss of a stable mental health condition in place an unstable mental health condition, caused by the stability causes one to question self as well as others, can induce paranoia. Why when in paranoid states and not doing well, its import and drugs. I'm not sure why they let you drink in Movie Theaters, but if you have movie paranoia, I would not suggest drinking and or films, as you may hallucinate, or misinterpret the film having read my blogs. The well see well, and the well looking at those with men the well, to figure out what is causing mental illness. That will never change, people will always wonder for what reasons caused the u not conspiracy, but pressures upon pressures, that cause mental illness, and eventually turning on oneself, or others, paranoid. Its impo yourself in a safe space so that does not occur, so that you don't say anything that causes others to question your stability and ability in to the best of your ability, to do well in life.

Friendships Can Never Be Wrecked by Leslie A. Fischman
01-17-18

Friendships can never be wrecked, only mended, by bettering yourself. When one friendship ends another will blossom, never lose faith. You cannot go backwards in life, you can only move forwards. "Life is no Nintendo Game" in the wise words of Eminem. -Going back does not make better situations for self or for others, but only festers wounds. Know you best and be that, don't compare yourself to others blossoming in life, and being at your best, always do well, to be well, and likewise be kind to others appreciate well, to be well, not be will always be different types of people, with different mood settings, that will not change we are only human, and like the water with much of others, as their problems become your problems, if thought about. You will always be yourself, and no one can change that all know, and what you hear is what you think, and what becomes of you is how you become toward self and around others, is a product of bettering yourself everyday, that is what will surround you, you have to work for it. Nothing comes easy in life, including having friends something you have to earn by good merits to be surrounded by good people, if not there are plenty of people to surround yourself with never change, there will always be systems of support online for those in need, on social media and away from social media, to help you. Sometimes its difficult to share out loud what is bothering us, and that's okay. Its never too late to change, and its never too late to make. Always be kind to yourself, when you are kind to yourself. Others will not trash you or think different of you, when you are well, others stop at just okay, and always do your best, perfection is everything in life, when you get good at catching your mistakes in life, you get others in life, and that's how you see and become a better person having known them, not all people are perfect, and sometimes we have ourselves and in others, what is true and real are our own realities. When we fixate on others, we can become real, if our Worlds feel u reality. To be cured is to see well the thoughts of self as well as the thoughts of others. To what becomes justified is by traits seen and wrongs of others, I've said this before, always be true. Its by who you identify with you become, identify with whole people to be real.

Negative Opinions Don't Matter by Leslie A. Fischman

Negative opinions, don't matter, those are things, words, places and people that get under your skin, make you not think about you, on What matters is proper maintenance of positive opinion, its not what you do that matters but what you say, interjects a negative opinion reflects your belief systems. How you were raised does not matter, its what you do with your life that matters most, importance to acco not just yourself, but everyone around you. Be well minded in order to have well thoughts, about self and other. Causes for disruption your own sense of peace, and whereabouts mentally. When you circle about, make it not collapse on negatives but by focusing on rebu how to get from one point to the next without stumbling or falling into a pile of oopses and controversies. -Negativity is when you try controversy [where] exist[ent] then stumble and fall into the pile of negativity, always look out for one another, but not to the point wh one or others or many. Think before you speak, crime is crime, and people are people. People are not crimes, and crimes are not peopl criminally minded, and crimes are caused by those who commit crimes, crimes upon people, places, and people. Some words are cons directed at people, specifically, and words directed at self that harm, or words directed toward others that harm. Those who get harm a and will always be remembered, including those who harmed them, that's a sad truth, to be ignored. What's most important is to focus well as the deceased, and to always do what's best, it's by [respect for your elders], we become special [I was thought to have become special], we are all apart of someone who has passed come before us, that will not change. We are a product of ourselves, not of the deceased. Do not apply your current life to the deceased or compare self to the deceased that is considered sin. Worship things not people. People are worshipped, it's by things, not by people. -Guilt gets passed over much like a lawsuit, gets passed on from generation to generation, has become too involved in the problems of others, you tend to take it personally, don't take anything in life too personally, including the problems including yourself, do not internalize hate as directed toward self when on others. Do not mimic hate as a representation of self toward others, you only hurt yourselves, I've said this before. When you share a lot you become paranoid, because those are your inner workings, to not be duplicated among yourselves in life. When you get your hand dirty in life, it's because you've entrapped yourself thinking about the problems of others, that are not your own, always focus on yourselves not others. Always help one another group by group, person, connections are made one on one. So it's always important to be yourself, why it's important to be yourself. The best gift you can give to others, that's how to avoid trading in yourself, or giving up your identity to another or others, always stick to your roots. You don't take anything away, to empower, let them come to you. You cannot empower victims, you can only redirect them to someone more qualified.

Likeness or bear minded I don't look at anyone or them or read any such things or people, I am myself, I bear no identifiable traits of a likeness, what's thought what's said what's felt inklings [are] not true until said don't go away. To help others, you must be whole. #Sober #Clear

What is Racism? By Leslie A. Fischman
01-17-18

What is racism. Racism occurs when you do not like a particular person or group of people, and because of that dislike you either (1) fear, (2) threaten (6) injure esteem or (7) put down because one thinks that it predominates because one's beliefs are better than or more sound than others. When one is discriminated that occurs because based on one's behaviors, use of likeness, they determine that one is like that one is and is characterized or mischaracterized, denominates. To denominate in mass media, occurs when a likeness, is used and portrayed as a kind of person disliked, that is to denominate a particular group or class of individuals as lesser than, and that the predominant view -goal to be seen and to no beliefs can be discriminated, as these are ideas inside of you that cannot be seen outside of you. Therefore racism does not exist inwardly you cannot see outwardly beliefs or resentments or fears held toward any groups of people or individuals. -When one is put down due to bullying at home, and as a result of bullying at home, that caused failure, and because of failure, that caused loss of esteem, and caused loss of focus, and because of loss of focus that caused lack of achievement, and because of lack of achievement that caused resentment enough, and because that not hired, because I was not an Attorney and he only hires Attorneys, I was a Housekeeper and Intern ABA Clerk.

Bullying at home, was because of cocaine use in college 2006 for a semester.

Recognizing Failures by Leslie A. Fischman
01-16-18

When you recognize your own failures in life, you can fix yourself. Until then you will be lost. Know your weaknesses, and know your strengths, always time to regroup in life, and think positively of self and others. What causes a loss, and causes a gain, is a matter of manifestation, real, true or not true about others, and upon that you react to others, and to people in your lives. Never take out your failures or unhappiness to blame, never to blame for one's own current hardships. Know that until you are willing to move forward in life, and see best your interests, then and only then will you be able to move past reasonings or people in your life who have caused you hardship or illness. Know your own rules and regulations of others, as well as protocols, how best to respond during crisis conditions, not make ill but make better self and others, strong foundations, a willingness to surrender to your own faults in life, and help make better self and others. That is how to rebuild. It is not the time to confront or attack others, as you are wrong when you take out your aggression or unhappiness out on others. When your energy is not directed toward others, that is when you will do well in life. When you communicate wrongs of others to build sides that are your side will not be taken in life. Never turn on people, to whom you confide in, those are people on your team in life.

Intent to Communicate by Leslie A. Fischman

Intent to communicate is defined by Google as: “Non-intentional communicative intent is the communication of a message that is automatic thinking (spontaneous). Intentional communicative intent is the deliberate communication of a message to a person, whether it's via general communication. Online you have to be very careful what you communicate about self and to others, what you think. It is always a reflection of self when you communicate with one person. Be careful not of what you think but of what you interpret via those communications, formulate your thoughts and responses. Always have a balanced perspective whenever passing judgment upon others. What you think, see, feel and hear is always a matter of manifesting your needs, safety needs, and the needs of those around you. What you relate to reflects your own needs, and who you relate to affects your needs. Always be respectful of others. You. What is public safety? Google defines public safety as: “Public Safety refers to the welfare and protection of the general public. It is a governmental responsibility. Most states have departments for public safety. The primary goal of the department is prevention and protection of property affecting safety such as crimes or disasters.” [2] Public safety is a learned phenomenon, something that can always be perfected when you have written communications, how you communicate to others, is how you will be judged, as conservative or not, helpful or not, or considerate behavior, or deemed influential in a bad way, that denotes harm causing agents attracting harm causing agents. Always be respectful of others orally in communication, any unwanted communications result in aggravation and loss of sleep, to those whom communications are unwanted. Always be respectful of others. Communications speak to your local Government officials, like Michael Moore. That is how to make change happen, not by attacking

Bad Memories Are What Hurt by Leslie A. Fischman

Bad memories are what hurt, let your memory be your memory, and go from there. It takes time to overcome trauma. When someone hurts you, you deal with it and move on, to someone who makes you feel good about yourself. The cycle of abuse occurs, when you keep hurting others, then you get hurt, or hurt yourself or others. Its okay to walk away without a fight. You don't have to be there for everyone. Know your worth. You are a reflection of themselves a composite of their experiences not a composite of those who have harmed them, do not be a composite of their pain. Always take good care of yourselves, and when there is love there is beauty, and when there is beauty there is peace, and when there is peace there is calm with us. How the birds sing, when all is at peace and they are happy with us, means we are doing a good job. Know when you need help, know when to get help, that's the best always you can do. Paranoia is caused by backwards blame and hardships caused by others on you. Paranoia, and causes one to go off setting in life, appear weird to others, and makes others stay away from them. Don't allow others to hurt you. Considered a crime, when you try to turn a good bad, or make a good look bad, there is bad and there is good, and there is really bad feelings. Don't f-k up your lives to please others. Always do the best that you can do, and don't worry about those who do not care well for them.

and causes for abuse are not the causes for illness, its when you allow others to hurt or harm you you become ill with self, and not like cannot happen for self or ability to give love to others is hindered. Don't be experimental with others, that's an HRC issue and needs C now follows me. I think theyre trying to tell me not to worry about image and be real, calm know that all is well, so long as you think should make or break you in life, and that in order to get support you need to go to systems of support.

Whats Important to The Reader Doesn't Matter by Leslie A. Fischman
01-14-18

Whats important to the reader doesn't matter. Everyone has their own poignant recall and experiences they remember, their own lives choose which moments in life define you. You should never be defined by others, or by experiences in life. What you remember is what is important. You as the reader have a mind of your own. What you remember is a choice, what you think is important is a choice, and how exemplifying good moral character a general understanding a proper care for self and others, a degree of sensitivity for those preserved life, not rejected. What occurs when associations are made by telephone, and by what people say not by what is written and used to call a persuasive argument against someone, by opinions shared about someone's character based on pulling something that they say out of context applied to something else. –Its important not to judge others at what point did things become bad for others in life, there are timelines and points during those moments in time, when drugs and alcohol are involved, that is what is punished, and for those reasons others are punished. That is how crime works, by punishing people, good people, to undo the wrongs of themselves. Your discomforts with people, even if I did commit suicide, there would be no one to blame but myself for it. All suicides are retarded and selfish acts, occurring by a period in time, when all hope should be lost, but by continuously rebuilding from where people left off is how you build sound in recovering from hardships, and understanding the hardships of others better. –We are not actors, we can only be human, and by that I

Don't Laugh Until It Hurts by Leslie A. Fischman

Don't laugh until it hurts. There are some people who are still suffering from losses, who have not yet made their amends, and still in pain over who's side to take. In life you are never obligated to fight, takes sides, or even participate in battles that are not your own. That only wreaks havoc on you psyche, mental health and well-being, and enters you into the blame game, which is a neverending story. Basically you have to be selfish when it comes to accepting any losses in life, that is time to only think about yourself, self-care is a number one priority, and so is caring for those around you. When you are ill, it is your responsibility not to make those around you ill too. It is your responsibility to make strong yourself, and to promote the general health and well-being of those around you. You cannot expect others to be there for you when you are down, why its important to be selfish when not well. You cannot care for others, when you are sick, as you run the risk of becoming overly (overtly ie needy) dependent on others, for serenity and peace. You have to find your own sense of peace in life, if you are to be surrounded by others in peace. You cannot expect others to provide for you something you cannot create for yourself. That is impossible to demand a life that you yourself cannot envision, and expect the same from others to provide for you a better life, you have to go out and do so yourself, make it happen, it will not happen for you lamenting and blaming.

You Are What You Connect To by Leslie A. Fischman
02-13-18

You are what you connect to in life. When you love yourself everything, all else works out for you in life. When you do not do as you're told things tend to not work out as well for you in life. Its all about following directions. Self-harming is for the weak minded, the feeble minded, and those who suffer from addictions. Who cannot stop themselves from harming themselves, those are people in need of help. There are those too who are hurtful in the sense that they are emotionally and physically abusive toward others sexually and/or verbally. Those are the types to stay away from as they may cause harm to you, your psyche, and your general health and well-being. People who are emotionally abusive do not love you not that they wish to harm you, but they do not love you equally in life, and cause harm to you. Then they are not people you should love and care for in life. That doesn't mean that they are bad people necessarily, it just means that they have given up caring for you and when that happens you have to give up caring for them, and move on in life.

When You Lose Faith in Self and Others by Leslie A. Fischman

When there is expectation of faithfulness and togetherness, when that expectation is broken, heartbreak occurs, that is disappointment in self or others, resulting in some kind of harm to self or to others. Those are called emotions. There are some conditions that require meds, that is understandable, not to be toyed with emotionally to test for consequences and purposes for hospitalization. Everytime is different. –You just have to learn to accept people for who they are broken or not. Sometimes separation can hurt, when you are separated from another, it can cause pain, and that pain, can cause, hurt, and that hurt, can result in physical illness, or withdrawal, or pain –loss. –Be careful what you wish for in life, and be careful what you see in life, as there are expectations for one to always see well and well in others. When you don't see well or well in others, too defensive or combative by argument or fighting you are seen as the problem, and cause for your own condition. Always be understanding of others, as people will try to prove you wrong in life, by hurting you and your esteem and image, be more or less accepting of you. You have to learn to accept people for who they are the way they are and not fiddle with their emotions. That's the problem, when your emotions are toyed with you get sick. Why its important not to be too trusting of others, and to always keep your distance. This causes disability and hardship, when people hear or see things and think things and then one thing leads to anothers, and you feel ill don't feel well, able forward. There is constant conflict with the ability to move forward its very competitive, those who move forward best, make the best leaders in life, and those who suffer, do better backwards in life. Sometimes people don't get along, and as a result pain is caused, and someone breaks. Usually the person who breaks is the person who cannot conform to the standards of others, and as a result, becomes ill, not better off, sick.

Its Never Too Late by Leslie A. Fischman

Hearts break, and its never too late to fix oneself, and move forward in life. We may cry, we may mourn, we may feel physically and psychologically ill, but its important to keep going in life, always important. The minute you give in to sad emotions, is the minute you break, recognize whats hurting you, but don't let is make or break you in life. People will façade themselves toward you, to gather attention, they may even try to persuade you to think things you are not or behave in a way counterproductive to your well being and the well being of others. That's just manipulation, and there is nothing you can do about it. Often times we feel powerless to the thoughts and emotions of others, and this causes concern. Always keep moving forward, report as you go, and always do your best to keep your private and professional life separate from socialization, that is how you stay centered. People will cause blame where no blame exists to try to figure out causes and circumstances for illness always meeting you with disappointment a disgrace. Every way a person treats you is a manifestation of their own weaknesses in life. If they are not doing well, it may be difficult for them to treat you well. If you are not doing well in life, you may be treated as less than, less than capable of deserving a good life for yourself. These are all commonalities of socialization, competition.

What You Know in Life by Leslie A. Fischman
02-10-18

When you know what you want in life, nothing can stop you from achieving your dreams. You only have to accept your past, and move forward, not lamenting incidences or worrying what others think or might say about you, is always outside of your control and not your responsibility to ever control the thoughts of others about you or about others. That's called fighting when an opinion based on selfish needs is made, to promote an idea or a set of ideas that serves one, is called being selfish. Always be selfless when writing online, considering the emotions of the audience as well as how you may be looked at affected by your train of thoughts. It is very important to always be clear, in order to come across as neat and organized. When you are off center and not all together perfect, you run the risk of being attacked by aggressive people, that is juts how people are, trying to change you or trying to fix you, or trying to get what they want, or trying to manipulate your story or your character, or sense of being. That is called wrong behavior for or toward persons of interest. It is wrong to use people as pawns, for unnecessary causes but ego. That is an unnecessary use of force upon another to break a heart, and is undeserving. The only way to move forward is not to break, not to bind, but to let go.

It Takes a Long Time to Know Yourself by Leslie A. Fischman
02-01-18

It takes a long time to know yourself, especially when questioned by others. Constant questioning by others affects your decision making skills. One should always be sound of mind and heart in order to make good decisions in life. People can help guide you, but you are in charge of your own progress in life. Never make things more difficult for yourself than necessary. You usually make things worse when you stop trying and you stop doing your best in life. Why its important to always be diligent, determined, follow up, and show up, those are key to successes in life, being there for others, and being present. Presence is everything key to happiness. And when you yourself are happy then you too can enjoy life, and be happy too, and get back in life, what life has to offer back to you, when you are good.

Don't Be Easily Offended by Others by Leslie A. Fischman
02-01-18

Don't be so easily offended by others, always reminding yourself that its not about you, not everything rarely ever is, or ever if is about you, unless you make it so. When you call attention to yourself, expect others to listen and comment about you, when you are yourself, and in good spirits then have no fear about what people say or think about you, it is when you are not well or not in good spirits that you should worry about what others think of you. No one is ever plotting against you in life, that's always in your head, people have their own lives and their own sets of problems, and to dos, rarely do people have time to go out of their way to make a mess of another's life or cause hardship to another's life, or cause or instill fear upon another, that's always most likely in your head. A product of your own thoughts about others about you, usually due to insecurities, or lack of self-confidence, or maybe just not being busy enough, not feeling accomplished in life, with or without jobs, sometimes these conditions do not change, and we cannot change the way we are. Some people are worriers, some people do not worry, regardless, accept all.

Share Your Mind

By: Leslie A. Fischman

When you share your mind with others, thats not an invitation to be harmed on your own merits, by what you say, affects to whom your speaking to, and that product reaction is the energy that gets sent back to you, based upon how you respond to others, well or not, casted out to be well or not. If you do not respond well to others, that is always a reflection and manifestation of your ability or disability, when responding to others, made fit or not, able to respond. Some are more adept and in tune than others to respond under stress or hardship, some are not able to respond well to others, under stress or hardship. Always take things with a grain of salt, you cannot be too sensitive to the needs of others, when you yourself are not doing well, similarly others will not be sensitive to your needs, if you're not doing well. The two reactions go hand in hand, how you respond, and by what you interpret as directed toward you, for you, or against you, is your response. Some people can handle the pressures of interpretation and some cannot. The best way to think is to always see things in the positive, that usually produces the best reactions internally, and then outwardly by your response, communicated to for or against another. That is how best to respond under pressure, by thinking well of yourself and others, being positive. It is by positive attributes that one sees best, not by inheriting negative characteristics of those who get involved or affect one, by interaction. You are not by what you touch, but by what touches you, and by what you interact with, become, that is a product of the senses, when following all social graces, connect or not. Touch can be by physical touch, or by a touching of the mind, these are declared wanted (clean interactions) or unwanted (dirty or negative interactions) you are always the best judge of what interactions culminate in your mind, as expressed by others, the traits to which you then interpret yourself, and how best to react or not. There are good points, and bad points, to all thoughts held, its your responsibility to stay on a positive tangent and respond well to others, thats how to be and think well. Not when you hold fears of others, and not by going into your past to respond to the present, as dictated to you, not all present examples of interaction, should be affected by past examples of interaction, if you are to be present, future consuming. Being future consuming, means thinking positively of self and others, as it relates to that future potential of that relationship or product of those interactions, see best fit to be positive not negative toward, to improve support, or justify that interaction as communicated to or interpreted as positive or negative, to some we dont react and why. There are reasons for non-interaction, that is generally to protect ones wellness. Or for the sake or argument to to help the sick get well, ignored, for those reasons we generally ignore the sick in public, and focus on the well, we are not Doctors, we cannot walk into a room and make everyone well, by special appearances, we can only make well the sick, by doing what is in our best interests to stay well. That is best how to help others (myself included) stay well, when I fear illness abound. What gets interpreted as illness, are post declared unwanted interactions, affecting future interactions, as to wellness and sickness, these interactions cease to protect the health of not only the not well, but to further support the wellness of others until well. This is why people separate and keep to themselves, to protect their wellness. This is why people do not interact to protect their wellness. This is why people do not date or do not engage in any interactions, personal or intimacy wise, to protect their wellness. Intimacy is for the well, and that tone is felt through all their interactions, those who are well do not fear intimacy, it is those who are not well that do.

Baseball Cards and Broken Dreams by #lesliefischman

When anything of value gets depreciated, thats not a product of its worth, or significance, sometimes things are best kept personal to oneself. That is their secrets to success, and what makes them unique and or special. Thats never for anyone else to decide. You have to be patient with others, they cannot always win in life, thats not what life is about, its about what you connect to and what and who matters to you and is of interest. Thats not how to stay well. Everything in small doses. Sometimes it can be overwhelming, thats why its important to move forward. Its hard to go backwards sometimes, that just wastes time and effort, and is not the purposes for writing. Writing is about helping others, put together themselves and their lives. Not to be in charge of people, or dictate to them how they should live their lives, thats not how to achieve or live a lifestyle, but by acceptance of your life now, as it is, not by promulgating experiences into the future, by reliving past experiences, that just causes trauma and PTSD. Thats for study only by professionals, patterns of interest, and illness, are not for the general population to study, or make important, that just everyone, when you try to control people, or be a hub of personal interests, anyone who is to create a hub of best interests must be someone of neutral standing, not of any one parties interest, but something written in the best interests of all. Thats called providing a balanced viewpoint, thats not taking a position too far, a position is made, and earned, thats overtime, over years of commitment, and continued effort, made so. Its wrong when someone is doing well, to step on their toes, and interfere with their ability to move forward, rise up off of, or take energy from another, and misuse use it or abuse the kindness of others. Nothing now is as it has ever been. Thats the main point. To be accepting of now and all your privileges in life. Life was much different when I grew up nothing handed to us, everything earned. To what audience I write is me, to myself, I am my audience, thats the secret to my success, as a journal writer since age 5, how I honed my craft, empowered myself.

Being Positive in Spite of Your Differences

By: Leslie Fischman

05-31-18

Being positive requires to not only respect the differences that others have with you but also see the positive in yourself, in spite of those differences with you. Sometimes you can't stay positive and with the help of others are able to see better and build a new you. How can you see things better when you yourself don't feel well about yourself. Well that takes time. You have to see better and be clear and open minded in order to make good decisions for yourself moving forward. Sometimes this comes easily to us, and sometimes it is difficult for us to see past ourselves. Making money isn't everything, sometimes you have to be happy in order to be successful and do well in life. Life's not about being well known, or being respected, if we constantly search for respect we'll never get it. If all we want is money, then we may have trouble finding other things in life, such as love. It's what you set your mind to, you get in life, and receive. It's what you set your mind to, that things turn out in a positive direction for you, or things end up worse off. Its all about correcting bad behaviors, and building new habits so that we can do better as a whole.

I have been writing online for a few years now, but have not started making money yet. I just started doing research on how to build a blog and earn a living as a writer. Going to a penguin webinar today on fantasy writing. I think I invested a lot of time and energy on my website, but have not spent an equal amount of time worrying about how I was going to achieve a living, and instead have yet to achieve one. It all takes time. Your health comes first. When you are doing well then everything around you will start to get well. With help from friends anything is possible. Starting to do research on buildyourownblog.net and problogger.com. That's a start.

Building Sources of Inspiration

You can't write when nervous, or at any top of discomfort, makes it difficult to express oneself, like a headache, out of tune, and out of touch with reality, broken. Don't allow yourself to become unrelateable by succumbing to the weak thoughts of others about you and your thoughts, that's called being defensive, toward your own thoughts, and causing your own head to hurt thinking about the possibilities of the thoughts of others toward you, empower others to feel better than you, some call this a gift. It's not considered hypocritical to live a life, and then not lead a life in which one is lived, everyone is responsible for living their own lives as best they can, with or without fans, and with or without accompaniment, trust, admiration, or support. It's everyone's responsibility to be independent not just hear what they want to hear, but accept criticisms along the way, we do not know everything, and our positions in life cannot be taken from us, as influenced by, or weakened by the good traits of others, made to appear less than or not as professional as others, and then think less of ourselves as a result, by comparison. Comparison is never the solution to one's problems, that's not how to operate by influence poor influence in defense to one's best interests communicate to the weaknesses of others, to appear stronger than or to see if qualities existing exist and then play a blind eye to the problems of others to make appear as equivalent to circumstances treat people like they are machines, robots, or invincible, that's not how suicide occurs, suicide occurs when someone who is in conflict with another, then self-harms, and continues to self-harm over a prolonged period of time in disillusionment, give up, that was my 2009, the times have changed, and are not the same now, as they were in 2009. You cannot justify for what reasons, people commit suicide and why so long as they are able to overcome those circumstances, during periods of recovery support them, never raise expectations so high as to leave people out to see if suicide occurs, that's called dismembering a healthy situation, a stance, a creating a different stance with someone's positive purpose, to dissuade others from connecting with someone. Whenever you share an idea with someone, and then take on the challenge of bettering yourself, to enable yourself to have in life, you should not equal the misgivings of others, and benefit should not run to the benefited, whether deserved or not of discrimination as though known, and for what reasons, as though known, without fame coming up, be treated as though without class. That's called discrimination, when to continue to steal ideas from someone, who pitches an idea after the fact, to make them appear as needy or make them appear as not apart of, or to make someone feel less than or incapable, that's taking your profession out on the profession of others while receiving a benefit.

Who You Communicate With by #lesliefischman

05-25-18

Who you communicate with matters, and where you communicate matters too. It's important to keep communications separate not just for privacy reasons, but because it's easy to get taken advantage of when those private spaces, get picked apart by others. In order to be an open book, there's a certain way to communicate in which the listener not only remembers what you are saying, but also to ensure that you are heard. Writing is not like public speaking, there's no memorization. Only one-way forward when it comes to writing. At least that's how I write. The secret to being known, is to know yourself. If you want to make a good impression upon others, then it's time to start loving yourself. Loving yourself, is not about knowing everything, or being better than. It's more about how you articulate yourself, through communications and to whom those communications are shared, in turn affect how you feel. For many years I have struggled communicating my thoughts and emotions, online. It has not been an easy journey to self-discovery. But you do your best. Along the way it's easy for miscommunications to take place as directed toward them, or for the purposes of generating a response. The best writing is fresh, unscripted, and without intentions. When your intentions come into play, that's when your words get thrown apart or misused, and led astray. The key to good communication is sound decision-making, we are not all together perfect, but we don't have to sound perfect either.

Being Needy by #lesliefischman

05-13-18

Being needy is not necessarily a bad thing, it can get you caught up in a string of emotions, leaving you feeling empty and drained. Don't wait on others to come to you in life, you have to create your own opportunities for yourself in life. You cannot rely on others for self-esteem, that's not how to make yourself feel better when you are not feeling well, that's how you get sick, when you attach when you are not feeling well, get your hopes up then get let down in life. From the inside looking out, it's hard to say much, sometimes when you are not being well received or if you feel misunderstood. When you are needy you are more likely to develop unhealthy attachments to people, and when if in doing so, can cause self-harm. Don't rely on others as a pick me up, to make you feel better in life, especially those who are not to be trusted. In healthy living spaces and environments we get the support we need in order to feel whole. In an unhealthy environment, we do not feel well, that can be because of people places or things. Always be patient with others. It's not for you to judge others as not well, based upon their earning capacity or their likeness. If you do not approve of others, it's not for you to make happen widespread disapproval of them, that's not a positive purpose for coming forward in life, to cause disruption based upon personal interests.

I used to be a 2 hour runner, and have since stopped and gained weight. Just finished writing a book. How we use our energy in life, is our own personal business. I wrote my book August to May 2018, and still writing. It takes time to put a book together, especially of your best writing, it's for no one to judge, respect or not in the past given.

Why I Really Need Microsoft ... by #lesliefischman

05-12-18

I really need Microsoft, since my computer was fixed after getting IT online and a virus. I was mad at Bill for awhile, I thought he was responsible for the typos in my Honors Thesis, but realized later, that I must have not been focused enough to think twice about word choices, thought carefully planted for a sick reaction or one that does not complement the tone of the rest of my Honors Thesis. I learned to be very careful with my words from that point on, always seeking second reviews, just in case. Always be mindful of the thoughts and feelings of others, as I have, we do not always mean to insult others, but sometimes we do, and if there is compassion and understanding, then there will be forgiveness. People go through phases in life, sometimes thinking they are great and smart, or better than, or important, but at the end of the day we are all human. Don't misinterpret the thoughts and feelings of others as directed toward you or about you, that's not how to move forward in life, thinking about others is called obsession. When you obsess over others, you forget your own thoughts, and do not focus as well, why they do not recommend dating within the first year of sobriety. Always fixate not on what gives you pleasure in life, but on what helps you focus and do well in life, that is how to achieve well in life, not by getting what you want, but by giving to the world in a way that what you get back is what you want to see, not what you think is deserved by others to feel or achieve in life, less than. We are all human, we all deserve happiness. There is limited understanding on the concept of forgiveness, based upon my understanding of inner circles, and successful people, there is little understanding of one another, and best understood as themselves not as acting apart of anyones interests. That is in my viewpoint how one becomes successful, by staying well for themselves, and when they are well enough for themselves, they are well enough to be there for others. That is a system, that is not for anyone to judge, the wellness of others.

Procrastination Blues by #lesliefischman
05-06-18

Its hard to stay focused, especially when it comes to meeting deadlines. Its easy to fall off track when you focus your attention on things that dont matter towards achieving your sense of peace and happiness in life. They're called distractions. Its easy to get distracted when we are unsure of where we are going in life, or what we are doing in life, toward meeting our goals in life. Its important not only to stay focused, but with purpose, and be task oriented toward achieving our goals in life, not just driven for acceptance or for accolade, thats usually not the push that gets us going, but only stifles us in expectation of something positive to come. You have to be positive in order for positive things to happen in your life. When you are happy with yourself, usually everything else falls into place.

The Importance of Keeping Families Together by #lesliefischman

Whenever there is a separation there is heartache, and from that heartache pain. Whenever we experience pain there are mixed emotions to resolve that pain, whether we drink and self-harm, we are only doing ourselves a disservice, when we succumb to the weaknesses of others, not focused on our own strengths in life. Always remember but not to the extent that you re-create circumstance to bring about negative consequences moving forward for yourself, thats called learning from your mistakes in life, that matters. When we are too hard on others, especially ourselves, no good can become of that harm, it only transfers to the weak. Knowing this living at home, its become ever more important for me to learn how to focus on my strengths in writing, and by education get strong again, so that I can be a positive reference for others to lean toward during times of need, and get married. Its not easy to find love, I bought 3 pins, you have to enrich your own life before you can enrich the lives of others, thats why some are better suited for caretaking positions than most. If you're strong enough to have a family you should be able to keep your family, that is my belief. -Don't worry about what has occurred, worry most about where you are now and where you are headed in life to gain proper footing moving forward, experience matters, as to wellness these days, thats the discomforting part of wellness, that you can't be there for everyone, eventually, you stop giving to everyone, and start helping yourself in life.

Confusion and Turmoil Following #Suicide by #lesliefischman with help from suicidology.org, whom I contacted on 03/15/18.

6/24/2018

According to suicidology.org “confusion and turmoil” follow a period of loss “unique to survivors of suicide.” (Page 1) The “disconnection” that’s follows is a product of unresolved conflict, and mixed emotions, concerning their presence in our lives, often choosing to “retain happy memories of them.” (Page 2) There is often a lot of fear surrounding suicide feeling the need to “resolve that conflict alone.” It gets easier, (Page 3) as time moves on, processing “difficult emotions” and “coping with your loss will get easier.” (Page 3). The pamphlet reminds us to “focus on positive thoughts.” Something I have thought about myself, how to be present when I feel like disconnecting, how to appreciate the now and move forward, without assuming the negative toward me, and make better my life moving forward. We all have our lapses in judgment, and may at times make bad decisions for ourselves moving forward, and its that loss of control over the outcome or judgment of us that leaves us feeling powerless, as to the assumptions made by others, and whats to come, whats in store, and what the future depends on moving forward, as guided by the principles we choose to make good decisions in our lives.

Finding a Space to Discuss Your Worry by #lesliefischman

Finding a Space to Discuss Your Worry
06-13-18

When its not safe to speak anywhere, in private or in public, that’s when you know you’ve been given unwanted information about a person, and when a harm has occurred. When a harm has occurred that occurs when someone in a position of trust misuses that position of trust to make someone look like they are not to be trusted, and to build empathy publicly for someone who is not in need of help from outside sources, including the public. That is not how to politicize the identity of someone who is well, by making them ill, based upon your judgments of them, make them look like a lesser person, and you the predominant species in life, make in jest commentary to hurt someones sense of being, call them out to be something they are not, or create circumstances difficult to communicate without disruption of focus or attentions on what is going well, be made to see differently based upon pre-judgments made as to their good character, try to persuade others, or confirm to others such is the case, without knowing a person you cannot judge them, and based upon what others knows about someone, create a general understanding about a person, to make people think differently of them or to bring about weaknesses to judgments held about a person in public, as to their good character is wrong.

Pioneering Ideas by #lesliefischman

Pioneering Ideas
06-06-18

Whenever we have a new idea, in order for it to come to fruition we have to be stable. Nothing is ever built on instability, we can try, but sometimes to no avail do things become possible for us in life. We live during times of turmoil, but its important not to make that outside turmoil our own. Its always in our best interests to stay well, in spite of whatever difficulties get thrown our way, stay balanced. -Its hard to stay organized when you have many ideas flying overhead as a writer, you have to stay level headed. Its important not to scare your readers away with your problems, you’ll likely not have them on board with you, if your instability, wreck those relationships moving forward. Building anything requires time, tact, and self-restraint. Not only must be cognizant of the emotions of others but we need to be strong ourselves. #FoxNews [1] just shared a book today, about who is among you, and if you do not get along with anyone among you, you’ll likely face difficulty finding success at what you’re doing in life. To that I could relate. Often times we build connections, trying to fit in, that we end up looking just the same. How can we differentiate ourselves, that sense of independence and need will never change. Treating people as individuals, and not shedding light upon what hurts, but being a valued support system and friend, is at best we can do sometimes. When our ideas, interfere with the best interests of others, its therefore our responsibility to make amends and fix whatever ties we do have to the given situation. Its not advantageous for us, to get involved, in problems, and make the problems of others our own, get involved. You just have to stay steady and weather the storms. Sometimes that means less promotion of personal interests and more promotion of ideas that help shape us, who we are today, and not focused on where we have been in life, but what we are doing now to perfect our lives.

Not Caring What Other People Think by #lesliefischman

Not Caring What Other People Think

06-03-18

Not caring what other people think, does not necessarily mean basing decisions off of others, to gear what they think (about you or others), to (get them to) think of something other than them (or others) or their reasons for saying the things that they do (in response to you or others). Don't try to control people, always be yourself, when in public. "Do that thing you do" was a great movie. Just as lyrics matter, to give meaning to songs, the words you use give meaning to you and where you're coming from. People will always try to figure out why you say things, or do things, but that interpretation is not up to you. That's what they think, not important for you to control what other people think about you or others. A lot of what we have to do and say, involves caring what other people think of us. Image matters, but not to the extent that it erodes your sense of being, people pleasing others. That's not always the best way forward, doing things for others, or for reaction to you. That can often times lead you to a stand still, not knowing which way to go from there. You can't control what other people think, and the more you try to control the reactions of others, the more powerless you feel, in spite of those reactions. People will think what they want to think, everyone has that right to be happy, in spite of you or your opinions of others, including them, what they think. Outlining today, I wondered what to write about, and then it came to me as I was writing, have faith in your abilities, your heart is a powerful search engine in the theme of finding what is right, the right thing to do or say in regards to the circumstances of others. Always be mindful. Mindfulness to me, is about caring what other people think, but not letting what other people think ruin my day. Friesenpress.com let me know that it was possible to write a book based upon my blog posts, that's a good start somewhere, to begin. It's not always important for us to be likeable in order to like ourselves, sometimes in order to be a likeable figure, you have to know yourself well enough to know your limits in life, and where to go from what points in life, have a sense of direction that's all your own.

Wasting Time by #lesliefischman

No amount of time wasted is time spent toward achieving some lesson. When you realize the difference between a time well worth the effort, versus time spent trying to achieve a goal, you'll know your best. You can only get so far in life with dreams, and eventually you have to stay put and get your work done. That is how peace can be achieved from within, by knowing your best and accomplishing just that, not wasting time by other means of attachment and detachment, time wasted. -Realizing this after many years of dating decided to build a website, a place to call home, that wouldn't leave me, and a place where I can go and be myself, without feeling pushed, prodded, or provoked to be something I am not. Success is about finding yourself, not necessarily about being well known by everyone. Being well liked is a matter of how much you like yourself, and when happy with your results in life able to help other. It is not required that your own wellness be used to make others feel better about themselves, one should always benefit from ones own hard work in life, not by the merits or hard work by others toward their goals and dreams in life. It is by how well we write that we are known as writers. While finishing my studies in law school, I have made time to write online and share my thoughts, they may not be the same thoughts as others about life, but that doesn't mean that those thoughts are wrong or with the wrong focus in life, that's called someone who thinks they are smarter than you reading what you have put together, and trying to correct you for something intelligent to make you look or feel less than.

Whenever you have a problem that cannot be fixed, either talking to your Doctor or someone who loves you in the best remedy, not by sharing our problems with others, be subject to advice or poor judgment. Not everyone is empathetic and its true that some people just have problems and are negative toward you not out of jealousy or hate, but to kindly see how you respond, as through you, to get a response from you (assumption) or to see how you respond if in a good or bad way, and what your face looks like. That's trying to determine what causes beauty, the insides, the outsides, or recognition of beauty, as imprinted on your face, to look like, and if you look similar to others, as imprinted or if you are yourself. In my best opinion, you look like how you feel not by assuming or thinking about or worrying about what others think of you, and trying to be someone you are not, or look like something you are not, be someone you are not, and then get judged poorly as though the same or as imitation of someone who is well, and casting you back out as someone who is not well, and to further empathize that belief, create inferences or respond to others in a way to further that belief or prove that poor judgment of someone. That is trying to prove someone is bad toward someone they know without them knowing it, as provoked, and by their face reaction state that their face was made to look the same by doing something bad to themselves, trying to figure out what animates or lights a person up, whether by vanity, empathy, or words, experiment with the faces of others, in front of others, without them knowing it. Its by limited interaction that impressions are made upon the faces of others, and by that limited interaction and focus on self, empathy is created not facial features or faces that indicate feeling on the inside as toward someone else, as requiring the necessity to imitate or try to improve the condition of someone by face or voice, that is not a technological advancement, beauty, it comes from the inside, not by animations or words to, not by love, but internally how someone feels about themselves, good or poor, and around others is how they respond positively or negatively, any reaction sought is considered a manipulation of someones good character and trying to open them up as something they are not, or on the outside make them look like something they are not. I lost 50 lbs running everyday, outside, with no gym membership, I repaired my own cells, not by negativity.

Wallowing in Futility

Wallowing in Futility by #lesliefischman
07-26-18

When one chapter ends another begins, and so it follows that those who beckon receive whats called upon as identifying with their interests or better suited to the best interests of others. Nothing worthwhile ever came at some expense to some good in life, required in order to achieve anything for oneself, and no minor setbacks or delays should then follow to throw off course the impetus and determinations of those who seek good in the world, for humanity's sake. Whenever a political opinion is raged, one bears the consequence of that fire being lit, and from that basis has the burden to show good cause for continuing to be positive in public. Whenever there is a dogfight remember to decline, and whenever you face hardships along the way, belief system wise, remember never to compete. There will be those in acceptance of you in life, and those who do not actually not respect you, but respect themselves more enough, to not respect someone who they deem is not good enough for the causes to which one contributes short handedly. Therefore you cannot judge someone who is in support of causes as to blame for causes for concern, whenever one is part of a solution to boot, that by inference means not inclined to fight, set up fights, or engage in any fighting or argument whatsoever, nothing positive can become of a wasted point of energy, from which all else fails, dragging down the confines of the soul, disillusioning the direction of the mind, and making a heavy heart out of someone already exposed to pains, revisited in life. If I wanted to follow the pains of others, I would empathize with their pain, and likewise if I wanted others to do better than me in life, I would never expose them to my pains, keep sheltered those who are well, from what is causing pain, what you cannot see cannot hurt you, and so follows tech moved to Santa Monica, more behind the scenes work is always required for confidence up front, and vice versa, those who are most prepared in life, are those who light up around others, not dim in their shadows, or questioned about themselves during conversation, any strong hold of words, is for implications of misconduct as methodology to confuse, relate to confusion, or cause an unwanted inference or agreement through words in a conversation, that's unnecessary, allow people to speak well, in their natural condition, not be wrongfully affected by your own perspectives in life, how you see others, where you see yourself, and change other people to meet your needs in life, that's called positioning someone in undue circumstances and unreasonable hardships in life, as faced, see how they respond, those with strength as not bothered those who are weak, with fewer guards in life, with a higher likelihood for tampering and mishandling, are ones uptight, do not judge those because they do not respond or react to you as insensitive, silent treatment is customary of anyone who is needy, deemed in need of love, to the recipient empowered by that need, that's called co-dependence, some of the strongest relationships foster not by bonds, but by common respect.

Everyone's Smart

7/22/2018

Everyone's Smart by #lesliefischman
07-22-18

You can't just read something and automatically think you are smarter than someone simply because you can read. Everything written is with forethought, and based upon that set, of good decision making, other thoughts are had. Just because you do not agree with someone, past present, or future, does not give you the right to hurt someone or something that is well, in order to achieve a higher opinion in life, cause controversy, where no controversy is due. That's not being appreciative of the simplifications of others, being judged as not good enough, or not pertinent enough to be heard as respectable opinion. You can do everything in your power to stop things from occurring in your own life, but you cannot stop things from occurring in the lives of others, for others, that's based upon their best decision making skills, live their life, not to be interfered with by the lives of others, that's called leaving people alone. Whenever someone enters your life, always do your best to be nice, respect is not about putting someone above you its simply accepting someone the way they are, not trying to change them, or wishing they were something else, someone else, or something they are not. Its not by who we are associated to that makes us who we are, but its by our hard work, and work ethic that respect is given. I have been writing online live since 2013, and that is what I am known for my writing, a Witkin Award winner in Law School. That is not an achievement or skill set that can be questioned and turned into something else, it's a gift in life, and by our gifts in life is how we are able to help others, to hurts someone gift in life, or abilities in life, is called an unreasonable interference with someone's ability to make a difference, display their gifts in life, or be the best version of their self, that's usually by someone who is in competition with you who does not think that the world is big enough for you to fit into their lives or the lives of others, seeks to destroy your image or what likeness about you, is acceptable, by taking away the one thing, one skill, that brings you happiness in life, your ability to express yourself, through writing, or by whatever gifts in life you have. Whenever someone is not liked, or causes harm to you, and then follows and or reads you that's an unwanted connection, or unreasonable interference with your good condition, intended to cause you illness by bad mouthing you, or interacting with you when you want no interaction with anyone try to get you to take personal themselves, so as to interject themselves and their experience with you, through your own writing, diagnose yourself, I'm not a Doctor, I'm not an Attorney, I'm a writer, I therefore have no responsibility to heal or represent others, only myself. If you understand that much about me, everything else should make sense to you. I have been independent my whole life, its through unwanted interactions that illness occurs, learn to leave people alone, not be judgmental, and not benefit from someone else's hardwork just to make yourself appear better than or stronger than by comparison, everyone is able to make a website of their own. This is how I choose to express myself, not for the benefit of those to whom I either do or do not confide in, should not therefore be empowered by helping me, but should instead focus on themselves, not read for effect they have, that's called unwanted help, when someone in the confidences of a paid for interaction, then uses that interaction as ammunition for additional displays, so as to publicize a unification of interests, or paint a picture of unification of interests as by them, for credit as to the wellness achieved by others, or stealing credit as well by comparison to not well, that is not how to achieve well in life, or be deemed well or worthy of the trust of persons, use people as advertisement of interests, or likewise be used as advertisement of interests, learn to let people grow on their own, not by the guidance of others, achieve, or make good decisions for themselves in life, do not insult the good character or others, allow people to be themselves, whether in acceptance or not of them.

Negative Reactions and Responses

Negative Reactions and Responses by #lesliefischman
07-19-18

Before I projectile vomit, negative reactions are usually resulting from some harm to your sense of self and/or person, made to look like something you are not, or your identity or association being misused to single you out as something befitting to their expectation of you to label you an offender, and such consequences to the offended is self-harm i.e a negative reaction, just allow people to be themselves. You cannot exploit the private spaces of people, you cannot exploit things past that people have stated publicly, to purposefully exploit their wellness, achieved, now. Sending people backwards in life, is a treatment used to offend or cause offensive behaviors, to make them appear immature, and in so doing, aggravate and otherwise peaceful position, to associate blame by confidences, or by reactions. When someone is upset, its usually a manifestation of themselves, something wrong with their outlook or expectations of others, we are not always right about everything, we can be perfectionists, but sometimes, people are in the wrong with their misidentification of others as bad and because they think they look or appear bad, its because they are bad, you have to let things go, you cannot hurt people who are not doing well in life, and sick physically, expect the same from them emotionally and mentally, with the same rigor past they have applied to their school work or academic endeavors, aging is a process, and overtime so does our patience wear, tampering and all, not sufficient or quick enough to monitor any changes made, expected to be able to tell if a change is made without permission to see how people respond, when something is done to you, without you knowing, if you can tell by the reactions of others, if you become sick or well, that's not how to treat someone who is well or represents themselves well.

Don't Politicize My Position in Life

Don't Politicize My Position in Life by #lesliefischman
07-18-18

You can't politicize the position of someone in life as deserving or not of respect that's inhumane. You can't benefit from someone else's hardwork and insult credit to them. That's a wrongful interference with a person's ability to succeed in life. A case is not a political move, it's a case. And leave it at that. For reasons, disconcerting, its not appropriate to rehash a case that is closed, already dealt with. That's not how to move forward in life, taking something new and relating it to the past. That's not how to deal with discomfort around a person, if your uncomfortable that means you are not qualified to help me. Because of my education and accolade, I don't ask for help often, so when I do ask for help that is not in fun, but because I have a big heart let people into my life. Its wrong to interfere with a person's sense of person, and ability to think for themselves, try to get inside their head, to argue your point of view. That is dismembering a person. I am a website, the sole owner and creator, and writer for mymollydoll.com. Taking that into consideration, I am very open with others, noted for my honesty in AA, and always helpful to others, not about myself, being selfless is a trait, not a given, and not by my circumstances in life, exposures, interactions, past, or experiences in life, but because of how I was raised to be empathetic to care for others, including myself. When someone tries to hurt your identity, or tries to make you look like something you're not, that not only hurts the person to whom is being harmed, but also to people who are watching, and seeing the effects that people are trying to have on my life as lived. Learn to let things go, not be experimental with people, and especially, if someone lets you into their lives, not disturb their sense of peace, that's not an appropriate means for garnering respect, to create circumstances to make things about you, or in defense, make things about you as through the person who is being harmed, speak for and on behalf of the person to whom the harm is being caused. To my person. Learn how to relate to people, not situate oneself to tell a story about them, that's not appropriate, everyone is entitled to be themselves, made fun of or not, respect themselves, and by that confidence achieve in life. Its not about backgrounds, but about direct connections, an invite and attendance to a birthday party in Las Vegas 2008, that put everything together for me, and stayed in law school for 10 years, trying to finish, not in good health, struggling with mental illness. Knowing that its important not to judge a book by its cover, and cause someone illness, because one is not believed.

What is the Good Life?

What is the Good Life? By #lesliefischman
07-17-18

Anything good doesn't last for long, if misused. Understanding that, with privilege comes responsibility. To behave well, to receive privileges in life, one being respect, or able to be heard without judgment. Its how people treat you, you respond, whether in rage toward you or not, its best to not respond, not argue, not insult, not engage with those who are offensive toward you, whether purposefully offensive and later trying to say they were trying to help me, and later feel bad about it, or how they treated me, is not my responsibility to correct poor behavior, or the thoughts of others about me, around me, when they see me, and their controversial opinion of me, is not my responsibility to dissect. You have to learn to just leave people alone. You can connect on certain levels with people, and on other levels there may be a disconnect. You just have to be patient with people, even those who are subtly accusatory toward you, trying to pry or get words or actions from you, to respond in a way befitting to their viewpoint of you. That's not how to treat people, to bring out their worst, knowing their weaknesses in life, to see how they respond, to people, or others, or in groups, their demeanor. Im 188 lbs now less confident.

My Thoughts on Poetry

7/17/2018

My Thoughts on Poetry by #lesliefischman
07-17-18

Poetry is not just for the bored, lazy, and dull, but for the fragmented and disillusioned, helps bring together ones feelings, in well spoken prose, thoughtfully articulated feelings in a form of art. This is what poetry to me is for, to express the inexpressible, feelings, or what is not sound, to be put back together again. You cannot put people back together, you cannot even fix yourself. When you are able to fix yourself, then you can help others, fix themselves. The goal is always to be put together. When you feel well you can share, when you do not feel well its hard to share, thats the undertone, bases for putting thoughts together, to make better, not make worse the way someone is feeling, that's never helpful. Understand insult, respect opinions of others, but don't internalize the feelings of others toward you, as vicious and cruel, unmet, unsound, and unfit to care for someone who is not well. This is why we have Doctors, to put people back together again, and to understand what is going wrong with someone. -I was trained to just be there for others, be present, not to fix people, that has never been my job.

Religious Principles of Forgiveness

7/17/2018

Religious Principles of Forgiveness by #lesliefischman
07-17-18

Religion is for the well, for everyone else there is forgiveness. You cannot achieve in life when you are not feeling well, always think what could I be doing better to better myself everyday. Those are the principles I live by. That's not Judaism that's just my Father telling me to better myself everyday. And so I listened. I may not have finished Law School, but that doesn't mean I cannot finish a Masters Program. Sometimes life requires you to keep going, keep trying, or change, and sometimes you have to know when to stop, by experience we figure out these best principles for decision making, usually by the goods we receive in life, we remember, and by good deeds we achieve in life, for the better. When you are not sure of yourself, what you want in life, its easy to get led astray by what feels good to you. What feels good to you may not necessarily be the solution to your problems, sometimes you have to listen, not just to the past but to the present, as you are now, be in acceptance. Sometimes it requires forgiveness of self, and sometimes life requires forgiveness of others in order to move forward. Letting go is a process, it doesn't mean rehashing the past to move forward, sometimes quiet acknowledgment of what has gone wrong, and what can be made better, is what situates us best to the present times.

Differing Levels of Success

Differing Levels of Success by #lesliefischman
07-15-18

There are differing levels of success, once exposed to the educated there are considerable favorable consequences from interaction with anyone who is of an educated mindset, that is ideas. From where do ideas come from, association, or from exposure. Usually through exposure, we realize certain things in life, and from those bases make decisions for ourselves that either help us achieve success in life, or by connection achieve success in life. It is not true that all successful people are alike. Its just that in hard times, it follows, that people generally lean toward those who are strong, in order to achieve wellness or to become well off themselves, and by those exposures, hopefully help others achieve the same. That's wellness and success. When one is not doing well its easy to think of everything that is going wrong, and it is that negativity they are looking for, in order to include or discount your opinions all together as worthy or sufficient for intrigue or a listen. Everybody has separate lives, and from those lives decisions are made, at what point is something so special that when looked at, a quick or hasty decision in made, in the right, how is it possible to create something positive, from which positive decisions can be made. I have a very high success rate, 2 boyfriends and two proposals, planning to wed me, two 3-4 year relationships. Knowing that, I know Im a keeper, that is how I knew that building a website online would equally be a success, everytime I go out to the bars someone hits on me and strikes a conversation with me, that's how I know I am selected. Someone who is selected can help others be of selection, by exposure to their life experiences help others to make better decisions for themselves not to be like.

Batwings and Relapses

Batwings and Relapses by #lesliefischman
07-15-18

I wore a bright orange sweater to a bar and relapsed on 2 beers, recently. I think I've hit my breaking point when it comes to advocacy, not bear the burden of the guilty. People read very closely once you become a writer, and based upon those writings, pick up a cue, so its important to be careful with your words not lead anyone astray, especially as to your causes for concern and what matters to you, not set up any dogfights, that would defeat the purposes of providing advocacy online to people in need of humor, keeping it light these days, and working on finishing law school. I have a 40 page research paper due in October and have to finish another course on Financial Crimes. I have not been able to get a job in the legal field paid yet, its very competitive in Century City, I need a degree for that. Overcoming mental health issues related to failures in life, has been a very time consuming process. Always be careful to who you blame for your cares in life, that's not how to fight a good fight by fighting with others, and by provoking others to not like you, politically or for whatever reasons cause others to distrust you. I have always done my best to be apart of and blend in. Now is a different set of circumstances. You just have to move forward. I sent copies of my book to SCOTUS, my Father, and Attorney Avenatti to sort out the differences in opinion as toward me, good enough to be a writer online or not, or deserving of my following, I have worked hard to maintain since 2013. What is reasonable is setting daily goals for yourself that are manageable, what is unreasonable is setting goals for yourself, that are too difficult for you to accomplish. Being a peacekeeper is about not taking sides and being there for everyone, whether or not Im on a side, and whether or not Im doing well, stay positive.

Update: Finishing Law School

7/14/2018

How to Be Considerate by #lesliefischman
07-14-18

Learn how to be gentle with your words, for every time and occasion, a certain anecdote is needed, not in competition with well, or with the later, to be whole is to be kind, irrespective of the boundaries placed by others upon you, to redirect energies as toward you, life is short in that way. For what is gone, casket kicking and all, be respectful, not cause harm to those who have suffered for the wrongs in judgment made by others, I will not be one of them, I tell myself #stopsuicide. Life is a matter of wellness, what you appreciate and what you value in turns makes up your life, and determines how well you fair doing in life, in response to others, around others, and affects how you perceive yourself. Don't be insulting to the deceased, this is an area of law Im not familiar with. I just know based upon my own experiences when I am considered not doing well and when a fault is needed or blame is needed I get thrown in the psych ward for 14 days at a time, and put to sleep. Im tired of being thrown in the hospital and put to sleep, for 14 days, that's not how I want to live my life. Ive come too far, studied too long, to be treated as someone kicking from their casket, blaming others for their illnesses in life, not yet have made it to any top in life, considered doing well enough to receive respect from anyone, that's what money is for, money is considered deemed worthy of respect, and everyone else, well comes secondary, to a fault, this is a non-sensical way of determining the value of human worth, and needs to be changed. Where are we now? That is what is most important. Where are we going? That is what is most important for now. And where are we headed in life? Well or to sickness. That is by the faulty judgment of others as toward our best decision making, judgmental as toward us as not well or deserving of achieving well in life, based upon their experiences with us, not deemed savy enough to achieve a level of respect in this world considered worth living for. Live for yourself not others, that's how to do well. When someone insults your character its to be better than you, when someone hurts your esteem that's to achieve better than you, and when someone is in competition with you, who you do not fight with, that's because poor judgment of you is passed, and when one cannot move on that's because of regret.

August 2017 "my lives" by #lesliefischman
07-13-18

After leaving a meeting and dating, I walked everyday for a month for 1-2 hours, to Peets Coffee and back on Wilshire Blvd. It dawned on me, that I need to lose weight in order to date, and that by my size I was not the first pick at the meeting. When I changed Sponsors, I was made to stay home, not stay up at night in my car parked on Ocean Ave. That's not safe. I'm sorry for the misunderstanding regarding my mental health issues, why no one would date me, not qualified. Now Im on heavy night meds, that's from theft, when you get robbed when well, that's how one gets made ill, that's why I have a website now, to share everything. -Back in the day, people felt empowered by being on the inside, today that is not considered empowerment, but secreting, and secreting hurts. Allow people to come up on their own, not by exposure to well, try to come up off of people in life, that's not how to do well in life. Who am I speaking to? My Ex-Boyfriend #aaronbrown, hence the joke no one wants to be #danbrown. You just have to keep a level head about you, and not get caught up in the hoopla that is image. When you become successful and find your way, it will make considerably more sense to you why people drink to wellness. Just stay positive! We do not understand why people get sick, but that doesn't mean you need to take your illness out on others who are not doing well, that's the lesson to be learned including yourself. You by your upbringing, are who you are, not by what other people say you are, you just have to think in light of the circumstances, how best to be, with or without people in your lives, and with or without the support of everyone, everyone has their own lives and not required to look up to or love you in return for their lives, are their lives, not your life affecting their lives, as impacted by you.

Skeptical Crush by #lesliefischman

To not make a skeptical out of my new crush. He's a sweetheart. You have to be focused on your goals in life, in order to make anyone happy. That's the lesson. When we fall short of our ideals in life, then things tend to fall apart. Everybody needs somebody, that's the argument, whether better off independent or co-dependent, someone needs to walk you through that door in life to independence, if not you, then a suitor who likes you can help you achieve that goal in life: respect. Always be sweet and kind to those who admire you, without whom you would not find happiness in life. Know your gifts in life, don't spoil what is not going well for you in life, in order to do better in life, always be good to yourself first in order to make happen anything right for you in life. If this is anything but a scared straight campaign now then so be it, peace is always a positive objective toward something better in life. Life is not about showing or proving you are right about life, but through acceptance we find value in others. Know that difference and always, but never be ashamed, or who you are, be kind.

When I met him, I was initially trying to make a good impression then it dawned on me that he might not completely understand what kind of work I've been doing behind the scenes, reporting. So given that misunderstanding, was informative, did not take advantage of him, while he is not at a good point in his life, by my reading of him online. Based upon that understanding, made a call to his ex-Boss to inform him of my current status, and mental state. As I continued to negotiate for a job, he blocked me twice, and left one account open. By this understanding, I know that he knows, that I released a book and with that book tried to build a better more general understanding and compassion toward those with disabilities such as myself, that I hope he understands. I think he is doing his best to be compassionate toward others, but at the same time take action, and change the focus. That I am appreciative of, he is doing his best. -I don't think he fully understands what everyone is going through, but I know he cares. And with that care has taken it upon himself to pay close and careful attention to me as I am now, with supervision by his former employer Mr. Dan Petrocelli, whom I met through a SuperLawyers magazine.

You can provide so much information and do your best and still not be good enough. Sometimes people don't know when to stop when they're feeling good or on to something, that's a good time to remind yourself of your values and what's important to you moving forward, that's how to be a good decision maker, not by relying on social cues alone, you are in charge of your own settings in life, you cannot blame others when you fall astray, you at the end of the day are responsible for how you react and respond, read, interpret and perceive others as toward or about you, that would be selfish to think that decisions are made based upon your being or sense of self, as worried, as offensive to others. Learn to be accepting of all, it's not all about being well liked, but more about being comfortable with yourself, if and until then, it will be difficult to get along well with others. -Don't waste the time of others.

Nothing lasts forever, and everything is temporary. It's all about perspective. Education is key to your understanding. Where you see yourself, in relation to others, is a direct reflection of yourself education & experience in life. You are what you read and learn. Confidence comes through exposure, the more you can relate to different settings, the more capable you'll be of blending in and feeling comfortable with yourself. Comfort is achieved by knowledge, knowledge is achieved by a combination of education & experience. Therefore if you're lacking confidence the best way to get strong is to travel, try new things, read, and explore different settings to help adjust your own. While adjusting your settings, you learn how to better control not only how you perceive yourself in relation to others, but also how to strengthen your sense of self in relation to others. Confidence issues and insecurity occur when you compare yourself to others. Love yourself enough to know that you are perfect just the way you are. Start there and everything else should fall into place.

Being Likable and Ignoring Negativity

Its usually the case, that if you bring up issues that have prevented you in the past from achieving in life, they will replay out again in your life, if so don't allow those issues to overpower your ability to stay present. You may assume that likewise others are similarly empowered by your misfortunes in life, but you only do yourself a disservice by reinforcing negative opinions or assumptions about you past, then watch yourself walk through those assumptions proving or disproving those deductions about you in the past, as causes for concern or reason for conditions exhibited, looking for justifiable reasons to reinforce negative judgments or reinforce the processing of negative deductions about people. Steer clear of negativity in the event of any opposition, further reinforcement of any negativity, only drains you of positive energy needed in order to achieve in life and move forward. Its common to get paranoid, once you reach a stopping point, or quiet lull, in a new space, or among new people, its not easy to start a new life for yourself, especially after failure, but if you focus on your imperfections in life, then you only leave room for further self loathing, and reinforcement of negatives existing or not existing past present or future. This is a common way in which sides are created, when a position past is replayed in the present, sometimes the past helps to remind us of what we have done right in life, and sometimes the past hurts, reminding us of what we have not done perfectly in life, and what we are now trying to do a better job of, forgiveness is everything, embarrassment is another, and losses occur, never lose your sense of self, its all apart of life learning to function without having everything in life, and once achieving privileges in life, maintaining positive momentum so that you are well received not burden others as taking a risk by interacting with you, as though they are doing you a favor and at their discretion reject you to see how you respond, either once they feel better, or once they let go, or once they achieve a sense of peace on their own, sometimes, its difficult to achieve a sense of peace on your own, often times with the help of others either directly or by indirect observation of their lives, do we see a clearer path for ourselves, rarely when people who do not get along, cross paths, see anything other than defects, you won't know until you interact with people, who you mix well with or not, or who carries a prejudgment of you, and gears conversations to reinforce a more knowledgable position as to the issues, as though there is a need to reinforce or carry on a negative conversations about with someone present, and bring out characteristics they deem are undesirable or unpleasant, or a turn off. Anyone comfortable with themselves, speaks without caring what other people think, that is an attractive quality because that demonstrates confidence, and confidence reflects someone who is sure of themselves, a good decision maker.

Accommodating the Best Interests of Others ...

Don't empower people at the expense of others, who are not well, end up worse off, as disconnected, proven deserved. That occurs upon communication through people to others, to get any communication across, no parts understood separately, as connected to previous statements, stand as argument toward in justification of responses, post disclosure of insult, no insults thereafter, pester nor affect the listener, as they are quiet, once an opinion is voiced, quiet follows, also known as a disability, or inability to speak, thats not difficulty or a reflection of a failed interaction or unwanted connection or disfavorable interests to any particular party, favored over the other, it represents, not being the butt of conversation or joke, and that begins where and when it starts, and causes for following, are not a product of the responses generated by others as in conjunction. There are many instances where communications fail, or words misrepresent the process of purpose for which words are spoken, never assume that anyone is speaking to you, or that words are directed toward you, passively, as warning, or test for disruption, to see what is taken personally, what effects, what relates, and what simplifies or creates a likeness to situations to prove if parallels exist then the problem existing under one set of conditions, are likely, occurring in the present, the past is the past, and if one does not understand the purposes for which troubles arose in the past, no troubles created presently communication wise, above, below, or about others to their face and behind their back should matter nor affect a persons output, behavior, or present itself as descriptive of their present condition, as affected presently, as resulting in the same set of consequences for them, thats picking apart a person, to understand a problem, and by simple focus on problems, if when trying to understand others, what they are thinking is negative of you based upon how you speak or what you write, then they are focused on the problems as stated, with privacy, if another problem occurs that they do not know about, then they are only responsible for the problems resulting from their miscommunications above, below, or toward you indirectly or as assumed understood. If telepathy existed then you could blame the thoughts of others, as affecting your current behavior or communication skills as resulting from their miscommunications toward you, about you, below, or above you. But that simply is not a justifiable excuse for having thoughts, positive or negative about others, be careful never to assume that one who is not well spoken is negative toward any one person or set of people, or a product of feelings of being above others, most instances of intimidation occur when we are not sure of ourselves, misguided through conversation by others, and then after the conversation looking back put things together, as purposefully directed toward you or not, learn to let things go, everyone is new upon meeting, and first impressions are everything, be careful never to assume, that any communications are when grouped intended to befuddle or belittle you, you know what you know and by what you know you understand, with or without help or acceptance from others, as understood, know your part, and by what you do so logically understand as representing any set of communications, do not assume as related to your own experiences are about you, or in communication to what you write about online. Everyone is different, that's the bottom line, we all have our moods, and preferences in life, sometimes feeling closer to people, and sometimes feeling at a distance from the present, that's a matter of focus and choice, and by my standards of normal, requires medication to effectively communicate with others, without running the risk of insulting them by assumption. No one wants to be the negative one who everyone goes out of their way to accommodate, what causes people to snap or commit suicide is much to do with misunderstanding i.e. my suicide attempt 2009, than it is about other people or how they communicate in written or spoken form, if you are you and others are themselves, than no manipulations of your character to bond or make closer you to themselves or vice versa should affect your sense of person or abilities in life, if by choice you choose to listen and allow others issue within themselves to affect your best judgments of them, why they tell you never to take anything personally, as time goes on, nothing post argument ever reflects positively of a person or their ability to communicate everything comes across as verbose and intended to likewise justify current emotions, if not neutral than taken personally, if not affected then compassion has obviously been shown, and in jest, a likewise sense of frustration about the individual to whom compassion is given, by and from the person to whom acceptance is waited upon, if nothing feels right, then check your best instincts not be cued by statements made by others, when a fight is created its by the placer of emotions, to whom responses are by choice illustrated, and based upon those illustrations of emotions or effects, you are judged presently irrespective of the past, the present, or what is said above or below you, you then separate yourself by choice, not by the statements of communications made by others, how to maintain under pressure of assumptions, its hard work.

Dumping Problems on People ...

Topic - Dumping Problems on People #righttoprivacy - Unwanted doctoring and diagnoses, why we have right to privacy, then people judge you based upon the meds you take, not accept you as normal as on meds, given that your on meds, get judged as slower than, at a different disposition in life, not the same as others, everyone runs at their own pace in life, its not about energy projected out in the open that shows whether someone has energy or not, we all express ourselves in different ways, hyper or not, well or not, but never as directed toward others, are feelings expressed, that's an unwanted reading of someone, and that's an unwanted projection of interests upon someone to create or share in a way that suffices a position other than the position from which a person writes, getting someone to articulate what is done to them, without allowing the person who is affected to be able to share in a coherent way, how they feel, not as related to others, or per interaction, but upon what's missing, a tertiary issue, related to organization of oneself, don't assume that you know everything about a person based upon what they share about themselves, think you know someone better than they know themselves, or treat someone as readable based upon what they share in writing, its always to the beneficial interest of the reader, writing is a very draining and disempowering experience, by professionals, writing is written, that is because with experience as a writer grows, so does their ability to share, and understand what content, is appreciated, and what content benefits themselves and others, not just one side or the other, that's called achieving a balanced opinion, not get into the politics of thought processes, as about things that are not spoken, vague or ambiguous as to the foundation from which content is written is always written (breaking character) from my position in life, not from the position from others, from what I think is best to be said, not what causes further controversy or hardship on others, which is fighting, fighting is never justifiable, and to argue that someone's (my) pre-existing conditions are due to outside circumstances, would be blaming those to whom help is received as though they are the cause for current turmoil or hardship experienced in the first person, as through my writing, that's called reading defensively, and as a result of reading defensively, setting up the writer to write in response to your defenses, and then further separating the issues, as circumscribed around the responder, and making the readers (tertiary) feel bad, as having read, and then interpreting what the issues are, themselves, or the writer, its always the writer who is responsible for the content written, however the writer is never responsible for the thoughts driven by others toward the content that is written, as assumed about them, or as applied to them, works, for the most part, I have written this way my whole life, not as by reading others or by my experiences with others, but by what is thought not as by reading others, but as by reading myself, and my ability to adapt to others, not overreact or respond to others in ways in which I have experienced others reacting and responding in the past, relive those experiences presently, as with others, and then as articulated get treated and responded to in a way that builds a side for others, further separating someone from being understood, as explained ... benefiting the reader, not the writer, and leaving everyone in a state of wonder.

Why I write ...

10/22/2018

How people are affected, what affects a writer, the content. Sensitivity required for writers, not to get under their skin to be written about or read, thats cause for unwanted reading of persons, not to be read or written about, thats purposeful an abuse, to be thought about, and responded to. What is a reading, not of people, or particulars, but of energy, not personalities, or reading into a persons psyche, or by digesting the emotions of others, is a reading made, but with forethought always as to the consequences for words shared, always a degree of sensitivity is applied, whenever a discussion is lead as to thoughts, not to undermine others, who by reading, read into the thoughts of yours, the readers privilege, not the writers, to see the big picture, as applied. Looking for outside of a person, and by application to people in their lives, assumptions are made as to content, as being about them, always keep things general as a writer, how to be most relatable, whenever words are shared to make sense, need not be in tone with a theme other than the words shared, but in theme with the content of the discussion, not bringing in outside references required to understand the contents of any conversation, that would be sending information overhead, or sending everything overhead, and by word dropping, send messages to as understood by words, not by overall content of the discussion had. Be careful not to insult others, as to your discussions or shared thoughts through writing, which can be misunderstood as about people, or in reference to people or subjects, known by the readers, but not to the writer, who is on stage so to speak, reading and listening for audience reactions within our heads, not sending information overhead, and being as clear as possible, not vague and abstract so as to lead to conclusions, or to cause a fog that hurts in the transcription of deductions drawn form the writing, or from the thoughts shared, a further abstract that would be purposefully misguiding thoughts toward confusion, not a popular style of writing, but a type of prose, not conducive for supporting seriousness required for language shared, which is to be comprehensible, not outside of comprehension toward graver confusion of the issues, or thoughts had, not about people, or because people are in their life, but because the thoughts come across, some shared, some not, but all thoughts shared, are relevant, as to conditions present, and to help or assist people in their own lives, adjust their settings to meet the needs of others, at this time, why I write.

How I was affected as a Law Student ...

A lot of work goes into campaigning for anything you believe in, less is more, and its important to always simplify. Its easy to get caught up in argument, don't overwhelm yourself trying to make a difference in the world, its all about staying connected, negotiation skills are not required. The more you care, the more you are affected by end results, if they do not fit with your belief systems, be forgiving, if the end results do not match your goals, try harder ... never give up. -Why did you get involved with @bradybuzz? I grew up best friends with Sydney Simpson and while her Father was in jail, I decided to stay in Law School, wanting to do more to help others, besides picking her and Arnelle up from the airport to visit their Dad who was in jail for a gun, a ring, and memorabilia. I decided to go to Law School 2006, taking my first LSAT before any of this happened. Its important never to assume the reasons for people making committments in life, as having anything to do with whats gone wrong, its mostly because we want to live a good life outside of controversy that we make decisions for ourselves, not to step directly into any controversy. Rarely are we rewarded for such endeavors, motivated by interests other than our own, make sure to always do whats in your best interests, not do for others what they would not do for you if you were in the same shoes in life. Everyone is there for you at the top, but few are there for you when you are at your bottom in life. Let this be a lesson, in positivity ... the more you seek accolade the less you receive credit for work completed ... there is still much work to be done, it never ends, advocacy, its something to work towards every day, doing what is in the best interests of yourself, and those in need, don't be easily misguided by the selfish decisions made by others, to benefit themselves, you're likely to get caught up in the wrong arguments in life, and pushed further away from your purpose in life, taken off course. *I was hospitalized for 112 days while in Law School, this is a difficult subject for me, staying sober is the best decision I have ever made in my life, and I hope to continue to make positive progress and graduate from Law School, complete my Dissertation for an LLM Masters in Law studying Risk Management and Compliance. It's important never to blame others for your hardships in life, and to always be thankful for your life and life experiences, without whom, we would not be where we are today, popular, well liked, well adjusted, and achieved, in the face of any controversy, always do your best, you'll thank yourself later for it, fighting is rarely the best response for us, and usually puts us in a position of adversity, consequences we have to overcome, making our lives more difficult. Never make your life more difficult than it needs to be, and always continue to move forward.

Creating Options ...

Never underestimate the power of forgiveness. We all make mistakes in life ... life is not perfect, nor are we. When you finally get outside of your head, and the head of others, you enter a space called focus. Its a wonderful place to be, without worry, making a productive use of your time, not watching the minutes and hours go by, thinking about life, especially the past. Its hard to live life, thinking about what you couldve shouldve done better, if you aren't happy with who you are now, well you have no other options, you only have yourself. People will be more accepting of you the less you complain, complaining rarely gets you far in life, usually ends up in argument, with one or the other feeling better or bigger than, what a waste of energy trying to convince someone of something, you believe and need the other to believe in order to feel better, less is more, sometimes, saying less is better than saying too much. You create more options for yourself in life, not the less you care, but the more care you demonstrate through your actions, always be a person of your word.

You can't undo the past but you can certainly move forward. No one ever intends to hurt ones feelings, whether we know whats wrong with someone, acceptance is key. When we accept people for who they are thats how best to get to know someone. Living for the moment to me, is about doing the work, and watching the work get done. Similarly, relationships are about the same. Seeing an Ex from 6 years ago, a DA, I realized a lot, what I left behind, compared to where I am now moving forward. He's moving to Texas ... You have to let go, in order to move forward ... easier said than done. Whenever we learn something new about ourselves, it usually hurts. Not just to know, how useless fighting is, but especially fighting in the past moving forward, in retrospect what we see now, should usually be thought of in the positive the past. You cannot undo harm, once it occurs you just have to move forward, whether or not our feelings are hurt, if we return to the same place, chances are you are bound to get hurt again under the same or similar circumstances. Where to now? If you can't see your future, that doesn't mean there is something wrong with you, it just means that you're not psychic. Its just that you're either doing something wrong now, or means you're not where you want to be in life. Its through accomplishment, that we find a better road for ourselves in life. You get your power back, not by trying to reconcile the past, or by making amends with what hurts, but by being strong and in the now. The better you can see yourself as you are now, the better off you'll be moving forward. Things happen that way, one good thing to the next. Thats empowerment, not just believing in yourself and others, but always seeing the good in others, and in doing so, good will follow. If you accept yourself as you are, and not easily fixed, finagled, and tormented by others, then you will too feel the same as everyone else around you well. If you don't give yourself time to repair, you'll never know what well is. It's something everyone lives with regret, and not being perfect. That doesn't mean stop what you're doing and change yourself, to meet the needs of others, it just means being yourself, and owning it, while accommodating the best interests of others, thats how to be well liked, at peace with yourself, once you find peace from within, your options become less than few, but with a greater likelihood of overcoming whatever setbacks get thrown your way. Good luck!

My 2 hr 15 min Run Last Night ...

I just finished running for 45 x 3x = 2hrs 15 mins. I wasn't quite sure what David Cay Johnston meant when he said good luck with your dissertation and defense, certainly not buy $300 purple headphones from mac ... I didn't have a car for a year. I just drank ¼ bottle of vodka and ran for 2 hrs and 15 mins, should've taken the breathalyzer, but its one selfie too late, "we saw a light" ya that was me crying rejected, driving home after 3 drinks sent to a bar by another bar I sang at after getting F'd in my car, walked to my car, and chatted two for awhile about life. Its doesn't matter at this point, I drive a ford focus now, no one is on my team in life, now its time to find a purpose to live life ... no excuses about it, I'm only 33 and ready to go, why? I love myself, but its love from others that is not certain, that is not unique to me, it doesn't matter where you come from, we all shout things, before making bad decisions, that doesn't necessarily mean that we are in the wrong, or with the intent of doing wrong in life, but left with fewer options than necessary to get by, and forced to look differently to appease others, or to undo the wrongs about others toward us, as justified if we put ourselves up to it. To avoid pleasing the wrong crowds in life, its important not to justify behavior towards by instigating argument towards oneself, when others are cold toward us, just assume that it may be a matter of comfort toward you not judgment, and that's not your responsibility to reinforce, or later justify as deserved rightfully so. 3 drinks and driving ruined my life ... no matter how well off your are in life, you are never well enough to make someone else happy who is not happy with themselves, that's the lesson to be learned, no matter how good you make them feel it is not your responsibility to make another feel good to feel good or to feel good making someone else feel good, that usually drains and disempowers you in doing so, be wary of momentary instances of happiness, you are your own best friend, you're soul only leave you if you allow others to control you, its when frozen we are hardest on ourselves, don't allow others to feel better at your expense, you will always at the time know if its not a match, and if so, don't let the moment pass, its okay to walk away from moments in life, everything sticks when awake, and when blacked out, those moments too stick, do not respond to the discomforts of others toward you, and at your own expense, react and respond to negativity, when you rise above those feelings of insecurity you are less likely to be judged as less than, and deserve more in life, beyond just simple things as respect and being heard or listened to, but exist for your own good, not live for others, and set ourselves up for disappointment in life, there is more to life than love, and sometimes, doing the right things means living for yourselves to get along best with others, assume that everyone is doing their best to move forward not relive the past.

Incoming Signals ...

Communications, received, and voices heard how to interpret communications around you and to an audience -what words are for interpretation, dont assume directed at you a persons story is their own, not belonging to a member of the audience -be respectful of people to whom information is shared to -to be trusted means not to repeat private information out loud -know your boundaries, and dont allow others to test them, by testing for your aptitude everyones listening comprehension is different, higher ordered thinking takes time, not by commentary, thought about, thats not how to connect well with others, giving them something past to think about. -Reading with judgment, versus what the writer is saying, who is reading connect to self not audience, thats not how to write, by communicating whats going on inside of the listeners, the best communications come from within. -One the fighting starts it doesn't stop, and especially hurts when within the family, I never fight, I report, and if I complain, Im not responded to in the positive, why I just stay quiet and work hard, not try hard socially. -Why it took so long to build the internet maintaining confidentiality - conversations sharing and compliance - how people communicate why when shared, that disempowers the writer how to empower the writer, not via confidence given or stolen without a transfer of confidence how can confidence be achieved. -What causes #selfharm? A combination of voices and incoming negatives from within toward oneself, reinforced by negativity or passivity toward testing for your impulses in life, trying to get under your skin, dont allow people to mess with your psyche thats how you give your power away, do so freely, not take things personally, thats how you let others easily affect you or try to make you feel like them to change your voice or opinion or tone, that's called being manipulated to empower oneself, as toward someone, which afterward gets ignored or denied, as having done so, don't waste your energy engaging with people who do that to you, always be compassionate and understanding assuming that people care for themselves without intent to cause harm to you, that is how to be good judge of character not by allowing others to enable you to harm yourself, that they will never take responsibility for and that creates "burns bridges" not reinforces strengths. Your instincts in life, mean everything, in order to be the best predictor of self, you have to coordinate your own thoughts to the best of your memory, not to the memories of others, about you, what you recall having said past not go by what others say always, sometimes you know best. Trust those who care for others, not just in talking to verbatim.

My "Likes" are my friends

11-12-18

If this were a writing prompt station then I would be well, but because I am not well, I cannot teach others, only by example, live my life, as best I can, without dictating to others how to lead their lives, as advised, I write from the heart, given that, it's not a conversation with anyone, where it's coming from, but to myself, if I were my own best friend. When you lose all your friends, it's usually because there is something you need to work on, in order to have friends in your life, right now ... my friends are my likes on Instagram, call that random, but all help is welcomed.

how to control your writing

11-09-18

Don't allow others to make your writing about them. At my last job, at Farmers, they had me do an excel assignment and I was hospitalized for 28 days and had to sign a GVRO. That's because I was judged as mentally ill with a job, [because I went to meetings twice a day as recommended and did the 90x90 suggested by AA, don't overstay your welcome, or be judged as needy, you usually misrepresent yourself in that way if you are too open with others, make others uncomfortable, be cognizant.] -Knowing that it's not my fault if given an assignment, which is not in line with my political interests or cares, which is anti-violence. I obviously grew up in the middle of a heated debate, I would not want to relive that experience in the present times, by drawing unwanted attention to myself or others. That's not how to move forward in life, I do my best to stay positive and to think new everyday, as I would expect others to do the same, not try to prove negatives, or look for negatives, or wait until things are well to cause negatives, and see who blames who, that's a waste of energy to get involved with the past, there are moments when people see light, and there are moments when we lose faith, that's for no one to judge us when we are feeling good, or up, and over what, a win or focus, or experiencing a loss, what triggers our focus, and how we respond to events that either do or do not make sense to us to comprehend, the quality of care needed at this time, which should be positive, anything else would be inappropriate and selfish at this time, but in good humor I blamed Saks for selling me a 39 1/2 for a party in Vegas with my then boyfriend who golf'd with my Dad we were going to get married, but could not handle the pressure of applying and going to law school, taking my LSAT, and dating. We all make mistakes in life, I have a dissertation to finish, then will have completed law school at Thomas Jefferson School of Law. We all waste time in life, sometimes not purposefully.

When things don't make sense

When Things Don't Make Sense – Anger + Outrage

11-09-18

When things don't make sense its easy to become befuddled and maybe even upset, when you hear something wrong, or think that something is about you, come to your defenses and fight. That's about protecting your integrity and sense of health not wanting to be affected by the problems of others turned off in life. That's a natural condition, some conditions are unnatural such as when others to their advantage make you look stupid, on purpose or out of lack of respect for you, think deserved, if you allow those moments to bother you you'll never reach a sense of clarity required to appreciate the present. It takes a moment or two for things to settle, not dust, but thoughts, and that sense of peace you feel when the thoughts arising, are in tune with how you want to feel, well that's the best feeling, a sense of peace and quiet. I'm not sure how the mind works, but I am too learning just as everyone else, I always write from the heart, selfless, and not to show sides or argue sides, I was taught to see all sides, and that is more than one side and that's for sure, maybe why I experience mental illness, that is my gift in writing, to be balanced, and if its not jiving with you, then that must mean that I am annoying to you, or sound well, and that's annoying to you if I am well and you are not. I have been not well for many years now, trying to stay positive and keep busy, I just started working, trying to stay out of trouble, and at the same time, be a positive life force for myself and for those around me. Never allow the misdirected hate to undermine your totality of circumstances present as disfavorable to your own interests, things are how you see them not always as they seem, and if you get too into artistic representation of reality then yes you will lose your mind in befuddlement, and control, trying to tweak and subtly change appearances to communicate to others, that's how some communicate that's not how I communicate Im a perfectionist. Being put on risperidone and abilify shots left me bedridden for many years, a writer + runner. Never lose your sense of control in life, persuaded by others to mimic and taunt as deserved, that may seem like a good idea at the time, but after many years of being bullied, eventually we have our wits end with tolerance of such behavior markedly immature and a turn off, so knowing this when people are new to any jokes in life, allow them to have fun with it and turn a blind eye, or plug your ears, its not for you to judge how others communicate to one another.

so maybe saks took it too far ...

11-08-18

So maybe Saks took it too far, with the 39 1/2 I was a nobody then with an Amex. No one ever knows if you're important unless you tell them, otherwise you run the risk of being treated like trash based upon appearances, if you look used up, then thats how you get treated, its wise to always appear well and do your best, with wit and smarts, not allow others discomforts to be your own, cast you off as questionable based upon what you look like, and how you talk or look at people, if there is something about you that is wrong, that will show on your outsides, especially your face, thats something you cannot hide, confidence. Once you lose your confidence its probably with someone else, much like your soul, that travels to and from the people you love, thats not your blood line, thats just your memory, and even if you get hurt or injured, your body remembers everything, stay strong. People may not be able to relate to you, but that doesn't mean you should stop trying, its hard to predict if something bad will happen to you, never lose faith, and don't go backwards blaming people in the past who have tried to argue that there is something wrong with you, everybody does things for themselves, and much to that opinion will try to prove their smarts in advance or in defense, if you're too slow, who looks like the innocent person then, usually the one who is most put together, thats not a look, its a trait of being good, confidence, not by experience, and especially not by how much love you come from or get in life, that does not necessarily mean everything will work out for you in life, if you don't utilize your best decision making skills. I have been hacked, papers books and notes stolen, and likewise my clothes have been thrown in the driveway/street, everyone gets upset sometimes, just don't imitate people who are in the wrong to prove that that type of treatment is deserved whenever someone questions you, that does not mean that they are a traitor or that they are upset with you, be forgiving of those who get angry with you, that is because they are not happy with you, and defensive if bossy toward you think that they know best, thats not jealousy, thats not love, thats just people being territorial over their feelings or by what they know best, think they see things much clearer than you based upon their vantage point, everyone deserves an opportunity to be well, regardless of what people think should think agree upon, or disagree upon, your ideas in life, are your own, and when exposed, your secrets or computer or facebook or messenger, you should never say anything that you would regret, once you start talking $hit about someone that usually manifests itself into some type of disagreement, that disagreement is distrust, and the part when you start talking $hit is when you think the other is turning on you, people at best, are trying to make themselves look good, and for whatever reasons, we think that intent is directed toward us, sometimes it has to do with their own insecurities in life, and nothing to do with you or trying to make you feel worse off or the same as, given your experiences or privileges in life, how much has any one person suffered, that they so choose to make others feel the same, it seems to everyone best interests to protect others from having achieved the same apathy or treatments in any given state of mind, where you are most comfortable, make sure that is first with yourself, and then it will be easier to be comfortable around others, self-harm is never the correct response to heartache or confusion of interests or conflicts of interests thats not the way out of problems, humor is helpful, take things with a grain of salt, and life is not a movie to be replicated or relived moving forward in the future, bringing to life characters past in your life, or characters past in history to prove likeness to characters known, we all know different characters in life, be yourself, your backbone is your knowledge and your knowledge is what helps you see and make decisions in life, sometimes based upon what others think, but always put yourself first and the interests of those around you who will matter to you eventually, once you get to well, leave the past behind, and do your best not to destroy your progress in life.

11-08-18

In case anyone was wondering, its based upon my wellness I am treated, Im not spoiled, I work hard, and I am very disciplined, stay home, study hard, and keep to myself, have lived alone since 2004 and had 3 long term boyfriends ... I listen to my parents, and I respect the privacy of my friends and family, I do not go through the things of others, to be in the know, or go through the things of others, to feel apart of something bigger than myself. I have a sense of myself and purpose in life, my own identity, once you experience identity issues, then you need a psychiatrist, when you do not like yourself, thats not a reflection of something you've done wrong, but something identified by others as wrong with you, listen to those who love you, they know best, and when everyone tries to interfere with your systems of support, its to take away support from you as not deserved, those are called privileges in life, trust is one of them. If someone takes advantage of your wellness, then you can always ask for help, no one deserves to be put on meds, it happens to people, who are not well, and I am one of them. Why its important to respect the privacy of others, there are only so many accommodations you can make to help people, when help is asked for provide it, when help is not asked for, steer clear of telling a story, in the aftermath, to characterize the one responding, as something or someone they are not, thats hurting a cause, or a good purpose, and making them look like they dont care, or with bad purpose, no one intends to make faulty connections in life, and we hope that those we work for can be trusted, that is not our fault, but learn when to say no, when uncomfortable or when something does not feel right, you are responsible for your life and outcomes in your life, if you get into trouble, there is no one to blame but you for allowing trouble to occur in your life, in this world, if you are not assertive enough life will pass you by with fewer opportunities in life, sometimes you have to be more accepting less aggressive dont allow that condition to be caused by feelings of not being apart of or as a reject, thats how you reach non-acceptance, look like a loose canon, and everyone in response rejects or defends themselves as normal, and you are the one who looks weird, or gross, or overreacting. Think before you react, less is more, dont wait until you collapse or people get sick, to do your best, connecting is not necessary to being understood, just maintain your sense of self, its not necessary to make sense of things in the unnecessary to make you look like your a criminal, thats not a good way to live, to drink or do drugs or to associate your mind with people who communicate criminally, such as tagging.

fitting in and acceptance

11-08-18

When you dont feel well, thats not a matter of someone communicating to you to interfere with your communications with yourself, thats something thats not mixing well inside you, thats a lack of chemistry not a sign of chemistry whenever an unwanted feeling occurs, and your head burns or your heart burns, thats an unwanted communication to and from your mind to your body and to and from your body to your mind, some people feel well to others, and some people their thoughts, demeanor and well being do not mix, do not be offended by people you do not understand, some people are conservative in their approach to life, and some people enjoy human contact and interaction, once you get hurt is difficult to trust others, and to feel well in trusted spaces, thats not how to build connections, by imitation or by bonding to make fun of people to their face, as in conjunction to a shared opinion as known about them, some people preserve their privacy, and some people enjoy doing things in private and sharing those private moments with others, I'm not one of them, Im a very private person, when you share love or your life with someone, that is usually with someone you feel comfortable with, otherwise allow people to be themselves in trusted relationships and not take personal the boundaries of others, or their inability to connect well with others, some people take awhile to warm up, that big feeling inside is feeling whole, the small feeling inside is feeling less than, and when you're finally able to blend in well thats acceptance.

#stopbullying know when to stop sharing

11-08-18

If people don't think positively of you and if you think negatively of yourself, that's how you get treated in life. That's how bullying starts, as deserved or thought deserved. Self-harm is in your control. All communications from the person being bullied is unwanted, that's something you have to live with once you become a reject, don't experiment with people who are well liked to see how they respond as an inexperienced reject, social skills are by people who are well liked, you cannot acquire good traits from people who are manipulative seeking to prove you are something you are not, that is how a reject is made, when adaptation skills and adjustment skills that come natural are created to suit an interest or a side, that is how someone becomes ill, in my case, myself, that's why you just have to move forward it's not required that everyone believe in the same thing or for all people to believe in something, and keep someone from believing in themselves, once the fighting starts, that's a turn off, and if you don't see positive, then the negative occurs for you in your life, if you allow the taunting to sit and haunt you. You have to think for yourself, and not be judgmental of others, if you allow negative judgments of you to sit, you are in control of how you respond to others, it's not your responsibility to defend yourself, or control how people communicate to you, or make you feel, you should be in control of how you feel, benefit goes to those in alignment with each other, that's how you get left out in life.

When people turn on you

When People Turn On You

11-07-18

When people turn on you based upon appearances, those negative opinions and judgments of you get felt, just like when people meditate on negatives to see if you can tell what they are thinking or what they are up to, or if they are reading your work, that's not how to read people. That's people being experimental with you, by reading your work, to see how writing works. The mind is an individual, and those individual thoughts comprise you. Much like blogging was founded in New York, for those reasons people write not to control what you think, but in a general sense to help you think for yourself, and hopefully think well. Mental illness is about things not mixing well, thoughts or voices, that when put together don't feel well, and then you have yourself, are you a product of the negative voices you feel, when then who is to blame for that illness, after all you are in control of the voices you hear, do they reflect that you are well, or do those voices reflect that you are not well, and your inner voice, is that your heart, or is that your mind, and if so, when you are in love or doing well, and the voice that comes out of you, is that an accurate reflection of your wellness and fitness of character, or does that reflect that you or someone around you is not well. What makes people feel well? Is it ourselves that make us feel well or is it other people that help us to feel well. What is happiness? Is it us feeling well or is it people at peace around us, that makes us feel well. When you are not feeling well, is it other people to blame for that illness, how much control do we have over our own wellness, and what is our correct identity when well, when there is conflict within us, what is that a by-product of, what is shown to us, who is showing what to us, and why people are showing us themselves, because they think that we need or want something to feel well, or because they think that they have something that we don't have, need or want, this is why it's important not to inflict emotions into the character of others, as though you know them best.

don't force things to happen in life

11-04-18

You can't force things to happen for you in life, when things are not working out they're not working out and that's not a reflection of anything wrong with either party, sometimes things don't work out, after awhile you get tired of trying, and with enough rejection give up. That is your body telling you to let go, you cannot manipulate the disposition of others to suit your needs, expect to be spoken to in a helpful way, and in return put someone down, that creates a toxic relationship. Whenever we feel like our buttons are being pushed when overwhelmed, it can create a situation where one feels like self-harming, that's just your mind telling you you're tired, with added support, and help from others, when needed, that feeling can stop -these are just readings, when you cannot read your surroundings, that doesn't mean dig deeper ... from where does the benefit run, from the wrongdoer, certainly not, from the person retaliating on behalf of another, certainly not, if you allow people to affect you they will have an impact on your best decision making skills, and events will occur that translate to others, that you are the wrongdoer, that's called manipulation, space means everything, sometimes you just have to let certain subjects go, and certain people go from your life when things are not working out. You cannot judge a book by its cover, or allow people to get help at your expense make you feel bad about yourself, and cause you physical disability, we all have our limits, know when to stop. You cannot build a stronger position in life by putting someone else down, there's no such benefit or positive end result when someone snaps, it always hurts, when people are not themselves. That disillusionment is real, not purposeful, and never deserved, that doesn't mean someone is senile, it just means that they are not themselves, because they are too busy accommodating the best interests of others. It's a no win situation, whenever someone becomes the butt of a joke, or the bearer of guilt placed upon them by others, that's called guilt tripping, when someone does not feel good, blaming people around them or others for their illnesses, it's not necessarily anyone's fault when someone is not doing well in life, try not to be too hard on others, life is short and it certainly does not need to be made shorter, when benefit is taken, and another's disposition is preyed upon or weaknesses brought about to see what they are made of good or bad, that's measuring someone up to a negative, it is never advantageous for any party to bring about weaknesses or negativity in others, that doesn't make anyone look good or better than, and then everyone feels bad, then it's by who feels worse, is empathized or offered sympathy for, and the one who is not responding in sadness, deemed the provoker or guilty party for causing a series of consequences unfavorable to the outcomes lived by others. You are at most responsible for yourself, if you so choose to get help, we expect that that help does not misdirect others, as bullying often does, telling someone one thing, that sets them off on a negative tangent, while the other relishes in excitement of having power over the lives of others or any one person in particular. That is not how to control a situation, allow people to live their own lives, without chokeholding people to a set of standards befitting to personal interests not in the best interests of everyone, the totality of the circumstances is dependent always upon wellness, and based upon wellness, others feel well, and when one is not well one gets help. Who that person chooses to get help from should not be taken in offense to anyone trying to help a person or group of people, don't place blame upon someone for not asking for help, help is always on an as needed basis, allow people to be well on their own, that's co-dependency to leave one feeling better than the other, at the expense of either party. That is not how one looks like the helper or a bigger or better person, let them come to you.

Letter of Apology (12th Steps)

I'm sorry for the times when I was not well, and lucky to be doing better now. I know that no matter how well I get in life, I will always be reminded of when I could have done a better job, made wiser choices in life, and realize what it is that I could be doing better in life, listen.

People give up on you all the time, it's everyone's right to worry first for themselves, that doesn't mean fall apart, or get side-tracked focusing on your goals in life, come first, that's living life for yourself, and when you are able to stay on track benefit from that momentum.

Everyone at different points in their lives are motivated by different forms of happiness, sometimes coming from themselves and sometimes coming from others, depending on how needy you are, this differs, always be compassionate toward those who care, and never blame people who act they don't care, or don't care enough, for why you are not doing well. It's always your responsibility to repair yourself, not to fight with others in the past, correct yourself.

Sincerely,

Leslie Fischman

following your intuitions ...

Following Your Intuitions
11-26-18

Following your intuitions sometimes works and sometimes doesn't, if you find yourself in the same place that doesn't mean that you've f-d up in life, it just means you've revisited an issue past that has caused you trouble moving forward, learn from your mistakes. In order to feel right, you don't have to know beforehand what's in error, to know what has gone wrong, sometimes even the most prepared people in life, make mistakes, it's easy to be defensive as though that is a lack of care when adequate care is not provided, or that lack of care shows inability to be cared for or to care about or worthy of chances in life, you create your own opportunities in life, and that doesn't always require for you to step outside of your comfort zone, letting loose shows we can have fun but in having fun make sure you don't hurt anyone's feelings, who isn't having fun, if that were a general rule, then nothing would be funny. The times call for tact, be reasonable in how you correspond privately and publicly your inabilities in life are what you are judged by and based upon those weaknesses judged as capable or not deserving of attentions, that lack of attention is not room to build attention toward or to act out or do things to get attention, to categorize as among a like or similar group who by attentions act or respond to others, once you're reacting you're overreacting, life is easier led, letting people be themselves that searching for acceptance, guided by needs or wants, people are people, and stability that's your sense of self-worth not the acceptance of others that determines how you should feel, rarely if based upon feelings toward do feelings about oneself, get reinforced in the positive, sometimes to let go you have to not be guided by who doesn't care about you, that's usually not the best place to go for help, to anyone who cares mostly when well, not when not well, or when stable, does not trust that one will stay well. That's not turning on people, that's waiting for something bad to confirm why bad things happen, as grouping someone among, once grouped among, you cannot undo that change to a person's identity whether or for what reasons deserved or consequences justifying present inabilities continued to be shown ... anything that cannot be overcome is not permanent, why they say to have faith, you can convince yourself your life is terrible even when you have everything, and if over abundance causes you instability, then that's your responsibility to hold on to your values.

Lesson for Today
11-26-18

Lesson for today, is to rise above the chaos, jokes, and with or without humor, not think too much what others think, and not be affected by what you think people think, or try to talk to people, you do not talk to in real life, no conversations outside of reality help or benefits either party, receipt of messages in the form of letter are preferred, any other voluminous forms of writing in short hand or fragments is deemed disorganized or not a professional form of communication, usually your feelings or emotions based, those are thoughts to be reinforced or re-directed by a medical professional, you can't talk people into teams or sides, or build rapport in private communications, it's how you present yourself, whether or not you are bothered by others, their words, or tricked or made to feel less than, those are only temporary feelings of discomfort not the responsibility of people to whom you are not in communication with in real life, in the field of public communications, general commentary and thoughts shared are best not as directed or about people, how people come through your writing, it's by what you focus on you are heard, not as heard and reiterated or repeated as though you to others within your writing, always base your knowledge based upon what you know your expertise your education, your exposure, not expect others know or understand the same as you do.

Achieving Well

My apologies, whenever unstable there's a space not a void, that gets filled with thoughts not deductions, or puttings together, but usually not understanding, or being the last to know or understand, that's called vision, who has arrived, who is late, and who is on point, or able to see forward, that's mostly what competition is about having a better viewpoint. To tell a bigger story, its not about highlighting what has gone wrong in someones life, or in the lives of others, but allowing life to happen on its own, not as directed by others, or made to happen to result in writings or deductions that suit personal interests, or claim same or similar to and if so presented same or similar circumstances have arisen that so justify the treatment of anyone deemed not special or deserving or achieving well, and allow or enabling others to allow that treatment to be justified, we can lend a hand, or extend gratitude to others, but that cannot change how they feel toward you, know you, or upon meeting you, respect you or not, think as not deserved or further complicate nervous dispositions in life, that's making things worse, before they are able to get better, allow people to grow and thrive at their own paces in life, not by labeling people victim, and telling stories about people, as though I am the offender, that causes one feelings of loss of esteem or causes unnecessary worry as to how words are interpreted past, writing is based upon wellness, not memory, thoughts are guided by what you know, knowing the same information is not beneficial to anyone's help, life is not a group project, everyone is responsible for themselves, at 33 I have knowledge and experience and with that, burn out, to overcome burn out don't subject yourself to experiment by others, and establish boundaries from the get go, not try to control situations, and let life happen, without putting yourself at risk of harm or speak or behave in a way unintelligible or negative toward self, about your past, to justify treatment toward you as an offender. Everyone deserves an opportunity to live life, life is not a joke, and sometimes when trying to solve problems, people take things too far, and cause problems, that's either purposeful or not, with an intent to retaliate, as deserved, or as on behalf of a team known, that is not justified. To state such occurrences would be to establish, reinforce, or further support words or actions toward you as deserved, even if you achieve well.

Thanks for the Feedback Surfer Girls ...
11-26-18

I was going to run to marina and back in the bike lane, it takes a lot to get motivated some days to run, but went back to work after taking a few days off over the holiday, not doing well on my own, but best under the direction of others, how not to burn out in life. There's really nothing to cheer on, I'm in purple headphones and there's a team of guys in the car next to me chatting, who I recorded in my car. Maybe I took that experiment too far, handling negativity, probably because nude photos were requested from me, and by pageant standards no longer qualify to be a winner, Im sure that rule does not apply to all girls, but its not a good idea, ever. The whole point of keeping a clean image, it to avoid controversy, especially during times when people are working hard, and can't handle the stress of politics or personal issues, everyone doing their best to stay positive and avoid trouble, we can watch things happen, and get hurt not doing anything about it, or we can do our best to avoid troubles in life, and think positive thoughts, and steer clear of controversies, not add fuel to the fire, by highlighting those who we think are at fault, or when worried, wonder if we could have done something differently, to help prevent things from happening in life. Usually it's the opposite, by our actions and words, we think and remember, are directed, and either have a clear sense about where we are headed in life, or set ourselves up for failure, by allowing ourselves to dwell on our problems, and not see better.

you can't undo the past ...

You Can't Undo the Past ...

If life were easy then it wouldn't be so hard to move forward in life. I think I've discussed this concept so many times, that even myself get sick hearing myself say it over and over again. Repetition is everything ... it's the only way to learn. When things are not clear think what is it that I can do better today than I did yesterday, what was it that went wrong that caused a scenario of events to occur, in which you don't feel good, and how to maintain positive energy and get along with others within your immediate surroundings. Is that happiness? Everyone's definition of happiness depends on how much of anything is required in order to stay happy. If measuring your past is important, than measure your past, if measuring your present is important, than measure your present. Whatever means you decide to determine your self-worth, so be it. We all come from different places in life and different backgrounds, that doesn't mean that there cannot be some type of consensus need for people to agree to terms or viewpoints and ideologies to help the general whole. Whenever there is suffering there is empathy, whether deserved or not, its up to you if you are th one suffering to pull yourself out of such a condition, no matter where you've been or what has caused you to suffer, not allow those hardship to prevent you from living your life, and being apart of the whole, whether in agreement or not. To build a better understanding, well that requires tact, to build a stronger mindset, well that requires emotion management, and to build a better future for oneself, well that takes discipline and restraint from activities that lead you astray or put you at risk of harm for negative judgment. also known as letting loose. Usually those who are uptight, and pushed out of their shells to see what they are like on the inside, and then based upon those appearances or based upon viewing one in an unstable condition not their natural condition, be judged, that judgment you are not in control of how people judge you as happy, or carefree, they used to be called free spirits, but nowadays that type of personality defect leaves too much room for error and mischaracterization, a dumbed down quality not deemed a good character trait of professionals, when judged as not serious.

What Can You Do? March ...
11-21-18

Be careful not to remix history moving forward, if you are going to lead by example, and reuse content from the past to make light of the present or current ideologies, always make sure done so in good taste, no explanation required, if the interpretation is so vague or timing so poor, that leaves room for rejection of communications as for positive purposes, as though in combat or to change a current set of ideas, functionality of positive purpose, comes from the heart, and timing when right occurs in front of you, a space of comfort, from which to step through in full confidence that ones purpose is so general it need no mention. I drove past a march in Brentwood today ... two packs, anything that lifts your spirits makes sense, seeking wellness is never rightfully achieved when doing anything that one hesitates to accomplish or knowingly enters conditions or states of minds under the influence of substances that weaken good character traits, sensibility, and weaken the minds ability to arrive at points of clarity during moments of darkness, when if followed lead one astray to less desirable conditions than to begin with. That's seeking a remedy or quick fix to resolve an emotion, that if thought about properly can mend itself without the use or reliance upon substances to alter or change ones outlook, positive purpose and a willingness to overcome feelings of discomfort are done so with our best decision making skills in tact, not reliant upon others for affirmations, or acceptance of purpose to move forward, make changes, or move on from subjects when if not affirmed in the negative leave us feeling stuck, that means you are focused on the wrong things in life, and that your happiness is dependent upon proving conditions, experiment with yourself not others to realize your own wellness, and to comprehend the times, and difficulties currently faced.

artistic differences + assumptions

Artistic Differences
11/21/18

Artistic differences in opinions will never change, nor will people taking on leadership positions in communication to everyone as on behalf or in reference to people other than themselves. Its an obscure facet of communication, in which people base their understanding of others, as compared to others or characters on TV Shows, it is then once information known, further confirmed as though a secret existing creates an inside understanding of knowing someone, and knowing someone as they have not disclosed to others as a confirmed identity, gathered acceptance for, and sought to be proven or disproven for the sake of building a better understanding within themselves, with expectation that others care to understand from their unique perspective to minimize the specialty understanding of a person, to make themselves the more trusted opinion of understanding, and the person without a shared understanding further communicated to as though in cohorts, that's taking someone in their natural condition of communication skills, and irritating their sense of clarity, by purposefully creating conversations to see how one responds, and then further create those circumstances or communications to further generate a response befitting to an opinion about shared among, not known to the person to whom that judgement is made upon, thats more than making someone look stupid, its making themselves feel smart by making or exposing something in private, to make look stupid before any public disclosure or good purpose is assumed, made fun of in advance and set up for failure as responding to something past, and then making someone look mentally ill, as responding to a vague understanding built to create an assumption, that's a misuse of someone good will, and mischaracterizing them, after having been honest in all responses, situated to look like a bearer of guilt in exchange for the guilt held by the assumers.

When You Miss All the Good Years

When you miss all the good years ... don't panic. People will assume for whatever reasons, that you were lost, or did not value the times enough to appreciate the present, too busy moving forward or too far behind to be cared for or worry about. Everyone has their own lives, and deserves just as much a piece of happiness, as you deserve wellness, your wellness should not interfere with the well being of others, be picked apart publicly or privately, as referenced to your past or present abilities to function in the present, so long as you know yourself, it should not matter what other people think. When people need space, allow for that, never force anything to occur that does not occur naturally on its own, that's called acceptance, allowing people to come forward, together, or take their separate ways, at their own discretion. Re: #LaBronJames – We all worry for whatever reasons people partake in causes and for the causes they support, take burden, and with that burden not burden others, who have similarly followed suit in support, not allow the causes to control the present, but be present enough to acknowledge the existence of organizations that do help, and reasons for support, as not in alliance with any sect, demonination, or personal opinion websites such as mymollydoll.com who supports causes of the times, and so chooses to be apart of those efforts without minimizing present abilities, in efforts to align with causes to look or appear as though on sides of the majority or a select few or minority who support causes not yet having taken a dramatic toll on the audiences to whom support, those who support such causes. This is a difficult subject, when to lend a hand, and when to step back, or wait until something occurs so clearly in the wrong, as to take a stance against such wrongs, that is not a team effort, or by influence, but by heart, to whom causes are supported by and why, those underlying reasons and justifications for support, are not to be highlighted for good or bad cause in alignment with interests or whether interests to whose alignment is being put to question accurately reflects those cares, that is questioning why people support causes, and whether people support causes just to make themselves look good, or to clearly take a side politically to minimize any connection to sides previously further separated by issues related or conflicting with present position, or by words or sayings, worthy of being apart of that present ability of people who support causes, and that their support is appreciated based upon their contributions to the whole, whether they further influence positive change or reinforce negatives toward individuals who support such causes. There are few who no matter how well they are doing in life, will be judged in the negative, as being apart of for reasons related to personal insecurities as to acceptance and that contributing to support of causes, reflects that deficiency in them, that would make ones support of a cause selfish, and then to support a cause that is related dis-ingenuizing their present capacity to support good causes. That is taking someone past ability and under further inspection of their present, judging their past as an inaccurate reflection of their cares during the process of providing support to others, or whether issues influenced their decisions to contribute or partake or work within sources of support, because those places contributed to reflect a care that is personal and with intention to gain knowledge in a field of interest that benefits themselves personally, with regards to their ability to help others beyond the scope of those helped in their present capacities. There is a such thing as fraud, but fraud is not a planned occurrence, if so manipulated the vision of interests past, if so any present condition, would so accurately reflect instances past as participating with disabilities present, and unfit to care or support others within the scope of expertise or to help others outside the scope of expertise trained. Who benefits from these assumptions, only those who make assumptions benefit from the assumptions made as to others, one should never be affected nor manipulated by the negative judgments of others as toward them, for whatever emotions provoked, one is always responsible for compensating for those emotions felt, responding in the positive always to instances of rejection, or intimidation, not be the benefactor of negativity to further influence likewise change in others, or make those negative feel positive or in the right, for having so identified deficiencies in the character of the person in question. The present cannot dictate the past and the present is not always an accurate measurement of how instances past occurred, the times will always change, and based upon the times, a variety of factors are used to pass judgement upon others, and based upon their wellness, accepted or rejected as deserving of their present condition or disabilities in life, personal, physical, or professionally. What is tis regarding? I went to 180 meetings in 90 days and was hospitalized with a job, forced to sign a GVRO, when by assignment designated to create an excel spreadsheet from a gun show, I was hospitalized for 28 days, with one week home in between. I'm sorry I said #freeoj, at the time, I had given up, just like laying in the ocean running for 2.5 hrs. Its never too late to forgive, and not take personally your present condition, better yourself. Bettering yourself sometimes requires not saying what people want to hear, not saying what is thought of and expected to prove or support mistreatment or discrimination of you, but always be in control of your own life, and whatever happens to you, do your best!

Going Into Hiding ...

For many years I stayed in law school, a recluse following an incident in which I got separated from my friends and escorted home and taken to another location offered a ride home. Blaming your friends, for moments when you were drunk is not taking ownership of your sense of person, its never your fault, whenever under the influences of substances which affect your best decision making skills, not all things make one feel good, including drugs and alcohol. You have to be careful when you share a story how you tell your story so that you do not get retaliated on as victim or be put in the shoes of the offender or person causing you harm, that's no way to live not being able to be yourself, for years I stayed quiet, and finally wrote. Choose wisely to whom you confide in, puzzling together the past can be painful but its not rocket science, you just have to have a strong will about you, and a strong sense of faith to overcome whatever obstacles get put in your way, be inspired but not at your own expense rely on people who have not yet overcome their battles with relating to those who do not have well thoughts about others, placated as among. We all take for granted moments when well, and sometimes our misjudgments of others or toward others, can resolve what did not make sense from the get go. Any separation is painful, from loved ones, or even boyfriends, distance makes the heart grow fonder. You are who you think you are not who others say or think you are, always be reminded that we all have our gifts in life, and nothing stated is stated in reference to the benefit of those who have caused harm to others. That would be a misuse of progress, to project the past on the present, and likewise watch characters come to life, presently from the past, or create characters moving forward who resemble people who have failed previously at achieving a sense of peace in life. Who are your heroes in life? Do not be mistaken. We are all entitled to those who look up to, admire, and put forward as well among us, not to be short sighted as not well, written off as not apart of, that is not the solution moving forward.

When things get awkward ...

11-16-18

Eventually you reach a stopping point when it comes to communicating within conversations and building rapport with your audience. That is not something that is helpful to do when people are not getting along, that's considered an unwanted communication to all, as through someone, not on the behalf, but as directed toward them negative attention, that usually occurs when someone is up and feeling well, they are put down by others. That negativity you feel as toward you is non-acceptance toward you, also known as insult, when people think that by their communications and abilities in life, are above you. We all make mistakes, when it comes to respect and appreciation for others and the good that they do in the world, that communication to someone, as negative or insulting, do not interpret as directed toward you, that's usually occurring to communicate to others, or to justify that what was done to you when you were doing well was justified, as not enabling you to move forward in life, don't allow others to make fun of you, or to chastise you for your wellness, or why you are well or look or appear better, that does not mean that one thinks that they are better than that just means that they are not letting anyone affect them. There is no power in controlling people, the only way to empower yourself, is by being in control of your emotions and discourse, it is not your responsibility to explain to others where you are coming from, only to do your best to be professional and not engage in defensive behaviors that cause wellness among and further separates you from others, or being on the same wavelength as others, that does not make someone smarter than, just because they are able to connect with people in a way that you are not able, that does not make you less than or disabled, it just means that you need space, to figure yourself out, and how to empower yourself, without relying on acceptance from others, to feel good in life. You don't need people to like you in order to feel well liked. Its important to get along well with others, no matter what is awkward.

You can always date and drink ...

11-16-18

If people don't like you that's not your responsibility to correct. Your focus space is not up for interpretation, when judged as not well or partaking in activities that can cause illness. One should not judge for what purposes someone is either dating or not dating, I have since decided to go to a mixer, that is not a good reason to leave jobs or relationships, out of unhappiness or lack of wellness, that means that your inside communications need to be stronger than communications outside of you, that you cannot control, what other people think. Don't let anyone get the best of you, in due time, everyone's true colors show, whether in acceptance of you, or whether they think that they know you best and don't know you at all, judge you. You cannot go backwards and fix relationships, when you think highly of someone, let their wellness speak for itself, that based upon good premises, they shine. Don't enable others to cause harm to you or your wellness, that you cannot take back, when embarrassed in public or in private spaces, confrontation or discussion of the issues is not advantageous to your own health nor is discussion of the issues to anyone to whom is causing harm to your relationships, benefit. Allow people to bond, and stay well, that is not something you should take personally, as left out or not apart of that is the role of those who are well to take care of others, those privileged enough to be in caretaking positions, benefit from those relationships, get taken care of. When you are well enough to share, what it is that's going on that's bothering you, that sense of togetherness or comradeship as directed toward you within conversations, that is not something you should take personally, as someone who is hard or difficult to get through to, should not be someone who is treated as not intelligent, or not well enough to understand or comprehend misbehavior or behavior interpreted as toward or in conjunction with communications toward. Whenever there is a conversation, you have to allow that conversation to occur, and whenever that conversation gets used to illustrate or correct your sense of being as wrong, then don't take personally the conversations of others, how you respond, internally is your right to privacy, how you feel, is your right to privacy, what meds you take is your right to privacy, what meetings you choose to go to is your right to privacy, what information you share about yourself is your right to privacy, don't allow anyone to put you down in life, as not well, or cause you illness, as assumed you are something you are not, you can always date and drink.

11/15/2018

Don't hate [on] people because you think they've gone too far [that's not the solution], or come too far in life to well, that would be doing everyone a disservice in life, for once someone gets well to get sick. #issue - The importance of image playfulness. Be kind. I realize now to get hair cuts and dye my hair and smile more. -Don't make up your mind about people right away, always give people a chance to be known, your first impression of them may not be the right, sometimes people are off putting from the get go, you never know where someone is coming from in life, don't over invest in likeability you usually end up coming up short in life, short handed meaning, less is more, in other words, if you are vying for the wrong attentions in life, things wont work out in regards to whos acceptance youre in need of.

The moment you lose faith ...

11-12-18

You have to keep going in life, the moment you lose faith, is when you need to turn to a higher power, or someone other than yourself to help steer you back in the right direction. That loss of consciousness or contact with the present, is your mind leaving you, or when upon interaction zone out, forgetfulness is a product of uncertainty or pressure, it could be for a variety of reasons, but know your steps, that usually helps you get back on track, whatever it is you believe in, never stop believing in yourself, we all stick to a different set of ideas, mores, and norms that we see fit, or help us to see and understand the world, the world is a big place, know yourself best before placing judgment upon others, as they are. Not everything is a product of your life, that means when you enter the lives of others, that shared space, is not comradere but mutual respect for the boundaries of others, usually fosters the best relationships, thats not love or admiration, but creates an area in which you can think. We all come to different stages in life, at different times, depending upon how many people you know, how well liked you are, and based upon what you look like, no one person is the same, we all blossom at our own pace in life. Be patient with others, never blame others for any system of beliefs which cause you illness, thats not the solution to pick apart what is not well about others, instead focus on the positive and always see the good in others. You may not be able to predict the future, or control your present condition, that is health, but always do your best, not to interfere with the good health of others.

Upon Deletion and After Theft ...

Upon deletion that is thought of as a right to take, or make fun of, a sign of guilt, usually when someone is well, that wellness is wanted to be benefited by the creator and there is a loss of energy upon creation of anything good, any break is not indicative of guilt or denoting a right to be given to the observer to take, sometimes there is a long process of saving or archiving or communicating, and in the space between creation and saving, is tired, and its during that period of tire that things are deemed as takeable as though not noticeable, it is the reader who memorizes, and it is by what is thought of as taken away remembered, no faces are as by exposed of by who is thinking about who their face changes, like mine, not by watching or imitation mimicry or by touch or transfer of energy, it is by exposure, the fewer intimacies and exposures you have the greater the memory of that person in your life, if you meet a lot of people you may not have the same problem as attached or by memory thought of, or impressed upon, it is the person who looks the most different that is deemed as the offender, I have looked the same my whole life, it is by offended "letter felt on a person" that have been impressed upon a persons sense of self and identity why people get offended when people are aggressive or say things not in tone matching or too strong of a tone for by what a person looks like, the more unrecognizable a person looks, that is not necessarily a given that a negative opinion is held of them sometimes self care is a process not a sign that their body is weak heart is weak promiscuous or without love sometimes people gain weight for whatever reasons, and its none of anyone business what causes heartache loss of energy or motivation in life, sometimes these are just phases and especially not be judged in the negative if experienced while growing up by a few bad photos, and all good photos taken, not remembered as well but only as not well, it is by those impressions a future impression or past impression is made about a person, as being that way their whole life without photos representative of them well, and by bad photos judgments is passed negative judgment which gets projected onto them moving forward without them knowing and its by others ability to change their face without them knowing why, that empowers people who think deserved, once you learn why your face changes, with limited contact and no drinking or drug use, and limited interaction, when well you present the best version of yourself, at work you wear nice clothes, and in the day if you do not have a job that does not mean dress down, and especially not if you do not fit in brand names jeans, they will always bring up the past as told by you and it is by the words of your story that they justify impressing upon you the interpretation of those who do not know you well and think by how you look or by where you are that something is wrong with you it takes many years to reverse negative judgment of you its by being good, and once you are able to function and maintain face, reset your face with makeup then you have made it to smart, unless you know how to manage yourself and practice self care then it is not wise to be too social drink or do drugs if you cannot manage your own identity, its by living and property beign taken away as living people who are not around you are able to attach to you and control you when you are well that attachment is good luck, stretched back to them, as not well what is taken becomes of less value, that is why people steal from those who are well to receive the benefits of that wellness by having something of the well while they are well, to be attached to well, and to understand why people are well, nothing well was ever made easily, and it may seem as though someone is strong, but its not by challenges that make us stronger, and its not by pushing ourselves that makes us stronger, past a certain age something that is easy to someone who experiences difficulty understanding, will benefit from that that challenge as faced by another, this is a reoccurring theme, as people are described as remembered from my life, that perspective is taken and then projected toward me as the one being negative it does not matter whether I look well or look young now, even if you achieve a well look and figure out what is causing your face to change, by that time your insides do not match your outsides and likewise you will be tested to see if you know your limits in life, and left for god to punish you, as confirmed as deserving of punishment based upon as weak or dull or broken how your outsides look to see if they match your insides, that's called an unwanted experiment of someone who is well treated as appearing youthful to attract, not because deserved, and an older photo is the desired result sought to be projected, then those are they who will perceive your past as told or remembered to create those possibilities for you in the future, anything explained is not disempowering to any one side, but its just a waste of energy to explain why people trun on you when well, and by the time you get sick lighten up, and by then its too late.

Upon any first meeting how you look an appear demonstrates how fit you are to be around others, welcomed into their lives, and based upon whether or not you are capable of improving, contributing to a set of positive conditions, and improvable, some us of us were well, and after taking care of others for many years become fixer uppers ourselves, those who have aged over the years recognize this pattern, and note that those who you help get better will never forget you, youd think the opposite to remember those who you have not faired well among, don't blame your past or those in it when bad luck strikes, allow people to make mistakes in life, and always prove them wrong, people will always want better in life, and the more you become desperate needy or overreact the less stable fixable you become and the more likely you will get let go, once they cannot see a future with you, that's because your wellness is viewed upon as fixable to not fixable and although better not good enough, if they see a future in you, then you should see a future in you, if they can see a future in you but you cannot see your own future including them, doesn't mean youre in the wrong place it just means that you have become so defective that until you are at your best and feel your best will you see and think your best, because that's how you conditioned yourself, others may not be so conditioned to those settings of acceptance and clarity, that's beyond perfection, that's expectation, they always tell you not to set high expectations of others, what about you? If you do not set reasonable expectations of yourself, who knew that falling by the wayside confirms or automatically groups you among a set of rejects, losers, and offenders who when failure meets people, problems occur, and when problems occur, jealousy is at fault, in my best opinion its more than jealousy, if your body and face change and you become tired sleepy head and body in pain, but not suicidal because you have purpose in life to be awake for those hours, what then, I have seen doctors their choices are (1) asleep live life (2) awake live life. In my own words which is more painful, both, I think stupid is the most painful condition when you feel something or think something and cant articulate yourself and jibberish comes out and or humor which makes you look of lower intelligence and that negative opinion of you gets casted over your positive outlook until negative occurs in your life to confirm those negative judgments of you ... no one intends to get taken advantage of ... [redacted] the good always finds better, and if youre not good enough the best thing you can do is leave, however you don't think that upon leaving you get picked and devalued, eventually all secrets become known, and if someone is not sure about you, hearing where you have been will not make them any more the less attracted to you, what is grose? Anyone in shape is not grose. What is beauty, anyone who recognizes themselves looks the same everyday is healthy not high maintenance but doing their best of course no one wants to look different everyday, and if people look well together that's not love that symbiosis, and upon disconnect they should look the same, unless they connect to something or someone who is not a match or who doesn't love them, then a part of them connects to when they looked well, why they are not happy because they wish they looked the same but because in a new relationship look different. You would think this only happens to women, bottom line pick your favorite Facebook profile and share updates when well, no one wants to see your face as demonized ugly or shrinking, only at your best, can you imagine if everyone documented their mental illness or bad days, then we would not remember the best of times, or when well, only our worst including your friends and audiences. Market yourself as well always, if you get hurt, don't share with everyone what happened, just fix yourself, report always, and I promise God will fix your face, the body heals.

Whats happening ...

12/25/2018

Whats Happening ...

12-25-18

Whats happening is the spiring of people, as toward you, trying to be something from your past to see if you react in the same way, thinking they know how you work. When you are not stable or lost people will shout things at you to see if likewise you react, and based upon the words that they use, or stories they tell see if you respond in the positive or negative as assuming things are about you, that's creatively putting you down, by bringing up subjects to see if you are desensitized then trying to prove desensitized by bringing up subjects over and over again to see if affected whether guilt is existing or not, that's someone creating a side and then taking the place of the person to whom they believe is not at fault, and then treating you as though you are at fault, and by the same token doing things you are not able to provide evidence for and then treating you if you respond in the negative as "bringing it upon yourself" proving backwards commentary not justified at the time commentary was made, that's someone – reflects someone who thought you were less than and spoke to you as such until you exhibited characteristics of someone who is less than, if someone does not look well that's not a necessarily a product of their environment, nor does how someone look or appear now show whether someone was well or not at the time they got sick, and based upon a fathomed understanding of illness, place beliefs as though obsessions exist that so justify treatment of them, and further justified by tampering, and once stated is how they keep harming you without ability to prove say that you are being experimental with them, only someone who is being experimental with you when they do not get the reaction that they had hoped for respond in the negative toward you, and when they achieve a positive condition and let go, is when you become disgruntled as they have no understanding of your comprehension and ability to not react, that's assuming that you were punished because you react poorly to negativity, at what point did negativity begin? You only have a small window of opportunity to be normal, once you look or appear abnormal is when you get treated as being abnormal inside and out, sometimes our outsides do not match who we are on the inside, its at the point where everyone who was guilty no longer cares and unless a script is written for them for how to respond or treat you or something said as to how a few have treated you to see how the masses respond, is inflating the position of the few who have been experimental with you are not been able to keep you or maintain admiration or love for them, that's when they have taken it too far not you, learn how to let things go, you cannot force people to love you or care about you, in an unprofessional way, people adjust both to people and their environment its not all about you or the wellness provided by you to be returned by someone who you think looks well and until they do not look well realize they are not well, it should not get to that point, when physical appearances change, sometimes because of mistakes we have to take care of people who are not well, and based upon that understanding people either stay sick or achieve well. Based upon where I was place was by choice, a hospital where smoking was permitted why I was visited in court and in the hospital is beyond me, everyone deserves a right to privacy, that's not support for return, that's making someone uncomfortable on purpose as though thought deserved, you cannot judge one interaction as all post interactions are the same or similar, just because you think that you are a catch does not give one the right to call someone mentally ill over song choices or sponsorship, nervousness is a manifestation not of aggressiveness around you, but by comfort, if not comfortable do not build trust with those to whom you think you are better than, if so achieve and find better than, don't put someone down who is well to look better than, we are all victims at this point, and until you understand it takes time for people to recover will you stop fighting, blaming others, and heal. Its someone who does not understand your past thinks they know you or why you have become ill or treated the way you have been treated and they either reinforce those opinions about you to see if they are right to feel well, or just let things go not make things worse. Allow people to move forward in life, not everything is about you, and until you can empathize is not always a good indicator of understanding, sometimes empathy hurts, I am not well, why no one empathizes with me, that's not because brought upon myself its because others deemed me not viable or unfit for representation, that people took on leadership positions about me and put me down as justified, to blame for their misunderstandings of mental illnesses. At what point do you forgive and move forward at what point do you stop taking people who are good and blaming them for when things go wrong, and let the ones most put together lead, when they stop wanting to lead, what then becomes of society, as led by the broken or people who have failed, is it really the strong who have lifted us, or those who are bad turned to good. How long can someone who is bad stay good, and at what point does one misrepresentation cause a series of misrepresentations, that is based upon the happening of bad conditions to be proven right, if the first misunderstanding was understood as a misunderstanding then the following misunderstandings would not have been made about them as justified, or amplified.

Stories from Your Past ...

People will always be picky about what they remember about you, based upon how they have viewed you during good and bad times, and based upon your past as told or how they have judged you is how they build and create a current understanding of you as in the wrong, those are by people who are prosecutorial minded, who do not allow you to move forward in life, and wish to have you remembered as bad, at what point do you then begin to move forward. Whether you get viewed upon as one who is in tune with the past that was not well, is what they do to further discriminate you as promoting characteristics about you until changed, to further an understanding of where you belong or deserve to be grouped upon in life. You cannot move forward after punishment, that is something I will have to live with as intelligent, and after having done my best to live a good life and stay home, not exposed or tired by socialization or from talking too much, where my energy comes from seldom spoken and hardworking, its not just by who we admire that we are influenced, but by those who have good energy about them that influence others, do not be measured by the change you are able to influence in others, that does not necessarily reflect back some kind of a gift of being able to improve others, it's the gift of improvement, that gets hired or attacked by those who experience failure after failure, and rejection who can't seem to make good luck happen for them in life, without putting someone down with a gift to make themselves appear as the gift giver of wellness or deserving of credit for wellness, and when any illness is achieved or obtained, then abstinence is best from all social interactions and dating, that's the point at which when your gift is gone, your gift of wellness, and those not affected are the ones who keep achieving well at your expense, you do not own people, not even your heart, and even if you get rejected or broken, do not empathize with those who have changed their minds about you, there are plenty of people in this world gifted who are able to help others achieve well, that is not a one person job, but sometimes a group effort, once you do not match up in life, think what characteristics or traits were changed about you after having been put down, is that the kind of person you should give your heart to someone who is fickle well and condescending toward you, if that's not a match once it will not be a match again in the future, find people who love you for who you are, not dislike you for who you are not, not believe in you. It's a choice to light up, once your light gets put out you become picky, how a person becomes picky about the energy they spend and put out into the world, whether to save energy or waste or spend energy helping others or see others improve while you become ill, what is that then, energy being taken away? Well Shakespeare, its about how much energy you put into each project, you can give and give and never receive any returns on what you think is your best work, or something of value, why? Because anything that looks easy or sounds well or complete is deemed to have been easy to make, when in actuality anything special does not exist prior, becomes devalued as copies are made or distributed how someone who is smart is despecialized, once someone carries on a gift made by one, and then worked on by another who is not the creator of an original work. That's the loss of intelligence that occurs when you share your mind, sometimes in marketing what you share becomes better at you than you are able to perform, that's in a general sense what happens when you figure out something that works and then teach someone else what has worked for you, and if they become better at it then so be it, and if you get drained that's because you have trained and replaced yourself.

What the main problem is ...

12/24/2018

What the Main Problem Is ...

12-24-18

The main problem is what team people are apart of and people on the outside trying to decipher which communications are being brought toward others, for that case it does not matter what I write online, I have good days and bad days in public, depending on my mental health sometimes I feel threatened by others and sometimes other feel threatened by my presence, that has nothing to do with having a record which no one knows anything about. And for whatever reasons I did not have money and got arrested is my own business not the business of others (2013, 3 drinks), for what reasons people were punished afterward, a bar was shut down. Discrimination comes in all shapes and forms, and its never by those who are threatened that get blamed for being scared of others, by what they hear or because of what they look like. Im not a dangerous person, I'm not a violent person, depending on who you grew up around, determines how people are toward you, growing up got along with everyone everyone nice to me, now however, whether or not I have a job seems to make no difference, people will always belittle who they think they are better than or by who appears as less than deserving of being put down in life, as deserved, that's not how to treat people, and those who treat others poorly based upon how much confidence they have or based upon beauty should not be treated based upon beauty or physical standards of good health. We are all inspired by different things in life, and by different people, its usually by the good, we are influenced, and by the good we are changed, or try to better ourselves and those around us, sometimes people are credited for their wellness and ability to help others achieve the same wellness or better. When people are wrong they tend to come forward either emulating what it is that they have done wrong, or coming forward as though that has always been the case, not everyone communicates to one another [the same], and not everyone is friends, we were all brought up differently, and no one person is the same as another, nor should be treated as though like, as though inspired by or changing to be more like, what is defined as beauty thin and oval shaped head, if one looks that way it is because one has taken good care of themselves how they were able to achieve beauty in life. You should not treat people who are well as offenders by separating them from others to see if they are still beautiful on their own in order to identify them as the offender or not, one who is not beautiful alone would not be out on their own, able to look well from home to the bar, if they were the one in need of beauty or love, means that that person already has love at home, why they are well or feel well around others able to perform, and of intelligence. You should not treat people who are of intelligence as unintelligent based upon how they look or appear, and just because someone is closed off on their headphones not social or writing in their phone does not mean there is something wrong with them simply because they have not woken up to the depression or loss of light seen in others, that loss of light is not a product of the presence of someone who bears light, and one should not be discriminated based upon their intelligence as looking and speaking to others in public spaces, not all of us were gifted with confidence, some of us perform better around friends, some look better with boyfriends, and some look best on their own, just because someone does not have a boyfriend, does not mean that they should be treated as a reject or not capable of giving love and maintaining a relationship trash.

people on the outside ...

12/24/2018

People on the Outside ...

12-24-18

Generally people on the outside always want more and if they don't get more from you or out of you think because its your fault or that you are defective or means something is wrong with you -that is a characteristic of someone lacking patience. You can give everything to someone, and still not be of value or appreciate overtime, this is not about anyone in particular, nor ever has been its about learning how to have faith and the appreciate what you do have in life. Its not worth it to share when one is not doing well, as treated as deserving of not being well, its people as attached who stay well, and its people who get thrown on the inside of anything that do not feel well. There's no theory behind punishment, you either are doing well or not doing well, I can hear them saying now, yeah that's what happened or yeah she deserved that or yeah that's why she got punished, or it was for this or that or this or that, that's not the solution. You either are good or bad, and depending upon the times and what you disclose about yourself, you add to your own stresses in life, the more you talk about the bad, the less the good shines, and the more you talk about the bad the more the good assumes that you are talking bad about them and then they put you down so that you look bad so they don't look bad, public opinion when strong is not easily affected by rumors, this I have learned over the years, no one really cares what other people think, mostly about themselves and their own wellness in life, that's a hard topic to preach, without changing the sick to well and making the well not feel special as they are not the only ones who are well but share wellness with others, to whom they don't take a liking to, that's an unwanted meeting of the minds, that's not cancer, that's just thinking someone is not well and putting them down so that others don't think they are well so that they become a source of wellness to others, and someone who is not bad or not sick or not dying is treated as though they are until they believe it themselves.

When Life Gets Random ...

There will be a lot of people attracted to you in life, mostly for your well being, not just being nice to you, but because there is something good about you, not necessarily lacking from their lives, but wanting to make you apart of theirs, you don't have to be close to everyone, not even friends, but you can be nice to everyone and still get far in life. I'm one of those people who people open up to feel comfortable around, I get asked questions, and especially asked about myself, one should always feel comfortable talking about ones self especially in the positive. The more you have going for you in life, the better off you will feel, others may not always make you feel good about yourself, that's a judgment call on your behalf, you cannot help everyone. You would think that with training, and positivity you would be resilient to all types of stressors in life, but that's not the case, some people rub off on you, and if you surround yourself with the wrong types of people in life, then you may be changed by the wrong people in life, why its important to always keep to yourself, not be easily affected by others. Im not sure where I was going with this, getting lost ... Don't be easily offended by others when they want something from you in life that you are not able to provide or do not want to provide to them, you are in charge of your own well being, and if people start to not like you because you are not putting out or befriending others, well than that's not your responsibility to correct the problems of others, especially not by bedding them or allowing them to bed you. Eventually you stop. There are some people in life who attract the well, usually people who don't have many friends, to themselves, and work hard. That's who I was, once you drink and do drugs you attract a different type of person, someone who takes risks in life and lives for the moment, don't be one of them. If you are comfortable with who you are, you won't change or let loose for anyone.

Looking back ...

12/23/2018

Looking Back ...

Looking back I'm sure we wish we would have all handled things differently, now upon realizing how short life is, you'd think once you had kids you would realize the cycle of life, even those without kids come to this harsh realization that our time is limited on earth, be easy on yourself and others, always keep in mind that everyone is doing their best, always see the good in others. Some days likewise I wish I wrote less on Twitter and maintained a private life, living in the public eye is not always advantageous to your health, sure others get to know you better, but are you really better off? When your fears come out to play, what can you do to reduce your fears from taking hold of your positive outlook in life, everything is clear looking backward. Everyone makes mistakes in life, we trust the wrong people, we take risks, and most of all we learn from what has gone wrong in our lives in order to build a better life and future for ourselves. There were times when things did not make sense, and we were not put together, there will be times when you look back and wonder what you saw and why, and why others responded to you in a way different from your positive outlook, we were all brought up differently. My Father showed me a photo of the LA Times building, I had no idea that that happened. They have been though a lot, I'm sure most of us they have sheltered our generation from, I'm not sure how much computers helped to assemble to past, but I'm sure they've helped with presentation at the present. Just stay positive ... You can only shelter others so long, before you yourself become sick, by what they have feared and by what you have feared, by the time you realize what it is that they are fearing they feel better, and at your own investigatory expense become ill, don't let that happen. There will be people that believe in the present at peace with themselves and there will be people who are not at peace with the present and themselves, why they say do not let anyone affect you. Who is it that is around you that is happy with where they are now, and what can you do at the present to continue to make them happy, by that happiness spreads, not fears, and by that you become happy not sad, about your past, or the past as led by others, always seek to improve not get set behind.

People of interest ...

12/22/2018

People of Interest ...

12-22-18

There will be some people in life who will not be of interest to you, not even show up on your radar, not know their names or faces, but they may know you, that's what being a writer is about, not being known by face or name or attribute but known for your talents in life, your gifts not being known by face and name, that's what lights up to the reader, having ones own sense of identity is called empowerment, taking away from a persons sense of self and identity is disempowerment. In order for the reader to feel better, they must remain separate from the writer, not feeling like apart of them has been taken away. Your fans are your friends, that is your support system, they are not friends in the sense that they follow you closely, worship you, or think highly of you necessarily, just that they appreciate that you exist, for some people that is good enough, type of support system, to whom does the benefit run and why. In any symbiotic relationship both the reader and the writer benefit from having known eachother. Its not that everything you know is influenced by one another, but whether everyone you know is influenced by one another, we all make fun of eachother for different reasons and mostly out of love do people insult or put you down thinking it will make you a better person, that is what makes them feel good to change you, for some that's their source of empowerment, thinking they can fix you, its to their benefit to see change happen and when they feel responsible for those changes happening think that they are in control of what good stems from the good that is happening around you, for negative people that's their sense of positivity, being controlling of others, that does not always work for everyone. Giving up in life is not the solution for happiness, you may lose motivation in life, and take different paths in life, but that does not always mean that you are in control or on the right path in life, sometimes we get led astray in life by what we think feels good or by what and whom makes us feel good, that doesn't mean that we are good or that because we are good people try to control us, or try to make themselves feel better with us around, that's called love whenever anyone takes you under their wing, that's not control, and that's not a matter of anyone negative trying to feel positive with you around, sometimes, its peoples job to care for others, not always out of good will, or sacrifice, but because they care, not all are gifted with the responsibility or ability to care well for others, themselves included. Why its important to never give up. Your motivations in life, should at some core responsibility be to benefit yourself, not to benefit others, and if you are being picked on when well, that's because they think they deserve it, that's not the CIA, its people who think that because they know you can control you and think that they know you better than you know yourself, don't rebel you only end up hurting yourself, running away from people who think you are being problematic, or people who think they are better than you, trying to take your place in life, put you down, or treating you like you deserve it in life, that is punishment, not marriage or reunification with your ex for marriage or to have a child. -If I were married I would be living in Yorba Linda by now and have been married 2013, is when my ex was planning on buying me a ring, asked for a loan from his parents, that's marriage. When you walk out on marriage to serve some higher purpose to stop something bad from happening, then you never come back from that purpose or cause, that's when your purpose in life has changed, from loving one, to caring for all. You get two choices in life, to be monogamous, or to live forever from one heart to the next, staying strong on your own, that's your choice whether or not to settle down, and if alone its your choice to be alone.

It takes time to recover ...

It Takes Time to Recover ...

12-20-18

It takes time to recover, from any injury, pain, or punishment, life doesn't happen overnight, and some injuries become permanent, if you don't manage your health well, or by listening too much to others get sick, always follow your instincts, what feels right, and listen to your heart, know when to stop, and follow those feelings, when you do not feel safe, yes that means that something bad could happen to you, why its important to only do things that you like or enjoy doing, and when the timing is right do so, don't get caught up worries about others too much, unless you are happy will you be able to make others happy in life. If people don't know you well or think they know you they will test to see which stories about you are true based upon what you take personally, and then by how you respond, test to see if that is the truth of how things occurred, how you end up reliving your past, and then dug deeper into, when nothing makes sense that doesn't mean that conversations are about you, it could just mean that people are at peace around you, unless you are at peace with yourself, will you be happy around others, in order to feel well you need not be special or better than others to achieve in life, just with a good sense of right and wrong, and doing the right thing, knowing when to let go and when not to go backwards, forwards is less than appreciative of those you forgive as when brought back into your present, lack of acceptance ensues, that is as though your newness belongs to someone who has just met you, those who love you will be accepting of your past and where you are headed for in the future, those are the ones at peace with you. Those who are not at peace with you, either (1) think that you are the problem (2) that your problems affect them (3) that you are apart of the problem (4) that by you being around them, you do not benefit the whole but need to be proven of value an asset that not being sure about you, that's not loss of faith, that's just not being treated how you think you should be treated. If you allow, people to think negatively of you then that's how you will be treated based upon how you appear as confident or not put down, what others project toward you is always a manifestation of themselves, or their displeasure as expressed toward you with themselves. Don't be easily affected by others, as when you respond to it, the only person you hurt is yourself. People will come into your life thinking you are something that you are not, allow people to pass judgment, they are only human, unless you are well people will not treat you as well, and unless you are high energy its hard for people to be open kind towards you as not wanting to be drained by someone deemed as ill, don't be too nice to people who are mean to you, when one door closes another one opens, being on the street, voices and other conversations can be demeaning to realize that you are not well, don't let yourself get bothered by the wellness of others, as directed toward you are not, you can always stay home and get well that usually turns your day around, everything feeling well around you as rested.

do what is right ...

Do What is Right ...

12-19-18

Do what is right, not just what feels good. If you put yourself first before all important decisions are made, then words tend to fall in your favor. If you allow the negative repercussions of the expressions of others as about your life, from their point of view, then those are the parties affected by knowing you and then expressing to others how they feel, when you are good those expressions are tolerable, when you are bad, those expressions may not always be in your favor, tolerable. Never make other people look bad in order to make yourself feel good, that's not the solution. How is writing made, based upon our own thoughts, not by exposures, are thoughts had and made, based upon your education and upbringing, some people write about others and some people write about themselves, and if mentioned, it should always be out of importance, not to make other people look bad, if you are in general a good person, then anything attached to you appears well, no matter how hard the story is to tell, and others will be appreciative of you voicing those matters from your own perspective helpful to others, about what you have been through and what you are doing with your life now to become a better person. When things are not clear its easy for others to make impressions upon you try to influence you or change you, do not be affected by others, know yourself, and don't be easily persuaded by others to change what you know best about yourself and others. Its easy to take a negative spin on events, and further justify those happenings as based upon a negative premise or outlook, that's not always the case, for some of us, were brought up differently, from neutral perspectives and live life fearlessly not in fear of others, that's a gift. Once that gift is shared there is an exchange of safety needs met, to the reader to whom the gift is given to, and the writer is then put in the shoes of the outside perspective, however without safety needs met, that's a natural cause for instability and one should not be judged in the negative for that loss of stability resulting from the sharing of ones thoughts, not thoughts about others, but thoughts as coming from oneself, that's how good writing is made, and positive outlook achieved, when the reader gifts back a condition of value, that is positive outlook of the writer.

Just to Clarify a Few Things ...

For those of you disappointed who think that life should be better than it is and no happy even in times of peace, learn to be open to the fact that not all circumstances resulting in a person's life are due to caused conditions purposeful, sometimes life has it so, that we react and respond, as to what we think is happening before it actually happens, and if you think something is happening then that's how it actually turns out that way, you have to not only have positive life forces in your life, but not be attached to persons places of things that bring you down in life, that's not how mental illness occurs, its when physically exhausted a set of circumstances come about when we are unable to read our surroundings, that not paranoia, that not being able to feel comfortable, that's not as a result of being harmed to make others feel better, to see who benefits from knowing something is occurring without a person knowing, that's not empowerment, that results in a person not feeling well and not knowing why someone is not feeling well, to then test for causes or create conditions in which a persons abilities are weakened or further exacerbated put at risk of harm, well how does that then empower anyone to have control over what is said to whom and why and how well received they are by others, how one communicates is much to do with how a person appears and looks, do not give up on others, alter their conditions or intelligences or appearances to say well they have had enough and don't see the possibility for positive change in a person or believe in them and put them further down in life. Give people time to mourn, and remember those who have fallen, we are all not strong enough to be resilient to societal pressures and pressures to believe and think a certain way to always react and respond in the positive, especially when we feel like love is being taken away, if one thinks a person is trying to take love away from someone who does not have love, well then how a person responds shows not only how desperate they are for love or dependent but how scare a resource is having a confidant or trusted entity, the world is small, and relationships are built over time, you cannot just replace people, especially not justify replacements by causing illnesses to others, by changing conditions and due to lack of ability to adapt get sick, and then continue to alter them to better themselves at the expense of someone blindsighted getting hurt not yet able to see past what is now, or not fully understanding the big picture of what is going on, or how a person has been harmed, its never justified whenever any wrong occurs, and people are not meant to punish people, that is the responsibility of the government to resolve conflict, not for people to resolve their issues with people, by creating punishments for them, or causing them to loosen up, lose their wits about them, and see how they crumble or fall, whether they respond the same in illness, or able to be resilient to pressures outside of themselves and stay well, people become ill for different reasons, if we all do our best to help and support one another, then there is no reason for people to become ill or sick, and give up in life, or continue to be hospitalized made tired, or unable to see whats going on around them as directed toward them for being at fault, from what point does the sun rise and set and when is earth happy with the wellness of others, who then is responsible for whats going on in the environment around them the people in it, or the people around them, and for what reasons, are people excluded from the betterment of society, and put further down in life, to not be able to support themselves reach independence and earn a wage in life, some of us take time to work on ourselves, for some this takes longer to get ones strength and confidence back, its not always by talking or posture that dictates what has occurred in a persons life to make them that way whether deserved or not. Be caring toward others, and be loving toward those who need it, its not always necessary to pick apart a person who is not in need, and try to change someone who does not need help, that's how people get sick sometimes, when help is unnecessary. What industries thrive and what industries fall, and where do the well work, the well work in places where help is needed, and based upon their own foundations of thought and best decision making skills are then able to work and perform under pressures, not be easily affected by others, trust that those who are professional always have the best interests of others at heart, and always see the good in others.

What happens when you abandon your companion ... #presidenttrump

What Happens When You Abandon Your Companion ...

12-15-18

If you butter someone up, you are responsible for taking care of them, because you have lifted them, it is you they will return to if they are in need of support. During times of need you may feel independent of others strong, its usually then that you are needed, often times needing to set aside your own needs to reply or talk to others and connect, people will not always tell you what you want to hear, but learn how to be in control of the conversation not get put down or allow others to be put down by others, the heart is a sensitive machine, and often times needs much reinforcement as it needs to be expressed through communications, its not always by your tone that a message is delivered, sometimes from within things comes about and sometimes forces outside of us, present themselves within us, you won't like all the voices you hear in life, not all will be kind to you, and when the times are good usually when you get pushed to your limits in life to see what you are like, how strong you are, how resilient you are to stress and opinions held by others, and how well you are able to perform under the pressure of negative opinion, especially be kind to those who have supported you your whole life, do not make light of their experiences or hardships in life, decision making skills, we all vent differently, tantrumming is never to solution to be looking at as someone that can be relied upon, usually stable people are the most trusted people, and those not in control of their emotions, set aside as best opinion shared for making important decisions as to how to accept others, acquire viewpoints, adhere to values that build toward positive purposes in life, and steer clear of those bearing negative outlooks based upon their own wrongs in life. Never punish yourself for not living up to your potential or not becoming the person you thought you were, not everyone was made to be great, and sometimes no matter how hard you study you will not become smart and a 152 is the best score you can get on a practice LSAT after taking the test 3 times starting with a 143 at Princeton Review. If you can't make it in life, there is always a place you can find to grow at your own pace to be at an acceptable speed maturation wise to be given respect or take on caretaking positions, getting in touch with your inner child is not the best avenue toward becoming a mature adult, its when our defenses down and our humor is up that we stunt our growth and the growth of others, to build a smarter understanding of now, what has past and see yourself in the future based upon where you are now, knowing your options in life, by the goals you set for yourself presently -by this understanding of self-growth you are either happy with yourself or find yourself dissatisfied, as you were in relationships on in public spaces, to freely emotional, or too freely expressing how you feel by looking on the outside as unkempt as you feel on the inside, we are at our best when everything is in order, organization comes to those who stay well, and keep up with tasks, not by those who fall behind, you are a sum of the parts of effort you put toward achieving goals in life, the more organized you are about your goals in life, the more organized your life will be, and the more organized you will appear to others, that's maturity, not dependence on others to be put together, and not dependence on substances to feel good, when all is lost no medication or drug or alcohol in your system can make you feel better about yourself, if it is you that you are unhappy with, no matter what rejections you face in life, always live up to your full potential do not be the sum of the parts of life that have put you at your worst, allow others to dictate your best, or be driven by acceptance from others, for reassurances in life as to how well you are doing in life, you are bound to lose your sense of self to the benefit of the receiver of that need for affirmation, you know you best, others know you only by what you tell them, knowing that don't set yourself up for disaster by forecasting your past to someone new in your life, to watch the past unfold again, as you were at your worst, be happy with where you are now, learn from your mistakes, and each day is a new day to begin again, start over.

Leaving the past behind ...

Leaving the Past Behind ...
12-15-18

There is a method to success, a measure of one's ability to learn from their mistakes, become wiser decision makers in life, and enable themselves to achieve by moving forward with positive footing, that's not smarts, that's knowing when to let go, if your past is keeping you from achieving in life, you've taken the 4th step too far, punishing oneself, is considered self-harming, and forgiveness is a matter of recognizing what you have done well in life, and what you could have done a better job of in life, abstaining, that's why people believe in preservation. If you get hurt looking for love, have no fear, love will always find you, and if you feel overwhelmed, chances are you will not match with those who similarly feel overwhelmed and best off finding companions in life, put together and achieved, including yourself. If for every decision you make, accept that in your past as doing what is in your best interest and in the best interests of others, not everyone will be happy with you, no separations in life are permanent, apart of you will always be in the lives of those you have come across in life, that's called being human, friends, acquaintances, and professional contacts some get cut off from your life upon making new connections in life, and sometimes everyone stays in your life, and depending on how good of a person you are, you maintain those connections along the way in spite of your failures in life, forgiveness is returned to you, for not being well when you met those individuals in life who accepted you the way you were but not present enough to stay, bond, or maintain relationships at the time, that's a product of alcohol and drug abuse, inability to connect well with others be present, those are tell tale signs you are off base with reality, not necessarily selfish, but not in tune with your environment, stuck on feelings and trying to cure feelings, instead of being a person in action living life, thinking about life too much, and then trying to self remedy what it is that is bothering you the past or broken relationships. The key to moving forward is not discussion of your past in terms of stories, remembering everything from your past is a virtue, if your memory is still in tact, if your memory is poor that simply reflects periods in time when you were not put together coherent, and stuck in the past or too invested in emotion based reasoning and determinations to think and react in terms of how you feel, that's not using your smarts, when you get stuck on the inside of yourself, and out of touch with reality and whats around you including appreciating what you have in life, and what is before you, the years of your life to be lived, and the years of your life lived. People will remember you not by your past, alone, but by what you are doing now to better yourself, regardless of what rumors are going around about you and regardless of what predictions are made based upon what people know or think about your past as a predictive pattern bound to occur in the future if a set of circumstances exist matching a set of circumstances past to determine fault in the past and presently waiting for fault to be placed in the future to further justify treatment of you or further classify you among those who are not well or to be separated from society and others, as mentally ill or below the standard of wellness necessary to be apart of, that's called being discriminated not just based upon how you look but how you appear and look when under the influence of any substance, based upon how you look is how you get judged in life as among or bearing resemblance to those who have harmed others is how you get punished in life, choose your associations wisely, and if you can always do your best to keep up with appearances, never changing for anyone, but only to become a better version of yourself, you can only take care of the sick for so long, until you yourself become sick, if you cannot take care of yourself well, then by all means take care of yourself first, its always by who is more put together that gets deemed as of value or the catch, and if you are not up to the standard of care required to be considered a catch or of value, then you will be treated as someone deserving of bearing qualities of illness or looks of those who have been devalued, as though deserved, no one deserves to be hurt, aging is a process, and if you take good care of yourself and others, we hope that punishment does not follow. When you start becoming selfish and only caring about yourself, be prepared to be questioned as though not for good reasons, time alone is taken to recharge, they always assume that if you are declared bad then it by being around others you look well or feel good, for those of us independent and who live alone, being alone is how energy is maintained and looks achieved, not changed by environmental factors, things you learn as you get older, why the sick stay home, the well work.

Being on your own team in life ...

12/11/2018

Being on Your Own Team in Life
12-11-18

Always be on your own team in life, people will judge you, your past, or decisions you have made in the past, or how you have lived your life, whether you deserve to be where you are now, and based upon your wellness as deserving or not to be connected to those who are well or have achieved in life. What we do in our spare time, or whatever amends we make among those we trust, just accept treatment of you as deserved, if you are intelligent enough to separate yourself from those who have caused you harm then the more power to you, always move forward in life. There will be moments when you feel like everyone is on your side, and moments when you wonder or think that others have turned on you, we cannot be well always and sometimes the work that we do does not make us feel well, that may be a product of needing more in life to achieve happiness (whats assumed) without taking into account a persons personal history and difficult times when one has not achieved well in life, or been able to stay well while achieving, that's really no ones business to judge and if people cant have positive thoughts about you and only believe rumors, then that's their way of not making you important in their lives, or not thinking of you as important or deserving in life of respect, or not thinking you are well enough to be supported by others, that doesn't mean they are not on your team in life, they just think that their wellness is more important than their own, and think that because you make sense you should know better, or because they don't make sense to you, but you accept them anyways, means that there must be something wrong with you because you don't understand them, that's people talking to subjects beyond or about themselves, which you either can or cannot relate to and if you cant relate then that doesn't mean that there is something wrong with you, it just means that you don't feel the same way.

#nevergiveup

12-01-18

I'm at work right now, everyone needs to settle down, not raise pressures. Its usually the case when I'm not stable, that something is not right, it happens sometimes, anxiety. Not a good time to get into details or argue with emotions and what anyone could've should've would've done if they were me, or were born privileged in life, probably not have taken risks in life, or put myself at risk of harm, or self-harm because I did not live up to expectations of me, worse off. That's called embarrassment, when you are not proud of yourself, worry less what people think, own up to your addictions in life, sometimes what keeps you going in life, and what you think will make you or others feel better, is not right, or leaves you emptied handed, worse off. You live life as you go, if you empathize articulate that, if you feel threatened articulate that, but its wrong to blame people who try to help you, if you are in a better place now, means you got helped, whether you recognize what you were doing was wrong, or at the time, were wronged, its never justified to let loose, and trash yourself, everyones expected to do their best. Giving up is a sign of weakness, not a sign that you have been harmed or bullied. You can't predict the future, and you can't share your fears, to prevent things from happening, its best to avoid subjects, growing up, by not focusing on the problem, I was able to live off medication and without therapy, now dependent on meds and therapy to cope, don't weaken your skill sets, trust your doctors, and share less, online is not a cordial friendly place with understanding and compassionate people, if you don't have anything positive to share online, then that means you need to work on yourself, and build a life for yourself you're proud of, not be less than.

About being careful ...

12/1/2018

About Being Careful

12-01-18

Usually when someone tells you to be careful its because they have either been through an experience in life, that upon recognition warn others of a condition occurring or to help not make happen a condition. Thats not by your cares in the world determined but by your focus. Whenever someone shares or opens up about themselves depending on what they share about themselves good and bad, they are judged and by those judgments treated, and based upon how they are treated either feel well or ill. That's not to anyones fault but the person who shares, always be appropriate and use your common sense when sharing about yourself, if you want to be treated differently in life, then focusing on the bad will not get you there. If its a new life you want or to make better an existing life, then what can you focus on presently to get you to where you want to be in life, the more dirt you discuss about yourself, wondering if as interpreted could be used as dirt to put you down in life, then some things need no mention, and not in defense of oneself, share and explain what happened and how things look. When you share about yourself in a way that makes you look like you got in to trouble by your own faults in life, then thats how others will lose empathy for you, and their feelings toward you lack of empathy for you not feeling well, is not their responsibility to help or care for you, if you cannot care well for yourself, and make good decisions moving forward. Life works on momentum, positive momentum, you have good moments in life to enjoy, and there are moments, where you may not feel well that day or at that time, but that doesn't mean that things can't turn around for you in life, you are always in control of how you react and respond, and giving up on doing your best, is never a good option to take in life, nor is helping others when you yourself are not strong, or when you yourself, are faced with a new adversity, when your good character is called into question, as sincere enough to be left alone, or for an ulterior motive, not from a balanced viewpoint. I think to make all things simple, attending law school was a great challenge in life, but politically seemed to be unsound, its for what purpose at the beginning people seek to achieve a good purpose in life, and how that purpose is changed based upon where they are now, does that reflect accurately a job well done, or to be marked only by failures not by accomplishments achieved during. Any accomplishment cannot be achieved by cutting corners or by getting help from others, its when we do things on our own, that we realize our potential, and when you defy those expectations are when as well you achieve beyond your minimum standard of wellness when you improve upon your best. If what people think comes true, then its you that allowed that viewpoint to be heard, as in rebellion act out in ways that justify that negative viewpoint of you, as not good enough, or not smart enough, or not pretty enough. Once all is said and done, upon reacting you are them measured by everything you say present as compared to your past, to deem whether you were better or as stated under the influence of substances that prevented one from achieving in life. You cannot blame others for your own misfortunes or lack of clarity, you build your own mindset in life, and focus points, thats for no one to judge, but its when you are affected by others easily, your focus gets weakened, not your mindset in question, but your abilities in life. Why well then, but not well now? As expected? Because of substance abuse? Is any skill set deserved, or are skill sets achieved based upon practice in a more disciplined arena? How do you measure someones abilities in life, by the meds they take, should they be judged or treated differently or the same? And when treated the same, or for whatever reasons not, is it because of the meds one is taking or because a negative judgement of them has been passed based upon what has been said, and that new viewpoint of them cannot be changed, whether one achieves well or becomes themselves again normal. How can you be yourself, if you are worried what someone else thinks or whether or for what reasons not accepting of you, because of your past, or because of the way you are right now, perceived as not well. Its usually at our best we fit in, anyone below the bare minimum of normalcy, usually gets looked at as though one does not see the big picture to which or whom wellness others feed off of. What makes people feel well, is to see people doing well in life, and when we don't shine or do not receive attentions in life, thats no proper explanation for self-harm, if you take ownership of what has not gone right in your life, then no viewpoint of you past or present should determine your future, so long as you are accepting of yourself, no energy is required to be wasted by you in an effort to reach any standards of acceptance or wellness to feel achieved, but based upon your own happinesses in life, by what you have determine your satisfaction with your abilities now. What is a drug addict? How long does recovery take? And what causes people to turn to drugs and alcohol when things are not going right in their lives, does that really take you any place better? You would think that once a life is ruined, one would not make their lives worse, by doing exactly what they know has caused them problems in the past, relive those past failures, affected by becoming ill to, and not let the same things happen again in their lives, be the one who is wrong or made fun of, for allowing themselves to be harmed by others, look stupid. Forgiveness is key, first for yourself and well if they do not forgive you for your generosity and friendship, then by all means move forward in life, don't solicit oneself as help help others, and then blame others who have been helped, when you yourself do not feel good or better, thats only sometimes the case that in helping others, one feels good in doing so, that would be a glamorous concept of advocacy.

In reviewing my friend's post on "notable villains" past ... it came to mind not to promulgate notions of building anything as toward concepts especially raising peoples identities to achieve concepts of grandiosity or enabling people to pick up traits that further reinforce old ideas of success and steer away from current trends toward conservative progress, they will never stop coding as a means to exonerate those to whom should not be affected, like shout out at a rock show, if you do get affected by shout outs, try not to contribute in public your thoughts as they may be used in reference or without reference to further raise understanding of ways in which stories can be used to ground stories and teach lessons, without everything ending up in a fight, when you gather your past do your best to move forward whether by interpretation ideas shared by others can be further incorporated. DO NOT incorporate into your solutions for coping those who have messed up in the past or not done well and as affected have committed suicide as accused, and then frame your understandings on their failures past that surely wont help you as a women be seen as the good guy and just as accountable for diving into relationships and when they don't work out become surprised at the sides that aren't working for you in your favor.

You'll go through a lot of changes in life, some changes you'll endure will feel like forever ... the process, but most of the changes you go through in life are for the best. You body changes for you, it does more for you then you need to focus on ... that's the problem, self-care how much of us on the inside affects how we look on the outside, and how much of our energy and mental processes are required for us to stay well, this is something I am currently struggling with, staying mentally fit, and not allowing the voices of others toward me, or voices coming from within ie thoughts affect my inner being or state of peace ... we all endure challenges in life sometimes to stay emotionally balanced easily affected by others or other sources of information We are not computers, and our thoughts cannot be replaced sometimes even with better ones, and just like thoughts our experiences cannot be replaced even with better ones, less reminders are sometimes best when it comes to moving forward, less is more, allow time to heal just as the body heals discomforts, and what cannot be medicated, sometimes if thought about will only cause repetition moving forward that is as talked about or experienced. That's not bipolar, it's a matter of knowing when to use your smarts and when to turn off your smarts to enjoy your now, whether its with people you love or can relate to learn not to rehash or be affected by stories or experiences in life so that you can appreciate now. Life is a learning process but it need not be made more difficult by reliving your past or as affected cause others to relive experiences as affected by your best decision making, not all roads will lead to one, meaning not all experiences and thoughts will arrive at a solution, not unless you keep reliving your past, in order to move forward and accept change or live in the now and accept or build a better life for yourself, it begins with you, what is it that makes you happy and feel positive, is it forgiveness? What is it that makes you feel strong? Is it success? What is it that makes you feel loved? Is it attention? And what is it that makes you feel good? Is it being who you say you are sober (for example). When your best decision making is guided by your own conduct and set of beliefs you fair well, your ideals such as being skinny, and when your best decision making gets thrown off it could be because you are living up to a set of ideals or standards not your own, understand that difference, and do your best to find a happy medium, between what is acceptable and what is you.

You Are what you say ...

If you know not to say something and spend years writing online, if later stated thought to be an underlying current guiding your discussions as about or as affected by underlying words thought about not spoken, that's what gets attacked as reading your writing present and past for value whether or not influenced by a set of terms as stated during a bipolar episode following a 28 day hospitalization. My words are kept general because its not necessary to restate what is bothering me or bothering others about me, by restating words as though something I believe in or apart of any process of resolution or release of persons, that is not why I blogged as in cohorts or why I went to law school but yes is something not a set of terms or beliefs, to which I was directly affected by, as picking up my best friend from the airport, upon visiting her Father, no that's not why I was hospitalized in law school and put in rehab for 2 months, as affected negatively ... I was dumped during finals, nervous before an exam the night before my evidence final ... this information only empowers the nosey but does no good for me moving forward to discuss what has happened in my life, as I am affected by my life now, everyone has lives of their own, and I write not to be in agreement with others, or to find agreement to my ideas or beliefs in life, grow a set of beliefs or understanding or common knowledge that is story based, that is not a positive process of healing to relive the past or as retraumatized by the sharing of stories, relive those traumas, as spoken to or about in the abstract. When someone writes without stating facts from their own lives from where information is derived or from where a response is derived that's to not empower those who as directed toward a person can control their writing (my writing) and output, for anyone watching overhead, that is to deflect attention away from me, and to reject me as having issues related to a set of persons, individuals, or group of people who if exposed to react in the negative, if a negative reaction is sought, then the purpose cannot therefore be positive to interject ones self into the life of another, and if somebody persons or individuals seek to affect someone to create a situation in which a person looks like they are not apart of, that is to further dismember a person from society by speaking to them as to promulgate further worsen use of a joke or set of analogous circumstances to interfere with their positive progress in life, ability to be unique be seen and heard as unique. To create a unique tone in ones self to set ones self apart is to not be of influence and as influenced or copied be empowered by a following, and copies or imitations in life usually devalue the original, that's not being a prototype for influence or change, respected, by to interfere with someones ability and skill to write, is a wrongful interference with a person's future potential, and ability to adapt to the present, this is why its important to respect the privacy of others, not interfere with peoples relationships or embarrass them. To add value back to yourself, don't imitate others in life be unique, and likewise you wont be retaliated upon or hurt equally, by a set of standards that they think proper procedure to steal, and as justified, think that doing so behind your back is okay, no that's wrong to steal, wrong to take, wrong to hurt, wrong to exacerbate, and wrong to separate a person from their ability to lead a normal life, and thus be treated differently as someone who is mentally ill of lower intelligence and negatively impact their ability to live life ... that's putting someone back in the past or separate them to be worse of, having experienced loss react when no one knows what theyre reacting to. Sometimes its until I sound like I was that people let go, as deserved, I deserve to be well think well. Lesson: Do not respond to those who cause you harm, ignore #hate + discrimination - not everyone will understand where you are coming from in life.

how quickly we forget ...

I would write for myself but at this point that would be selfish to speak only from my shoes and not include the majority or people who can understand from where Im coming from and by what I have to say makes sense to not only me from my shoes but also to them. When everyone starts to feel better that's not a time to pause but to be thankful for the strides that have been taken to ensure that others resume their lives not bombarded by controversies unless they choose to watch news outlets or read the paper and partake in the daily changes occurring in the world, some of us are better off our worlds small. I had a talk with my therapist today, about exposure and how I wish to be a product of what I choose to read. It doesn't matter for how long someone has thought about code or for how long it has affected someone, who by their understanding has not had the same understanding as others, or by exposures the same know how and thoughts about life and about others in perspective. At what point do controversies become known and what point does one bear the responsibility to make a difference that's not always social responsibility for everyone to use their business savvy to market and make money from the best understandings of others, if an original work, that's not common sense, that's my sense of the world, which is not necessary to be populated, as I am diagnosed bipolar, therefore my best understanding of what has affected me in my life is not to include what has affected others in their lives as understanding code. I used to read obituaries, and overtime, thought what if possible could I do to help improve the condition of the times, not make worse understandings as through coding to one set of ideals or shared stories, as I've gotten older, story sharing has provided for less eventful interactions, and more repetition in my life, as though I'm reliving interaction, not having new relationships. That does not mean that I am defective but because I once had addiction problems, that idea about me is being used to blame what they think is wrong with me, while benefiting from everything I've done right in life to interact with them, life is not a job, you are not required to think like others to get along well with others, but at work, what is more of value your life outside the office or in the office, its your choice, who you choose to focus on in life, not everyone can be God, you chose your own hierarchy from which to based your decisions off of, the world is a big place, filled with people like you, who equally feel affected when the times are off, or when people who should be in leadership positions do not perform to the standard required of them, to take on more roles as a professional. (Now on a personal note): I think I have done my best to be fair to everyone, and share my insight, besides hearing things along the way that I think are negative about me or towards me, but never have tried to change anyones opinion of me, that's not for me to decide, it doesn't matter how special or important you are, some do not wish to be apart of and if you are from a controversy that does not make you special or give you the right to share your story, and become special ... if they have already designated you as something you are not, if you miss opportunities for amends along the way you lose supporters. A loss of support occurs when you are not ready to make amends and an amends is tried to be made. Once that support is lost, you cannot later open the door for forgiveness or acceptance of an amends, the relationship is gone at that point, and if you stubbornly choose to walk out or leave a relationship then they designate your losses in life as deserved, and that's how a side against you is made out of nothing.

When everybody lights up ...

Have you ever noticed a dim in a person talking to them, that's very human. Its not that we instinctually dim and light up to others ... I wonder sometimes if that's purposeful and that they are just showing off, or if that's a gift ... I don't think that light is based upon attraction but by benefit, to benefit another is to light up for them, to dim is going back into your shell, I've noticed this a lot talking to others as of recently, I don't think that's fear either, maybe its by presence, thinking is there something wrong with my presence, could I light up differently, maybe its my eyes communicating too much as looking at me, can they tell that I'm reading them ... is that wise to read others mid conversation ... or should you be listening to what why have to say, how important is eye contact to a conversation, is it okay to be blind and not look at a person when you are talking to them or is that considered weird. I wonder afterward what they were thinking looking at me, am I easily read ... maybe I look funny or its because of my writing online I worry too much what other people think, for the most part everyone is nice to me.

Last year was a journey to say the least ...

You will experience a lot in life ... learn to weather the storm, or write a book in the middle of a fire. That's how to keep going in life, not by counting your losses, but appreciative of what your do have in life, do not become the victim to your own storms in life. There will be ups and downs. There are multiple factors sometimes contributing to your loss of speed in life, and motivation, not all losses are because of your own doing in life, or misforgivings. Do unto others, as you wish to be done to you, that's the lesson in story telling, not all benefit from the later sharing of a shared experience in life, some wish to be removed from relationships in life, and at their choice resume those contacts. Keep busy. Last year published 2 books, took my last course to complete my masters, and got a job! I was so proud of myself. If you set the right goals for yourself in life, you'll be happy when things start to pan out for you in life. If you are focused on what you don't have in life it will be difficult to achieve what it is you want out of life. We all want companionship, we all want jobs, and we all want a good life, not all of us are able to achieve all three in life, some of us don't have families of our own, but that doesn't mean forget about the family and friends you do have in life, there is more to be happy for than you can think of sometimes. Don't make your unhappinesses with how your life has turned out the problem of others to resolve, just as you are trying to keep going in life, so are they ... if you can't keep up sometimes people will leave your life for good. You can't therefore go backwards in wonder and think that things will turn out differently as reunited, that would be a mistake on your part, if you are not better than, or do not appear better than, then the other will look or appear better than if they think they are better than you, that's what happens when you talk to exes, it feels good for a minute, but then you instantly get depressed or feel like $hit comparing your life now as it was then in happy matrimony, at peace. Not all relationships are fit for marriage past the point of disability, you have to then prove your wellness to progress or keep a relationship thereafter, don't waste your good time on people who don't love you.

01-27-19

Sometimes that's the very thing people are looking for, whenever something doesn't work out, an apology, that's to relinquish themselves from blame. All is fair in love and war, and if you support multiple people, then with that support, support them in moving forward, that doesn't mean help others to move forward by excluding yourself. If an apology results in excluding yourself and empowering others, than that may be the reverse of a #metoo, without you. Some relationships end amicably, and some do not, lets not go there for now. Usually when things don't work out it's the person who thinks things were going well and when things go sour, get upset, or when things don't work out get mad at the other person for not saying the right things in response, or not being the person they expected them to be, that's called disappointment. Always do your best to mend or repair what ties you can moving forward ... not all bridges were meant to be burned, and not everything is related to your best decision making, there will be times when you will be the butt of every joke, due to poor decision making or choice words, be kind to yourself and others, patience goes a long way when it comes to amends, be thoughtful and others will be forgiving, but don't at your expense switch positions with others and give away your upper hand in life and wellness, to make someone else feel better about themselves for leaving you, or feel less guilty for being upset with you for leaving or getting yourself into trouble off path in life. We all need days to ourselves, that doesn't mean put yourself at risk of harm. Remember those who care have lives of their own too, its not all about you.

Don't try too hard in life ...

01-26-19

Self-injury is no joke, this can occur by self-harming or by enabling others to convince you you are something you are not. Don't beat around the bush about issues you are sensitive to or think is about you because you can relate, not all facets of life you empathize with are applicable to you. Be careful not to compromise your good standing in life, to make others feel better or not as affected. That's called changing positions with someone who if spoken about is deemed less deserving of a poor standing and in exchange someone of greater standing is given the position of someone who is better off or in better standing. Take care of the ones you love, and do your best to protect those who care from harm. You may not be able to solve all problems in life ... people will read and constantly maneuver discussions to be about this or that, but its simple, those who are victims to discussions need not be mentioned as this triggers re-discussion of who is at fault, once someone is not liked no one wants to be associated to them, and once that occurs all interactions past become about who was using who to make themselves feel apart of, and afterward explains who those connections were dissed or severed later on. No one want to look bad as associated to people, and often time if someone is misidentified, they will look like the one to blame, if they do not react, or are last to find out what has been said about them, injured or affected by discussions about them ... that is either purposeful to cause harm, or by accident we are not sure which disses are about whom and why but all persons affected by discussions matter not just me.

I think a huge part of life is wanting to feel successful, and from that success become a happier person. It's not easy to achieve success when youre not at your best don't be an unhappy person just because you're not where you want to be in life. Success takes time, so does feeling a sense of accomplishment, or feeling accomplished in life, this can occur by education or work experience. For me my confidence has been achieved by writing online and going to law school, always maintain a delicate balance between being proud of yourself, and not making others jealous by your sense of pride and perfection in life, some only wish to be admired or imitated that's their form of confidence to make others jealous of them and realize their own imperfections in life, that's not how to build esteem but to break down the esteems of others ... I'm not sure what that is, but it isn't pride or confidence, its filling voids ... voids that others have in life ... which can best be filled with respect not admiration and hardwork not envy or jealousy ... you are what you are in life, and whether or not someone accepts you, should not matter you should respect all whether or not they accept you in their lives on a professional or personal basis, you always have yourself in life, its not necessary to please others to find happiness in life or achieve some positive accord on a daily basis with those around you. -You're bound to face more criticisms on your way up to any good in life, if you present yourself as insecure or in need, therefore its important to always maintain some self-reliance in life to avoid becoming too dependent upon others. I never wanted to be just another hyper blogger, its really insulting to point out, but its easy to appear with more energy as a writer than you have writing online, I think that's the most uncomfortable part about writing online, is how you sound to your audience, always be mindful of the energy spent writing ... reading is a different kind of energy, requires less. Be sure not to wear yourself out sharing, chances are they too (the reader) will become tired to hear you speak about what causes your discomforts in life, or through the discussion of what doesn't make sense to you. (As a reader) Always be positive toward those who try hard in life, its not easy to be a positive person. From where did the impetus to write quotes come from ... from reading online many years ago beginning 2013. I wanted to expand upon the services already provided through quotes, and share my writing online, in long quotes. I have had some exposure online, but limited, reviewing the blogs written by others, I never became popular or with comments until sharing on Instagram. -By reading what other quotes people had to share I decided to contribute. I never quite figured out how to make money as a blogger online, but read a lot of blog posts about it, just never signed up, that may be the next step, guest posting on other websites, and getting paid for my writing. Right now I'm working on a book. It takes time to develop as a writer, some people have more business savvy in life to make money and produce online, I'm not one of them.

Composite Sketches and beauty ...

01-09-19

Overtime everything improves, and with experience noticeable differences occur in outward appearances, it usually just so happens that as you mature, you get your look down. What was once your best if improvement keeps occurring looks half as good as you appear now. When you get your look down you should be proud of yourself, its harder these days, with more variations and options with makeup, its up to you to decide and make decisions for which products to use, there are many at our dispoasable, not all the same products work for everyone. If we could all dump our bags out for magazines if we were famous, we would all be using the same products? Why do variations exist, and what is competition? Usually anything unique, depreciates as copied, and anything that looks like, depreciates in value, as compared to, not as good as, not as pretty as, not the same as, not as smart as, not as gifted as, not as talented as, not as beautiful as. What is beautiful? Beauty comes from within they always tell us that, no matter how many composite sketches you put over someones face to make them look like they are something they are not, eventually their true beauty will shine, give people time to heal, not everyone is adept at knowing how to alter, fix, modify, or improve their current condition, and signs are obvious on the outside when someone is not well, you can't judge a book by its cover or someones face, as a precursor to their condition, wellness, or fitness of character, based upon what you hear see them as. On Facebook I made a short video while running "who do I look like now" that was in jest to my friends, do we look like our audience or do we look like those we are looking at, and what helps us maintain our uniqueness, is it by looking at ourselves, or by looking at others we change. Usually it is someone we look up to or admire we try to be more like, or improve to benefit them, match up to them, or be as good as, when will one start accepting themselves as they are, are we as women predisposed to changing ourselves not as a matter of competition but as wellness, lifes not all about being picked.

February 2019

where does commentary come from?

2/4/2019

Generally not from a bad place ... commentary. As luck will have it nothing coming from a bad place in life is considered of any value let alone people or providers to those interests. Its therefore beneficial for some to put others down based upon issues as present until spoken to or until they present themselves in a peaceful manner. After the passing of a person of value, we react and respond, but never in an unsensitive light ... usually upset or fogged sometimes we can control our responses and sometimes while grieving we cannot control those responses, self-harm. Some drink some do other things as a means for coping with such losses, but no self-harm is the solution not to self-harm in response to losses or lawsuits, or people thinking things we think they think as a result of how we presented ourselves to the world, and whether upon presenting ourselves to the world knew that we were being made fun of our whole lives from a distance as interpreted and then later made fun of as deserved or thought deserved, that's not an appropriate use of a persons identity to vaguely insult them, treat them as famous before they have become known to others, or be sued as though one is trying to become known and by what means choosing to be known, its usually for our best traits we are known, not for our weaknesses in life, and then after becoming known, not spread rumors rampantly about persons new to being known, as though they deserve it, that type of culture not only hurts those upon listening but is also harmful to society as a whole -when a group of people try to establish any set of beliefs about individuals and use their identities treated as unimportant, but without whom such knowledge would not have been derived in interpretation to popular media outlets, don't be one of them, who listens and believes and by interpretation thinks that just because a person is not doing well in life its because of their own decisions in life not well, not by the decisions of others who think not well enough to be included as a member of society, whenever you label victims be careful not to create victims.

(3-4) Its usually after loss, you wonder what could be, if you haven't realized yet, how fortunate you are in life, its probably because youre complaining about others or the past ... your mental health issues are of your own making not of the making of others, and what interests you in life is what should drive your best decision making in life, not the lives of others, as compared, be deemed as less successful or jealous of for not having the same things in life, that's not how to benefit others, or improve upon relationships gone, that have soured over time ... when you find better in life ... that's usually where you stay connected to those who have in life, and away from those who do not have the same fortunes in life. That's a matter of wellness to whom we are associated to ... and for all those affected by my lack of success in life, I apologize for not doing well in life, and not achieving my goals in life, we all grow at our own paces in life, and should not be denominated in life to a few words, or insults, that's not how to treat people

... I couldn't be better situated in life, and if what I have to offer does not suit you, then have no worry about my standing, as I'm not on any teams in life ... have lived alone since 2004, so that's not necessary to treat me as dependent upon criticism for success or dependent upon criticism as though I'm a newcomer, to what? Bloodshed? Misery? Sadness? We have all experienced losses in life, some more grave than others, and been attached to people who have had experiences in life but have not shared those experiences with us, does not mean if someone is hiding something ... that they are bad (which is usually the case) or have done something wrong (miscommunicated – miscommunications can cause illness to the one receiving communications and especially to the one making those communications to someone of importance (ie watched) – image is everything) ... but need to be alone, because they are not happy with themselves, everyone gets affected when people recluse, or do not make good decisions for themselves, the lesson is to always be forgiving of the spaces of others, and trust they are in good hands, as alone, with themselves, or with others, and if those people are not to be trusted, then you can always move home. How can one live independently have everything and then lose everything? Too much piecemealing, too much sharing, and too many puttings together of the pasts of others not their own. You cannot make teams in life, and as taken down ... do not hurt again the esteems of someone wronged ... that's not how to fix a situation, by removing banners, or locking people out of accounts, disassociation causes instability and with that fear, whenever something is done to someone to make them look like they're "full of $shit" or a "piece of $hit" think what has been done to them, then think what has been done to others, then think who is responsible for those interpretations presently to be fair. Your own mistakes in life, and misidentifications, will always be used against you as okaying misunderstandings, or misappropriations of well attitudes toward, and reinforce illness to others for. Don't reinforce illness ... when you are close to those well, don't hurt those who are fragile, or who are new to Brentwood ... it's a learning experiencing how to be calm when it rains and quiet in a storm. Allow people to in jest refer to incidences that is gods work to make people laugh or to allow people to cry or to enable others to make sense of now, by reference to the past.

Nowadays everyone thinks they're special, you'd be surprise ... no one wanting to be the butt of any joke ... instead feeling better when they are able to make someone else look stupid or feel stupid as compared to, that's usually how things work, the one who feels best is the one who looks and feels smarter than. -Don't be too hard on yourself, life's a competition but it doesn't have to be a competition daily and within every interaction, value those whose time is spent not in competition with you, those are your friends in life. -Don't take anything too personally you'd be surprised that there are more people in life like you than you think, you're not the only one with problems or who sees things differently from time to time or negatively from time to time, we are all human. Not only will you come across people like you in life, that may or may not make you feel special or unique, but you will come across people who are smarter than you too and make you not feel as special or unique, you are your best judge of character be sure not to turn on yourself, as in competition with others for attentions in life. Not all will be successful but that doesn't mean stop trying to work or to acquire relationships with others as friends or companions, you don't have to be the brightest or the prettiest to have a boyfriend or friends in life, and no that doesn't mean you're gay if you see others with traits that you wish you had in life, that's not always why people get picked because they have achieved an ideal that you think is superior to the qualities that you lack in life, there is happiness for everyone you just have to be smart enough to find it, that is love and companionship. If you do not have those things in life its not because of how you look or behave, but maybe those things are not your priority in life, and if you want those things in life you'll have to make it your priority in life. Know that everyone is special, whether we can all agree on that or not, don't be easily offended by others just because you don't feel special, there's and time and a chance opportunity to be among those who are or meet those who are successful and if you are not well enough to be among them ... then don't blame others for your lack of in life that's your fault for not trying hard enough, and not believing in yourself. As someone overweight my whole life, I have found both success in sports, love, and academics, never have been the skinniest or the brightest but have always done my best, its with a "good attitude" in life I've been told that all this is possible.

Exiting unhealthy relationships ...

When you're young, and going places in life when every decision is at your disposal, the world at your fingertips, you have power, and with that power privilege. Privileges get taken away in life if you're not careful, when a good impression was once made, a bad impression can easily be taken if you are not a wise decision maker. What's this about ... it's about doing the right thing, not taking from others, when things do not go right, and not using people if well, to create a better look or achieve a better state of mind, that's now using your power for good but for bad, it goes both ways, to the needy and to the needed, not to use one another, and leave each other worse off, or those around them affected worse off, if either party becomes ill it's best to keep separate. Whenever a new connection is made, that's to benefit both parties, an assumption is made by those looking on the outside, based upon who has more in life, the benefit is assumed to have run, to the person who has less. Be sensitive to what people have in life, and be sensitive at the same token to what people do not have in life. That's not for you to decide, if in a position of power. Someone in a position of power has no fear, because they can say and do whatever they want ... without fear of being found out about, and keep doing what they're doing in life at no expense we hope unless to themselves, but that's not always the case. Sometimes it turns out that even people with power and privilege lose their sense of power, upon being given to someone of lesser standing or to the less fortunate in life, note: if you were raised wealthy you are deemed to automatically be bearing power and privilege therefore not deemed a victim to losses, incurred by associating to anyone less than or better than, it then is assumed that it's your responsibility to maintain good standing, and make decisions, with a good sense of moral underpinnings that define wealth. *Do your best always to benefit others.

Be beautiful ... one day at a time, one match at a time ...

Love the person you are today, [you never know how long anything will last]. If you can start each day with an affirmation or mantra that helps you stay present then do so. You're more likely to accomplish more in life when you start your day positive [regardless what is said about you or to you it is always your responsibility to stay sound of mind and sound of heart, unaffected by the negativity of others, their worries and concerns as toward or about your good standing in life ... that's them not seeing you for you, or not recognizing you as well, that's in their opinion not your own best opinion, always trust your doctors as they know best when you are well or not, by having known you, know how to treat you, and help you improve whatever conditions, as accepted or not accepted about you.] [Your] outlook repeats itself throughout the day [have it be your own not the ideals set by others, change your tone in life, or how you feel about yourself, be conditioned to others, condition yourself as supervised by others, adapt, not be the one to whom others adapt to, always be in control of your emotions]. What affects your ability to envision your future as moving forward in life [is up to you]. I've been told "not to go backwards" and to chart my progress that it doesn't need to be detailed ... but a simple checklist will suffice. Likewise I share with you advice I've been given [not to my benefit] and hope [without burden] that it will help the same, I'm not a competitive person, and it's okay if those you help outshine you [especially if they are more well than you are, better able, or with more resources in life to cope] there are plenty of fish in the sea, life's not all about [acceptance]. (01-24-19, 02-02-19)

Please Note:

Don't get spoiled in life as a reader, with an ability to affect writers, or by choice influence what is written about, by your experiences in and around a writer, not all have mental health issues, and if you know how a person works, by fixating on words or phrases out of sync, or intended to hurt or influence as person, than that is purposeful, not necessarily and influence but an attempt to influence a person in the same way to whom someone important has influenced them in life, in a positive way. That's taking one interpretation of a conversation (in the negative) and then trying to be that person, as attacking the good character (of me) the correspondent to another conversation (and then by defenses claim as to a current set of circumstances) be affected in the same way book writing, that's an unwanted positive (returned to the commentator) who by insult insults the writer and correspondent. As a writer and correspondent for many years, when you approach someone professionally and they do not respond that does not mean open up to them, chances are the circumstances will repeat themselves much like anyone trying to turn a positive experience into a negative one, to see if you respond in the positive or negative or in the same way, write a book. Not all people are the same, that's a form of unwanted influence to be controlled by receiving negative input and expected to still produce positive results. I've been told that life is not perfect and that "in the real world" that's how it is, not everyone will be nice to you, I used to think that was a symptom of something larger, but have since realized, that its just depending on the day, much like the weather, how others respond, sometimes nothing to do with you, or over any power or control struggles, you just have to accept people the way they are. . Hearing the truth ...

Some people don't deserve to hear the truth (especially people you don't know or who you are not close to, to put love into anything and given access to by someone who does not appreciate your hard work) don't expect everyone to be on your side in life, some are not -interested in their own selfish endeavors to create circumstances to make you look or appear less than significant or stupid. Don't be so trusting. If you interpret everything as related to yourself, then youre not learning from the past, but applying the past to your present well being, those who are wisest learn from not only their own mistakes but the mistakes of others, and based upon those understandings build better understandings about others. That's not how to interpret a finished product, although you may purchase finished products that were made for you, they were not literally made for you, I think that's what they mean when they say don't think youre gods gift assume that your life was created for you but that life itself your life should serve some greater purpose, that all things were not created for you, but that those things in your life are to help you live life with the intent that they were created for use by others, that's judging a finished product as not created with a sense of causing harm to people, but created in the sense to help others identify or to help build a better understanding of life itself. Based upon my own experiences I have never assumed that any person has intended to harm me or that any finished products are about me with intent to cause harm to me or others around me who know me. Never assume that everything is about you, that's bound to leave room for mental illness, and assumption that others have additional intent or continued motivations in life to justify those attacks to your good character, never assume that everyone has your best interests at heart but also be wary of your connections in life, they do matter, and how you represent yourself will dictate how others around you interpret your understanding of the bigger picture and whether things are about you or not. Be patient mostly with yourself, afterall its your responses to others that matter most.

for the most part ...

02-26-19

For the most part, what is known about you online, is based upon what you share about yourself, don't expect everyone to be able to put together bits and pieces about you online to see the bigger picture, if in short whats understood about you does not match up to what you want known about you, then by all means be defensive. The times are tough ... "It's a good illustration of an issue we have in society — which is that we no longer have control over what people can infer about us," [1] Pictures, blog posts, and personal data is stored on your phone, but you don't have to store that information online too. That's the main point, there comes a stopping point to logging your daily activities, and that includes personal information shared about yourself online. How much of a timeline is necessary to be kept? What you keep to yourself, is your right to privacy, when you share too much information about yourself online, is how and when you run the risk of public scrutiny, that is what you become defensive to, ideas about you, the wrong ideas about you, or when people think they have you all figured out based upon what they read about you, to know what you think and based upon your thinking make deductions about you and or others, is the wrong way to pass judgment, one should always think for themselves not based upon the opinions of others think, but based upon a totality of circumstances see the bigger picture. Lifes much to do with acceptance, but those issues with regards to acceptance should not expand to all people if its only just a few people who do not approve of you, or your sense of being or dialogue online, make sense. That's not the problem always, one should never assume for what reasons others speak or based upon how they respond, interpret them now, as though this is how they were then, if a negative reaction can be generated from them use that to their advantage to say from negative places one thinks and therefore because of that response should not be listened to, as not responding likely to negativity and an expectation of negative response needed to make them feel better about being negative toward you. ~You should be strong enough to know when to say no, when to tell yourself, youre not willing to share information about yourself if you will be viewed upon in the negative, that's not your responsibility for people to come together in the sense of jokes about you, or on you, to make themselves feel better, that's not your responsibility to enable others to harm you in that way, ostracize you because of what you share about yourself online, and then made to share about others online too, that's an example of an unwanted interaction, those who wish to be included versus those who wish not to be included, everything occurs with permissions, permissions to be spoken to and/or about freed. – For the most part I represent myself, and in that capacity defensive always. Acceptance is key to building a better understanding of what lies within, not harm self or the reputation of others in the process of working or finding oneself, who bears that responsibility, me. Not to do or say anything that misrepresents ideas about self or others, as well as the ideas I support or groups.

Not everyone has the option to pick and choose their battles in life, some jobs get handed to you, and depending on how you see things, get led astray in life, fighting things that don't matter or staying on the political wagon so to speak on picked for topics of discussion. If you reside on the side that is not for discussion, well then that's a not a side spoken about. You can't do one thing and say another, my biggest faux pas, for many years made no mention of where I stood on the subject. When you take a stand on a subject, that doesn't mean "stand your ground" its not that aggressive a move in life, to take a position, if you take a position that doesn't mean that you need to fight in fact fighting only makes things worse. Learn to go with the flow ... that sounds like letting things happen and then responding, but in taking a stand against something you believe in you become apart of a greater whole of people who care, and by those cares, able to make a difference, not by fighting. When you believe in something you may not always sound politically correct in saying so, and so long as not for political reasons making a statement, then will not be interpreted as saying something for political purposes ie wins or gains, as though losses are paramount. In a perfect world we would pick things to care about that benefit us, but in todays world that may not always be the case, sometimes we are required to take on more than we can handle, and at any given period in time, and emotional stability, required to act in accordance to a set of standards in order to be of service. If you are not fit for helping others, that does not mean that you are mentally ill or that there is something wrong with you if you don't take a position in public, that could be whats best for you, to not take sides in public, or to not support any causes publicly, one should not support in fun, but make general efforts to continue to help in ways that they can.

For awhile now ... #thankyou

For awhile now I have been wanting to expand upon the "services" I provide to others in a more professional way, by writing articles, instead of just thought driven dialogue about my life, and what I see. I think its best to continue my education and work on my dissertation, while continuing appointments with Torah Bontrager, to learn the skills necessary to write articles, and perform well as a writing professional online. So lucky that she is willing to work with me, in spite of my mental health issues. On March 3rd I plan to attend a Panel in Santa Monica addressing Gun Violence Prevention. Although I have had my battles with mental health issues, I have always made it a point to stay involved no matter what my abilities are or no matter what state my mental health issues were in, it doesn't hurt to be a good person, even if you don't feel better in doing so, it matters more to care for your cares in the world than to not care at all and do nothing. So thankful to have been accepted to her writing program for #leverageyourstory ... I think based upon my website stats and feedback from Instagram, that everyone is doing much better with some systems of support in place, in response or not in response to current troubles facing the times ... never stop trying to do your best, and help others, that's the main lesson ... a little help goes a long way, to #stopcontroversy in its tracks. You can have friendships and alliances in life, that will be life long, and those life long connections hopefully in turn will lead to other helpful connections in life, this is one of them. (Update: Friend Request Accepted on Instagram).

Its easy to get caught up in the moment when we have our good wits about us, defensive to the displays made by others, as though we should be affected by how another person outside of ourselves responds to a group or audience, it may have nothing to do with you and everything to do with them, always take that into account. -I just had surgery on my right hand so will be in a cast for another few weeks and physical therapy. I think this injury represents not being able to handle the times and in response to my frustrations self-harmed, I just got a gym membership at Equinox with a kickboxing instructor, so far so good, minus the fractured hand. Where do ideas come from ... our tone, who advises us, or do we falter most by the advice we give ourselves. When one way stops working think there can be better ways at finding resolve, especially when it comes to addiction and self-harm, you don't always know best, best to seek professional help and guidance, not blame others for any self-inflicted injuries. ie Take your meds, plenty of them and get back on track not easily affected by voices.

If there is something unsettling about a person, do not review their records as doing things to prove cases or sides, or to demonstrate knowledge and with that knowledge respond to others to demonstrate a knowing of something and then doing something to further that awareness or a having of that knowledge. That does no one a good service in life but a disservice, to then as a guiding light or force, use that force or guiding light to shed negative light upon someone, as not with love, or with hate, or not with love, take good care of themselves, if there is no transmission or sharing of a person's private spaces, then that is not with harm taken. -That is a negative judgment upon looking at someone you do not like, thinking they are a bad person based upon what they look like in the privacy of their own records, not with love reviewed, but with negative judgment, a lot of photos need to be taken to get a good photo, do not judge those who are experimental with themselves in private spaces, or judge them for how long it takes them to be put together and create a positive image of themselves, the time it takes to look well is different for everyone, and in so making others feel heard, that is to cause me to self-harm, a losing party to any discussions about, hurt my self-esteem, my image, my abilities, or my connections in life ... that is to hurt my ability to move forward, attack my character. What you make reference to you become a product of, that illness, and in so sharing spread illness of thoughts about a person, me individually, to get others to think ill of me too. Be careful what you keep a record of ...

rising to the occasion ...

If you rise to the occasion enough times, eventually you get hurt trying, that's called being taken off course in life. Sometimes when our defenses are down while helping others, its easy to become (1) exhausted, (2) wind up in the wrong place at the wrong time, and (3) self-harm. This occurs when you are no longer guided by self interest but affected by the interests of others. When people do not understand for what reasons your mental health issues arise from the tendency is to be defensive as toward you in that case proving them wrong does not work but does both sides a disservice making the side, to whom your wellness, appear bad or in the wrong for having reacted in defense to your wellness or sickness for that matter. Sometimes when you get taken off course in life, you have less time for self-reflection as you are acting in response to circumstances, without your defenses up, how one who while helping others gets harmed in the process of doing so. When your defenses are not up, and you are not sharp you are more likely to get hurt as minding your own business, whether its working, or in an existing relationship, affected by others who in turn affect those relationships existing. Its important to note for what reasons contacts are made, in efforts that support existing relationships or existing causes not for ones own benefit are connections made, at least in my case. Be careful not to assume that these things are done by the person who is harmed, sometimes things are done to people who get harmed, that's the main objective is to make someone look bad, its for those reasons some people are harmed, to make them look bad to others or a "sell out." What is a "sell out" someone who stops trying in life, for selfish reasons, seeks to not contribute positively to the purposes of others, and in trading sides for themselves gets deemed a "sell out" while working on themselves. Be careful not to physically exhaust yourself, for any causes in life, if you focus on the right things, doing what you do best, then its by your gifts in life that you can contribute best to the causes of others, without interfering with their abilities to support those to whom causes are created. Sometimes in life we switch teams, and that can be either because relationships have faltered, or because one another does not support the causes to whom the other supports, and by those differences, relationships cease. That is to both a benefit, sometimes for relationships to cease, that is so that both can thrive without the other. Whenever a relationship does not work out, be careful not to take into account, what is going on around a person and blame environmental factors for an individual's illness, that can cause insult to the environment around a person, and instead they will blame the individual as being of illness, and do everything they can to prove that a person bearing illness is of illness unrelated to their environment, that can affect the care given to those not well.

By bringing up the past sometimes you ruin future opportunities for success, there is a difference between a recommendation and a mention. A recommendation is by someone who speaks positively of you, for a future connection to be made, whereas a mention by someone about someone from their past can be interpreted in the negative as toward you and make the mention appear better than. Especially when it comes to references, referencing your past ... don't be so defiant by mentions, or defensive as to others, chances are less is more, the more you talk about yourself in the past and the less you talk about what it is youre doing now, the more anxious you'll be and the more likely your audience will be anxious, not knowing whether you are living in the past, or presently situated at peace with yourself and others, don't be bitter toward your past or others, everyone deserves acceptance and an opportunity to move forward in life. Reading Option B I realized its more important to forgive oneself for expressions past then it is to talk about or later try to justify how you have expressed yourself, people are most forgiving when you are honest, and about yourself not about others. People mostly want to hear about you, when reading, not about you speaking positively about others at your own expense make yourself look bad, its no ones responsibility to by mention defend others from your past, if everyone loves you thinks highly of you then do your best to promote the same, by speaking highly of yourself, and thinking highly of yourself, not allow the worst to come to fruition, there are many friends to be made along the way in life ... its up to you based upon how well you speak of yourself to make friends. If you are uncomfortable ... chances are you'll make others uncomfortable ... know your matches in life, and always do your best to bring comfort when comfort is needed, and never hesitate to ask for help when help is needed, you cant get anywhere in life living in the past as blaming others for your problems ... if its addiction then stop, if its self harm then stop, and if its procrastination then do what you need to do in order to keep moving forward in life ... life is short, meant to be lived to the fullest and without regrets ... don't overfill your plate with more than you can handle in life and always be thankful.

Never become defensive to the displeasures of others, whenever something shocking occurs, which you then think are related to your own mental health issues, its important to discuss but not as related be blamed for influences to others or as influencing concepts that guide thought processes about, who is to blame, who is victim, and what is to blame is not for anyone on the outside of anything to judge, as a person who has been affected from within from outside circumstances and by default from my own responses in life to hardships, that is no ones fault, its difficult as a writer to provide constant reminders of my positions to not create teams in life which have much done a disservice to those listening, as the people to whom topics are addressed and applied to for insight, or for feedback, to then require those to whom are designated as “mentally ill” then expected to write to a standard that benefits all, benefiting all is difficult, there will always be sides, and the readers job is to not be judgmental toward others, as by reading, and my job as a writer is not to write about others only myself, that does me a disservice in life when I have to deal with beyond my own mental health issues in life, and its not helpful to make things about someone who suffers that would be unfair to do to finish someone off, as bad, or to further ruin their abilities to make progress in life as well and good. -This is not about not liking my situation in life and then drawing inference to the situations of others, and bring attentions to things that do not matter now have already been dealt with.

It's just as uncomfortable to the writer for the audience to be unhappy or displeased with results (on topic) or with repercussions (off topic) why choose your campaigns wisely it's a choice who you support in life (on topic) it's not a right to know who you love (off topic).

Its not that people choose to be apart sometimes they are kept apart and for whatever reasons, there will be lack of synergy, or compliance ... that's just how authority works sometimes we rebel from sources of support, and sometimes those sources of support do not listen. That has nothing to do with anyones intelligence, its just a matter of instinct, what is considered approved conduct, friendship, conversation, or cooperation ... anything serious tends to heighten tensions, that goes for everything, not just within writing, or within interactions, or by talking to the police or FBI, that just a matter of paranoia or doing your due diligence, if you understood how much work was put into building a website of this importance to me in my life, to have a voice, and be able to write freely, then you would understand that it was done so, with blessings along the way, maybe not at the getgo, a purpose for attending, only to visit the court during a difficult time for everyone, I think some more affected than others, as time gathers and more and more people become affected it becomes more and more necessary to not only do something (sometimes not our places in life) but if well we can ... if things are not going right for you in your life, and you change your course in life, that's okay to, you can support causes, and then choose to focus on the basics again your lives, sometimes its necessary to highlight circumstances, sometimes highlighting problems can cause problems, I know this as through my own life talking myself through my problems, that if I state an issue it arises in my life, or if I advise myself of what not to do, eventually it just so happens to happen without any reminders, be careful like me not to self-sabotage and scare new people away by over divulging too much information about yourself for clarity of the issues they are not under the same kinds of pressures as you are and so long as you are doing your job, you can expect they can do their job and treat you for your problems. Its been over a year home on 4 night meds everyday, I used to not be on any night meds throughout law school, this is new for me.

represent yourself in life ...

2/7/2019

Comfort with Self ...

02-07-19

I think theres a high expectation of someone who is a writer online to be comfortable with themselves enough to speak, some are soft spoken, if not used to talking in a public environment, that's your whole life not a public speaker, then its hard to start talking at any later point in time, just be respectful of people who CHOOSE to write instead of talk, that's I MY choice. Someone who is comfortable with themselves does not necessarily mean that they are comfortable talking or comfortable with their bodies, just because someone is portrayed as something they are not, does not mean at some later point in time that way with all, or give the same equitable treatment to all, as though that's deserved given their standing as lesser than. Don't portray yourself as something you are not, that is what is to be learned of all of this, and then be treated as something you are not. My best friend accepted my friend request a few days ago, please leave her out of things, and not as meeting me tell your story as though I am someone special or someone who as known, have been affected by, live your lives as separate from my stories or how I have managed my life, my heart, my intuitions, and my thoughts, just because a different set of reactions occurs within you upon reading my writing does not mean that my body works the same way, just as no mind works the same way, everyone is different, you cannot treat all people the same, that doesn't mean that they require special treatment it just means that as they are they are different, no one is made special by knowing someone special, if you want to feel special do well in life, no one can change they way you interpret life, just as I cannot change the interpretations of others about my life or things that I say as misunderstood, care rescinded, or to justify a past rescission of care, if upon being left to your own devices in life, are not as strong, then its important not to blame others, who as described or felt they have been described justify treatment of you as though you are an outter of special interests or BY misinterpretation MISREPRESENT others or YOURSELF. -Represent yourselves in life.

11-25-17

Whenever you build a trusted brand, its fundamental concepts must be sound, and counterproductive to things that are considered untrustworthy activities. This I learned through experience, with defamation, first hand knowledge, its trusting the opinions of others, is when I find trouble. -In order to bear a trusted opinion, one must be educated, it is not by association or connection, that one is trusted, why I built a brand with a pseudo-name mymollydoll unattached to anyone previously, or by prior association connected back to me. -When moving forward, the brands in existence for the longest tend to be the most trusted brands, how a brand is built, and how a brand is trusted, it takes many years to achieve trust. (02-07-19) Without SCOTUS I would not have build a company tried hard, and without their attentions, I would have not been able to help others, that's trusting them. And with that trust trust is built, and from those foundations ... people feel safe + smart.

Once trust is broken, by situating any confident or competitor worse off, you end up on your own, why they say "its lonely at the top." I'm sorry if any past post portrayed anyone in the negative as not smart or not all knowing, naive, or too responsive, or assuming the purposes for responses, I do not know everything myself. -There are periods when you make decisions in life or say things, that will not be in tune with everyones best interests, make sure those are not for selfish reasons decisions are made, and whenever a decision is made, make sure its with a good heart, meaning something positive is to become of that decision later on, that's seeing the positive in decisions made, and when you accept your circumstances and live up to your potential well then that makes everyone look good, including yourself, and that's not something you should not feel good about everyone deserves to feel good, even if at your expense along the way to achieving well, how quickly people forget the bad times, when replaced by better times, that's one solution ... to improve upon what is here, and do your best with what you have, and sometimes there will be people who will benefit from your wellness and that's okay.

10-21-17

The resentments we harbor are usually due to some expectation that something needs be said to keep something from occurring we think necessary to keep something past from happening or something responsible connected past that is reason for something occurring usually a delusional connection. (02-07-19) You have one of two options, to share or not to share, to share what you have shared, or to not share what you have shared, to discuss what you have shared then as compared to now, and why what you have to share now is different but unrelated to what you have shared then, who's fault is that ... whenever you blame any one person or group of people for a system of sharing created to protect the best interests of those who are well, the ONLY way those interests will not be protected is if they have done something wrong then they will be corrected, at that point forward that person is no longer helped, but frowned upon and looked at with purposes for dissecting toward negatives, not helping a person get strong or achieve better in life, but seeks to worsen their core sense of selves to decipher what they are responsible for ... that's a system that relies on honesty, and if honest, and if one cannot determine the faults of others on their own, they should not extort from the good the wrongs of others or of themselves in order to make perfect their minds about what's gone wrong. [removed] how well you work with others ...

It's important when working cross professionally not to cross talk, as recommended by AA, just like any therapeutic setting as individually intimidated by others, this can affect output, that may be what competition is all about, input and output and trying to control others, through their speech, and affect their native tongue. Do not interfere with people's abilities to communicate, and some may be more blind than others, encouraging of defaults in life, and less encouraging of defaults in life, never assume that someone is to blame for their conditions in life, and predispose them to abuse or discrimination based upon those rejections in life, be denounced, or treated as less than feminine or less than female, do not put in the new stories about people ... as about others, as named differently ... that would be to tell another story, as about, if you know who is who, don't then go on to say that I am not one of them a victim ... just like the news so are characters NOT based upon people not a party to a story ... that's not the same as using the real lives of people to share a story or to tell a story, by using characters with the permission of others to be used or mimic'd, for what purposes do people live their lives ... for others, not living for people they do not know, maybe living off people they do not know, who earn income from fandom ... but I know my family ... how do others know my family as told through cartoons or film or music ... that's not how entertainment works, entertainment is about entertainment, and real life is about who is around you, not go by what is said about you through entertainment, that would be wrong to assume likeness, that in the past entertainment was used to tell my story or stories around me. Each story is to its own merits, and by its own bureaucracies determined outcomes as to who is merited for those judgments, story lines, and predictors of the future upon which stories may be built or based on an even playing field, that is entertainment, real life however does not work like stories, from which prior to knowing how life was interpreted by others by use of film and music and television, is how people were being judged as not clean enough, and because not looking clean enough needing to clean up their image, and that that necessitated being hard on people, thinking they had an opportunity if found out about to later clean up their image, once you ruin someone, before they understand the beginning of time, then if they mess up in life, and they were hurt before they messed up and hospitalized do not punish them for getting sick, when they later get well, to see them get sick again, if not for the same reasons sick the first time, that's outing a system of judgement, that needed not be made public, if possible to later use, characters in entertainment, and not limit those usages, based upon how they have applied and gone wrong, or caused illness in real life to people whether or not they were based upon people in real life or used as comparison to people in real life.

what you know is important ...

01-17-18

What you know is important, to disclosures. That is what is sought, is information unknown to others, but known to you, that is how one is interrogated, by information known now known. Usually people with information are known to others, and people who suspect information is known, interrogate those people. What information is known, is what is presently thought in possession, but not had, and upon such bases, a decision is made as to the outlook and conduct of an individual who has not relapsed and is sober, for which others are now defensive to. Do not suspect or interrogate those who are innocent, it is by your own misconducts, that innocence is lost, not by one you deem relevant judged as an offender for decisions past or present. Be careful not to intimidate people with your knowledge or think present circumstances non-existing that's called delusion. Delusion is not a punishable offense in this Country, but theft is. Do not steal from others, do not steal the identities of others, and do not erase anything. That is considered the highest offense. What is not yours cannot be taken by anyone, I am not a dependent, I am an ABA Certified Paralegal, I never play victim. How one communicates is important, what you connect is what you deem relevant. I am not connected to anyone, and I have no associations, I'm very professional. I am like minded in the realm of public safety, and mental health concerns. Be careful of overzealous prosecution of innocent people, that leads to unrealized hardships, and does not cause one to commit crimes, but report crimes upon them. Distrust following statements of "noted for her honesty" does not make sense. Be very careful with your words towards others, not be offensive toward anyone, who you deem as not good enough or replaceable. Do not judge people for their character, or for their decisions or choices made, they are not your own. Always be yourself.

11-19-17

Being a positive influence requires knowledge of the appropriate settings for putting positives into motion. This requires tact. Not just responsibility to care for oneself and others, but for ability to respond under pressure, in the right, and correct wrongs as you go, that's how you become a base station and a point of reference for assistance while in a state of trauma, trauma occurs when you are not in the know and something happens, so long as we are all in the know, nothing can happen by surprise anymore to us, that is my sole mission, to help others stay in the know and positive, so that they can react in a way that supports positive functioning not dysfunction. I grew up with ADD/ADHD, if I sound immature to you I'm sorry but this is the way I write and this is the way I sound, and this is how I react, always with assurances and always with positivity, I was raised to always see the good in others, and with that viewpoint, I have been able to achieve in life, not live in fear. Living in fear occurs when you see negatively, and see the negatives, by over focusing on negatives, that is how one becomes concerned with others, it is never your responsibility to care for others, unless you are a professional and certified by state law, Colorado State Law, I am a Certified Crisis Hotline Counselor. And with that responsibility it is my job to make productive the times in trauma, that's how I help others. By not mentioning the negatives and not corresponding with negatives that is how we can best deter crime and stop crime, that is my theory that is my belief, in response to the times. The more ads you place above the more ads you get back. That is a given President Barack Obama put so many ads up in the Press Secretary's room I had to respond to that crisis and put an ad up on my blog, which ended up getting taken down for a period of time by a court order Texas, we are sorry you lost your homes, because of a lawsuit, I got sued and put in jail and in the psych ward because I hit my head because I relapsed on cocaine and Leo died of Cancer. That is why sometimes, whether or not you agree, you should just ignore or block people from the reality of your situation, so things don't become an unnecessary situation, where others live in fear, because one is not liked is no big deal, its just a consequence of someone being put in jail for no reason, a prisoner of war, until everything resolves itself, I came up with the solution: #bloggingcampaign. It is still in its developmental stages World Peace as we all adjust and respond by words or actions, this takes time says The Academy Awards, who are experts in World History, I am not a Historian I'm just a writer, and reader of what is assigned to me. I would never hurt anyone with my blogs or threaten anyone with my blogs because that is why I committed suicide because a Lawyer in the Valley threatened my Family to speak (2008) I read that blog on Google and committed suicide (2009) after joining the US Navy. Why a cruiseliner sunk, because of Petrocelli, it "hit a rock" and then Barack made the #MLKMemorial, I mean I'm not sure what he is trying to communicate, but I think we should all trust one another, and not cross lines, burn bridges, or place blame, if you have questions attack me that's what I'm here for like a Juke Box EMLK for everyone!

The stopping point is not your intuitions it's the intuitions of others trying to control your intuitions, that's others thinking that they know better than you and that because by what they know in life, think that they know best ... that's by their guided intuition, how they see fit, not with your best interests in mind always but their own, be weary of that. Don't be egotistical about image that's the main lesson, what's life about ... what people think or what you think people are thinking about you or others, that's the problem, not having a shared understanding, and thinking that everything is purposeful or planned, be understanding of the intentions of others and best intuitions, especially if it does not involve you. Unless you make something about you will it become about you and that's how you give your power away in life, or call upon others, to do so for you, that's whether in your best interests is up to you to decide, for yourself, when your interests have been met, that's your right to privacy, no shared interests should require a meeting of the minds, or cohorts, or likeness in candor gesture or demeanor to be understood as together for one idea to take place, that's not a shared understanding, but an understanding changed to meet the needs of someone else, who personally feels affected and not be understanding of someone who is not intending to personally affect another, what's this about "tardiness" "broken hand" and "#SOTU" all in attendance say "I." I think unless you make yourself of subject will you become of subject and then people will take it upon themselves to correct the thinking about the subject to an acceptable wrong or right that either favors their interests or does they or others a disservice, people have their own set of ideas in life about others, and those ideas about others will not change unless called upon for correcting ... be weary there are two sides to every puzzle and a broken bone in my hand, that now requires surgery and anesthesia, that needs PCP approval. -Therefore do not take personally that I am friendly and do not take personally that I do not make eye contact and do not take personally that I have difficulty in public settings and do not take personally that I am intimidated by others and do not take personally that I stare at the ground and do not take personally my health, and do not take personally that my health does not change by you, and do not take personally if I become sick, and do not take personally if I am well, and do not take personally if my face changes, and do not take personally if I get thin, and do not take personally if I gain weight.

Privacy is so important to any conversation ... sometimes what makes you smile can come across as obnoxious as told by others, maintain steady ground always in the acceptance department ... don't be too hard on yourself ... not everyone is reading, you can't control people or their commentary or their thoughts. To be stable minded you have to think from within ... not as in response to others ... when everyone looks innocent its probably because they are and just minding their own business, it's a lifestyle choice to not do well in life ... not because of discrimination or victimization or whatever you think is the problem its probably more to do with you than others ... let the innocent shine and be good to yourself in order to receive praise from others and feel apart of ... it wont always be the case that youll shine and it wont always be the case that youll stand out youll have your good and bad days the most important thing for anyone to do is blend in not because you have angst or discomfort but because you genuinely want to not offend others, by your attitudes in life and genuinely not offend others by your discomforts in life, you cant keep your head down through all of life sometimes you have to look up. -I have attachments in life but not to people, to things, call that addiction, while separated from my computer in the shop fractured my hand ... that's a loss of control to a space I find comfort in ... my computer. Don't go bizerk because you have experienced a financial loss or a property loss, it happens to those who are not well me included, its not the responsibility of others to manage what is of value to me, only my responsibility not to complain upon such losses, or for things that I say out of tune. If people know your story or know about you they will test to see if you are that way and in doing so ... hurt your esteems by making you look stupid or out of control and feel out of sorts, don't be nice to people one day and gone the next and hope that everyone understands when that happens to people its not because of drugs or alcohol but because their mind is someplace else, why its important to focus on things that don't change in life, as well as accept the changes that go on around you ... you are only human, all humans age, aging is a process and so is trust.

not everyone will be on your side in life

02-04-19 (4-4) Not everyone will be on your side in life, and some will turn on you assuming you bear guilt, and from that belief seek to make others think that you are for the actions taken by others, as assumed everything is connected to you and therefore about you, as though your actions ... have led to symbols posted in reference to you or your connections in life or by story to whom these individuals were connected to, those connections must be known in order for those thoughts to process, looking back it may have been best not to mention stories from my life, or help the courts in identifying problems, existing within me, and now being treated symbolically as everything is about me, that's wrong to do, as for solution ... blame any one person or group of people for all events that follow a trip to DC. I am now sharing my side of the story which you can either accept or reject based upon your beliefs before hearing from me ... some are no longer with us today to witness the growth people have made, and as a result, I was further pushed until I am no longer respected devalued, and rejected as not well. That's wrong to do to someone who is well spoken and gifted in writing, to be treated as though purposefully ill or mentally ill on ones own merits, sometimes its under many conditions that one becomes sick with pressure or sick with expectations of them, or in need of help.

Why keep conversations brief ... is that a reflection of ones ability to listen well, or to maintain brevity at the expense of hurting the feelings to whom another confides in, what is proper timing and tone. When does professionalism stop, when more listening is needed and when support is heeded for. That's usually a proper time to listen more and talk less, encourage the sharing of feelings, and discourage the direction of conversation or one anothers thoughts or output. Why during times of turmoil are we expected to be brief with others, for what purpose does that serve and how is ones ability to speak briefly reflect upon their intelligence, ability to communicate consistently, not strongly, but clearly, not brief in the sense that one does not make sense, but brief in the sense that one is heard clearly. When you speak well not only are you representing yourself well but you as speaking are representing to those around you, messages you think appropriate be communicated, whether others are in acceptance of your communications, be sure to keep things clean, that's well spoken, not to talk dirty to others or dirty about others in conversation or during conversations, heckle with the mind, or cause anyone to question themselves or their directions in life, be frowned upon, as not smart or intelligent for so choosing to whom communications are made, those purposes for communications as most communications are, private, that's not to protect people from harm only, but also in addition to preserve the image of others as heard in more public settings, much like writing represents us best so do communications when outside of enclosed spaces longer than as interpreted shorter communications understood ... without experience just by looking at things, short conversations don't say enough about people, than their work speaks for them, and much like writing, speaking is much different in tone. Researched work goes the same, what is researched and written about may make a person sound smarter, smarter than you think they are, then tested for clarity or ability as judged based upon their ability to speak, do not become defensive to what people think about your writing or how you sound or speak ... everyone has the same problems, sometimes brief sometimes well spoken clear its all a matter of comfort, and when in the comfort of others, or in private spaces, don't get too comfortable upset or by sharing divulge too much information about yourself for acceptance that makes you look worse than it makes you look better to explain yourself for acceptance or to explain your past for acceptance.

March 2019

for the most part ...

For the most part moving forward means not treating open spaces as private spaces for public discussion, that is taking your experiences in life, stories, or your memory, and then using your recollections to hurt you. Everyone lives their own life, and its to each ones responsibility to live the hours of their life, be wise, and live productively. You cannot move forward if you keep revisiting old issues, or your past, as recorded (i.e. google photos, iCloud), as memorized or remembered by others by a third view not an in person view or knowledge of you, or timeline. Mostly when we respond to attacks on others or our character we respond, we do not save in memory, those moments, but remember the best moments led, to their lives that is the victims. There are many unrecognized victims to a story, and just by reading this, I understand that there is care there, and just by reading this I understand my responsibility is not to care what other people think of me in the past and continue to do well presently, sleep every night, take meds as directed, and not leave room for error moving forward, live life as productively as possible, that means staying home, staying out of trouble, and working on my dissertation until I'm able to work again off disability. If you work online on social media, you are bound to save and keep track somewhat of the past, I recommend doing your best to save your own best work, not the work of others, as reference or to be remembered, you'll mostly want to see your own personal growth irrespective of whats going on around you, and not respond personally to whats going on around you, in public, or online, on social media, make reference to in response, its by what you say following an incident, that marks you down for interpretation.

Everything in small doses, is what I would say. Whether you do or do not self-harm, too much of anything is not a good idea. Never take a bad photo of yourself, that's the worst way to play doctor on yourself, always choose to remember your best self, not your worst moments. Don't be defined by the times you felt most embarrassed, or a wreck, your guaranteed once those feelings resurface to go back to those moments in time, its by your better moments you move forward with ease. You only have one identity, and everything you put online, well it lasts there forever, that's your impression upon the world, whether for business or pleasure, how you attract your audience, and build esteem, personally and professionally. There's a lot of stigma surrounding people who self-harm, especially others not wanting to associate to those who do. [1] Therefore, don't go on engaging in behavior knowingly making others feel uncomfortable talking about it to them. There's one thing, having a bipolar episode, in public, and its another thing to have a bipolar episode in public then share about it, sometimes less is more, and when you figure out the causes for self-harm then do your best to get help, call NAMI. [2] After researching online self-harm and blogging I didn't find much other than self-harmers who blog, and stories from their blogs about self-harming. Does blogging cause self-harm? Is blogging self-harm? Well not for all, apparently blogging is useful to self-harmers to share their stories, but I don't think all would agree that it's a safe subject to talk about, we always do our best to avoid, things from happening again in our lives, if it results in self-harm. The good news is that self-harmers are not suicidal, in fact one article argues the following: "The underlying mindset between someone who is suicidal and someone who self-harms is very different." [3] Self-harm has been defined as "a habitual way of coping with stress." [4] The better your coping mechanisms are, the better off you'll be and avoid situations and/or people that influence or cause you stress, that is the knowing of information that causes you discomfort, that's your right to privacy, therefore the less you share about yourself, the more unnecessary stress you will suffer having others know the same personal and private information about you, less likely to self-harm over it. Do your best always to get help when needed, but don't be too hard on yourself, you don't always know when mental health issues, may arise, during the course of blogging or sharing of your past, that's why its best to always do so, with guidance by a medical professional.

know your meditation space ...

To avoid popular comparisons, to those who have achieved success in their lives and are successful, don't denounce those who are, by perpetuating insult toward, as the keeper of resentments or contributors to humor as directed as causes for domestic hate, that's would be blaming good people, for sharing stories from their lives, as though knowing that music or film was trying to portray reality as through forms of entertainment, I think for the most part these sources and outlets of support are for making life more enjoyable, not for influencing illness or sickness upon others, as though felt, or occurring, learn how to leave people alone, and not do anyone unwanted in public, that means retaliating upon or making sick others, because you yourself bear some resemblance to illness, that would be contributing to illness, or weirdness, I think taxi cabs and coffee shops have covered for everything odd, its best to let others, enjoy life, find love, and continue to do well and achieve success not to the disparagement of others. If you cannot handle anyone in your meditation space, that is because their voice affects you negatively as heard without you present, that is someone who you have come into contact with knowing you, and speaking badly of you if you are not in the public sphere, and then claim victim to worry they have for you, you are your own responsibility not the responsibility of others, and false alarms, are false alarms, and not causes for retaliation upon others, to connect incidences of self-harm and correlate story telling and self-harm and or suicide, to pictures on buildings and by where people live, or have lived past ... put together as likeness to someone of bad or poor standing, allow poor judgement of them to be past, upon the telling or making known, all negative incidences that follow the sharing of a story are the responsibility of those who are directly associated to the prying and the pulling of private information from a person, which occurs not upon experiment but upon going through the private spaces of others as recorded, relive their past, as viewed by someone past, or present reviewing their current turmoil, and then triggering them to re-experience an incident past, which is made available only in private, to one's self not to any others, that is a misuse of going through the private life of someone's personal space, and causing discomfort or extortion of the self-care routines, or maintenance of self, which is none of the business of others, to pry.

Stay calm and don't respond to news or other media outlets, follow the guidance of professionals, and always get counsel from 911, whenever you feel scared or under duress, that could mean one of two things, you are not well, or the hearing of news is making you not feel well. Its best to ignore others, whenever you feel threatened by anyone, not enable others to cause harm to you or disempower you, that causes depression, a stuck state, or scared state, always do your best to seek professional help, ie meditation, therapy, music, film, entertainment outlets online, or professional sources of news to help process events or stories, in a way that makes sense to you, not all opinions, or facts will be of benefit to everyone, and sometimes the sharing of information personal, can be used to argue that your illness are a contributory factor, not a preventative measure, help sought or received, and for purposes of getting help, self-serving, theres a tremendous amount of pressure anytime a joke is placed on you, and with that fear of what people think, always do your best not to condemn others for their actions toward you as this incites fear to them, and retaliation upon you, always see the positive. You cannot expect everyone to be nice to you, and/or blame you for the illnesses of others, or poor decision-making skills of others to which images are harmed, or reputations of people, as associated or brought up, affected similarly negatively as you are being hurt by others, always take it like a man, that doesn't mean self-harm it just means being quiet in public as to your own issues, and pleasant around others on your best days, and stay home on days when you are not well or until you get well, you don't have to be out in public if you are not well, those are usually the days that you get taken advantage of or treated differently not on guard as tired, or unable to meet the demands of socialization. That's normal social anxiety.

don't be difficult to work with ...

Its is not required that upon being squeezed in life you divulge information past concerning what people thought of you then to argue that is deserved now, be contentious of the feelings of others or those who come forward and share, that they are going through a lot right now, and probably not confrontational, then to make someone not confrontational fight, causes illness to all sides, who just want peace and peace of mind, that's not being accepting of the privacies of others, not respecting the peace of others, and thinking that some individual interest is more important than serving the interest of the greater good, that's called being selfish, when someone who thinks by their actions, can trigger a set of circumstances or actions upon others, control what's around them, that's being provocative with words or actions, to provoke illness in others, or to out them as something they are not. Be wary that there are many victims to a puzzle, and some need no mention, when someone does everything possible to communicate to others, and when not well in private spaces discuss their problems out loud after coming off bed rest, give them time to adjust, and be accepting of one another's disabilities in life. Not everyone is capable of self-expression, not everyone has confidence, and not everyone is able to vocalize or share how they are feeling out loud, that doesn't require patience but requires acceptance from others. I too am a victim of story telling, I committed suicide and that's not why I committed suicide, I wrote a very nice blog on Instagram, my first book. Its not deserved to be put down, but don't go to unauthorized systems of support, is how you get hurt that's not people not being down with you, that's people not wanting to be associated to you, knowing you, or by what they hear about you, think you are bad for business, or bad for association, or (now) bad as an influence to others, with bipolar, I have not assumed any leadership positions, but I'm not street, Im just accepting of all people, let them feel bigger than me, that's my gift is making people feel smart, now Im in the need of help, and need to find others who are above me more experienced, but accepting trusting of information I know, to help me make basic decisions for myself, not others, put them at risk of harm, commit suicide.

You Cannot justify change ...

3/11/2019

You cannot justify change just like you cannot justify a retaliation upon you for changes you've made following incidents when you were not well, not up to par, not at your best. Its then that acceptance of you makes no difference, but your own wellness becomes paramount to your thoughts about what others are thinking, as you assume that they are thinking in the negative of you, if limited to only a few, leave it at that, if you can correct your behavior (#sober) then do so, if you are only made to feel sick if drinking then don't let those stories about you take hold of your ability to function in society as a positive member of the work force, by those stories of you be put together to cast you out as looking bad or a loose canon, for not being well then, and then try to justify or argue why not doing well now, the causes for suicide are not the same for members of the upper class, and members of the work force, there is a missing component money, and success, a law student is someone who works hard but does not get paid for their work, that means they need to prove their ability to achieve and to keep going in life not burn out to become a member of the professional class and work force as a writing or legal professional, why I'm a writer with an LLM Masters in Law (2019) not an Attorney. No one with empathize with anyone they feel wronged by, and by their successes think not justified or proper for you to be among the well, or be treated properly as well, based upon stories heard about you when you were not well, its not therefore my fault and not therefore the fault of others, for gun violence or for suicide, resulting from unwanted pressures, that's just people not wanting to be around people who are not well, not wanted a previous association to be known about them, not wanting others to feel left out get sick, not wanting to include others and make others similarly sick, it becomes a situation where there is limited room for error, on the part of those who are trying to achieve success, and the successful defensive to those who are trying to achieve success, make them look or appear less than, to build themselves up or to prevent association, deter association, or make known an unwanted association, to. This is because once a relationship ends in order for new relationships to happen, those past feelings are no longer, and to minimize the chances of people thinking those feeling still exist, disassociate from people, places or things that remind them of someone who has harmed them, or to avoid people places or things of where harm has occurred, or what has caused one illness, if it can be fixed than fix it, but don't make matters worse ... trying to fix other peoples judgements of you along the way, you're likely not to make as much progress than you are having ignored everyone and simply doing your best to start a new life as best you can. In these cases you cannot prove others wrong, as by their evidences in life, depending upon whether they feel you are winning in life or not, prove you wrong. welcome to the club ...

3/11/2019

If you're not happy with the past and wondering as happy now, why we were not afforded the same privileges growing up, well then welcome to the club. Not all things as they are now, are the same but different, we cannot change the times, or blame the 90s for anything now occurring, which in the past we feel was not dealt with accordingly, every time period, has its own way of dealing with problems, not all time periods are the same, nor people nor devices we are left to for assembly of ideas or persons, if all things were simple, we would all be created equal, but some have greater access to systems of support and coping more so than others, we should not labor ourselves to assembling ideas in life, but spend the majority of our time on earth assembling ourselves, its when you are doing your best to better yourself each day, not worried what others think, is when you think best thoughts appropriate in the right places in life, not focused on others, or their methodologies or rationales. People who do not know you in life, will think differently as from their age, occupation, and standing, we cannot all feel the same, if so, empathy would cause illness, not be deemed as helpful to show compassion toward others, or to have empathy for what others are going through in life, to not empathize with the hardships faced by others, is generally thought deserved if a person is categorized as not well, or not a functioning member of society in the work force or wed. We cannot all arrive at success at the same time, nor arrive at a later future point in time, where we are better unless we start getting better now, if youre not feeling well, chances are others are not feeling well around you, or it could be bipolar where you are not feeling well, thinking others are having ill thoughts towards you, and causing you illness, because they do not feel well around you, not because they are not well on their own. It takes a certain type of person's humor to make everyone feel apart of, that is by people you know, we cant all be comedians, its usually by friends that know and love you accept them, do not disappoint or take advantage of the wellness of others, thinking its to express any discord you are encountering and then to spread that discord among friends, life doesn't work that way, its among strangers that discord spreads. // If youre not happy with the past, youre not being appreciative of where you are now, and if you are not happy with where you are now, you are not being appreciative of the past, and if youre thinking was not in alignment past, you don't need your thinking to be in alignment now, to better understand the past or present, should make no difference moving forward, what was related in the past who has been punished, and for what reasons, think that its by association people are punished, or for acts people are punished. Its by actions people are punished, rights and wrongs, not systems of notoriety or association are people set back in life or brushed aside, as unimportant, and from anyone looking on the outside in, well they have the benefit of knowing people, thinking its about them, and if you do not write in a way that benefits their psyche, think that you are being purposeful or not making sense, out of lack of intelligences in life, how intelligent do you need to be to function among, and how forward minded to you need to be to rise above. How important are technology and connections? I was thinking with no connections in life, I have faired well, successful academically and career wise. I don't think by connections you get jobs in life, in fact I have been applying for years, that is not a matter of discrimination, nor the purpose for blogging, as though I have always suffered from mental illness, its only recently, the last few years, its because of disappointment, embarrassment, and failure one becomes suicidal, unforgiving of the past, I am not suicidal.

Telling yourself I knew this was gonna happen ...

Looking back its easy to say I knew this was gonna happen. Exactly what are you referring to? When people take it too far. Its usually for advancements in society that people push the bounds for acceptance, without "fear of the other person's negative reaction" and without regard for any "hinder[ance] [of] a relationship from reaching its potential." [1] Those who in the process of seeking to be known, know this, there is only so many first interactions and first impressions you can make, and it usually starts with presentation, not common sense. What is common sense? The news, manners, etiquette, from where do we learn these "common" practices, its usually by example, that others are led, and by learning from the best acquire the tone in common acceptance of or achieve the wellness in accordance with principles of wellness deemed more important than leading other discussions in life, astray. That is but one principle of acceptance, what we adhere to, well that's not religion, its just knowing the difference between right and wrong. Its best to therefore be "conflict-avoidant" [2] and "learn which behaviors are and are not acceptable" [3] especially in writing or in any industry which pushes the bounds of achieving normalcy, not relative to the times or helpful, but a reflection of something ongoing past it seeks to bring about, that's not moving forward, that's opening a can of worms. In some cases "It takes courage to overcome inhibitions, break through barriers, and take chances." [3] When you understand how you make other people feel, well then that's awareness, and when you can comprehend, how mentions make others feel uncomfortable, well that's acceptance not of your own thoughts, but of the thoughts and maintenance of the good condition of others, as their good character relies, on their own image of perfection, not to be used to help perfect your own life or image, that's when its time to be yourself, not next to anyone or any set of ideas, to help identify yourself, but you inherently have internalized what it is that makes you who you are, that's a proper transformation of what causes you illness, and not sharing those facets of thoughts or life, that ail you, instead doing the right thing which is to live and lead by example, not by story telling alone of how you got to where you are now thought wise, and in better condition than you were, having had those thoughts, therefore the later sharing of thoughts that have caused you illness, is that for purposes of your own wellness (think to yourself) or for the purposes of benefiting or preventing future illness? That would be one example of an appropriate pushing of boundaries if the effect is positive looking back and if the future as looking upon us thinks positively not depressed by the obviousness of non-disclosures, of patterns seen, we can't all be Michelangelo, with the same ceiling overhead.

There are certain times to discuss the past, now is not one of them, for the most part on good days we live presently, resided in our thoughts about today and our future, that means that people are moving forward. There are a few things I remind myself of whenever bipolar hits:

1. Is the thought you're having about the past appropriate.
2. Would others be offended by sharing a past story.
3. Is your humor appropriate for the times or inappropriate.
4. How is your tone, is it strong enough to be inspiring or just too strong.
5. How will people from your past think of you.
6. How will people from your present think of you.
7. Do you have the right to discuss the past, or what's going on presently.
8. How far have you come in life ... is it necessary to go backwards.
9. Is going backwards helpful to reality now, or is now better than the past.
10. Would you want someone to discuss your past for you, and is it appropriate for you to discuss things as you see, is it to benefit you or to benefit all?

You won't always know what to say ... during times of chaos, but especially during times of peace and a multitude of successes, discuss the past, as it relates to you. Who is benefiting from situations or the telling of stories, is it your story to tell. When is a good time to come forward and take on some leadership when it comes to influences in life, is it appropriate to speak for others, not always. Stick to what you're good at, if it's psychopathology then discuss your thoughts in a psychotherapeutic environment, is it about entertainment media or news, then it's best to rely on sources in entertainment to understand from where other people's thoughts come from on the subject. When it comes to being special, it is the stories about our lives that make us feel special, and the sharing of stories about others, usually despecializes them to others, or makes us appear as though we are all knowing, no one knows it all. You usually know your own life well, but you don't understand or always know the lives of others well enough, by contact, or interaction to explain from their point of view what you see has happened or dictate what you think has occurred show that you now have a general understanding ... that usually makes it look like you have had an understanding all along.

After you've shared anything personal, give it a minute to process or even a day, sometimes not all thoughts are appropriate. You don't want to be read by everyone, but at the same time you are supposed to make eye contact in conversations and be read read others in order to have a conversation. I think for the most part, your beliefs are viewpoints you keep to yourself, not everyone shares online, their opinions on entertainment or politics, these things you usually keep to yourself, listening or watching for the time period it takes to hear a song or movie, but if you're not in the industry it's not something you think about, so it would be wrong to assume that everyone on the outside or inside thinks the same, or that all things alike come from the same places or set of ideas. Everyone has their own influences in life, not all people are the same. Just keep that in mind when sharing your two cents. If it would not be known had you not shared, then that could be something private, or something shared only among people to a group or profession known. Not all people are lucky enough to work in different industries, I'm not sure if that causes illness, to know too many people, but I think when it comes to connections less is more, growing up you don't really think about the politics of knowing people or go by what people think, you're usually into your own thoughts, thinking you have your whole life ahead of you young, but as you get older, pickier, with whom you associate with and by who you are connected to changes, may change, based upon your wellness, if you don't stay well, you miss out on events, important days, and forget to stay in contact with people close to you, that's a product of drinking (and addiction) it's hard to go backwards and reconnect, sharing is one way of reconnecting with others, but not if you dive into new subjects or old subjects and for some send backwards in time, to their surprise you've just arrived at jokes, these things or thoughts no one would admit to, that is thinking everyone is thinking the same thing when they see someone famous, or see a group of people who are famous together. On the outside looking in it seems that everyone talks or is in sync with one another, but that's not the case, not everyone talks in real life, best is to live life, on your own terms not the terms set by others, not that you'll be out of the loop, but that's okay it's better than trying to stay in the loop and get disoriented, we used to read about others professionally not by what is said about them in summary to things that they share about themselves, by writing professionals in magazine, but that's no the case today, you have to do your own PR and that's by staying well.

what is offensive ...

I think generally... anything made privately shared in public is considered offensive to the recipient who in private spaces or confidences, needs no mention of experience with or of interactions made privately, that's considered confidentiality, and maintaining confidences, that's a matter of professional standards, but not in the private sphere to those who live public lives, often times their private lives are by what makes them human all the more so, judged by how they are in private ... determines whether they are of good standing in public. That is how to rate anyone's professionalism, by how they appear in public and how they treat others in private, that is how one determines, their good character, whether fit for certain clients, or subject matter, that is a heavy subject, when heavy subjects are brought forward it's the listener who always benefits having put things together, but only if the listener brings inward those emotions as affected or takes personally the sharings of others, as directed toward them, then in those cases, determines the fitness of a professional to handle certain subject matters, to some these subjects are elementary with a better understanding of the times, and for purposes of historical outlook moving forward know better how to handle situations or subjects given their experiences redirect others, that could be by knowledge from personal experience or could be by knowledge based upon fears, or pains in life, or knowledge based upon education and experience know how to handle the emotions of others, that's professionalism knowing how to keep a room calm, knowing how to speak in public, and how to carry oneself around others in conversation takes time, from speaking in public to speaking in private or speaking privately in a public space, how loud to be as toward the person or surroundings.

3/7/2019

Nothings impossible unless you make your life difficult, more difficult than it needs to be. Be forgiving of others, and mostly forgive yourself for how you appeared past, as insensitive, not all are privied or think the same thoughts, especially about who they admire, or look up to, or think highly of, we all have different role models in life, or ideals we seek to live up to. What resembles ... same or similar is not to each ones individual privilege to call out others based on what is around them or based on how they look as connected to others, or deserving of being put down as a possible connection or of likeness to others for use. Everyone has their own identity, if we all imitated or based our ideas off the same concepts, then life would be monotonously, boring, and self-serving a one-way ticket to disillusionment, smashing together concepts only putting together what matches, that would make life too up tight. Be apart of, but its not required that you conform to any one set of beliefs or opinions, it takes a general opinion to create a bigger generally accepted opinion, do not blame the impetus for action on same or similar circumstances or movie or music cases, to recapitulate circumstances same or similar if a same defensive methodology was thought used, just do what you think is right, and if everyone picks an issue they believe in and the more people trust in that concept as making sense, then we hope that its for the greater good all benefit from that support, if everyone is not benefiting from joining a general system of support, then allow people to grow and support causes they believe in at their own paces, not as same or similarly in defense of as a sign of guilt, for any other areas of their professional lives ... as coming from a place of guilt, helping.

recovery and forgiveness ...

3/7/2019

For every action there is a reaction, always keep in mind the ages and intelligences of others vary when it comes to comprehension, always do your best to make sense, not spread bipolar ideologies, but represent yourself as you wish others to represent you or your ideas in life. Be respectful. Everyone does their best to help make sense of life, you are no different, neither am I. We are not all experts when it comes to living life, if you cannot learn something new daily, well then youre not living life to the fullest. You are the only limit to your successes in life, be sure not to insult the successes of others, at your advantage to tell your story in life, as same or similar to, always do your best to be unique and original, we need not all respond the same #slutwalk, to show our true stripes and regain our independence of choice in life. You are a product of all choices in life good and bad, and when you live with those choices, do yourself a favor and forgive more often, its likely to lead to better choices in life, not choices with the underlying pains of disappointment of choices past, but upon arrival due to something present going well for you dictating your direction in life, not to undo a past decisions or life led, or relive a set of poor decision making circumstances and choices which you are responding to which need not necessarily be responded to by others again. If you live a better life, well then you have bettered yourself, and by bettering yourself and living a better life that's how you benefit others, not always by going backwards and redressing or addressing the wrongs created by others in your lives, but by positive coping skills demonstrated by living a productive life, is how best to rise above, all sides, benefit from that structure of recovery and forgiveness.

As you get better ... handling voices

As you get better you'll feel less and less inclined to defend yourself against voices taunting you or ridiculing you, that's just a manifestation of others unhappinesses with you, whether or not they can control you when youre up or when youre down, that's their loss of power over you, and that's not your responsibility to correct or make better others, only yourself. Whenever you suffer from an mental anguish or ailment, its not your responsibility to help others, only yourself, and if you so choose to help others, and run the risk of others trying to prove that youre not well, and have no standing to be apart of, well than that's just them not wanting you to be apart of those who are well, it must be because they think that they are better than you, and you not deserving to be apart of well somehow suits or betters themselves, to see you not doing well or to do well achieve well, and then not appear or do well in life, don't let others get to you, not by phone hacking and especially not by voices be affected by anyone, no jokes or puns intended on #worldpeace, but have beared the grunt work to it (understanding the non-productive humor residing in any jest to motion for it), not to be obvious as a daughter to a season ticket holder to the Lakers since the 80s. I'm sure there have been jokes flying around for a long time, but none attached to my family, not until my ex-boyfriends best friend and him, Film Majors, created music videos, and YouTubes, and later a sister-in-law wrote and sang a song with Eminem while I was in law school, know your limits to association, if you were not associated then close, then not at a later point in time can then become associated and close, that's not the basis or connection from which any material was produced, but usually material is made from material that is already produced or out in the open for use, that is how material is made based upon what is existing, as a law student I led a very private life, how I got jobs in positions of trust, and able to date, and have a normal life, as a blogger you are under a much different set of circumstances as a writer, you live a more sedentary and secluded life. That's not a product of being anti-social, its just a product of being sober and staying home, and wanting to be successful and by those successes be able to help oneseelf and help make a positive difference in the lives of others. You cannot judge someone now, as they were then, as a matter of wellness, one gets better over time, and whatever underlying causes for conditions existed then, do not exist now, and overtime voices will slowly take less hold over your abilities in life, the more able you are to focus and stay steady minded, not appear not well to others.

Procrastination blues ...

If you're thinking about getting something done and you keep putting it off, you're likely to not feel good about yourself. The goal is to at least get something done, that helps you toward fulfilling those goals in life, anything off the beaten path ... well its you that winds up feeling at a loss, when you do not end up where you want to be in life. When you have time at your disposal, use youre time wisely, that means setting a schedule for yourself, and not getting into procrastination habits, where you pick up one thing, start something, then not go back to what you were working on, lose focus in life. According to the verywellmind:

“No matter how well-organized and committed you are, chances are that you have found yourself frittering away hours on trivial pursuits (watching TV, updating your Facebook status, shopping online) when you should have been spending that time on work or school-related projects.”

Being in a position where you can schedule youre own hours is to your benefit, but when you are given time off to work on yourself, that means use your time wisely, we all have deadlines in life ... meet them. We all have daily chores and self-care routines, keep up with them. Whatever gets you going in life, to start your day, and keep going in life, then don't stop. In fact its not uncommon for us to “underestimate how long certain activities will take to complete” often times when we leave a project and get back to it, its just a matter of sending an email, following up, or participating and attending functions, this shows that you are proactive, and by being proactive, you are positively aware of what needs to get done, and getting what needs to get done, in alignment with those goals and interests in life. That's being organized with your time. Whether its keeping a daily calendar or schedule, that's how to stay on top of things, a little advanced planning goes a long way, that is setting daily reminders to accomplish goals.

3/3/2019

Growing up I never thought that was odd, film, or who worked in film around my family, it was never a dream to work in film, but now have jobs in Tech and Film. -They filmed scenes from the movie Clueless on Bristol, where I grew up, on Rockingham. 2015 my best friend came to town and we toured the Mann Chinese Theater in Hollywood and the Paramount Lot. I don't think people are so organized as to be provocative about the times, but I think in doing so, it looked provocative for us to be on tour, as though an outing to out those who may or may not have caused harm to beauty standards and standards of intelligence deemed beautiful. I think for the most part, these films have led us perfectly in terms of fulfilling standards of intelligence and beauty, if there were three movies most relatable to my life, it would be: Clueless, Legally Blonde, and Black Swan. These movies are about beauty and intelligence, popular movies, popular doesn't mean most relevant, but at the time, not a big movie buff but have seen a few movies, these were a few of the movies I saw in part, I didn't finish watching Black Swan after the cutting scene, it was too relatable, self-mutilation. I think blogging is fun not in a way that self-harms but in a way that similarly allows you to shine or pick yourself apart to do better. I don't think that movie code or music code rules the world, but it has in some respects affected our intelligences and the way we see the world, for better or worse (there are a few examples of for worse, we will not discuss: Hitchcock and Manson, one of two were sued). When reality hits, one should not recreate what is seen in their lives follow like a script, nor treat others as though they are living in a movie, and adhere to scripts to portray someone as movie like. For the most part I have done my best, I did not go to law school because of a movie, it was because I was a hotline counselor 2004, certified and wanted to make a positive difference in the lives of others, and thought a law degree would be more helpful to learn how to advise others, but see that a legal education helps you think better so that you can advise, but by laws. Overall I think I have become a more intelligent person having attended law school, and look forward to finishing law school, although its taken me many years to finish, working in between semesters, to keep my career going in life, have finally found a couple jobs, who believe in me, and willing to work with my schedule and accommodate my interest in finishing law school.

Intelligence matters when it comes to love and admiration, rarely do we trust our hearts with someone who we think is either (1) not deserving of our love or (2) ill equipped to handle our stresses and make better ourselves, call that selfish but its true, we generally seek out intelligent people people who take good care of themselves and take good care for others, why self-care is so important, it shows that someone cares about themselves and that because they care for themselves, care for others to care about them do, that's having a healthy mind. You cannot have a healthy mind, if all you think about is people appearing less than, or people appearing as better than you, critical of them, that's not caring for the health of others but only your own health, life is short, but it need not be made shorter, caring about the wrong things in life, or the wrong people, that causes a set back, to our own wellness and the wellness of others, when we fixate on people who have caused us harm, instead of appreciating everyone who is doing their best to keep everyone well around them. In meeting my Doctors, I don't think anyone is invisible to mental illness, its just that some can identify better when something is wrong, and fix what is going wrong in order to help make you feel better, that's intelligence, not absorbing the problems of others, but being your own autonomous unit of care to others, and mostly to care most for yourself, that's not selfish, that's just not becoming sick just because someone else is sick or because you see someone who is not well or may be sick. It's a hard fact of life, that we all get sick sometimes, whether it's the common cold, or just a mental health issue, like a bad day and being moody these are all normal parts of life, the more we normalize bad behavior however, the more acceptable it may become, why its important not to encourage bad behavior or diving into thoughts that produce mental health issues or behaviors such as defeative thoughts about self, depressed mood, and other self-harming forms of talk therapy that don't set things right for us in life, but make us worse off, why its important to always stay positive, be accepting of others, and not make worse already fragile conditions spiritually, and socially regarding some believing in others and not believing in some capable.

You can have likes in life, you may not want everyone to know what you like or who you like though, as that may make them or others uncomfortable as being known liked. I think when it comes to liking others, that's not something you talk about until it becomes official or until you are considered presentable or a person worthy or liking anyone of higher stature, be careful not to embarrass others, you are allowed to have crushes in life, but be sure not by your own insecurities, as co-dependent insult the other to bring the other down to feel worse than you to empower yourself, as being over them, that's called either taking your power back, or disempowering someone else you think has too much confidence, call that protecting someones best interests, but often times those who love you, explains why they put you down in life, that's to show care for someone, theres a difference between those who do not care about you and who put you down as knowing you, who you are not close to and people who are close to you putting you down to correct you. Everybody handles things differently ... especially when it comes to rejection, they either get upset, mostly with themselves for giving their power away or others get upset with them for not empowering them by being nice to them, that's a much different form of a feeling of rejection that by someone who does not know you or who you do not know being mean to you. You cannot go through someones private life and think that you know them without explanation from them, we all speak to people differently, that's by who is addressed how you address others, is person to person, we are supposed to treat all people the same, but that's not always the case. How someone is with one person may be different than how they are with other people, even though it's the same person, you cannot expect them to be the same with all, they like, or by who likes them how they respond or write to others ... be treated, as though they are lesser than or the reject.

depending on your past ...

Much about your self-esteem has to do with your past and being happy with where you are now. Its easy to come up with excuses for not liking yourselves, when it comes to body image or maintaining sobriety. Your first years of recovery are always the worst, you'll go through a lot of changes, gain weight, that's a normal process healing. When you finally achieve youre ideal mentally and physically again you'll be proud of yourself, just give yourself time to heal. Its not by likes or rejections you should feel good about yourself, not go by who likes you, but go by how you feel about yourself, no one knows you better than yourself, you cannot judge a book by its cover, assume that just because someone does not look well or is overweight that that means that they are unhappy with themselves, sometimes people are harmed in the process of loving others, and by those rejections or failures in life experience hardship either by use of drugs or alcohol to feel better about themselves. To better oneself, without competing with others, means to be the best version of yourself, absent minded others, what others think of you, or whether they are judging you now as well or being bad on purpose and that's why you look bad, is because of your own faults in life, there is lack of empathy for people who are not strong or who do not appear well, don't be so judgmental, acceptance of self is key to build a greater acceptance of others, who not by appearances do well in life, but by their hard work and effort put toward their own self-esteems and the esteems of others, achieve well.

feeling better (therapy) ...

Whenever youre not feeling well its best to consult a physician, with whatever is bothering you, that's not to say that AA is not helpful to get to a meeting every now and then, but checking out completely from reality is not the solution either to your problems, it just exacerbates your problems or makes worse peoples problem with you, as whether or not you are deserving of doing well in life, based upon your appearances or by how well you are doing able to help lead or be of sound support to others. Its really no ones fault when anyone chooses to drink or do drugs, just like anything done in the privacy of a bar or at home, that's their right to privacy, to keep confidential their problem with drugs or alcohol relapse, or not do well in life, to who that affects if others, then becomes a problem, especially if someone while using in public causes harm to themselves in front of others, is what's at issue, whether I was harmed and then harmed myself in front of others, and who was responsible and what were the triggers for my self-harm whether it was substance abuse related or via alcohol. [removed] Once you are given an opportunity to live a new life, don't mess things up for yourself by trusting the wrong people in life, or abusing your privacies and privileges in life, to not do good for yourself and others, that's the purpose of punishments, is to prevent crimes from occurring.

3/28/2019

Its never too late to have this discussion, whether someone you know is feeling that way toward themselves, or others are feeling like someone is feeling that way toward themselves, don't push people over their edges in life, then blame them for their own circumstances in life. The right words to say are often difficult, a few steps have been provided to help get the conversation started: "(1) Start the Conversation (2) Listen, Express Concern, Reassure (3) Create a Safety Plan, and (4) Get Help." [1] There are many things not to say to someone who is suicidal, it requires more than faith or upbringing to say the right words, its best to refer someone to someone with experience always to get help like 911 or a hotline, such as The National Suicide Prevention Lifeline 1-800-273-8255. I was told, "You may be concerned that they will be upset with you, but when someone's life is at risk, it is more important to ensure their safety." [2] I don't think therefore sharing my own personal experiences overcoming mental illness is helpful to anyone who is currently suffering, an uninspiring lesson in life, is to hear from someone who self-harms usually you are punished for sharing out loud, any stories of self-harm, that doesn't make you a pariah, it just makes others uncomfortable to talk to you or be around you, much like anyone who relapses drinks or does drugs, once you get labeled as of harm to self, the unpredictability of your life expectancy becomes a cramp to the style of others. That's why people do not disclose when they feel like harming themselves out of fear of being put on holds by others, I know when I am not feeling well I take myself to the emergency room do not need help from anyone when I'm doing well and with a job, be forced to admit to using or misusing medications and/or blame it on past alcohol use, mental health issues are real sometimes caused by others, and sometimes on our own merits received illness. I do not think anyone is deserving of mental illness or illness, that's not what I'm saying, all I'm saying is that those who suffer do suffer, and not to rub it in or blame them for their suffering. Only the well can help make those who don't feel well feel better, and usually its best to surround yourself with people who are well in order to get well like AA, and have these talks out loud, #stophate. Allow people to get well, sometimes it's a myriad of issues compounded why people self-harm, it can be because of circumstances they cant change about themselves, in my case mostly. No one wants to be blamed for the death of a loved one, and I certainly do not think that my family wishes to be blamed for my previous suicide attempt (2009, 2017) or for my mental health issues. Allow people to move forward in life, allow people to recover, and forgive often.

whch more is expected of you ...

You can't go backwards to explain yourself, if not acceptable then then at no future point in time will any positive impressions be made moving forward but a past viewpoint of you as heard by others or by incident preferred to paint a picture of you in their mind that makes sense, that would be by someone in your past who is either being defensive to the illnesses you suffer now, or not wanted to be responsible in the future if you become ill having known you, its to each ones responsible to take care of themselves, you can only blame others for so long until you have to fix your own life, and learn how to live on your own, we cannot be given things in life, if we are not deserving of privileges in life, that includes friends and companions, its important therefore to begin new relationships or end old relationships but not to be judgmental toward those in your past for their current relationships or lack thereof. Some people will think what they want to think and just like offenders or addicts who wont stop, wont stop being boastful of their superiorities in life, and continue to spread gossip about others or about me ... to paint a negative picture until they feel admonished of their wrongs towards me, no one is deserving of suicide, not me not anyone, and the only way to defend against such illnesses, is to bear in mind, not all see it coming, that is negativity, and some people when they get hurt self-harm, and sometimes that self-harm hurts the feelings of others or people around them who are trying to help them, that's not separations to create dysfunction, but we assume to help you function better, not to embarrass you in public on purpose, or to make the voices you experience worse, as real or imagined. Just do your best. Its for no one to judge another in the abstract the purposes for their word choices or the standards of their wellness as based upon care given to them by others, but it usually when we self-care in a way that breeds positivity to fruition in our own lives, and creates energy that others are drawn to, means that we are speaking and behaving appropriately in a positive light to which others are drawn to, that's not by money or clothes or makeup that's by being a good person. Once you've achieved being a good person, not to forget the people who intervned and tried to help get you back on track along the way, you will be compared to others who have found less than success in recovery, some who have passed, don't be one of them, be strong, and being strong does not mean action in the literal sense, no time period is so dark or so depressing, or so equivocal, that argument or words are required to fill those spaces or to correct those thoughts about others, share your two cents wisely, and always keep in mind, people have lives of their own, and don't have the energy to waste going backwards through your past, to help paint a better or bigger picture of the past as a whole as though your connected to a bigger picture, without fame, there is less responsibility influence and leadership wise, but once you put yourself out there to help others, expect criticisms only to strength the kinds of topics you discuss that in the event if needed can help someone through a mental health issue they have experienced along the way either directly or not but not feel alone. On a Personal Note: I am now confiding in a doctor or choice, through the nitty gritty of self harm and why its difficult for me to be trusted now, as someone who has self harmed, that why people get put in hospitals, when tired, do that they can get better not self harm again.

Unfortunately there is no cheating in life when it comes to experience you either know the ins and outs of normal or you struggle to find your own as reading and going by the issues placed on you, having issues of your own, or creating circumstances to make others have an issue with you. You have to always with a sense of humor look back ... first at your own past, secondly of those around you (rarely do we think about the pasts of others unless they bring it up, deciding so whether relevant to justifying actions or behaviors toward), and lastly we reflect upon the present, where we see ourselves now, and where we want to be in the future. Some of us are blessed with lives beyond belief, however do not bear the same strengths and gustos of others who are not as privileged or trying to succeed up above you in life, that is why there are some who are educated leaders and some who fail to meet the mark as being among the lead, and pushed down the ranks in life, led. That is okay, when it comes to power and privilege in well, it is the well who stay well, without associations do well, and upon being well make associations in life or maintain friendships as well, once you turn around in life, and fail to meet those marks, then it becomes about who knows who for what, and for what purpose others meets, to share what common grounds, or to help whom, to whom help is received, and by who and what others are empowered ... made better or better than, by reactions to others. There is a sense that there are some not to be experimented with, I have so willingly put myself out there, knowing that I have been hospitalized on 8 different occasions for 14 days, ALWAYS taking myself to the hospital except 2017 hospitalized 2017 for attempting suicide. I think if you stay sober and do the 90x90 you should not be hospitalized ... #stopsuicide ... its by self-harm we cause harm to the reputations of others, and by those embarrassments in life, get judged as being in the wrong, its by our own faults and sufferings in life, we should lead ourselves, away from controversy, not blame the controversies themselves for illness, or be experimental with the past, in the sense try to understand why people commit suicide, it is their own fault never the victims fault, the survivors, and should not be provoked either, by knowing that now. A provocation occurs when for example I say something, if not neutral and specific to a particular population, why not to mention headings as toward groups of people, to whom offenses are taken, and by gender or race, take something Ive said to justify a harm toward me, and then use my words as a defense for putting me down, as though that's okay to hurt me, its not.

Sometimes under stress you're not always going to get the response that you need or want to hear from someone in order to make yourself feel better about things. Just because someone talks or reports does not mean they are turning on all their friends, or have no friends. Don't be judgmental towards those who report, it's not always for purposes of prosecution or to raise defenses from others, that would be an unreasonable squeeze on circumstances, to transfer those same or similar stresses one feels as though something now everyone feels. You can't remove people from life or from equations to make better your lives, if someone is behaving or treating others poorly, then that would be a cause for removal of a person, if that's what you're thinking about right now, if you are somebody who does not think well of me, well then those are the defenses you are trying to raise from me, as though deserved as though I am deserving of punishment or not doing well in life, because I am not successful and choose to blog. That is you being judgmental towards me, as though speaking is a turning on others, not in support.

Much about life is remembering the good times, not just overfocused on where you are or are not in life. Often times when we are not feeling well, we will come up with excuses for why we are sick, why we are in a bad mood, or why we are not doing as well as we would like to in life, you really can't blame anyone with a bad attitude, if you want to be one of the happy people in life, it's time to start realizing what you do have in life, not necessarily what you have to offer others, and by acknowledging all that you do have, that shows love and compassion for those who care for you, and that's how to receive love and compassion from others. Until you realize what you have done wrong in life, or understand the consequences of what is going wrong with you in life, will others come to understand you better, as not someone at risk of harm to self or others, but be recognized as someone of value, not just by your privileges in life be deemed important, we are all important people, life's not all about acceptance, some will not be forgiving of you by sharing what has gone wrong for you in life, and based upon where you are at now, will judge you in the negative, so long as you continue to stay where you are in life, and not move forward that's all the more reason to reinforce those negative judgments of you, we are all deserving of living a good life, always prove them wrong, when in Rome, otherwise they will connect every news story to your newsfeed and blame you as a consequence of your mental illnesses if can be proven are a contributory factor to the poor decision making of others, or as though if like, in cohorts prove you wrong, that's wrong to take someone who is well, and create a side towards them, and with the words that they use to help empower self and others, not necessarily similarly situated, be treated as someone trying to be an influencer and by those influences in life empowered, in fact it's the exact opposite it's my misfortunes in life and lack of opportunity, and struggles in life, that have empowered those who are not on my team in life, and that's just a fact of life, not everyone will be for you, but choose to be against you in life, thinking you're not good enough, or strong enough, not deserving of living a good life, no matter how hard you work, judge you based upon how you were, not accept you as you are now, and based upon what they hear about you, assemble you in the wrong. Life is not about doing things for reaction or doing things in reaction to others, once you are hyper vigilant it's hard to be creative or to fight negativity, it's more like a crumble than it is a fight. That's living for the moment, not worried about the past, but living for now, that's hyper vigilance, which does not always mean looking out for others, but also means to look out for self, not because someone is doing something wrong, but concentrating on reading one's surroundings, to keep oneself out of harms way, so long as you look after yourself well, and do unto others as you wish done to you, then no one should worry about your condition just worry about themselves, if they have done nothing wrong to harm you, that's the problem.

Rolling with the punches ...

You can only roll with the punches for so long until you look like a follower and let people who know less about life lead you or try to control you thinking that they know better than you, why some of us are leaders and some of us are not. It's by always your best decision making skills that you are able to read and predict what's in front of you, and leave the past behind, that is your past and the past lives of others, are none of your business to pick apart, as deserving of a good life or to do well in life. Don't be next, not next to die, not next to commit suicide, and especially not next to snap [fight now about the past] and take your love for self [unhappiness's with ones self] or ideas [not transgressions but by what you think is right or perfect of thought sound of mind] about life out on others [try to control what others think], and their ability to do well see and predict their own futures that's for no one to judge how someone achieves intelligence or friends in life, by what they say or by how they carry themselves as deserving or not of fortune or misfortune. Always do your best to be mindful of the spaces around you and others, and whatever you put at the forefront of your mind, is what will come from me in the defense, as not deserving of suicide and or illness, based upon what other people say about me, or based upon what I have said past, not in a well state of mind, not doing well in life, be held to that standard as not well or not smart enough to help others, or to help situate myself in a place online, to which I am not longer harmed if out in the open. That's why it's important not to spread illness, that is by rumor affect how people see someone who has not realized fame or any kind of notoriety hurt their reputations before they are able to get jobs or become successful as a way to prevent their future from occurring or to prevent their future abilities or earning powers in life, to the benefit of a few who think that because they write online, that they are empowered by their sense of purpose online, to the disempowerment of others, now its keeping an even keel so that others keep an even keel as toward me or others ... that's in everyones best interest not to be famous or well known.

People go to AA for different reasons ... its mostly for self-harm in my case I would say. That is doing things that make myself uncomfortable and or others, such as talking to self or self-harming. These are not things you discuss out loud, just be understanding of others, I have not been hospitalized since 2017 and have been doing well, for the most part, its really not anyones business for what reasons people self-harm, that's something between themselves and their doctors. Don't be worried about others, especially if it has nothing to do with you, rarely will you get reassurances from someone who has caused you worry, or harm, that is the bottom line, until you are able to help yourself, you get designated as worrisome, others playing victim to your condition, which is outside of your control, unless you choose to stay sober, its hard to make your life change for the better, and even then life can still be difficult as sober. I have been sober since 2014, and sober everyday since 04/02/17. It's a long process of recovery, once you get sober, unless you choose to abstain from drinking and dating can maintain sobriety, it becomes a lonely world on your own, why people attend meetings to have a support group and to be around others who similarly need support, that's not the same as going out and making friends, the friends you make in AA are not for fun, but for support, more like professional relationships not people you go out and do things with or date, that's not recommended in your early days, weeks, and months of sobriety. I think the hardest thing is starting over once you do decide to stop drinking, there are a lot of triggers you will face in life, death, co-dependence, hate, suicide, and people getting sick around you, but you have to be strong. Life is not easy everyone goes through losses in life, its how you handle yourself in the event of a loss, that determines your overall positive outlook in life, whether able to maintain it. Just be cognizant of others around you ... may wish for stability over worry, and whenever others are under your care, then stability is preferred, always be a person of your word and stay sober.

Its important firstly, not to blame yourself "for your loved one's suicide in any way"[1] its not your fault. We may not be able to control all the events in our lives, "psychiatrists theorize ... we would rather fault ourselves for a tragic occurrence than accept our inability to prevent it." [2] Suicide following a diagnosis of depression makes one a "victim of disease, [and] just like cancer victims ... [do not] deserve blame" is one way to look at things. [3] Much like a Holocaust Victim's suicide, it is questionable whether "[their] emotional wounds [were] so deep that their pain continued to resonate" that may be so, in cases involving survivors of gun violence ... pain that has the potential to "resonate and build for years afterward." [4] Its important to understand the "common threads that help us understand that we are not alone in the confusing sorrow we face" by studying the stories of others, we can hopefully learn from their experiences and not repeat the same mistakes ourselves when it comes to asking for help. [5] Its important to note that "suicide is rarely a sudden occurrence ... [and that] far more often [is] the result of a long, debilitating breakdown of an individual's emotional health.” [6] Based on those who have survived suicide, “the primary goal of a suicide is not to end life, but to end pain.” [7] It's common to put yourself in their shoes, while trying to empathize and understand “what we would have to feel to make the same choice,” that's arguably not a healthy step in the right direction, because upon “imagin[ing] our loved one in that kind of pain [is] almost too much to even consider.” [8] The main flaw is imagining through a healthy mind, that is your mind, it's important to note that “the suicidal person has a distorted view of their world.” [9] In that case, maybe it's time to fix distortions following tragic life events, how to view the world in a way that we can achieve the same kind of peace of mind, as before the experience of trauma. For example, in suicide notes, they can be more misleading than helpful in understanding the point of view of the victim, assuming they understood everything, or got all the help they needed, or understood fully what was happening to them psychologically, that's not true. [10] There are many stages of grief: (1) Shock, (2) Denial, (3) Guilt, (4) Sadness, (5) Anger, and (6) Acceptance. “Up to 70% of people who die by suicide may suffer from what psychiatrists call an “affective illness” such as major depression or a bipolar disorder.” [11]

There are common difficulties faced when coping with life's difficulties remember that you are not alone and you can always ask for help, and can call the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline 1-800-273-8255. It may take awhile to “move past each setback, loss, and misfortune” remind yourself that we are all in this together, you can ask for help, no matter how small your problem is, and while you may endure pain through each trauma associated to the causes you support, we are here for you. Trust your systems of support ... we are all new to this: #endviolence #stopsuicide. Sincerely, #mymollydoll for #teamenough as per our telephone conversation 10/21/18, am now making an extended effort to share a pamphlet I got from American Association of Suicidology Spring 2018 by Jeffrey Jackson.

Whenever we are tired, it's usually those full of energy and light, we feel dissimilar from, thinking that they should be feeling the same way that we feel, or that there is something about them off, as though they know more than we do about life, further along in deductions, or further along in life, we all live the same lives minute by minute on earth, to put things in perspective, depending on what time zone you're in, now with social media, we are all on the same time, life happens fast, but not faster than reactions can be controlled, or voices in response to reactions by others, including ourselves. It's important therefore to not be judgmental, everyone self-soothes differently, and some voices are not soothing, or preferred to be soothed by people we love, or by the physicians that care for us individually, not in particular me, given my discomforts in life, am not a soothing voice always, and sometimes when I'm not feeling well, that can be understood by the reader as well. Be mindful it's not necessary that we be super intelligent to function in life and have jobs, nor necessary that we be given access to the same education or resources, but it is important for you to have a voice of your own, a voice to which you can express in times of need when you need help, and not keep things to yourself, to the point you self-harm or cause harm to others by self-harming. Everyone cares, and at some points in your life people will not care, for whatever reasons they think justified, as you being someone deserving or not of success, a good life, or privileges in life, that does not mean denounce or suggest that people deserve the polar opposite condition of a well condition, based upon people's standings in life and appearances, you cannot always judge someone as being good or bad toward self or others, not all who look bad are bad, and not all who are not well look not well and not all who are pretty are well and not all who are intelligent look smart and not all who are not intelligent look thin or well kept, everyone is different, we all handle life differently in a different order set our priorities in life, but one thing is for sure, to always trust those who are above you, listen often, and don't let yourselves go not for anyone or over any trying circumstances give up in life, always do your best and from there better decisions for self and others can be made, that's the road to achievement in life, not all days will be a success, and not all failures are correctable, some failures result in people being unforgiving towards you, no matter how good you are, no goods are driven to change those beliefs about oneself, it's usually by good timing, by being good, good decisions are made, irrespective out of thought the thoughts of others, as thinking about them or judging them.

During times of need its not necessary to address everyone, and raise the stress levels of everyone who attended the #lamarathon, we would rather not hear voices of attack or concern for my health right now, I'm in the best possible health that I can be, I cannot speak for everyone, but can at best speak for myself, who was present today. For those of you not present, its really none of your business to attack my good character as though I don't care or bring up my past as deserved, that's really none of your business, to raise defenses or to cause suicide to others, as these subjects come about not by choice, but by circumstance, we cannot control everything around us, but what we can control is how you respond to others, as not in the defensive and cause unwanted voices in me or others, such incantations are unwanted, and as a result of incantations, voices occur, that is by who you are connected to by choice, and by who you are not connected to now, allow people to reframe from unwanted discussions about the past, or about people in particular, and then heighten already unsound attentions wake up the tolerances of others, based upon a few peoples interests, of safety, we are all concerned with our own personal safety and no one is asking for it or deserves it whenever anything unwanted occurs, and no I don't deserve to be attacked not behind my back or in my face. I think during periods of recovery once you get separated from systems of support and support groups the tendency is for others to write you off, as though you went out, I've been home in my room for three years, I don't go out and I don't hook up, I'm a good person, I stay home.

False alarms and recovery ...

3/24/2019

Don't be weirded out by the moods of others, that's a natural progression when recovering from trauma, or a bipolar episode, that sense of disillusionment and paranoia, that follows. Just because a problem does not directly affect you doesn't mean not to be emotionally prepared for when and if its necessary to help others. Today at the #lamarathon I found out that two Parkland Shooting Survivors committed suicide, I know the feeling of having been advocated for the highs and lows of advocacy and getting support, and then needing to ask for help, it's a process, of feeling down and then getting strong again, not everyone is fearless. To reach a point of stability its best to talk one on one with a therapist not in a group setting if you are not feeling well, I was hospitalized for 28 days, upon disclosing a previous suicide attempt 2009 ... from trauma in the 90s?! Yes, from trauma in the 90s, you only have one life to live ... just do your best to pick and choose your sides wisely, and not be too defensive to the expressions of others, even if Bernie Sanders shows up to #ACLU100, just be proud of everyone how far we've come, and don't forget to be patient with yourselves. I stopped by Nordstrom's Rack the other day, where the Army recruitment center is, and bought a purse, I forgot to say hello, I was not hired February 2009, because on medications already by then, there are other places to work other than for the government, I should've reminded myself, growing up in Brentwood, I always felt free and free from harm, never a quiet or shy person, but have found in my older years a little more paranoid, even smoke that smells stronger than the hotdogs in DTLA bothered me, the police mentioned that it must have been the "confetti canons" if that helps clear anything up, I was walking home from the Marathon, when I saw the smoke, maybe I should have held a sign that says I'm not Trevor, Trevor was the yearbook editor, and I'm not "...shady." There was a "Go Trevor" sign with an arrow ... I didn't make it past the scooter bend, before I turned around, it was barricaded off by a white fence. I feel better having been out today, than staying home lazy or busy counting prescription meds, administered by my Mom each day. #sober when youre feeling down ...

3/22/2019

When you're feeling down the best thing you can do for yourself is to stay active, that doesn't always mean being proactive. Its hard to plan for when you're having a bad day, or plan for depression, it just happens. Life happens daily, and for those of you suffering from mental health issues well Ive been told its something you will deal with daily. Its been recommended to be humorous in your approach to dealing with depression as well as "to be happy."
[1] What does happiness mean to you? Shopping, Exercise, Relationships, Money, Jobs, Success? We don't always get what we want in life, and most of happiness to me means being happy with what you have in life, not worry to much about what you don't have in life. If you're not happy with where you are in life, it's hard to achieve other things in life, or maybe you will achieve things in life, and still not be a happy person. Life is not all about staying happy, it's just a momentary feeling of joy you may feel sometimes being around others, or by doing things you love to do on your own, some are only happy when excelling in life, ahead of the pack, that's no easy task, be sure to not set your standards too high above your means in life.

Being responsible for your own words ...

3/21/2019

It's not necessary that you be on everyone's team in life in order to find and achieve success on your own, it's important to make and have friends along the way, but it's not necessary that those friendships if not maintained to the same standing they were once held, hold you back in life, as of less than in life, we all move forward we all grow apart, and knowing your connections in life, do your best moving forward to better yourself and your life, not hold others to conversations about you that would make them or yourself uncomfortable as around others. When you decide to be a peacekeeper online you have to be open about your mental health, physical health, and be open to criticisms along the way. When you provide a voice online to 3,000 a week or up to 1,000 people a day, that's your responsibility to take responsibility for the words that you share, and not make worse your condition or the conditions of others as toward you or others, there's a fine line between sharing so that all can relate, and sometimes sharing to which no one can relate exactly, and that's okay. We did not all grow up the same, so interpretations may vary depending on the closeness you feel to the writer or lack thereof, in favor of your own best interests and mental health. Given that, it's important to understand that not all may be well liked, given their upbringing, and that some of those descriptions about others, they are born with, not something they later changed about themselves to fit any molds or ideals of thought, but based upon who they are, feel or think a certain way. I've been told that head hitting is hereditary, something my Grandma went through (#stroke), that doesn't mean that that makes it okay for me to hit my head or stress out when I'm not feeling well on my own, with or without help from others, no one should have the power to push you over your edges in life, one should always be in control of themselves, not others to be at peace. If you cannot control yourself in response to others, then you are not being tolerant of their hate or disgust toward you for who you are or who you've become, successful or not. Not everyone has experienced the same hardships in life, it's important not only to be an understanding and compassionate person, but pick and choose to whom your compassions are granted to. It is not expected to show compassion or love for those who cannot mend themselves, get help or rise above hate, or discrimination for who they are, or who they've become as single. That is for no one to judge anyone who is unwed, and for what reasons unwed, suicide is a problem, because people do not feel good about themselves, do not feel like they can achieve in life, and do not feel good enough, everything is within your reach so long as you choose to stay sober and clean, the longer you dumb down yourself, or your life, to a few blurbs about you, the more difficult it is to be accepting of your past and the past of others, and move forward. Until you can learn to accept the immaturities of others then, and your own immaturities as responding to others, then the greater acceptance of all can be furthered, as not limiting respect only to those conservative and quiet, in their approaches in life, and be accepting of those who speak for themselves, not for or on behalf of others, and allow people to represent themselves well. It's not a perfect world, you cannot accept people to be happy for you once you've achieved well, but it is your responsibility to stay well, disappointment, curses upon success, and disappointments following success, are hard to mend ... you can only make mistakes in life so many times before people give up on you, and it's by those mistakes you are judged in the wrong, or judged as deserving of mistreatment, so long as you do your best, whether or not you are able to achieve success in life, is your right to privacy, and your right to live life.

3/19/2019

A manifestation of someone insulting you, is a manifestation of their own anger toward you or with themselves, usually people who are unhappy with themselves take that anger out on people who are doing well in life and/or are happy with themselves. The times have changed, we certainly do not hope that anyone would provoke illness toward others, to keep themselves as justified ... that would be hurting someone you believe deserves to be hurt, and that's an unwanted manifestation within a person of your hatred toward them, illness. That illness is not then transferable, its just as described an unwanted fact of life, that not all people get along, not all people are well liked, and for whatever reasons people are put down, either presently or in the past as thought deserved. What is not deserved is to highlight the past of someone improved as though deserved and prove an existence of hardship faced their whole lives. What was not existent then, was not justified then, as someone who has been bullied their whole life, what is not justified then, if not justified now, does not mean what is occurring now, is not justified with a record, or lawsuit. Just because someone gets sued does not mean there is something wrong with them, and that they are deserving of suicide now, if what you think the purposes for suit were deserved, and that that person upon becoming suicidal will discuss the terms of what caused them suicide 2009, and 2017, as the same, those instances were not the same and yes discussion of my suicide attempt, is causing me to feel suicidal now. No it is not true that someone reading this becomes suicidal as caring about me, its over many years of doing your best, and upon failure that you commit suicide, it occurs overtime invested, and over losses in life, if you cannot be happy with where you are now, than its best to talk in a therapeutic environment, yes it is true that those who harm themselves do so because either (1) someone is not happy with them or because (2) they are not happy with themselves. It sounds so simple, for whatever reasons those who commit suicide did not find a solution. Why you are not supposed to talk about your illnesses out loud in public, not because it makes others sick, but causes others to feel a sense of distance from you, not wanting to be associated to you or be affected by your problems, if they know you have a record, don't care for you to live. It is everyones right to live life, it is no ones right to choose for anyone how to live or to die. That is not anyones job, not Gods job, not the public's job to cause illness, #stopsuicide.

3/19/2019

When you're not feeling well, its okay to let others know, and set boundaries for yourself, help wise, its not necessary to help others or to give others unsolicited advice when they don't need it, similarly it can be argued that's it not necessary to put unwanted pressures on anyone who is not asking for trouble, who has been doing well, that's misdirecting anger towards a person you have self-identified as an offender, and then further justifying those attacks on someone, as deserved, no one deserves to be put down and made suicidal, its never the fault of the person who commits suicide, but it is the responsibility of each person to manage their own health. That's not out of guilt, regret, or failure, that one commits suicide, those are just excuses for not doing a better job of getting well and staying well, depression is a serious condition, which needs to be managed appropriately. As a writer, its your responsibility to write and remember everything you have said, as the reader reads and remembers everything that you have said, that's not an agreement, when there is a mutual understanding reached, everyone deserves a right to privacy, and talk therapy, get the help that they need and receive assistance from others #stopbullying. Know when to stop taking your angers and frustrations out on others, such as myself, and do your best when someone comes forward with information to be respectful of their shared story, not all are perfect when it comes to presentation and coming forward on subjects, do your best to help yourself in times of needs, not misdirect your anger or frustrations out on others, who do not deserve it #stopbullying #stopsuicide. Its not necessary to know who represents the basis from which a post is made, its not all according to life experience and people, some of what I write is based upon my education and basic common sense, and by thinking logically and critically not of others but of myself, not to sound defensive, which is the expected response, a suicide and a defense to suicide, Im not suicidal now. To be honest, no one wants to hear about your happinesses in life if they don't think that you deserve happiness or achievement, everyone deserves to live life with positive purpose. And no one's suicide or suicide attempt should affect anyone in the negative as responsible. Not for sharing stories, or NOT sharing any stories, prior to suicides be made responsible going through a difficult time ...

3/18/2019

Sometimes looking at someone you would never think that they were going through anything that would require help from others, we are not all leaders, some of us have better vision than others when it comes to future planning, and goal setting. We are all not well enough to be successful at the moment, that will never change, people rising to the occasion of wellness, to the benefit of those who can manage to stay well too. It is not to the benefit of anyone to speak or reply to negative voices, when I stated its not important to respond to, that doesn't mean ignoring problems, theres just a fine line between illness, and empowering the wrong ideologies in life, until those poor ideologies take place of people and or things, replaced, people are not easily replaceable, but thinking, if proper can fix or remedy any discomforts in life. What can cause illness, whenever someone is pressured into keeping a secret that they cannot handle on their own which is not obvious to everyone, is something you would report to the police, who then refers you to a therapist or someone who specializes in psychotherapy or medication management. Watching the news its easy to hear names, see illness, and then blame illnesses on people you can identify as having mentioned as contributing or some type of controller of wellness, God is usually a Doctor, and well is usually controlled in part by them when you are not well, made sick, or in need of recovery to your benefit get well, and to everyones benefit achieve well, not all thinking recommended by those who have experienced suicide in life, ie. my suicide attempt, would understand how to achieve and surpass periods of psychosis and the necessity for talking or getting help or the necessity for sleep whenever overcome with emotions not take those emotions out on others, or like I said ones self, whenever you take your emotions out of someone who cares about you, the likelihood of them self-harming is greater than the likelihood as talked about the creator of the initial harm. Once you misuse alcohol or do not behave normally, walking alone at night, putting yourself at risk of harm, then that is why you get treated poorly, spoken down to, until you correct your behaviors in life, that's a normal process of recovery, to be treated as lesser than or screamed at as bad.

April 2019

for the most part ...

You can't play with the psyche of others, not via cross-talk and not via ad-libbing conversations as per conversations, project words to or through to others, for them to focus on. I once took an fMRI, and that was the study, a list of words and words recited to me during the fMRI, to test for my brain, what words came to mind, I think those are personal notes to myself, not for use for others to use, when studying me. Knowing this Im very cautious, I think in the short hand, per conversations private I am considerate for the most part, I receive more texts than texts sent the majority of my life, however later upon separation from others it became the opposite more texts sent than received. I think this changes depending on how stable you are as a person, on the receiving end of conversation or supplying words for conversation. Its best to take care of yourself first, before you are made available to be of service to others, the longer you are in sobriety the more you are expected to speak and to be of service to others, the fewer days of sobriety you have to less is expected of you, as you cannot be relied upon as a source of support if you can barely take good care of yourself, not expect to be of expectation to others to be relied upon. No matter what your sober date is there is a general expectation of everyone to be wise with their words, not to say anything or view anything that causes illness to others, just like sober people, different professional levels have different expectations of people per profession, how they speak and behave, how much of that is as televised expectation of them? And how realistic are those expectations of them, no matter how stoic anyone is ... one thing is for sure we all have feelings and different apptitudes for acceptable and digestable speech, not everyone can relate and if by words you seek others to relate to ... then that's a false expectation of them knowing or understanding for what reasons others are coding to them, and not the responsibility of the person to whom is coded with to have knowledge of that relationship existing, everyone is assumed autonomous until a public mention is displayed, otherwise leave people to themselves, if upon becoming famous you find yourself mentioning others less, and meming yourself, well then you've reached phase 2 of fame, in which you are no longer promoting the interest of anyone but yourself, as your health has become paramount to the health of others, and the public's health is determined based upon who they follow as best suited to sponsor their ideals of what they deem to be healthy thoughts. Based upon education does not make anyone perfect even the smartest of minds make mistakes we call blunders and say things ill fatedly ruin their careers as activists, or public speakers, once one cannot be trusted, one is not trusted, and once one is deemed to not be relied upon, one cannot be relied upon, once someone is deemed unworthy of attentions, then attentions are sought to be taken from those individuals and that's another phase of fame.

4/2/2019

Loss of motivation occurs when and if you are doing things for the wrong reasons ... lethargy strikes, that is an energy counter to you feeling like doing something and no longer inspired or motivated to do so, sometimes that's your gut feeling telling you to take a different direction in life, or just to simply be task oriented and get done what needs to get done around you so that you can achieve bigger goals in life. Whenever you feel unmotivated think what are your driving forces in life principles, those are your mantras that keep you moving forward, and the points you are trying to reach whether they be a state of wellness or feeling happiness, recognize what takes you there and be sure to visualize yourself at those places in life, when you are not where you want to be in life, that's how to get yourself back after a loss, after failure, after setback, and after periods of unhappiness or loss, getting through the ups and downs takes tact, not just speaking from someone with rehab experience but as someone who cares, these are just phases in life, including the phases in which others may be hard on you when you are not doing well in life, life changes, and so do people, its all a matter of self-improvement, proving that you are normal and deserving, and then by those privileges giving back to those who have helped and supported you by working hard and achieving the same, happinesses in life as whats been given to you during your best times in life, the good times in life, be forgiving of your pasts and be grateful for everything you do have in spite of whatever you have experienced in life, if you are living now, enjoy the moments you have to yourself, to reflect on the positives too not just what you could be doing better, and from there improve it's a daily task of self improvement, and that change doesn't happen overnight, eventually you heal, but please be patient with yourselves, no loss, no failure, no setback is ever easy to deal with, know your strengths and your weaknesses and shelter yourselves from harm but not to the point you isolate, and get hurt while being alone, reflecting to much on the negatives, always be positive and think forward, the more goals you set the higher your likelihood of reaching those goals, one step at a time, one goal at a time, that's creating order to your thoughts no matter how disorganized you are Its nothing to be ashamed of disorganization, that's a fixable condition with meds, therapy, and proper self-care ... let no one pull you asunder by their judgments of your outward appearances ... weight, look, size, or shape ... when you look and feel beautiful be able to handle any negativities around you or unpleasanties, not all are where you are in life, well.

If you're not going to be apart of the solution then don't become a part of the problem, that means you are always free to un-cia yourself, youre never required to be apart of and when and if in isolation don't cause harm to self, as others may become disturbed to you self-harming. If its not okay for others to cause you harm, then its not okay for you to cause yourself harm, that's the lesson to be learned, why a lot of people get sober to not be apart of the cycle of harm, and to be knowingly in control of themselves, with full awareness that they are (1) not harming themselves and (2) by not harming themselves not causing harm to the psyche of others who expect them to be sober. A lot of being sober is about others not wanting to be outted by your PTSD or going backwards and so long as you are on meds and sober they do not have to worry about you going through the steps again and then coming forward to them about yourself or others. There comes a point, when you just need to move forward, if you've made it past the 4th step, then keep moving forward if you cannot make it past the 4th step without becoming depressed that could mean that you were a victim, and then would need counseling or therapy to overcome the pains of that step, pain to image, and pain to reputation. Don't therefore become defensive to anyone who seeks help or is trying to get help they are less likely to be a risk to your reputation if they are focusing on themselves therefore you need not worry or make things about you, when someone is focusing on themselves and doing their best to get well, that means they are on point in life, not a risk of hardship to others or themselves. There are no justifications for retaliation upon anyone, there are no justifications for not listening to those who care about you, and allowing their esteems to fall with your own, listen wisely ... it is not for those reasons people get jobs, its by education and experience not exactly by whats been overcome and to that note based upon those notes able to see forward, its never by anything negative that one sees better, its usually when detached from everyone one sees best on their own, not in alignment with any interests but the strength of opinion held within, how one is able to voice themselves in a way others can be heard without anyone hurting. If someone is hurting that could mean their best interests are not being represented by any one of my posts, its not always my responsibility to say things to which all can agree upon, but it is my responsibility to prevent people from getting hurt by talking about others in a way that produces hatred toward me, or hurt upon me by reacting poorly to anyones interests. Not leave open conversations to be built in the negative toward me, or negative toward anyone, one should be able to be positive on their own, without making someone look bad to look good, once you get to a defensive position in life, they are likely to make you look bad to look good.

Be In Sync with Your Present ...

4/7/2019

Never capitalize on the illnesses of others, on during the quiet moments of peace we have. As a general rule, that's not the time to be energetic, but if you are suffering do what you can to bring yourself up before lifting others, as this takes time, why condolences are offered to the sick, and we focus on presently what is going well for ourselves, that doesn't require the necessity of building points of discussion to avoid discussions rarely is that the solution, or so it seems, that way. When someone is having a good day, others may not be doing well, and likewise it can be felt when one is not having a good day, that others are doing well. Don't assume that all people are connected and for those reasons react or respond to others. Sometimes the timing of your life is not in sync with your environment, with people, or nature, sometimes that's a psychiatric issue sometimes not, if you stay sober you are less likely to assume the negative in defense to your past, or words chosen used in private to others, used to treat you like you are [being bad] or how you are presently is how you were then and for the same reasons justify so, when I self-harmed that was not in front of 93k people, for a Shorty Award, that was in the privacy on my own home, after relapsing ... which I had not told anyone about (approx. January 2017) [Sober: 2014], its not necessary to retaliate on people, in expectation of them causing harm to you or your psyche if meant well spoken about in the positive, that's a positive rapport or solicitation of your being, not in connection to negatives and or I the client, if speaking directly to anyone who has been offended by my presence, that's not something I can control what goes on around me when Im in public, I never solicit for negative attentions in life, that's not who I am, closest to being Amish, I don't watch TV and conservatively dressed my whole life, minus a Sky top, and photos to boyfriends judged for in public to my face as though its okay to go through my phone or computer in law school before given the opportunity to see the light of day, that is an outside perspective, now my position and identity has been taken as a well member of society, suited best for those who think they know better than me how to be me, or how to behave in front of 93k people, or speak to them, appropriately, everyone is new.

New Experiences, New Future ...

Another anti-climatic heading from you, is what I bet youre thinking ... where to now rogue, I'm not sure. #KeepFriendsTogether is probably why I was in attendance ... on a more serious note, thats the issue that hits close to home, but you end up some place related to the issue and march anyways, because it's a system of support already in existence. I don't think you experience life and end up a bigger or better person, I think that you may have experiences in life and by those exposures to negativity or self-harm feel like the bigger or better person, that is a status that cannot be manipulated, but certainly tells you whether you are well or not upon meeting me, depending on you you feel better than or bigger than via the sharing of my experiences. I don't think there is anything chummy about sharing your troubles with others, it usually makes the other feel better than you ... with their psychologist caps on reading you ... those who were once your friends, and free therapists, later in life get jobs and provide professional counseling to others in their business affairs it just so happens. I don't think that you can relive life, in any state of wonder about where you are in comparison to others, but that doesn't mean you need to start your life over or a sign that you are starting your life over, sometimes, a complete do-over in life is not in your foreseeable future and you have to just keep going with what you've got, not all have the privilege and the times, nor the monetary support, to start over in life, whether that's by acquiring another Masters degree to get jobs, just take what is given to them, and from there grow, there are no short cuts in life, to experience and professionalism.

Getting Your Revenge ...

4/6/2019

In the heat of the moment anything you say comes back to bite you as the source of negativity from which words are spoken or decisions are made, and its not until everyone has had their revenge and you are ill suited, until they feel better about themselves or by what you have said past, vindicated their rights to put you down in life, that is a common struggle of someone who is forced to go to rehab, for alcohol, in law school and forced to go to rehab to be taken off all meds in law school, that was my second hospitalization with my then boyfriend telling me that "he felt like hanging himself" ... it was a comment I then repeated in the ER ... by your exposures, when connected to people you love can be easily affected when someone you love is not doing well or not sounding like themselves, this I know personally and have been through without talking about others, and putting them at risk of harm by sharing a story from 2011, of when my then boyfriend was struggling in law school both of us winning CALI and Witken Awards that semester, was easily affected, and drained, do not be ashamed of your past when you are required to go through your 4th step and even if you later get paranoid and assume that's what it was, its not your fault, if you think your boyfriend read your step work, its probably something else, not your Twitter, and certainly not your friends fault if you become ill, it has more to do with your personal interactions and stability that is what makes you appear well to others following embarrassment, and by continued embarrassment, seem to justify others behavior toward you as the cause of the embarrassment, as though you are an embarrassing person or someone to be embarrassed by ... that is not the cause for my mental illness what people think of me, or a matter of people turning on people, myself included embarrassed by myself ... as being resituated among those who are not well when I am well and tired ... to the point I eventually relapse and drink and prove them right. That's not the solution to your problems, for people to be threatened by your wellness or status in life, and put you down as deserving of less than in life, when you have earned all your privileges and stripes.

Know What You Know ...

Its not necessary that you assemble thoughts for others or news stories, or stories from your past as overheard by others, which upon sharing for confirmation is how your now changes based upon what is known about you, or your vague connections. In the world of the famous and infamous, its not by who you know that matters, but by who knows you. That's the power struggle is knowing people who you do not know, and people knowing you who you do not know, and people knowing you who wish they did not know you, it is to that effect, that what you say matters, as to how others interpret you as vaguely about them or others ... don't be so insulted by the tones of others, as about you ... speaking well of self is a prerequisite to wellness, so are positive affirmations for self and for others, not to misdirect hate toward others, and not to misdirect bipolar delusions to the masses be known, as concepts that should be widely understood and accepted as truth, there are a such thing as rumors, some truth to them, and there are a such thing as fake news, and some truth to them ... but never let those truths get the best of you or how you feel about life and or trust others, always be a positive solution for your own wellness, provide yourself with insight, growing up I always kept a diary and would share photos and stories from my life, of people I met along the way and or liked, that is how I kept track of my own wellness, and it is by keeping track of your own wellness that you are made to get better, be better, and see better, with or without help from others able to achieve. And its once you feel better that you are able to be social, get noticed, stand out from a crowd, and be a positive source of light into the lives of others, otherwise no one wants to hear what you have to say when you are negative and or self harming, some of us struggle with acceptance, rejection, defamation, and mental illnesses ... these conditions are all recoverable like a drug addict or alcoholic who struggles with their mental health, these issues can be resolved. To me that is having faith, and it starts with having faith in yourself, to rise above.

Next Time Do Book Reviews on Your blog ...

You'll face a lot of moments in life, with the could've should've would'ves, been more impressive, made a better impression, or made better use of my time, then where would you be now ... don't think that way. You are always where you are supposed to be in life, if you so choose to ... sometimes we wind up places we don't want to be, and sometimes we wind up with people we are not sure of, long term, if you're not sure, that doesn't mean move on let go, cut ties, and be hostile about it, it just means be nice, however sometimes being nice has its set backs, if you were one who talked to everyone, and let everyone talk to you, then not being a picky person, drained in a good way, for those expecting more, sometimes yourself included be forgiving of others as you would expect them to be forgiving of you, we don't always read and interpret situations well, the less experience you have dating or mingling with others. Some are better able at drawing attentions and some of us wallflowers to the empowerment that comes from positive attentions. We don't all grow up with hugs and kisses, we may get feedback, but not in a nurturing tone, like a therapist, and usually corrected most when we are wrong or need fixing, sometimes to make us better than we are already well, and sometimes, we only have discussions when its time to share good news, however do not wait that long. You won't be at your best, and sometimes, you have to step out of your shell too beyond just stepping out of your shell for work or for socialization, if it requires effort sometimes its whats best for you like going to gym, running, or exercise, difficult but with practice not as difficult to do, check in with family members, boyfriends, friends, no matter how busy you get no success is worth being alone for, and no success is worth beating yourself up over if you do not achieve in life well. Everyone supports those who pick up from where they were last, not where the friendship remained last, but picking up from the best version of themselves and forgetting the rest, that doesn't mean don't learn from your mistakes, but you will arrive to a better place from which you can talk to your 5 friends, again, if you stay well, otherwise it's a burden to them burden to all to care for someone who is not self-sufficient independent on their own, able to care for self. That's being an adult, able to care for self, and by that demonstration able to care for others. We can't all be caretakers, do your best not to put too much pressure on yourselves time is precious but not that precious that you need to remedy or fix the past just be present.

Tips for People Who Self-Harm ...

4/6/2019

Its has been recommended to do the following in the event you feel like self-harming [1]:

1. Remind Yourself of Your Self-Worth
2. Keep Yourself Busy Find Something Else to Do
3. Keep Track of Your Progress and Relapses – Resist the Urge
4. Forgive Yourself – It Could Be a Symptom of Something More
5. Don't Be Afraid to Talk to People
6. Be Gracious With Your Story and Your Journey, Its Yours
7. Recovery Happens When You Learn to Trust, and Know to Stop
8. Be Strong Enough for Yourself, Don't Shut People Out
9. Relapses Can Happen, Be Kind to Yourself ... [I highly suggest reading the rest].

Do not be enthused by the self-harming of others to themselves, its irking to say the least like spikes on your back uncomfortable to hear Im sure of that and to share is equally as disappointing to the person who is trying to make a good impression upon others. If the subject interests you by all means do the research and get help, if it is too triggering for you to do the research on your own I highly suggest calling the police who can then redirect you to sources of support, or text your local crisis hotline to whatever subject interests you, I have tried NAMI [2] by text, and they were very responsive and helpful for talk therapy if needed. I think its hard to come forward if you are not feeling well, but you will become more accustomed to asking for help the more familiar you are with your limits in life, to be left alone, makes things worse, and even more painful the self-harm, feeling like you'll never return to your old self, not even a 2 hour run, can barely stop the voices from occurring but helped, but you still live with the pain and regret and embarrassment of self-harming, that is by hurting yourself, whether that gets diagnosed as for attentions from others, it usually sets one back to feeling like the point of no return, that surround sound of voices is real, stadium quality discomfort toward you ... when you've done all you can to recover and after everyone has supported you, to go backwards and self-harm is when you get left to your own devices treated as someone who is looking for attentions without legitimate problems of your own, Im not saying that Im more important than you so I would know, as a Law Student, Im just saying that no matter how unimportant you are in the grand scheme of things you are important, and that you matter [that this is not a problem limited to grunge bloggers, but there are many who suffer from ailments such as self-harm where they don't feel good about themselves, that doesn't necessarily mean that they are bad without drawing stereotypical assumptions about others, as exposed to or by interaction with drawn to these issues in life, sometimes we all get along and sometimes thats based upon likeness and sometimes just via noticeability or admiration for one another's struggles in life, be proud of yourself, whether you feel like marching about it or not 04-07-19]. I was once told that positive affirmations are helpful to be used to remind oneself, of ones importance, and no matter how low you feel, and no matter how many mistakes you have made, at the end of the day you have to live with yourself ... and if you can't do that much then you need therapy and help guiding you toward more positive thoughts about self and others, its not as bad as it can be, if you don't stay alone, upon talking to others youd be surprised how positive life gets.

4/6/2019

Just returned home from a 2 hour run, its common for me to get paranoia running by myself alone, for a long distance ... now, my condition now is not the same as it was when I was in Law School and while dating, I think most would agree that Im worse now not fit for dating, have my good days and my bad days, I think right now Im focused on finishing Law School and working to get a job, earn a wage. I have faced difficulties in the past, its mostly to do with my health, everywhere I have interviewed I have been offered a job more than half the time. I think now after having been hospitalized 8 times, things are different now, even hospitalized for 42 days on Provigil ... I think I have done my best to be compliant, you cant call the police everytime you have a fear, or to report a loud voice, or because you think people know or recognize you and that you could be famous or connected to famous people, eventually you have to let the voices settle, they mostly come from people from your past in the event you become ill or don't move forward criticize you as responsible for being alone or not successful not necessarily in anticipation but because they think that you want to go backward ... some are willing to maintain relationships with you we call these open relationships when you leave the door open after the last meeting with them, if you have gotten in trouble or hospitalized this changes your opportunities for dating and resuming relationships and or marriage, that is a result of again you are blamed for anything negative that happens to you by your choices if you relapse or drink alcohol it becomes your fault, and others are not to blame for your failures in life. It then becomes a challenge for the person to who is not empathized with and the exes who are.

motivations in life ...

Its really not anyones business for what reasons people run or who are their inspirations or motivations in life, as compared to or to made look less than as attached to. Once you reach a level of being known, you stop attaching yourself to others, as this affects your character, and by comparison, who you are, gets meshed with others around you by mention, its important to always be well received by all, and in order to be well received by all sometimes it is necessary to be independent of others. This relates to my dating life, not dating anyone, and socially in touch with friends, but moved on on both sides. Theres no particular reason why that happens certainly not by our misfortunes in life, but sometimes because we are focusing on ourselves we separate such as 2015, when I first separated from all my friends. There is no reason why this occurs, its either they think you are good and have moved on are okay, or for substance abuse reasons, or other (alcohol) you separate from friends, and sometimes this occurs by dating, when dating spending more time with boyfriends than spending time making and maintaining friendships, that's a normal part of growing up ... you don't keep all your friends in life, sometimes you do, and sometimes you don't. I think when you are well you are likely to be an inspiration to others, that is someone who can be looked upon or looked at and inspired by to be a better version of themselves, whether that's in competition with you or by noticing you ... once you fail in life it is up to you to pick up the pieces and assemble yourself. It doesn't matter who looks like who or who is like who when it comes to wellness, its not inspiration based but based upon self-care, and via influence online or whatever influences you expose yourself to in life, is what you will be influenced by. I spend the majority of my time online, on Twitter and Weebly writing, and sometimes post on Facebook. I don't think its necessary to become a public figure and create pages, and promote self as a business, as I am now just finishing Law School, able to afford the tuition, by being good, paid for. Always be understanding for what reasons others look or appear like they are taking their time in life, not everyone has funding to provide for themselves, and not everyone gets paid in life, able to provide for themselves.

We hope that at the epicenter of anything human, you find your sense of peace knowing that the other likewise cares for and has illustrated the same compassions toward others, as you would hope of anyone who speaks in front of 500+ people. Today is one of those days, welcome to mymollydoll.com, where I share my thoughts, what troubles me, and where Im going from here always ... hopefully to be better place in life, if not maintain my place in life by bettering myself everyday. It doesn't matter how big your house is, or what kind of car you drive, at the end of the day its your health that matters most, what you do day in and day out to stay well, and maintain a sense of self about you. Whenever anyone writes sometimes it is our current surroundings we draw upon as having been read or reading others, and sometimes it is our past that we draw upon as having been read or reading others, I believe that everyone has this gift in life, not just psychics, and ability to read the times and still see positive for themselves and others, without drawing negatives into themselves and without drawing negatives upon others, see the world the same no matter how trying the times become, and no matter how trying their personal struggles may be not affect the lives of others, we are so lucky to have the internet to be able to share our thoughts and feelings ... without becoming too chummy and close about it, know your spaces in life, never become too dependent on others and always be your best judge of character, we all have our bad days, some worse than others, and most of what people say is a manifestation of what they are seeing reading themselves.

4/6/2019

Process what you hear without becoming defensive to yourself, that's one example (1) of an inner struggle that occurs that may or may not cause you illness, that is thinking people are thinking something before they have thought it in anticipation of what people will think after having said what you said, you cannot later become defensive or provide defenses to anything you have said until you say something, that's the order of time, and to the benefit of the reader able to argue in retaliation to you, or argue to weaken or strengthen your tone or sense of being. Its usually when you are doing well after not having done well, that you become hyper vigilant, this is another example (2) of how you can arrive at self-harm, by thinking things are occurring that are not occurring, that's normal. That's called bipolar, when you are thinking things are happening that are not happening, or thinking that people are thinking things they are not thinking, just as you wish to be given an opportunity to be heard (one solution) (3) is to not anticipate a negative reaction from others, and then respond to that negative reaction. That's a waste of your energy (solution 2) (4) if it requires more energy than is necessary to explain yourself, and or others, then you are outside the bounds of basic logical reasoning, if you have to connect incidences occurring outside of you to your understanding (issue #1) (5) when you are connecting things that are not connected in your mind that another cause for self-harm, issuing thoughts or justifications for the thoughts of others toward you, as having something against you, and with their confidence hurt you as though for or on behalf of others, they do not know, that's (issue #2) (6) you have to fight your own battles in life, and you cannot always rely on your surroundings (issue #3) (7) just because people know you doesn't mean they respect you and just because people know you in the masses does not mean that you are out of harms way.

Summary of Arguments:

- (1) Process what you hear without becoming defensive to yourself.
- (2) After not doing well becoming hyper vigilant to others – self-harm.
- (3) Don't anticipate a negative reaction from others, as you wish to be done to you.
- (4) If it requires more energy than necessary to explain could be outside of the scope.
- (5) Don't connect incidences occurring outside of you, to your own understandings.
- (6) Don't allow others to hurt your confidences as though on behalf of others – similar.
- (7) You cannot rely on your surroundings to fight your own battles in life, sometimes.

everyone has their own science ...

4/6/2019

We all put things together differently sometimes it requires you to be defensive when it comes to sharing your thoughts. Sometimes what's difficult to say or communicate may be what's making you uncomfortable, or the writer uncomfortable. The benefit of being a reader is that you are not affected by the same things that the person writing is affected by through the sharing of their story or their personal understandings of the times. It's easier as the reader to summarize the main points and comprehend what the writer is saying, whereas the writer writes and then goes back and summarizes the key points and then writes further, some have time to go backwards and read through their own writing, others do not. As a Law Student I have time to write, however I do not have time to edit and go back, and write a summary of key points to be addressed in my writing, that's not how I write, I write logically and by what I feel and hear within me, sometimes that may match what's in the surroundings of the reader and sometimes my readings may not match up with the reader's surroundings. For the most part my following is from California as told to me by Instagram, which means one of two things, we have similar surroundings, or that our surroundings feel the same, so my writing is helpful in determining the normalcy of one's surroundings ... note it is always to the reader's discretion how to interpret the writer, on my well days and not well days, and with a grain of salt choose to listen head well wishes and advices or just listen, not all days we toot our own horns, not all days are we on point, and not all days will we have something nuanced to say, we should all do our best to be original in all our endeavors that's what keeps people moving forward is originality of thought and prose. For me my luck running out, occurs when I go backwards, that is backwards through my own life, or backwards in history, something I am not a genius at. We all have weaknesses in life ... education wise, we are not all experts in all fields, but I think with greater acceptance toward those who do write, for their own experiences and educations judge them, as whether they are articulate enough to express themselves, and whether by and how they express themselves, is of benefit to others trying to express themselves, in the positive.

categories for comfort ...

You can't really throw people into categories for comfort, or attribute their following to them being out of line or outlandish, it's actually those days that we all feel ill, not really a selling point when it comes to writing online, if you're not familiar with blogging, the best days are what bring the most following, when you are sound of mind and sound of heart, minus the personal references, or mentions. The best writing comes from the heart without personal mention of stories from one's past, without personal mention of one's story as it relates to stories in the past, as a blogger you keep an accurate timeline of your thoughts as to the present, I am unique in that I do not follow any bloggers currently so would have no idea by comparison how I am doing in relationship to how they are blogging or doing with their lives. I only maintain a Twitter Account and Two Facebook Accounts, one personal one professional. I think if you are trying to understand associations or connections we are comprised of two connections: (1) by upbringing and (2) by association. Reading is not associating to me and by reading you should not be affected by the positions I hold if ever political rarely if so. To perpetuate any cycle of violence related to politics is politicking my points of view or opinions, and arguing for the sake of arguing ... with no positive purpose intended, but to make me look like I'm politicking my ideas or beliefs, I was born into a wealthy family, who are friends with the wealthy, just because my family is wealthy does not mean that I am wealthy or that my friends are wealthy or with connections, just because of where you live or who you surround yourself with does not dictate your connections in life nor determine who is drawn to connecting to you, it is by your (1) education and (2) fitness of character that you get jobs in life, it has nothing to do with who your family is, what your name is, or who knows you. I have been applying for jobs since 2008 on a personal note, and have just started getting interviews for paid positions, in the legal profession it takes many years of clerkship in order to qualify for any paid positions in the legal field, I'm not an Attorney, Im an ABA Certified Paralegal, which means I would work under the direction of an Attorney, not by my own direction or thoughts.

welcome to california #PresidentTrump...

Whenever I find myself going into disillusionment, I remind myself of what is real, what is not real, what is an interpretation, and what is an abstract interpretation, depending on the times, these can constitute importance or unimportance when it comes to the little things we should avoid thinking about that distract us from carrying on in our days. How people make money is much to do with connecting to their audience, I do not make any money from my blog but was able to acquire 90k fans, and 600-1000+/day following, that's speaks to something, that whether I am having a good day or whether I am having a bad day, my opinion based on the times, is of value to be heard, not that I am psychic or smarter than the average person when it comes to pop culture or by connections, but because I am honest with self and others about how I am feeling, and do my best to better myself everyday. Life isn't perfect, and everyone has their faults, some of us panic, some of us stress out, and some of us are controlling, theres one thing you can't control and that is what other people think, not even as a writer can you control what the reader thinks and often in times of rebellion will disagree just for the sake of disagreeing with the author to feel smarter than, do so at your own risk, or be guided by someone who has experience overcoming suicide and bipolar, and be empowered by the presence of others around reading who are also overcoming their social ills, or things that have been causing them confusion or disorganization. It takes time to overcome mental health issues, and whether you are a fan or not of them, its okay to pass judgment upon them, as what they have to say may not always be right, as looking out from the inside, its easier to see whats going wrong from the outside looking in, its not necessary that we all be the same.

being fully supported ...

As someone who has been raised with full support, support based on wellness, is a new phase of life, many of whom are no longer here with us, those who did not listen, sober up, and get clean, the damage may have been done, but its never time to stop cleaning up your act past any failure in life, its never time to stop looking back on what you could've done better in life, no this isn't a scared straight program, just a program that those who have lost others in their lives ... may find solace in the company of others who have since gathered having had lost people in their lives, I think its important to remember, I don't think its important to keep thinking about the past, and not live for the present. As someone who separated from my family in law school to pursue a dream that never panned out, I feel a tremendous pressure on me now to button up and make the most of my life while my Fathers still around to tell me how proud he is of me, and that he is "very proud of me" I worked this past year 9-9pm 6x a week on #theLot with an OWN Building, I was so excited to be apart of watching people walk onto set, watching people get screamed at, its fun working in the Film Industry, for the brief time I was there, yes even I go screamed at too, I have issues with meds, getting tired, and taking breaks, Im sure that is something everyone who works knows about, you only get so many breaks in the day, she gave us 6 breaks and a lunch! Woohoo thank you new interns for your negotiation skills, that was helpful, she now has 50+ employees, welcome to return upon getting well, but my Mom wants me to work for her a few days a week for a couple hours, so may go ahead and do so, for pay, and attend an HR Conference with her in DC this June, I'm so excited! Meanwhile, I'm in the middle of finishing my Dissertation on page 13 of 40 pages due ... its moving along, slowly. Need to register for the course, but speaking to my Professor by email, self-paced writing, looking forward to graduating this year with a Masters in Law in Risk Management and Compliance.

Do your Best ...

4/5/2019

In spite of whatever comes between you and your future when dealing with your past, be strong in the face of it, that's when its time to face your fears and get over whatever hurdles in life are keeping you from being well and staying well. Sometimes that requires separations from others, and other times that comes with acceptance of when you're bipolar may have interfered with your ability to be present and normal around others. Not all of us are people people, and some of us when around people become drained depending on who you are and how many people you know, some are more comfortable around others than some. Always do your best to stay positive, whether you have 90k fans, who love you or 90k fans split not sure what to think of you, you mostly have to be in control of yourself, and be as normal as possible, that means not putting self down in front of others, and not making a joke of your time spent online, as those fans that have been acquired over time, have equally invested time in studying you, and watching your progress, theres no pressure in watching the progress of others, and the pressure you put on yourself, should be minimal when performing in front of others, its mostly who we are in private that we are judged by others, that means in connection to others, by conversation with others, and upon interaction with others, during those private times we are judged as well or not. Never self-harm in response to any rejections in life, or not feeling good about yourself, no matter how many voices you hear for whatever reasons, know your own health, the status of your own health, which requires that you report to the police and your attending physicians when you are not feeling well, its really not the responsibility of others, to judge you by the degree to which your thoughts fit within their scope of conservativeness, and whether your thoughts shared are conservative enough for them. Generally we expect all writings to be conservative, we are not all English Majors, but I can assure you as a Law Student I always do my best to be clear an A writer since college.

The Length of your Day ...

Depending on how busy you keep yourself, your day may seem longer or shorter. I did some research online, why does time feel so short looking back. They called this the "return trip effect." [1] Stating that, "Maybe the stress of returning to work makes a trip home from vacation seem longer; then again, maybe the mental distraction of preparing for the work week makes that same trip feel shorter." [2] No matter what you have planned for your day, any type of structure will help with the sense of disillusionment, that happens over time. According to science, time does seem to fly by as we get older. [3] One study suggests that through the passage of new information, time appears slower, and that as you get older your brain's internal clock begins to run slower. [4] Maybe this explains why I stayed in Law School, although time seems to be flying by with less monumental cornerstones in between, each failure or success, you usually rely upon accomplishments in life, as a benchmark for where you are headed, sometimes life doesn't always have time to offer us accolade, and we must create our own accolades for our self, such as keeping a calendar or having something to look back upon to keep track of our progress. As a long distance runner, I think why does it seem like such a long drive down San Vicente, but running only takes me two hours to run there and back? I used to run to Century City and back, my Ex thought I was crazy, texting me a million times on my way home, I became fascinated with time, at this moment, running long distances, its amazing how strong you are physically, you would never think so. As an ex-athlete soccer player ... I am easily drawn to physical challenges and mental challenges, some of this requires you relying on your natural talents, and some of succeeding requires learning, that's probably why I went to Law School, to challenge myself mentally and physically. If you want to slow down, you can slow down, if you want to speed up your day, you can speed up your day, it's all a matter of setting s schedule, you decide how fast you want to live life, and when you look back don't forget to be thankful for everyone along the way who has guided you, and now left to your own devices, forced to guide yourself in life, you have everything at your disposal, never give up!

Self-Care After Trauma ...

After trauma the following is recommended [1]:

1. Don't Isolate Yourself
2. Seek Professional Help
3. Join a Support Group
4. Face It (Don't Avoid It)
5. Exercise
6. Listen to Your Body
7. Stay Away From Alcohol

Reaching out to friends and family is an important phase of your recovery not to isolate. Feelings of helplessness are common, and there are many ways to get help. Speaking to a mental health expert may significantly reduce the signs of trauma following a traumatic event. Its important to find local support groups to help “give you tips on how to deal with whats happening.” [2] Sometimes alone we are less likely to find a solution to our problems, but in groups with guidance from others this may become easier. To speak to those who are well and who may not have been affected, can help steer you in the right direction thinking wise. Remind yourself that its okay to have memories, and sometimes it may be impossible to avoid being triggered, facing your feelings head on is important “in a way that helps you move forward.” [3] Its important to stay active, and add structure to your day, set a schedule, attend meetings, go to therapy, and if you havent already yet check in with loved ones. “If youre tired, its okay to rest” [4] its common to feel overwhelmed, “whatever makes you feel good, take time to treat yourself” that is self-care. [5] Its important to not to drink at this time as “drinking ... can do damage in the long run ... if the stress continues ... that could lead to mental and physical problems and long-term dependence.” [5] Why its important not to drink during times of stress and trauma. It may take time to adjust, but I hope you will be able to “re-establish a sense of normalcy and regain a sense of control over your life.” Everything is possible with help from loved ones, support groups, and mental health professionals. If you need immediate assiatnce you can get help via NAMI's HelpLine via Text:

coping with trauma ...

4/3/2019

Its important never to assume and panic, whenever disaster strikes. Think positive thoughts! Its easy to get wrapped up in news about news and assume, upon what you know think the worst of a situation, that is thinking in the negative, always think in the positive, never in alliance with the ideas of others, but in acceptance of the ideas shared. After attending an AA meeting tonight, I thought to myself, you may not agree with what everyone has to say, but at the same time what people have to say is helpful, that's all you can ask of others, is to share from the heart, and not based upon what they say think, or think about what theyre thinking as theyre saying what theyre saying, but be in acceptance of what is said without thinking too much about what is said, its not required that we memorize what people have to say, whats more important is to just listen. Its important to get help whenever you experience any type of trauma, and "depending upon the type of trauma suffered, you may begin to feel better quite quickly, with only occasional stressful relapses." [1] As an advocate its important to be stable sounding board from which others can develop similar thoughts about helping themselves, and even if we do talk about the ways in which self-harm has occurred those feelings too can be overcome, with help, and by listening to others share their stories, of overcoming trauma. However, a traditional 12 step recovery has not been recommended for those suffering from trauma, especially a rigid application of the steps, whos emphasis on spirituality, and one size fits all approach, focuses more on character defects than it does to empower a victim to a survivor. [2] Although AA is not aligned with any sect or denomination, it does however offer a space in which to share ... and at this point any support group, is more important than sitting alone with feelings, for that I am lucky to have found a space to go to today. You cannot help people alone, without education or experience, it would be next to impossible to go out into the world helping people, or providing a sound voice of reasoning, but much like a hotline redirects your thoughts toward positives, so do AA meetings for myself, hope this helps.

Like a bad day, a bipolar episode passes, you just have to learn how to weather the storm, being patient with others, including yourselves. You cannot expect to be well everyday once you get diagnosed with bipolar, I was told it becomes "daily," my UCLA Doctor told me, which requires monitoring your health, monitoring your meds, and doing your best every day that you can, to stay well. Its easy to slip up much like a drug addict or alcoholic, with your thinking by not staying on point, or having inappropriate discussions which can cause you illness, that's called a thought disorder, when you think things are happening that aren't happening. Just stay patient with yourself. After being hospitalized 8x I know very well under what conditions, I become ill, however its also important to let go of control issues, you cannot control your environment, and sometimes you may become sick to the illnesses of others, that is outside of your control. Why its best to report to your doctor or the police when youre not feeling well, that's a psychiatric condition, which can be cured with proper monitoring of your health, including your own monitoring of your health. -Its easy watching the news or tv to think that you know it all, as deals are happening, or as people get in trouble, and study stories about people, their wellness, especially as compared to your own condition, think why have these people failed, and if you were in their shoes what you would have done differently in life, to not end up where they are, that's you relating your mental health issues to those who without mental health issues, make poor decisions in life, that's not a good comparison, to try to help those who suffer from mental illness, by their own mistakes in life, sound funny, as compared to you sounding funny on an off day, be careful who you study in life. - Whenever you become obsessed with any one person or subject, think how will this affect my health, and through and by the study of others, how will I or others be affected in talking about these subjects out loud, if you have been affected by a news story that's common, if you grew up in a news story well that presents a different set of problems for you later on in life. Not everything hits you at once, and as you recover and get strong, you may later process events that have occurred in your life differently, or in the lives of others, do not become depressed to the condition of those around you, you are mostly responsible for your own condition, and by staying well, help make well others, don't get too attached to people along the way, and learn how to let go, that includes hyper focusing on details about others, hyper focusing on details about stories, and focusing instead on the positives of what life has to offer, from there you are able to gain a better perspective of the times, and yourself included without becoming distracted by negativity.

4/2/2019

Everyone has lives of their own not affecting others, problems of their own its for no one to justify a hate toward someone as related to them, become defensive to the illnesses of others, I do not therefore think its necessary for me to go to the hospital for the sake of PR, if wellness is expected of others and toward others not made better by going to the hospital but further reinforces negativity toward as not well, if a condition is not made better upon leaving the hospital but made worse, off then the slowing down of thoughts or rehabilitation of someones psyche, is not an added justification to pick someone apart as being taken off add/adhd meds and then having to explain the tone and words of someone who was put on Provigil that's really no ones business to treat someone who is doing their best and treat them as not well, be invited back to a meeting and then be criticized upon attending hear voices as though I am an unwanted intruder to a meeting and that my voice is not welcome as heard having been gone from a meeting, I do not think its therefore necessary to self-harm or be punished as not drinking or on drugs be made ill as to the repercussions of past use, behavior, and self-talk, and then as sober be treated as someone who is a drunk or self-talks ... that is not how to treat someone who did not respond well to public humiliation, and then upon disclosing of causes for illness a 28 day hospitalization further illness caused by embarrassment, attending a meeting is not for the purposes of friendship or match making but for the purposes of not isolating, isolation which causes suicide, if you put in the psyche causes for then those are the causes leaned toward just like anyone who becomes ill positive thinking is important, and especially positive thinking of others, it is not therefore justified to talk poorly of others to cause them to self-harm so that they get upset with themselves a missed gym appointment, and make it about others, an AA attendance, to cause hospitalization following self-harm before an MRI follow-up appointment tomorrow, that is not a justifiable use of force upon a person, criticism of someone well until they become unwell, I have been up since 2am I wake up at 2am everyday.

Know Your Strengths ...

Some have the power to say anything, and that someone in your life, has the power to help make you well, Im not deemed one of them "mom material." But I still blog anyways. Whether that comforts you during a time of need or worries you maybe that's why, because I'm not in a relationship, in recovery, and without children ... so be it this is my life and Im going to live it. Theres a false thinking that just because someone is hot or just because someone is well spoken that they are full of themselves, or think that by their looks they can get away with saying hurtful things about others, its usually out of jealousy that others are talked about, unless they cause worry, well that explains if ever anyone talking about me. I don't think my writing per say causes worry ... but it's the thoughts about my writing, thinking that it is too short for interpretation or too abstract for a deeper dive into the psychology of my mind ... I think sometimes you have to accept words verbatim, even the best writers are adept at this, not spilling their insides onto paper, and writing in a way that engineers positive thoughts and feelings likewise for themselves, few run on empty, and just like empty few can run on negatives, its mostly by positive thinking that one is able to put things together in a coherent way that makes sense to all, helpful, whether that's stating the obvious, never assume that what you know is obvious to all, not everyone knows you or your past or your previous associations in life, and life story -which upon sharing may make you closer to some you wish not to be close to, or some you never thought well enough to be associated to, that goes above and below you in life, be in acceptance of all you never know where you stand in between phases in life, until you get to know a room or a pecking order of A listers or D listers will you understand the concept of people thinking they are better than you, they probably are. Its not that you are unapproachable its that the terms of your dialogue online could be out of sync with whats in the best interests of people to whom they are associated to or think like. That's not competition, that's just a simple fact that people are close in groups, and that will never change, and sometimes closeness in groups is a reflection of professionalism not of over-reaching beyond the bounds of decent common forms of communications hellos and whats going on in your life, sharing. Some cannot handle being pulled under unwanted pressures in life, that is a sharing of information about yourself, that is scary for others to comprehend or visualize someone who self-harms. That's understandable. A noted now discomfort in conversation with me, and noted now unapproachability concerning my present condition. If I had just stayed sober, or just stayed well, I'm sure my life would be in a different place, but given the circumstances I think we are all just doing our best to be happy with what we have now, and who is in our life, maintain relationships, and wellness. Your own discomfort in a room is a product of your discomfort with yourself ... whether or not you are comfortable under pressure, does not dictate how a room will respond to you .. everyone is under their own pressures to stay well in life, irrespective of your own wellness, not being judged, remind yourself its not about you. Those qualified to speak are usually those who are doing well in life, on track and on point in life ... not just those popular or well spoken ... but educated well read, disciplined about their day, and not running out of time ... in a rush as having relapsed or otherwise done something wrong, put under a pressure to see what comes out of them as on foot ... made to be nervous, or to symbolize a known condition easily caused by a teaming up of standards on a persons well being as deserved or not, to search for truth to their pasts. "When youre in error its to correct your behavior and the restraints put on those who take things too far or who speak too much are sometimes corrected not coddled to discourage behavior or tones that disturb the reputations of others as connected why people separate. When you've done wrong in life or made an error in life that heavy pressure gets put on you to pull you under or make you worse off as deserved that I'm not responsible for the system of fame notoriety or wellness not something I focus on others but my own wellness share #bewell." (Twitter @mymollydoll_ 04-12-19)

March 2018 ... Quotes on Facebook

4/13/2019

Life can be painful sometimes. Mostly when we are mad or not happy with ourselves. Learn to be patient, forgiveness takes time. We will always have moments in life that get the best of us, it's how you deal with life moving forward that shows who you truly are. Don't care so much as to what other people think, you should always matter most to you. Your thoughts of yourself are what should guide you not the thoughts that others have about you.

#lesliefischman

Whatever you do don't look back. Sometimes we get nervous thinking about what we could've should've would've done or said differently from where we stand now. We are always wiser as we get older, making better decisions for ourselves. Don't be so hard on yourself. Life's not easy but it surely doesn't need to be difficult.

#lesliefischman

You won't always understand why people are the way they are. Best not to waste energy questioning others. Everyone has their own problems and insecurities. Nobody is perfect. Best not to get too involved in the problems of others and to focus on oneself.

mymollydoll.com

You can't always be a success. Not everything you set your mind to will pan out in your favor always. Sometimes you have to step back and reassess your goals in life. Plan where your headed in life and do your best to achieve in spite of your circumstances do well anyways.

mymollydoll.com

You cannot be perfect at everything but that doesn't mean don't try. We all have embarrassing moments when we're not at our best. It's how you deal with embarrassment that shows who you truly are. Don't let the opinions and judgments of others get the best of you. Always do your best to put your best foot forward.

mymollydoll.com

It's hard to stay positive when your thoughts are taking you to negative places. Why you have to always be in control of your thoughts. What matters is not only what's talked about after you write but what's thought about after you write, always keep those tertiary thoughts of interest to your own thoughts in mind. You cannot control the thoughts held by your reader you can only do your best to communicate in writing what you think best

You Will Meet a Select Few ...

You will meet a select few ... who will inspire you in life, to make a difference, make a change, or motivate you to continue doing what you are doing or find a new direction toward achieving your goals in life. We call them gatekeepers, to professions, whether they be former employers, or a business online, that makes you realize the possibilities, we are all open to being influenced by one another online why it is so important to stay positive. Fast Company argues that “when things get tough, many people turn to a motivational quote for a bit of inspiration.” [1] Noting that when “someone else believes you can achieve what you want to achieve can be a powerful incentive to try harder.” [2] Why its important to always stay positive as a business, and as a person in all your affairs. Whether your demeanor online differs from your demeanor in real life, the two worlds will collide, and eventually you’ll have to talk about what you do for a living, and if its blogging, be loud and proud about it! Its not a rich profession by any means, especially if you are blogging on your own, the background banner picture places aren’t calling your phone or emailing you, asking you to attend events, those are all things you must do on your own, it depends on how well known you want to be, and whether you deserve the kind of publicity as those who are better known than you, for their work or skill sets. Know that “Whatever the mind of man can conceive and believe, it can achieve,” by Napoleon Hill.” [3] If that's what you want in life then go out and get it!

When Rumors Get Spread ...

When rumors get spread that not only hurts the psyche of the person spoken about but also those who become defensive within as not wanting to claim responsibility for their words or actions toward others or specific individuals. When people get mentioned not by me that's not my responsibility to correct for example when someone with the same name as someone gets put on a t-shirt by BBDO, that's not my responsibility to correct that assumption made about names on t-shirts ... as being like any other t-shirt bearing a name, if anyone is offended its me that's offended hitting my head, and not that is not a product of drinking ... but then gets blamed as a product or source for drinking, I had already hit my head, by the time I had a drink ... drinking is a consequence of a symptom underlying self-harm, if so its important not to drink as it has been known to be a “depressant.” When someone self-harms (i.e. me) that is a product of my decision making poor or not, and my current life, and my future availability for success or for stability, which is mostly based upon your present condition whether you are well or whether you are not well doing well, if you do not remain sober, than the chaos erupting around you ... is a result of the chaos erupting within you ... and when you do a better job of not being affected by the psyche of others ... or defenses, then you will not be affected by their actions toward you, as though you are the offender, treated as less than. That's not the solution ... to think you have the right to put things together about people, that you do not know, and then treat them as though they are knowingly present as though looking for a similar fight, learn to move along, and not treat the newcomer, as though one is looking for a fight, and fight with them, that's not the solution, that only causes relapse, its not necessary for you to hurt someone individually so that if they self-harm, to make them appear as the wrong-doer bearing the scars of your words as spoken to them, prior to them self-harming.

Don't Be a Disappointment ...

Something you will never grow out of are expectations and the disappointment that follows, the lower your expectations of others are, the happier you'll be. Why? Whenever you expect more from someone, or expect better of them, if they're so likely to disappoint, will disappoint you, you should always expect less, of others, and allow them to defy your expectations of them, how to help others achieve who are struggling, less attention, more positive feedback, that's how to maintain an audience, or keep an audience, not to tell others what to do or think, and not to raise the expectations or highs of others who are already doing well, stability at best is the mean sought to be achieved by blogging, by sharing inner strength, not struggles with the capacity to cause relapses in judgment toward those who are now doing well, why insults cause a backwarding of the interest in moving forward to all, causes the questioning of others wellness, in relationship to what, then the negatives so follow as to a persons condition, and once the negatives are seen not only do we question others but then become affected ourselves, with those negative judgments held toward others, its in everyones best interests to think positively first of themselves, and by not comparing how they are feeling to how another is doing, we are not all the same confidence wise, and we are not all the same wellness wise, but that doesn't mean to expect the worst, that would be doing oneself a disfavor in life.

Depending on what your standards are ...

Some will be happy for you on your way up and some will be less than supportive, those who are supportive no matter to what extent they know you care, never assume that others no you outside of your interactions with them. If you go out and are not well and have not yet fully adjusted to the voices that come with blogging, whether in acceptance of you or not ... that's not your responsibility or opportunity to contest the voices, which upon cause you self-harm as responding to, or giving a voice to the voices that have harmed you, is not your responsibility to provide support back to those who think that by talking to you without permission have been supporting you ... if learned from you, then that is the reason why people chime in from time to time, as that is a lesson they have learned from you ... to say something when youre not feeling well or upon being offended always report to someone above you. Dating however does not work in the same way, once they do not want you anymore, any subsequent talking is a he said she said, battle ... with people taking sides as to who was the culprit of the failure of the relationship ... if no one thinks highly of me ... then all the more reason so for being defensive and putting myself down ... to honor their privacies as not wanting to be exposed as someone who contributed to my mental health issues, that's really going out of my way ... to make amends backwards ... at my expense, or talk to people, who people think we had more than a relationship as friends with ... if upon meeting someone once that does not mean a relationship ... and any subsequent failure of that relationship is obviously not of my doing failed. When you sober up enough ... to value yourself ... and not be so free loving ... no matter what your weight or disability you will attract positive attentions in life. It should not be about taking sides, due to a failure in a relationship, and no one should be on edge about me going out, Im allowed to go out, that's not a failure on my part not to stay home, Im 33 I deserve to go out.

How Does Loss of Faith Occur ...

Usually when you are not doing well in life a loss of faith happens to you, when either you stop performing to standards or when others deem your performance not up to standards for them to accept you. There is much to the game of acceptance ... that requires you to be focused on yourself ... not interpret whats around you ... but be a steady voice of reason first able to talk yourself through your problems, and secondly to be able to help others talk themselves through their problems. When you are not doing well ALL that power is lost, and similarly if I drink ALL that power is lost (another argument how much faith to divest per person, or upon yourself individually, depend mostly on yourself in life for guidance not lean toward peers in lost phases), that is a giving up in life, not to be commended for by anyone ... but it signals a loss of faith within yourself. Do not lose faith in yourself simply because you do not want others to lose faith in you, do not lose faith in yourself because you do not want to lose faith in your abilities to stay well and perform well, and be accepted by others, as a general rule one should always have friends, jobs, and things that they like, its not required that you share your dislikes in life, or be judgmental toward the likes of others, that's overstepping boundaries of wellness to judge the wellness of others, as well or not well based upon the actions of others, or based upon the input of others, as being responsible for those changes in communication toward individuals, as about them or about others, that's the phase we are in, always speak in your natural language and by your dialogue you carry a conversation, that's an outer dialogue not connected to your inner dialogue, everyone gets treated differently, and depending on the closeness of a person to an audience or group of people, treated differently or the same. You'll walk in some rooms a complete stranger, that's one of the beautiful discomforts that life has to offer, learn to be poised in those spaces ... and never give up mental health wise. #sober

There is No Difference ...

Its not that it makes no difference to use humor, but it makes no difference not to care, and not to say anything at all. If the repercussions of sharing causes and consequences have affected anyone in the negative for that I am sorry (the argument looked for) upon sharing a theory about Clueless (that in theory the movie was made to do away with times, and the trauma of going backwards, comedy), that's not why my hand was fractured after it hit the shower door. Do not associate my injury and upon sharing my injury of self-harm, to be affected by the death personally of someone in the movie. A movie not about my neighborhood or the people in it, but filmed in the neighborhood, to that which we were affected, so the literal sharing of how someone who passed away passed away in the shower after taking meds, is hurtful to be compared to as someone out of three most like, or someone out of all most like. That's not the solution to categorize people as types of people or to categorize people by likeness to others, and then use those comparisons, to type them as offenders, victims, or drug addicts, why its important not to study too closely the lives of people who have harmed others, as it is likely to be manifested through your own life, in how you treat others, influenced by. You cannot change your upbringing, mine was very pleasant, and you cannot change your past, my time drinking after leaving law school, what you can change is presently how you process those events, and then make certain that you are not one of them, and that you are not being categorized as someone among those who are generally abhorred by society not accepted, criminals. That is a distinction to which some are comfortable with, I'm not one of them.

Whether its Nobler in the Mind ...

You can't rush through life, and you certainly cannot rush through your past, whenever going through anything time sensitive one should be careful not to unearth old concepts that we've bypassed already, and not to cause waves where there are none, that's the peace that's underway, and the disturbance of peace, well that's mindfulness, to choose to be apart of that wellness creation or to take a back seat as a reader, that's your option in life, not to be in cohorts with anyone, not even me the writer, when it comes to thinking and thought processes. Not everything needs to feel like a hostage situation, to know when to stop. That chest tightness, is stress caused by what you're thinking not what others are thinking, and by the time you get to an AA meeting and everyone is at ease around you, then you will appreciate the wellness of others, and understand how being conservative or hippie has destroyed parts of your life, and how being open to others, has brought people into your life, all walks of life. There is a positive and a negative to this personality type ... those who are open arms to others, those who are welcoming, and those who do not wish to share the same environments with others, due to illnesses, I've been all places, and know that no such transfers occur, health wise. -Self-harm is a true illness, of giving up on ones self, and creating excuses for your behavior and thoughts. Be gentle with yourself, kind to others, and keep moving forward.

Returning to AA ... #sober

4/11/2019

People return to AA for different reasons, whether your relapsing on your own, having difficulty with medication management, or sleep, these are all reasons or symptoms not always of a greater disease that is bipolar or blogging. People need people, just like people need friends, or people need to be social, or work, or maintain professional or private lives, this can all be achieved sometimes with a support group, I attended two support groups IOP and AA, both of which have helped me move along, get jobs, and find success career wise blogging. I was able to work this year too, fancy that. You have to be a positive person to do things in life, and with positivity be able to function in life, its hard to get anything done when you are not in positive spirits or not doing well. Be circled backwards to time periods or events that have caused you or others you love trauma ... that's a learning lesson, when to stop. Its sometimes common place to take things too far in the face of trauma, that is knowingly understanding how redirecting the thoughts of self can also help others too achieve a redirection of thoughts, called a thought disorder, when you are putting things together wrong, or putting things together in a way that harms either your psyche or the psyche of others. We all are entitled to our own vision boards in life, and we are all entitled to think, imagine, and put together life as we know it not based upon how someone else sees the world, the world is a big place.

Unmentionables ...

There are certain things you do not discuss outloud, much of it having to do with your right to privacy. Everyone gets help in different ways from Attorneys, Doctors, Friends, or Companions. Those are advices given to you to help you, disassociate from whatever fears are taking place of your driving forces in life, that is your positivity. There will be some who by their negative viewpoints see you as problematic, that is their voice as through me to make them feel better. Know your place, if you cannot win in life with all, then that is no reason not to blog and not to share your two cents, to their chagrin ... by what words you choose in what references to. Do not use my platform, I built with my own two hands ... and use it as a basis for rationale or justification from your viewpoint of whats going wrong in society ... that is your negative viewpoint that society is ill or that social circles feel illness toward me, no one ever complains about me, and Im always welcome to share online, on my website, when I so choose to. Over time as a blogger and with experience you will learn that less is more, there are certain things you do not discuss, one thing I'm known for not discussing are romance, dating, and relationships, that's a subject area I am saving for later in life ... when Im at a better place in life. There are so many other things to talk about, that will bring you happiness and success in life, and that's not all to do with sex, drugs, or alcohol use, which usually brings you all three of those things in life, if you chose wisely. What is degrading is when you are on an up and doing well and someone brings you down, that's the other side to being lifted up when you are doing well, and when someone lifts you up and you are brought down further by something past, well that creates an inner struggle, and to who is attributed to your wellness, well that is your own responsibility to get well, not to the burden of others to get you well or for you to do well.

The Main Problem ...

As someone who is not perfect, the main problem is sharing to an audience that thinks less of me, and then upon self-harming letting them win "oh yeah shes not fit to write for everyone" or think "oh just what I expected ... not suited for writing to a large audience." These are things I hear people saying, not necessarily what people are saying. To be nice. Theres an inner dichotomy that chooses to keep separate posts on separate blogs of separate material, which can then be used for a book, one book. I have self-published manuscripts online, that's not a finished product, a finished product is with an editor, read before being published to all. The reason I don't talk about self-harming is because if mentioned it happens again, much like a witch can craft a stew of potions and say numerous things to invoke spirits in others, I would never do the same to myself or my audience, these are called personal battles you fight on your own in the privacy of your home, with medications, and therapy, these are hard subjects to talk about, why comedy cannot be used in blogs, and why Im not allowed to stay in my car at night and run and write ... all of which I have been punished for. You have to build tolerance for these people, you can't just pop a pill everytime someone is not pleased with you and go in the complete opposite direction of wellness to spite them. The only person youre hurting then is yourself, when you self-harm, that does no good, only further pressures them to pressure you and test your limits in life by talking to you, you have to be your own person, and not allow what others have to say to affect you especially your actions toward yourself, get affected.

By Likeness and Association ...

4/11/2019

You cannot leverage off of the successes of others, and likewise cannot leverage feelings off the wellness of others, that is not wellness, to achieve the same to surround yourself with others who are not well or be surrounded by others like you, and be treated as less than or not well. That is not acceptance ... acceptance is no matter how difficult your day is or no matter what mood youre in accepted the same, much like unconditional love works, you have to be unconditional toward yourself, in order to be loved by others. Whether that's in a relationship or in a working relationship admired and appreciated, that's for you to decide in what ways you achieve fulfillments in life. For women especially love is a huge factor in self-love, being loved by others, a companion, and to be with someone who is unconditional towards you or helpful helping you to stay on track and do well in life. That is love. Its hard to replicate anything in a different environment ... coddling is rarely a successful strategy toward maintaining relationships and often times too much coddling or compliment, can ruin relationships. There will be people in your audience who will care at differing levels, its not required to love anything that benefits you, but if you benefit from having read this and do not love me, that does not affect me, as I am loved and supported by a select few of individuals, and I do not need to go anywhere to be loved or to find love, I have love in my heart for myself, for my future, for my personal endeavors, to finish Law School, and to get a job, I have goals in life, irrespective of whether I am married, I chose to focus on Career. That's my choice.

When Opportunities Present Themselves ...

4/11/2019

Its usually when you already have something going for you in life that new opportunities arise for you in life, whether you can manage all those chances in life, determines how fulfilled you feel, whether feeling set back by losses in chances to bloom, or whether you have the ability to bloom with those new opportunities that lend themselves to you. Its all up to you how productive you want to be in life. The more effort you put into your day, the more you'll get out of each day ... much of life is about suiting up and showing up. The better you feel, the better off you'll be accomplishing youre goals in life, and the better others will feel around you. If you are ill suited or ill prepared to accomplish a task, don't beat yourself up over it, plenty of people have applied for jobs in new fields they know nothing about, I worked in film for 3 months and have never worked in film before, and was promoted to Executive Assistant. We all grow and learn at our own paces in life, my best advice would be to do what you love, and by doing what you love whether it be blogging, or law, or makeup, you will achieve the positivity required to take on more tasks in life, with greater responsibility, and get the following or trust you are working towards necessary in order to feel achieved and loved again in life, whole.

Make the Most of your time ...

Eckhart Tolle once said, "You are the universe expressing itself as human for a little while." [1] While that may be true, your universe is a shared universe with others, especially if you don't live alone and while living alone you may think youre independent of others but at the same time dependent on others for love and support. As you get older more is expected of you, an ability to finance your own life, by working, and to give back to those who have provided support to you over the years ... if this is something you struggle with you are not alone. Blogging has been my passion for years, now working on a book ... I have self-published 3 books on my own ... but that's not how to earn a living, you would think that by doing something you love you would be able to earn a wage, but that's simply not the case. There are plenty of paying jobs you have to apply for, if you are willing to give up your side gig, I would not recommend blogging to anyone who does not have financial stability. Put more years into your life, I would say would be the solution, don't overwhelm yourself, but in the time upon realizing my own mortality, due to a fire, I wrote 4 books, self-published 2 of them (on my website on lulu.com), and almost finished with Law School at Thomas Jefferson School of Law ... working on my Dissertation. When push comes to shove where are you in life, and how able are you to accomplish your goals in life, sometimes you just have to work with what you've got, and go from there. Other times you have time at your disposal, and can self-pace your daily accomplishments as you go, other days you barely have time to go to the gym, read a book, go to doctor appointments, and work on your studies and side gig as a blogger, but its all possible.

How Perfect do You Need to Be to Blog?

If you are interested in the concept of blogging and would like to blog, there are a range of opportunities for you to do so, while Weebly may not be a popular blog spot online, I know that Wordpress is, and plan to one day move my website to Wordpress. Its hard to start anything on your own, and usually with support and feedback, that helps keep you moving in a positive direction, there are a lot of opportunities to fail elsewhere, photographing yourself in compromising ways, or getting unwanted attentions from others critical of you. I have been very experimental with my blogging online over the years ... and have found when I am most at peace with myself, I get the most following, not by necessarily baring it all. It doesn't always show that you are a comfortable person, when you share personal details about your life, in fact youre more likely to upset others by sharing personal details, than you are to made seem approachable, that's not how to appear approachable. Always be yourself. Don't say anything out of discomfort either, you're likely to be read in the negative as someone who is lacking confidence or not fit for their following, how many people wish they had 800 followers and what they would write or say if they had that kind of following, we can't all be popular. Just accept when you are doing well online, and accept those moments when you're not as popular online, as it changes. Depending upon how much you share, not depth to your life, but as in how much output words you share matters, that's how to get a following. The answer to my question is ... not that perfect, without sharing details about my physicality or face, I think it's through your writing that you attract a following, not by your connections or by who you know.

Be Careful What you Mass Produce ...

4/10/2019

As a writer, working on a book ... you have to be careful what you mass produce about self, just like rumors, can cause emotional disturbance to be misunderstood or critiqued in any way, after sharing your heart with the world, why we have drafts, first drafts, and second drafts, I'm glad I did not put anything in stone yet, and have given it a year or so to marinate. I think writing a book takes time ... I had a high of 886 and 749 this week, but that doesn't always translate to a perfect week. I ran three times for 2 hours these past 4 weeks, maybe that's what did it for me, positivity wise. You have to be compliant with your medications to have a good week once you start taking meds, and that doesn't always translate to a better sense of self, there will always be things to process past about your life that you'll be unhappy with but it's mostly your responsibility to ride the highs and stay positive even when you're feeling drained or tired. Pacing yourself is so important as a writer, especially if you're writing live to your audience without editing. That's in real time how you're feeling, matching up in real time how other people are feeling, that's the beauty of blogging. Not all people are the same, and not all writers are the same, and some share more or less about themselves than others, I on the other hand am very open about myself, not as professional as I would like to appear online, but good enough for 4,317 (7 days) people this week, for that I am proud to be a writer.

And Then Relationships Went Online ...

When relationships were in real life ... those were the days, ice cream Tinder dates, and sit down dinners. Today most relationships are online, for the most part I don't think that those in healthy relationships write about relationships, but I'm one of them. If you're missing your crush or your boyfriend who never calls or texts you but on occasion, than you're in the same boat as me, waiting. You should wait for those that you love, I don't think dating is for the attached or people in open relationships, it's a one way street, some can date two but some are less than adept at controlling their feelings or emotions when attached to more than one. I think there's a heavy inner frustration to loving someone you cannot be with and then being rejected by someone you love and cannot be with. Romeo and Juliet I'm sure was not a tragedy about a messenger relationship, but it makes sense now ... loving someone you cannot be with, that's not a new phenomenon, people used to collapse at concerts upon seeing musicians they know and love. That makes sense. Today we are lucky enough to connect with those we love and admire through fan mail, not to be abused. But it almost feels like a real relationship, upon talking to a few well known names, and getting replies from them. When you're put together, let them chase you, I was raised to "let them come to you." However in today's world with texting and messenger it's too easy to mess up and be the first to talk ... or check in. I think it's a positive whenever you get to hear from someone who likes you ... hopefully it's the same for them, not an annoyance. When I get texts I feel better about myself, it's okay to check in with others, it's not okay to continue texting past the point of rejection, no you will not get an explanation about why you were rejected, but you will assume to better yourself, and if you think you're all that, get defensive. No one is at their best upon a break up, it's usually about something either you or they could be doing better, relationships aren't easy. Monogamy is hard ... being attentive and at the same time not getting jealous by the attentions that others pay to your loved one, sharing is caring. Learn how to be stable and proud of yourself with or without a partner in life, you'll be sure to lift them when you're around not bring them down.

Its starts with you, not with the reactions of others toward you as you cannot control what people think or say about you, or how they interpret you. Whether they wish to think that you are a product of your own unhappiness and negativity or whether you think that their negative reactions toward you are a product of their unhappiness and negativity with you, some balance needs to be achieved, a happy medium. What is the end goal? Peace? What is the end goal success? What does it mean to be successful? According to google.com “if your goal is to spread peace and positivity ... [then] (1) don’t take it personally, (2) stay patient and create space, and (3) be peaceful and smile. [1] In the face of negativity don’t give your power away. There are many reasons why someone could be unhappy: (1) lack of self-esteem or self-confidence (2) unhappiness with themselves or their lives (3) trauma (4) difficult situations such as financial duress, job loss, health issues etc. (5) jealousy or envy of others (6) difficulty communicating or (7) narcissism, [2] these are all explanations of why someone may be exhibiting “destructive ... [or] uncaring behavior” more commonly it can be understood that those “who manifest ... negative behaviors are showing an outward display of inward pain.” [3] We can do our best to control our public appearances, but sometimes our personal life struggles spill out into the public sphere. Whether that’s through blogging, our writing, or how we appear ... people may be more or less accepting of us, depending on how we appear to care for ourselves, and by the extent to which we care for ourselves. I think its okay to think highly of yourself, but not to the extent that it is offensive to others, your self-confidence, some have none, whether that’s a product of loss of self-esteem, or unhappiness with themselves, it is up to you to be a positive person, through it all. Don't let anyone affect you.

Today's a Different Day ...

Some of us have off days and some of us have really off days, you can’t keep up with trends you don’t follow, some days are easier than others, feeling put together in life or on trend. I just started free reading again, I was at a reading speed of 1 book in 3 days ... however now have found myself writing more, I think that’s a natural progression to go from periods of focus to periods of action ... depending on what you study or read about, similarly what you expose yourself to, is what will affect you in the future moving forward, or what will manifest itself through your inner dialogue and conversation with self and others. To which points you reach in life, and depending upon your exposures, everything influences one another, not always visible on the outside of a person, what their interests are or who they follow, or what they know, we can’t all be experts at everything. Some of us by our exposures look luckier than others, to be given opportunities to be among others, to see people who are successful and to be apart of, such as attending a Laker Game. These are just recent thoughts Ive had ... how you can hear one thing (positive or negative) and do the same as you hear (positive outcomes or negative outcomes) sometimes self-sabotaging, and sometimes if you hear things in the positive to a negative thought can correct that thinking. It all depends Ive been told on a willingness to change, adapt, and learn how to recover ... unless you are willing to change, you will not change, and unless you are willing to learn, will you learn. In recovery from any injury or self-injury or relapse, you will have days when you feel on top of the world and capable and days when you feel off, sometimes what you have to say will be helpful and other times what you have to say, will be more or less inspiring to others, #sober (04/02/17).

Support Causes that Matter to You ...

Support causes that matter to you, you never have to quit caring that's the beauty of supporting others, and there's no cost for caring, unless you make it a burden. The times are difficult, but that doesn't mean take a back seat to others in life, that's the best time to come forward, seeing is believing, and if you can't put up with where you are now, or where things are now, that's when issues get dealt with and you come to light. It can be damaging otherwise when you believe in something, and do nothing about it, it's better to do something than to do and say nothing at all, and let others carry on in a conversation or behaviors that support the wrong ideas about life. Your sense of being is based upon your comforts in life, comforts around others, and comforts processing events which otherwise don't make sense, that's the basics of trauma, understanding, and trying to understand whys, don't invest time and energy on the whys of negativity or the possibilities of negativity occurring, and always focus your time and energy on building more positives for yourself and others moving forward, that's how to keep a balance perspective and positive outlook in life. If you're not doing what you're supposed to be doing, chances are you'll feel a sense of disempowerment, set behind in life, but when you participate and stick to what your belief systems are, the more likely things will pan out for you in the positive, always do what you believe in, even when the times are hard, but never take leaps of faith with the weak, it's the strong who have built systems of support that do us best.

There's Never a Good Time to Date ...

4/25/2019

If you're waiting for the next chapter of your life to unfold, or waiting to lose another 10lbs before you get back out there, don't wait too long, and miss opportunities in life, you never know who will like you and accept you just the way we are. The tendency is to wait until you're at your best to date, rarely do we put ourselves out there broken, you're likely to face the hurdle of uncomfortable conversations about the past and where you have been not focused on where you are now. Always set goals for yourself, conversation wise, what is it that you are doing now to be the best version of yourself, and well if you're comfortable with who you are now, there is no reason why someone else should not be comfortable around you either. Life is short, but not short enough to wait. Whether you've been waiting for that special someone, or healing from a past relationship, forgiveness is key in order to move forward. You should be fully moved on by the time you start a new relationship, although it's easy to go backwards you're bound to get hurt by the same circumstances that separated you from your loved ones in the first place. You deserve someone who wants to be with you, who pays attention to you, keeps tabs on you, and genuinely enjoys your company. People are looking for someone with some direction and focus, a keeper, that is someone who is disciplined and driven in life, bound for success. We can't always be that ... pace yourself, get through your freezes in life, and if dating is one of them, you're not alone, there are plenty of people who take a sabbatical from dating to work on themselves, and if it's been several years since you've dated well maybe now's a good time to start asking yourself why you've been holding out on meeting new people. Even though "being involved with another person means hard work that doesn't always get reciprocated" that doesn't mean that all relationships will be that way, some are easier than others, if you find the right matches in life. [1] Nowadays with all these harassment standards, it's hard to meet people in your lives already, on that level, it's best to date through services in which you know whether others are single or taken, before dedicating your hearts to them.

Be the Best Version of Yourself ...

The times call for an immediately overhaul over what matters most: (1) people issues or (2) world issues. Some take precedent over personal concerns to have concern for others. Worry only gets you so far in life, how to live best? That's not how to show care by worrying for others, the best way to demonstrate that you care is by: (1) self-care (2) compassion (3) empathy and (4) being the best version of yourself. When you are trying to help others ... it's important that you are strong. Living now, I can't imagine how I was then ... given my work history, you would think that I was put together and fine, but as life will have it suffered from bipolar later on in life, everything takes adjusting to, like medications, the times. People issues, that is when you are bothered by the little things in life involving people, or yourself, those general pet peeves, and annoyances that you should otherwise be oblivious to if you are focusing on yourself, being the best version of yourself. If you are stuck worrying about others, are you being critical of them and if so why? Ask yourself for what reason am I focusing on others, and is that focus helpful to their health or my own. Sometimes a little attention goes a long way even to those in distress, or suffering from whatever mental health issues they may be going through, temporary, or for the long term, acceptance is key of others and of yourself, as time passes you'll be glad you vented to whomever you've confided in they'll more than happily be there to support you once you recover and regain your strength, self-discipline, and candor of character back, that is your self-assurance of thought i.e. confidence. Why is it that those who are confident (or confided in) are given the most respects in life, not all are heroes, some are just skilled at standing out from the crowd, and being unique to others, if we could all be special (a middle man), then there would be no jealousy over the wellness of others, stand out always in a good way, negative attentions although beneficial to some, are not beneficial to all, group conscious wise. Compassion and empathy are key, that's not simply seeing and thinking poor them but by being in action, sharing condolences, or sharing messages of strength and hope, its not just those in recovery from addictions and alcoholism that need support, but there are others too in "recovery" from specific ailments, that we as a society feel bedridden by, it can be weighing to say the least. Does anyone else feel that lift as of recently, that must be that we are recovering as a group ... that we as individuals enough of us have been doing what is right to reset the tone around us as affected, great work, and by all means root on your favorites in wellness, they are doing their best as leaders, and the times are not easy to be outspoken or think of what to say to a crowd, especially right now. Helping others is one thing, but if you yourself are not strong its okay to take a back seat and not step on anyones toes about it, if you can help help, but no one is required to help first hand during trying times, some things are best left to the experts.

I Read An Article About Messenger ...

4/24/2019

I read an article [1] about messenger suggesting that it raises anxiety levels if unwanted. Well that goes for all unwanted activities, even a text from your Mom or Ex-Boyfriend can raise anxieties. Receipt of unwanted texts from anyone else, well that's considered harassment, even if in the workplace ... why you have to be careful with (1) what you communicate and (2) who you communicate with. Non-communication is best when it comes to feelings of (1) upset or (2) liking someone, the saying goes let them come to you. However, harassment is not, if you're busy doing something else, being bothered by interruption of those activities or work productivity, some people you have to respond to, however just because someone is waiting for a response from you, no demands should press you for time in responding to them, most people are so busy with their own lives, that it would be nice if we could just all respond when we have the time, that's up for debate: (1) screen texts or (2) reply right away. I'm someone who forgets to reply if I do not reply right away, not a screener of calls or texts. -There will always be people who love you and check on you, that's not the same as fan mail sent to those you love and admire, they have an aptitude for receiving messages and letters from others, not all are abreast with. If you put yourself out there for the liking, don't be surprised when you get inquiries, you don't have to respond to most, and some will only respond given my experiences if you respond to them. Rarely, unless they're an Eminem account do they text you they miss you in between and wait on a response from you. If youre someone who responds first, that's putting yourself out there for the liking, and if you get rejected by those inquiries, well then that's just business as usual, don't take it personally, you'll find someone willing to chat with you, and never do anything youre uncomfortable with. In fact it has been found that "high-volume texters who were most stressed in their relationships were also most likely to admit to experiencing academic burnout and the lowest emotional well-being." [2] Even loss of sleep can occur "It's difficult to sleep when you're preoccupied with a text you just received, composing a response, or perhaps fretting about a text's exact meaning." [3] Much the same way bloggers obsess over what they have written ... in shorter spaces on Twitter, where each compartment is examined, rather than writing in longer prose, where you have more room to explain, that explains that. With regards to "unwanted sexting" as someone who no longer has sex, and dates primarily by phone, I would say only if the other party is willing so share your lives with them, otherwise it's a waste of time, if you are interested in dating in real life. I stopped dating 2014 ... for personal reasons, sober. There will come a time, when you no longer feel like hooking up ... and texting is a great way to talk to others, without the requirement of sex.

Setting Daily Goals ...

I'm not new to recovery ... but will have 30 days on Friday. I first got sober 2014. It takes time. Bipolar is another issue separate from addiction and drinking. I have 400-1000 followers a day, but unless I stay sober and manage my bipolar, I do not benefit from having a blog -well that benefit doesn't seem deserved if I don't keep up with what I'm supposed to be doing. I wonder can you tell the difference in my wellness, when I'm writing well -everyone has their off days. Always be thankful for the support you're given along the way, every little bit counts. You are what you advertise about yourself, be mindful that when people are listening, they could also be judging you, as they are one of the benefactors of you sharing, and have every right to be critical of you, spending their time, reading your writing. Just wanted to say thank you for following! Back to it ... I try my best to be in the now, but sometimes the past gets the best of me. I'm not sure whether that's PTSD or just plain overthinking, it's important not to diagnose oneself ... not even my meds seem to accurately describe me, mostly for sleep, and one med for daytime. Although it may seem like a lifelong battle with mental health issues, I assure you the agony of it doesn't last long, as long as you are doing what you are supposed to be doing, that is setting daily goals, not reminders of the past, and moving forward that is being present, not zoned out, fixated on what's going wrong, but focusing on what is going right, and doing what is right. I don't have any selling points memorized to provide any type of reassurances that you will overcome what's bothering you, only by my own experiences can I share strength and hope. That I hope the reader understands. I'm not perfect, and I'm not a professional advisor, yet, with an LLM that may change, with experience, job skills wise (Re: oversight abilities, learning a lot blogging, need to finish my FEMA certificate in social media, get certified), but I'm not a mental health professional (but have worked as a crisis hotline counselor in the past, and as a victim advocate for VAWA), I'm just now experienced under the care of mental health professionals, unfortunately that's not a resume builder, all that time spent healing, no one used to care how long it took you to get well, but now everyone is more sensitive to one another, given the times, one thing you can't count on is for everyone to be happy for you once you get well, you can't expect patience from people who do not know you well enough to believe in you, that would be asking too much of them. If that helps. Some days I'm the advisor, other days it looks like I'm writing to my audience for advisement, as though they can direct me in real life, but that would be asking too much, from your neighbors or those around you to follow your blog, for input, it's not something I talk about blogging. Half serious. When you're speaking to a crowd online, that's one sign bipolar is kicking in, speaking to specifics, or thinking specifics are listening and reading, it's usually the opposite, people you don't know reading your blog, or so I thought. One of the biggest pet peeves about me is posture and eye contact, something I've been corrected for over and over again ... I can't seem to muster up the confidence to stand tall, even on days when I'm proud of myself, it never seems like a perfect day to stand with my shoulders back and chest out, when is a good day for that. I don't even wear heels, It seems I've completely given up on femininity, except for makeup, but it's important not to dress like a tomboy everyday, then you've completely given up on feeling pretty, that would be regressing to third grade shopping in the boys section wearing plaid shorts and t-shirts. Just lose weight I tell myself, no one wants tree trunks for legs, I'm actually one of them, TMI you say, TMI. Why I run everyday.

When Things Are New ...

One of life's blessings is to be new to something, new to someone. However that's not always the case, once everyone knows about someone or something, then it's no longer new, and you're no longer new ... where to then. I think sometimes addiction kicks in in this way, wanting more of something, you are new to, or more or someone you are new to. The basis for addictions are not always people, places and things, but there are many substances on earth to become addicted to. For a long time running was my addiction, and when I stopped of course weight gain occurred, when put on Abilify, it takes time to get used to meds. And as you come to accept what med you get put on, you fear less the consequences of not being on meds, and who you were then, and become more accustomed to your present condition as who you are now. People change, and over time, even if you go back to places you were comfortable, they may not always bring you to a satisfied state of mind, that is you have to be in control of your own wellness, although the environment has been known to have positive healing affects on the mind and body, running everyday outside would be an abuse of that condition for wellness. Having an unbiased opinion of someone, is to be new to someone, as not knowing them past or personally able to make a judgment about them in the positive or the negative, sometimes just by looking at someone we think we can tell what's going on inside of them, be careful not to be too judgmental of others, we are not all psychics, and you cannot tell the condition of a person based upon looking at them judge them as being better now than they were then. Just because I changed my hair, skin, and clothing routine, does not mean I'm better, not to be rebellious, but I've had my share of pitfalls these past few years none of which have been pleasant states of mind or being, sometimes it did not matter what environment I was in, I could not seem to be and achieve better, that's not always a product of addictions, or of alcoholism, sometimes, we just need our alone time to dust off and recharge everyone deserves that much time to themselves in life. The more we are reminded of places we have been, when others were unhappy with us, or unhappy with ourselves, the less likely others are able to move forward in life and achieve a well state of mind and condition presently to match the norm of others around them. What people want from you are reassurances that you are well, what you cannot provide if you are not present are reassurances that you are well, because they will not believe you are well unless they see you, that condition promotes people talking about people who are not present, and that affects the wellness of the person talked about, do your best not to talk about others when they are not doing well, its not a scientifically proven fact that illness can result from bad mouthing someones condition, without them being present, but that is certainly felt walking into a room of people who have been talking about you, a quiet or discomfort, that is something that can always be changed about how people deal with others, you always talk to a middle man not speak directly to whomever you have had issues with as that may lead to further discomfort or confrontations in life undeserved as behind their back, to which you may at a later point become defensive to. Whatever you do don't self-harm over what you cannot control in life, and do a better job of being in control of your life, not try to control the environment around you or people in it.

Some Days ...

Some days go by painfully slow. Today is not one of those days. The busier you are the better off you'll be, schedule your time wisely the more you have left ahead of you the less you'll see behind you. If its progress you want, think what could you be doing now to help get you moving forward, and if it's the weight of yesterday and the past keeping you from moving forward think what it is that you could be doing better, how could you be more productive with your time. Its usually those who are successful who give advices to others, social media is a much different space, there are some who are successful via social media but who are not successful in real life, I'm not sure if I'm one of them. You have to have a lot of things going well for you in life to be considered successful and you have to be ambitious enough in life, to set goals and achieve them. I think nowadays everyone is very hard on each other, how unimpressed are people by Masters or Jobs, for some reason others expecting more from them, that could just be them listening. Never expect others to have problems, upon coming to someone with a problem, sometimes it's a place of peace others ask for help, when they've already been mended and have nothing to talk about, enjoy those moments in life, being there for others. Therefore even if you write well, they will be expecting you to have made a profit, or to have some monetary goals in mind, which prevent them from having respect for you as a writer. Not everything is done with incentive to make money, some things are done with incentive to help others, and the basis for those incentives to help others, well that's your right to privacy what motivates and drives you in life, and by what causes. Not all are successful by the same means, it usually takes money to make money, no one from scratch comes up with an idea and makes money without the investment of time and energy on the parts of those who wish too to become equally successful. Unfortunately a blog does not work the same, you can invest time and energy reading a blog, and still without hope not find success in life, while the blogger achieves success, or you can reach success and the blogger to whom you've found interest not achieve equal success in their lives. Not everyone will succeed in life, it's a competitive world, best you can do is be supportive of those who despite their deficiencies in life and disabilities do their best to be a apart of normal online, best you can ask of others, it to blend in, and well if they have helped push the boundaries for acceptance writing wise, then praise them for that too.

People Are Mostly Concerned with Themselves ...

By the time you realize you've hurt someones feelings its by that time, that they either seem like they don't care or either side is pretending not to be the culprit of those feelings being hurt. People are mostly concerned with themselves, but if you are a writer, you empathize and see all sides, and to that you respond, both from the perspective of the person to who feels threatened or harmed by you and from your own perspective as someone whos feeling have been hurt. Usually people whos feelings get hurt react and respond in ways, to dissociate from what is causing them hurt and if assumed its about whom, that is an assumption. If you have not heard from someone for the day, that does not mean that they are busy of themselves, but could be that they have had multiple appointments are tired. It takes awhile to ease back into a schedule, the busier you are the quicker time flies by. Last year was spent book writing, and this year was spent, refining my website, and finishing my books, and a Dissertation, those are my goals this year, to finish a Book and to finish my Dissertation, I am writing self-paced right now. We all process events differently and whether you speak to events that's to your understanding what makes sense for you to voice yourself or your opinions, but its not everyone's place to take part in discussions, some are not suited for the part. Be accepting of those who care, and pass less judgment upon the efforts of others to manage their time here on earth, and figure out why so critical of those who choose to blog and write. Not everything is for one cause, not everything is for one ending, and not everything is for one person, or for one type of happiness, there are multiple types of happinesses to be experienced in life not limited to endings. Sometimes just existing brings one happiness, not all are seeking many things in life, some are just happy with what they have, and if they don't fit your description of what happiness is then don't designate me a sponsor, and insult my sense of being here on earth, living as best I can suited to the times, and not be affected just like everyone else is trying to not be affected by the times, that's not something you write to but what you live by ... not by what you hear on the news, not by what people say, but by how you are educated come to be and behave.

Being Pleased with Results ...

4/17/2019

You won't always get your way in life, and its upon failures in life that you learn how to build a tough skin ... learn how to handle your losses in life, whether they be separations of people or separations of interests, you know you best, fight through the pains of defeat and fight through the pains of embarrassment, you too deserve a life free from discrimination or hardships usually placed upon those who are not doing well, not well off, or not considered a success in life by monetary gains. You choose your own battles in life, and its to that you speak ... not from whats inside that's bothering you, and not from whats outside that's bothering you, but always speak from a place that makes sense, that's always the best way forward. Addiction has a lot to do with not feeling good, and in order to feel good, using things in place of that feeling to feel good, that could be by overtalking, or by drinking, pills, or too much socialization ... all of which can be draining for an introvert ... know your speeds in life, and set limits for yourself, its not necessary that you be well liked or loved by all, but always taking into the consideration the best interests of others, when trying to do well in life, not step on the toes of others wellness. As self-identified addict, or alcoholic, its important not to put the pressures of your pains on the doorsteps of others, your problems are your problems, not the responsibility of others to quell whats going on around you ... or the voices within, and if people want to make it about another hardship they assume, well that's their problem with you judging you by voice, or how you look as someone who has no experienced trauma, and whos disabilities are not yet readily identifiable. Everyone has their own struggles they tell you in life, that people are fighting battle you know nothing about ... if you can't sit up to bat, then don't bat at all ... and if you can't handle the jokes in between ... then don't suit up and show up for the fight. If you are not well you are likely to be deemed contrary to the opinions of the masses if identified as being of ones own opinions in life, and if you are not valued as being the creator of an opinion in life, well then that's people just being too hard on you, not seeing you as original or unique. Always strive for your best, that's not addiction, that's drive, always do your best, that's not for others, but because you want to get well, and stay well, that's for others to care not just for yourself.

Addiction and Trauma ...

4/17/2019

Whenever you're feeling at a loss, its easy to slip back into old coping mechanisms, its mostly your fault if you do, and the self-harm that follows from filling those voids, well that's your responsibility to correct those behaviors, especially self-harming behaviors which are hard to correct, it all adds up. You'll think to yourself, what could I have done differently, and if so, wonder if you said something wrong. Not everyone reads your blog you have to remind yourself of that, and especially not the majority of people you encounter in life, but mostly people who know you or who know you now, collectively that can be draining ... as your primary gusto comes from being new to others, not someone people already know, its easy if known to others, to be treated differently had no one known you at all. How rare is it that we meet someone and upon meeting them check their social media. Unless directed to ... less is more, in the picture department, especially to recipients of photos, if not on a blog, messenger is a new phase of development online, new still to it. When rapport is lost its usually due to something you've done wrong ... either you as the offender to interests, or you as the self-harmer, and by doing wrong in life, self-harming, difficult to be around or to see. Always be approachable ... when you are approachable its easy to be around others, and that usually occurs when you are focused on yourself not others. -Privacy is so important not just to general discussions, but to private conversations, also not disclosing whats not in the best interests of others, which is to share conversations with others ... about conversations you've had with others, that would be doing a disservice to the rapport being built between individuals to a conversation. How does hearing what is about to be said occur, there is no predictability when it comes to the language of others, but it is by who you connect with that language is felt and based upon those communications outside of you or within you, a communication is had, and words spoken.

Chapter 12: Overcoming Fear ...

Learn from Your Mistakes ...

4/17/2019

You won't always feel apart of, especially not apart of the successes of others, and not to be compared ... assume as though every joke is on you, until you are able to provide for yourself, under the pressures that you have suffered as a result of blogging online. That's not peer pressure, that's of significance, that's being under the influence of others ... but its public pressure that a person gets put under, and that's a real pressure not to be confused with being put under by others, in a therapeutic environment. Some who are able are able to handle the types of pressures of sharing their stories, and some are in need of privacy especially during times like these, its in private that we assemble and put together ourselves, whether by private schedule kept, or a diary, where we mind our own thoughts absent minded others. There's a such thing called a right to privacy, and whether or not anyone has been given abstract permissions to dive into the private lives of others, that is not one business to budge their way into the lives of others ... by illegal means, going through the private spaces of others. We are by our conversations connected to others ... and by our conversations words chosen affected by recall, some conversations more memorable than others. Do not ruin or hurt those first impressions made upon others, as they can easily be regarded as faulty if you do not stay up to par in life. Do your best always to live a long life, a short life would be giving in to self-harm and letting them win. Do not put yourself down, do not put yourself under the influence of anything that affects your memory or ability to perform well in life ... that is be a good decision maker in private and in public, and by your words, not take offense not offend anyone with your sense of humor ... that would be putting yourself down, and then stating something to which you should be offended by but making light of circumstances past to not be offended by others. That's one way in which humor is used ... to not let them win, by putting oneself down.

That Hearty Chuckle ...

4/17/2019

Usually anything that produces a hearty chuckle, is at its core something you connect to, which your heart responds to. That's not a quality to be judged about a person, how they laugh or by their tone, be judged as asexual or not. That's really no ones business to what a person is attracted to or what terms cause laughter. The other day I self-identified as an "introvert" and laughed until I cried, at a Sponsor's response. Usually you do your steps ... with people you know ... in this case with someone I just met. I don't think that's the solution, to keep building stories upon stories, to tell a story about a person, by names or by description as told. Not all stories will be heart-warming stories, and not all women will be your perfect cookie cutter brunette, blonde, or redhead ... there are more types of women, than the fine-tuned descriptions sought after in life, just like men don't want to be described by how they look, women too, I can only imagine how I am described, lamp shade light on, I had a crying fit talking to my Father ... no comment. If its conservative you are looking for well that's hard to find nowadays, as people have loosened up with their judgments of others ... yet take more care in their appearances, it seems the more mentally ill we become the better we dress and look, funny how that happens, as a society, that shows care, I may look and feel like $hit but I don't want everyone else around me to feel that way too, that shows compassion and empathy all likeable character traits to have. When you fit the All-American model in life, you're likely to be an Ex-Football Player and Surgeon now ... my current crush ... I was trying to be perfect ... but failed to live up to my titles in life, I'm not sure whether that's ADD/ADHD or just giving up in life, just remind yourself, next lifetime at half time, not to go back out and not to relapse, to hold your head up high, not be reminded of the times you failed, but be hopeful of the moments you have left to live in life, and hope that they will bring you as much joy as you are having now If not already in a better mood having read this, you don't need people but its nice to have people around, you don't need friends, but we all need group photos.

Stay on Track ...

Whatever keeps you going in life stay on track. Whether that's by keeping a schedule and writing in your calendar everyday, going to AA meetings, or going to the gym, don't let up. The moment you let up upon gaining positive momentum, the harder you fall. To avoid such losses in momentum its important to keep moving forward. You will get back to work, you will have the energy you want, but its all a matter of discipline. I recently took two days off to rest from blogging, not by choice, my phone hasn't been working. We are told that "for every up there must be a down and that success is cyclical and beyond our control." [1] This is very true, working you get spoiled, put on a schedule, but working from home ... well that's moving to a different beat in life, especially if your bed is next to your desk, when you walk in the room after breakfast ... hit the desk not the bed. Continually improve upon your results ... somethings don't last ... but that doesn't mean there is anything wrong with you ... you can get back to work, maintain positive esteems, and don't make mistakes along the way, you'll be happy you didn't relapse and go back out, and if you do go out, watch your progress socially, as you get better, you'll notice you'll have better conversations about whats going well for you in life, than the moments when you were not doing well only talking about your problems. #staysober

Going Back to Being You ...

4/15/2019

Sometimes we feel safest in our comfort zones, and other times when our comfort zones cause us discomfort or lack of satisfaction we step outside those areas of life. The hardest part about stressing out is not allowing those stresses to carry over to other areas of your life. Whenever you return to a familiar area or group of people ... after being away, always be yourself. Its not necessary that you explain why you have been gone, or explain your world to the masses, you just have to be yourself. Whether you remember what went wrong, or why you got sick ... remember that everyone cares ... and do your best to be present in the now. Its easy to get upset and to blame others for our wellness, whether we are able to stay well, and who is at fault ... for our wellness, always take responsibility for your own wellness first and not worry about what others have done or said, especially if its not about you. The more you make things about yourself, the more likely it will be for things to be made about you. The less you include yourself ... the less others will interject themselves into your life ... wreaking havoc from within. Some interventions are for the purposes of bringing you to a better place in life, and whether you have arrived at a better place in life, be thankful for those in your life now, no matter who gets credited for your wellness later on in life. Do you best to stay humble in all your endeavors, and never seek gratification in order to get well ... you're likely to be disappointed.

Catching Up on Sleep ...

After being well rested ... one thinks clearer about themselves and what lies ahead, never make an important decision stressed out, loss of sleep is likely to bring up emotions toward self ... unhappiness, paranoia, and depression to say the least ... after a good nights rest or a long day of napping ... its easy to overcome those feelings. There are a few quotes that scare me: (1) that life is fragile or we as humans are fragile (2) "life is short," and (3) that dealing with mental health issues is "daily." Im not sure whether its fear of overcoming these difficulties in life, or just needing to change my perspective ... that's something a nap won't cure ... being tired. If you stay active and keep goal setting, that usually takes you out of a slump in life, I just lost 5 lbs recently running to the fence and back down San Vicente ... 2 hours of running/power walking ... it doesn't feel like its worth is beforehand, but afterward youre pleased with the results ... a lot of life is like that ... accomplishing something that seems like forever to get done like a painting, but if you work on a little bit each day, eventually it gets done, much like exercise or energy, being well rested is so important to your mental health ... drinking is a depressant ... not to be used to help remove thoughts, forget thoughts, forget the past, or for help with sleep, that's something you should talk to your doctor about. I just know based upon experience what happens to me when I lose sleep, everything goes haywire, and I feel like I'm going backwards in life, not moving forwards ... meetings help, but you have to undo your own paranoias at the end of the day, about life and about others, being critical of others when you are not doing well is not recommended. It just makes you look bad, usually those who are critical of others are not happy with themselves, correcting others, instead of correcting themselves, just be patient, everyone is going through something right now, the weather has been crazy, there was a fire, and theres been many losses this year, but you just have to stay strong, don't isolate and keep seeking out systems of support, to help you keep going in life.

Always Hope for the Better ...

The longer you prolong getting well, like weight loss, the worse you feel about yourself, it takes daily steps to improve self, that is ones thoughts and ones physicality ... feel well. When you have achieved confidence by the wellness of your mind, so your body follows ... with more energy to boot, improve and foster your future condition as well, by setting you in a better place, overcoming your past ... with what hurts further behind you with in place good feelings that bring you joy and satisfaction in life ... that's wellness. Maybe that sounds like a dramatic way to throw things under the rug ... but that's how to get well and stay well ... who are you now presently, do you like who you are now, do you know yourself, and how you self-identify ... well then there you have it, you are you, and upon accepting that you are you ... do you recognize what went wrong, do you understand what caused you self-harming emotions and thoughts ... well then you've made it past self-harm, and once you recognize your problem, that's the first step toward finding a solution to your problem, and once you realize that its not others the problem or with a problem with you, you begin to find yourself among again not in isolation ... out of fear of failure or disorientation, all new beginnings take time, know yourself.

When You Knowingly Make Decisions ...

When you knowingly make decisions to go back out after returning to make your amends ... that's a good day, remind yourself on days when you are tired of what life has to offer by continuing to do what you know best, not venture out into areas of life you know less about, going out and drinking ... if that's not how you grew up, and only by few positive exposures have been able to stay well, than do not blame your surroundings for when you do not achieve well that usually relinquishes them from blame upon you achieving illness in life, be made to look like the offender of interests not allowed back on the side of the well or upon your illness empathized with and treated poorly regardless of the status of your health, that's a condition that we expect no one to fall under ... but the more one builds acceptance as to their condition, the more understanding is processed through others without having to change the beliefs of others toward you, as determining your faults in life, the places you ended up ... and based upon where you are now, see you as no different, whether a law student or an employee ... still in the face of unknown adversities ... do not compare others to one another, based upon their upbringing be critical of where they are now given their opportunities in life for success, critical of when and how they have failed, without knowing any examples of those failures, how and when they have occurred, be experimental with the wellnesses of others, that causes a reversion of care, also known as a going back out, or a leaving of care ... when someone leaves the care of an otherwise supportive environment, from which they are able to thrive comfortable in that is because they are well and sober not because they are lying about the length of their wellness, or the gravity of harm they have suffered under the consequences of being named as someone in front of 93k people, who cannot be trusted, it would be wise to assume that everyone knows why you are the way you are ... serious ... one should not need to explain themselves to then again in front of others make look sick ... I'm not applying for any awards this year, have continued to work on my book ... and that's no ones business but mine.

Separating from People ...

When you're not doing well, or at fault, or if something has gone wrong its easy to become separated from others, not necessarily to feel a separation from others, just because people are alone, does not mean there is something wrong with them, or that there is something defective about them, some spend more time alone working on themselves in order to be around others, out of pride ... and by that pride sacrifice time out with friends, to focus on their studies, some hit this phase in life at different times than others, there will always be night life, and there will always be people to make friends with but what you can't replace is the moment, and in those moments how you are remembered by others, whether in wellness or sickness ... judged. Over time relationships change ... given this its always nice to be kind to both sides of any equation upon a parting of interests or wellness ... some are not well enough to date, and because of their deficiencies in life cannot date, that is not because someone is not good enough for them that they need to rise above (me) thats not leaving to find better, that's leaving to do better, and when someone is alone ... that's to better themselves not better others at their own expense, never for those reasons do people give or receive love ... for wellness, its usually to those we already love and admire, and wish to empower at our own discretion and energies empower, empowerment has much to do with love not affection, admiration, not sickness, wellness, and strength, not over focus on weaknesses, or popularities. You get to pick who you want to empower in life, by who you give love to (i.e. yellow) and by giving love to someone who knows and adores you, love is given and received ... in a way that can be appreciated overtime, by someone who is doing well in life, knows how to give love not someone who is not well (i.e. me). You can be given insights in life and information upon which to make inferences in life, those are your own deductions, what information you pull from the information given is your choice.

It's Mostly Maturity Thats Asked of You ...

4/13/2019

During times of need its mostly maturity that is asked of you, whether or not immature responses are deemed as a show of disrespect of appearing as though one thinks that they are above others, it could just be that someone is going through something very heavy right now and needs to be alone, its usually those who are in the middle of something working on something that is late to appointments or fails to appear for appointments, and its based upon those disappointments of people who are close to individuals, that that disappointment gets passed back to you, as feeling down. Do your best to schedule your time, but don't take on more commitments than you can handle, during times of need its best to trust someone who is superior to you, in wellness, for guidance in order to get well and stay well. There was disappointment surrounding my first book, because after working on it for years and then typing it for months, and paying for an editor, I shared the first manuscript complete with a woman who is a mother figure close to my Father in New York ... not because her Husband interviewed The Prime Minister of Israel, Netanyahu. My Family is a member of AFHU American Friends of the Hebrew University, I attended 2010, with my Father. We sat in the front row table next to the Dodgers Divorcee and Arnold Schwarzenegger who arrived late in cowboy boots. –“Eventually you get old enough to not be sheltered by other or by exposures responsible for processing your own discomforts in life your family cannot go rogue with you when you plan to leave reality and go to hell with the dinosaurs but you can do your best to value a privileged life.” (Written via Twitter 04-13-19). From the Moment you Snap Youre in the wrong ...

5/3/2019

From the moment you snap youre in the wrong, its actually worse than getting the wrong pair of Nikes, only realizing after theyre a size too big and match no one else's cool pair. They're just weird, unique does not always mean catchy, and eye popping does not always mean cool. It was a learning experience to say the least, late to the trend, and still not on trend. That's okay. I donated my Sketchers that were too big, that's a lie, the blue bin goes to no one, maybe the claw will separate these shoes and place them in the to homeless shelter bin ... isn't that how recycling works, by magnet or claw, I've never seen where the trash trucks go, except leaving Boulder, they all park somewhere like the buses by the homeless shelter in Santa Monica, I used to volunteer there, making sandwiches, by ticket only or ID, and helped organize their closet, and passed out shampoos and bar soaps to the women at the womens shelter, and helped pass out food, we cooked. They actually get mail, I sorted it. When you realize everything you have, nothing more will usually make you feel better, if youre awake to live life, live life, there is nothing more than being awake that is necessary to live life ... if you want to narrow down your hierarchy of physical needs, to whats most important, it all starts with being awake, present. If you cannot appreciate that much to life, then you are expecting too much of yourself and others, regarding their health, faster is not always better, its by how alert you are, not just proven past, but by how you perform, and once you fail at that, well then that's just cause for not meeting your marks in life. New meds are not always the solution to a better work life ... accept help from others, but never blame backwards for your hardships that usually leads you nowhere. Some relationships cannot be repaired, and for everything else that's your responsibility to correct about yourself, what is left of you, having those people and experiences past, absent from your mind. There are many unpleasant experiences in life, none more trying than embarrassment, there should be no group acceptances over a poor past as expected of you now, usually you forget the past, and accept where people are now, but you cannot expect everyone to take you seriously in life, especially your blogging, however controversial you may seem, if you've done your best to look out for others, than you have done your best to get along well with others, don't expect more than for others to be focused on themselves, everyone worries, be one less to worry about.

Don't Isolate ...

5/3/2019

No matter how big or small your problems are, don't isolate, the kick to leaving captivity hurts ... to accept your reality, and blend in with the comfort of those around you, who usually seem more comfortable with themselves than you do in your own skin. You are you and that will not change, so long as you accept the time that has passed, the missed opportunities in life, failures, and present yourself as best you can, that's all that you can expect from others, its not forgiveness for the time that has passed adjust, but it is forgiveness of self that comes first, when overcoming any hurdles in life, that when not at your best you did not succeed or excel as expected, we can't all be the best at everything, although we may try. That's not being competitive and in replace of standing jealously ... that's just not making the cut socially, and that will take time, social hierarchies are based upon wellness, and your own wellness and earned surroundings will dictate what opportunities are then made available in life for you to move forward and start anew, you can't always start a new life, not everyone can afford to replace what has been used, get something new, or move or change their surroundings in life. You can't expect change everytime you are unhappy in life, you cannot replace people from your past, and expect things to turn out differently for you at the present or in the future if you keep making the same mistakes in life, or by choices relive the same. That's not PTSD, that's just not allowing yourself time to heal, not recognizing your won self-worth, and failing to raise your standards of care for self, that comes first before anything else worth while, you may want better in life, but you cannot achieve a better life, or a better state of wellness unless you try that doesn't always involve pushing yourself to raise your own standards or bar of wellness, that's just recognizing what needs work sometimes and working on those areas in life. That doesn't require much expertise, to read how you are feeling and getting the help you need, to resolve what it is that is bothering you, people cannot solve your problems, unless you are vocal about whats bothering you, don't expect people to be able to tell what is wrong, that's your responsibility to ask for help always when help is needed, nothing is given in life, not even help. When you put yourself forward, there will always be a sense of putting yourself at risk of harm, that is being misread, fear less about people trying to diagnose you, or make you the center of any jokes or unwanted attentions, and do your best to rise above, the illnesses of others, not accepting what is off, as of your own making, but of their own making, that's not your responsibility to correct the thinking of others, acceptance goes a long way, reciprocity wise. Good health is not on a person to person basis, its daily, what you do daily to help yourself, you cannot avoid all illnesses in life, the body heals itself, to maintain faith, always have a positive outlook in life, and share those viewpoints ... not how you thought past, be present to stay well, be present to get better, be present to manage your health daily, be present because living for now is more important that reliving the past, be present because you are worth it, you are worth the time and effort to help you, and because you deserve to get well and be well stay well. All of which cannot happen unless, you forget what is bothering you, and replace those thoughts with new thoughts, thoughts about self help, recovering from illnesses, and moving forward with life. If you don't help yourself now, when will you start, then expect less.

Overcoming Anxieties About the Future ...

Before things fall into place, its easy to feel anxious about where your going and where you've been in life, worried what people will think, or what people have thought of you, and keep moving forward life. Don't beat yourself up over the past, whats gone is gone, time lost, best you can do is make the most of the time you have now, and the years you have left to live life. No one has an easy life, everyone faces difficulties, feeling accepted, and feeling good enough in life, we all have insecurities in life, whats most important. Discussion of the past is only helpful when trying to move forward and processing what you've done wrong or could have done better in life. But processing the past is best done with a working professional, who specializes in what is ailing you, not just anyone, and especially not with boyfriends, they'll be less than understanding of you, mistake your hyperness for mental illness, or your depression for thoughts of suicide, how much positive energy is required to be around others, and to speak candidly about yourself, without being discriminated based upon who you are in life, your upbringing, or where you've been, how long does it take to overcome feelings of self-harm, and where does recovery start? All recovery starts with an admission, in order to begin any stages of the recovery process, one is required to admit they have a problem and what with. Its easy to jump from one addiction to the next, replacing old needs, with new problems, and it still will all add up and send you back to the same position in life, admission of your illness and or addictions in life. How you get judged by others for your addictions, depends on who you are some forgiven some not, based upon your experiences in life, who you know, and work experiences. Sure love will keep you afloat, thinking beyond yourself, about someone else, but no obsessions in life are healthy obsessions, not of your own thoughts, and especially not of the thoughts of others, that you'll have to learn to let go of in life, fears of what people think.

Growing Pains ...

5/30/2019

Its easy to get wrapped up in your problems and miss out on a lot in life, too focused on yourself, bettering yourself, there are limits to how hard you need to try in life to feel successful, and fulfilled. Everyone needs their alone time, but how much alone time is too much time alone? If you want to meet Mr. Right we are told to work on ourselves, or that we're not ready yet ... watching the years go by, you have to maintain a steady faith, that as you put your life together, opportunities in life will avail themselves to you to meet new people, date again, and find your matches in life. You'll meet someone through work, definitely not the place to go looking for love, or to become too attached to anyone in your immediate surroundings socially unless, you know them, know your worth, don't be too difficult that you make others feel small, but always have enough confidence to walk away from situations that are not doing you any good in life, that is doing things to feel good or look good, chances are if you spend too much time alone bettering yourself, reintegrating will not be easy for you, although you feel good, that time away creates a void of time missed being around others, that is the sacrifice you make when you choose yourself, over spending time with others, that's your choice, whats more important excelling at personal goals in life, or helping others to achieve the same, by being around them, its hard to feel good on your own without the company of others, you always wonder what life could've been like if you just stopped to smell the roses every once in awhile, not darting out from home to home, busy studying, if you need to be alone to focus, then its time to rethink your abilities in life, you have to be able to leave a situation and enter another situation center of focus in order to be successful in life, you wont always have to choice of focusing on one thing at a time, that tired feeling in between is just an adjustment phase, figure out how you work best, its worth the time in between foggy, that simply means youre not where you want to be in life, however you wont get to anywhere in life if you don't feel good about the quality of time spent on self and around others, that time must be balanced.

Get the Ball Rolling ...

Whether it's a new project, or a career move, get moving, the longer you wait, the harder it becomes to start over in life, or to get finished. Everybody leaves and comes back to assignments in life, that's normal, while multi-tasking. Book writing, dissertation, job apps, in what order all depends on your energy level and wellness, and when push comes to shove, starting even when you don't feel completely ready, sometimes, you'll never be ready unless you try and get going again in the first place. Don't leave gaps in your resume, self-care is important, but no more than a few months to 6 months rest in between jobs, you have to keep going, and if you choose to stay in school and work, then make sure you set your priorities right, otherwise you end up unhappy with poor time management skills and nothing gets done on time and life slowly stops turning out the way you wanted it to be and you start feeling behind in life. Always maintain a positive attitude, do not resent others for your failures in life, or for times when you felt misdirected in life or lost, you are always responsible for your outlook in life, no one can change your thoughts except you, it doesn't matter sometimes what meds your on, if you can't stay positive its hard to make anything turn out right for you in life. Mental health is not a new trendy concept ... its something we have to deal with on a daily basis, that is our own wellness, and sometimes by putting our needs before others, that doesn't mean don't think of others before yourself, and be a selfless decision maker, if the needs of others are paramount to your own needs, then be centered in that way, everybody is different, some more or less selfish than others, when it comes to their own personal health and setting boundaries for themselves, it takes a certain degree of acceptance to be treated as an equal in life, don't expect that much from anyone, everyone is at best doing their best to represent themselves, their posture and tone may have nothing to do with you and everything to do with themselves, the image they are trying to portray, not to you specifically, to generate a response from you, don't read into things too much. Your future awaits you, and your potential is limitless so long as you don't forget where you come from, and what brought you to this place in life ... where you stand now could be different in 6 months to a year, pick and choose your battles wisely, and never fight with the past, it rarely leaves you feeling good, usually worse off in life, be mature, have a sense of humor, but not at the expense of having some self-respect.

Build an Umbrella ...

5/26/2019

You can't build an umbrella campaign, and use figures in life, to represent sides, or to add or take away from sides, and you certainly cannot marginalize people in life based upon their attachments. It seems as though as soon as you recognize fears do fears play a role in your life, and interfere with your social skills. The bigger you think you are, the more difficult it may be to adapt to your surroundings or feel like you can relate to others, on a basic interpersonal level, its easy to be judged when you are overcompensating for mental health issues, as unfit not given the benefit of the doubt, having overcome mental health issues, what doesn't lift you don't enable to allow you to fall. Why some people are not incorporated into the lives of others, we have the power of choice in life, who we surround ourselves with, that is the privileged, everyone else, who has no choice but to fit in, should do so naturally, blend in. When difficult questions are asked of you, don't become frustrated or slow down your trains of thoughts, always explain with your best interests, its okay to be defensive, you are in control always of how you respond, whether or not the conversation is being guided by another, always stay positive about self and others, you at the end of the day must argue from your perspective, and if an argument is looked for, always end things on a positive note. If youre being interviewed, and have suffered in the past, you will be asked to explain yourself, you don't have to talk about yourself, in a way that scares people away from hiring you, if youre not ready to work, youre not ready to work, but don't give up and file for social security disability, you just need to find placement, and start somewhere. Disability does not have to be a life long process of negative turns in life, if you stay sober, and do your best, work, and go to school, you can live life on a part time basis, managing your mental health issues, and if no one believes in you, then maybe its not your time, maybe youre not ready to work, part time or full time yet, just work the hours you are able to work, and take it from there, you cant push yourself to burn out, take your time in life, pace yourself, theres no need to rush getting well, because once you get well you have to stay well, and pressure when well or suffering, can be overconsuming at times, don't have a defeative attitude in life. You are as capable as you believe in yourself to be, always have faith in yourself, you cannot listen to others who put you down in life, and obsess over negative opinions about you or others, that only leads you down one road: illness. If youre not able youre not able, you don't have to explain yourself, we are only capable of doing what we are prepared to do in life, some able to take on challenges in life, but you certainly wont get far in life, self-harming, no one wants to hire a pity party or charity case, always be honest.

The More You Share ...

5/25/2019

Better to be information packed, than say nothing at all, it depends on whether you want to be abstract left up for interpretation or specific. How much do you want to help others, through social media. Things to keep in mind:

1. If the more you share, the worse you feel, share less.
2. If you share a lot per share, then share a few, limit yourself daily.
3. Are you telling a story, if so, keep up with your theme.
4. Who follows you, follow, how to build rapport with your audience.
5. Be yourself, if you have to do anything for attention, youre trying too hard.
6. Don't forget to hashtag, but don't overpromote yourself, and lose followers.
7. Keep up with the quality of your content, even if you begin to slack.
8. Don't be competitive, everyone shares at their own pace in life.

There are no experts when it comes to social media, some have more experience than others, comfort wise sharing in public, its not for everyone, some prefer to have private accounts, and share only among close friends, not make new friends online, there is however a growing population of people with public accounts, Im new, and one of them. Its hard to go backwards and share your life up to date, it gets depressing, but just share from where you are now, is whats best, its not necessary that you share a timeline of your whole life, just share what speaks to who you are now, always present the most positive version of yourself, and leave the rest up to your audience to interpret, your growth, your potential, and your progress, otherwise you should be focused on doing your best, not slacking image wise, if youre online, be professional, the more tidy you are, the easier you are to follow, read, and be around.

Let the Dust Settle ...

5/24/2019

Let the dust settle, you can't rush into anything new in life, if you don't have a steady hand yourself at life. Everything in life requires balance, if you are not balanced individually makes it difficult for you to be there for others, let alone start a new relationship that requires you to care for someone other than yourself. Its never too late to pick up a new hobby, start a new job, lose some weight, and if you think of all these things upon meeting someone, the better. What are your motivations in life, love? Success? Matrimony? Well you can't have it all, unless you are willing to handle your past, if you can't discuss that much, well then youre not ready to move forward, theres no beating around the bush about it, you either are able to own up to your faults in lfie, and handle your business like an adult, or you shy away from your problems, poor me-ing until no one is left around you to support you, don't be one of those people. Its hard to get going again in life, its hard to start dating again, finish a masters, or get back in touch with old friends, self-harming is not the solution nor is using drugs or alcohol, that's not the solution to handling your problems, regressing, or not taking life seriously. If you can't take yourself seriously, don't expect anyone else to take you seriously either. Everyone wants respect, and a career they can be proud of, if youre not happy with where you are, its better to start somewhere, than to stay home and do nothing at all. If you blog, blog with pride, and by all means put it on your resume, its something to be proud of being a writer, even if you don't get paid for it, it shows hard work, and discipline, and ability, to generate a following, maintain an audience, and shows some maturity and leadership skills on your part to take the initiative and put yourself out there to be read by others, self-publishing on your own. These are big steps in the writing world, writing, then sharing your finished products, without fear of rejection, criticism ... that takes courage. Whatever your motivations in life are, I wouldn't say to always put yourself first, but put what matters to your most, first, and all else should fall into place based upon what your focuses are in life, and if its you, find yourself before finding others. No one can fix you but you, and if you expect that, then its time to have a more positive attitude in life. Nothing gets handed to you and everythings hard work.

Don't Ruin Your Progress ...

Its not a bad life, living with mental health issues, it's a matter of recognizing your progress, and knowing that even when well, not all days will be good days, like everyone you will always have your bad and good days. Are you doing what you're supposed to be doing? Are you communicating too much from you? Are you doing more than you are thinking? We can be good at some things and not good at all things, never make your problems or deficiencies of issue to others, you will likely be judged in the negative for your insecurities in life, not everyone can buffer you, your wellness, everyone has their own issues, just be understanding of the wishes of others, and be sure to set boundaries for yourself too. If enough boundaries are set, think why is this happening to me, and what could I be doing better. Sometimes it has nothing to do with you, sometimes it has everything to do with you. Who is your support group? Should you be sharing all that information with them? I wonder sometimes is everyone on your side in life, and what causes one to think that self-sabatoge is espionage or someone interfering with someones ability to function or be happy in life. The more you focus on yourself, and the less you focus on what others are doing and thinking the better you'll feel while in recovery ... it's a process: forgiveness. You can't expect change to happen overnight, or for the opinions of others to change about you, people will always test your boundaries in life ... its all a matter of not enabling others to get under your skin control you or how you feel about yourself, no one can babysit you in life, until you feel better again, that's self-care learning how to fix oneself without the need of others to help them, as an adult you should know, what's working for you, and what needs work, not everyone will be able to identify what's wrong with you, that's not their job to pick you apart, or for you to pick yourself apart in front of others.

Reflecting ...

5/19/2019

These past few years have been very tumultuous in the news, and besides trying to figure life out, has probably been a challenging few years for everyone, not just myself. There are personal problems and there are world problems, don't therefore make the problems of others your problem, react less, listen more in those cases you're likely to learn something new, without holding an opinion yourself about things. Sometimes while learning or listening to others share their opinions we have thoughts of our own, not as directly related, but helps to put into words, what cannot otherwise be stated. That's always a problem. Especially difficult concepts such as death. You would never think that someone who is a self-help writer online has a history of self-harming, that doesn't make sense at all, to present oneself as stable and then go backwards in life hurting oneself, by whatever means are available ... that's addiction, whether its alcohol, men, or drugs You choose your poison in life, allow things to happen in your life, that benefit you, not hurt you. That doesn't make one a hypocrite to do one thing and say another, that's just not following through with your own advices in life, its easier to help others than to help oneself, I don't think I'm the only one with this problem. Going back to work presents its challenges, given my history, I've acquired enough sober time over the years, to be a better decision maker, I got sober 2014, and stopped dating and stopped working. That's not the solution cessation of all activities that present risks of heartache and rejection, that's life, life is difficult in that way, not everyone will like you, you will not be included in everyones life, the world is a big place, and youre lucky for the time you get to spend in spaces with others, just be happy to be apart of in those moments in time, the rest will follow, if you stay diligent in your efforts to better yourself, so that you can be surrounded by good people in life. Mental health issues don't just go away with meds, you have to respect yourself enough to value your wellness, and keep doing what youre doing to stay well, whether its writing, or working, maintaining some disciplined schedule that keeps you going in life. You can't always make people your life forces in life, to help keep you motivated and going in life, sometimes you have to rely on yourself, what to do in the event you feel like self-harming and not doing so, its not selfish on the part of the harmer, its not that they don't care about others, its more that they don't care about themselves, being where they are in life or based upon where they have been in life, not happy with themselves now. Best to do things that make you happy in life, and steer clear of things that bring your esteem down ... those with the highest self-esteem value themselves, value others, and maintain a positive outlook in spite of their pasts, strong.

Chapter 18: Blogging (v2) Book Draft ...

Obsess Less ...

5/17/2019

Obsess less, if you want things to go your way in life, focusing all your attentions on one person ... won't make them like you more, or want to be around you more. The opposite usually occurs, people are attracted to those who are busy focused on themselves, that's the best way to attract a mate in life, have something going for you in life, without putting all the pressure on them to tie your shoes for you. Love comes and it goes ... its not something required for happiness, but it is something we all deserve to experience once in our lives. What is it that you want in life, and do you want things for the right reasons, what is your purpose in life. To be loved? To work, have a career? To be well known? To write share your mind? People blog for different reasons, not always for good reasons, self-accolade can only get you so far in life, especially without a paycheck. Sure everybody knows you, knows your pen name, but how much do you really matter to the lives of others. Having meaningful relationships is what makes you whole, not how many people you connect with or by how many likes you get along the way. Value yourself, and by all means when you find someone you really like, put all your eggs in one basket, even if it means ignoring your Eminem pen pal on messenger. Eventually you have to face reality ... and date in real life. It requires being put together, its hard to go places in life, or be out in public without a job, its like having nothing to wear, or talk about, don't be a bore. Everyones always excited to be around successful people, its like theres an air in the room, that lights everyone up. Be that person, able, lit up and positive, that doesn't require medications trust me, a lot of cardio and face cream, youre energy is determined by not only how well you perform in life, but how well you light up to others ... your aura is based on how well you feel on the inside, and it shows when your well to others ... aging is a process, but you don't have to beat yourself up over time that's been lost focused on the wrong things in life, or the wrong people, if you want to wait 6 years, wait to date, if you still don't have yourself put together by that time, then you should really question how productive youre being meeting your goals Are you staying sober? Are you taking your meds as directed? Are you going to bed at a reasonable hour, all of that matters as to your energy. Always talk to your Doctor ... depression comes and it goes, if you can overcome those hardships mental health wise, then youre that much closer to living a better life, working, and not filing for disability, giving up.

Never Give Up ...

Whatever's going right in your life, keep at it, the past is past and you can only move forward. You will always remember the times when you were at your lowest, when you start to get better, feel better, recognize what you've been through, but don't let your experiences in life weigh you down. Channel your energy toward the positives, think whats going well for you in life? What could you be doing a better job of? How can you be more proactive and a functioning member of society? Are you allowing depression to get the best of you, never allow your feelings to interfere with your actions, that goes for maintaining positive momentum in life. We all take pauses and breaks in life, that's allowable, but don't wait too long before you get back on your feet. So long as you learn from your mistakes, others we hope will be understanding of the pressures you are currently under, to stay steady. The better off you are, work wise, the better off you'll be relationship wise, it turns out that the best way to maintain positive rapport with others, comes from being happy with oneself. Unless you are happy with where you are and who you are, it may make it difficult to connect well with others. You are responsible for how you feel, don't let anyone make you feel less than capable of achieving your goals in life, you cannot expect everyone to believe in you. What you put first, and make a priority, well that's what you'll get out of life, and make the most progress in. You can't do everything at once, take your time, manage your time wisely, and let your success make the noise, they always say. You don't need to announce every milestone, on social media, or get kudos for every job well done, sometimes, you have to keep your head down, and just keep going in life. The best advice Ive ever been given is to be reminded that Im a "good person," worth it, "noted for my honesty," and "one of the great ones." Allow change to happen on its own timing, you may not change overnight, but others will be glad to see you doing better, usually first to notice when you are doing well in life, just stay "focused on yourself."

It's Not a Benefit to Blog ...

Its not to your advantage to be a blogger, most people reading, can size you up in 2 seconds, able to tell where you're at mentally, whereas the writer takes years if not months, to change direction in thought, and persevere through whatever difficulties and challenges they may face on a day to day basis. When there is no overall acceptance of you, what to do then? Should you allow others who do not believe in you, or the few who have rejected you determine your fate and direction in life, or should you be led by your dreams? If self-esteem is whats at issue, then don't allow your failures, to determine your successes in life, don't even make those experiences apart of you, and just forget about what it is that's bothering you, and be happy with where you are now and who you are now. Don't get all worked up about the past, or things that don't seem right, or about things in life that didn't quite work out for you. You are always in control of how you process events in your life, process interactions with others, and process where you are now, and where you are headed in life, if you're not ready to live life as best you can, it's okay to take time to work on yourself, to get to where you need to be mentally to be around others, perform well, work again, date again, and live a high functioning lifestyle again. Until then it's best to focus on weight loss if it's weightless, mental health if it's mental health, and not put too much pressure on yourself, as others are likely to feel the weight of the pressures you are under, when deciding whether to incorporate you into their lives, if you cannot add to the positivity, and carry any extra weight or hint of negativity you are likely not to match up with others, if not few, who are stable enough to be around you, or be forgiving of your past, and accept where you are now in your life. If you have worked hard and an inspiration to yourself, then let those positives be known about you, and don't harp on the negatives, if you have overcome incredible obstacles in life, in regards to your mental health, then focus on what you have gotten done, not on how much life you've missed out on trying to get well and stay well, or think too much about how much time has passed since the last time you were well, focus too much on the time in between when you were not happy with yourself or excelling in life. There will be highs and lows in life, it's all a matter of staying well and if you need to stay sober, then stay sober, never give up and go backwards not over anyone or anything in life. Put yourself first, make yourself a priority, and the rest will fall into place. Don't worry too much what people are thinking along the way, about you or about what you look like, if you are doing your best and confident then let no one's negative judgments of you, keep you from being happy or achieving in life, there's more to life than dating and body image, just be happy and live life, if no one picked you at 123 lbs, it's no surprise if not one picks you at 183 lbs. That just means there is something wrong with how people pick, and does not mean that there is something wrong with you, if the person you like is not picking you back, just move on.

As an athlete you are brought up to always have good sportsmanship ... the same rules apply to dating. Never get frustrated with where you're at dating wise, no matter how far along you are, the more space the better, let them come to you. Similarly weight-loss works the same way, don't get frustrated ... much the same way rejection hurts, when you fall behind in your goals in life body image wise, it can be equally hurtful and damaging to your self-esteem, make sure when you weigh in you are in a good space mentally, able to withstand and tolerate minor fluctuations to your weight. It's all about how you feel at the end of the day. You cannot always respond to others the same way you respond to yourself, it's okay to be hard on yourself it's not okay to be hard on others. That's not how to get your way in life, it usually turns people off, the more eager you are, or the less able you are, the less likely you are to get the kind of acceptance you are looking for in life. Don't let everything add up on you, you are a product of your own happinesses in life, don't make your unhappiness the unhappiness of others, take out your frustrations on what others should be doing for you, what you can otherwise be doing for yourself, to bring yourself happiness in life. It's not up to others to make you happy, they cannot fix or change you if you are not mentally stable or fit for dating and work. If you need to lose weight lose weight, if you cannot lose the weight on your own, hire a trainer, if you can cut back on meds, do so, and always be sure to maintain a positive attitude in life. That's the biggest part necessary for achieving, is staying positive, without a positive attitude you are less likely to end up places you want to be in life, and be around people who love you, or find ones that's do. To prove yourself, or others wrong, always rise above, newer and better opportunities, trust will avail themselves to you, if you keep working on yourself, and trying to be the best version of yourself, will find someone who loves you anyways, despite your weight, despite your disabilities, and despite your past, accept you as you are, and love you the same.

Don't Be a Hero ... #stopbullying

Your motivations in life should never be self-serving, unless to improve upon your best. Always put the needs of others before your own, is how I was raised. To come second to the needs of those around you, not to be selfish. With addictions, you are told that because of selfish reasons, you have turned to drugs or alcohol as a means for coping, sometimes we are responsible for that suffering that caused us to drink or do drugs and some times we are not responsible for that suffering. The longer you get left behind in life, the sooner you should move on dating wise, that's the trick to now allowing others to convince people by your personal history that you are the defective one or that there was something wrong with you why a relationship did not work out. People from your past should mostly be supportive of you and if they are not, then move on in life, don't allow others to allow you to get left behind in life, convinced otherwise that you are not deserving of being well and doing well in life too. Whenever there is discussion about relationships, are the hardest talks for me, self-harm wise, easily empathizing with both sides, the sides of my ex, as well as being defensive to my own mental health needs to be alone, or to be able to move forward in life not be brought down by tertiary issues, as to why a match was not perfect, I was raised to believe that you will always find better in life, and whether or not you deserve better in life, is the argument, is what's up for debate, I think the healthier you are the better matches you find in life, and the less well you are, well that's when you won't always match up and need to be alone to better yourself, so that you can eventually match with someone one day. Be careful not to go backwards in life, as that ignites argument to your health, never take a beating for your own illnesses in life, that's not the job of others to criticize your wellness or question you, if you are doing everything you can to stay well, and on good merits succeed in life, life is not easy, not easy to work, work from home, manage your health, stay on meds, go to therapy, and prove them wrong, how I was raised. Do not let others belittle you or be critical of you, everyone has their own sadness and unhappiness's in life, just do your best to blend in and not be a fire starter or get put down.

Be Thankful No Matter Where you Are in Life ...

You cannot blame others when you are not doing well or not where you want to be in life. That's all a matter of you needing to first be happy with where you are so that you can end up in better places in life. We all go through stresses in life, and have to carry on with our lives in spite of those difficulties and or set backs. Fighting is not the solution, nor is politicking to serve personal interests or endeavors, always with a good heart you support causes, not if by supporting those causes people you care about end up worse off, that's not the solution either. Whenever things are not going well its best to find some sort of a middle ground, for decision making, by your cares, which always come first, figure out what's important to you and who is important to you. If people cannot be understanding of you, well that's not necessarily their problem with you but issues they have within themselves, they need to sort out. You cannot be 50 people at once, and you cannot be more than one place at once, that includes success wise, being in a better place if you are still dealing with the past ramifications of your poor decision making. We all relapse have lapses in judgement, but that doesn't mean harp on the negatives until you yourself are spent downtrodden, eventually you have to lift yourself up. You cannot allow minor setbacks in life, to keep you from living life and accomplishing goals in life, you have to function in this life, in order to have a good life, and if you cannot function, that is something you need to talk to your doctor about, not share in public spaces what it is that is bothering you. People who complain in public, will be assumed to be for political purposes, sharing what they feel or what they believe is happening, don't allow others judgments of you to affect your best decision making skills, know how, or instincts, if something feels off its best to report what you are feeling, if you feel off to others, well that's not your responsibility to correct their judgments of you, no one deserves to be bullied, and everyone deserves to live life and move forward. You repent for your sins, and punished when you are wrong, for all other days of the year you are expected to live life as best you can, irrespective of the negative judgments of others toward you, its not required to be trusted in order to trust yourself, if you know you best, don't allow others lack of trust for you, to cause you to self-harm, and prove them right ... that's not the solution either, to give in to negative peer pressures toward you.

Don't Be Affected by Others ...

The tendency is when we share personal information about ourselves that others are automatically critical of us, seeking not to support others for whatever their endeavors may be, in question, and not inspired by the actions of others, to maintain peace, some things are not meant in defiance, most things we do are meant to achieve for ourselves, and secondly for others, when someone goes on a run, that's not symbolism, that's for purposes of weight-loss, last year I was 188 lbs, that's from being put on meds, and because I was 188 lbs not able to maintain a job and keep up with the grueling pace of a full-time job. When you are in better spirits, you are able to keep up with the opinions of others, whether they are negative toward you or not, when you are not stable its harder to keep up with negative voices and easy to self-harm, always be understanding, as when you are alone, it seems like everyone is talking negative about you, however, once you are around people, they will act like nothing has happened and that its everything to do with your own ability to take care of yourself, allow people to be defensive that is normal, for people who do not want to be responsible for the poor health of others, or for their misfortunes in life, deflect blame from themselves, by being critical of others, and putting them down, by bad mouthing them. That serves no good purpose moving forward for the best interests of all and for everyones good health to bad mouth anyone. Whenever something bad occurs, that's not always a time to come together and to chat about the past, and whats in store for everyone in the future, not everyone works together like that, and it may seem as though the blind is leading the blind but that is certainly not the case, everyone has their own sense of agency in life, and it is at a similar token not the responsibility of onlookers being critical of those sharing their personal lives, to be responsible for outcomes as to their personal well being and health, people who do not know you ... will think there is something wrong with you, if you do not respond well to others, and that's the purposes for bad mouthing someone and making them look or appear weird or different to others, less than, don't give people that power over you by responding poorly based upon outcomes as though running is for a cause, its for weight-loss I have not run on the beach since last Fall 2018, when I had a job. The critic thinks its for a cause, the critic is the one who if I commit suicide after calling the police on Monday, would not be blamed, but at the end of the day if I decide to end my life its my fault if I die, not the responsibility of those talking $hit.

Don't Especially Bring up the Past ...

Don't' bring up the past especially when you just get better the tendency is to go backwards and reflect upon where you have been in life, and try to perfect yourself by making any corrections to areas you otherwise thought perfect at the time you were writing or living life, it occurs similarly, mental health issues, at least my own. When you get to a new place in life, and achieve an inner level of stability ... it can easily be nerve-wracking going backwards and correcting any mistakes past through your own writing, as you are in a better place now, sometimes you will not feel like yourself, and wonder a lot about the past why youre thinking was that way, and what provoked you to think or write that way. Some are more or less understanding of our pasts, but the past doesn't change you change, and if your story stays the same your whole life, then you are living by the facts of your life, and accepting the facts of your past, if you are forced to live life any differently, based upon another set of facts assembled by someone else without you knowing, well that is not your responsibility to correct any assumptions made about you based upon that information about you given to them. Everyone upon a parting wants everyone on their side, there are no favors in life, to anyone who is treated poorly or left to their own devices in life, that's a choice to isolate, and its not necessary to beat someone up over their past, just allow people time to heal whether or not it was their fault for suffering in life, and whether or not it was their fault for the suffering that was caused to them and others in life, we hope that all will achieve well and eventually recover from whatever is ailing them in life. If based upon what is read about you is how you are treated, then that's others trying to create a story about a story on the outside to reflect a story within a story about you on the inside, do not let people puppeteer you in ways befitting to their best interests to make you look mentally ill or bipolar on your own merits, we all do our best to function in the world, and we cannot always be at our best, learn to move on in life.

Feed off Your Own Self-Worth ...

Feed off your own self-worth, not wait for affirmations from others in order to take steps forward in life ... if you don't already know where youre headed in life, and feeling lost, then that's probably not the best time to talk to others, for assistance, especially matters with regards to your mental health, that's best left for professionals, your trusted professionals in life, Doctors you are under the care of. It's not for anyone to judge the wellness of those who achieve stability in life, just like everyone else, people get tired, and just like everyone else, people's patience's run out, and just like everyone else, everyone is susceptible to getting sick, maybe not from the same things, but when we do not take good care of ourselves, we are deemed as being responsible for our own wellness in life. You are what you look like to others, and if you are so treated well, well then that must mean that you are doing your best, and if even at your best you're not feeling well, well that means that something apart of you feels incomplete, we cannot always feel whole and focused all days, some days we will be half there, half somewhere else, that's not a reflection of a mutual bond between people as being out of place, but to each one's responsibility to work on their interpersonal skills and be present when others are talking to them, not all are sharp socially, and some of us a little rusty in those departments in life. There is a coming of age, and there is a coming of professionalism, just like when you were younger, in later phases in life, you are required to behave or speak in ways that reflect your skillset, and maturity. We can't all be perfect at all times, less is more, but sometimes a little humor goes a long way, even if it's not agreeable to the tastes of all.

Don't Wear Out Your Potential ...

5/6/2019

Like any injurious condition, don't wear out your potential, all egos aside, post dating blues are common, whether you were the culprit for the demise of a relationship or whether it was the other person's fault for leaving you in waiting for too long, you are what feelings you allow to be had. Know when to let go, some battles are not worth fighting on the inside. The fewer demons you have to fight the better, there will always be a double standard when it comes to dating, less is more in that department, both with the sharing of your past, and the number of people to whom you confide in and share intimacies with, if you don't want to make your future partner jealous, learn when to let go, and allow monogamy to take place, that is focus on one person's needs, not everyone's needs, and be a careful reader of their boundaries too in life, not just weary or paranoid about your own. The less you have to hide, the less jaded you will feel, and the more presentable you will shine in the face of your competition, it is after all those with the most light and positivity that get picked although not always, you don't need experience to be a good lover, or to be loved, that's a fallacy in thought, that experience with love will make you a better partner in life, sometimes it's better to be new to something, than to have too much experience and be easily bored at the same token, by your matches in life. Keep busy, the more accomplished you are the better you will feel, it's unnecessary to share vices with the ones you love or partake in activities that put either of you at risk of harm ... the tendency is to drink, do drugs, and hook up, that culture creates wasted time, and efforts on one another's behalf, and usually relationships then don't work out due to substance abuses along the way, poor decision making, and lack of attentions to one another in place of selfish ends to meet one's own basic needs for managing their own health and wellness. The benefits of being in a relationship are to help lift the spirits of those around you, not just your own.

You Can Never Have Too Much of Anything ...

5/5/2019

Call it a void, but nothing is better than shopping. It seems clothes can convince you you look okay, are the right shape, and doing just fine, but stepping on a scale, reminds you of how far you have to go, putting yourself back together. Medications seem to work, but they don't seem to help much in the weight gain department. Sure my mood is better and I'm more stable, but I've gained weight, how impressive is that, what to explain to others. Appearing as though you care less about yourself, when you are taking good care of yourself, doesn't make any sense. What exactly is it you are looking for? Self-acceptance takes years to accomplish, you're usually unhappy with yourself, until you've accomplished something, but we can't have a graduation for every milestone, and we can't have a wedding for every love, and we can't go on a vacation for every job well done ... you usually have to do that mentally along the way, and keep going at whatever it is you're doing well in life, that's keeping you afloat and motivated. In between phases ... are usually when we are most unhappy with ourselves, filling voids, or wasting time doing nothing but napping and reading ... where does that take you in life, if you're not building anything for yourself for your future then you're not working hard enough, and if what you are doing now is not helping you move forward toward a better place in life, then you should really question whether what you are doing is worth the time spent doing it. I run everyday ... but I don't diet, I think my biggest problem is being efficient with my time, I work really hard, but sometimes the reverse results occur, that's most likely self-sabotage, you have to give up a lot of things in life, to save or to lose weight, and spending and not dieting is a sure fire way of going backwards in life, and feeling spent, complaining that you've done everything you can to look the part but still not sufficient. Figure out first what's keeping you behind in life ... and from that point, don't expect others to carry you forward in life, that's something you have to do for yourself, prior to meeting anyone new, be at a stable place in life, that's how you get hired, that's how you are able to date, and meet new people. Keep lists, that's always helpful goal setting, whats important to you? What matters to you? And set your priorities and daily goals according to whats going to take you to where you want to be in life, if not here right now.

June 2019

Working on Social Media ...

6/13/2019

There is no home away from home, the best places to post are on Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, Pinterest, and Tumblr ... that's how most people generate a following, and put themselves on display for likes and feedback. I don't think building a new social network is the solution, but improving upon what is posted online, often times comes first before anything new takes place. We just started posting why move now. As it turns out, you can't share everything on social media, not even to friends on Facebook, sometimes when sharing too much, or writing too much, they begin to worry about you. What is a normal share or post? And who decides whats appropriate to share and whats not? So what brought you to Weebly? When sharing to friends became too much, I decided to share on other social media websites, and when sharing on Twitter became too much, I started writing on squares to Instagram. I just started using Facebook, new to Pages, my first promoted post got 300+ likes. I just found a great website called blogpros.com that promotes your posts for you, just got 5 likes on a Weebly post, the misfortune of not working on a Wordpress Website, you miss out on shares, likes, followers and comments. I wanted to move my website to Wordpress, but think Im willing to take on the challenge of figuring out how to build a following without being in a network of blogs, most blogs are written within blogging networks, you can hashtag to and end up in feeds that promote your posts for free, on Weebly you do not have the privilege of being in a network among other bloggers to share. I had to build my website from scratch, originally a schoolwork and portfolio website, is now a blog, applied for all the banners on Shareasale, an Affiliate Network. As you learn how to blog, accept that you don't know everything, there is much to learn, you would think that you could learn how to blog by reading posts about blogging, but you mostly have to learn on your own via trial and error. There's no quick way to earn a following, you have to do the work, be smart about the time you spend online, you only get so many first introductions, you'd be shocked at how many improvements have been made overtime, be one of them, the material available to be put online is not limitless, there are standards, you have to blend in and at the same time stand out, it's a difficult field to excel in. Its okay to be experimental when you're new, but if you have been online for awhile, you are expected to improve upon your skill set, it's a very competitive field unfortunately, as soon as you learn something, someone learns from you, and tries to do a better job than you, that's basic marketing, same goes for writing, helping others perform well too. If you are to be an example to others, then expect to be competed with, the world is a big place, and those who respect one another, usually don't step on one another's toes, interfere with one another's progress. Don't overdo things, worry less what people think, and do your best to improve upon your skill set, don't just post to post, post with purpose.

Be Resistant ...

Be resistant to mental health issues, that includes managing your thoughts, and managing the thoughts you think others have toward you, whether that occurs in the form of thinking, or delusions, listen to yourself. Follow your heart. You cannot always be guided by others, not everyone has the same solution in life, as not everyone has the same mental health issues, we are all different, however don't think you're so unique that you are alone in your struggle to overcome what's ailing you. Don't feed into negativity, always represent yourself best in public and in private spaces, its okay to be yourself, but be careful when opening up to others, in intimate spaces. Sometimes its easier to share online, than it is to share in real life. How you interact with others online is just as important as how you interact with others in real life, always be professional. Appearances matter, its not just how you look, but how you behave, and how you speak well of self and others that matters most. You can't expect to get positive reviews from others, if you are not doing well in life, they will be more concerned with their image than helping to fix yours. That's not what getting jobs is about, image, its about your livelihood, its not all about building a resume, its about staying healthy so that you can work, that's the end goal, being self sufficient, independent financially. Its difficult to be read in public by people you know personally, its okay if they dont see you in the same way, think highly of you, thats because they know you in real life, you wont impress everyone, but always leave a good impression upon others. If others think that you are inappropriate (online) ... this occurs when discussing what goes in private spaces (online), they will be offended, then turn on you and claim that you've been inappropriate or are the one who should be judged in the wrong, don't share everything online. Fighting is not the solution. Whenever you or someone you know is being harmed by others, talking about the problem out loud rarely does a good service to those being harmed, its when people who are harmed become known to others, that sides are taken, and when sides are taken, the one disclosing what harm has been done, is the one who gets left alone, and the one disclosing treated as a bad person for sharing, why just as its important to only talk about your problems with trusted individuals, its important not to discuss the problems of others out loud, as that subjects you to attack in life, as the wrongdoer, even if youre trying to help others, that's not how to prevent or stop harm from occurring, by drawing attentions to whats gone wrong, or whats going wrong. Whenever you have a problem, people will always read everything as though it relates to that problem or to a problem they think exists, until you prove otherwise, or until they are proven right, some people don't know when to stop, that's not addiction, that's simply people not ceasing to prove themselves right by causing you harms in life until they feel better, or right. Share online, but dont share about others, in the abstract or specifically mention others in your life, thats the main lesson.

Today's a New Day ...

Today is my first day at a new job, working for the Government. You would think that there would be more entry levels jobs than there are, its easy to get comfortable and want to stay in a job, but that's not always the case, sometimes you have to take on a few jobs before you find a place where you can stay long term. Don't put too much pressure on yourself, whenever you start a new job, make sure to always be doing what youre supposed to be doing, you cant cut corners in life, you have to keep applying yourself if you want to get jobs, and especially if you want to stay in a job, never get too comfortable, always be professional, and never give up. Working is all about maintaining positive momentum, each mistakes adds up, and the more difficult it becomes to work: Don't take long breaks, let your Boss know in advance any changes to your schedule, don't talk about your past, speak highly of yourself, don't talk about meds, don't talk about sobriety, don't use your phone at work ... if you want to have a professional life, you cannot talk about your personal life at work, if you want to keep the worlds separate. Just because things are not going right for you personally, romantically, or socially, does not mean you are unfit to work, don't limit your options in life by whats not going well for you in life. If you want to feel successful, stick to what youre good at. Never give up on your dreams.

Keep Moving Forward in Life ...

The more you go backwards in life, through your own life, the more problematic you become to others, judged as someone who hasn't lived enough life to feel comfortable with themselves and be present, not going in life. Don't expect others to be understanding of your mental health issues, you will always be judged by the way you look. And based upon your personal histories in life, deemed at fault, if you don't look the part, others will become unhappy with you, until you become unhappy with yourself, mental health comes first, if you are happy with who you are, then no ones poor judgment of you should affect the way you feel about yourself, never give up in life, #stopbullying. Not all people are the same, I don't believe its appropriate for those who are unqualified to psychoanalyze you, to be judgmental toward you based upon what is heard about you, based upon your sharing of experiences and how you were made to feel, everyone goes through changes in life, its not fair to be injured while trying to get better in life, the more you realize positives about yourself the better youll feel, the more others raise negatives about you, the good about yourself you'll feel, that's usually how others put you down in life, thought deserved to feel better about themselves. Theres no arguing with what people think, you change the way people think about you, that's none of your business. Always do your best to be presentable and get along with everyone and be nice, sometimes no one is at fault, during your most trying times in life, that's your decision whether to give up in life or not, remember your good years. Whatever you put there, becomes of issue, as related to your past experiences thought applicable, if humor keeps you feeling good in life, then continue to find ways to see presently in a way that interfere with your progress or the progress of others, if others think everything you do now is about fixing yourself or your past, then no one cares if you're doing well now, it's only those you love whose pride in you should matter, it's not necessary to be loved by all, everyone has their own lives, that's not fulfillment having influence over what people think about you, or a solution to having people speak positively of you.

Don't Feel Bad ...

Don't feel bad if you're being judged upon who your influences in life are, and whether you're a product of your exposures in life, trying to be well liked or be more like others to become popular in life, that's what is assumed of anyone who isolates, and lacking social skills, sometimes people isolate not because they have to but because they want to, that's not due to apathy or thinking they are better than, you actually miss out on a lot of things in life, when your priorities in life are work in school, it's better to maintain friendships, than to try to start a new life, why trade in your life, if you can't be yourself, you'll never fit the mold of others' expectations trying to be someone else in life, look or appear like others. That's not how one develops interpersonally nor professionally by imitation. It's always important to be unique to be valued, it's not important for others to notice your strengths in life, if the measure of your self worth is based upon qualities about yourself you're proud of then one should not be judged as not possessing characteristics or traits they deem likeable if not noticeable upon their viewing of you, expect apathy from those looking for other things in life to make them feel good, anything you share regarding your successes in life, will be deemed as a potential future threat to their needs as they think your motives in life are to be of influence to others, and by trying to be an influencer in life, that people they know or will meet will have been influenced by you, that's them thinking you are more powerful than you are, or possess power by names associated to, which they are cause for your likeness in life, not deserved. You are never responsible when others feel like $hit, there are no winning teams in life, everyone is responsible for their own health, required to do their best to stay healthy, it's not one's business your medical history, assess your health looking for pre-existing conditions and future trip about accepting you into their lives, reject you without you knowing why or hearing from you directly, some people go off of what people say, and some people go off words verbatim, it's unfortunate that you as the patient, are not listened to, reading your medical history others will assume something else, not that you were trying to get help or not feeling well, and assume all for the same reasons, life gets bigger as you get older, and develop professionally, you can't correct the past, if how you interpreted things in the past caused you illness then it's important to continue doing whatever it is you are doing now, that's keeping you afloat in life, it then becomes a waste of energy to share instances in which you became delusional and thought things were happening that were not happening -if you're not someone who can move forward in life, you will be deemed as someone with baggage also known as someone who has problems that need to be dealt with, not already processed. If when you are happy others are not happy for you, don't assume the negative, and if you become unhappy, reassess your own life, before thinking it's a product of what is said about you or become a product of what others think, don't allow your fears to come to fruition in life, by focusing on others, some people get read, and some people who write are wrongfully accused of reading others, or being influenced by others to achieve in life, see forward, or feel good, that's a blessing whenever someone comes into your life and accepts you warm towards you, that does not happen often, if you look like an unhappy person, don't expect anyone to cheer you up, you will always be judged and questioned as to whether you are genuinely self motivated in life, or on the highs of who you are surrounded by made to feel good, as though your confidences in life have not been earned, it's not by your experiences in life that make you strong, better, or unique, able, or with more access to knowledge to better understand the world and have power, thoughts of your own to share, don't be minimized by lack of enthusiasm, and if you're doing well in life, ignore those who do not take you seriously in life, it's more important to do your best in life, even if it means going out of your way to help others, than to sit and watch life occur. *It's by your work experiences in life, that you achieve the confidence required to act in the moment, and apply what you have learned to a real world setting when among others, that's doesn't mean that one is comfortable with themselves, or because they are able to perform under pressures in life, are comfortable around others (because the people themselves were studied). The more you focus on others the harder it is to perform and recall based off what you know and have learned in life function, you then become a product of the worries of others or by their insults affected, once they feel like you, and you don't feel well, is sometimes by the time they stop harping on concepts looking for reactions from you, judging you as being in the wrong or drawn toward helping others because your strengths in life were empowered by the sufferings of others, or by exposure to traumatic events in life, disqualified as coming from a genuine place your cares in life, even if you automatically empathize with others, does not mean its your job to care, sometimes showing you care about issues, makes people think that you only care about issues that make you look good by caring for others, take on what they think are challenging jobs, as though you have an agenda of looking good, or using your experiences in life to benefit you, if your privacies in life have been violated and you cannot prove your losses in life, then don't complain, and move on, its everything you complain about or argue, that others take from you, as you begin to not feel well in life, others will claim that they were understanding of you, and that your need to feel understood or clarify self was a product of your own mistakes in life, or initiatives, as you figure things out in life and if you develop a system of understanding and processing events and the past in a way that is helpful to you, don't expect others to be there for you when you do not have yourself figured out, moving forward in life, what you have to say or think is only of value so long as you stay well in life, otherwise devalued as just words.

When Deja-Vu Used to Be Cool ...

Live life with purpose, its not necessary to state your motivations in life, those who are important become important because they take good care of themselves and work independent of others, that's not forced alienation to have dreams in life, and work hard, that's not being selfish to require alone time to figure your life out, understand your phases in life, and learn how to multi-task, in your younger years its okay to feel overwhelmed, youre probably just being too hard on yourself, everyone who thinks theyre important is hard on themselves, but not all become successful by being important to others or by job titles in life. Look back on your life with pride, if you can convince yourself your capable of achieving a great many things, then continue to follow your own foot prints in life, remember the days when you felt strong and capable and do your best to replicate those feelings within yourself, its not by what you have in life that determines how you look or feel, its all about improving upon yourself, and putting the work in required to feel prepared, the more prepared you are in life to perform, the less you will remember the past in the negative, be a product of your own dreams in life, don't feed into the fears of others, by trying to control instability. Don't be dramatic, the harder you try to protect others from harm the more harm you suffer as a result of putting your needs aside to correct the behaviors or thoughts of others about life, if its not being said assume its not being thought, and if youre the one sharing insight, then assume people will not see how you see the world, until you share stories from your life about your cares or motivations in life, having a bigger purpose in life, does not always lead to a better life, nor is being motivated otherwise to earn a steady income, jobs are given to those who are strong, if you are able work, apply yourself, if you have disability get strong and take on jobs you are physically fit for. Don't push yourself past well in life, and if you get sick its okay to stay home, sometimes it is necessary to work through illness in life until you start to improve, and sometimes rest is needed in order to get well again. Be put together, the main lesson is not to assemble ideas or beliefs about life with others, keep your interpretations to yourself, just as your sources of inspiration keep you feeling apart of, its not necessary to state the obvious, or point out what needs work, even if you do everything right, that's not how to prevent bad things from occurring. And so long as you speak to whats bothering you, don't expect those problems to go away, just like mentioning music and gun violence. If youre not a likable figure, or viewed as someone who thinks theyre important because of where they grew up or by who their associated to, then that's why no one thinks youre a good fit, thats a natural reaction to not wanting to combine negative viewpoints or philosophies in life past that have resulted in illness, if youre being made fun of by everyone, its probably because you finally said something that puts you on the worst team in life, the whole point of dodging subjects was not to be avoidant, you cant move forward in life rehashing the past, particularly moments in time when people were wronged or suffered trauma, your solution may not be the same for everyone. You cannot overcome a suicide attempt or self-harm, by explaining yourself, youre always wrong when you hurt yourself, and whether or not you have anyone special in your life, assume that others will feel hurt if you give up in life, and lose composure, never entertain the negative thoughts of others, always speak highly of yourself. #dontdodgers #endaddiction #staysober

Breathe, Its Not the End of the World ...

6/8/2019

Its assumed what goes up must come down, we generally leave hyper people alone, and if not entertained, ignore, that's normal. If no one thinks youre funny, that's not because there is something wrong with you, maybe your timing is off, being funny is not about being well liked always, or getting everyone on the same page, and funny to those who see like us, or share the same negative judgments of others, to some that's funny, what stays between them, and goes overhead to others, it seems that unless everything is joke about something or someone, there is no mutual understanding, theres a serious misunderstanding about who jokes are about, and if made to look like, or sounds like, must be about, don't empower hate. Allow people to be themselves, ignoring hate also means not responding to what you don't understand and falling into traps in life, reading into what others are saying, if its not about you its not about you, don't become too attached to the things that people say, they're likely just trying to prove points or cause waves, as though your disposition in life is coordinated to a series of fixed points in the past, your personal history, which they have read, and think everything else in your life is because of your past, or because of your experiences with others. If you haven't formerly shared in detail your life with others, then your not expected to put together your past to be read by others, and if your past as assembled was read by others and memorized, then they misunderstood your purpose for sharing, not everyone is allowed to move forward in life, upon sharing what they think has gone wrong in their lives, and upon sharing what they think has gone wrong in their lives, are deemed to bear guilt, the more unstable you are the worse off you become, and the more difficult it becomes to engage with others socially, if you don't need to be around others to succeed in life then no one is forcing you to be social or present yourself to others, when youre not feeling well or have lost composure, its okay to stay home. If someone does not respect you to begin with and makes fun of you puts you down, they will not at a later point in time grow to love you, some relationships are based upon need, some are built on trust, and other relationships are just for show, you are a product of what matters to you, not a product of who you are surrounded by, and if who matters to you puts you down in life, don't play victim and call that abuse or start running #stopbullying campaigns that's not the solution, people who do not know you and do not think you are good enough, will always think less of you, no matter how nice they are, they should not have affected you to begin with, and you should not be resentful of their delayed acceptances of you later in life, stay bonded to what keeps you moving forward in life, or leaves you feeling fulfilled or good about yourself, sometimes people put you down to see how strong you are mentally, to measure you self-esteem bank, why? Because they don't trust you, and its hard to make any relationship last with someone who is bitter or broken, not achieving in life, let them come to you, that's not your cue to go out of your way to prove yourself to them, attach, to be a catch, you either are a catch to begin with and know it, or you get rejected. If they leave you waiting in life, theyre simply not sure, or would be happier if you were better and end up with better as a result. Just get married, if you start zoning out, and hes hugging you into you, that's why you were driving to Yorba Linda once a week in traffic and studied at another Law School. What are your goals in life, continue to love those who are hard on you, even when you do not feel good about yourself or struggling in life, never give up on things that are going well for you in life, to build positive momentum sometimes it's as simple as maintaining what you have and improving upon what needs work, that's how to achieve in life, not by focusing on your weaknesses or self-harming, punish yourself, that's giving up in life, being avoidant, learn how to focus be unfocused, and focus again, stay busy, the better you are at adjusting to life the less you will blame others once you get sick, always see the positive, you cant go backwards and live the same life and expect to live a good life, whether you live a public or private life, its not about having high expectations of others, its about being put down in life before you reach your potential in life, because they don't think you deserve it, look stupid, not smart, in the wrong, alcoholic, or an addict, sometimes when trying to stay balanced with disability we lose composure mostly in private always ask for help when help is needed, that's doing your best to stay healthy, sometimes even if we make good decisions in life dont end up feeling better. No one wants to be the Rehab kid, no one wants to be alone, no one wants to be single, no one wants to be rejected, no one wants to feel stupid, no one wants to get in trouble, no one wants to be fat, no one wants to live at home, that's normal, if life were easy then everyone would have jobs after college, don't be scared of living life, don't fear the future, and especially don't beat yourself up if youre hearing voices, always talk to your Doctor, 50% of your problems result from playing Doctor on yourself, if you don't know whats wrong with you, it become impossible to talk to yourself through a problem and reach a solution, that's why its important to be patient with yourself, if youre freezing in life or feel scared that's a normal result of oversharing or not being where you need you to be in life, to get moving again, you literally have to move, join a gym, find a support group, if youre gonna procrastinate the key to succeeding anyways, is to be doing something else, you can nap through your early 20s but not your 30s when things get overwhelming, eventually you have to function even when youre tired or cant focus, pace yourself in life, and don't leave everything to the last minute and expect to perform well, what matters is the quality of your life health wise, accomplish that much above all else, don't be led astray in life, sacrifice your priorities in life to please another, if they don't recognize theyre hurting you by ignoring you, don't blame them if you get sick.

Ignore Expectations ...

Until it's built will anything or anyone be criticized - when you live publicly you get criticized and corrected as you go in life, always maintain composure especially when speaking in front of others, never play victim you'll likely be retaliated on by the defenses of others, thinking things are about them until it you sound like them or feel like them to get you to say what makes sense to them if they don't trust your education or direction in life. Know yourself, when you're focused and able to communicate clearly present yourself, whether you can speak and look the part at the same time shouldn't matter do your best, as your presence affects the well being of others be presentable as soon as you let your guard down expect to be criticized lose confidence in life that's when you're most vulnerable exposed, others will always assume that if exposed and sounds suicidal means every incident in which you self harmed were suicidal or for the same reasons, people don't knowingly make the same mistakes in life, that's why people are corrected if they don't recognize what they've done wrong, you cannot reprimand someone for exposing themselves in private to themselves or by someone requesting to see them exposed judge people for the photos they keep of themselves, some records are kept in observation of ones personal growth or mental health, not made with expectation of being watched, most documents are kept to feel good, the work you do in life should make you proud of yourself, not all stages in life are meant for public display you learn as you go, to always present the best version of yourself. Do not entrust those who do not care for you to help you if you don't feel well or able, no one will ever take your side in life if you expose yourself by image or words in private, always be misunderstood to be at fault or to have provided photos requested for if in writing thought provided for and deleted from the record assumed you got blocked and any harm suffered gets categorized as self-harm not a consequence of interaction but because of your poor judgment or stupidity. Sometimes you're a product of what you're drawn to in life and sometimes you're a product of your exposures in life, the worst is when judged as being a product of your influences in life, not given credit for your good years in life, that's how you lose your independence in life, not all who are lost are lost because they are a product of their past, it's if you can't stay well your entire life gets reassessed even if you've moved forward in life, never appear as someone who has problems letting go even worse if they can point out negatives about you in the past and make you look like you have not changed or bettered yourself over the years, there is no solution to forgiveness, once others are convinced you were wrong they will never forgive you only criticize you, live life without regrets, and if you care show your cares with class, be vocal write there are many ways to express yourself in life, other than hurting yourself or communicating to others how you're feeling, no one can help you but yourself, once one door closes don't say things to reinforce those situations in life, people talk, it's until your better can prove your wellness are you given chances in life to work among others, you have to be driven and motivated in life to recover from failures or rejections in life, don't give up, it's not necessary to provide excuses for others poor judgment of you become defensive when you begin to feel better make progress in life, if others are hard on you when you're not feeling well or in your phone writing, that's because they're trying to get your attention, if you're not ready to give your undivided attention to others in life don't expect to stay long anywhere they'll likely lose attentions for you likewise - sometimes we are pushed until unstable or can provide information in a way that supports a viewpoint of you, your business is your business if you're not feeling well and your reputation has been harmed don't expect others to be gentle or compassionate towards you. #loveislove = sometimes it's best to be alone until you figure out what's causing you mental illness until you get your focus back - life's not about being cared for it's about caring for yourself and being able to take care of others if you can't take care of yourself don't expect to be taken care of in life or able to care for others, don't believe everything you hear especially if it's not true live up to poor expectations of you, know yourself. #stopselfharm it all adds up, believe in yourself, better yourself, ignore voices.

Don't Flip Out ...

If its not your fault, its not your fault. Don't flip out and prove otherwise, make yourself look like you deserved harm, or appear presently as though you have inner resentments toward others, triggered by your own thoughts, don't be controlled by the thoughts of others. Once people think youre mentally ill, they will think you have always been this way. Recall the good times, if you share examples of when you have failed in life, then people will believe they can control you, and trigger the same outputs in life, until you learn not to be affected by the negative judgments of others. The more unstable you become, the more you empower others to disassociate from you, those disassociations are only further reinforced, the worse off you become, or by the less you achieve in life, people will always play victim, so long as you struggle with mental health issues, do not make your problems the problem of others, be sure to share in private spaces, not in public spaces, your experiences past, as they will likely take sides, and test your limits in life, to see how you respond in the positive or in the negative, to figure out what your motivations in life are. Once you say something, or believe in something, share your philosophies in life, or what you have learned, don't be surprised when others go out of their way to prove you wrong, and you wind up the one who looks bad, that's to protect their best interests, by assuming something is wrong with you, until you are able to move forward resilient to what people think, or what has happened past. The minute you play victim to the past, the less people will empathize with you, know your limits in life, if people think you are stupid, and do whatever it takes to make you look stupid, its because they think you deserve it. Just move on in life, its not necessary to share all the instances of when you were not strong, still finding yourself, trying to be independent, and got hurt, you live and you learn, the more you complain and play victim, the less sorry others feel for you, and the harder it becomes to move forward, especially if youre already struggling with mental health issues. If every time you open up, and nice to others you get hurt, then be conservative socially, its okay to think about life, and what you could be doing better, sometimes strength is mistaken for other things in life, listen to others, but always be yourself, what happens to you in life is mostly a product of choice and experience, always be yourself. If on medications, its likely you will not be as sharp as others, and somewhat delayed socially, knowing that, don't waste time trying to keep up with what everyone is thinking, the more you focus on yourself, and get done in life, the less it will matter, whether others thought you deserved to be made fun of based upon how you look, behave, or how you speak, or base their judgments upon statements you've made past they did not fully agree with or think wise or intelligent of you to say, some people are not easily impressed, especially with people they think they are smarter than. If youre not that smart, youre not that smart, so be it, always do your best with the skills you have in life.

10 Ways to Love Yourself ...

(1) Kick the Habit of Being Negative

Negativity is the fastest route to disaster, visualize where you want to be in life, without expecting the worst to occur, the less you fear, the more doors open for you in life. Face the fact that you're not perfect, we all have demons, don't overexpose yourself, you're likely to kick yourself in the butt later on for it. No image is perfect, beauty comes from within, the better you feel, doing for yourself things that make you feel good, the less guilty you'll feel talking to others: diet, exercise, be proud of yourself and who youre becoming.

(2) Less is More

We tend to think that more or something will make us feel better, that's addiction, not knowing when to stop. Know your limits in life, its not necessary to put icing on the cake, over clarify self to others, be defensive, or share too much about our lives and our problems, when meeting someone new, or talking to someone past. To catch up in life with others, do your best to know and recognize what youre doing well, and be sure to share positive things about yourself to others. How do you want people to know you? What do you want people to know about you? What is necessary to keep private? How to get well, when others know youre not feeling well? Interviews are not the only conversations in life you need to prepare yourself in advance for, its not all about you, be kind and courteous to your audience always, be memorable, inspiring, don't enable others to fixate on negatives. Always maintain a positive outlook in life, to speak well be confident with your words.

(3) Don't Complain

If things aren't going right for you in life, recognize what needs work, without pointing out to others whats going wrong in your life, that's how to overcome privately whats bothering you, without the added stress of worrying what people think as youre going through something in life. We've all been there, lost, in between phases in life, breakups, have faith, the more positive you are about self and others, the better everyone will look and feel.

Everything adds up, sometimes being too opinionated, makes you look bad if others think that you think you're smart or know better, never assume that others are flawed whenever a misunderstanding arises, as to interpretation and inference, see the good in others.

(4) Stay Active

You can't expect things to happen for you in life, if you're not in motion, moving forward, or doing things in life, that mirror the person you present yourself as online. The best way to support what is said, by you or by others, is to be a person of your word, not always responding to what negatives are said about you, there's no requirement to prove others wrong in life, if you are doing what you feel is right, it's not necessary to waste time and energy proving others wrong, or convincing them you are well, sometimes when trying to garner acceptances from others, we disempower ourselves, empowering the opinions that others hold of us, to control our thoughts and actions, be your own person, take your own lead in life, don't be led or misled by your worries, or the worries that others hold of you.

(5) Know Yourself

How you self-identify sets you free, if being unique is important to you, then be unique. It shouldn't matter if others think you are an imitation of another, playing off the identities of others, or trying to be like someone you're not, that's based upon looking at you, and looking at whos around you, and comparing your looks to others. People will always assume that someone who is insecure in life, feels less than, or that someone lacking confidence wishes they were someone else. As you move forward career wise, don't allow the negative judgments of others to interfere with your progress, your motivations in life will always be questioned, people putting you down as thinking you think you're bigger than you are. Stay grounded, sometimes those who look happiest as judged as being full of themselves.

(6) Be Patient

You cannot expect change in others if you yourself are incapable of changing. If you want to be treated differently in life, and not put down by others, then figure out why you're not liked by others, it never hurts to accommodate the interests of your biggest critics in life. Don't try to fix what is not broken, sometimes while anticipating the worst, we wait for things to get worse before they get better to make changes in our lives. It takes a lot of courage to take the initiative in life, to be different, comfortable with yourself, even if you don't fit the mold of what is beautiful or acceptable, if you can adjust to the changes that others go through in life, have faith that they will similarly adjust to your condition in life.

(7) Stay Positive

Typical advice you're given whenever you say something negative about yourself. Why is it that we are always reprimanded when we think we're doing well in life, totally focused on ourselves, going in life, made to pause, and give our undivided attentions to others, when we're doing well in life. Just because you think you're on to something, or going places in life, does not mean that everything will work out for you in the long run, it's wonderful that you believe in yourself, it's harder to get others to believe in you too, trust the direction you're taking in life, toward achieving your goals in life, that they won't nurture, any extended efforts to make change happen in your life, assume there is something wrong or defective about you, if you go the extra mile toward achieving in life, if you're used to trying really hard to improve upon your best, then ignore criticisms, continue to believe in yourself.

(8) Keep in Touch

Alone time is sometimes necessary to recharge, but not until the point, you go into shock when you're in a crowded room, among others, feel out of place. Recognize you are human, without trying to doctor your feelings too much out loud. Friends will listen, be there to support you through your best and worst moments in life, it's hard to take advice from others, when we think we know best, the more you fixate on where you're going in life, the less right now you feel moving forward, don't isolate, that's the worst thing you can do for yourself, if you're trying to stay focused, how quickly you'll let yourself go, when disconnected from others, work hard, but not to the point the wellness of others intimidates you, stay connected, whether you have a job or not, never feel less than in life, because you don't have it all, life goes on, with or without people in your life, never put all your eggs in one basket, and expect things to work out for the better, that will likely stifle progress in that area of your life, attentions brought away from whats important to you. Its easy to be avoidant under stress, don't allow yourself to become co-dependent to the needs of others, that's a surefire way of becoming frozen to your own best interests.

(9) Express Yourself

Its okay to share your feelings, its not important that you shine, even when at your best, sometimes when we least expect it, others pay attention to us, and when trying too hard, no one notices us. Don't expect others to be nice to you when youre confident and doing well in life, they will always assume the worst, so long as you share online, expect others to treat you like an addict, only share your best, and if your best is not regarded as smart or professional, then don't allow the acceptances of others, to make you feel bad about yourself. Only share what you are comfortable with writing wise and photo wise. It's your overall work-product determines what is felt when others see you, theres no statistical advantage to sharing more, or only sharing your best, its all about how you feel when looking at yourself, if others don't see the same person you see that's not your problem.

(10) Remind Yourself Youre Worth It

Its not by how many likes you receive in life to know whether you've got what it takes to become a working professional, in order to get jobs in life, you need to have had jobs in life. Dating doesn't work the same way, the more boyfriends you've had, the more you will be judged by those losses, devalued, or rejected when not new to love, being new to love means having the capacity to not be picky with expectations, be in the moment present, and able to be unconditional toward others without the other feeling less than or as compared to, more or less put together in life. Any loss of enthusiasm means youre not ready to date, if you are not happy with yourself, it will be hard to make someone else happy or feel good, confident, its not about image, its about feeling fulfilled in life, proud.

Like Without Comparisons ...

To let out your creative spirit, don't compare yourself to others, learn how to think and visualize where you want to be in life, without setting limits for your potential, by feeling worse off, or not as capable of achieving the same. Everything takes time, forgiveness, building a following, and coming up with ideas as you go, of how to maintain that audience. You get better overtime. Always continue to further your education, read books, follow blogs, practice you communication skills, do things that build your confidence in life, not engage in activities that make you appear to have low self-esteem. You can't build a website, without having a purpose in life, don't expect others to keep tabs on you while you are lost and disorganized, that's something you learn later in life with experience, that the better you are, the more responsibilities you are given in life, sometimes you are asked to do things in life for others, and sometimes no one bothers to mention what needs work, or share their criticisms in life. Its usually the case that when you don't hear from someone that theyre doing okay, its customary to share accomplishments and good news with your Dad, and handle everything else with your Mom, online, once you become a blogger, its when they don't hear from you they stop following, I'm not sure whether they worry, or just find other things to do or read. Its not as competitive as it looks blogging, attentions are always shared, like a mixed newsfeed, that's about 10% of your attention span (energy it takes to read), that would be the goal in times of trauma, not be a difficult read. Don't feel overwhelmed, but its important to care as a writer for your audience, not in a mothering or nurturing way, just be detail oriented, and as organized as you can be with your thoughts or whatever it is youre sharing in life.

Today with a high of 1,991, the most to date ...

Its been a pretty quiet day for the most part, a little bit of humor helps, but don't break the silence, whe everyone is at peace, minding their own business, draw attentions to yourself. Its moments like these the voices stop, your good character will always be brought into question no matter what phase of life you are in if you are considered a working professional, that's why we have private lives away from work or academic endeavors to share our feelings, not inside the workplace. Its never cute to be negative, that's generally a turn off and lifts no ones spirits in life, including your own. If your purpose in life is to help others or to help make others feel better about themselves, then don't put yourself down in the process of expressing your points of view in life, theres a way to share criticisms of others that helps everyone, that's if to correct and help make better a person, but the world is not a friendly place always, everyone has their own issues in life. Talking about others, is the quickest route to failure socially, as everyone is connected by a 3rd connection, at least on LinkedIn. Never complain, the more you complain in life, the fewer opportunities avail themselves to you in life, that's a surefire way to be a let down to others, who are looking to work among those who don't complain and get the work done, without personal issues interfering with their work productivity. If you lose steam in life, youre not the only one who gets tired, everyone has trouble keeping going in life, we are not machines, its okay to be human, take breaks, and work at your own pace in life, there is not fast route to success career wise, not even if you know people, you will always have to prove to yourself to get jobs and maintain jobs, no matter what your upbringing in life is, no matter what perspective you have of the world, and the professionals among them. If you have a job title that isn't one we already have memorized, then congratulations for staying focused, and continuing to move forward in life. For those of us who have lost momentum, have faith that you will recover, if it's a bad day keep going, rest when tired, and know your limits in life with others, you can only share so much about your own life and problems, that you begin to bore your audience members, who gradually begin to feel more put together than you having shared your causes for mental illness in the past, or reoccurring mental health issues now. If you are having trouble staying well, its okay to keep those facts between you and your Doctor, no ones life deserves to turn into a guessing game of issues affecting them and their abilities. You cannot compare anyones condition now to their past successes in life, everyone changes, especially after hospitalizations and treatments, you should never be that into anyones life, that you begin digging through their past for dirt about them. Learn to accept people as they are now, whether you trust them or not, whether you think highly of them or not, whether you think youre smarter than them in life, and whether or not you respect them. You would assume that people judge you based on how you are with them, but much more gets taken into account when judging you or determining whether you are a nice person or a good person, genuine, including everything you say privately to self and others, and whether or not you are consistent in your interactions with others, treat all the same. The more nervous or on edge you are in life, about how you appear, the less present you will be able to connect well with others, and be interpreted as sharp or focused, feeling foggy is not contagious based upon looking at someone or knowing someone prior to meeting them, and then thinking about life too deep, that's not the fog or freeze I'm referring to, that happens, never blame others for your lack of focus in life, be less competitive, and have goals in life besides love, be steady.

Don't Miss the Old You ...

You've come a long way, why would you want to go backwards and get mad at yourself or others. If everyone has moved forward, learn to go with the flow in life. Allow people to hold their opinions of you that's just them protecting themselves from harm i.e. let downs in life, that doesn't mean there is anything wrong with you or defective. That simply means wait, either for people to come around and let you back into their lives, or move forward and meet new people in life. That's not a new life, you have created for yourself, when you fail to let go of the past, that's you allowing your past to dictate new relationships. Do not judge someone who is single and working on themselves, that doesn't mean that they are a reject, that could actually mean that they value themselves and waiting for the right companion in life. Until then its okay to be friends with people, that's not a relationship, where one another is expected to take care of the other emotionally, that's just talking. Talking to others is okay, but not until the point of attachment, that's when you become reliant on others for a sense of normalcy, and to feel centered, whom without you get lost easily, wrapped up in emotions, stuck in the past, you choose which disabilities in life keep you from being able in life, you either manage with the skills you have, or become unhappy with what you've got to work with in life. What makes you feel better about yourself? Lifes not all about acceptances and privileges in life, or companionship, its about happiness, being able to change a bad day to a good day, and withstand hurdles in life emotionally, when you feel fulfilled in life, that's balance, and pride occurs once you have accomplished a goal, beyond your expectations of yourself, that's looking back in a good way, upon your progress, not measure your own self-worth based upon what others have said about you, based upon what you have shared privately to yourself or to your attending physicians, that's your right to privacy, and so long as you are feeling well, then continue to do things in life, that keep you feeling well, without regret, and without holding resentments in life. If its not a problem now, don't make it a problem, that's the main lesson, if its something that has bothered you, that isn't currently of issue, then don't bring up something for the sake of bringing up something past to talk about now, if the risk of loss is greater than its potential to resolve current problems in your life, then that's not a problem to mention.

Don't Be a Source of Discomfort ...

6/5/2019

People will always blame their discomforts in life on others, especially those who have suffered from mental health issues. If you are already suffering, its not necessary to worry what others think at that point, your health comes first. Don't self-harm. Its easy when others are not comfortable around you, to blame you or your behaviors in life as justifiably off or deserving of being taunted or put down in life, that's just taking a side, to minimize the suffering of the person who was harmed. If you were not present, its none of your business what happened in the lives of others, that has caused them disability in life, if theres anything you should let go of in life, its always what you do not have control over, people, and the past, especially the past lives of others. Everyone seems to claim victim, whenever someone is suffering, to deflect blame from themselves, argue its justified, or that they brought it upon themselves, mental illness, sometimes sometimes is not the case, especially when no drugs are alcohol are involved. Sometimes pain and suffering, occurs when we think too much, no its not about people pleasing, that's not a subject that rings a bell other than the fact that our bridge was tagged above the 405, if necessary to reference and not refer to, that would be nice, thank you. No matter who your connections are in life, or associations, that doesn't create comfort, when someone does not like you or trust you or thinks less of you, deserving in life, feels as though your mental health issues harmed their health or well being, then those are moments when forgiveness is not granted, even if you move forward or become a better person, there will always be resentments there, we hope not. Stirring negatives back into the interpretations of the lives of those who have bettered themselves or gotten their health back, is not worth furthering fights over toward or against those individuals in life, to be like what they thought happened in the past, and say if like or similar then have standing for suit, and based upon job or profession delineate blames upon others, that does no good moving forward, it makes me sick, and it makes those around me sick, not to be around me, but to similarly suffer from negative interpretations of them, based upon their new association to me, which if even a select few are trying to argue mental illness exists, will keep furthering that belief until something happens in that persons life that makes them make themselves look more mentally ill than they are. Mental illness is not the same as disability, be respectful of one anothers hardships in life, not all are purposefully brought upon themselves, left in isolation or suffering in life, that doesn't make them criminal or mentally ill, just because they do not currently live a lifestyle within a social hierarchy, socialization does not come easy to me, spoiled in the sense that I grew up with the same close friends my whole life, who Im now distant from. Its not about pretending to be something that you are not, it is assumed that one who is punished if they are able to achieve again, are in a better condition now, you will always suffer hardships once you encounter punishments in life, its then you have to begin proving yourself to others, if you are getting tired proving yourself capable to the wrong people in life, you could burn out and get nowhere in life, manage you time and energy wisely, its really no ones fault, when time is mismanaged, procrastination occurs, and careers are put on hold, held behind in life. Its not fun to be an open book and constantly dug at for dirt, even while suffering my own personal hardships in life, that's not being a perfectionist to better oneself at that point, it then becomes a matter of survival. What was once fun, blogging, has now become a serious sport. I think that was the point of putting me at a disadvantage in life, to see how I fair suffering, or feeling like I'm dying, overcome graver disabilities in life, than a learning disability, to test to see whether I am honest, or have lied about the past, and allow God to decide whether I live, based upon whether I have been a good person, or whether I have been a bad person, to explain for me, or justify why I became suicidal to argue that I was being bad at the time, and because I was being bad at the time is why I attempted suicide. No I was not being bad at the time, I was trying to get help, and because I drank and relapsed, I attempted suicide, none of your business. Now is not the time to be casual with my words or subject myself to suit, and be a let down in life, it seems people only feel better about themselves when they can prove you wrong in life, never fight with someone who is recovering from a suicide attempt, that's an unnecessary infliction of emotional distress upon a person who recognizes what has gone wrong and is doing their best to correct their behaviors now, live life. Don't play God.

The Importance of Experience ...

When you have no experience, everything feels overwhelming, each new task carrying a heavy burden, to understand, comprehend, and function knowing fully what you're doing and why you're doing what you're doing, that's being professional. Whether or not you understand what you're doing, do you still do the right thing, you will always be tested in life, to see how good of a decision maker you are, before being allowed to make important decisions for yourself or others for that matter, whether that be through work or in relationships that require you to take on the responsibility of caring for another other than yourself. When your priorities are in order, that shows that one you care about yourself, and that two you are able to care for another, until then, you are required mostly to work on yourself to prove otherwise. The sky's the limit, when it comes to responsibilities, the better situated you are in life, the more viable a companion you become, it's second nature to accept those who are successful in life, without worry of feeling bad for them, as they are able to take care of themselves, it's harder to be around people who need to be taken care of or in need of help, there's more room for worry, and more room for error, which upon failures no one wants to be responsible for. Once you fail to meet the standards of others, it doesn't matter how high of standards you have set for yourself, or how hard you have tried, or how far you have come, once someone is unhappy with you there is no pleasing them, once someone has given up on you, there is no going back for understanding, once someone does not believe in you, there is no room for clarifying self, and once someone has let you go, there is no convincing them otherwise that you are deserving of positions in life, or taking on responsibilities now that you previously were considered for. Some will be harder on you than others, accept that much about life, people expect the best, when it comes to work and in relationships, it's a competitive world, and image is important, it's hard to focus on more than one thing at a time, if you can't balance it all, then don't incorporate new people into your life, who do not love you as you are, everyone blossoms at their own paces in life, and if you have yet to blossom, choose those who do not impede on your self-growth, and allow you to be yourself, work at your own pace in life, that's not finding yourself, or being lost, not all those who appear lost are lost, sometimes it's a matter of wearing more makeup, shopping for more outfits, or sending fewer texts, whatever it is that makes you look like a needy unstable companion in life, don't be co-dependent on others for reassurances in life, you'll surely be let down, if under the guidance and confidence of another. Everyone tries to tell your story, when they think that everyone is watching, and an explanation is needed, before you know it, the relationship has ended, and everything on the outside looks and appears as if to benefit the image of the other, who was able to move forward, and prove fault of the person worse off in life, sometimes people need space to make important decisions in life, having nothing to do with the status of a relationship, if they love you, no time apart will be indicative of setting off a series of emergency circumstances, one should not need to be needed to feel needed, and once that need stops, one should not be reprimanded for focusing on oneself in life, and triggered, led astray in life put down, a clear break is a clear break, allow breaks to happen, without getting upset, that's not how to win back someone you wanted to be with, or express resentments toward anyone who spent equal time caring for the other, in life. Losses occur both ways, time invested in caring on both sides, it's not just on the side of the person left, or not able to return, and if your past is not clear to others, then you will relive those scenarios later in life, until you are proven to be weak or worth letting go, that's how one suffers by sharing about breakups in life, your side is never taken but always the side of the person to whom your discussions are about, that's the benefit of living a quiet life, with the exception of having no control over how your story is told behind your back, explained.

No One Has it Easy in Life ...

It's easy to judge those who you think have easy lives, no one has it easy in life, we all have to wake up each day, and go to bed each night, feeling fulfilled and of value in life. Don't think too hard, and don't especially be too hard on yourself. If you can manage that much, with ease, then you've got a head start above others. It seems that even the simplest things in life, we take for granted, once we become sick, constantly adjusting to the opinions of others, feel drained, that's when it's okay to worry about yourself, you can't always accommodate the beliefs of others about you, proving them right or wrong in life, sometimes you have to just worry about yourself, and do your best to survive and practice a disciplined life, it may not be a fancy life, but live your life as best you can, starting with appreciating what you do have in life, and what positives you have to offer the world, based on your skill set. It's never too late to try new things, sure having dreams in life is important, but where is your reality, what are you capable of achieving in life, are your standards of wellness too high, are you expecting more of yourself, than you are capable of right now, how big should your goals be, and what can you do today, to bring you closer toward achieving your best mental and physical condition. You can have problems in life, but its not always necessary to harp on the negatives in life, if you have since grown past those points of issue in life, where are you now, if you recognize what led you astray then, then do your best to stay well now, you can't always make sense of the past, and if you can't move past your own issues in life, best not to add to discussion the wellness of others, or question the past motivations of others. If in the past you have assumed the actions or words of others to have been directed toward you, then let go of those delusions in life, if to articulate only empowers others to create a belief about you that you think everything is about you, the world is a big place, no one is that powerful individually to influence the decision making of others, especially if they are arguably not doing well in life. If I'm not famous, then please do not add to instances of defamation past, and allow me to overcome mental illness. Eventually we are all affected by losses in life, don't contribute to the nervousness of others by being an unstable companion in life or friend, that just increases the likelihood of you becoming dissociated from others and treated as mentally ill the more you isolate, and the more time apart from others you spend, the more room for rumor you leave while inactive socially, thinking more about life than the time you spend living your life, at some point you have to move forward, and as you adjust to living a healthier life, have faith that others will adjust to your wellness, and not be bothered by your successes in life, or bettered condition, not expect more or less of you, and be able to blend in again. Its not about who you know in life, its insulting to not be credited for ones abilities in life, and extended efforts to remain anonymous, treated as though my identity resulted from issues concerning the past, writing is my gift in life, my strength. You can be so kind as to share your story, and still be made fun of, that's unfortunate. To be treated as less than, based upon who you know, or for what losses or punishments you have suffered in life, no one deserves to be made fun of until suicidal, that's something that needs to stop, highlighting the failures of others, allow people to move forward, not hurt them or put them down every time they get well in life, not be referenced to.

The Times Are Not Archaic ...

The times are not archaic, you may have a good idea to help bring people together, and it may still not be in the best interests of everyone to care. You have every right to care about causes and provide support to causes you think are necessary to the betterment of society, what issues you raise awareness to, should be as it relates to your life and experiences, and if as to the experiences of others, they come first, think what would be in their best interests. Take good care of yourselves, that's best how to represent oneself, others cannot represent you in life, unless hired to, that's always an unwanted burden to others to be available to help correct thoughts about self, or to help correct the thoughts of others about you. What may be obvious to some is not obvious to all, all are not exposed to the same connections in life, or belief systems. You choose your systems of support in life. Always with approval take initiatives in life, never without the blessings of those above you, that's not how to make a positive difference, learn to be able to let things go if you want to help inspire change to the systems we currently provide support to, and where help is needed most. The chaos of loss, and the uncertainty that brings has much to do with the wellness of those around you, people don't change, that you have to accept, people will always care most for whats in their best interests and if its not in their best interests to care, they wont care, some initiatives you take in life may be premature, based on what you are focused on in life, and what affects you. Don't volunteer or become apart of organizations to correct your image, if you volunteer and then are punished, then correct your mistakes in life, and with permissions, continue to make progress in life. Not all will be in agreement with you, post punishments in life, don't expect people to speak highly of you or trust you, there will always be room for question thereafter, don't feed into that negativity, by behaving in ways or speaking in ways that support a negative viewpoint of you, that's why they say to prove them wrong, that's if you are currently facing adversities in life, not to go backwards and make your life more difficult, the mental health issues you suffer as a result of your mistakes in life, are never the responsibility of others to correct, if of your own making, you have to help yourself under those conditions, no one will lead you then, no one will correct you then, no one will advise you then, no one will redirect you then, unless you ask for help and permissions in life, that's how best to move forward and interact with others in a way that both you and your audience are comfortable with, not under any obligations to care. In life you continue your education, that's to match the times, every profession has their requirements, that's normal, be fearless, but do not incite fear or worry in others, if something you care about has not affected them yet personally, everything adds up, not that we are all connected, but anything that goes wrong on the inside of any system of support, is the responsibility of those vocal within to correct, the tone of the environment, everyones safety needs matter, focus on your reality, without worry for those who have messed up in life due to drugs and alcohol, that's why we are advised to care for ourselves first to be able to help others, and until we can learn to help ourselves, love ourselves, will we be able to help provide a voice of reason to others. When we say mental health comes first, that means if you've been there then don't go back to those places in life, and if you cannot help, don't make worse the condition of others caring for you, allow people to worry for themselves not about others, only you can help yourself. In a year I can apply again as a victim advocate, right now Im battling mental health issues ie self-harm, trust your systems of support, and as advised move forward in life.

Overcoming Depression ...

6/1/2019

Chances are once you get to a better place in life, you'll compare where you are now to where you have been, that's perfectly normal, to reassess what needs work, and figure out what you did right, to get to where you are now. Don't be so hard on yourself. In fact, "ruminating" has been found to interfere with ones ability to "implement[t] the behavioral changes necessary to prevent a relapse." [1] It's the very thinking about your own issues, not just the past, that may prevent you from staying present now, I assure you its just an adjustment phase, and like all days pass, allow time to pass, recognizing your own self-worth, and how far you've come. Its not just stigma that's cause for embarrassment upon disclosure of diagnoses, but also comparisons to others who have not been well in the past, dumbed down as the same as, or worse than, you'll never feel like yourself, if youre in constant worry as to who youre being compared to in life, keep your world small, its not necessary to inspire others or demonstrate any type of leadership when it comes to wellness, once you achieve well, your mental health comes first above all else, especially when fragile new to stability. A healthy outlook is not demonstrated by your words, but by your actions in life, and your future is determined by your present, not your past necessarily, if you can let go of that much, then do so. Its what you do from this point on that matters most, not by focusing on what people think, or by what is inferred by your presence around others or actions in life, live life as best you can, if keeping busy keeps your mind off where you've been then keep busy, if keeping busy keeps you from discussion of problems that send you through a whirlwind of negative fears about your present abilities in life, then don't send yourself off into a freeze, nows not always a good time for therapy and overfocus on oneself, that can be easily be mistaken for selfishness, don't worry about interpreting the behaviors of others, as everyone is doing their best to cope with their own version of reality, and portray themselves as they see best fit, know that not everything is about you, just as its wrong to use associations in life to bolster esteems, don't subject yourself to being used to similarly bolster the esteems of others, by being vulnerable, retaliated upon, as less than, its not necessary to assert ones intelligences in life, confidentiality is so important to maintaining trust, and to be taken seriously in life, not look small minded or be treated as an opportunist in life, looking for a step up in life, if you cannot achieve on your own, don't expect help from anyone to help you achieve, maintain autonomy [2], when it comes to relationships and building rapport with others, co-dependence is not a healthy show of acceptances in life, for one personality to dominate anothers, healthy leadership enables growth, fosters wellness.

Ease Back into the Swing of Things ...

The past is past, the longer you stay in shock fixated on what has not gone right for you in life, you'll never move forward. Once you achieve a well state of mind, pat yourself on the back, and welcome back, that takes a lot of hard work, discipline, and listening to others to get well again and stay well. The more you rebel, defiant to the concerns of others, the more difficult it becomes for you to adjust to reality, you get put down, pushed aside, and left behind for a reason, not because people don't love you, but because they need to focus on themselves and don't have the time to waste either helping you, or redirecting your thoughts toward positives, that is something you have to figure out for yourself, you either listen or turn a blind eye to feedback along the way, don't take anything too personally, just do your best to take into consideration the suggestions of others, you'll likely look back on those moments in a positive way thank them later, even if at the time you feel small. Confidence takes years to build, and with practice excelling at your strengths in life, while recognizing your weaknesses in life, those experiences in life will only make you stronger, and I promise you those insecurities and awkward feelings about yourself will change. Its okay to be yourself, some are gifted in that way, affected by every little thing people say to them, sensitive, reading too much into everything ... never assume as insult toward you, most people who are insulting do not mean to be insulting or insensitive to your feelings, they are usually just trying to help, if ever critical of you or others, pointing out whats wrong, instead of buffering whats going right for people in life via compliment, some are just not programmed that way, to compliment, cheer up, or bolster the esteems of others. Trust that your time to shine will come again, if youre used to being the best at everything, standing out from a crowd, then learn how to handle standing out during your worst moments too, being the best comes at a price, people expect more from you, and are harder on you expectations high of you, to impress or prove that you are who you are on paper, be everything past as you are now, that is you, and even if you have been through changes in life, that make you not feel like yourself anymore, forgive yourself and others, at some point you have to move forward, in order to live life as you are now. Theres a lot of stigma, associated to those who suffer from mental health issues, treated as drug addicts or alcoholics, blaming drug use or alcohol as a cause for their mental health issues, while those things may have contributed to incidences of mental illness or poor decision making in the past, those flamboyant episodes of confidence and grandeur will surely be forgotten the better adjusted you are to who you are now, having had those experiences in life, I'm sure people are mostly concerned with their image not yours, and their health, not your past, and the only thing people care about now is your wellness now, to determine whether or not they want to be in the company of anyone who has had a history of mental health issues, be affected.

When You're Feeling Symptomatic ...

6/21/2019

There are days when you will be proud of yourself, and other days you will feel less than. That's just a normal process of letting go and moving forward in life. It could be that youre doing nothing wrong, and symptomatic, and sometimes, even when youre doing your best, will you experience symptoms of mental health issues, its not your fault, its just a chemical imbalance, why its important to always seek medical assistance whenever you feel an imbalance or do not feel like yourself. As a website builder, you experience a lot of difficulty managing passwords, opening accounts, managing accounts, getting your computer cleaned, being wary of hacking, it requires a lot of oversight to build a website, absent minded any competitions along the way. It is very expensive to build a good website, you have to invest a lot of time and energy to write and perform in front of an audience, being consistent, and not turned into something youre not, an unhappy person, or someone with a negative outlook, when speaking in front of any group of people. The better you do, the more likely you will be copied or imitated, sometimes in good humor, and sometimes to share how others have been affected by knowing you, thinking you deserve an undermined opinion of you, you are not able to argue about, or acquire information about you, without you knowing, by going through your personal spaces, and misconfiguring information, to suit their best interests or negative opinions of you. Any added justification for your lack of successes in life, is more fruit for their labor, to hurt you, dismember you, or take from you what is of value, thinking you do not deserve to possess the fruits of your own labor in life. We all deserve to work, and we all deserve to earn a living, and if you can stay well enough to do so, then all the more power to you. Spend less time interpreting the past, as others testing for your reactions in life trying to get you to flip out, or appear desperate, or non-sensical, and do your best to code with pride, as you see fit, without alarming others of the consequences or potential for harms you have suffered along the way, be kind.

Why We Have Clubs ...

Its by who you know in life, you are discriminated, based upon how you dress, either carry sensitivities toward others, or deemed to be insensitive by how you display yourself, what clothes you wear, how you speak, and how you behave, some wish not to be represented by others, when what you represent is of high value, then its better to lay low, then to be on top, its better to work hard for yourself, not work hard for others, and be disappointed when others are not pleased with you. Good women come a dime a dozen, those not spent, those yet to experience mental health issues, those who stay chaste, those who stay sober, and those who do not do drugs, those are they who are not yet jaded by life, by men, or by whoever has the capacity to hurt their feelings and their self-esteem in life. A woman's success is dependent upon how she feels about herself, how others feel about her, her femininity, her strength, her class, her intelligence, her popularity, how well she is liked, who she is admired by, her cares, her physical health not limited to athleticism, determines how tall she stands, not all who are confident are loved or get reinforcements in life, some grow up with hugs, some grow up with no hugs, the number of hugs you get in life does not determine your future potential to be loved or ability to give love to others, it's more important to love yourself, and be successful in life, whether that's by having a career, children, taking care of others, perfecting your skills in a trade, working from home, and being surrounded by the well, which does not always equal like-minded individuals spiritually or professionally, we are all made to feel well by what we have in life, some feel better having something someone else wants, and some feel better included, when they are deemed of higher priority than others, made to feel important, in some cases women are treated as friends, and in other cases women are treated as professionals, it all depends on who you work for and who you are friends with, not all women are treated the same, some for benefit, some for attraction, some for work, we are not liaisons to gather more support, although we make great middle men in life, able to read all sides well, born compassionate required to empathize and care for others, be ladylike, eventually all who get placed in the middle of arguments or sides, experience mental health issues, reading all sides. If someone is not willing to treat you as special, and puts you down in life, then they do not value you as much as you value yourself, the only way to be of value and to be valued by others is to love yourself first, and make yourself a priority in life, the better able you are to demonstrate that you care for yourself and have cared for yourself, the more likely others will come to believe that you did care for yourself, and when you cared for yourself, it was others who did not care for you that hurt your feelings, why your feeling down, not because of your own mistakes in life, don't look worse than it is, then things get worse before they become better, having a good life is all about seeing everything in the positive, that's letting go, remembering your good years, and not deflecting attentions away from you in life, by becoming ill by having poor memories of your past when self-harming, that's when others become disappointed with you, when you lose your sense of faith and wellness in life.

Unconditional Branding ...

If you want to be well respected in the community to which you work, be consistent, that means show up on time, and be a diligent worker, that doesn't just include eye contact, but it also means sticking to the assignment, and not veering off course, losing focus to personal issues in life. What you do outside of work, and what goes on in work are two separate environments, either cannot be used to save you from problems existing outside of work, that is something you have to figure out on your own, why in some environments you thrive and others you dwindle. Sometimes wellness is credited to people in an environment, and sometimes people get blamed for contributing to the mental health issues that others suffer from, because of their mistakes in life, unfit to be apart of socially. Whether you have a positive effect on the wellness of others, depends on how positive you are. You cannot control what people think. The primary experiment is looking for creation of someone to whom all can agree upon is in the wrong, whether for posting flyers, or for encouraging others to provide advocacy, that is how I cared at the time, there are other jobs, and ways to help others, online, by hashtag, or by promoting yourself online to others. Sometimes people hold negative judgments of others, it is all about how you appear, once you are not well, it's harder to be accepted by others, and easier to respond in the negative, that is self-harm, which is difficult to prove, so long as others continue to think that you think you are famous or are trying to be well known, that is the extent to which you can be hurt by others, getting you to think you are bigger than you are, raise your expectations of yourself, and then cause you harm, once those expectations are not met, for whatever is the basis of your insecurities in life. Friend loss, femininity, sobriety. If nothing is said, the worst is assumed, others will continue to base your faults in life, as you being too vocal about your associations in life, until your life becomes a nightmare, if life was never that way for you, then don't now believe that you are ill because others think less of you, or think that you are mentally ill, then don't help others, help yourself. Don't be sensitive to the moods of others, and when you arrive to a new place in life, give adequate time for others to move forward, that is giving yourself time, looking back, not to hold resentments, and for them not to fear that you hold resentments toward them. That is why it's important to continue your education and keep applying for jobs, and when you are not well, keep busy, whether that's reading, or writing, any form of therapy is a plus, especially when things don't work out, if journaling is new to you, then I would not suggest journaling online. Whenever you come forward about how you've been harmed in life, if these are just abstract assumptions about what others thought of you, then just learn how to let things go. However you are usually to blame, whether it's your addictions, or simply just being tired, the negative will always be assumed, and provoked until that outcome is produced, stomach upset, foul behavior, smells, mental illness, lack of social graces, or appearing gross to others, if they think you were that way because of a few bad experiences in life, then they will cast you out as being the negative experience and not care if you are not well now. Know that you deserve to live, and no form of embarrassments past are worth dying over or self-harming for. You are responsible for maintaining yourself, your input, and your output, all of which gets used to determine your intelligence in life and trustworthiness. The fears that others have are not contagious, but dont expect to be resilient to the stresses of others, it is likely as someone empathetic to be affected whenever someone expresses displeasure with you, to see if you again self-harm, learn from those incidences, and dont report on social media when you are harmed (we talked about this 2008), how it happens until thought to be deserved, then you become known as the person people hurt. The reputations you hold in life, matter, as someone speaking in public, whatever secrets you hold, are likely to get beaten out of you until told, verbatim or in the abstract to okay what is said about you, just ignore negativity. This is not a group project, wellness, you either are well or you are not apart of those who are well, and it is likely if you are not well, to distance yourself from others. That is a natural reaction to experiencing mental health issues, not a result of animosity or lack of positivity, its about wellness, for the sake of others wellness, while under attack, not socializing with others, thats fair. Dont ask for favors from others when you are not well, no one will help you if they think you are to blame for what is affecting them at this moment. If you need to repair your image repair your image, if its to gather more support, then work, if that still does not undo negativity toward you, then dont self-harm, even if others are making fun of you, or what keeps you well, or how you are staying well in life: running, reading, writing, now working. In life via association, not all will stand tall, everyone is entitled to their right to privacy, be there for friends you care about, and allow them to have space to organize their thoughts if they are going through something, drinking is not the solution. Do not blame those to whom you grow disassociated from, it is likely when you dont hear from others, if they dont see your face, worry or think poorly of you, the point of putting you down in life, is so that people are not affected by you, even if it hurts your feelings. People do not know you until you disclose what it is that's going on in your head, otherwise they likewise do not understand why you are not feeling well, allow them to assume its not disability, everyone has high hopes in life, some news is unnecessary news about self, be open, and allow whoever comes into your life, to trust you on their own good timing, dont self-harm. When you start working, or go out again, be courteous of others, be polite, dont come off too strong, dont forget to smile, dont drink if drinking leads to sex, dont do drugs if drugs lead to mental illness. Note that if you have had limited exposures in life, do not become defensive to when your good character is put to the test, that is to determine your level of street intelligence, book smarts, emotional intelligence, interpersonal skills, and wisdom to determine whether you are at fault. For whatever reasons by your exposures you felt rushed in life, thats okay, everyone is entitled to respond how they see fit, but its never okay to hurt others, never to communicate. There are better forms of communication, than violence, that includes self-harm, property damage, drug use, drinking, or expression of illness in public, being grotesque or flamboyant, not lady-like. Thats not leadership, thats mental illness, whenever you feel the necessity to help others by instructing them of what the issues are, that is when it becomes personal. If you see bad things happening, theres a way to get help without causing more harm to self and others. You will be interpreted as being condescending toward someone, who by that time, comes to understand that they know more about life, and youve been through less in life. Hopefully they will think no less of you. Who is at fault, when someone is harmed, who rarely goes out, and has spent the majority of their time, home studying? Are they to blame for the repercussions, of not managing their mental health issues, when out in public, and respond to a crowd, who is responsible then, when someone feels as though they are forced to explain themselves, whos behavior is responsible for whos?

When Things Get Overwhelming ...

When you're not feeling well, its not always necessary to explain why, or how you go sick, whats more important is doing your best to stay well. Its true that once people get the reaction that they want from you, they feel at peace. Don't expect to be understood or to receive compassions from others when you are not doing well in life or not feeling well, rarely when others are not feeling well do they have an ability to happy for others, its not all about you. Sharing your experiences in life, should not be for the purposes to articulate how decisions are made, whether or not you are apart of those decision making processes. It is more likely that upon sharing your experiences in life, when drunk or under the influence that others will be in disbelief of anything you say now, with regards to your past, deem everything you say as an admission of guilt, and that you knowingly shared in the past to become well known, and by your sharing had influence on the decision making processes of others, or bad decision making. When trying to express the mental health issues that followed, your tweeting in 2012, it is likely they will not remember what you did not share, which was finishing paralegal school after rehab 2011, and being treated for depression via TMS, if no one understands why you were the way you were when you were not well, then they will not be understanding of you now and expect the same, leave up only your bad moments for study to see what happens, and as experiment to blame you for anything negative occurring following you sharing insights when not doing well in life. That's the purpose for knocking someone down when they are up, to see what they have to say when they are down and then blaming them for anything they say when theyre down, if read by others or if influences the environment around them. For some their primary purpose in life, is not to help those they think are of harm to others, and so long as they can cast others out as being ill or mentally ill, the better they feel and in the right for hurting your ability to fix your image, present yourself as well, making it easier for you to be accepted as mentally ill, how they see you, as failure how they see you, or as embarrassment. Its no ones responsibility when a friend dies, it is the friends responsibility to get help, and the greater understanding we have of environmental factors affecting mental health the better.

Going Back to AA ...

6/19/2019

You can only make so many jokes and be forgiven before the jokes become about you and your life, with the trade comes a territory, everyone wanting to be on top, the smarter sounding one, with a better vantage point, a more enlightening point of view, upon appearances by you. That's usually to deflect attentions away from feeling sorry for you, and create wellness by encouraging others to not take you seriously in life, or your sobriety and good time earned. I have been to rehab twice, once in 2007 and once in 2011, both times for trying cocaine and relapsing on cocaine. What you cannot hide, will show up in your grades, underachieving in life, it's a pretty dramatic difference, going from Deans List to near Academic Probation and 3rd in your Class to Ds. #dontdodrugs – You cannot maintain positive momentum in life, no matter how much good time you've earned, by later drinking or doing drugs thinking its okay, because you are healed, and feel invincible to illness, as you get older, it becomes more and more difficult to recover from those injuries to self, and injuries to your image, while placed in recovery or punished for behaviorally appearing unkempt or not sound of mind, stuck in the past. If it makes any difference it was encouraged by my brother to write about how I was affected by the case growing up, to be honest we were playing SuperNintendo Donkey Kong throughout the whole Civil Trial, so not that affected, swimming and playing Billiards. My family gets very disappointed in me if I drink or relapse, and they are not afraid to criticize me to my face, don't expect anyone to baby you when you are not well, its everyones responsibility when they are not well to get well, don't feel sorry for yourself, whenever you have problems in life, and need help, sometimes others will tell you you brought this upon yourself, before ever realizing exactly what they meant. When you are experiencing bipolar its easy to think the wrong things, and in thinking the wrong things play victim or blame others, that's a natural reaction to feeling instability, just be patient, everything passes, so long as you stay positive, your outlook in life, no matter how daunting the task, will never change, always have good intentions in life, its your daily intentions that matter, do not seek approval from others to receive love, and do not seek to be known in order to be accepted, everything in small doses, including socialization, you cannot expect to bring people together over illness, and especially not over you when you achieve well, people will always pick and choose who to like, based upon how they make them feel, that's a choice who to listen to and admire, don't become frustrated because of your lack of influence upon others to make change happen, and do a better job of showing up and taking on more responsibilities as you get well, to help inspire positive change in others, don't expect to be credited, its likely your direction in life will always be questioned by others, by when you lose focus, fog, become unstable, or lose momentum.

If You Can't Win Don't Commit Suicide ...

6/18/2019

The quickest way to disempowerment is through the expression of displeasure or frustration, that's to take your power away by making you look gay or with obsession for the replication of the behaviors of others upon exposure. By viewing you others will always seek to illustrate how they have influenced you or changed you to credit themselves for your dispositions in life, failures, or frustrations, prove to what extent and by what set of circumstances you have self harmed. If its not your life, and its not your struggle than don't disempower those who have not yet achieved success or are still struggling, not all who struggle deserve to struggle in life, not by experiences in life, losses, or through the sense of empowerment, being able to be someone you love, treat you as lesser than, by reading how you speak to those you love, to see how you respond differently in professional relationships, how you have changed or whether you discriminate or hold negative judgments of others. There will never come a time when it is okay to make fun of others, or by their experiences in life, recreate, as though they have publicly shared those stories in public, and then use those experiences to similarly hurt them so if told, stories begin to match up, how similarly harmed, and in what ways you have been harmed. If you do not appear as the victim, or deemed at fault, then you get judged in the negative and the other viewed as the victim no matter how many harms you have suffered, why its best not to hook up, and be dumped, or hook up and be made fun of. Yes there is a double standard when it comes to making friends and hooking up, if you allow people to continue to make you look stupid then they will. Rise above, make love not war. Stop fighting peoples disabilities in life, and use the discomforts of others to your advantage to make them look like, feel like, or change or adapt to your judgements of them if in the negative. Don't be provocative toward those who are uptight, and don't heckle those who are nothing like. Everyone thinks that because they know you they are entitled to go through your computer and your things, if youre not of professional standing you have no right to help yourselves by going through my private spaces to help yourselves when help has been provided online. That's not a right, to view someone in private, you think deserves of being drained. #stopselfharm - This is not a group project.

When You Don't Hear from People ...

When you don't hear from others or see them, its easy to assume the worst about them, pick apart their weaknesses in life, or assume that because they are not present, or showing their face in public, that they are experiencing humility, or acknowledgement of their behaviors online past, as unacceptable, unprofessional, given their upbringing and education. Its usually people of high standing in life that do not care what others think, its usually people who have confidence and high self-esteems, that do not allow others to use them, not only seeing above, but also, being a wise decision maker, not easily conversing with others, with expectation of time being requested of them, in exchange for favors in regards to their wellness. As you come to believe in yourself, realizing your own potential, you will see yourself of value, and when that occurs, do a better job of representing yourself, when youre young you have the time and energy, not yet jaded, few bad experiences in life, and able to be positive around others, will full trust in yourself, that you are strong, and no one can hurt you. Sometimes you get hurt along the way, the stronger you appear, thinking you have not yet been affected by the same harsh realities as others. Your powers get taken away as soon as you get imitated in life, your disposition, to add to the successes of others, that's seeing how you are as a result of your experiences in life, and thinking that you are acting or with full awareness of the negative judgments around, its okay to live life fearlessly, don't be too hard on those who do. Don't make your nightmare the nightmare of others, and don't haunt others, by information you acquire, without their permissions in life, to see how they respond, if people are taken from their lives by people they know, or if unapproved of relationships occur, because they think that your opportunities in life are plentiful, to cast you out as jealous, vindictive, or someone who has moved on, to get you to respond like an offender, if they make you jealous, or take from you, that's wrong. I may have grown up around people in life, but that doesn't mean I understand their problems in life, or were close to them enough to understand the gravity of circumstances. You choose your surroundings, who youre close to, but you cannot trust those who investigate your private spaces, to determine your wrongs in life, to empower themselves. At some point you have to allow others to move forward, you cannot trust everyone. #stopsuicide – The trend is getting you to believe something has occurred to make you sick, then see how you respond thinking they are you, or have taken from you, something or someone of value to you, that is replaying out a course in the past, as publicly known to all.

Issue Spotting ...

The more unhappy you are the worse off you become. Those who are deemed not to be apart of, or who become unsuccessful are categorized as people who have either made mistakes they cannot overcome, or lack the foresight to be a good decision maker now. Not all who overcome hardships in life, are at fault for their own shortcomings, some of us are punished to graver extents, when we do not see well or achieve well, if you don't know what the issue is, don't be quick to judge those who are not doing well in life, you never know for what reasons others are unhappy. We used to think that unhappiness or displeasures in life, were a reflection of people expressing themselves, and nothing to do with who was in front of them, that's how we were raised to think, to be accepting of people no matter how unhappy they are, to accept that those feelings expressed were not a result of anything about us, or anything that we were doing wrong in life. If you maintain a positive outlook in life, all the more power to you, sometimes we become so positive that we overlook negativity, almost to a fault, only later on looking back do we see how we were being judged by others, as having to do with this, this, or that. If people know your story, they will use portions of your story, to interpret your present discussions as born from those experiences in life, and used as inference to what is meant by present discussions. The more experiences that can be added to you life, and the more you give power to previous experiences, the more likely you will become disempowered from the sharing of your experiences, and the more empowered others will feel, as they watch changes to the course of discussion, feeling on point the more they can relate, and the more they know about you, able to trigger similar discussions in the future, by knowing you, and having that ability to influence you, or affect how you feel emotionally, stir feelings within you. When you are present online, expect interpretations of you to be varied, based upon what people know about you, no matter what condition you are in, will judge you the same in the negative, there is plenty of opportunity to meet people in the future and build new relationships however irrespective of those past who may not be accepting of you now, whether your condition has improved or not. Common threads of animosity, circulate around jealousy and proving whether people are gay, face adversity, carry guilt, have acceptance issues, and whether they have rejection issues. Any way people can compare you to others, to prove reasons for your disabilities in life, or self-esteem issues, the better they feel, thinking you are a composite of the successes of others, not a product of your own good decision making. Its better to become successful without being known, than to have any influence upon others along the course of your recovery, its likely that as soon as you get better, no one will similarly credit you for your wellness. Theres no way, to stop bullying, apathy at best is the solution to bullying. Just as your motives are called into question for being successful or being well liked, you will always be attributed for your failures in life, as being reason for continued success now, discredited.

6/15/2019

Deleted all my apps. Taking a break from social media, to focus on work, until I feel well again, having difficulty moving forward, and being social, without being misunderstood. The less I try to entertain others negative judgments of me, the better off I'll be. Share only when well.

You Can't Undo Hate After Self-Harm ...

No one will ever see you as a victim, when you have every opportunity made available to you, any confrontations past, get used to prove whether you are confrontational now, they will do anything to provoke you, or to threaten you, your esteems, to prove you are not a victim, and that you are experiencing mental illness as a result of your own faults in life, those are people you cannot prove wrong. You cannot reverse a negative judgment of you, once it gets shared, whether as a joke, or to be funny, or to provoke reaction, that is the purposes for illustrating what hurts you, and what brings out your worst characteristics, whether you now feel inferior to others, and how you respond when your not doing well, not doing your best, and have struggled in life, people will be nice so long as you are around, and once you move on, less controlling of you, its okay to be on your own, and to receive help until you are able to stay well on your own, you cannot resolve your problems on your own, if no advice can make you feel better, than its you that needs to change your behavior in life, and do your best to be perfect here forward, its unfortunate, that you cannot take chances in life, given time to figure out life, past punishments, the gift of choice and being experimental with your time, having time available to you, not being put in a rush, is given to those who take good care of themselves and others, considered a good person, those are people able to move forward in life. You cannot compare those who during the course of their studies complete assignments, to those who in reaction to the times, want to figure out whats going on, or why people are getting sick, that's not a personal vendetta or because one is being defensive, or thinks is related to how others are feeling around them, once you are expected to be a working professional, you have to be yourself, even if you get hurt along the way, are expected to be independent of others, and whether they keep retaliating on you, to get you to empathize with others they've heard from you discuss why you got suicidal in the past, they will not cease to continue making you feel like those who have been watching you over the years, and will not let you move forward. The more you hurt, or self-harm, the more others let go, they really don't stop until you are broken, its usually the case that they think you are resilient to negativity and expect you to endure the hardship of negative judgments toward you, as though you have not grown as a person, worked hard, or done your best to work on yourself, those are people not on your team in life, as soon as they can illustrate the purpose for teams in life, by your failures in life, the worse off your life becomes, it doesn't matter whos in your life, they leave. Don't make your problems the problem of others to correct, do your best to get help and don't self-harm = loss.

Don't Put Yourself at Risk of Harm ...

Until you are well, or appear well, appear in front of others, otherwise work from home, and continue to make progress in life. Sometimes its by what youre doing in life, others feel affected by, as though they have a stake, or as though their lives are the only lives that matter at risk of being harmed, that's not lying to public or concealing information that would otherwise jeopardize ones own freedoms in life, usually when we go backwards that's to correct a problem, either that one has experienced in life as while interacting with others, or even a problem that others have with them, its not trying to read what others are thinking or were thinking past, its moving forward with clarity, or even with fear, no matter how disabled you become left to your own devices, fogged, or disillusioned, no matter how new you are to any profession, or group of people, you should not be afraid of what people think, once you instill negatives into your concept of reality, this affects how you interact with others, as trying to see (for fun) if they have intruded upon the same spaces as they have in life, the more the merrier, that's an ill suited type of comradere, that protects those who violate spaces thinking that its okay to violate the privacy of others, and justify those harms by further declaring others as mentally ill, deserving, or not too a victim, don't judge a person by their past, or previous associations in life, think people think they are famous before they become well known, judgmental toward others, hold yourself to high standards, its my life too. Everyone has to live through their mistakes in life, no failures in life are easy to overcome, if you know what triggers mental illness in others, to attack, take away, dismantle, misplace, and disorganize their viewpoints in life, by interjecting your fears through them, then what is gained by who gets lost, trying to figure others out in life, and lose track of their own lives, stay goal oriented.

Loss of Faith ...

Its not necessary for everyone to have faith in order for you to believe in yourself and move forward in life, all scared straight jokes aside, all offender jokes aside, all comparisons aside, all alikeness jokes aside, all infamy jokes aside, all size jokes aside, all gay jokes aside, all life philosophy jokes aside, all autism jokes aside, all abstract interpretation jokes aside, everyone takes things personally these days, and reads everything as if in defense of themselves and their beliefs, situate you until you conform to their ideologies of someone to be hated, or deserving of hate, and continue to question whether by what you know now, you thought then, and by what you think they thought then, they think now, and the extent to which you were able to achieve in spite of those negative judgments of you, and how many negative judgments were had of you, and how many people treated you as though you were stupid, and how much of that was deserved until you looked like how they think you look if you were designated in the wrong, people will only judge you by bad photos in life, and by bad moments in life, think you were like that your whole life, and equate everything leading up to those poor performances in life as a product of your poor decision making, it is true we are left with choices in life, and by process of elimination treated always compared to those who are doing well in life, and if next to appear to look better than, test to see how you appear among others worse off to see if you look or appear better, always crediting your wellness to whos around you, not crediting you for your own wellness as being a good decision maker, able to function and achieve in life on your own, everyone wants to make someone look desperate, everyone wants to see how people are in private, everyone wants to read into the lives of others, to see if how they appear on the outside is how they appear on the inside, credit wellness to others, treat people like followers or imitations of others who are doing well, and not credit one for their own personality in life and choices in life and exposures, once you treat someone as second hand not only do you devalue their sense of purpose in life, credited for their originality and hard work, people will always test those they do not trust, who they do not connect with often, have no bond with, to see how they respond when desperate, because they think they are better than and think it funny if everyone thinks less of them, and by rumor see how many rumors it takes until you become sick or mentally ill, and experience dysfunction in life, and credit you to the misfortunes of others, as though you were a poor decision maker, or bad influence onto others.

Sometimes in the heat of emotion, people say or do things unfavorable to their own best interests, you cannot resolve a problem, by hurting oneself, or the feelings of others. That's not the best route moving forward, learn to let go, and not take things personally, as directed toward you, how you self-identify, how others identify you, and for what reasons others identify you in the negative or as deviant from the norm. Some people are human, and some people are machines, whether living for positive purposes in life, their drives and motivations in life may be accelerated by different motivations and drives in life than those around them. For some making fun of people to their face, is considered funny, not all deserve to be made fun of to their face. Not everything is about you, so long as you assume that everything is about you, you become victim to your own thoughts and worries fearful of what people think of you, treated as a let down, a disappointment, or contributor to mental health issues, if you do not maintain steady ground, even tempered, balanced, and positive. Its those who are doing nothing to help you only themselves, who are disinterested with what happens to you in your life, so long as it does not affect them. Its not necessary to have people on board in life, or to gather attentions in life to causes or to have purpose in life, be recognized, you either help stop violence or don't speak to it, you either help prevent harms from occurring or don't speak to it, and if you are punished because others are not in agreement with anything that you have to say, well that's on them, not your responsibility to figure out what you have done or why you are not liked, that's others passing negative judgment upon you, looking for guilt, and causing you illness, until a guilty reaction is received, mental health issues arise, or treat you as though you dont already feel bad yourself, just to see if you care. You only have one life to live, its not necessary to put yourself down in life, based upon the stories of others you've been exposed to, what illnesses they have overcome, it's a shame that one who struggles in life, and has struggled in life, is treated as someone who deserves to struggle.

Taking a Stand Against Gun Violence ...

If you want to build a website, you can build a website. If you want to blog, you can blog. If you want to write a book you can write a book. There are so many ways to help make a positive difference, unrelated to harping on the problems themselves, you would think that more people would be supportive, of positive endeavors in life. There's a lot of sabotage when it comes to building a website, it's a huge responsibility, to keep up with your material, and review your work as you go, sure you can get feedback from editors, but you have to do the work yourself, no one can help you write. You are constantly having to go back and fix things, how does this sound to me, how will this sound to them, how does this sound now. Its more likely by the causes you support you will be hurt in life, resume tweaked, banner taken down, any shows of support for organizations you care about, to make you look bad. The easier it is for others to make you look bad, sometimes by the words you choose or how you say things, is to get things to the point of not respecting you, thinking less of you, not trusting you, and treating you as unimportant, or not smart, or about yourself. Everyone deserves an opportunity to work, and if you are able to create a job for yourself, those drives and passions in life, to write, and to help others when you are well and able to, not subject to disabilities in life, then allow the sharing of your experiences help to empower others, its not the job of people to punish people or to hurt people, that's the justice systems job, and if you are so disinterested in with others that you prefer to make their lives more difficult than so be it, not all illness, and not all suicide attempts are by people who have done things wrong in life, don't create similar circumstances and share stories from my past, to injure my ability to move forward, live your life. Before a project is complete, there are many stages of thinking during the problem solving process, you have to have a positive outlook in life to overcome mental health issues, disability, now negative judgments, alcoholism, addictions, and function as a member of society working. Not all are privileged with jobs in life, its important to be respectful of the jobs that people choose in life, don't be judgmental toward people just because they are not wealthy, or doing well in life. Wealth is not an indicator of failures in life, or just cause for failures in life, that's assuming privileges in life were abused, if a poor condition occurs, or maybe that's just people who love you being hard on you, or being hard on oneself to achieve better in life.

Rise and Shine Clementines ...

6/15/2019

The Weekend is here! What to do what to do, keep busy? Relax? Exercise? Watch a Movie? Shop? Or (D) All of the Above? All of the above. It seems like the more will fill our plates with responsibilities, the more we procrastinate getting things done, if you're a careful planner, you write things down as you go, and have an agenda, not all are that organized when it comes to accomplishing their goals in life. Have a system and stick to it.

The Following Reminders have been suggested by trueyoulifestyle.com:

1. Write a To Do List
2. Get Up Early
3. Get Ready Straight Away
4. Don't Start Something You Know Will Waste Your Time
5. Keep Your Space Tidy

Why is keeping a "to-do list" important? Its hard to keep track of everything your doing, the better you feel the more you want to get done, and sometimes theres more to get done than hours in a day, that's okay, you're not alone, if your one of those people more power to you. If you are someone who tries to accomplish at least one thing important each day for a few hours, new to recovery, the workforce, or just returning from leave, pace yourself.

"Get up early?" Why is getting up early important? The longer you sleep in and put off your day, the harder it becomes to start your day, hours wasted lying in bed, watching tv. Solution: If you're gonna stay in bed all morning be productive, there are phones and tablets now with the internet, which is a plus and a minus when it comes to getting out of bed in the morning, you can actually work from bed, that's the scary part. Reading always puts me in a good mood, feeling accomplished, it settles me mentally, just like running does, keeps my mind calm. If you are someone who doesn't feel good unless you are doing something that makes you feel good, than make sure to free up time for activities you love, whether it be blogging, and do so during the hours when your full attention is not required of you, save your energy for work always.

"Get Ready Straight Away?" That doesn't mean just shower, is it time for the whole shebang yet? Perfume and after shave scents, I think we've phased out of the expectation that professionals or wealthy individuals are supposed to smell the part. Everyone's pretty much toned it down in that department, fresher scents are preferred, like just getting out of the shower, fresh.

"Don't Start Something You Know Will Waste Your Time?" Life is not short, sometimes too long, and you'll only feel bad about yourself, if you're doing something you're not supposed to be doing, ever get that feeling? As soon as someone tells you not to do something, and you do so, like drinking in sobriety or shopping on a tight budget, or cramming before an exam? The better you prioritize yourself, the less time you waste, the more energy you'll have to excel in life.

"Keep Your Space Tidy" Its not just for looks, the better put together you look, the better you perform, we are not all being watched at the same time, that's impossible, but in case someone is watching, their judgment of you should matter, even if you are not judging yourself comfortable in your space the way it is, presentation does matter, the less disorganized you look, the better treated you will be in life, disorganization is a sign of mental health issues, inability to keep up with chores. Stay organized. It shouldn't matter what medication you are on, keep up with your chores, remember where things are, and if anything gets lost, don't panic, sometimes its hard to keep up with your personal inventory, never have fear of losses in life. Ive been told if money can replace it, its not a problem, so be it, learn to let things go.

When Its Hard to Stay Focused ...

Its easy to listen to criticisms in your head, sometimes the same criticisms of you replaying over and over again, whether that's a current delusion of something past you recall being said to you, or seeing the past in a negative light, its up to you to stay positive. There will always be room for misunderstanding as you recall your past, and when people go through your things to be critical of you, its because they think you need to be put in your place or corrected, always stay in tune with your surroundings, don't draw attentions to yourself, because your having an emotional day, going through a difficult time, or just don't feel like talking to anyone. Its when youre in a negative place, that others will be hostile towards you, that's to test your limits in life, once someone sees you looking down in the dumps or negative, that's how you will be treated as though you are gone or have lost faith, don't have positive purpose in life, or have lost your positive vision in life. Not all people are the same, you have to be able to get yourself out of a bad place in life, if you want to better your life, the more you self harm, drink, or relapse on drugs or alcohol, the more ammunition you give to others to shame you, blame you, or hurt you with their words, subject yourself to revictimization, ridicule, or taunts. Remember your best years Its not moments in life that break us, it's the power you give to those moments in time, or to the things that people say, to you directed toward you or not. In the past, when not knowing others were watching me, its understandable that others would play with my audience to see if I reacted to others in tune with others sense of humor, as you get older, you wonder why, it becomes clear that even at your best no one takes you seriously, you wonder how much dirt about you is being circulated and why. Its common for people to want you to think that you are bigger than yourself, or think you are someone you are not, allow those disagreements in perspective to occur, they will always wonder if you knew what people were calling you behind your back whether you would agree if in their shoes, and that's how you lose your sense of self and purpose in life, hearing arguments directed toward you and away from those who have been experimental with your identity, or people around you. They will always feel like the bigger person if they can identify to others what the issue is about you, to feel smarter than you, or to make you look small, or at fault for your own misfortunes or failures in life. Its really not about you at that point, the more selfish you become protecting your own interests or wondering about whys, the more offense you take to commentary present and past, that's not the solution, and only feeds into the purpose of others to put you down in life.

The Same Information Rarely Makes You Smarter ...

The whole purpose of learning is to be able to read, understand, and be able to speak well. That's the primary purpose of education. So to blog on Twitter and tell jokes was a far cry from the purposes for my legal education, which was to write. Whenever you start a project before its finished, youre likely to be met with dissatisfaction, thinking things could be better, or your condition presently is not well suited to represent a project of that caliber. Whenever you do things with care that care is shown. Others may try to dismantle your privileges and successes in life, undermine you or your abilities to affect your confidence in life, but you have to keep going. Whether or not you can relate to others, whether or not you think things are about you, maintain steady ground, in what is your health, allow others to be judgmental towards you, especially after viewing how you are in private, as expressing oneself, compared to how you share in public, versus how you share in school. They will be looking for the same confidences in life, and be looking to read through you to determine where you are at presently, to figure out what is wrong with you. Writing online is not easy, you have to remember a lot, remember conversations, remember your past interactions, remember your life, remember what you've written in your phone, remember what you've written in your computer, remember what you've written for a book, remember what you've written for quotes, and remember what you've written on your blogs. Its important to keep separate tabs of the work you create and what you consider to be your finished and final product. Its not in your best interests to share before you have finished working on something, whether it's a book, or a website, or blog, even a newsfeed, its important to be as complete as possible. You will always be judged by how dense the information you provide is, whether you are detailed and clear, make sense.

Think Positively of Yourself ...

The less you share about your past the better, and less likely your past will be recreated presently, that's usually to do you a disservice in life. As soon as you share your philosophies in life, people think you have always thought that way, and that's how you achieved success, not taking into account, that you've adapted overtime to how you've been treated by others. People will assume that if you sound well now, that you look well, or if you look well, that youre doing well in life, that's not always the case, sometimes, we struggle to keep up with appearances in life, that's a normal process of aging. You can't reverse your years, through exercise or proper diet, if you don't take good care of yourself, eventually the years you did not excel in life or achieve to the minimum standards of acceptance by others, catches up you. Everything comes earned in life, nothing given to you, you have to work for acceptances in life, and you have to work hard to achieve your goals in life, don't let what other people think, affect the decisions you make for yourself, and for those around you. Just because you're not doing well in life, doesn't mean that there is something wrong with you, everyone struggles with their health, it's not a unique experience to have a bad day. We all make bad decisions from time to time, when left to our own devices, your computer is your right to privacy, your phone is your right to privacy, your accounts are your right to privacy, no one has the right or privilege to go through your things to make decisions about you without your permission in life. There never comes a time, when it's important to disclose personal information about yourself to others upon being asked, if it's none of their business, it's usually the case that your past will be used to hurt you, and affect your present and future ability to achieve in life. No apologies necessary, especially if going backwards only makes things worse, there is no sense in further empowering those who think less of you, by bringing yourself or others down in life, not achieve, you can do your best, and still not achieve the same level of wellness in life ever again, and that's just something you'll have to accept, about being mistreated in life, or punished by others because they were not accepting of your condition, at the time, they knew you.

Life After Advocacy ...

It's important to care and contribute to organizations and or causes that provide support and assistance to those in need. How you choose to support others is your choice, whether through organizations or on your own provide a service to others, either as an influencer, a voice of reason, or positive outlet, that's your choice. No one can drag you into believing in anything you yourself do not feel is important or a pressing issue, some of us are ahead of our time, not always in a good way, some too pessimistic to think that change can occur, and the means by which we seek change favorable to the best interests of all. How anyone arrives to well after trauma, is different for everyone, it's your life, you choose how to cope best with your own life circumstances, the better able you are at coping with events occurring in your life, the better suited you'll be to assist others when coping. Some by experience know how to help others, some even trained professionally to assist others during times of need. You have to be doing well in life, to be of service to others, it's hard to help others, when you have not reached a point of stability in your life, so long as you are doing everything you are supposed to be doing, we hope that things will pan out for you in life, and if you can help others achieve the same confidences in life, well then all the more better, until then we are usually required to work on ourselves, encouraged to do so, so that we may be of service to others, that goes for people in recovery, motivated to help themselves so that they can help others, those are the primary cornerstones of being able to provide assistance to others in recovery from addiction and alcoholism. Sometimes you have to go through extreme lengths to get well, even when you think you're at your best, you can still fall apart, although your experiences in life may empower others to do well achieve better in life, or believe in themselves that much more, don't allow your failures in life to minimize your successes in life, just as much as the health of those around you matters, so does your own health, if you are not well it becomes impossible for others to feel well about you, trust you, relate to you, or help you, don't be stubborn, recognize when you are not present, and do a better job of conforming to standards of normalcy around you, living up to negative expectations of you only does you a disservice in life, to ever try to compensate for any quality you're deficient in by highlighting another skill in life you have yet peaked in professionally. Once you are deemed not well, everything about you gets called in question, how you live your life, what meds you take, your sleep cycle, where you work, who your friends with, who you date, what's in your phone, what's in your computer, how far along you are in your dissertation, how long it took you to finish your masters, you get judged ultimately by the length of time you are able to stay well, and any evidence that suggests inability or illness, gets used to justify discriminating you now, or holding reservations about you. Choose wellness, and surround yourself with people who believe in you. The longer you stay well, the more opportunities become available to you in life, why people stay sober. #endaddiction ... Addiction is not just about drug use, any mind altering substance used to compensate for an unwanted emotion, or discomfort, is considered a cause for debilitation of one's condition. Co-dependency does no better job of healing the mind of physical attachments, you go through many withdrawals in life while in recovery, recovery from trauma is not the same as recovery from addiction, and if you are experiencing pain because you are in withdrawal from things that made you feel good, then you will be judged as being dependent on others or substances to make you feel good, and treated as a user, punished. Be independent. You are not required to lean on others in times of need, there are professionals to assist you, in the confidentiality of their work spaces, if no one respects you, it becomes impossible to provide the same confidences to others, treated as paranoid, unimportant.

Unwanted Associations ...

Whenever you decide to come forward in life and share your story, take your time, we do not all become victims at once, sometimes during the telling of a story, others may become defensive, as looking bad by comparison, think you intend to hurt the reputations of others, while anticipating your shares in life, about your life, don't be surprised when others stop talking to you, or when you have lost friendships in life, allow people to move forward in life, irrespective of your wellness or concerns in life. It is not their fault for being defensive toward your needs in life, whether that is to validate self, secure your interests in maintaining wellness, or diffusing their ability to blame you as not being well, and because you're not well, affecting the wellness of others, it's not by what work you accomplish that keeps others from harming you, it doesn't matter how well you are, sometimes it's only until after it's too late, that others stop provoking you causing you illness, or garnering support amongst others to contribute to your social well being and wellness thinking you deserve to be put down in life, as how you are when you are under the influence of substances, and hurt as though you do not deserve an education or career, we all deserve to live life, free from interference from the interests of others, so long as we keep in mind the importance of wellness, allow those holding leadership positions in life, to take care of what is above and outside of your individual controls in life, those are they who determine whether you are fit to live home, fit to attend meetings, fit to date, and fit to work, it is by receiving permissions in life that you become able to achieve again in life, never treat anyone who is not well or who has yet to realize their potentials in life, as above their means, and as being above their means of lower intelligence because they don't fit in with the majority's standard of wellness, and as able as others to perform at work and in life, socially. That has nothing to do with them, and everything to do with to whom illness is passed on to, what illnesses I have suffered from are not hereditary, but caused conditions upon disclosing personal information, to assign blames to people I know to cause separation based upon wellness and sides agreed upon. Why I left dinner, my family was better off when I was living alone, than to see them now, worse off in life, is disappointing to me, and because I am not able to perform at work, and do not have the same stamina as I used to have in public I am suffering, as a member of society who is suffering, I do not think that those sufferings should be made public, to further worsen my condition, as read, as though I am what I am exposed to via work experiences or whether someone after reading my resume thinks they have the same knowledge as me, and then rejects me and creates conditions to see if what jobs I apply for are because I relate to or whether strategic to tell a story, I apply where there are jobs and by where I am accepted, and based upon my own wellness at the time of acceptance.

Being Judged by Who You Talk To ...

6/29/2019

All roads lead to one, success or failure, and based upon how you look back on your life, affects and influences the decisions you make moving forward, you are responsible for learning at which moments you put yourself at risk of harm, and at which points in life, others became apathetic toward your successes in life, thinking you more or less deserved to look and feel well, in place of their own best interests chose to separate or stay separate from. When you separate yourself from society, that's your choice to separate yourself from others, if you do not know that you are being overlooked by others, then upon the happening of any separation from others, interests of well being, wellness is determined, and by your choices in life deemed relevant to your current condition, relevant to your past, relevant to your knowledge and awareness of being watched or judged by others, and relevant to determine whether separations in the past were for the same reason separations now are occurring in your life, this is common to those who do not recognize their mistakes in life, it really doesn't matter who you let back into your life, no separations thereafter, after having achieved a better condition on your own go toward them trying to hurt you upon moving forward in life, as reminded of your past upon seeing them, relapse. Separations hurt, it's not fun to experience mental illness, and it's not fun to be on your own in life, that's not proving you are tough being out alone, that's not proving you are good being out alone unharmed, that's not proving that the world is safer with you putting yourself at risk of harm, and not being harmed. So long as you put yourself at risk of harm, it doesn't matter whether those overlooking overall think negatively or poorly of you, to get an accurate read on which rumors are known about you and which rumors known about you are hurting your reputation in life, and causes others to react apathetic toward you, or let you go in life, as bringing others down by your lack of understanding of the issues, or think that your wellness shows that you are immune or insensitive to the sufferings of others and have not suffered yourself in life, you will always be judged currently by what is stated to determine whether you were mature at the time you made choices, and whether your self esteem was harmed by poor judgments of you, by those close to you, or by those who you came to trust in life, no one takes responsibility for your wellness in life, once you become an adult, that's something you have to figure out on your own, how to stay well and get help, don't expect anyone to carve out a path for you in life or footsteps for you to follow to achieve wellness in life, after experiencing mental illness. Not all mental illnesses are the same. And for different points in our life, and for different reasons in life, do we experience mental health issues.

Whats Ghetto ...

6/29/2019

As you mature and realize your potentials in life, you begin to recognize how dependent you were on others socially, and begin to feel more independent of others, the more proactive you are on your own the better, even if you are not social, its possible to stay well, by staying active members of organizations, and while maintaining jobs function as a normal member of society. If you are a rape crisis hotline counselor, who you date matters, and if you leave a relationship you cannot date those you like, or go by who likes you, date causally, that would be inappropriate to date, and give advices to others, who have been negatively affected by their experiences in life, be able to provide advocacy. A part of you may always wonder, if you take on serious commitments in life, what your life would have been like had you gone out and dated publicly, not all are privileged to get picked up or date normally. Be forgiving of those who get started late, and learn how to be friendly toward those who like them, and not date everyone they like, for affirmations in life, that's not how to look well, or to be able to provide advocacy to others, some can date causally, but if you are to provide assistance to others in crisis it is important that you do not date or do drugs, once you do drugs, you cannot work the hotline, you cannot function in school and when all you have left is your social life, eventually those positive experiences no longer exist, as your condition worsens, and as you develop mental health issues, unable to take calls, unable to hook up, until you end up out alone, and doing drugs on your own, that's how devastating addiction can be, if you live alone, don't subject yourself to harms or negative judgments of others, by switching gears in life to a lifestyle that interrupt your career choices in life, or limit your potential intellectually or professionally. I was on Deans List, and got the job at the Boulder Das Office and had begun training as a victim advocate, because of my then addiction to cocaine, I was unable to take the job, and had left shifts on the hotline, I used to take shifts at night, and had one boyfriend who called me on occasion at night, we were not close enough for me to arrange visits myself, and then went on to date someone who had courted me on Facebook. Whats Ghetto is not learning from your mistakes in life, and sharing stories about your past, as though you are proud of having been associated to different types of people in life, as neighbors, and still able to achieve in life, that's how you will be remembered by the moments you can be defined as someone not reliable, and then afterwards treated like a functioning addict who brings harm upon themselves and others, and as associated as a member of the helping professions knowingly, hurt yourself, upon being cheated on, left. That's my right to privacy, and no ones business to know why I got left, there was no reason why I got left, he just didn't want to see me anymore, thought we should go our separate ways, and was confronted in the hallway by a more mature person, a bartender in Denver Colorado. Nice enough to introduce herself. If people know your story, then as knowing your story, think they have a right to recreate circumstances and take from you, whether or not you feel offended or made jealous by others advances in public.

How You Look v. Your Mentality ...

If youre not fit youre not fit, and if for some reason others feel more intelligent than you based upon how you are treated by others, look, appear, or by what they know about you think they know how best to articulate how you make them feel when they are around you, it is likely you may become sick as nice or dependent upon others for reassurances in life or friendship, if you look like a reject and not selected or picked, deemed as well, then it is likely that you may get hurt upon being nice to someone, who assumes you are being nice for advances in life toward you, sometimes being nice to people feels good, and if others do not want to be nice to you, to make you feel good back, that means they are not interested in you. You have to be well to photo well, and if you look overweight in photos and if you are overweight you will likely not look well in photos, especially photos taken by others, best to take photos of self, and learn how to photo, before sharing any photos of you taken by others, you never know, whats going on affecting your facial features or opinions about you, and what spooks others to see you strong, doing well, or unaffected by the negative judgements of others, as though you are going along with the wellness of others, whether you are independently well on your own, what keeps you going in life whether its being apart of, and also taken into account is your ability to socialize and be well liked while drinking or on drugs, to determine you level of intelligence to determine whether you get affected by crowds in life, why you think its okay to be yourself in public and not maintain your appearances as conservative, that's letting you know that its not safe to let your guard down, and that you are being judged by others based upon your comforts in life, and whether your wellness is a result of being raised thinking you are above others, and put down in life or making others feel not as healthy as someone who appears positive to test to see whether they feed off the negative energy of others, or raise themselves to higher esteems without permissions in life, feeling good (as acting) around those who are depressed, and trying to make others feel good, because you think that you can make others feel good, know your speed in life, as you will be judged as how you interact with others, in public, and by those negative judgments separated as having problems, not yet realized. Are you gay? It is always who hurt you, that you are reminded of the minute you get sick, recall every statement that made sense to you, when you were not well, and forget all the good times and fun moments you have spent with them, that's someone who thinks they are above you treating you as less than or stupid not an equal, those are the types who think you need leadership, and by proving to others you need leadership, not independent by your own devices, and the worse decisions you make letting others into your life, without recognizing how bad images are created, it will be too late to go backwards and clean up your past, even if you were 18 or 19 or 21, you are who you hook up with, if you don't get started dating until college, than you are set back in life, as being immature, the more mature selected over the independent, available upon request, that is not your ticket to positive judgments of you, you are likely to not be seen as a caregiver, and more likely as upon having read your work, turn you into looking like the offender as responsible for negative judgments toward them by those watching, and without you knowing become sick, and dependent on substances before you realize why you feel ill.

Grudges and Beliefs ...

Whenever you backtrack in life, and realize what opportunities you have missed due to your inability to care for yourself and others, you begin to feel bad. Its no surprise why you have fewer connections in life, eventually people let go, the worse off you become, people tend to focus more on themselves and their families, theres a small window of opportunity to improve yourself and be let back into peoples lives, but passed the point of non-acceptance its difficult to be yourself when around others, favoring those against you as being right about you, and forgetting who you were prior to making mistakes in life, or failing to maintain positive momentum, reacting to others, not responding with ease, and behaving in a way befitting among those who attack the good characters of others, to their defense, doing yourself a disservice in life. Its important not to interfere with the progress of others in life, whenever one relationship ends, a new relationship cannot reach a point of amends, if there is trail of doubt concerning the fitness of your health, and mental health status, its when you are open to interpretation, you are more likely to be interpreted as worse off than you are, from your own standpoint, offered few reassurances from others, people will not know if you are well if they do not see or hear from you, and too many absences from social activities, gets assumed that you have reached a point of isolation, you have yet to realize, or a point of no return when it comes to your sobriety and recovery, leaving support groups is sign that you are not in need, and once you become in need after having left, and not continued to maintain your sobriety you life become more difficult upon returning, that is things may seem well leaving but sometimes its not until things become worse do you realize that you need help, its then that no support group can help rehabilitate you, and that's the point you should try to avoid in life, having your options be limited in life to a few negative judgments of you, until an actual negative judgment of you is assumed and preferred rather than allowing you to move forward in life. So you maintain connections in life records of who past you have been associated to, is how you will be deemed as accepting of those who have caused harm to you or others, some do things to survive and are not deemed as culpable as those who knowingly use or misuse substances to their detriment in life, don't do drugs to have friends in life, you should be able to socialize without succumbing to addictions in life, and anytime your behavior misrepresents those who are able to function without with use of substances, you get labeled the addict, your decrease in positive functioning or lack of enthusiasm toward activities that you used to enjoy, studying, gets judged as you being in the negative, that something is wrong with you, and that you deserve to be punished for not staying well, that's how you lose privileges in life. Its not an attitude or a look seriousness, and its not a very approachable look to say the least, to appear professional and under pressures, from being bad, before you are able to explain the unrealized pressures you faced, along the way, the minute you go back out your life becomes worse. #dontdodugs, stay in tune with what keeps you motivated in life, work to work, not for acceptance, and work to work, not for notoriety, and work to work, because you love what you do, and always stick to what youre good at, have faith in yourself, believe in yourself, you become more of a joke the more you rely for others to believe in you when youre not well, and the worse off you become as co-dependent on acceptances, the harder reality hits upon getting well and the more difficulty you have maintaining wellness in spite of your past.

Being Controlled by Others, via Voice ...

If others think they can control psychosis via your description of the experience of psychosis, then they think if they can control you, and have knowledge of the ability to control you, that via their words, lead you back to work that matches those words spoken. That's reading your writing, and meditating on portions of your writing when they think you have done someone else wrong in life, and everything else becomes worthless, that's to justify a taking, as though you were in the wrong, are in the wrong, and have always been in the wrong, and while in the wrong, and under psychosis, or the impressions of others, gone, and by being able to find evidence that you are gone, hurt you while you are gone, and that's living with disability, being controlled by others, when your higher ordered thinking gets misdirected or your wellness controlled by taunting, in a negative way affecting your best decision making, that's sometimes how others, choose whether to be around you or not, able to tell when you are well, for some this condition is acceptable, once you self harm, its difficult to be trusted, once you let go, its difficult to go back to others, so long as others can argue that you hurt others, by not staying put, and not waiting, then they can argue you have fixated on a similar wrong, and by fixating on a similar wrong are now wrong, as having been attached to someone else, by choice, and by that choice now sick, to justify why you don't feel good enough to date, as though by your own wrongs caused separations, or illness in others who then attacked you upon separation, and when gone, everything you do gets used against you, to determine whether you will be able to get well on your own, what keeps you going in life, and whether others have the power to control you, so long as you are controllable made upset, no one will trust you, the benefits of having mental illness, is that upon experiencing psychosis you cannot think, and upon not feeling well, if upset, your head burns, this is why they give mental illness and physical illness to those they deem to have tempers, so that they become immobile and not able to hurt themselves or others, that's a purposeful disability to burn someone out in life, or to put someone out in life, or to not date until a person is well, or to mistrust someone who is well and argue that they are not behaving well or doing well or hooking up, as justification for their mental illnesses or stupidity in life, needing help from others is a caused condition, if you are not glowing social, talk to people, people think you are an angry person, and if you lack beauty think insecure as though you need affirmations to become beautiful or to feel beautiful some women are strong on their own and do not need boyfriends, its upon separations in life and upon being attached that others are given control and influence over you, via love.

How to Know When to Stop ...

6/29/2019

The point at which you should stop talking is when you feel compelled to explain yourself, by that point you are worse off emotionally and only do yourself a disservice to explain how you are feeling, instead of allowing a moment of silence. The minute you become defensive you are deemed to be in the wrong, the minute you choose humor, over having class, and being well spoken is the minute you are deemed to have either done something wrong past, or are doing something wrong currently, to which your delusions take hold, as though (assumed) you think others are reading along reading your blog, or intended to communicate to those in your environment, those are the type of experiments done on bloggers, how they fair online, versus how they fair in public, and whether either world, brings them happiness, and what creates satisfaction in life, the wellness of those around them, or their own, to determine whether they are selfish, only care about themselves, and what is the cause for inability to perform, or lack of work output, that's what gets measured upon going through your things, to determine whether you are of value, or if your value should be given to another more fit, to represent the set of ideals you write or wish to represent, you can only be yourself, you cannot preach to others or explain emotions, that you have not already been through yourself, the more your story gets changed the graver identity crises you suffer in life, made to empathize with those who do not think well of you and respond to them, or made to empathize with those who others feel sorry for as having been exposed to your presence as not well, and make you look like the odd ball out. This occurs whenever you begin a task, or take on a project that you are not prepared yet to handle, such as beginning a new job, or starting a new relationship before you are well, sometimes you do not have a choice in life and have to work, other times you are given time off, to rest recuperate and work when you are ready, many of lifes lessons are learned via the triggering of events in your life currently to teach you a lesson about for what reasons you were punished in the past, to see if you make the same mistakes in life, to figure out at what point you lose consciousness awareness of the negative judgments of others, able to be yourself, and function and perform, and at which points you give up in life, and why, for what reasons you are able to maintain focus, and for what reasons others push you to do things you do not want to do, and what types of reactions those events produce in your life, wellness, or sickness, illness, or perspective, or simply just prove their poor judgments of you correct, a reject.

When No One Respects You ...

6/29/2019

Usually by the following are you not respected in life, or is respect lost:

1. Trying to prove friend loss due to speaking badly of others.
2. Taking ones argument that friend loss is cause of illness leading to death.
3. Misusing the private records of someone with mental health issues to prove they are the causes of their own illnesses in life, they suffer from.
4. Disproving breakups as a cause of suicide, then testing for love and breakups to witness for self causes for illness and suicide

5. Happiness, maintaining happiness, and they hurting a persons happiness to see if when they are made to be unhappy, feel ill toward self or others.
6. Testing persons for disease to prove persons carrying disease are spreading mental illness because they have a disease, by rumor, until a person is given a disease.
7. Misinterpretation of stories told, and order in which stories are told, as being told because one bears guilt, and that being put in a rush in life, means someone has done wrong, or been wronged by others, and that everythings about life expectancy.
8. Moving forward in life, through non-acceptance, and feeling better upon disappointments in life, made to look like the bigger person.
9. Feeling right only when another is suffering, and when the wellness of someone is insulting to a person, designate them as mentally ill, as being affected by wellness in the negative.
10. Causing a person to feel ill, by breakups to see if they cause harm to themselves and others, in order to prove they are of harm to self or others.
11. Knowing the causes for a suicide attempt 2009, try to recreate those circumstances and retaliate on a person, until how they were harmed is not as big of a deal as how they harmed themselves, and were a product of their own discomforts in life.
12. Seeing how progress affects the progress of someone in recovery, whether they are not participating online, out of jealousy, to prove whether the wellness of others has caused them illness in the past, and if proven now, proves for ill reasons then.
13. Separating a person from sources of wellness, reliability, or friendships, to create scenarios in a persons psyche that is usually found upon people of lower intelligences, via bondings and separations to see if someone is mentally ill on their own, or to punish them as not deserving of recovering from mental illness, hurt them again, until they hurt themselves, and then for those hurt upon self-harm claim victim to having cared for them.
14. Hurting someone until, everyone who has cared for them, feels victim to them, because they cannot stay well, and that because upon loving others, they get put down as mentally ill, if they cannot stay well on their own, deemed not a keeper.
15. Hurting someones esteems, until everyone past is separated upon someone becoming not well or mentally ill, and becomes better than via obtaining a record in life.
16. Waiting for expectations of illness to occur, to be proven right about a person or a group of people who are deemed at fault, and allowing that illness to fester without providing assistance to them, and continuing to convince others they are mentally ill because of their own misconduct, or because their behaviors toward others.
17. Treating those who do not respond to others, and having something wrong with them, and further justifying that there is something wrong with them, so long as they get stories of moment they were bullied, and prove the bullies right about them so long as they can prove that they are mentally ill now, and were mentally ill then.
18. Allowing others to call a person out on their shares, as being inappropriate, and then further illustrating those blames, by being nice to them, seeing them, and then hurting them, so if spoken about forces them to articulate what made them feel uncomfortable to be driven to certain points in life, and retaliated upon treated as mentally ill, to see if one experienced mental illness upon exposure, or carried guilt.
19. So long as you are nice and incapacitated due to not knowing or understanding how you were hurt, and by what got left up online about you, for study, its is your responsibility afterward to correct those negative judgments toward you, not to allow others to convince others you are mentally ill until you become mentally ill, so that they can feel better about having left up writings, and take away your ability to speak well, so long as others can attack you and control you, prove you are mentally ill and that what you said when you were upset, trying to understand others, was purposeful to cause harm to them, and by being purposefully harmful to them you suffered, and because you suffered, they are not responsible for your later sufferings or rejections from others.
20. When others begin to identify with how you self describe your characteristics or traits, and upon review of your records, to see how you respond to someone who is the same or similar to you, whether you become mentally ill, as put down, bullied, or subjects brought up, to see how you respond as someone who allowed things to happen to them in life that caused them mental illness, and not be viewed as a victim.
21. Once you are not viewed as a victim, everyone thinks its fair game to f-k with your head, and experiment with how you think think its justified to retaliate on you, and treat you as the offender, upon viewing you photo'd to yourself, as someone who had confidence while dating, and while confident dating were confident with your body, and while confident with your body thought you were invincible or so likeable that you could pick and choose who to date, and left people because you thought you were better than, that's not how dating works, they see you they see you, and that's that.

Building a Website, & Helping Others ...

6/29/2019

Its not just who you help that matters, affecting your health, but its what you do in order to maintain positive momentum, when coping with whatever mental health obstacles come between you and your ability to help others. Yesterday stopped by the LAPD Station in Santa Monica, to get life advice, and upon recommendation, was given two choices to get a mental health evaluation. I then went to the ER at UCLA, where I stayed for a couple of hours, before attending my Mother's birthday. Its always before an explanation is provided that negative assumptions are made, and its during that time, when you are not aware that some know this and some know that and that, that it becomes clear to you that who is present does not know where you have been that day, or why you are not feeling well. Always get a medical evaluation, when you are not feeling well, that's how to detect whether you have been harmed, and who has done that harm to you, be interviewed, and assessed as to your mental health, to determine whether you are at fault for your own mental health issues, whether these mental health issues were caused to you, whether you are well now, and suffering from something outside of the control of the hospital or LAPD, and whether you are capable of regaining control of your outlook. Its now 2019, and its hard for me to be out in public, I used to run outside everyday 2014-2017, and stopped running as much 2017-2019, I just started running again, I usually run every day on a good month, that's how I lost weight, and that's how I gained weight, when I stopped running. Don't call me a "pervert" because you do not understand why I do not date, or how I became bicurious, that's a body image issue, it really has nothing to do with sex. When you do not love yourself, its hard for others to love you, and when you cannot get love from others, and others are overstimulating you to get attentions in life, that causes one to feel love, keep yourself busy, self-stimulation is not the correct response to overstimulation, heckling, bullying, breakups, rejection, or mental illness, it only makes things worse, whenever you give in to sin, its your own mind that rots, whenever you give in to sin, its you who suffers at the benefit of others, who seek to put you down, create a situation where everyone thinks youre a low-life. That wasn't the Homer joke, its that I was away at law school and had been so separated from my Father, that we never played golf together, that's what golf lessons were for, I was too busy trying to marry my Ex, and then finished law school and get a job, never getting to a point of making my Father proud of me, until now. I don't have Dad issues, Im very close to my parents, that's not why people date older, you date by who likes you, that's how dating works. Im a shy person, not girly in public, only with boyfriends. Everyone else, meets "little Ronnie" – Don't put me out, by posting photos of me online, then cast me in a negative light, HRW was the company who suggested "genital mutilation" as a topic. I chose to focus on preventing gun violence and stopping school shootings, submitted a study to CU Boulder's Human Research Committee connecting events, and offering a way out.

The Aging Process ...

You cant reverse the aging process. Not to scare anyone, but my generation grew up on disc mans, and spiral notebooks, even up to college. That's not to say that technological advancements havent helped they've just made life more complicated, with more information to process, this requires a better ability to stay agile in the workforce, able to check social media without tuning out, text back, without feeling like the timing is off, and then beginning again on our best timing. What is good timing? You can't blame the times for what we didn't have in the past, you can always do best with what you have in life, that's how to look at things, as though there were no delays, as though we've always had time to fix whats needed to be fixed. The only difference between now and then, are the mental health issues, which weren't as evident as they are now. There was fighting and there was discord, and school has always been extremely competitive, for grades, for boyfriends, and for maintaining friendships. The strong will always succeed, the good will always preserver, remind yourself of two things always: (1) what you have and (2) whats at stake. You cannot have things in life, or more of anything, if you are not aware of what you do have in life, without this realization its easy to end up worse off, thinking you are better than you are, get situated first, and allow the dust to settle, you may not be able to control your environment, but that doesn't mean that your mental health needs to suffer in addition to the losses felt by others and yourself. (2) Whats at stake? If youre new to blogging, welcome, what was once an abstract past time, no one talked about, has now become a common phenomenon, people expressing themselves online, writing, and sharing photos from their lives, about their lives. Your reputation has everything to do with your mental health, it really has nothing to do with what is said about you, no matter how many times you fail socially or romantically you will still be able to get jobs, you will still be able to have a lot of things in life, just maybe not people. Its all a matter of how you see things. What you have, whats at stake? Do not gamble away your privileges in life, being social, that's not the solution, just like you would not bar crawl, and date, why we have Tinder, Bagels, eHarmony, Bumble, and other dating services now. What ages you? (1) Mental Health Issues (2) Drugs (3) Alcohol. The more youthful you look, the better your odds are for getting jobs and maintaining jobs, they say that looks don't matter, but they do, not how pretty you are, but by how well you look, and feel inside out. That's what its all about, not alluding in the abstract to ideologies, about life, and being read into to be guessed, from which foundations are your thoughts born for the good or for the bad. Its clear that whenever anything is built from something bad, theres a problem with ones foundation, the number of times you redirect criticism to match with those foundational issues and concerns, the more you as a website bring yourself down in life. Always stay positive, and steer clear of adjoining with issues, that are not your own. If you are not directly involved, then do not bring up issues, others do not think you are fit to lead qualified discussions about. *(Explanation): Dont hurt my website dont take down my banners, and dont blame me for [gun violence] because you put up a photo of an offender on my website on my magazine page, and took down my Pinterest Brady Campaign Ad, this is not anyones space, to cause commotion, risk. Others will hurt you in life, to see if harm occurs, sometimes people think that taking from you is the solution to punishing you, without regard for worsening your condition, or the condition of others. If I am well, why would anyone hurt me?

When Everyone Thinks Everything is About Them ...

I would not have advocated for Brady Campaign if I was not a good person and not in good shoes. Just because I have experienced mental illness and mental health issues in the past does not give anyone the right to hurt my present abilities to work, or to bring about circumstances lack of sleep to prove causes for illness, as though their lives are in jeopardy past, when I was not in a leadership position online, nor in any leadership positions in real life. Once you attend meetings and decide to help that's a commitment you make to care, aside from all others issue that people, have with you, that's not a way out of turmoil, to pick up causes and support causes, as though everything is related to whom you've been associated to in the past, as impetus for caring, there were several school shootings while I was in law school, I have every right to care, and every right to be frozen, I think those were incidences that affected us all. Hurting people because you think they were the cause, famous at the time they were attending law school, or hurting people to trigger causes of your own, are your fault, if things do not go well, or if I get hurt, that's the intended result, to see if hurting me causes school shootings, or if hurting me causes mental illness in others or suicide, Im not famous. I was supposed to work at AFM, but because I paid $900 and was not selected to begin the event, I went running on the beach and was scheduled to attend at a later date, on my way back from the beach someone was faced toward me, their behind by a lifeguard tower, that's insulting, Im running for 2.5 hours. That was unacceptable, to target me as gay, Im not gay, that made me extremely uncomfortable and I left the beach. For what reaction? #stopsuicide, that's not how to communicate by ganging up on people, or hurting people upon establishing new connections in life, or professional relationships, damage them, to prevent their ability to perform in life, to see if then, hurting them, causes additional harms to others, why I went to the LAPD & ER today. Stop causing mental illness, if its not an emergency its not an emergency, if someone is an advocate don't hurt them that's not funny, to hurt someone in public. Don't retaliate.

Playing God ...

Sometimes information known to few but not known to all is not helpful, that's not the solution, the sharing of information inside enclosed spaces -that adds pressure to the provider of information, whether intended to be distributed, for sharing amongst a select few, or to figure out whats going on, in private, handle the issues that lie before them. Its not out of guilt we become sick, or others begin to feel sick, it always the sick who attack the well, to feel well themselves, sometimes to feel better, people fight that's a normal process of dealing with emotions, taking those emotions out on others, its never okay to do so, not to take out angers others have toward you on yourself, or take out your anger out on others, when you become frustrated or upset by circumstances to which you have no control over. The minute you disseminate information to others, you are responsible for the management of that information. To clarify, or to make sense of what does not make sense to you, so that others may get a better sense of whats going on, to make better decisions for themselves and others. That's the gift of reading and not reacting, you as the reader always have the benefit of interpretation. You as the reader to do not have the right to read further into the lives of others, beyond what information is made public, that's not your right, not as associated to, not as connected to, and not as represented by. Theres a stopping point, that occurs, when you have to accept the present conditions of those doing their best, and accept that they did their best in the past, based upon the same informations that were given to them. As time goes on, information becomes clearer and clearer as communications become more clear, during times of turmoil, war, or controversy, expect that everything past will appear dramatic, that's not being defensive, that is a normal process of getting an accurate read of how one has been hurt and by which means one is being hurt by others. We are not machines, and although we may be given meds, that does not give one an advantage in life over other to succeed or to function in life, that's heart, and when you take and share the notes of others, because you think its deserved a loss of identity occurs, when someone else succeeds with information given to them, produced by another, not intended to be used by others to help them achieve the same in life, how you think is your business, its not necessary for someone seeing you to determine whether you think the way you do on your own, or you think the way you do based upon who you know, insights given, or people complying with your viewpoints in life, that doesn't create strength, giving credits away to others, that creates weakness of opinions toward those who were able, and now not able to achieve in life, as discredited. We are all entitled to get lost from time to time, and share our journeys privately as we would in a diary, that's not the business of others, to go through someones personal accounts to contribute to a movement against them, as though its common knowledge that a person is being put down in life, because others do not think by their choices in life are worthy or being famous or well known for their good deeds. I built a website not to influence the opinions of others or better judgments but to represent the fact that I am smart, I do care, and that I will always help others – even if I do not live long, even if I get tired, even if I get suicidal, even if I'm bipolar, even if I struggle with addictions, even if I get dumped, even if I get let go, I will always be me.

Carrying Guilt ...

6/26/2019

You are what focal points come to mind. Sometimes when reading others, while focusing on yourself, you get hurt, that is by the negative assumptions you hold as to what others think, you may become stifled, treated as predictable, don't react in the negative, to anything not tangible, these are just thoughts at the get go, stay positive. As you write you get a better picture of what going on, as the writers condition improves, that wellness can be felt by all, not by shared understandings alone, but by sharing period, acceptance occurs eventually. Not all want to be read, its important not to study others, paranoia occurs when others think you are reading them, and understanding occurs when you write something that reflects accurately what they are feeling, its not important to think the same, but it feels good to make sense to others (modified 06-26-19 1:55pm). Of course all writers, are sensitive to the needs of their audience to feel just as safe if not safer than they already are, knowing that work is being done, and that your mental health issues, are in now way able to affect their mental health issues, by reading your writing. By your experiences, how you choose to remember your past, should have no impact on how others see their past, we are not all the same, just as you would not want anyone to affect your best decision making, don't affect the best decision making of others, based upon what you see as happening in life, or based upon what you see has happened in life, things change, so do people. You cannot control what people think, some will look at you and put bad things together, and some will look at you and see the good. There is no immunity that exists when helping any organization who assists others in the putting together of their lives. If you were first to report to the courts to get help, then you were first to confront the issues standing before you and behind you, and have begun the process of coping. Don't expect anyone to be able to stand in your shoes and feel good about themselves, it takes a great degree of courage and resilience under stress to come forward and request for assistance when there are mental health issues around you, that you can explain, but do not wish to tell all about. If you have laid low, and wish to come forward the best people suited are those to whom you can confide in with confidence, not people who are willing to take sides sides against you, and against others, if the topics or subjects are debatable and put the professional standards of others into question then best not to share about others. The stronger you get, sometimes the harder you fall, any creative stage is a building process, from one idea to the next until a whole picture can be painted from which others can view, a cohesive idea, not a plan. Those who are creative are poor planners, they have a very strong sense of faith in themselves, work horses, can be exposed to many things, and able to maintain a positive outlook. A disorganized state such as today usually follows the disclosure of private information in public, that's not guilt inducing disorganization, or people inducing disorganization, sometimes it takes awhile to express yourself, be patient, not all people see the same.

Being Better Than ...

Sometimes being better than means laying low, that's not because you've done something wrong or because someone else has done something wrong, if you are given opportunities in life to achieve hired at Boulder DA #dontdodrugs, and trained as a Victim Advocate, do your best in spite of your failures, or needs in life, you will be forgiven once you correct behaviors that are causing others to not trust you, its usually a balanced perspective is preferred over one that's too opinionated or contrary to the best interests of whomever is in your company. Whenever there is risk, there is no reward for furthering those risks, by putting yourself at harm, or trying to do anything bigger or better to prove any points, its likely your intentions will be viewed as for poor reasons, and have less than a lasting effect on the opinions of others around you, to have a positive influence in life, you have to be good, otherwise there are other jobs around, who will test your smarts, to prove your self-worth an intelligences in life, its not necessary who thought is was deserved to push you to your edges in life, but that's usually to see if you snap, break, or fall, turn into something you are not, those who are good recover from injuries, due to pressures and stresses in life, its very difficult to help the mentally ill why it is ALWAYS recommended to call the police who have the best reads in life as to what is considered an emergency and weigh the risks of harms posed to those who have grown accustomed to fearing your best interests in the face of those who have put you down in life, usually at the time weighing their best interests its thought to be deserved and even more the so proving and telling based upon what you look like, deemed to be culpable of bearing faults that usually quell their worries about their own identities as having been associated to someone who now has difficulty caring for themselves, you can be hard on those who are not well, but not all recover, some living basic lives under the care of others, its not necessary to be bigger or better than, just to live life without interfering with the interests of others, and by who youre associated to does not relinquish your best interests from being found liable for the injuries of others as exposed to your life story, set backs, failures, or misfortunes, so long as you do not continue to expose others to the fears you have faced in life and forced to overcome the less others will feel enticed to fix or mold you to help you better yourself, listen to those who give you love in life, they are few and far between, most fair weather friends at this point, unforgiving of you when you are not well, extremely disappointed, its more than just body image concerns that come to mind, in the face of adversities correcting you public image.

The Power of Observation ...

Being able to observe differences and not become disempowered or attached to the issues of others, is a gift when to care is a choice, you can let go of, and continue on with your life unaffected by the lives of others. Just because you look like you don't care does not mean that you don't care, we are all better understanding of one another's need to focus without impeding upon one another's progress in life, what was once a joke, to see someone go from hyper to tired and focused to loving and mature to small, is no longer an experiment for the observation of others, to be readily used to prove or disprove the sexuality and behaviors of others as being good or bad at the time one was achieving whether deserved of accolades or not. From where is drive and energy born? Confidence. And where does confidence come from? By doing things that make you feel good, and not to the expense of others, feel less than, doing things that the community around you approves of, and does not offend the livelihoods of others, for you to feel good. When others are not in appreciation of your hard work or work ethic, do not be offended by those who do not believe in you in life, or think that you are the problem contributing to their unhappinesses in life, so long as you allow yourself to continue to be manipulated by others, the less strong you will appear, and the more likely others will be to favor the interests of those who are not feeling well, and blame you as though the existence of you and your well being purposefully affects others, or that the existence of you influences the behaviors or moods of others, that's assuming one influences others, and that's assuming one has the power of influence over the wellness of others, assuming they are listening and as affected feel less than, that attributing the wellness of someone who is assumed to not be well, as contributing to the lack of wellness among people, that's misidentifying someone who is well, as not well to blame them for the condition that others are in, if you have been through the process of recovering from mental health issues, that does not make you an advocate, you may have had a personal and trying experience in life, but that does not make you strong enough to reverse the conditions of those who are not well and help make them better, that's God's job, to control outcomes, and oversee the potential for positives to occur in spite of being exposed to bad things in life, bad people, or bad ideas, God fixes the environment to which we adapt to, why it's important to maintain faith, so that once you become well, you stay well, so long as you lack faith in the ability to overcome illness, don't expect God to fix you, it is an unimportant argument in life, to whom receives credit for the wellness of others as humans we are all required to adapt to our surroundings and adjust our settings, what was once a gift in life, to be animated, and stand out from the pack, is now a gift available to all, wellness and a strong belief in the human condition to improve upon adapting to others, once declared bad. Why it's important to be good, after you get declared as bad, and forced to depend on your surroundings and others for acceptances in life to move forward, that's just insecurity. You are only privileged in life to feel confident without insecurity so long as you are not dependent upon others, and able to make decisions for yourself, trust is a separate issue based upon reputation, if others do not trust you because you have self-harmed, then don't self-harm.

When Relationships Go Sour ...

When relationships stop working out, it is assumed that one side thinks they are better than, to the defense of those who are able to rise above animosities in life, and do not hold grudges upon others, when they become worse off on their own, without a companion in life it's harder to go back and date, after you've been alone awhile, and especially after a bad break up, always maintain positive rapport with others, you can be forgiving of others, for waiting, but don't be expected to be forgiven if you do not stay chaste and unable to hook up, when you're not feeling well, that's the double standard, expected to be available, and only available upon being good, once you are bad, that makes it difficult to be in relationships and to hook up and or stay in the relationships, once you are not well, that's the difficulty with having mental health issues, is being able to date, only when you are well are others attracted to you, and likewise able to share similar compassions for others, and share yourself with others, that's not the same as sharing your life, illness does not occur in the same way. What is mental illness? It's not just going backwards that's the problem, it's going backwards and misreading the past, to think that others were communicating to you with knowledge that they were hurting you, or with expectation that you would later become hurt, to their defense, what now sounds snark, at the time was just how they communicated, whether they were testing for love to receive affirmations back in life, or whether they were hurting you because they felt it was deserved to make you wait, and not date monogamously, it's your choice to stay, and if you're not ready to date, and have reason not to date, then figure out what hurt you, and try to resolve those feelings of hurt so that you are able to date or give love again to others, work is not love, and it's not through communication you feel bonded to others or apart of, that's not the solution to feeling good, or looking better than, the best way to feel good is by being good, once you are bad drink or do drugs it makes it harder for your problems to be perceived as caused, and the more likely you are to be assumed at fault for your own problems in life. What attracts negativity? Whenever you are speaking or behaving in a way that you think is normal or comical, you have a high chance of being offended to your face or corrected as not being normal, and upon being corrected depending on how you respond deemed mentally ill or not, as a deficit to those you have mental health issues, and the benefit to others knowing whether someone has mental health issues, is to identify who lacks a threshold of trust, who is easily manipulated by what others think change, and who is weak emotionally, shrinks, or defensive at their own expenses in life, and responds uncharacteristically of someone good, and looks like someone capable of doing others harm once deemed not normal. That is psychosis, not being able to shift gears, and thinking until one becomes sick, or defending oneself until others misread your past, worse than you have misread your past by interpretation, and proves you wrong in life, as knowing you had mental illness, and still engaging with others, knowing you had mental health issues, mental health issues occurring while drinking are not the same as mental health issues on their own, once it is deemed that there is something wrong with you, that you cannot reverse, then that condition only worsens, no matter what meds you are on, depending on how many people believe you are mentally ill treat you as mentally ill, until you are able to respond normally, under any conditions, no matter how well you feel physically.

When People Become Accusatory Toward You ...

6/21/2019

Whenever you are not feeling well, there's a higher chance of people being accusatory of you, to claim that you are a by-product of your own indecision making or mistakes in life, choices. Don't put down someone who is already down in life, and make things about something they're not. That's using intelligence provided and making someone of less value, and hurting their ability to earn a wage in life, by hurting their esteems, or their reputations, or records. Everyone is responsible for themselves in life, that means making good decisions for themselves and others. If you leave a relationship, don't go back, to explain why, if you fly to DC for two weeks, and drive to Palo Alto, and Las Vegas, you probably need more alone time and were left alone waiting too long, it's okay to give spaces in life, but as a woman it's not okay to take spaces in life, that's the main lesson, when it comes to providing unconditional love and support to others, as soon as you leave, and if you drink without them, get blamed for anything wrong that happens to you, and if they know what happens to you when you were out alone, they will test you again to see if you are at fault, you have to be well, in order for others to be attracted to you in that way, past the point of good, it's harder to find matches in life. You cannot expect people to stay well forever, stay thin, stay smart, perform at a high aptitude, and be able to earn their highest potentials in life. It's all about staying positive, life is not about sex, so to be demoralized and downgraded to someone who does not value themselves is wrong to assume of someone who did not start dating until college, without experience hooking up and dating. It's hard to have normal relationships after the point of experience mental health issues, why hesitant, others should be more understanding post-2009, once you self-harm (ie attempt suicide) it's everything past that point in time that you have to prove your self-worth, your inner drives always remain the same in life if for good purposes you try hard, you will succeed. It's when people lose faith in you, or those who have no faith in you, affect you, their opinions of you should not matter, you need not prove yourself to anyone in life, it's important to always maintain positive rapport, it's those who love you who matter most, it's not necessary for everyone to love you in life, so long as you keep moving forward good will come into your life.

For the Most Part ...

6/21/2019

Today is a down today, everyone's light seems to be out, it happens, this is just a normal process of recovery. Don't fill your plate to high, that's not how to get well, be able to do a few things well, before adding more to your schedule, it's okay to slow down in life, taking on less in life, is not a sign of apathy, everyone is more understanding now than they were then. You are a product of what facts, and experiences of others, you allow to affect you upon hearing, sometimes, cutting off contact with sources of negative input is best, that's not just ignoring issues, surrounding hate, but it's not become tied down to issue in life that aren't your own. You cannot understand people like putting on a costume, that's not empathy, and you cannot understand others better, the more things in common you are able to identify between them and someone else bad you know, or someone good you know. Life is full of ups and downs, not everyday will be a good day, there are limits to wellness, you cannot expect those who are inexperienced to be able to perform under the type of pressures that exist now for leadership positions, I think punishing people was a good thing, higher standards, and fewer people bossing others around like they know better, following your intuitions and figuring out life for yourself, is sometimes the best remedy to feeling stifled or limited in life, the sky's the limit.

July 2019

Reminders in Life ...

If someone or something reminds you of someone you know, that's a turn off. Generally those who fail to let go of people who have passed from their lives, are deemed to be holding on to some type of guilt or sadness, wishing they could have done something differently or better. To think that your health has the ability to heal others from their ailments in life, is not the solution. Nor is telling stories about how you have helped others, or describe times when you have instead focused on yourself. You are what illnesses come to mind, if people know your story well enough they will get you to think someone else is you, or get you to feel jealous that others have something you do not have in life, that was something I was told in private, learned to pick a sponsor based on "who has something that you do not have in life" ie wellness. That makes sense, allow people to mourn the statements of others, that don't make sense, and handle themselves professionally, stop accusing the weak of being stupid as being misled by others, or rising to the wellness of others, dependent, that only happens after you get sick, or punished, feeling at odds, as soon as you get well, feel good, then feel ill as apart, that is to the detriment of those who suffer in life, not to compare my experiences to the experiences of others. Stop prosecuting me and bringing up names, that's not what was done, and that's not why people think I'm mentally ill. If I have questions I have every right to ask questions, that's not with hostility towards others, I'm nice online to everyone, and nice in person to everyone, I'm not a hostile person, the sense of urgency in my tone, is me trying hard, that's not me coming on too strong, or trying to argue in favor of myself, not able to let go. When I'm gone I'm gone, that's not to punish those who have suffered as a result of their friends being gone. I can only focus on one thing at a time, law school, or work, I worked and went to law school. I was therefore not responsible for the mental health issues that led to the addictions and deaths of others. I'm going through similar struggles in life, don't hurt someone while they're down, or on meds, it's not because I have shared who is gone, that I am being treated as though I am gone. I'm sorry I committed suicide 2009, I did my best, took the LSAT 3 times, I'm not responsible, I did not participate online, I did not go out, and I was never bothered by the criticisms of others.

Sharing Your Story ...

If sharing your story is not helpful for your mental health, and you do not feel supported by others, but instead feel as though sides are taken toward you, recreating scenarios to see how you feel as studied, that's because they think you're studying people, research is research, and requires approvals, it's not via the study of actual people do we gather any new information in life. If addiction is your issue, then overcome addiction, if others know what your issues are, then that's fair game to them, to test your reactions, to see if you self-harm, then blame you as being someone who has mental health issues, who cannot be around others, why I stay separate, this is why if you feel harmed not to report out loud, rarely will your side be taken as combative, the person receiving criticisms is likely to end up better off as calm:

1. Having advanced notice of what the issues are.
2. Being in on something excluding someone from conversation.
3. Making something about someone, without them knowing it.
4. Punishing someone in public, to spread liability to those who feel liable.
5. Being required to explain for self, or others, in order to undo harms toward.
6. Dealing with the public's non-acceptance of your past points of failure.
7. Thinking positively of yourself, in spite of your mental health issues.
8. Not worsening your condition or the condition of others as directed toward you.
9. Being put on 4 night meds, and discriminated for lacking intelligence.
10. Being unable to perform in life, due to addiction, and burn-out.
11. Testing whether burn-out or negativity is the cause for one being tired.
12. Judging someone in the negative because they're taking meds as prescribed.
13. Taking Provigil and getting a job, and being hospitalized because one is well.
14. Hurting someone who appears disheveled because they stay outside.
15. Feeling responsible for others feeling safe, and doing your best to have awareness of your immediate environment, not to be treated as mentally ill.
16. Allowing others to review my work and call me mentally ill, but as a law student treated as stupid, dumped as focused, hospitalized with a job and a Witken Award. Don't ask for "You'll be fine" in life or "hope you feel better."
17. Getting jobs, and leaving relationships, then in response, non-support.
18. Losing confidence in relationships, and then as rejected, suffering from mental health issues.
19. How addiction does not resolve mental health issues, nor do disciplined activities, where you think you're building something but you're not.
20. How to challenge yourself mentally to do disciplined work.
21. Why some work does not look difficult, based upon how organized or presentable you are, how your work does not prove that you're smart.
22. Suffering as a result of being harmed, data losses, required to take the bar exam.
23. When you do work, and lose all your work, that's others trying to hurt you.
24. When others, think you're part of the problem, that's how you get hurt.

25. If as soon as you get well you get sick, that's because they think you deserve to be hurt, put down, or punished, as being on a team opposite to them in life.

Recover from your injuries in life, especially if drugs and alcohol followed heartbreak or losses, that's not the solution to recover in life, to feel better you need your intelligence, and working ability to perform, the more tired you are the more you suffer, and the more you complain the more others hurt you, as being responsible for your own injuries in life, if you self-harm.

If You Don't Need Help, You Don't Need Help ...

7/2/2019

Life isn't a game meant to be played by others, not via the searching of your private spaces, and not via garnered acceptances from others, concerning your conduct, which if approved enables you to write at your free will. Who treats you as reject, or up for the taking or imitation, is not your responsibility how others choose to punish or degrade you in life. Be of value to yourself. It doesn't matter whether others think its funny everyone is able to make money expect for you, and the ways in which others are able to succeed via imitation, who had these ideas first, just do your best to move forward, and move on. Don't easily get a rise, out of saying things to someone who never is around people, and then try to control them with your words, you are only blind a few times in life, enjoy those moments, before you get connected to defenses in life, it then becomes your responsibility to explain to others, where you are in life, what you are thinking, and where you plan to move forward from at this point in your life. Your happiness in life will not always be a shared consequence of your choices in life, don't expect to include everyone, when you decide to be happy, its likely that others may still be suffering from their own ailments and unhappinesses in life, irrespective of your personal endeavors in life. Those are they who are watching you, trying to benefit from you, to put you down in life as though you need help or assistance from others in order to thrive. When you decide to write a book, know that others will be reading along, that doesn't give the okay for people to be watching you in your computer to test to see if you are the writer of your own written works be observed, that's not a necessary consequence of coming forward in life after being [taken advantaged of]. Don't create fear, based upon blaming my life as a consequence of my choices in life, no one deserves to suffer, no victim deserves to endure this types of hardships in life as though my life is joke, and although my life, hurts or hinders the abilities of others, everyone matures at their own paces in life, allow people to be themselves, not attached to my interests or others.

Getting Hurt by What People Know About You ...

7/2/2019

Its now 2019, once you've established a public image online, you are therefore responsible for the maintenance of that public image online, I average 1000 visitors a day to my website, upon writing, and 30-60 public likes, on my website, and 300-1000+ likes per post on Facebook.com.

Who you were prior to becoming a public figure, is much different as you mature and hit your 30s and decide to be a public speaker online. You will quickly realize that all appearances matter, who you are in public must match who you are in private, and how you describe yourself must match your output and present ability, as described.

You will always be compared to how you were, when you were young, and you will always be held to higher and higher standards as you get older, that's the whole point of being a professional, to continue your education, and to live up to some purpose greater than yourself, its like becoming a professional, has a built in God into its system, that propels you forward in life, or upwards, that's why its so important not to be guided by others during times of doubt, but to be guided by your set of principles, we discussed via speech in Westwood, your hopscotch in life, that is your education, which resets you back to normal, when led astray.

Thinking Out Loud is more than just a phrase to me, to me it means actually going through the motions, from idea, to words, to words, to making sense, to making sense, to deriving meaning from, to share, and then be understood, sometimes during the process of trying to understand others, we don't make sense as listening and responding, but when we hear ourselves make better sense, than sounding as trying to make sense among the best judgments of others.

Once you have a record, views about you get split, you have every right to maintain your privacy and not discuss when you have been punished out loud, and leave up to question purposes for, and whether it was your fault, you were punished and hit your head, and how once people know you self-harm, you keep experiencing the same rejections in life until you hit your head, as they try to figure out what closeness you felt, that caused you to hit your head, or what lack of acceptances in life, and for how long those lack of acceptances existed before you started hitting your head, and what purpose that serves to you, to self-harm if it only leads to further non-acceptance of you, doing yourself more harm than good in life. In those cases you are just letting them win, that is the negative existing judgments of you, and future negative judgments others have yet to hold for you, justifying their hesitations toward accepting you.

In order to move forward I really have no solution for those who self-harm, and continue to self-harm when they are not feeling well, or under tremendous odds, to stay well, pulled down in life, by the negative influences of others to their psyche, hurting their abilities in life, my best advice is to always be positive and be professional, I cannot yet help those who have not yet achieved in life, and dont have the stamina, for arguing themselves out of negative judgments in life, perfect their images, its best to stay home in those cases, and not work amongst.

The Bare Necessities ...

7/2/2019

When it comes to love, youre either ready or youre not ready, for the following reasons:

1. Youre being to hard on yourself, about weight or losses.
2. You don't feel like youre worth it, glued to commentaries past toward you.
3. Others have cheated on you, or connected to others, making you feel less than.
4. You don't have the strength to commit and invest your heart into someone new.
5. Youre not sure whether to love someone, because you do not know them.
6. You don't want to half heartedly trust your heart with someone.
7. You think that, you need to have options to know whether this person is right for you.
8. You get attached too easily to whos around you that you disconnect from someone interested in you.
9. You are interested in people not interested in you, so you think that someone who is interested in you, will be just as difficult to be loved.
10. You feel insecure, and worry that your insecurities will interfere with your significant others ability to love you whole heartedly if they know whats wrong with you.
11. If you feel defective, makes it difficult to be confident with another.
12. When you dive into a relationship, you give 100%, why others back off and treat you as needy, not sure how much love to give, not be desperate.
13. You are having difficulty in your early days of sobriety or recovery, processing emotions, and dealing with the past, that you are having difficulty moving forward.
14. You think that less is more, affecting your ability to bond with someone new.
15. Fear of attachment and detachment, learning again to go with the flow.
16. Being too demanding, too many requirements, to accommodate your interests.
17. Not being appreciative of the time given to you, understanding that that is love.
18. Worried, that others past will interfere with you relationship presently.
19. Worried, that relationships not working out means your defective emotionally.
20. Worried that because youre (bipolar) you are not fit to bear children or date.

After taking many years off from dating, 2014 to 2017, and 2017 to 2019, I have decided to date again, and went on Tinder (Gold) and found a match, we have been talking for about 2 months now, working things out, its more of a psychological evaluation of my current status emotionally, to determine whether I am fit for dating (he's actually in Europe right now) so Im sure that's just all in my head, overcomplicating things as per usual. Dating life, is the good life, its just not something you talk about, it requires too many public approvals and criticisms, when it comes to deciding who you love in life, and why, not all will represent you best, especially if you're concerned about image, the more conservative the better the match is pre-determined, at best, for you to be exposed to, not those who hap hazardly lead others astray to determine their smarts in life, as one who goes along with others, or runs via their own self will and determination, often times acceptance of ones drives in life comes too late, and after putting someone who loves you through too many hoops, its no wonder love that was there was lost, either too tired to give love, or too tired of the rejections necessary to bring someone down to their speed in life, someone needy and dependent on them for love, allow people to love themselves, and not be required to be dotting on someone, so that they can receive assurances at your expense (time spent) sacrificing your good will (and attentions toward pursuing your career) in life, because they think they have some specialized knowledge of the circumstances around you (taking it upon themselves) to tell a story of their own (whether thats to out you as gay, becoming an unwanted spokesperson as to your issues in life to change opinions about you), especially when your focused, spokespeople do the most damage) it doesnt matter whether your present in law school (if whats going on around you does not make sense, then do your best to help others, make sense of what doesnt make sense, thats the least you can do, whether youre in a leadership position or not). With regards to "creativity": what other people think is none of my business, and will continue to think that way, until someone makes it my business to care, beyond my current cares. For some, whenever someone appears problematic to their calculations, they throw those people under the bus, as being responsible for the actions of others, and I think that's what happened to me, of course I had no idea at the time, for artistic pleasures in life, I was made to look stupid, that someone looking from the outside, manipulating the work of someone who has no idea, was intended to generate a reaction from that persons audience in the negative, that's not helpful to my esteems, to ask for help and in return be made to look stupid. When it comes to love, have nobody peer review, the challenges you face, communicating to someone you love you love them, if you cannot love on your own, and be able to get love on your own, then youre not ready to love, often times the advices of others, are because they see the positive, and do not yet see the negatives that can occur, upon their advices given, even if stated in the positive, could be bad advice, your friends care, they are for offering you reassurances in life, as an outsider have good judgments when it comes to whos a match and whos not a match in life, just trust them, with no questions asked.

Having Zero Tolerance ...

7/1/2019

When you have zero tolerance or patience for others including yourself, youre being negative. Let go of what is causing you harm, and do not write from those points of interest youre only bringing yourself down in life when you give your power away to experiences in life which have caused you harm, or which are causing you harm now thinking about. You cannot judge someone based upon how they responded to a breakup in the past, as being out of control, or not a prime pick, targeting them as the reason for the breakup, and wrongfully accusing them of being a reject or the reason why a relationship faltered. People will misuse information obtained by illegal means, to hurt you, and out you in life, and do things deposit pictures or writings, into your accounts, which upon being viewed without authorization, make you look bad, that is the reason for tampering with the records of others, to take something of value, and deface it, or hurt someone of value, defacing them, to make them look bad, or appear badly in front of others. That occurs once someone has taken a bad picture of you, and once deposited into your records, not publicized to others, get used once put out in public, as apart of your records, make you look bad. There were plenty of photos taken of me in the past, and everytime Ive been harmed via photography, I have suffered as a result, from the mental health issues that follow, a less then acceptable appearance in public. I would never do the same to anyone else, always focused on myself, do not dismantle or hurt the esteems of others because you think they had sex with people "ie Bauer" or because you think they haven't moved forward "ie me" because of what has been written in a personal statement or book "ie my Anne Frank Book" and then cast me off as someone who is a follower, or the one in the wrong, as though I benefited from those relationships in life, a feeder off of people, not treated as someone who is independently successful on their own and selected by men, to date. Allow people to maintain accurate records in their computers, don't dismantle, or tamper with the personal records of others, made with love, to establish that they bear knowledge or have known that others are capable of going through their computers (ie Kazaa) that's iTunes, that's not my whole computer, and I had a Fujitsu, not a MacBook, and they have stolen from me throughout the years, a bracelet, photo albums, clothes, yearbooks, and now my website, is being used to hurt me, trying to prove I have known people have gone through my computer, and created records in my computer or online to hurt others, that's not the case. #stophate. They yearbook photo photographer told me "chin up." #stopbullying - Dont hurt someone when theyre down.

How to Move Forward ...

7/8/2019

You need to be really well to date, don't expect the men in your life to explain the world to you, they mostly flirt, and tease you, men will be men, that's a basic principle of comradery not taking life too seriously. Choose, be one of the guys, or one of the girls. How does someone so popular lose such much esteem, everytime there is a failure, I get separated from friends, that's just how caretaking works, they punish you, to rebuild yourself on your own, loss of support, denotes a failure on your part, whether recognized or not, you can keep your friends, but once you become not well, separations occur, some are lucky enough to have friends support them through thick and thin, there is a point of no return, that occurs after one experiences too many failures in life, then you get blamed as though those in your life could have had better lives had they not known you, me too. Its not just me that's suffering, shopping until I drop, at this point nothing can make you feel better, that's just something you learn, no one wants to be the rehab friend. Once they know where you've been in life, that's just a recipe for disaster, how those who don't know you see you, as apart of those who think its best to keep sending you back, or realizing your self-worth and staying positive having faith. Faith is tricky, easily lost upon being negative, that doesn't create the poor outlook, that causes one to tantrum, once left in isolation, likes resolves that, then what is it? An unrealized pressure? Don't allow others to pour psychology over your head in life, and then set things up moving forward to only later make sense having left them, that's usually what people do who think they are smarter than you, or who think you made advances toward them, treat you as stupid. Its not what you think I promise, no persons nice to me, do I ever hit on or make advances toward, they either like me or they don't like me, Im a very conservative person, to let down my guard is called being vulnerable, unfortunately someone of my intelligence and success is not allowed to be vulnerable and go with the flow, usually has to know when to say, stay home, not be out and about, once opened up, lets the wrong things in, energy wise. That's okay, we cant all be on the right meds, Im usually prescribed what people think I need to be prescribed, with approvals.

For Various Reasons ...

7/8/2019

For various reasons you choose to take action in life, never respond to those who are not well, its likely you'll receive an adverse reaction from them, a displaced blame or inflicted sense of guilt, especially from those who have been nice to you, and think you that you should provide more back to them, reassurances that is, if you don't yet speak code, and have yet to understand what jokes are being tossed your way, then you will not understand the sense of humor of others, as making fun of your personal statement to law school, dating practices, likes, friend choices, level of refinement, dress, home décor, skill set, professionalism, mannerisms, tact, voice octave, demeanor, and response methodology. There is no methodology to responding, and no humor is understood when it comes to self-describing how you have responded past, interpreted as a gamble, except not. You either complain and get resituated put back into your place in life, or your feedback is understood as helpful, after having an adverse reaction to interpreting the present, that shows a need for modification, not by those who are mentally ill, but from those who are well, do not put pressures on those who are designated mentally ill, to then explain the condition of others as like, one can only then represent themselves, not everyone, that is the demise of those who once were well liked by all, and put down in life, left to only represent a few via likes. Everyone is entitled to having their own social circles in life, wellness is something you share only with a companion, not amongst friends, that's the difference. I don't think its necessary at this point in time to establish a timeline of events but will do so anyways:

1. Got a Job in DC Spring 2011, Applied Fall 2010, for Summer 2011
2. Went to Rehab for 2 months Summer 2011
3. Left my Ex December 2012
4. Finished my Paralegal Certificate Fall 2011, Degree Granted Spring 2012
5. TMS Therapy (Summer 2012), Twitter 2012
6. Flew to DC twice (January 2013)
7. Drove to Palo Alto (January 2013)
8. Drove to Las Vegas (January 2013)

9. Went to the Hospital (February 2013)
10. Then dated.

What is Trust for?

7/8/2019

Trust is something to be built between any members of a community to whom are affected by the presence of others, to which community you belong, is the community to which you are compelled to establish an identity among, that is acceptable to those upon viewing. Who and what you represent symbolically if not different but similar to a structure pre-existing (i.e. body type), is for God to judge who is responsible for the making of a person, and based upon those acceptances, is not the fruit from which additional acceptances are brought or born. Each person who becomes well liked is responsible for maintaining that candor in public, easily broken, by missteps, there's no such thing as unconditional, all mistakes hurt, and all mistakes we suffer for, and do not assume that all mistakes are purposeful with the intent to cause harm. So long as you allow conditions to carry on, they will carry on, and so long as you allow others to put you down as not well, they will continue to put you down as not well, hurting you to make things about them as mentioned, don't empower those who cause you suffering, and don't give your powers away to those who cause suffering to others, that's the whole point of staying positive, not to disempower, or further disempower those who are not well, if people do not recognize you as human, and do not recognize your sufferings in life, that's because they think it's justified to convince themselves that you are trying to be like, and continue to try to be like, until you become like someone or something you are not, if you are well then you have every opportunity, deserved to achieve wellness, and to stay well, irrespective of the competitive concerns of others, concerning your wellness and what makes you well, there's no such thing as fan ownership, everyone is entitled to supporting whomever and for whatever reasons, it's not a hand me down concept, from one generation to the next, a struggle that's not sufficient to hurting someone, as though they do not identify with the struggles of others, and have not struggled themselves, assume that because they are doing well that they have been oblivious to the sufferings of others, and because others have suffered appear well, or because others are well benefit from the wellness of those around them, not a contributor of wellness themselves.

Website Updates ...

7/8/2019

Moving my weebly.com Website to wix.com for Layouts and Group Discussion Forums.

Creating a Personal Website for Book Displays, and Links to Drafts.

Book: Plan to Publish my Book, AFTER I finish my Dissertation.

Twitter: Continue to post links and (creative) humor, as needed.

Pinterest: Will participate as needed, share to my dontdodrugs page on Facebook.

Instagram: Discontinuing sharing on squares, it's too much to keep track of separately.

#leverageyourstory: Need to speak to Torah to discuss what I've written on squares.

mymollydoll.com: Will remain my address for blogging, and attach new functions if necessary.

Dontdodrugs: Is a paid for Page on Facebook, and likes are through advertisement of posts.

mymollydoll.com: Is advertised via a blogging platform other than weebly.com, to Facebook.

lesliefischman.com: Will be my personal website, for books, and announcements.

FEMA (ideascale.com): Is for approved research ideas, not already researched, on my to-do list.

mymollydoll.com: (Goals) As discussed with Torah, to be more article based, still working on the fundamentals figuring out which issues, are relevant, then do the research to help resolve.

Superiority What is Elite?

7/8/2019

No one ever said that you weren't special, but what is special? Is it necessary to be elite, and what makes one group feel better than the other? Is it how we look, or by what we have that makes us feel good, feel whole. The assets you acquire throughout your lifetime are your responsibility to keep track of, upon no losses of property, should you ever feel as though you've lost a sense of self, or anything integral to your identity. "If money can replace it its not a problem." Does it really matter who your friends are, or who is friends with your friends, or who you are exposed to in life, sure it helps. Im wearing a #SuperDry sweatshirt, and not ashamed that I went up to Jonah Hill at a SuperBowl Party to congratulate him "on all [his] successes." I attended as a guest of my Brother. I think in time ... all identities and influences aside, we forget, how we came to be, and begin to feel like ourselves again. It matters most which memories you hold true to your set of circumstances as you navigate your own way, through the pitch black chaos that lies before you, this is common when you see something, and theres no current existing leadership to tell you whether youre on or off course in life, it then becomes a matter of instinct, which way to go in life, and when put in those positions in life, no matter which path you choose you should end up on the right footing, when presented with a problem, figure out a solution, and when exposed to others, know the difference between right and wrong, and refrain from any activities that put you or others at risk of harm. If youre not ready youre not ready, dating is a sharing of souls, and if you think dating is intense, then you better get strong, because work is no different, accommodating the moods of those around you, never take anything personally. The stronger you are, the better suited you are to be put in caretaking positions in life, employers like self-starters, and if you don't know how to make labels, paper in upside down backwards or rightside up forwards, then its okay to make labels on plain paper, and cut out the labels and use a glue stick. Be professional.

How Do Enclosed Spaces Work?

Any enclosed space is room for growth or floundering under the power of others. What is empowerment, and what helps others grow? Is it true you grow out of friends, or do you just grow apart? Who are you connected to -everyone present or everyone past or just plain everyone? Everyone. For the sake of acceptances, assume you are connected to everyone. What is racism? Anyone who thinks they are above others, and that by being above others, do not wish to be influenced by, and by those influences think that they or others are capable of being harmed upon exposures to that specific type or person or breed. That's racism. Unless you are a Doctor, you really have no right to discriminate others based upon intelligences or based upon what people look like treat them as less feminine, or less beautiful. But we thought because you weren't pretty that you absorbed illnesses, and that because you weren't pretty you had jealousy, and that because you were fat, you did not like yourself and for those reasons you allowed men to come and go from your life without being affected, and now all of a sudden you are pretending like you were well the whole time, and now worse off because you have a record, and now considered damage goods. Am I going backwards? No. Am I complaining about where I am in life now? No. Do I make my mental health issues of issue publicly? No. Should my mental health issues affect others? No. Am I being combative? No. Are you being judgmental toward me? Yes. Is it because of what I look like I am being treated? No. Is it because I am not successful no one respects me? No. Is it because others have money they think they are better than me? No. Ask yourself questions in life before you start assuming that someone is thinking wrong based on what they look like, or assume that someone is up to no good, based upon how they are feeling, or think that someone is not smart because they are not high functioning, or think that someone who is hyper has more energy than most, what are smarts anyways? To me smarts are having a knowledgeable capacity to ignore the influences of others, and by those smarts able to defend themselves physiologically from environmental factors affecting their health, why I said hygiene, hygiene, hygiene. The body is a vessel much stronger than you think, and if its memories causing you illness, think what you can do now to protect yourself from harm, knowing that how you look is a direct reflection of your health by the calculations of others. How is it now others look healthier? They shower. - I on the other hand lost 40-50 lbs, to model and photo well. #stayfit

Rules for Connecting with Others ...

7/7/2019

There are rules for connecting with others:

1. Live a disciplined life.
2. Hygiene, hygiene, hygiene.
3. Go to bed at a reasonable hour.
4. Wake up early and live a full day.
5. If you cannot live a full day, find new purpose in life.
6. What keeps you going in life, remind yourself of that.
7. Be driven, one goal at a time, stay focused.
8. Persevere and learn how to weather the storms.
9. Be happy when others are happy unless that causes unhappiness.
10. Never go to sleep fighting, always resolve issues before bedtime.
11. Wake up positive, don't get into issues, and lose sleep.
12. Your beauty is your choice, by your exposures, don't overexpose yourself.
13. If you're a writer, it's important to continue your education.
14. If you model it's important to stay fit, and exercise daily.
15. If you have mental health issues, take medications, contact your doctor.
16. If you build a company, make sure you report your company to the Govt.
17. If you build a company make sure your Attorney is fully advised.
18. If you self-harm make sure a Judge knows and a Hospital knows.
19. When you recover, it's not necessary to state how you got sick.
20. When you get well, yes you have to help others, not interfere with wellness.
21. If you are alive, you are expected to work, or stay home, function.
22. If you cannot function, yes it's important to report to the police, why.
23. If you get 1,000 to 3,000 likes per post, you must maintain wellness to write.
24. If you are not well, it's important to figure out why, before writing anything.
25. Report to the police, do not report out loud online.
26. If you get hurt it's your responsibility to report to the authorities who hurt you.
27. If you are hurt, it's important not to blame those who are hurt.
28. Once you get hurt it's important to lay low, to get your strength back.
29. Don't oversexualize yourself, no experience is required to love, be loved.
30. Once you become an advocate: no sex, no drugs, no alcohol w/o monogamy.

One thing at a Time ...

Some of us can only focus on one thing at a time. The purpose for moving forward is to not be bombarded by the past, inhibiting our ability to be present. It's easy to become overwhelmed, it's important not to give yourself a heart-attack in the process of moving forward, put yourself into shock thinking about what hasn't gone right and why. If you just stay present, and that's the best you can do then do so. You cannot study the present to better understand what things in the past have not worked out for some. It's not for the same reasons people become sick or experience bipolar. I can only know best myself, and share from my perspective, that's not to say that my thoughts are unique compared to the thoughts of others. Allow people to experience happiness, and be around those who compliment their wellness. Just because people do not get along, does not mean that there is something wrong with them. How someone is now, and hospitalized is not the same as they were then and hospitalized, things get worse before they get better, if you don't keep moving forward, that's the lesson. If you've led a better life, and now struggle, then you understand where I'm coming from. Sometimes we are set worse off in life, to see if we can return to our own sense of normalcy on our own, you don't know why people hurt you, and for the reasons they hurt you, think about something else. Know that people are mostly concerned with themselves, that they have a right to. Do not disturb the peace, because you are struggling and cannot find happiness. People are left to their own devices, sometimes to figure out what it is that they have done wrong, do not disturb their happiness, when you are well, because you don't understand where they're coming from. You can't get focused doing nothing, in order to move forward you must be doing something. Thinking about the past is only helpful once you've moved on to a better place in life, otherwise, don't keep doing what you're doing, those are moments in which you need to change your lifestyle choices, and move forward. What irks me, is that in any poor condition, its thought deserved by drugs or alcohol, you cannot control what options are left to you in life. If you are better now, then be better now, if you were worse of then, then be happy you are where you are now, if it's the thoughts that others have about your past that's bothering you, then prove them wrong, if its thoughts about your present concerning you, then be happy with where you are and what you have now, if it's the future that concerns you, then do a better job of where you are now, and keep moving forward, if it's the past that hurts, then forget whats bothering you, and focus on where you are now. These are all things you learn over time.

When What People Think Matters ...

It doesn't matter what people think so long as you are not being harmed by the thoughts of others, others are not contagious toward you, hurting your esteems or wellness, ignore hate, everyone lives differently, and its not because of wrongs that sometimes things don't go right in life, be forgiving, as am I. Once you are considered damaged goods, that is mentally ill, do your best to keep to yourself, those are mistakes in life, loving the wrong people, when you get put down in life, don't be so willing to give your body to the care of those who accept you, or to fix situations when you were not ready or in the mood, love is love if you were young when you could not find love, and when you found love, things did not feel complete, means you need to work on yourself, its not necessary to always be in tune with others, don't live by your past, and be forced to go backwards in life, as not being well today, then blamed moving forward as a product of your own mistakes in life, there are systems of support (ie LAPD) when you feel like hurting yourself, or if you become suicidal to the best interests of others something is wrong, that's your right to maintain your privacy, it is not the right of others to go through your things. And if by your training and counseling advocate for others, and try to get involved that's not a political move, that's leaving school not well, and studying politics, we are all new to life, at different points in our lives, life needs no introductions, there is not one person who knows everything, or who as perfect able to help others, we all move forward in life, once we get to different phases of life, its not fair to hold others back in life, as compared to, that's not appropriate, to hurt someone who is not gay, or who has not hooked up with a lot of guys, had many boyfriends, its hard to date if you don't drink and do drugs, and even worse if you do, and suffer from mental health issues, that's not how to date through drinking, you learn this as you get older, looking back, that those relationships were not as important as your health now, being put into question blaming you for your head problems or for why you were treated as a reject, friends are friends, sometimes you can only focus on one thing at a time, and sometimes you date, and sometimes as separated from others you get hurt, lets not relive the past, live your lives separately, do not become dependent upon the sick (ie me) or those who have lived lives that they are not proud of because not chosen to represent others, employed, as paranoid, that's because once you do drugs, you will always be punished for the jobs not taken accepted for, because you thought having friends was more important, fun at the time.

I Called my Boyfriend Yesterday ...

7/5/2019

As I spoke to my boyfriend yesterday, I began to cry, have not seen him since April, hes been away in Europe, after asking for two weeks to fix myself, and now taking two weeks off from work not feeling well, having self-harmed, I just went to the LAPD and ER, filmed a tape of me hitting my head, no re-enactments are best, when it comes to self-harm its not necessary to explain, why you are suffering harms and for what reasons, that does not make others feel better upon self-harming, nor quiets voices, but only causes additional suffering to you, no action is best, when it comes to self-harm. Everyone wants to be the hero and no one wants to be blamed, its whoever looks better than the other, that's not to say that others have not provided support, and that that support was insufficient at the time, to help me recover form whatever losses I have suffered in life, but its upon hearing voices that one self-harms and that's not because of cocaine, but upon losses, related to dating. Whenever someone comes between you and your loved one, a loss of attraction occurs, you become not the source of happiness to them, but their source of happiness then becomes whoever is able to make them feel good or better, than you, and by you taking a photo of that wellness, prove that you as the photographer are the one who is mentally ill, to highlight what has gone wrong past as though you are not capable of taking a good photo and capturing any positivity in time, as not surrounding you, but you are someone who feeds of the happiness of others, do not compare, and then make like, to argue that those who are not in the presence of wellness and light are the causes for that darkness around them, or based upon how they look, hated upon. Beauty comes in many forms, and its not until you do something wrong, that sadness can be felt, and its not until you live up to negative expectations of you self-harming, that no claims previous to how you were harmed matter, no I am not the cause of attacks upon others, I was attacked.

Rising to Occasions ...

Equality is about wellness, not equal in purpose in life. Sometimes while trying to achieve in life, we get caught up in making amends to those we think have an issue with us based upon interpretation, remind yourself that not everything is about you, people have good lives, unless you ruin their lives, by making yourself apart of their daily thoughts about life, don't be the jumping off point for anyone's wellness in life, that's codependency to rely on others for wellness, or for achievement, one should be self reliant not to just mention previous arguments in history. What does self-reliance mean to you today? Being independent, okay what does independence mean to you? Not attaching to others emotionally and not being dependent upon what or whos in my environment, notice who is here who is not here, or perform any differently, never perform to an audience in life, that's the quickest way to lose esteems, overperform, underperform, as trying to impress others in your immediate environments, those who have seen you at your worst, will always remember you in that way, let those moments go, you cannot go backwards once others do not accept you, don't rehash the whys of your life, to get others to stop investigating your wellness as though you deserved to be "discriminated" powerful word, doesn't really make sense looking at my resume, private sector jobs are not on craigslist, by the way, Im sure that was the yellow brick road home joke on San Vicente, do not coerce others into joining forces with you, if you are not well, upon being punished, all connections are faulty, giving people excuse to detach, and giving the majority the excuse to reject you by default judgments of those who did not believe in you or thought less of you as someone who cheats, or helps others, and at your expense have suffered. Do not help people achieve in school and accept sexual advances from them, that's two birds one stone, puts you down in life, as they come up, and if you leave, and don't feel better its because you did not stay in a situation waiting for someone, and because you complained and wanted to know why you go 2 As and the 3rd highest score in the class, think it was him, who got the Witken Award. The closest person to you, is probably not the one who hurt you, and those who do not respect you, never really tell you, they just give bad advice or pass guilt, that's not because theyre not feeling well, but as not feeling well about you, to see if youre stupid.

What Your About ...

7/4/2019

Like a book that is being written, what a book is expected to be about, or worries about what a book is about, are people assuming a book is about them, not about you. That's taking something written and as applied to yourself, saying it causes you harm, and by hurting you, others are harmed that your feelings are hurt thinking its about you. If youre a woman, its likely that you carry sensitivities in life, and have esteems, not the same as Men, least affected by sexual interaction, it is the womans esteems who get hurt the more men who have touched them, its common sense that pristine is unused, and new is original, once you have devalued yourself the only way to perfect self is to create a life of value for yourself, irrespective of the interests of those past who have come through your life, do not worry who is no longer in your life, and always be respectful of the deceased, why laws got changed to not photo, and to not drive cars, in cemeteries, except for memorial day, all the cars park within the cemetery. If you do not know which came first an event, and then a change in laws, then don't hurt someone as contributing to social ills by breaking laws, that's not what happened. To hurt someone as living up to some expectation or to defend self against jokes and rumors, would be a waste of someones time on earth responding to things that don't matter, which have already been dealt with, don't make things about people who are not famous, not in the spotlight, with few friends, and no knowledge that stories are being carried on about them like their life is a joke, it seems to me th one insulted reacts (i.e. me), is deemed the wrongdoer or mentally ill, all breakups are difficult, even worse, are breakups when you have to leave relationships that are not working out, or when your heart leaves you to help others, resolve discrepancies in interpretations, that's hurting you to see whos viewing you, to have power and oversight over what is being said about you, either hurting your overall image, without you knowing it, or hurting you personally, so that you react or respond in the negative while everyone is watching, to see how you respond when others are displeased with you in the masses, that is someone that is known only to those accustomed to being on the outside of situations, and upon being on the inside of situations think that they known better as through their connections in life more at ease than around you, lacksadasical or too tired not pumped up about life excited to be with you, whatever that means, there is a loss of energy, when you love your work, and love what you do, everything falls into place, that's not basing things off of negatives in the past, and with full focus on the wellness of yourself and others, that's being good. How you work is your right to privacy, that's your intelligence and work ethic, not necessary to be taught out loud.

Who's Qualified to Go Through Your Things ...

Unless you declare what is of value of to you, others will hurt you to take what is of value to you, that is your life, upon being displaced in life, is what causes me to feel ill, suicidal, that's a wrongful possession of my work, to displace me to cause me suicide, to try to get me to understand what it like to make a successful company, and then have it be brought under the care of another company, don't compare the wellness of people who are not attached, not connected, not alike, at different stages in their lives. Don't hurt someones dreams in life, and watch your own Country be taken over by companies, and be defensive to the best interests of those who are doing well, your nervous concerns should not create nervousness in others, enjoy the quiet times, and don't blame people for your own illnesses, or misinterpretations, that's an unqualified researcher, pretending to be more educated than they are, and hurting someones abilities who is qualified to to do research and to be a positive figure in society and work, until then, allow people to get well on their own best timing, if this is the best you've ever seen, then maybe that's because it is the best and most on point, timeline, in American history as to my mental health issues, and struggles and overcoming addiction, that's obviously because I care about myself not suicidal, and obviously care, not because I am reading others sense illness, as though you think I think Im psychic, its who I choose to share my life with, who I think is most knowledgable as to the concerns of others. Its not necessary for everyone to feel apart of, or be included in order to things to go right ... when things are new, everyone deserves to be included, if you are persuaded not to include those who we have yet to sign deals with yet, then that's okay, allow people who are not well to not comply with those they have yet to trust think that they know better than, who is the star or what shows in life, has nothing to do with my wellness or management of my own personal identity in life, take your hate out on someone else in life, harassment is about, not wanting to be associated to someone, for blames, and for mental health issues, don't make yourself the subject of another story, and punish me as though I deserve it because I was called "mentally ill." Im very intelligent, a very nice person, and I do not deserve to be treated as "grose" or "pervert" by those who think their social skills are better than mine, I am focusing on my career there is plenty of time to socialize, for all I care Im not missing out, once you go sober, that's how you get well, and maintaining sobriety is how you stay well, you will never then be well enough to drink not during any moments of ease, and if a friend is separated from online, that's because they do not feel well, as my only friend on that account, that's why no friends were added, moving to different accounts was about starting over, being conservative, but that seems to make no positive difference, all anyone wants to hear is argument, illness, argument, illness, until they feel better than smarter, more achieved, and put forward on a positive note, along with or not, in tune. The minute you explain your past in the negative, the quicker they are to let you go, as negative. Thats being defensive, whether or not you get hurt outside of work screamed at is not your fault, not with headphones on, tuning out the world, they keep hurting you as deserved.

Dear Fireworks ...

Don't make things about you, unless you plan on staying public, explaining as you go through life, why you were the way you were at the time you were most insecure, to take away blames from others, treating you as a reject or not a keeper, unenthused by you, more excited upon the accompaniment of others, if youre not the jealous type, and accept your places in life, based upon what is given to you, its only until later you realize what you had when things were good, and finally get a better sense of whats an emergency and whats just basic comradere among people in your environment, if its something youre new to, feeling social in non-social environments that's a good thing, means there are positive and well people around, if you are out alone, its likely that you will be blind to the thoughts of others, and as a happy person, misinterpreted by those around you, as having too much energy, a changing of places only occurs, once a mood is reset, that is feeling like you, sometimes people need to feel apart of, and the way in which they can communicate to someone they think has the power to make them feel well, is to communicate to those who are independent of others, detached, and focused on themselves, that's not how everyone gets picked up, but I tended to attract those who were not in good place in life, and later found themselves in better places in life. That's treating me as the uneven exchange when it comes to wellness, as though the benefit deserved to them, and because there were no signs of loss, or heartbreak, except upon #dontdodrug, could those losses be understood, when youre down in life, don't expect to be apart of, its only until you are well, do you not have to try hard in life, and feel like your in sync with others, not bothered by their humors, no matter how obnoxious it may seem to you not understood, it takes awhile for others to appreciate your wellness, especially during times, when people are trying to find themselves and establish careers for themselves, time goes by very fast, with few moments to pause, if you remember everything in your life, except a few moments, then youre doing a good job living life, if you only realize afterward how you were harmed, then that could mean you don't realize whats going wrong at the time its going wrong, and allow things to happen, or you are the type of person to stop everything and do your best to fix a problem before it becomes worse, everyones different. Communications are not for the exchange of information, all communications tire the listener unless its to help someone else by providing them reassurances in life, and listening to others when theyre not feeling well, not be affected, don't allow others to accept blames for your wellness in life, or mental health issues, its always okay to go to the ER or talk to the police ie LAPD, who are well enough to differentiate between normal behavior, general worries and concerns, or just simple co-dependency, and detachments upon leaving groups, meeting new people, or just too much people time, delusional. Don't overexpose yourself ... this will only cause you more mental health issues as recognized, and that's how people who look unique or special, become despecialized, blend in.

Dont Be a Product of Others ...

The minute you give up in life, is the minute others turn on you, often times, when we are not feeling well we separate ourselves from others ... that's not to similarly put two stories together and be hurt, that's not a strategic response to refer to another story in life, or set of circumstances to which I responded poorly, dont purposefully put memories back into the subconscious of others to cause them illness, is that purposeful or by their actions representative of whats going on within them, is what is written or spoken about in private used to interpret what is going on in a persons life, as reflective of or in communication to or about? That is why we have: (1) Phones (2) Computers (3) Words via Speaking (4) Website (5) Messenger (6) Pages (7) Facebook Profiles (8) Private Lives (9) Public Lives (10) Relationships (11) References (12) Interactions (13) The Past and (14) The Present. If you are not sure whats affecting what as to my audience that's to protect them from harm, as their defenses are down, as over-experimenting with my wellness as though I deserve to be treated as a robot, held responsible for the mental health issues of others, on our soil, and abroad, don't be quick to punish those who respond first, its usually not the past that's written about in the immediate once a harm is suffered you are usually last to find out who has wronged you and for what reasons, and if you allow illness to prevail, then you only justify that it was okay for people to hurt you as though you weren't gonna make it in life, or as though your cares in life, were a lost cause to society, or unimportant, as a good or adequate representative of how one is thinking right now, you don't need to hurt someone because you think theyre bad, that's not the solution, you don't need to communicate to others who you are helping in order for others to get help, you don't need to be so detailed, when explaining why you feel the way you do, because the sooner you educate others, as to what you think is happening the sooner they use that as ammunition to hurt you, so you cannot tell who is hurting you and why, using your predictions, to harm you, to segregate you as special or unique, and deserving of punishment, as adequately imitated or upon a better representative example of wellness is created. Allow people to blossom on their own, leaving a relationship is not for better, usually it is because one is not well, do not blame others for leaving a good life, to help protect the lives of others, that's not the solution, making fun of people during times of peace or turmoil, and bring up subjects that hurt people, especially people who have been harmed in that way to see if they identify as someone who is of standing, and then hurt them to get them to admit their wrongs in life to separate them as being apart of or helpful to the lives of others, consider them a risk. That's an unwanted retaliation to, by words, pass through to others, back into writing for others to view.

Who is Happy ...

Who is happy when others are not, that's not how happiness works, it's a mutual care, upon acceptances from others, that being around you, your presence supports their wellness. Once you cannot thrive in any environment, means there is something wrong with you, others knowing you, who think the worst of you, will watch until the worst happens to you, to see if you deserved to be hurt for other reasons, not for the reasons now you are hurting, as the damaged counterpart to transactions, overused, or knowingly seeking love from others, not saying no enough, or learning how to set boundaries for oneself, its harder to understand and put together something that doesn't exist than it is to put oneself together in the face of others as studying them, that's not helpful to someone overcoming mental health issues, doing everything possible to maintain wellness, beginning life over again, going to the gym, going to Starbucks, going running, these are basic life skills you need to be social, once you do your best and not accepted by others, think about what you could be doing a better job of, its likely they will blame your past addictions in life, or what is known about you, to blame you as being unattractive and that because you are unattractive made others look unattractive as being in the same environment as them, that's to blame people who are not well, giving them illness, to understand who has been affected physically by what is ailing them, if someone's body composition and face composition was changed by another, that's not my fault, for whatever reason they thought it was kind enough to do so, after attending a SCOTUS hearing, then that is them using SCOTUS as mechanism from which to hurt me, and say that it was about something it was not, until everything gets thrown in, until justified as why Im ill, as though they turned on me, and that's who is punishing me now, that's why punishments are given to those who offend others, thats a physical offense that causes you body and face to change, not drugs or alcohol which contribute to poor decision making and increases the likelihood of contracting some type of STD, because you did not use a condom, when men are defended and women are blamed for their own mental health issues, I am but one example of someone who got punished because Im not pretty and even after I lost weight, as suicidal, put down as though I was at fault, for my own suicide, living alone for years, Im not responsible for the way my face looks, or why it has changed, or have knowledge of those causes, that's not why I didn't take jobs, or took a job, I got offered a paid job, and decided to work in Film, because I was not turned on by the process of talking at work, feel good, does not mean I am not a nice person, it just means I don't feel good when others are warm to me, because I have mental health issues now, that's giving your jobs away to people who are well, better suited to help others in need, not people with now superficial problems because of their drinking or drug use, cannot be undone, once it gets started, that is the deterioration of your mind, focused on negativities.

Don't Be Offended by Those Offended ...

7/3/2019

Someone who is offended is upset, that's normal. Someone like me who gets made to look stupid and suffers losses in life, yes that causes mental illness, mental illness occurs when youre at peace, and at ease, alone, someone hurts your sense of stability thinking by looks you don't deserve to be independent and strong, trust is earned, respect is optional, its not about who you are that matters, or about what stories you know about others, or who has been where why someone chooses to enter an establishment, or build a place online for themselves to write. That makes sense, when your options become limited, you figure out life based upon what you have in life, likes not all about expectations, expectations of others, wellness, or aggravations in life, made to feel smarter than, allow people to be happy. Happiness is not a shared concept, nor are beautiful stories, if what brings you peace does not bring peace equally to others, that means the are sided against you and you do not make them feel well, either your efforts to figure out whats going on to assist those in need are thought to have been done in vain, and if vanity can be proven seek to focus on negative points in time, to help you realize what you look like, who you look like, and what can be related to you, if illness can be established see if you react in the same ways as those past who have caused massive damage to others, and taken lives, that's not what builds a corporation, to before the fact, before anything bad has occurred, take on a leadership position, with built in blames, that means its not necessary to establish blames, and if my company does not benefit your interests than go to someone else for perspective in life, to help open you up to positives, we are not all connected not by our past, and not by our experiences in life, everyone has a life of their own, and it should stay that way, life is not meant to be lived as in cohorts with people, for like mindedness, I date men completely different from me, that's normal, usually someone who believes in me and supports me, that's called friendship, once disappointment strikes or illness a relationship can no longer be maintained, don't go backwards in life, when youre feeling well, and be nice to those past who you have been friends with, the issue likely dug for, are moments of non participation, and separation from the interests of any particular group reading for when you have hit a bottom or when a concept has hit you hard, and you are struggling to function in life, thats treating you as insensitive, not as being strong for others, to help lift others, that doesnt make sense to everyone, especially those who do not know you, to judge you as mentally ill, for caring, or taking it upon yourself, to help curtail the issues, contributing to mental health issues, concerning subjects of interest. Sometimes closeness is not a preferred means of communication of helping others, for people like me any type of closeness related to my heart trying to communicate within communications to me, is annoying, just as typos disposed on my website and website destroyed hospitalized, notes taken, and treated as though Im some type of machine on meds, and will be alive forever, that's hurting someone you think is stronger than they are, or hurting someone because of the way they look, like theyre already gone or dirty and deserve it.

Feeling Insulted ...

Its often times not until you feel insulted that you begin to not feel well, sometimes it occurs that you do not feel well, and because you do not feel well others feel insulted. Don't take things personally, wellness does not occur overnight, and its definitely not about seeing the same or thinking the same in life, its more complex than simply thinking positively about life, that's a good start. Sometimes through the process of empathizing with those who are not feeling well such as myself, you get blamed, to prove you are contagious via being read, as not making others feel well, that only occurs upon taking things personally, not seeing the bigger picture, no writing can be to the benefit of everyone, especially when there is jealousy as to wellness and the intelligences acquired through others via education, likely downplayed as not being intelligent, and likely because they do not speak the same, judged as being less than or mentally ill because of the way they sound, there no telling how much you've influenced others a writer online, not until you write a book, and establish yourself as an author are you credited for your hard work, and efforts in life. Its easy to read, its harder to write and make sense, there are different styles of writing, why I wanted to take a penguin course (approved by my Mom) and will enroll, following enrolling into my last course, graduating from law school upon finishing my dissertation. My writing can be about my life and still help others, if its not general enough for you, then its okay to read something else, this is not agreement, life is not about fitting in, and if I now have issues that I have not had before, than so be it, the more you complain the more others will blame their mental health issues on you, as though you were mentally ill, at the time you connected with others, and knowingly as mentally ill, connected with others, to therefore make you responsible for being mentally ill as affecting others. I went to the ER on my Mom's birthday, and left dinner early, because I was not feeling well, not put on a hold, referred to the hospital by the police, it seems that if you cannot take care of yourself and get help others will dictate to you, what to do in life, and move you around as they see fit.

My Political Views ...

7/3/2019

As a friend online I advocate to those suffering from mental health issues ... I can understand, the complexity of making choices in life. When you are not feeling well it's very difficult to make important decisions for yourself, let alone others, but it's okay to stay involved and participate, voting even if your vote does not matter. Don't become too invested into the debates, there are some who care and don't care about issues that are relevant to you in your life. All issues are human rights issues, just because your issue is not mentioned or highlighted does not mean that it will not be dealt with accordingly. I have been poisoned twice overseas, suffered losses: ipods, computers, yearbooks, photo albums, and notebooks, over the years, but have kept moving forward, convinced that these were just material things, or just a matter of food poisoning, not purposeful, never be quick to jump to conclusions in life, it is likely once you enter the arena, you'll find yourself arguing sides, and justifying those sides based upon the appearances of others, let go in life, you never know who is victim, who was victim, and who has been affected, regardless of who they have dated, or what addictions they have overcome, no one deserves to be put down, via association. Two issues come to mind: rejection and acceptance, and how those two issues have played a fundamental role over the years, in how ideas are communicated and which ideas, support whom, we would hope that ideas in life, support the general well being of everyone, needing not exclude anyone from participation among what brings wellness to others, as to be apart of. Any creative process, involves an understanding of the issues being faced by those in reality, it is from the basis of creative endeavors that high ordered thinking is reached, that's taking something made, or upon being exposed to what exists, thinking of something else, or better than what currently exists, and that's how an idea is made, during moments of wellness, and understanding. Understanding not only brings us peace, but it simultaneously creates an awareness, that affects all decision making, make sure to always keep the best interests of others at heart, whether or not you are connected to those issues, affected by those problems and losses, how you empathized is your right to privacy, others will assume that if you care that much, then they will want to know why? For what reasons did you decide to care about those issues, and what experiences did you have in life that made you think it was important to come forward at that time. Growing up a person of privilege, I was given every right to maintain my silences and work hard, be a law student, and live a private life, away from participating on Facebook, but took it upon myself, to launch a pen name, open up, share my story at the time, defensive, and stayed proactive once I decided to finally sober up, and stop consuming myself with what ifs, and fears. When you decide to sit down and reflect upon your life, recalling every memory, and writing down those memories, that is a very peaceful juncture in life, it looks hyper, when output is being made not related to work or school, which is what computers are for, if you're a writer, eventually you will leave the nest, and in your free time, you have every right to express yourself in private and gather your thoughts. What you write is not an agreement, even if it's read by 2000 people a day, attachments of all kinds are not helpful during times of need, as everyone needs to focus less on what others think, be more compassionate towards those they love, and be patient, kind.

Hearing Voices ... (#dontdodrug)

As you reflect on your days ahead, you will often times get stuck to the past, that's a normal part of recovery, learning when to let go, learn from your past, and do a better job of staying positive. While your parents are still around, do your best to live a disciplined life, take fewer risks, and be a happy person, that doesn't mean get side tracked trying to do so. Whether your escape from reality is through reading or watching TV, everything in small doses, what's more important is feeling accomplished, that's how to free up time to spend with family, friends, and loved ones. When you are not happy with yourself, forgive yourself often, the more risks you take in life, and the worse off you become, the more you regret, don't be rebellious fighting the fights of others in life, and do your best to focus on yourself. What makes you valuable, what makes you an asset, your work product? Your studies? The discipline you apply at work, performing in front of others? The minute you share amongst others what makes you unique, your life experiences, and how you were able to achieve in life despite what others think, is the minute you lose your sense of purpose and identity in life, the minute others start reading into your life, and existence, how you came to be, is the minute others will judge you as deserving or not, of having privileges in life, don't allow others to open you up, to making bad decisions in life, friends don't hurt friends, and friends look after friends, to declare us all princesses would be being dramatic, I think by this point in time 2019, everyone has taken a fair shot at making me look stupid, why? Because I wasn't pretty, and because it was more fun to make me look stupid to make themselves feel good, because it was easier to prove that I have lost friends, because there is something defective about me. By the time you realize how someone you've trusted knows so much about you, when you hardly talk about your life, you begin to wonder whether they accepted you as is, or whether they took it upon themselves to make decisions for you in life, based upon what they believed or who they saw you as, to be respected or not. Going to law school left a lot of room for misunderstanding, whenever you seek to higher your education in life, make sure to let others know that you are not stuck in the past and that you are educating yourself to help others, from the standpoint of someone, not looking for a fight, or in a fight in life, that makes you appear to be on a side, and once you become well known, make sure not to have enemies in life, as it is likely you will be put down by the same people who did not respect you as achieving in life, or doing your best, thinking that your best work, was a result of medication, not because you cared, or that school was easy for you, not because you didn't drink or do drugs, and that your privileges in life were not earned, but because your family was wealthy, every privilege in life must be earned, you either stand tall and represent others well, or you take a backseat to the opinions and judgments of others, led astray in life. If you're on medication now, be thankful that you are under the guidance of a physician to care for you, and if you have been hurt by others, while being independent, then trust fewer people in life, as you try to achieve for yourself in life, to have people in your life, build trust again.

Organic Growth ...

7/16/2019

Building a website, should be from the heart, not by who you're connected to post. Overtime as you become more comfortable with yourself, the better off you'll be sharing online. Writing online requires a certain stability, especially on your own, not watched or helped by any listening services, that are to the benefit of writers on social networks. It's a lot of upkeep to whom you're connected to, and without knowing who you are connected to go through a lot of physiological changes and facial changes, I would not recommend getting started on your own, without help from a social media network. As a private individual sharing online, there are a lot of pressures you'll face along the way, that's not sharing your story claiming victim, that's empowerment, coming forward with what knowledge you have acquired via your education and exposures, and whether you can work now and help others, physically, that's your choice, some labor intensive jobs, are not to the benefit of writers, who are mostly cerebral, and have difficulty doing manual labor, no matter how well trained you are as a runner, this you learn as you move through the work force, some jobs you can handle and some jobs you cannot handle, it matters what time you invest into your health, and it matters where your heart is connected, whether to finish a project for school, or finish a project on your own, your own website, or book. There is no money in writing online, this you will learn the hard way, you have to write because you want to write, and eventually upon writing, you will one day benefit from the wellness you create in yourself and your audience, that is proof that you are well, and that you are of value, until you can prove you are of value, and to the benefit of others, will you benefit monetarily, from the work you produce online. That is wellness and success. You don't have to be a doctor to write well, and you don't need connections to write well, you need education, and perseverance, not all audiences will be accepting of you or proud, this you learn overtime.

Who You Are Online ...

Always present the best version of yourself online, and always be yourself, it's reality that's toughest to transition to, when you're not feeling like yourself, sometimes it's easier to be social from afar. I was one of those girls who sat alone at parties, and people would come up and talk to me, it's important to always be approachable, that's half the battle when it comes to socialization. The next step is having healthy conversations with others, all problems aside, think of one thing positive to talk about other than yourself, or so how I was raised, to read the paper, be in touch with reality, that's not common sense, that's just being worldly. There is a such thing as taking things too far, as a writer, it's important to integrate, and by your exposures, help others. It's important to note that people upon viewing you, will be curious to know your inspirations in life, likes, and influences, that should not inhibit you from sharing, writing requires a certain openness with your audience, and also a constant maintenance of those connections in life, to whom are affected by you sharing, who has been of influence to you in your life, that's normal. Do your best to hold your head up high, no matter what you look like, overtime, we all age, aging is a process, nothing to be ashamed about, we all grow and mature at our own paces, don't over-indulge yourself with the news about others, or by looking at photos of others, we are an imitation of our reality at best, sometimes, mimicry takes its toll on us psychologically, that's a normal process of how the influencing system works, see one do one teach one, you are at best welcomed in the hands of those who are well and not well, it's your choice to who influences you in life, for better or worse. Right now I'm 180 lbs, 5'4", a size 9 shoe, a size 10 or 12 in clothes, that's a Large or Medium tight, and a 36 DDD. Beauty comes and it goes, depending on the times, what is deemed an acceptable representative weight healthy based upon the standards of self-care possible at any given time in life, that's by wellness, you are a reflection of what you are composed of, the standards of thin and a low body fat ratio will never change, that doesn't mean you are not healthy on the inside, it just means upon exposures, to those who are well, demand the necessity of well figures from which their bodies are influenced by. Mold yourself, to what your ideals of beauty are, don't let your mind go to waste, nor your body go to waste, it all shows up on your face, detox daily, drink plenty of water, and eat well. I'm not saying I'm a bad influence, I just don't look the part right now, I'm sorry.

Communication Problems ...

7/15/2019

Communication problems the minute you stop listening, and reacting to environmental stimuli, whether that be voices, miscommunications occur. What is obesity? Giving up in life. What is negativity? Not listening to others. When does one not feel good and why? When others think poorly of them. What is a misrepresentation? When others think you are something you are not. When as a society we have made strides, it is those who stay behind in terms of their own happiness, not being thankful of how far everyone has come, that make them look selfish. Who is responsible for the mental health issues suffered by others, and what determines whether a job is a good job or not. What affects tone? Positivity. And why do people speak differently to others, is that a choice? Does it matter? Always be patient. To me communication problems occur when one gives up in life, and upon being discriminated, or given a hard time in life, does one suffer communication wise. It's the expectation of someone being negative that they are discriminated. It's the expectation that one by voice, has something wrong with them that they are discriminated. It is the expectation that one who is not in control of their emotions, or not doing what they are supposed to be doing that they are discriminated. It is the expectation that one who does not assert themselves is weak minded or weak at heart, and it is the expectation that someone who is weak of mind and heart bears guilt, and it's the expectation of those who are labeled as bearing guilt, as having something wrong with them to justify discrimination of them. That is the purpose of treating people differently, and labeling others, as being well enough to be around others, or too weak to withstand the pressures of social engagement.

Getting Things Done ...

People can convince themselves of anything, including convincing others that you are the source of the mental health issues they suffer from or the discrimination they face, as not connected to anyone you fair the best, sometimes you need to be alone, that's seeing you as with potential and hurting your potentials in life to see how you fair alone, sick or well. That's not to say that it's not hurtful when others turn against you, but it's simply that they are well without you, and to incorporate you into their lives is not the solution to their problems. Just like thoughts build upon thoughts, so do feelings, and those negative feelings that others have toward you won't change so long as they think justified, and continue to justify those feelings, by creating or reading into stories they think prove that you are something that you are not: gay. For some that is the solution, for example to cause others to think that you look the way you do because you bear resentments or jealousy toward others as though you wish you were someone else in life, or somewhere else in life, its unhappiness with life if proven so makes others bear the better of the fruit to any argument against you, and so long as they can prove that they are well, and that you are not well, the better off they feel as though they bear the best fruits of discussion, as toward you not being well. For some that is their solution, to prove you wrong in life, as though there is something wrong or defective with your condition. Everyone is responsible for themselves, sometimes it's not until others can think alike that people are able to move forward, and it's from common ground in life, that new is made, new things are made, and whoever is responsible for contributing to that common ground, is now what is sought to be in possession of, who is responsible for helping to create common grounds in life, and not seeing you as someone who is helpful or a positive contributory factor to wellness, is what's in question now. Do your best to move forward in order to help maintain any peaceable relations requires a lot of reporting and correspondence. I cant say what it is that causes self-harm but its something to do with not feeling apart of and upon not feeling apart of hearing voices, and upon hearing voices, not feeling at your best and upon not feeling at your best feeling tired, and upon awakening not feeling well, and whos to blame for those conditions of the well. Im not a Doctor so I wouldn't know why I woke up tired today and upon taking a nap why I felt like self-harming, its not my voices that are of concern but sometimes the voices you hear and upon sharing your condition out loud how you are harmed, without discussion, and explanation of the inputs you hear. In any close relationship, people will try to change you, if you don't need to change don't change.

Holding You to a Few Stories ...

7/14/2019

If you are related to someone famous, you are expected to behave and look a certain way for acceptances in life that will never change. What people think initially, without a website:

1. You think you are famous because of who you know.
2. You think because you are famous its necessary to be known.
3. They think because you think you are famous achieve.
4. They think you think you are important.
5. They think because of who you know you are important.
6. They think by your exposures in like you are successful.
7. They think you are driven by motives to become known.
8. They think because you think you are important you are well liked.
9. They think you think you are well liked because you are important.
10. They think you are only important because well known.
11. They think to be important one must be well known.
12. They think laying low is because you are being bad.
13. They think if well known that you think you are above others.
14. They think that you think you are above others because of how you look.
15. They think you think you are above others because of how you speak.
16. They think you think you need to be important in life to be successful.
17. They think success is based upon being important and of value.
18. They think you have low self-esteem and not of value because of how you look.
19. They think because of how you look is a reflection that you do not care what others think.
20. They think because of how you look you do not care about how you look.
21. They think because you do not have any friends online visible that there is something wrong with you or that you have contributed to the causes for illnesses.
22. They think because you do not contribute online it is because you choose not to.
23. They think you have not suffered the same illnesses in life as they have.
24. People think problems are isolated to themselves do not empathize with you.
25. Money is a manifestation of wellness, not connections.
26. Connections are a manifestation of wellness, not money.
27. Wellness is by how well you speak of others.
28. Wellness is by how well you speak of yourself.
29. Wellness is by what people know about you, how they see you.
30. Wellness is by looks and by how you identify.
31. Wellness is by who likes you, whether by imitation.
32. Wellness is by who looks better by photo, determines who represents who.
33. Wellness is by what or who you focus on, God is by who is focused on God.

Whats Good?

7/14/2019

You're only as good as your last finished product, is usually what you are judged for, how you relate to others, how you respond to others, and based upon what you have written how you have mentioned others past, as having lived a good life, full of positive memories, or whether you carry resentments toward others. That's the point at which your wellness is put into question and sides are taken. At the time I wrote my Anne Frank Book I wrote about an experience, when a friend was in town, about having two jobs and in law school part time, not understanding why I was being bullied, it seems that others always seemed to think I was worse off than I was even with a boyfriend, and always upon one another meeting each other through me, tended to get along. That was never anything that bothered me. Maybe it was the distance from having gone to school in Boulder, and those close to me not knowing me well anymore - I don't think my present condition is any better than it was then, if not better then compared to where I am now in life. Sometimes when things are not going well, nothing can make things better, that's when you feel as though you have been wronged in life, it's hard for things to get better, if not feel worse off than having had known someone who you felt was a contributor to social ills directed toward you as a group, if not yet having had experienced that type of tenacity and anger toward oneself individually, then must have been a condition unique to them, which I had not experienced yet myself. It's only until people direct their angers toward you, is the point at which you realize that others blame you as being responsible for their happinesses in life, and it's not upon expression of their displeasure with you in their presence, as the cause for raising you to question whether you are living a good life, and why you are being judged in the negative. For every loss there is blame, and upon losing friends, in life, those who are well, not yet made aware of the dangers of drinking and drug use, and poor judgement, do they understand the type of struggles that others endured, during rebellious periods in life, or under the duress of negative judgments, and so long as they can argue that you were a contributing factor having gone to law school, the better they feel, unfortunately it's not until after the fact, that you are able to explain things in a calm and cohesive way, those opportunities to be heard are generally taken away from those who think because they are well, look more well, or have experienced hardships in life, you have yet to realize as though you are not knowledgeable enough or prepared personally, to handle the risks associated with complaining out loud, or without the power to help gear or change the opinions of others toward any group of people.

Thoughts, Incidences, Reminders, and Memory ...

7/14/2019

- Thoughts (definition): Something that sheds light or brings to light a new thought about something you already know or by something you are taught, think more about.
- Incidence (definition): Something that happens, either purposefully or not purposefully, that either affects your thinking in the positive or negative, caused to think about something missing, or someone missing, that's by exposure, who you remember, made to think about.
- Reminders (definition): Anything that upon the timing of an event or series of events, made to think about someone or something you think is a controlling factor of those events, and that by having an ability to control an event, control outcomes, and also able to control beginnings.
- Memory (definition): Any recollection of thoughts, incidences, and reminders, that either bring about a positive or negative feeling, and based upon those feelings, setting you back in time, or allowing you to move forward in time, sometimes related to you, or related to the direct past of others, by your collections, what moments in time you considered were important, collected.

Computers are great for tracking what is important to you, and for writing about things that are important to you, but for privacy reasons, and investigatory purposes, duplicating yourself, to the benefit of those viewing you is not helpful, to that which you thought was important is sooner made not important to you, but only to some, without explanations as to why, thought important then, to ridicule you now, as by the way you thought, thought by touch or action, your face changed, and for how long your face looked the way it did, without seeing good pictures of you, that is how you are judged as someone who has been tampered with or made to look in the negative, and that because you looked negative, that you were a negative person, then, and that upon viewing others, that is how you felt, as though there was something wrong with you, or that others impressions upon you were because there was something negative about you, and that impression was brought out from you, in photo as a record of that moment. What do photos capture, feelings, beauty, negativities, everything I think.

From Your Vantage Point ...

7/13/2019

Its from your own vantage point in life, that the possibilities of thoughts have potential, its upon having too much concern for the thoughts of others, that your thoughts stop, do not stand in my shoes to see better your sense of reality, everyone life is different, mine not more or less difficult than others to achieve, growing up with flash cards and textbooks, the same as everyone else, having to type papers, and handwrite notes, that will never change, that's my system of thought, yours may be different, that certainly does not mean that anyone had a better chance at survival than others, when it comes to getting jobs, getting jobs is all about wellness, don't get paranoid about what others think, and in your discomforts don't make jokes about what things look like, you could end up suicidal for no reason, based upon comparisons, that's never advantageous, for a negative judgment to be passed toward you, without you knowing it, and when you collapse, for no one to explain to you why everyone suddenly disliked you and what enable a mass population of people to know and not like you before becoming known to others, don't think things are about you, until they become about you, and don't limit the potentials of others, making things about you, as spoken through them, to them, or about them, that would be doing society a disservice to take away the peoples power of choice, to choose what to believe, who to believe, and to not continue to believe in themselves, become reliant on others for information in order to rebuild trust within themselves, for good decision making purposes, if one is good, there should be no reason why that good cannot be re-instilled upon them, by going to sources they trust to help reconcile their outlook, in life, we cannot all believe the same, if the reconciliations of others does not reconcile your issue with them, don't read out loud notes in someone phone to provoke paranoia, paranoia isa caused condition upon isolation, from others, and if you are not doing what youre supposed to be doing and do not feel safe in your present environment, and having difficulty being accepted by those in your immediate surroundings, recluse, the longer you stay away from people, the more difficult it becomes to reintegrate, you may not have the same past but that doesn't mean you need to relive your past, don't allow others to make an offender out of you to teach everyone a lesson about hardship, popularity, notoriety, and connections. That's not how to treat mental health issues, via punishment of those whos minds do not think alike or whos mind upon entering the mind of another causes them illness as thought about, symbiosis is being around others, and no matter what voices sent by phone, or by text, or by environmental stimuli causes one to hit their head, if someone you love, if to love all, causes you harm its okay to call 911, and upon calling 911, report that if you are harmed at this moment you feel like self harming, and that's the condition that gets repeated as told, being texted accused, then hurt, then proven right.

Lost and Found ...

Theres no telling where to go from here, we used to rely upon religious principles to keep us safe from the sick, but how can one identify who is sick, based upon intelligences anyways. How smart do you need to be to stay well, and does respect matter, no. What matters is being kind to those in your immediate environments, its not that your minds think alike, that when in disagreement, you hurt the feelings of the other, but its about being well, so that others do not have to waste energies helping restore you back to better. Theres something unique about being me, whether I am well or not, just being present in any environment makes others feel better than, above, achieve some spiritual plateau above me, that's knowing something I do not know, and feeling better than, because I do not see the same or know the same information, it would be wise of me to not assert that I have been following, since when, then be blamed from the point at which I understood I was being judged, and needed to make corrections about myself, and then the point at which others made modifications, knowing others were watching to see how others would respond to me, that's trying to figure out at what point did what everyone think matter and at what point did what I think make any difference as to what others thought about me, or about the surrounding issues. Its common for people to test to see what you know, that will never change, and based upon your exposures in life, determine whether you are moving with others, apart of, or standing out, in a bad way, that's to determine whether the happiness, and wellness of others affects you, whether its something you think about and recognize, or whether you are of threat to the wellness of others, that's insulting to say the least, especially to someone who is constantly adapting to their surroundings, dumbed down, and stepped on, as others assert their wellness over them, as smarter than, to always be a lady, its more than that given your standing in society, and based upon who you are friends with, as a common rule of thumb its best to always leave others better off than you, that's a basic principle of wellness and common courtesy. To be courteous of the wellness of others, not necessarily to benefit others, but to not interfere with their wellness, at what point does one become strong, when they no longer rely on signals or cues from others, to proceed in life, and independent of themselves, those days are long gone to say the least. (1) I led a private life, and upon being manipulated decided to (2) live a public life, that was so that (3) I would no longer be manipulated to (4) empower who? Myself and to not disempower others as controlling me, but to not interfere with their wellness as controlling me to affect (5) the wellness of those watching and judging me.

When Everyone Reads Something Different ...

Everyone wants to generally know if who you are now is the same as you were then, and at which moments in time, did you present give you the most clarity and at which points in time did you find the most resolution to your problems if any in life, what causes people to be outside of their wits ends, and find a sense of peace among others, is what we have a product of our environments, can you blame others for when you are not feeling well, or is that a matter of medication to feel well and be well among others, at what point in time do you stop feeling well as around others, and at what point does how you look affect who you are or how you feel about yourself, what is the joke? To be more like someone who is well, or to be more like someone who is not well, and who is to blame for whoever is winning when it comes to who is to be taken seriously in life, do explain. When you were once a role model, chaste an fit to lead, is who you are representative of who you are now, and does what you look like, affect how you are treated by others, certainly so, is how you are around others representative of how you identify ie by who you talk to or not judgmental toward if everyone life you, then what does that mean, are you simply nice only to those you feel sorry for or are you someone who is accepting of everyone non-judgmental, if we now know what we now know, then don't go backwards as explaining why people felt the need to replace others in your life, or whether they think they were a replacement of someone in your life, and who is a figure of what and by what influences in life are people considered figures of interest or role models in life, who is taking who down and for what reasons, based on what others look like, are injuries given to those because of who they are associated to, and what causes weight loss and gain, and why were photos taken representative of moments when least well and why were are photos of someone as well taken, that's so that people only remember you as not well, and see how you get treated as remembered not well, to highlight which points of interests and to dehumanize who and why? Why was I dehumanized, in remembrance of others as though I too have not suffered. By what comparisons in life are we judged as beautiful and deserving of good lives, or put down as someone who has it all and can take hits in life, and explain why their face changed. That's not for anyone to judge why someones face changes or why they don't photo well, for whatever reasons God decided not to photo me well, but appear well in real life.

House Fight Therapy Club ...

Who wins? The Dinosaurs always, when they've had enough that means stop, listen and be screamed at. For some reason, wisdom always goes to those most in control of their emotions, usually the only ones who can talk sense into you, when youre defenses are up, and the non-sensical arguments are coming to mind and out of your mouths. That usually means there is something wrong with you, which needs to be diagnosed by someone who does not have the same issues, as you. Learn to adapt, to your environment, without standing out as something being wrong with you, if you sprint until you gag, and don't feel like running, youre probably in a bad mood, and need to just stay home. That's not a good sign. Who did they give sports cars to anyways, their cars match their cards, in life, you'll learn later on if youre not skinny and pretty, you don't get to sit in sports cars, and if youre not pretty and even tempered, then you will not be presentable to others, viewed upon as defective. So then why am I in a sports car? If its not because Im pretty, then it must be something else about me, not identifiable by looking at me, that must mean Im a good person, good people need no defenses in life, Im working for the police, the police cant help you. The Vyvanse is not strong enough, you have addiction. No I didn't have addiction I was in the 160s and working 9 to 9 disciplined, taking as prescribed and not good enough, then you must have been judged as someone who everyone steps on, no its that I confided in the wrong people, and got stepped on in life, then don't confide in anyone who is not your doctor. What is funny, something good is funny, something that reminds you of someone else is funny, and someone who is not in control of their emotions is funny, unless they are deemed to be problematic, then they are looked at or viewed upon in the negative as psychotic. I only had one beer and went to a bar, whats wrong with that? You aren't the brightest on alcohol, if you are not your audience, you probably react to negativities in the negative and leave situations, then drained, that's called an experiment on you, to see if you have behavioral health issues, triggered by alcohol, that's letting other people win, but they know my drink, good, that's a good thing, but not impressive to most. Fighting is not amusing, and fighting is hurtful, and if you don't understand why its not important how you feel, then you have not matured, when put in your place where are you, home, good, that's a good sign.

Finding Your Inner Peace ...

7/11/2019

After 3 weeks of rest, I have my glow back, and feel at peace, well rested. Now its time to get going again. How do I get going again? Walking everyday, writing, and continuing to interview for jobs. How high is too high? Sometimes adderrall works, and sometimes, its just plain too much, too many thoughts, too much input, too much output, and then there goes your decision making skills, taking on too much, and whos to blame then? Sometimes its not all about feeling good, but being in control, balanced. What is smart? We used to think that high energy people were smart. So does that mean as low energy youre not as smart? Do you need to talk fast to be considered smart? What is hyper anyways, can we stop thinking about causes for depression, cancer, and mental illness now, even I don't feel well thinking about the unfathomable, it feels like a recipe for disaster. Are we simply the cells we attract in life, how important is the air quality to our health, if I walk outside everyday, will I glow again? These are all things I think about but don't say out loud. Always do your best to be positive, that doesn't mean that positive things will happen for you in life, it just means that you will be that much more resilient to life stresses causing you or others illness, depression, or lack of motivation. The more you worry, the bigger your fears become, do your best to stay well, and dont allow any negativities to get the best of you, be happy for those who are doing well, and keep your head up. Confidence is about, weathering the storms, and realizing your true self-worth, everyone deserves to look and feel well, its all a matter of manifestation, its whats inside that counts.

Its Your Choice to Wake Up ...

7/10/2019

Its your choice to wake up, stay lost, be in disillusionment, or get well. If you cannot stay well where you are, and its peaceful that's your decision to separate yourself from the well, to help maintain the peace, its not your responsibility to manage the wellnesses of others or be a caretaker to anyone who does not exchange a vow with you, that's the big lesson to be learned if you are not married you are under no obligations to pledge monogamy and cut connections in life, or be put down as bad or neglected as someone to be felt sorry for, if you have a life and people are coming into your life, that means your well, that does not mean that you are used up, for some people they are able to base their wellness not just on opportunities made available to them in life, but also to the opportunities offered to them in life via people being nice to them, once you are not well its only until well those opportunities are made available again to you in life, stay positive its when youre not well, that others separate themselves from you, that's taking your strategies passed for maintaining wellness, and hurting someone by what they have experienced in life to your benefit hurt their ability to arrive at well. Don't hurt others to figure out whys in life, and certainly don't put yourself at risk of harm over wellness. When you are disciplined and live a good life, that means you are home wherever that may be, don't let anyone convince you otherwise you are not bright or a waste of time in life.

Who's in the Right ...

When others think that they are in the right, that does not give one the privilege on taking their anger out on others, slowly, overtime, or continue to do someone a disservice in life, by setting them worse off in life, that's being around someone who needs to prove themselves to you, that's condition caused, by those who think a well condition is not a well condition and do not recognize someone as well, and continue to create circumstances to further disillusionment, is by what I mean, when they think psychosis is at play, that's a caused condition by working hard, and upon being tired, not looking or feeling like yourself, learn how to let go of the past, who aids and who helps others who help others, is none of your business for what issues were brought up and when in private, that's not to your defense why someone kept a record of their own wellness, that's not a movie, that's not entertainment, that's a real time account of a persons life and exposures, their well moments, not for the benefit of those who seek to disprove wellness at the time of wellness, and create an illness within a person not existing at the time they were well, rejections add up, and its not by taunting that causes mental illness, it is how you appear and how you react and when you react whether your likeable or not, that's wellness, theres a point at which others want to know when relationships stopped and why. That's none of your business, the reasons for mental health issues now, and no its not my fault, do not go places in life, by going places in life, and do not meet people to acquire knowledge, that is what school is for, if you have a good perspective you need not share that perspective to better the condition of others who are being ill toward you, mean to you, or try to understand by what educations they were built to believe that you were mentally ill by looks.

Knowing When to Stop ...

Know when to stop. Vanity only shrinks the mind and the heart feeling worse and worse the more you try to perfect what has already been perfected, that's your heart. Peace achieves on its own, without the necessity for assistance from others, don't enable others to put you further and further down in life, convince you youre worse off than you already are, nothing can fill those voids in life, as embarrassed by others, who affects what happens how things look, are by comparisons intended to see if you process and fixate on illness, and whether you are a product of illnesses born with you or attained from your environment, not everyone is invincible to illnesses and life stresses, by voice, attitude adjustments take time, don't expect others to adjust to you when not well, why it is recommended to stay home, what causes beauty loss, and to whom is heart given, to those to be trusted and loved, to those who care, to those who look well, to those who are worth it, who is love taken from, those with love, those vindictive, those whose wellness is dependent upon touch, as soon as anything of value is taken, and illness is achieved whoever is well bears no guilt, no signs of victimization because they have convinced themselves you are ill, so if you are gone, no one cares, and its not as your dying your beauty arrives, but its as you light up and whether or not you are able to light others up should cause you no discomforts in life, don't allow the insults of others to cause you to break down, cry, or become ill, crumble mentally, and become disorganized, that only spreads illness within. Don't change people to match your prototypes in life, and don't destroy what is well because though to bring about other traits, turning girls into guys or changing voices that's manual, save energy. If youre not that bright, youre not that bright, if you don't know how to ignore input, that's your own fault for allowing illness to kick in, if you have cancer, let go, if you are well stay well, if you need life forces find those who don't shrink you down to size to figure out whether you are deserving of being well, who is offended does not deserve to hurt others.

Don't Let People Scare You into Thinking ...

Who listens to anyone emotional anyways, what a draining experience to express oneself emotionally frustrated, my head is burning, and Im tired now, who does that. You are what you in reference to describe, then become you, as expected, that's in defense to themselves, as not accustomed to something you've identified occurring, and then to cause occurrence to self, upon recognition by your audience, as not one of them, who then benefits, the side who is least affected benefits, as having no response, no reaction, physically or emotionally, therefore there needs to be no illness now, or reaction to identify causes for illness, it's a disbelief in the wellness of someone, and as defense, causing illness to someone to identify illness, if you want to live that's your choice, I choose to live, if I can self-identify, allow me to, is that of insult to others, no. Does that mean I'm gay? No. Does that mean I feel good chaste? Yes. Does that give you a right to test my wellness, go for it, take my fingerprints, and check my bloodwork at Dr Lim and the Gynecologist, drug test me. I don't do drugs, and I don't drink, it's called mental illness, it was caused by who and how and why. You're not a Doctor, none of your business. That's how people get hurt, they want to know how you stay well, that's my right to privacy, stop insulting me, stop hurting me, and stop causing me illness, to say my writing is now ill, then I don't have to write to anyone, I'm a book writer, and if you can't appreciate my livelihood, and how I spend my life writing, then pick a new passion to direct your hate towards not me. But we thought it was okay, you know the more tapes we can collect to make you look crazy, go for it, staying home, no friends, not social, no drinking, no drugs, #stopsuicide. Let me move forward, I am not your test subject, I can do research on my own and write, I am smart, do not treat anyone with illness as a subject for experiment, and cause me further illness, that's not helping someone, that's hurting someone, that's not allowing the well to thrive as attacking the sick, the sick are not at fault for their illnesses, that's not your right to put me down, I was chaste, if I'm confident that's because I am well, if I am smart and upset, then that means I need help, if I have been hurt by those closest to me, then that's my opportunity to stop talking to others, and figure out what's wrong, and if I need help living I have every right to work for LAPD, is that a Papa John's, Racism joke toward me, to bring up my frustrations, I'm not racist.

This is Not a Movement ...

Don't amplify issues, based upon what you think a person represents, as compromising the best interests of your own, mental health wise, likewise I suffer physically from mental health issues, and by discussing out loud, the physiological repercussions of not being liked by some or few, or on a one on one basis, or as in reply to, is not my responsibility to discuss out loud. For what reasons I was put down in life, compared to others, and make things about competitions in life, that's a very disempowering experience to be someone who benefits others, is of benefit to others, whom others have benefited by, and then harmed to now be of no benefit to anyone, that's taking care of yourself, it's not necessary to justify those cares, upon incidence of my drinking and then using those instances to rationalize why I do not deserve to live life, have a good life, or be well liked online, that's not what a discussion forum is for, to rehash wrongs, undo privileges in life, or argue sides, to benefit or curtail the positions of those who have already chosen sides in life, that is your choice, and if you so chose to take sides, based upon what is not publicized, and cause me harm, that's purposeful, to justify those harms by issues that are not your own, life's not a team sport, learn how not to provoke others, to matter, that's selfish way of generating reactions and attentions toward oneself, or for oneself, to get a reaction directed toward or in response to reject anyone's niceties in life and bring out a different side to a person, that called being catty, vindictive, triggering insult to injury, and triggering others to shred hate upon someone who has done everything in their power to get along well with others, besides staying home, eventually you leave the nest, work, and are expected to be social, if my experiences in life, do not match your interests and if you've think you've won by aggravating me, to benefit you as the one not aggravated, you should not need to see a condition, to recognize and value your own condition, that's manipulative, not nice. (As recorded 24 hrs a day, reporting since 2013: #mymollydoll). #stopbullying

Learn to Stay Calm ...

Depending on who your audience is not all will agree with you, be proud of you, or happy for you, no distance past failure is ever impressive to anyone who has been watching you since the beginning of your demise, its usually those who have known you the longest who lose faith the quickest, and those who just meet you tend to just go along with how everyone else feels in response to you being yourself, silly, or goofy, whenever in a new environment, that's not the time to be yourself or blurt out things in public, that's in nobody's defense, the origins of jokes, especially if not shared among to each party individually and residing in different states, how else would that be known. Learn to let go, those who have harmed you, thought deserved, and if you are alive today (ie me) then be happy with wherever you are in life, God can only hand out so many chances in life socially, there are epic fails, there is leadership, there is being lost, there is under pressure, there is intelligence, there is processing output and input, there is pressure to study? And there are unrealized pressures socially. Life needs no tango about it. If you have to dance around an issue, that's because they think you are lying, if you get sick, hiding things is not the solution, if your memorabilia has been trashed, it was not deserved, if you have been robbed, that puts everyone at risk of harm as identified, if you are trying to figure out whats going wrong, then do so, they will still drive you to a victims house to get a response from you, that was not funny, I attended her funeral, and if you miss weddings, then that's your fault for running too much not sleeping at night, everyone thinking youre on drugs or being a whore, school cannot save you then. You either function, or not, some are high functioning addicts, some cannot focus and sit still, I'm one of them, cannot function do not drink. Once you disclose how you work, that's how others seek to control you, bring you up, bring you down, cut chords, separate you, cause you to isolate, see if your gay, let you date, see if you get hurt upon losses, lead you on, reject you in public, whats all that for, if youre not interested at the start that simply means someone is not in the mood, by what influences are you aroused, and by whom, do you give affections to and why, how so, after running for a month straight and writing to Dejan, who upon touching me, am connected to, nevermind. Your first three weeks of work, be happy but dont share those happinesses with others, and never laugh out loud, especially now, how you lose intimacy and happiness in life, as expressed, left two jobs, not asked back to one. Always let others know when you are not well, not showing up on time or not being comfortable in public, means that your not viable to represent others, only return to work when well. Straight to the LAPD, I can't deal, I already hit my head, this is really not funny, newcomers, giving eachother high fives, I can only imagine, like my Ex putting up a wrestling photo? Huh. -Dont fight, if youre not fighting, then the otherside wins, goal: is to prove upon exposures aroused. Not guilty. To say upon exposures caused one to expose themselves. Why its not advantageous to be feminine. Leave, find other jobs. #date #insults #sober

Your Demise ...

7/8/2019

Your demise usually occurs, after success, and upon finding yourself lost in life, easily misdirected by others, on how tos or what to dos, do not blame others if you portray yourself in a compromising way, it only gets worse from there to claim that you are a victim or by showing the results of dating, that you are not happy with yourself, wondering why you were treated as damaged goods, in order to be refined always act like a lady, and never date anyone who thinks they are doing you any favors in life, one should be self-sufficient, who once loved you, maybe does not love you now and that's okay, you are allowed to exist online, so long as you do not blame others for your misfortunes, that's not the purpose for having a website to claim victim to others, as worse off without people in my life, its to do my best now, irrespective of the judgments that others held of me past, and that in spite of negative judgments now still a good person, what is thought of me now, is not something I have experienced my whole life, whether others think that you are something you are not, that proving them right to explore the causes for their concerns and act out their poor judgments of you, that's not gay. Gay is upon not dating, dating is not gay, and if you think Im gay because there is something wrong with me and Im not pretty now then don't date me, its simple. Don't pick apart the issues of others, and then as displaced put them under unrealized pressures in life, one should not be devalued upon leaving a relationship that's not deserved, one should not be treated as though they are gone before they are gone, and one does not need to be taught lessons as though they do not understand what loss is, or have not suffered losses in life, to each his own, life lived, and understood. Separations only get worse, the worse off someone becomes the easier it is for others to let go feel bigger and better than, as though leaving me was some type of conquest, and that my condition afterward was deserved, if you move on move on, let go too, and allow me to move forward without teaming up on my wellness in life as though Im not suffering.

How to Think Up ...

7/25/2019

Just watched a tutorial on YouTube about Website Launching: <https://youtu.be/YMSpVnMtuLg>. As I was watching was thinking about, things that come to mind, and what sits, and what causes one to not feel well, and what causes one to feel energy, whether that's by jokes as heard on the inside, or whether what others think affecting how you feel, you can only know via writing, from oneself, and via analysis of your writing by others, be judged, sometimes in conversation upon the disclosure of stories as written deemed insensitive or not good enough, most who only read digests, or think that reading is work, assume that you are not capable of articulating yourself in a way that will make others feel well, or be well toward you, that's over who is Doctor (or God in this case) growing up, I was always the friend that everyone talked to even-tempered, someone to confide in, and someone who made others laugh, I don't think that lasts for long, when you worry too much what others think, and think about everything you say past, and when you are wrong, or don't say things right, then others proven right about you, as not being a source of comfort, or wellness in the room, and upon viewing causing others to feel intimidated or less well upon recognition, its by whether people think you bear guilt, is how you are treated, and as a pushover in life, further treated and left out to see how one responds as rejected and separated from others, to see how when around others whether gone. Do your best to not impose any gone feelings upon others, or to entice others or teach others, how to treat those who are well as reject to take on the position of well or the standard of wellness (God). Who is God, someone who when they are invited by a larger audience stays well, and who upon entertained on a grander scale as among, does not lose sight or themselves or their words, does not feel gone, everyone was raised differently, to handle different masses of people, its all about your standards of ability to perform in front of others and under what various pressures or voices are you able to perform, some limited to what they can do best, whether that's writing or thinking, not rise to the standards of others, propelled from themselves, that would losing track of your soul, and place taken, that's not how the body works, to hurt someones insides, and then argue that as hurt inside not well spoken, that's not how poor speaking occurs, its about confidence, and its about candor, and wellness overall.

Writing to Issues ...

7/25/2019

Its important not to write to issues that dont speak to you, that you either are or not affected by. That is not the solution to your problems, when everyone is down, to create war torn situations, in which people are lost, and fighting over nothing in internal communications, at best what needs to be communicated can be communicated in a public space, that's to enable more formal conversations to be had from within, without creating unnecessary stress of unwanted communications made from within, or in public. This is about what people think things are about, and depends on who is playing victim, that teaming up against people, as bossed by others, is not evidence of guilt, but by who is stepping on who to prove who is bad, that is called trying to negotiate with others, to convince others, that someone is bad, or that they are not there for good purposes in life. What is being well liked? Its about others who like people, wanting to be liked to by the same person, that is normal among friends, but not siblings, any sibling rivalry is usually associated to having possessed traits and losing those traits or sense of empowerment, as though another is a source of disempowerment, yes it is true that those who grow close to you try to control you, and yes it is those who are close to you who steal or hurt you to affect your inside communications and make you sick, the ones who love or care for you, are usually not those who have internal communication problems, the ones who do harm you are because they have internal communication problems, that is the cause for their miscommunications as read by you, as thought to be a pushover or bearing guilt. Learn not to be insulting toward those who are doing their best, and just because of what someone looks like, after weight-loss, does not mean they are an addict or that they haven't earned the right to lose weight, and that it was because that was something they were focused on. Learn not to discriminate people, because when they are well they are not well around others. Everyone is different energy wise, its not easy to feel well around others, some are better off alone until well, by work get well, whether at home or in a trusted space applied for work, this you learn overtime, that public appearances eventually take their tole on people energy wise, depending on whether or not they fit in and can adjust to their settings, its different person to person.

As It Turns Out ...

7/25/2019

As it turns out fighting is not the correct response to your problems, and the misassociations of others interpretations of your life and the people in your life, or who have passed through your life, what meaning and purpose did they give to your life, or how and by what influences where you made better or different because of them. Sometimes people come into our lives, via meeting of others, by mutual acquaintances, and sometimes people meet via a meeting of the minds, and sometimes people meet, upon passing by and with a like, go on their way. Its not all about building and establishing relationships with others, that's not what likeability is about. And there comes a stopping point, when your now is different if not better than your past and sometimes able to move forward depending on who is watching thinks deserving of moving forward and why. There comes a stopping point, once you have arrived, and not go backwards, when going backwards puts others forwards in front of you, made to feel better than. What is reciprocal relationship? And how is energy produced within, and why is energy taken upon conversation with others, to whos soul to you belong, to yourself, and why is it drained upon interaction. Is that simply, a characteristic or trait of those who feel of value guarded, and why is it so punishing to have interactions with people who later make fun of you, why is that so damaging to your esteems, as though listened to, others though better than you to do so. To whom is nothing ever good enough for, those who feel that more is required, those who feel as though responses have not been timely enough, or those who think responses follow events, all responses are timely on behalf, and to say so puts me at risk of harm.

Lessons in Forgiveness ...

Theres a point at which you move forward, when going backwards does more disservice than it does a service to those who are well, such disruptions are called disturbances of the peace. Learn to lay off subjects when the dust has settled, and continue to build new thoughts within subjects that need work, and where there are problems, leave those problems to be dealt with by those who are good decision makers, or marked for making decisions, to cure the comforts of others, or discomforts, that's called trust, there comes a point when its time to stop, working on jokes toward and start thinking new, as such behavior is childish, to bring up the past of others as torment once they start doing well, that builds no new alliances moving forward as room for bonding but creates pathways for missteps among those to who are found to be dumbfounded or gone to the their own best interests as well as the best interests of others. Learn not to persuade the larger group discussions about others, by bringing into light incidences personally experienced as you were not as they are, such transfers of best interests are called retaliations, as felt to blame those for being apart of via association to blame for the hardships or fighting caused by others, that not how to treat the well, and then to imitate as insulted the person who feels smaller then, to appear innocent to such changes around them, as being brought forward by them, that's called not being able to distinguish who is to blame for violence occurring around, and then declaring them as not being apart of the solution to the violence ensuing around them, if you have always been in the helping professions, then you are automatically not tolerant of abuses, and automatically empathetic to the concerns of others, and automatically genuine to the best interests of those you come into contact with, that's not taking sides, and being a mediator, as to the best interests of all, it's a very time consuming position to puts oneself in as not being apart of anyones interests in particular, and then helping creates bases from which decisions can be made, to each parties best interests, that's not putting someone at odds, that's a lacksidaisical way of fighting for ones own best interests to declare who is bad, and by declaring who is bad, to be perceived as someone that is bad, and then leave it up to them to reverse those negative opinions of them, that's misjudgments, and now defenses brought from the person who was alienated, and defriended, as someone who is lacking traits for acceptance or too open about ones interests for peace and clarity of the issues. That's as connected, worried about the same things, then not handling things the way people would expect things to be handled, and as viewing the past, seeing someone as someone who thinks they are above or better then then putting them down as less smart.

Building Toward Argument ...

There are some who relate life to the unthinkable, whatever makes sense to them, sometimes not a shared experience, wellness, that's to say the least. Nevermind who is not with you or on board with your best interests in life, you can only be yourself, whether that's wellness, being apart of, or not the same as, that's just you, different, just because you are not well, does not mean as different to further differentiate yourself, from others, as not well, always do your best to blend in, that has been my motto, since day one, thinking about trying to build a website, and for what purposes, further disintegrated along the way, not to my knowledge, it seems as though others reading your notes, want to see you make arguments like arguments using the language from your notes, that would be a legal argument, requiring legal research, those were just fundamentals to building arguments, not to my taste, or to my current recollection, learn to think about other things in life, not fixate on the past, achievement wise, its all about maintaining your smarts and building upon your current smarts in life, that's how to stay well, intellectually, not all have the capacity to read and write, that's unfortunate, always do your best to be well spoken, its when we do not sound well that we are judged as being in the negative with deficiencies, in dialect, or courage or confidence, as not apart of or bearing some quality or characteristic attained in defiance to the authority of others, as with addictions or not, that's usually a fine justification for others delineating you as of poor influence in life, as a designated user in life, and by being labeled a user, or someone who uses or abuses substances in life, deemed of lesser value to society, and of lesser value, intellectually to others, as not being apart of and not by mind, or by presence thought of as being well or deserving of being well, its by who you surround yourself with respects are garnered, never trust anyone who is not in tune with you, its usually by blurts they send you off in life, as by giving poor advisements, or by insulting you, that's them being testy with you, and your wellness, do your best not to be negatively influenced by the illnesses of others as toward you, everyone does their best given the times to respond appropriately, if you do not know where you come from, you need not be reminded, along the way, there is no higher up in life, other than maintaining the friendships you do have and have had all along the way, to find a new set of friends, they are irreplaceable those who knew you before you were tampered with changed, and sided. Dont allow others to get you to fixate on negatives, and never turn on the ones who loved you.

Going Through Turmoil ...

Theres no better feeling than having a good conversation, starting a new project, and then focusing on whats in your best interests from that point on, almost like going on an errand, and the drive home, you feel at peace, like you've gotten something done, and know where youre headed in life, unfortunately those feelings don't last, its up to you to maintain positive momentum. There will be other conversations, where people will say things to you that don't make sense, or make disclosures to you that cause you discomfort in life, some disclosures so far beyond the realm of decency, that they cause you internal turmoil and chaos, we call those confessions, when people who have done wrongs in life, speak to you of those wrongs, then turn on you, as knowing what they've done wrong, send you astray in life, that's to reduce their confusion in life about themselves, and find clarity in someone else knowing their struggles in life, with themselves, those are not your issues, remind yourself of that, that's a form of harassment, any unwanted information being passed to you, by someone who you thought was a good person, and turns out to not be a good person, that's called fraud. Don't enable others to harm you, as you go through the process of helping others online, don't be easily persuaded by negativities in life, to think wrong of others, or even yourself, that's so common to coming forward in life, there will be everyone on your side, then no one on your side, then a few on your side, then those who test your abilities to think outside the box beyond yourself, whether you recognize the negative potential for others to view you as someone or something you are not, that's usually by people who think they know better than you, to help others to judge you in the negative, that's just them being defensive to their intelligences in life, nothing to do with you. Always report when you've been harmed, know that its not your fault. Everyone is going through something, that some know nothing about, there are a such thing as invisible wars, mostly within yourself, staying abreast of the issues, and not confining to too many spaces, that cause you illness, including in your own mind about things, do your best to stay steady.

Benefiting from Others ...

Not all will be liked the same, some judgmental towards those who they believe to be bad people, or people whos reputations have soured beyond the point of return, that's judging them as they know them, as not being good enough. To not overuse the term "enough," there comes a point in time, when there are added justifications for the hardships faced by others, where by their own “defects of character” are not sound decision makers, at what point do you stop bringing up their past, to shroud them as bad now, to then be used to justify the wrongs of others, that’s the point at stopping. Don’t think of everything in an esoteric way as about you, everyone has lives they have to live, with the right to not be affected by you, no matter what your contributions have been to society, as having shared your story, been a positive influence in the past, to be looked upon, or viewed, as busy, if its when it becomes about you, you become nervous, then make sure what youre doing in life is right, not be added to those suffering, affected by bad happenings, as related to you, or your hardships in life, this is when it again stops, others being hostile towards you as connected, seeing you based upon your failures or successes as something less than, thats when you are not apart of the whole. These are points of feeling let down in life, questioning ones self-worth, such as when you are a good person, and then your ability to be a good person is taken away from you, some function fine below the radar, others, as known suffer more harms than good as connected to those who have been mistreated as connected to bad people in life, you can only help so many, before everyone gets affected in the negative as associated to you, what is that nervousness anyways? Judgment. What is that negativity anyways and confidence toward you? Thinking they are better than you, and what gets people to stop psychoanalyzing you, and treating you as weak member to a group, as though your record, or your past, brings others down in life, that’s room for discussion, who is so unlikeable, that they have to live alone as separate from others, and who is able to be social with new friends or old friends, and who is to blame for decisions made by you, you are always in control of the decisions you make, and choices to stay separate from others, not all of this.

What is Femininity ...

7/22/2019

Based on where I am now in my weight-class, its not a winning argument on my behalf to have this discussion as overweight, but from my standpoint now, will explain, when it is not clear what your sexuality is, others are more feminine toward you, whether that’s to insult you or to befriend you, that’s just how women are. Don’t be easily bothered by others executing their prowess ... how they look beautiful, or how they seem confident. That should not bother you. Everyone does their best to be themselves, and once you’ve found yourself, hopefully others will allow your confidences in life to shine too. We have all been through a lot, its not easy to be confident these days ... not by looks, weight gain, and not by attitude, depression, just do your best. Having a positive attitude means being able to overcome setbacks in life, job losses, relationship losses, and continue to move forward as best you can. That doesn’t mean that life needs to be lived that way to understand how to overcome struggles in life. Just be mindful that not everyone grew up the same, it doesn’t matter where you went to school or who you were friends with, we are all human, no one is invincible to the negativities of others. Where you find acceptances in life, are good places to start. Who you find acceptances among are good places to judge whether you are being an acceptable person, likeable and doing whats in the best interests of those around you, working, making friends, dating, living a good life. I don’t think that everyone should be the same, there will always be a hierarchy when it comes to likeable traits, by the wellness of others, some breeds will shine above others, that’s your disposition in life. Some similar, some different. That doesn’t mean any less human, or feminine.

Feeling Above Than ...

Not everyone will feel like you, and some feeling above than, think that they are better than. Never overreact to any situations in life, nor respond to any losses in the negative. That’s just seed for breeding negativity toward you. Allow the dust to settle. There is no telling once you’ve jumped off the cliffs of sanity to insanity, that’s called psychosis, when you are no longer tolerable of your surroundings, and think that people who were once friends, turned on you, whether that’s a manifestation of the present or the past, there is reason for others banding together against you, and whether that has happened to you in the past or presently, there are no justifications for expression of resentments. Whether you have been tortured for years as though thought deserved, eventually all bullying must come to an end, bullying only causes self-harm and suicide, and if its by your wrongs you bear guilt, don’t expect the wealthy or the well to admonish you of the unreasonable pressures you have thrust upon those you think bear guilt, that's not gay, that's self-love. Once you learn to move forward in life and not hurt people because you think they want something from you, its is then too late to correct someone who has already been hurt, and now suffers from mental health issues, learn not to throw people into the same standings in life, and then hurt their abilities in life, to be more like who you seek to accuse them of becoming or look like. If someone gets picked from among there must be a likeable quality or trait about them, that they abstain from activities, including drinking, drug use, and sex, marching is for good reason, not to say that one has the right to do themselves, but one has the right while abstaining to do so, and that includes shower, and take good care of themselves. That's not your right to take away ones right to clean themselves, of the wrongs caused by others, playing with their look, and facial expressions. That's not your job to change or alter the faces and the body types of those well.

Be a Good Person ...

A lot of what you have to do and say reflects who you are as a person. We all get aggravated sometimes, allowing our sensitivities to get the best of us. Who is to blame when we are aggravated? Sometimes what people have to say to you, wont always feel good, you wont always get your way, that's one type of aggravation. In a good way others may try to help you, try to change you, that's to your benefit to be changed. Sometimes what people will have to say, may change you for the worst, that's another type of aggravation. Do your best always to be in control of your emotions, whether under the influences of substances or not, not allow what other people have to say or do affect you in the negative, always maintain steady footing, its when you react and respond in the negative that they win, don't let others get the best of you. I was thinking today, the purposes for monogamy and how do relationships help with wellness? Not everyone has the privilege of being in a relationship, some fair better than others in relationships. It sometimes just so happens that those in relationships, have better lives than they do when single. For me, it helps with stability. It seems as though without love, we all suffer from boughts of depression, which should only be momentary. Thats why people have careers and hobbies, and workout, there is more to life than being in a relationship. Do your best to stay well, whether you got married or currently single. -What is contagious. I think having a strong sense of faith is important to your own wellness. Not allowing outside factors to interfere with your health. It takes awhile to understand and learn not to be a hypochondriac about your own wellness, its really no ones fault when you get sick, but what can you do to prevent yourself from being harmed? Do your best to move forward, after breakups.

The Benefit of Being Sheltered ...

7/21/2019

How you see the world is your choice. Sometimes to your benefit its okay to shelter yourself from the opinions of others, that's your choice. Not everything everyone has to say or do will be of benefit to you. That's just how the world works. Some fair better banding together and some fair better apart from the ideas shared by others, that doesn't mean that there is anything wrong with what someone has to say, if it does not fit in your repertoire or understood by you. Not everything everyone has to say will make sense to you in the immediate, sometimes afterward what people say sticks, and sometimes what people have to say does not stick. Its usually experiences which baffle us, that stay in our minds. Not necessarily about others, but may cause us to recall events in our lives which happened to us. The basis from which anything is written is usually thought to be about those who feel at odds with you. Its usually not the case that someone who has moved forward is writing about those past, but that is how the past is able to control your present, as thought about. Always do your best to move forward, accepting who is in your life now, who has been in your life past, without reliving the traumas past, as having been associated to anyone, you deem is not a good fit socially for you to be apart of, you don't always have the choice of who you are forced to interact with in public spaces, this you get used to as you get older, more accepting of others, this takes time. Its as people know you you should be treated, not as people know you based upon your past recollections share, that is not how to treat others, as though they are something they are not.

Control Issues and Natural Disasters ...

7/21/2019

There is such thing as an abuse of control, when others think it necessary to exert control over your issues in life, as being thoughtless, and in need of help or assistance figuring out how to better oneself. There are moments of agony, and there are moments when we know best. That's not all the time. Goodtherapy.org describes control as the following:

“Control—exerting influence over one’s environment or the actions or behaviors of another person—is sometimes used excessively by those who fear the unpredictable and ambiguous, feel they need to prove themselves, or fear losing control.” [1]

I think that's what harassment is about, those who thought by their own knowledges and positions, thought it right of themselves to explain to others the situation, and what needs work. Whether that's harassment, or simply, people not needing to be influenced by others, that's room for discussion. Some by their experiences in life know best, and others by their exposures, see differently. We are not all the same. The important thing to keep in mind is whether by your own sense of knowledge about the world, are having an affect on others and their decision making skills. Not interfere with the best decision making skills of others, because you have fear or have had fears past, whether rooted in your own misconduct or rooted in the misconduct of others. There is a such thing as conspiracy, that is being in tune with the wrong ideas about life, and the shedding light upon those ideas, by using people as examples.

What is a natural disaster? Any circumstance, resulting from the happening of events, that causes victims to feel a lack of control, and by victims I mean people who by their decision making skills, unaffected by others, experience good luck in life, and by the wrongful interference of others, experience bad luck in life. And upon the happening of a series of bad decisions made by others, additional wrongs occur, by the poor decision making of those affected by the transfers of luck to others, from those who bear the gift of positive insight.

Timing is Everything ...

7/20/2019

Its okay to be yourself, and well if you add inspiration and light to the lives of others, than you must be visualizing things in a clear way, once that's lost well then youre on your own. Always maintain a positive outlook in life, exactly how close to people do you believe you should be before tying the knot, that was one lesson I learned through the dating process, a ring takes 3-4 years, and then there is marriage, and then I didn't get to the part where you make kids. That's unfortunate, don't feel lost, because during the hay day or good years you did not settle down, there may have been good opportunities, that you passed up in life, simply because you thought you needed to serve a bigger purpose in life, not necessarily, to find better, hey he replies (he's already got a kid). You may not have it all in life, but that certainly does not mean stop trying, and never resort to fighting, its just recipe for disaster, and disillusionment, who is on your side, should always be you first and foremost, while under the care of others, and while caring for others, feel better knowing that there are those around you who are doing well, so that when you reach a point of stability, you have them to remember of what a good life is supposed to look and feel like, the only people safe in hell are those who are good at avoiding troubles in life, if youre not one of them than so be it, maybe a different life has been carved out for you in life, not all are fit or equipped with the tools to be cool in life, just stay put. When cool arrives, stay calm, and when you find your cool in life, be happy! They could find better.

Dealing with Voices ...

The best way to handle voices is to talk through what the voices are saying with a therapist or with a hotline. I never chose to undergo this condition, but it's a rare condition, caused by thinking your famous, and then thinking others outside of you are trying to correct you, either by taunting you or trying to control what you think. Constantly remind yourself that no one can control what you think, no one outside of you and especially not people outside of you who are not talking to you, the best way to overcome this condition is by talking about what you hear and then having someone else translate back to you, how to think about what others are saying about you, and whether those delusions are real or not. Its not helpful to talk about your problems out loud, it is likely that others who think that you deserve to have your condition, will not think highly of you or will further put you down, with disability in life. Its not your fault. Remind yourself that you are a good person, and no matter what anyone thinks of you, that you deserve to achieve wellness too. To what extent that is up to others, the extent to which they are willing to trust you around others, and whether they think you are deserving of jobs in life. That's not Schizophrenia, and that's not Bipolar, that simply convincing yourself, that you can hear others inside of you, or by auditory delusion, that is what is causing head burn. You have to be a really positive person, to overcome these conditions in life, its not your fault.

Thinking About the Day Ahead ...

In thinking about the day ahead, have some type of conscious awareness of who you are connected to, those are your influences in life, as brought down by, or lifted to higher levels of detachment, enabled focused, and self satisfaction, not to be confused by selfishness, a common demarcation of those who only think about themselves, that's not what focus is about. Focus is about having basic empathies for those in your surroundings mindful of one another struggles in life to perform, yet not impeding in the progress of one another toward achievement of those goals in life, that's a healthy working environment. To work anywhere, you have to learn how to turn your light off, and blend in, for some that's an easy task, for others, it takes a practical skill or knowledge and know how, you would think that these are basic instincts, or common knowledge of how to blend in, but not for all, for some raised to shine, shine usually dims those around you, an air of confidence about them that comes at price. Eventually shining takes its tole, that walk into a room and everyone notices you gift in life, comes with its demons, to not be noticed, or to eventually age and dim, well that's not a choice, many are not accustomed to being well liked for that very quality, its unique among a select few, or is it? There are some who are capable of being themselves and everyone liking them, and there are some who possess that quality or trait in life, thought not deserved, and tested for what dims or changes their light from within. Don't be experimental with others, we are all trying and doing our best not to spread illnesses among us, but to be our very best healthy and happy selves, this takes time. "Spend your energy points wisely" I was once told in a Rehab setting 2011, that's not staying up too late doing research or working late night hours to get assignments done for the next day, all-nighters is certainly not the way to go, to live a healthy and happy life, it may be quiet, but its you in the long run who suffers from working late night hours, make sure to get your sleep. Don't think too much about it, much of self-esteem is about recognizing your gifts in life, and your gift of wellness, give others time to heal, we don't all get well at once, always be patient.

Going Backwards ...

It makes sense for some to go backwards to exploit your personal history as deserving for loss of friends, not a choice to separate. Upon a separation it is deemed that there is something wrong or defective with your condition, causing separations past or to explain losses of friendships. There is nothing wrong with me, I don't do drugs and I don't drink alcohol, and when I do so loosen up, its safe to say that more is required of me given my standing as a Law Student, and that because more is expected of me there is pressure to conform to certain standards in life, of wellness. Being on meds is no easy task, and not to claim victim to justify the actions of others, as being above or below others in life, is no excuse, never assume for the purposes of reporting that the person reporting is at fault for later consequences to the lives of others, as led by themselves, the lives of others are not mine to live, theres a certain amount of privacy that is required of those transitioning from well liked, to watched, and who is responsible for those negative judgments, and do not claim that one who has been victimized by others poor judgments of them is now, the culprit of those negativities in life. I just spoke to the police this morning. I think upon watching someone and hurting them, there is some kind of non-remorse that is felt among those who see someone lose control of their emotions, and that is what has been done to me, I don't wish to see that further done to members of my family. If everyone can respect that much, as understood, then don't play to the audience, and then hurt my family as being apart of those discussions. Don't relish in the anti-pathy of others, or in the non-affected groups of individuals who think they are above or superior to the emotions felt by those reacting and responding, I called the police today, and we discussed, focusing on self-esteem, as a point at issue, and not to spread racism, as a source of empowerments, to those who feel as though they have been harmed by a specific race or type of person, let those things go in life. I don't think its appropriate to wrongfully accuse me of doing drugs when sober, or being the cause of self-harm, upon going to rehab, its usually during points of weakness, we are harmed, you have to be very alert, look well, sleep at night, and be awake in the daytime to survive, its not a comfortable position to say the least, with your guard down, hurt everytime. Learn to move forward without others

How You Identify Now ...

No matter what changes you have gone through in life, its how you identify that ultimately sets you up, for commentary during times of controversy. Always be yourself. No matter what influences have changed you in life, or your demeanor, know that you will always be you no matter who tries to change you or affect your well being and wellness. Initially when trying to draw attentions toward self, sometimes the wrong words comes to mind, and while upon viewing someone speaking in public, not understand what they are saying, thinking things are about them, to that others take offense. You can only be responsible for who you know, not who knows you by name, or by face, be forced to take responsibility for the ways in which others were influenced by you. If you don't want to contribute to good causes in life, you don't have to contribute, sometimes stating the issues out loud are helpful to those on the inside, facing troubles socially, professionally, and now academically. You cant accept to have full acceptances of everyone in your environment, only those to who you have immediate contact with. If you don't have a following, then its by how you speak, you are heard. This you learn as a writer online, its important to collectively be true to thought, sound of mind, and sound of heart. If you now suffer from mental health issues, which interfere with your ability to speak publicly, then so be it, you are only given so many opportunities to be out in public, before you stop trying to appear on your own. It doesn't matter how successful you are, you are always responsible for your own wellness, regardless of what others think of you, present, or past.

Anger and Resentments ...

Anyone who has not moved forward in life and matured is deemed to bear some kind of faulty logic, as to the causes for their own unhappiness. We call these anger and resentments. Anyone who cannot move forward from an event and who talks about the past is someone who bears some kind of resentment toward someone else they deem as responsible for their own unhappiness. There is also anger that is exposed, once someone expresses those resentments out loud, many years later sounds angry, at the time, simply an expression of what they felt went wrong to their relationships past. The solution to anger is not to show that other share similar emotions and band together. If you have led a good life, then be happy with your life, should need no explanation past as to why you have fewer connections in life, or what went wrong. Usually during phases of drinking or drug use, we express ourselves in ways, that make us look not well, or mentally ill. Do not blame others for your discomforts in life, it is likely they will take as ammunition things that you have said and throw those emotions back toward you. Its best if you have nothing nice to say to not say it at all, especially when it comes to hooking up and getting married, learn to move forward, not allow jealousies in life to take hold of your best judgment, or decision making skills, so not reject those who do not understand what the underlying issues are, ownership and control, of audience members, and ownership and control over friends, and ownership and control over who is at fault, and ownership and control over opinions. When one relationship does not work out, that does not mean that other relationships wont work out. Do your best to move forward with or without friends in your life. It is likely that by the time it hits you as to what went wrong, you will be dealing with your own set of issues, doing your best to overcome your troubles, you can only forgive someone so many times, throughout their hurdles in life, before you finally let them go, that's friendship.

Qualifications ...

7/16/2019

You can only provide so much information, before others go through your things like you deserve it, that's not appropriate. Don't take matters into your own hands, and further make information private a matter of public concern, if limited to one conversation or text message contacted, that's not appropriate to use the names of people in my information or contacts or information provided on Twitter, that's putting me at risk of harm and others at risk of harm, that's not an appropriate use of information to exploit the privacy of those who are not held in positions of trust, but who live at home in positions of trust that's the difference between playing fair, and hurting someone who you think is responsible or a contributory factor as related to your wellness and ability to succeed, don't make me apart of other peoples efforts to provide aid during times of need, Im not a resource for that, I can only help to the extent that I am able to help via writing, and research, and writing books, theres a certain tact when it comes to assisting others, we are not all famous, and sometimes casting light over people who live privately before they are able to speak for themselves is whats at issue, not until you have put yourself forward in public, can your image be used or recreated and taunted as against you, that's the difference, don't utilize the private spaces of others to cast a negative light upon them although in non-acceptance of them or for notoriety accuse someone of causing harm to others, who has done everything possible ... finger-printed, calls 911 daily, and reports. That is not someone of concern, causing someone self-harm using their identity without permissions to earn a living is called identity theft, using the identities of someone who lives privately, as insult, is called a violation of someone's right to privacy, my life is not a movie, my life is not a song, there are other inspirational people in life, to mold yourselves from, I'm not one of them.

Horse to Ferrari in 100 Years Flat ...

Okay so maybe we advanced too quickly, that doesn't mean stay behind intellectually, or praise those who have maintained a dumbed down, non-chalant attitude about life, what is confidence? Of course we don't want to miss a thing. Even the butterfly that flew to me in the fire, cried for help. We're still here, are you guys okay? Friends make friends in the weirdest moments in time, you never know who you'll get matched up with in life. Just stay positive. Life is full of circles, advances, and non-stop backward tricks, you have to gazebo your way out of, surrounding yourself with well thoughts to get present again, that's a normal process of growing up. Stay in tune with who and what works for you best, we are similar, and dissimilar, and for good reason, God made us that way, how else would we improve when not well, or change when change is needed to avoid troubles in life, now that makes sense. Thank you for the FORWARD sign, Barack Obama, that was really helpful, stayed in a cubicle, for many years, with boyfriends, and then built a website, which was only a sign online for some time, sorry for the lack of change during the developmental stages of building a website. You need to have ideas before you can verbalize a feeling of wellness, and you need to have wellness before you can verbalize in good humor and retrospect the past, this is an unfortunate series of events, in which we realize our own wellness is somewhat dependent upon those around you belief wise, not to say the Jews are at fault, or reverse psychology, or a professor who asked me if I was dyslexic, sorry for going backwards in self-defense, saying stop this stop that, that was an obvious use or abuse of humor, in reply to others being accusatory of me, so that makes sense but doesn't make me look any better for having explained so. Just do your part to make sense.

When People Put Words Through You ...

Are you still yourself, no matter what gets put through you, or do you turn into something you are not, putting people under as gone, or whether you are to be trusted, and what are the causes for illness or suicide, its trying to be justified that upon statement causes someone to react in that way therefore not to be trusted, then as studied a helpful cause to something bad occurring, outside of them, you cannot control what people think, and even as studied manipulated to be proven wrong in life, or as mentioned insulted, hurt without others caring or indifferent toward you as being manipulative or trying to code to ideas past or by use of the identities of those past who were bad, be made to look intelligent of ideologies in life. Its not just by my experiences but it is my life, shortened to a few words, which is to undermine me, if anyone has helped lighten the tone it has been me, if anyone has helped to help others face challenges in life it has been me, head on is not the correct way of dealing with concepts that are out of your scope of expertise, and treated as unintelligent, or able to think like, with the same skill set upon having been read, is not how to make one smarter, or like. It is by shared wellness that others stay well, and by those indifferences, are people matched in life. The well tend to stay among the well, and its by proving someone is of no good, or has relapsed, that they are to be judged in the negative as contributing to causes for mental illnesses, as in costume used to trigger the issues of others, as directed toward them, as upon a meeting in public, meeting those who you do not know, who know things about you in private, to draw attentions as though known people are watching you in private to drain your intelligences in life, slumber your body, burn your mind, or treat you as unapproachable, because you do things to make yourself feel well, keep yourself entertained, keep up with trends, and its only until illness is suffered do people sometimes realize, what it is that made them feel well, or be appreciative of those who are well, or able to drink, as being privileged to do so, without becoming less intelligent or affected by the opinions of others, until those phases in life have started, don't hurt those who have yet to experience those phases in life, and if those were phases in life, don't hurt someone until theyre not able or given the opportunity to achieve wellness on their own again, and as independent treated as though trying to be like, or in reference to travesties, or as studied thought about, as named about those ill, or as referenced to placed blame upon, that's not the solution to study causes for suicide, nor my writings or behaviors prior to a suicide, love those who are well, and nothing like a Kodak leave anything up, to misrepresent someone who has acknowledge they don't look well, and now not doing well in life, and not able to do well, and that explains mental illness, not the behaviors of others. Wellness is an ability to get well on ones own, illness is a disability unable to get well without the help of others, and permanent placements are by admissions placed with the not well, and upon further admissions, treated as someone who is mentally ill based upon wellness and based upon how well you are among the sick, treated as well, and able to be sent home.

Sometimes as Confident ...

Sometimes as confident and looked at one feels well, and sometimes as confident and looked at others feel better than, and sometimes as looked at confidence is lost, that's called being a woman, and if you get punished well don't expect to be sided with in that department as to your own wellness, be looked at as someone of positive influence in life, whether or not you got into college early, understand the leadership standing process, and the justification for not hippie-ing the rest of your semester out as smoking pot with your best guy friend, while he had a girlfriend, or worrying about who loves who yet, its not until in a relationship, as well, that you tend to be particular about who your associations in life are, as separate or together, and when you are doing something youre not supposed to be doing, makes it difficult to connect and have relationships in life. Know that as told, your biggest failures, will play themselves out toward you by voices, as public opinion shifts in the negative toward you as directed by those above you, not including you as important, and then "as directed" attentions directed toward you as wanting something you do not have, or as looked at thought to feel less than or less capable of achieving the same in life, good fortune, wellness, or by body type, have the same or worse insecurities about your good health, or as looked at thought to be in poor health, do not by how you look determine your own wellness sometimes, its by what we know and see in others, we feel good, and by feeling good feel good, sometimes in knowing who people are, we want to chat, as excited about meeting or knowing, and sometimes, as recognized we falter, either understanding these causes and consequences of becoming known to all and respond properly or perform less than average to the standings of all, be a good person, God rewards those who are good, and by being good one is good, not always by what you have to share can you perfect yourself, or can an exchange of wellness be shared, that's not wellness, transfer.

There Will Be Moments ...

7/31/2019

There will be moments when you are well, and there will be moments when you are corrected as for having shared personal life interpretations of events an opinions:

Link to Page: <http://www.mymollydoll.com/removed-posts--new>

Its so important to appear well in front of others, be well spoken, and if youre not feeling well not to share, you can only be put under the trust of others so many times, and be around others when not well before you begin to question your own wellness and thoughts about life, when you get into meditations about the past or present, stop yourself, from going into the pains of your memory bank, as not as smart, or bright enough to continue on, you'll always be fearful of your worst moments in life, and likewise that much more difficult to love. Having said that anything private shared to you, do not share out loud, not even by story, that shared closeness, is not for others to feel close or to understand you better, that's an exchange of wellness to them, ad causes pain to the person upon sharing, why we have right to privacy. Not all wellness will be shared, and its upon sharings of wellness, we determine who is sick, and who is well or a match, that was by Rabbi's for matrimony and kids, but now being thought too much about looking or hearing from others, just respect that people have had their troubles in life, and not all are strong enough to be present always, be thankful for having them come into your life, even if they feel well and you don't, but don't be spiteful toward those who seek to feel better by voicing their opinions toward you as not well, remember your good years, and never stop trying to better yourself, the more you sound like yourself the less you will be hurt by the interpretations of others, and belief systems, that's not to threaten a persons livelihood, by bringing up their past, its when you are wrong you suffer from those pains in life, as not having lived a better life, and when you remember your good years difficult to go back to those phases in development in life as well, don't overanalyze, what was occurring around you when you were well, it will likely make you sick, if you have come a long way, don't allow the sharings of your life stories with others, cause you illness, and picked on as someone who has not lived a good life, or have achieved well when well, do your best to be a good person in spite of what others think, and if your work product no longer looks or feels the same is whats in question, does not mean that someone is not well, having looked at them or their work, it could be as imitated bettered, and then worse off as themselves no longer special that's the toll on you as a worker online, how to keep up with the times, be original, and then get hurt as influencing others for the better, not all outlooks in life will be shared, think twice before hurting yourself.

Who Benefits from a Telling of Your Story ...

7/31/2019

First and foremost you should benefit from a telling of your story, and if your stories do not benefit others, that's not harming others, sometimes its only harming yourself, by use of humors, and in short, describe events, treated as insensitive, do your best to provide full detail, when an incident disclosed has caused you hardships in life, and why, and what the misconceptions concerning your condition or lack of animations and warmth around others is about, you live and you learn how to provide love to those you know and don't know, then get treated as offender, things missing, eyes itchy, room crowded, moving boxes, moved to a smaller room, and treated as let down in life, allow your good moments to happen, and however you get harmed by failures in life, do not expect others to be crowd pleasers about it, its usually when all are well, that all crowds are pleased. Don't be insulted easily by others. Whether you are considered traitor or sell-out, the times mature, and all are forgiven, from which stories, and connections in life do businesses thrive, and from where empowerment comes from don't expect all to be sensitive toward you or your needs in life. Do your best to stay well, and if you cannot stay well, don't make the lives of others more difficult having known you, the busier you keep yourself, the better off youll be, learn how to make money, and provide financially for yourself "rubbing hands waved at me on the freeway." Once you are able to provide for yourself, then youll be happy, and if you cannot make it on youre own, then don't rely upon family to assist you, their own wellness is for themselves as well, whether you are scared or not, about doing and achieving well in life, don't allow your fears to come to fruition, you can have talks, and you can actually make money, when a goal is achieved allow people to blossom they have tried all their lives to provide for themselves.

How You Are Looked At ...

7/31/2019

When ready to return to society, that's not always a new beginning, sometimes, feels like better days are to come, but you still have to maintain some sense of resiliency about you, which requires you to overcome you past troubles while stretching for new ground forward. Its not everyday, that we realize our potential, its okay to complain, its okay to have bad days, complaining about life, is about questioning senses of normalcy, and what is around you, give meaning to what speaks to you in life, and share meanings among others, those are normal processes of creating normalcies about life. Once something liked is used over and over again as an analogy for better understanding, then its easier to cast timelines and blames, as though one was of importance or significance to others, held in higher standing, than spoken of or about, this you learn as friends, how to be not equals as to likeability or respects but not treated as less than, that's friendship, bettering others, and the benefit running toward those in conversation with you, after pre-judgments are passed well all things change, I don't think it should be my experiences in life, experimented with, in terms of how to stay well and what causes increased illness, or worsens an otherwise peaceful well state of mind that would be [blames past] [like other or attacked as justified] [held to higher standards then]. That's whats at issue, getting into a school rolling admission, early December 2002, you give up sometimes in life, once things are set, and once set, not have to try so hard in life at ease, that's what the eerie sense of confidence about someone is about, pride, as getting into a school, not about knowing anything anyone else does not know about life, learn to let go and move on from subjects and comparisons, that usually does more harm than good, to say as exposed to and upon acceptances, then treated the same, in the reverse, treated as someone not to be proud of, that's the changing of the tides, that has occurred those not proud of themselves now proud of themselves as ahead or knowing of something someone else does not about life, and then the person to whom insight was provided to does not benefit from a knowing of informations, from ones life, as known to them, not known to me, until exposed.

Different Places in Life ...

7/30/2019

You may get separated from people you know, but remember those experiences in the positive, its common to get paranoid upon separations and even worse if you care what other people think defensive, don't be. Everyone has their ups and downs, no one is perfect, no relationship is perfect, and certainly no separations are perfect, no matter whos side you are on given the past, or current turmoils, its nice for a change for not needing to assemble any support systems and for support systems to already be in place to support, I think everyone is doing a very good job, and am lucky enough to be able to help in any way I cannot as a speaker or by giving speeches as though Im all knowing or leading any civil unrest not talked about, nothing beyond [personal issues] and thoughts about life, but many issues do hit close to home, so its been advised not to mention those subjects to which others have been affected by, this Ive learned over time, that uneasiness only gets worse, the more you talk about something past that others have moved forward from, allow people to have good lives, and accept how they feel about the past, as connected or not, and to what extent connected affected in their daily lives to be reminded of the past, for some that's a mental health issue, why its not fun to bring up incidences, sometimes for humor, but among most their worst moments were not their best mental health moments, and their worst moments do not adequately exemplify their ability to learn and grasp concepts concerning now, to better appreciate how far everyone has come, be patient.

Not All Sides Need to Be Represented By Me ...

7/30/2019

Not all sides need representation, there is always a benefit to having an audience that is a group of non-partisan people to a subject who have yet to hold opinions. All the natural inclinations of people being drawn toward subjects to amuse them or not find amusing by them as to the issues of others, to where amusement is found, or where joy can be found and felt as being identified among, and making in jest, a reply that is sound in front of the public. Allow people to be heard, in that their issues do not affect the issues of others. Allow people to be heard, in that their words (my words) are not used by others, to express how they feel, or be represented by someone who is not me (spoken). Allow people to take sides, not take turns as to arguing towards people, as not being good enough or having a sound mind, how good is good enough, that is whats at issues, not in regards to causes I have supported, those are not the sole purposes for maintaining a website, only to built a website, and to support causes while building a website, those fundamental concepts of what a website meant to me was a private conversation not a lawsuit, and those lawsuits personal, as anyone who commits suicide in front of another is wrong to do so, that's if anything a cry for help, and there are many numbers to call when help is needed, its often times we feel offended by unwanted help in life, that is people we do not need in our lives, the sick, the poor, those lacking good social skills, or people who have too many issues, and worse yet date anyone with so-called "baggage" allow those people to dismember themselves pick themselves apart and as well share from a well standpoint if they so think it necessary to help others move along in life, not necessarily move forward but be able to process better events in their lives which caused them to self-harm, and or drink, or use drugs, we have all been there points in time where we have felt low and experienced points in time in which we felt high, that's not medication based, (depression) is hereditary and is passed along from one generation to the next (my bloodline is high energy) not in need of meds to function on a daily basis, that's whats at issue, whether that's due to unwanted spotlights, or misidentification of peoples having (energy) is whats at issue, and then being put on meds, taken off meds, put on too many meds, and worse yet not put on enough meds to function. It is when we are well that we are doing what we are doing best, not all the time, sometimes well in the company of friends or companions or professional relationships have those moments, where we are living life and living life with purpose, those moments are to be enjoyed, the worst has yet to come that's not optimism thats pessimism, the worst has already occurred that's not pessimism talking about the past but depression, think in terms of positives, what is going to help get you to where you want to be in life, and have those thoughts, if those thoughts hurt the health of others, which is at issue via messenger then do not share your thoughts with others, as attacked, whether to build anything or to report to anyone above you to build anything, if you know you best no connections should help or aid you via listening services or not toward you, help give you a quiet space in exchange for sharing your dilemmas in life, concerning outlook and being put amongst those accused of wrongs.

Having Your Feelings Hurt ...

It's a matter of from where intelligences are derived (from education). And it's a matter to what references are made (by exposures). Your fears may not be the same as others, but that doesn't mean its okay to share what your fears are, as responded to the defenses created will always be to the sides least empassioned argued in favor towards, and lastly yourself is spoken for when others interests are at heart, that's called making arguments as about thought about others, stop and think about something else other than persons, as being about, until about, that does no one a service to create arguments that highlights pathways to why people are called names, and its not helpful to insult someone who has been up since 5am writing and establishing arguments from their car, in their phone, and on their website, as reporting via phone, that's not to be like someone to whom I had a previous relationship to ... as affected as blocked photo of his child put on his profile, and stopped talking to him, and got a job, then someone showed up at my work who looked like him, learn to let things go ... whoever helps you to establish your new life be thankful for them its upon discomforts in life that people are separated or jobs are lost, that's causing illness to people who are well, and as gone, hurting them as gone, knowing them when present or not, even my niece who is 5, can tell whether I am well or not, and the fact that that is something that I cannot even tell myself, shows that there is room for improvements when it comes to self acceptances, in life, is as told about thought about in the negative that is wrong to use someones life, for negative output as toward them or about them, as in association to those in their lives, trying to hurt or harm them, that's not how to help someone by helping them down, as deserved, that's intelligences I shared as being in my room and recording an what is heard inside my room as heard outside my room, do your best to always be wise and intelligent as impressions upon others are made, or could be made based off of impressions upon you, that is not how God is made, God is made, by a sharing of insights (weather) and instances to which one has been harmed (without them knowing or understanding why) and still staying focused and not bothering others, that is not to say that a God has been created, or one has established as means by which a God could be created, its simply being in tune with nature, and the wellness of those around you, sometimes things don't work out, and the more often times than not, that things don't work out, it is because of somethings others, are raising toward you, to turn you down in life, as wrong. That's not wanting you to be impressed upon, influence others, and as seeing you, believing you to be something you are not, which can be impressed upon children without them hearing your thoughts, and as affected be treated as source of disempowerment, not empowerment.

There Are Stopping Points [personal] ...

7/29/2019

It takes awhile for one to realize when to stop, that's before negative opinions take hold of your current outlook ... there is well and there is wellness, and there is as attached illness, and as referenced to treated as through making references toward others to cause illness ["that's not a crime"] to report happenings, and bring up as associated to, the aging process. For what reasons I was punished past, have much to do with what people say, more so than you think. The closer everyone feels toward you, the more affected you become, the more you disassociate, or keep yourself from interaction with others, the more time passes, as in non-acceptance of you, fights that ensue and commentaries made about or towards [are lights for re-ignition, not for recognition, and certainly not for future reference]. To make current anything that goes on privately and as reported, is to treat someone as punishable [for something else] other than what they were punished for [make no excuse about things]. It is time for tech jokes, and whether in agreement to that or thinking about, then you've not read all my highlighted arguments through which were in a "fighting words" tone [handwritten], which is seeing things in the negative, there are always ways to see things in the positive, sometimes a coming together of people, is not advantageous toward anyone's health. I just spoke to the LAPD to report the past, that seems to occur, everytime calling me a "pill head" was thought justified, and upon being prescribed meds [more meds] to differentiate me from the well. Those are not helpful distinguishing characteristics what meds you take, it only hurts you in the long run as [open] with others, then denounced as [gay] or treated as [pervert] that's upon a not knowing of you, as heard about you, as looked through your computer, and as affected [you thought about] and called UCLA Police, those are my medical records notes, do not mistreat others as not as likeable as or not attracted to, not be just as positive toward, or among meeting someone who someone knows nicer too in the immediate as not intimidated by, and then treat the person to whom connections are made, as though giving away connections in life causes mental health issues, its what stories are raised [by photos] and what is thought or said about others as upon [hearing from people who do not know me] and talk or speak less of me [based upon] what they think Im about [or by what causes I support in connection with]. Learn to let things go, sometimes its not about fighting, its not about love, or acceptance, sometimes it requires work to establish peace, not action, and if you have not thought about it yet, that's okay. Give people time to go through the process of understanding what works for them. Right now sometimes is not the best time for allowing those well to walk by, or not well, for that matter [#stopbullying] represent ideas that foster growth not bring up the pasts of others, as told highlight peoples lives or stories, as anticipated, put you down as grose [its about getting help, then hurting someone as celibate #chaste]. In anticipation of responses, before occurring as a runner, respected, shared to the Mall Police, handed them my cell phone which they charged, so that they know me, can watch. Allow others to move forward please. #stopsuicide (February 2009, January 2017). Sides as exposed, should suffer no harms, separate or not, is really no ones business to judge and to whom is associated to who, is for no one to judge either.

Levels of Morality ...

7/29/2019

Someone who shows themselves in public or private is deemed to be of lower moral standing, and achievement of respect is not as easily attained, that's overcoming adversities and hardship to ones persona, thinking someone is something that they are not, not to compare personalities, famous, or not famous, and not to impede on the progresses of those overcoming mental health issues, whether they suffered from the same issues currently as they did in the past, that is for no one to judge whether someone is the type who has not moved forward and based upon a given set of characteristics of traits deem them not likeable, it is usually those who are social, who we know are well liked, when you do your best and your best is not good enough and better is seen, then it is who does not look well that gets put down as a source of illness, and depressions or impressions upon the depressed deemed as coming from the worst fruit from the tree, its easier to decipher once you punish someone, as who is the let down to a family, or who is to blame for ones own sufferings as coming forward about worries or complaining in public, its is those who get help generally that receive help and if help is not provided to them, that means they are not in need, and those who are helped by those who ask for help, providers of help benefit from having helped those who were in need, whether like, similar to or the same, benefit from having had those conversations, than to have no conversation at all about the wellness of their own or others as toward them. Its usually the issues that concern others that get turned on the person to whom does not look like they are currently suffering, the person who is labeled as at fault, is the one to whom sufferings occur, and the person to whom is reported as causing sufferings well that is the person to whom is blamed for the sufferings of like individuals not attached, as being someone to avoid in life, that's not how a pariah is made, a pariah made by someone who is successful and upon achieving success is then made to look bad in front of others, someone who is trying to achieve and does not achieve is not someone famous, who as achieving success in life, and rewards from their successes have not yet been received. Allow people to find themselves, sure, the times are different, once you become known, its by what you are known for, that you are either accepted or dismissed as having what it takes to help provide insight to the sides of others, it will always be the sides of those suffering, who come first before the needs of the well, who are expected to take care of themselves. There comes a point in time, when the unauthorized auditing of the personal lives of others becomes not helpful toward acceptances of them, further worsening their condition when they did everything to warn, help, aid, inform, and report everything that was bothering them, and eventually you accept reality, that if no one respects you, and if you cannot accept comrades in life, then it will be difficult to have relationships in life, as jealous or feeling less than others, that's not how marriages are made, that's not how babies are made, and that's not how caretakers are made, to let you go on bad days, accept you only on good days, and not need you when you are not well, lesson learned.

Seeing Something Better ...

To "make a long story short" sometimes its not until we see better do we think less of ourselves, that's the main lesson to take away from the meeting of different personalities, and different standards of living and wellness, to whom we relate and to whom we are surrounded by, and looked upon as well or not, do not rely so easily on the opinions of others, to better understand oneself, mostly people are there for you, but they cannot live your life for you, that is something you learn to accomplish on your own, as you, separate from others, finding work, keeping yourself busy, and if no one treats you as important then so be it, its your time to heal, not at anyones pace are you expected to perform. Everyone comes to understand life on their own, and whether you are offended by the commentary of others, take nothing personally, as associated to, connected to, or any gestured suggestions too far, those are signs people are vying for affirmations, not sure of themselves, and the more confident you are around them the better they feel about their decision making skills, you give your confidences away in life, that's how life works, and until you understand your own value and whats of value to you, will others by their energies continue to find what is valuable in you, and then portray what is of value without you being their to be looked upon, sometimes we see those who are well, and likewise we may be treated as the same, never role models amongst the same age groups but well among nonetheless, that's being treated as apart of, its not about equality when it comes to friendships, those issues hit you later in life, as self-identified, accepted or facing more difficult acceptances in life, at your age of maturation, how well off are you, to decide what to disclose about you and what to keep secret, if you know well enough of the consequences of exposure of what your not sure about others, will go forward with information to possibly intentionally hurt your decision making abilities as in their shoes, thats the lesson in business identities. When you pitch an idea, be sure to take credit from its foundations, and make everyone known to from where and for what reasons an idea was made, and why it was not followed through with at its beginnings, that not only devalues a work product moving forward but hurts its pitchability, and as connected hurts the feelings of those who believed in good ideas, and wish to see their ideas come to fruition, its never too late to do the work, but in time, time is lost, and in time lost, feelings hurt, and when too much time has past, work gets done that needs to get done, and busy work well that's for the well, and when time is of the essence do not frown upon those who are able to perform or achieve well, those aren't medications that's heart.

Shared Understandings and Intimacies ...

There comes a time when you leave things to street explanations, and there is a time for maturing, depending on where you are mentally, you frown upon different things in life, and as through you respond differently to different types of understandings of you, sometimes shared intimacies are not the best way of communicating with others, but cause discomfort. Raising the bar to extremes is not the escalator solution either, to hurting to the esteems of others, as capable of achieving the same, label them as causes for discomfort or for illnesses. Its hurts to be apart of then treated as stranger to the same dialects shared by others, forced to respond as separate from everyone and new. That is a challenge all in itself. To continually express oneself, with all social graces in tact, and not represent the wrong ideas about life, or about others, be put down the same, as private informations made public about them, and likewise put down as within words as related to the public offerings of others, as about, and to whose side, issues or parties raised, as to who is deemed at fault, upon the first levels of maturity you are corrected by others, tested, as shy, and upon acceptances expected to rise to occasions and mature, that's not just respect but also means you are mindful of the boundaries of others, tiers of good socialization skills, means that you are not trying to take on more than you can consume in terms of leadership, and understand that its not just companionship that others thrive upon, but also being able to be something their not whether that's through you or about you, (for example: using your website you built and having fun changing things to it, to affect others to feel a sense of importance as having the power to put icings on cake) and hurting the finished work product of others, work on yourself, before working on others, work toward goals in life, and whether sabotaged or not as announced, do your best not to change public opinions about you, some will sometimes all be with you, and expect that when not well, some will turn on you, as not an adequate representative of the current times, or of others, those who have been around longer easily tire to the immaturities of others, and those affected by others, easily mature in spite of the immaturities of others, and those most insightful well don't always see best, but from their base educations have insight as to the times, not related to people present or around them referenced to nor as referenced to the finished works of others, see any better than those who have been recently affected whether by insights lacking, or from trust lost, as to who's been there for them and no longer here, and with regards to current leadership, whether providing the same type of reassurances past as those successful have provided for them. Don't be injured esteem wise to the repercussions, of your lack of hindsight, foresight in the past, these are all learning lessons, from which immaturities are raised, and by which means those immaturities occur, and to whos issues those immaturities are, and why they are being passed on to you, for explanation, as why in private spoken differently than professionally, and in private less intelligent than in public, and in private what are the causes for humor in public, and whether someone who is socially, reluctant to explain, is expected to explain for what reasons ones tone seems off to those who in sight of them mature, as not as affected the same as those readily affected by their presence, depressed, whether you recognize someone well, and wonder for what reasons well, never stop continuing your education until you stay well. It then becomes a matter of experience from which experiences are drawn upon to articulate importance of lessons, my own experiences, and which experiences are being manipulated to change my output, my current and present situations and goals in life. Education is key, but intelligence occurs overtime, the more time you spend toward bettering yourself and maturing the easier it is to stay that way, and the more creative your endeavors are the more is required of you to buckle down and get real work done too.

Put Downs and Empowerment ...

7/28/2019

Not everyone will be on your side, and wanting to know where you are at psychologically in terms of the 9 year tole to your reputation, as being about or as affected by shootings (or gun usage) and what motivated you to campaign, whether in defense to self-help-blogging, or because you care enough to help create a space online to keep others away from subjects, that's on you, for what reasons you decide to share online, as whether to influence or help deter these crimes from occurring, any such communications as to ones motivations are okay to not be taken lightly, it is not ones responsibility as someone who builds online to explain themselves, their goals, or aspirations in life, as though building with or alongside the campaigns of others or business ventures, that would be being a business woman, success is based upon key characteristics and traits that makes one a valuable writer to others online, have a keen awareness of the issues, and upon stating the issues out loud related to. That's how a blog happens, that's how a website happens and that's how popularity online happens when it comes to writing, to be well known for being a writer would be a dream starting out, mico-blogging on Twitter quotes for a book, and blogging on squares on Instagram and Facebook, for a book written 2017-2018, now being finished 2019, along with my Dissertation, and graduate from Law School. Be careful not to make jokes about my past or who I was friends with as it relates to where I am now, as we were once friends but now nothing like each-other conversational wise, nor affected by the same issues I share with everyone online, I face on a daily basis, some days, not most days, trying to blend in with society, as someone who I think is known but may not be known to all -once important to some, and known to those popular now.

Going with the Flow ...

There comes a point in time, when others wish to see reactions from you, to tell their own story of events, that's looking for a reaction to draw upon as simile other reactions, then to argue or justify as being the same, or if brought to public attentions get you to argue or to look like someone who is un-admonishable for their actions. There are few actions which are not forgiveable by society, self-harm is not one of them. Its usually if people see you in private and then treat a private reaction as though in public, based upon an unknown viewing of someone in private, that's the difference between being un-admonishable in public, versus being un-admonishable in private, there are certain things you don't do in public, and if upon bringing to the attentions of others, gets others to not like you, that's more than provoking a turn-off when it comes to public opinions about you, but a direct attack on your character, to say just like or responds similarly, in the negative therefore is a bad seed. No one is to judge someone who is not married as being a bad seed, or because they are not married, and not with adequate support matrimonially, that they are lacking the foundations required to be sound of thought or opinion of the times. Usually those with the greatest sense of peace are those who are married and have children. I once had a job supporting kids in need, and with that experience, which I am under law not allowed to talk about, I continue to provide support to others. If you do not recognize those experiences as helpful toward establishing trust in other working relationships, then that is because you do not trust me as someone to help take care of kids, because I do not have kids of my own, that's understandable, that's because I do not have the energy to take care of others, I used to be a caretaker to boyfriends, drive to see them. Patience, in due time everyone finds their energy back, and is surrounded by those to whom they can confide in, that's what trust is about, being a provider of insight, and being someone to whom insight can be provided to without, sharing out loud, those feelings, and causing discomforts to those who share.

Conversations About Empowerment ...

7/28/2019

Some conversations will help you, and other conversations when had, will make you feel disempowered. Its all about how you respond to others in your environment, as uplifted or felt to be put down by the wellness of others, that would be an example of competition, and jealousy, feeling less than by comparison to others wellness. What is empowerment? Feeling a sense of wellness in spite of what you've gone through. How does one feel empowered? Not allowing the past to affect them. And what is the urgency you feel when you have energy. And where do you spend your time most of the day. What is advantageous to your health. Having a sense of wellness around others, is always advantageous to your health. There is no method to wellness, that works for every person, by sticking to what your good at, is how you achieve wellness. Not by criticizing others, unless to help them better themselves. Stepping into controversies, is not helpful to your health. This I learned the hard way. You cant be first to anything in life, without suffering the repercussions of people not wanting to see things change in spite of you. That's people taking ownership over causes, and wanting control over outcomes, let them. If people think they have a better handle at life than you, and a better grasp at the subjects that are laid before you, then let them take on leadership positions in regards to bringing up topics, whatever they may be about. Sometimes things get worse before they get better, that can be through written expression of whats going on inside of you or around you, and sometimes via the expressions of others toward you do you build a better understanding of the issues. Be thankful for people who come into your life, and the stories they share about their lives and be gracious for their input. Its not necessary to share our lives with others, but it would be lonely to not be able to share ones life with another. The whole purpose of living life, is to have a life, and if you don't have that much, than nothing conversationally will feel good to you, if you yourself don't feel good. Is power something that can be shared among a group? Yes. Is power something that can be transferred from a group? Yes. Is power something that can be taken away? Yes. And why is power taken away? To isolate one member of a group, to preserve the wellness of other members to a group. When is that allowable? And for what purposes are people kept separate from groups in life, made not to feel apart of. Yes this conversation is about wellness, even those who are sick are grouped in society, not left alone. Its not advantageous to the health of anyone struggling to be left alone. To make someone like to say their ideas are like, is wrong. Not all ideas that a big are harmful to the health of others, call that dreaming, but to live a better life sometime, you have to think beyond, as a long distance runner, visualizing where I want to be in life, has been helpful toward achieving goals that have gotten me further along toward accomplishing those goals in life.

Being Redundant ...

7/26/2019

You can only write so much before sounding redundant, that is by sharing your philosophies about life, and what you think. Everything changes so do thoughts, the more exposure the better. Leaving chaos is no easy task, not everyone has the benefit of taking medications to assist them, with mood adjustments, and understandings, compassions, and recall of the past. Its not by recalling the past we are taunted, but by present statements concerning our future from which we feel taunted by others past. When your outlook is not clear in life, its easy to look backwards to things you have heard, not what you have read, reading is the best way to get your standard of recall back, not to be based on what is heard, but from more trusted sources of insight and thoughts that is through reading. Whether I have helped influence others to read more, or because of who I was or am now, that is for no one to judge me, as being apart of or because apart of why I am a writer now, as attached to. I have always been a writer, began keeping a diary at the age of 5, and have always been an academic writer since becoming a Sociology Major. You tend to stick to your strengths in life, don't be unappreciative of those who share themselves online, not all have the privilege of working in jobs, nor the stability socially or intellectually to get good jobs. When you have arrived at well always be thankful, no matter who respects you in life, its how you sound that ultimately affects how others feel about you. I started working on a book via micro-blogging, and eventually finished my book 2017, writing from home, it has yet to be distributed professionally, that costs money, and requires confidence to share a finished work among others. Right now my focus is working on my Dissertation, Im half-way done with my work. I was thinking today more about how things look on the outside, not to be overconsumed by the obsessions of others, and any chaos or uptightness they may feel reading your work, or seeing you do well in life, that's for no one to interpret, to see everything as a joke, or to view the successes of others, as a joke, is insulting.

When to Move Forward ...

Sometimes it is uplifting for others to be doing well, and whether you are the source of that comfort as being apart of or doing well in life, that is not for others to judge whether there are issues as between parents and children and whether there are issues between children within families. That is not for others to judge as the causes for those separations in life, and whether any party to a family has done a good job of representing the family as an independent unit. Sometimes its when everyone gets together, that it is realized how things could have been, allow people to move forward and start new lives, before it is too late to realize what you have in life, and what everyone has been doing well for, maybe not for the same reasons, but certainly to avoid havoc, if you are never happy, then maybe it is because of losses, if you are never happy then maybe it is because of lack of success, if you are never happy maybe it is because you have not reached goals in life, if you are never happy maybe its because what you want in life you cannot have, and maybe because you are unhappy you are unable to achieve. Don't short live life, simply, because others think that that is your thinking process toward achievement in life, and don't short live life, because others think you are not good enough, if you believe you are, then you will achieve, "anything you set your mind to." It is when in doubt or when fearful that voices take over to control you and when in doubt there is always the police to help you with voices, or willing to take you to the hospital to cope with any voices you hear, it is not always upon recommendation or assignment, that we meet good matches in life, no one is to blame for your hardships in life, other than the decision making of those poor, who think it well of them to put you down, to test your heart strength in life as deserving of being well. That is not for independent units studying you to decide upon just meeting you or thinking that because they think they know you, or others have known you before you have launched a website or distributed a book, hurt your ability to achieve. "With that" I think that its best that I volunteer for the LAPD, a "public safety" specialist in helping others, and continue my education if approved by who helps support me, that means finish my Dissertation first to begin any new projects, and begin working as soon as I get back to a regular sleep schedule. Waking up in the middle of the night, is caused by restlessness and need to achieve, I have achieved plenty in life, and energy well that's for your heart to decide, and by your choice, consume yourself with activities that either benefit you or hurt your ability to function, stay well!

Avoiding Controversies in Life ...

The more you fixate on the past the worse you feel, as empathizing with either party to a suit, or to a trial, its best to move forward as unattached to the issues that were previously faced by those parties at that point in time, that's to my understanding when a separation of interests occur. Its not always by your good standing that others feel safe, no one is required to take the lead of anyone in need of help, or to understand the wellness of others, that's not room for discussion. Its sometimes better not to highlight points of controversy then lead to continued discussion as about, without a person present, and then once known try to join in on an ongoing conversation about. A deal is for the purposes of moving forward to not shine light upon those affected, sometimes is the best way to move forward not to enable them to be harmed by continued discussion about the past, that's where a wrong was thought to have occurred. No one is required to have spokespeople in life, or to speak for themselves, that just causes one to become defensive and others apathetic toward those who lose consciousness or awareness of their moods in life, you have to play on the safe side of issues, that is the quiet side, when chaos ensues in your mind, that's your own unhappiness guiding your decision making, then seeking to see if others think the same, would be spreading an unhappy viewpoint about life, or thinking that a shared chaos is a pathway to quiet, that's not a necessary path to take, to handle stresses in life, and to achieve a quiet space, requires hard work and effort. Much like establishing relationships which stop working out upon fighting, only few after fighting still look at you the same, don't be sad about the past, everyone does what is right for them given that period in time, to not sound like the queller, or person with the most positive insight, wont talk anyone through their own thoughts just how I find quiet myself, in chaos.

How Do Personalities Happen ...

How do personalities get generated, and what causes people to function for the better? Generally those who bring out your best traits, and people who can be relied upon in life, as well, and by the stories you share, judged as being a good or poor decision maker, as able and capable of giving help to others, or being or service to others, that is how one is judged presently, as by their past, and others recollections as recorded of them, portrayed in the negative assumed to be the one in the wrong, that is what wrongs are about, making people look stupid, or bearing faults, for causes and consequences outside of them, as not being good enough or not well prepared to respond to others, and heres where you can insert the phrase “no one is perfect.” No one is perfect is a great excuse for undermining the capabilities of others, to denote them as not being aware of what they are doing wrong, or what is going wrong, and to admonish them of having responsibility for their words or their actions, when one is at their best one is able to express themselves in the positive its when one is not well, that complaining happens, and whether you think by the complaints of others, they are in the wrong, or had some defective condition about them, not in acceptance of others, then other examples of non-acceptance are used to justify those actions toward individuals as not being apart of or aware of the gravity of harm to be suffered as not being apart of, that’s never the choice of anyone, who is studying or working toward a goal in life, in order to work, sometimes you need to be separate from others, that’s always understandable, its what is thought up upon looking at someone, that is called a pre-judgment, and based on what is always “currently” heard is what “currently” affects the way a person is viewed, no matter how well they are liked, no matter how old their audience online is, or for how long they have been able to maintain an audience, and who that audience is made up of good or bad people, its important to be accepting of all, no audience is a good audience, everyone has their defects, and all audiences are good in the sense that they appreciate and value what is being written about, its to whom is being written about that is dug for, and challenged as though no opportunity past was enabled by the persons writing abilities then to talk about themselves in a way that vaguely represents factual interpretations and given facts previously, to undermine the strategy of someones ability to express themselves, as not on time, or in real time, not good enough, does everyone a disservice, we all have our moods, and if you cant appreciate someones tone, then “move on.”

Learning to Part Ways ...

Whatever that is bothering you about someone, or about something that has been written learn to part ways with writers, with bloggers exposed to so much in life, picky, and particular, about who you get surrounded by, or how spoken to or what about, that you begin to for social graces, that could just be me, and for vernacular to say the least, how well spoken someone is or by how they speak toward inferior to the best interests of those around them, somehow still judged as being into themselves. Learn to let things go, and not psych one becomes tired, that they become ill, and so on and so forth, its not necessary to know for what reasons I was hospitalized, as being health is “not in order.” When you have to care about yourself you get help, that’s not to clean slate with the people, or with others nicer, by people who distinguishingly enough do not like you anyways. When people don’t like you, that’s because they think less of you because they think that you deserve not to be liked, and its people who know you personally, who think that its okay to say that you are respect you in public, and who see how you are (in private) not respect you, in private or in public. That’s not something to be experim about them, that’s based upon how people are feeling, think that they can make themselves look or feel better, by setting people worse comes to wellness why we are told “people are mostly concerned with themselves,” that is because people don’t want to be blamed or individuals, who they have not yet approve of. Everyone refines at their own paces in life, and its by those types of insults, that others arguments in the tone of someone carrying “mental illness” be treated as someone with “mental illness” so that they respond in that wa their natural tone, is how writers get affected as aggravated, not able to write, because what is going on inside of them, and what is goi When you understand when too much hate is generated toward something, eventually everyone becomes apathetic after trying to prov was made ie “#hateleslie” and hinged everything stated afterward as having to do with statting that after being hospitalized. I was just is important to me, and not to affect the health of others, think its important to be social, be outside of the house, not working all day a

How You Get Hurt in Life ...

How you get hurt in life, is not how to share your story, that only subjects others to worries about their intellectual property. When you student, if you get hurt along the way, always do your best to maintain accurate records of your work and your progress in life. If you you’ve been hurt, winds up causing you to misrepresent yourself. Don’t get out of whack in life, trying to compartmentalize your reco along the way, that’s because others think you deserve to be hurt, and if you struggle in life that’s because others think you deserve to do so knowingly, to hurt or injure others, learn to part ways once things are not where they should be in life, and start a new project, or would be giving away what has brought me success over the years accomplishing finishing a book, and now graduating from Law Sch

Not Feeling Good Enough ...

8/10/2019

Its easy to feel sluggish on days when youre feeling less than average, not at your best, at the bare minimum potential to get your day done. A day is when you start the day tired, the day ahead feels long, and everything you do you're less than satisfied with. Then there are the days of excitement to the table, and with that a humble glow about you, that's you're feeling together, and as put together, things are starting to move or in rhythm with your day, you are always making progress, whether that's progress you're happy with, or whether you think you could be forgiving, not all have it easy in life, able to predict themselves emotionally, some turn with the tides, as quickly as others fall sick, transferred emotionally ie feelings. That's not disease, that's just a symptom of assumptions, that one who is not doing well in life can allow others to bring you down in life, sometimes we don't have a choice at this, we have to show compassion toward those fallen, and that they are not feeling well, whether we have the strength to be compassionate, well that's as per individual, you wonder why in some we've worn them so far down, that they have become invincible to these odds you think so ever present as to affecting your ability to be and Try again. What more else can you say to a person in need, "sounds like" you're going through a tough time. etc ...

Time to "Hey Babe" Your Significant Other ...

8/9/2019

Don't forget to check in with your significant other. The importance of "hey babe-ing" ... lets those you care about know that you care about their lives, and the importance of them in your lives presently. That's checking in. Sometimes as friends, and sometimes as lovers, know that you are there for you during times of need. That's "Hey Babe-ing" it. Some "Hey Babe" it everyday, chipper toward everyone, and some separate ourselves from others, engrossed in our work, our computers, our own lives, but remember who is in your life matters too. We care about others. There comes a point when you need more than one person to go to for support when support is needed. Also known as a support person to do the job, but rely on a series of individuals to help you when help is needed, sometimes they are connected and sometimes not. Confidentiality, not making private concerns of public essence, and not making public matters of private essence, when talking to others but you own your words, never say anything too insensitive, to scare others away from broaching the subjects that clamor at you on a daily basis from one viewpoint, and based upon having that viewpoint, able to share an even more special viewpoint as to the world, and how one becomes becoming sick to the news, or to the problems of others, they are called Doctors, unaffected by most things, and well in spite of what's around their surroundings.

I just turned 34, my birthday was August 7th, there's really no pressure in getting older, just that more stability is expected of you, to provide probably for the same reasons others were not feeling well, when you've done your best and your best is still not good enough, you wonder how much impact your journey in life has had on other people's journeys in life. Exactly how much are we affected by those who come into our lives? Successful I have to remind myself at times, there must be jobs for everyone, if there are so many who are able to achieve success in life in various professions, well that's by contract, whenever someone uses your work to benefit a work of their own, that's called a partnership, or a partnership backwards to whom the benefit is taken from, and mass produced from on another level from the original purposes for that work. I know Rhianna, which she sang. That's my only direct connection to fame, other than growing up around my best friend, who's Father is a doctor. I know people, and there are people who are directly affected by being raised around others, that's not being influenced by, that's having more positive directions in life, not follow the direction of those who have been punished, as their decision-making may be off. All the popular girls in my class, with the most friends, hosting parties at my house, and introducing friends to friends. Even helped lead a funeral for my Mother. (When you are someone to be relied upon, and close to those who have been lost, spiritually or physically gone, that is a good thing. It's your choice to let yourself go and let others down, never give up, always be compassionate toward self and others). Everyone has been meds, and some even drinking or doing drugs to cope with their anxieties about life, I think right now its about acceptance, and getting or negative opinions on subjects which have directly affected you, Im sure if anyone was in my shoes trying to finish Law School would then beneficial to ones health as writer, but sticking to what makes sense to them, is of importance. -I think I became successful as a w having it be generally understood by others, but because of my ability to write and connect with my audience in a way, that is helpful Law right now, studying Risk Management and Compliance, its taken me awhile to finish, but know that when I do finish Law School Aside from being hospitalized now 9 times, and been in Rehab once, and Outpatient once. Studying Writers ...

8/5/2019

Over time there will be changes, changes in tone, and changes in the overall breath of a persons work, and writing compositions. You written work as being an original composition of thoughts. Its important to note that, "The words composition and improvisation are n opposed, musical activities." [1] And just like music is made books are made, and writings are produced, to either be published in boo that's for likes, to then publish and earn a profit from ones writings, or whether that's for posting and seeing whether someone is liked publishing a book yet, mostly that it takes time to write a book and have a book reviewed, get copyrights via Attorneys, and ISBN's re further review by committees to measure your intelligence, and whether the writings you have provided equate to solutions for the tim but as a reader you learn to appreciate different written forms some make sense more than others, but whatever your strategy is for bei to others strategies by others for generating an audience, that would be taking a good work, and comparing it something not well, until read or seen, figure out what causes thoughts as whether connected to others reading them, or based upon your reading, or anothers rea write, that's called an experiment. Being original means absent minded your audience, and absent minded what you have written, that's guidance from others, as to what to write about each day, others than the books I have read free reading after writing a book on my ow writes the same, not all anticipating what the reader is thinking that you cannot predict, as everyones exposures are different, given the be a persuaded condition to care, until events occur in relation to that care promoted for, that's whats at issue, which came first, bloggi between blogging and gun violence, to argue the perspective of someone hurting me, as campaigning for, is judging me as for negative

What is Tired? ...

8/5/2019

Tired is not an easy point of discussion nor are mental health issues, that is something you discuss in the privacy of a therapeutic environ for having a website to discuss my problems, but to discuss the issues, as heard and understood by me, living my life, on a daily basis. never be new to wellness. It's the hearing of your problems out-loud personal, via argument, that becomes of issue, once shared among others to take sides in life. I have been working hard for likes for awhile online, and think that likes are deserved for my writing. No n that is something you need to call 911 for to talk you through, not everyone has these problems in life thankfully, and lets hope not to p As long as you get help you are doing the best that you can do, what leads up to what is your right to privacy, not for others to read, an happening, you cannot experiment with people, there are rules against that. Some only hear until you say something about an issue, th their own on the subject to verify your insights, that's the fun part about research, reading studies that have been completed, and check from those deductions in life, think new thoughts. Tired is a condition upon giving up in life? That could be one reason for being tired. Tired is because of writing? That could be one reason for tired. But to say that Tired is a result from all those things misdefines the pur #selfhelp

Knowing When to Stop ...

8/5/2019

Some people don't know when to stop until you are harmed by the societal pressures they feel as thrust toward you in life, pursuing a figure online. Whether that's a shared understanding of you, that they believe to be true as about you, that's their recollections of you sought to be found, to make you a not trusted figure, that's the power that other have over you having been able to watch you, to take your reactions you are responded to, don't make the wrong sides in life powerful, and don't give the wrong people power of your best control people in life, and by those abilities to control, think that they are right, or that others are deserving of being controlled. What happens to you, then that doesn't mean that you are a weak person, or that you need to be controlled, its just that your health is entrusted in their hands something to do by the street mechanics of socialization, or intimidation. That's not how that gets started as recognized, its what you allow through to others, you don't know, and never trust a stranger with your heart. There comes a time, when you feel safe at all times, that everyone is expected to go to work, and to function. That's taking control over others controlling me, and likewise saying something in return. Its the thoughts that you encourage, and the thoughts that are discouraged that influence allowable thoughts and traits to become of use. Its important not to talk to strangers, then there are those who are not affected by anyone, those are the strong, not yet hurt by the lives of others at home, and not overexposing oneself to others, or those in poor health, or sad.

Feeling Belittled ...

8/5/2019

We cant all be successful, if the world were that easy to get jobs and succeed than we all would and not be stuck home, ruminating about life. Part of writing online, is being happy with where you are, it is for those motivations in life that one keeps going in life, and for those moments that makes you feel good, whether that be apart or, or simply made tired explaining oneself to others, whatever it takes to reach a peaceful state and move forward, with or without others in their lives. Theres nothing abrasive about reading along, if you have reservations toward me (as a writer) then those are your judgments toward me as being inexperienced as a writer online. I think I have been online long enough to ease. Its those who are in dis-ease upon reading my writing, who seek to collaborate with others to those extents in life, as directed to focus on their negativities in life, but its not allowing the negativities of others to cause battles within yourself. Learn to let things go. Eventually they feel they are right, and sometimes, we don't know why its okay for others to place their directions over us, and not allow us to have our own life. -If you are able to work it is because you are well if you are not able to work that's nothing personal, that's just that one (ie me) face an allowable condition.

Writing Without Likes ...

Sometimes you have a good idea and it gets recognized and sometimes you have a good idea and it does not get recognized by likes, where an acceptable content stream exists that you fit in sometimes online. There are systems of support, and there are systems to systems of support that makes sure that its on paper, and filed with the CA State Government, that's not taking chances in life, a clear step in the right direction. When motivated, when the groundwork that lays before you is based in prevention of something bad from occurring, you cannot also stop of what you perceive in your groundbreaking work, is what puts you at odds in terms of acceptances as a business. You are what ideas you promote to continue rehashing those concepts about you, whether it be through your writing, or online ads, which if taken down, make you look like the backings of their own company. Whats in paper, will always be in paper, and what is by law, will always be of law, any companies founded on just a foundational principle from which a company was made, but also a driving force from which a company is sustained, to prevent health, via a sharing of personal experiences in life, in a general way, share a general understanding of what the issues are presently, and as to the times. You cant expect all the feel the same in order to be liked or well heard, sometimes its in saying things we don't already know. It knows it probably wouldn't get a like, as having existed somewhere else, in some time past, to someone else as having stated what I had to calculate how much of your work is original work, and how much of value your writing should be considered to the public, what matters.

The Wrong Ideas About Life ...

There is no such thing as feeling wrong, or thinking wrong, its when those wrong feelings or wrong thoughts cause one to feel good in the end. One should be able to think freely, and be forgiving of self even on days you are not perfect or don't have anything to say to make anyone sometimes its by focusing on what others think that you feel illness too. When people think that you are in the wrong that's supposed to be the disbelief of others, that's the whole purpose of having faith, some share uniform understanding of how to feel in the event our emotions are which it is appropriate to attack the issues, in public, toward people as being a source of illness as expressed toward, that's not the sole source of illness, its when people think they are right about the mistreatment of others, that is the problem, that's not self righteousness. Attacking them to make them apart of their solution or wellness, to feel better than sometimes people think its appropriate to put others up as to blame for the causes for social ills toward them, that's not the solution. Be wary that there will always be people in your environment mentally ill for being well when others are not feeling well, not all have the gift of self expression, able to communicate what is going on something you cannot prove, everything I think and feel is in writing, since 2013, if you have any questions as to the wellness of others or themselves, its not necessary to translate the illnesses of others, to build a better understanding toward them, not all deserve to be reproached apart of the lives of those who are doing well in life, and affect their best judgments as incorporating the ill thoughts of others about life. Its our communication skills, that is not allowing illness to interfere with how we communicate with one another, and when not feeling well, we feel as though they are at fault for our inability to stay well. Its usually in illness that causes one to freeze, that's upon a thinking that Incoming Signals ...

8/3/2019

Its become ever more apparent that its not just me who suffers from incoming voices problems, know that you are a product of all things you hear, internalizing those pains in life, whether or not directed towards you. Sometimes voices are illness, sometimes voices are illness you playing mind tricks on you. You are who youre attached to, that usually resets your heart to the right places in life. When someone speaks to your minds, that's usually because they say things that we ourselves have yet to think for ourselves. I was always one of those people who speak not a loud person, although I may dress that way, Im soft spoken, but can make different octaves as do most, depending on how their feelings are. I had a microphone and chose to sing in front of a lot of people, they would be wowed by my voice, I practiced but never got to the microphone as a writer, that's not to say that because I have different tones inside of me that Im able to create different tones via writing, or that my thoughts on what is going on inside of me are things not yet spoken, which we are currently experiencing in our everyday environments. That's not to say we normalize the experiences of others. Its so important to speak to someone you can identify with, someone who when they speak to you teaches you something you don't already know about life. We don't all have people we can talk to relate to or who can explain our problems. Guys know what I mean without going there, because Im in my 30s now, we have lost many. Who gives you comfort in knowing, are people of value until those people are gone from our lives [is what is expected a bad place to come from] all people are of value, no matter who they are. To pick yourself up first, once you master getting well on your own, then talking to someone about your problems comes easily, why then we see improvements, and be able to witness those improvements to your health, its all a learning process what works best for you. Its when you write your personal records, what is for others, you put online, and what is for work you keep at work, and what is for personal correspondence, you could very well be your writing. From where your writing is coming from, that's your heart, and what your heart is reading, well that could be supposed that's being reserved on my part, new to technology, to not to distribute work to a network, just signed up for blogpros.com to create profiles on those networks, about 300 per post, are on networks and have shared to their networks in networks.

Unwanted Attachments ...

What is Technology? A series of attachments to people, and work product, attached to those who produce online? I'm in the middle of trying to have original thoughts, you have to let the ideas flow first and worry about their quality (or appropriateness) later." (page 183) [1] He said that "the way to get to good ideas is to get lots of ideas and throw out the bad ones." (page 183) [2] -Writing on Twitter has been a challenge. Sometimes you write a book. Whenever you choose a forum in which to write, make sure that those attachments do not cause you harm. That's why and sometimes you work, and your heart hurts, that's just a product of getting into the work that lays before you. You can't go too far away from arrive at your chosen destination, whether that be success, or simply, getting back to your old self focused, whether that's a smaller work eventually, that is from sharing your thoughts online, deemed sensitive to the issues or insensitive to the issues -had I not been through this subject, that's because Ive already been through lost and back, addiction, and focus issues enough times to have faith, that's not being afraid about helping others to focus on now, not dive into those meditation spaces that have resulted in illness for some. Those attachments to you about, one should have an ability to leave a situation just as they are able to leave thoughts about, or thoughts as to stories, happenings about issues, the issues of others, and lets not cause unnecessary empathies and understandings toward those who self-harm and commit suicide. Its purposeful, sometimes by our own decision making we hurt, and upon being hurt punish ourselves, it takes an understanding of forgiveness whether that's illness experienced past, or presently, have someone be able to normalize our feelings, letting us know that its okay to talk about that we can stop feeling all together about what is causing us harm, and about what is causing us illness. Why its important to stay centered from where you left off, each day is a new day, the only potential lost, is a lost sense of faith in oneself. -With today's technology, we backwards others think that they have power over you, to control you, or cause you to think or make bad decisions going forwards as t will always be attached to yourself, learn to rise above from technological cues, in life persuading you to think less of yourself, just lik sometimes all the motivation you need in life, to know that people are well, and that youre not alone, call that faith, believing that you

Not Feeling Well ...

8/2/2019

You'll undergo a lot of pressures in life, hopefully non unwanted, but you do always have to do your best to stay well. Regardless whe issues, or simple understanding issues with regards to heartache and heartbreak, recovery is a process, we all endure pains in life. Wha how many well years were before you, before things took a turn for the worst, and how many well years were before you, while those mean that there are not still well years that lay before you in life, with enough faith and socialization, staying proactive, you too can be inevitable losses stand in between you and your future happiness, that is living without people in your lives. Its not an easy subject los family and friends, working, and you spend a lot of time to yourself, trying to better yourself, so that you can have lives, and be surrou purpose of working is to have things in life, and to have people in your lives. Whether you can stay strong, and endure these battles in you from moving forward in life, not changing the pace of your life when things become not well and not getting help when help is ne as those from your past, who they think are being blamed or worry are at fault for the difficulties you face presently, pressure is pressu your life or help you achieve in life, but its about staying well upon acceptances in life, you cannot go backwards once things do not g either keep going in life, among, or you get separated from those who are doing well so that others may move forward and thrive, that and discriminations, so that others have an opportunity to do well in life, not be affected by those who are not doing well in life. It's a life, and how to stay among the well, and do well in life, even if you are raised well, that does not mean that you will achieve well and wellness. Do your best always therefore to move forward in life, and stay calm, its not the end of the world acceptances, and as long as move forward without a fight from the past, taking hold of you presently, or what people think of you now.

Coping with Losses ...

Of course we all feel bad, when someone falls ill, yes we will make it our responsibility to care. Whenever we give a moment of silen perfect, and that even on our good days, someone will not be on board, or feel as supported in life, in tune with their surroundings, pos more jobs made available, more opportunities made available for us to come forward share our stories, and get the help we need. Its no do on your own, choose the right connections in life, and make an effort to get help when help is needed. Giving in to sins, and poor fe proactive is. That means showing up to events, when you feel like you don't fit in, going to movies when you don't feel like watching, working on good and bad days, finishing an assignment you've been putting off for weeks, and texting a friend who keeps saying to ca much to do with your own insecurities about your future, and feeling fulfilled personally and professionally. The party doesn't start on life, and be social, socialization doesn't just happen to the rich or the successful, it happens to those you go out of their way to get jobs are jobs, you either get a job, or you work from home trying to make a job for yourself staying in school or being productive online lea your disabilities in life, is never a good option, if you already have socialization problems, and difficulty finding jobs, then don't decre life more difficult. Be productive, stay proactive, and don't stop socializing, its when you stop everything, its hard to get going again, l

Finding a Methodology ...

Everyone goes by a different methodology when it comes to figuring things out for themselves some by focusing on one thing, and oth sense to others, then from themselves build a better understanding of whats to come, that's not psychic, that's called faith, having an u they have a trained understanding of how to make sense of their reality by what they know, not by who they know, and from those bas sense of their reality, that's called research, some function best short hand to long hand, if anything not making sense to you, makes se understanding of concepts, and by their privileges live by different comforts in life, that's understandable. Humor is one thing, laughing finding comfort through laughter, feel ill upon laughing, that's just being courteous of others in your environment, attitude wise, its those who are doing well, that's not just a sign of jealousies when it comes to wellness as feeling left out, but results in a questioning of what among those around them like there is among others. We all go through phases differently in life, maturation wise, with those understand their troubles, and for some their troubles follow them, that's not leadership talking about your problems, that's just an awareness of what presently, of how to behave now, given your standings in life, everyone is held to different standards of wellness. Its mostly by what you feel well when around others, who does that anyways, compare to understand their own wellness as compared to others they think are

After You Speak ...

8/30/2019

Its usually not until after you speak, that greater acceptances of you are achieved, everyone holds their own standards of who to speak to and who not to speak to, based upon their beliefs of what well is. It is by your own wellness, and ability to speak, or articulate yourself, that you are respected in society, that will never change, and if someone is so disinterested in you so as not to speak to you, then allow that space to take place, its not your responsibility to be spoken to by everyone, that doesn't always indicate whether you are a likeable person overall based upon individual acceptances of you granted. If some do not reply, that is simply because they do not believe in you, or likewise have interpreted your past as described in the negative, thinking that you bear guilt, or knowingly by who you are, have insulted others, by existing in life, everyone has the right to exist in real life, and everyone has the right to exist online, your existence should not change or alter the opinions of others, and by existing online, one should still be able to maintain rights to privacy, regarding their current condition, and conditions past, are not for public knowledge, especially not to benefit the negative judgments held of an individual to whom they do not think is deserving of respect, a job, or a companion, those are they who think an individual did not accurately represent themselves, and in doing so, did not accurately represent others, and if that much can be proven, than any later negative judgments of them help to improve that hatred toward them as though deserved, that's not always the case. Anyone who so willingly comes forward and asks for help, is not at fault, anyone who so willingly presents themselves to others, is not at fault, anyone whos condition is altered or made worse, is not responsible for their own health, and anyone who is doing their best to stay well, and not interfere with the good health of others is not at fault. If every joke was a joke on you, then you would understand my position, that's not the purposes for lawsuits, to publicly shame a person, to a suicidal condition, or draw overall inferences of them, as being detestable by societys standards, that's trying to justify suit, by later bringing about a worse condition of someone, or to promulgate further insight as to their standards of care of themselves, as being justified as causing their own conditions in life, that is to free from blame those who do not like, or think poorly of a person, no I am not responsible for my suicide attempts, and no I am not responsible for what other people think, and no I am not responsible for the acts of others, responding to the conditions of others, via public displays, and no I do not think it is fair to be made fun of, based upon movies, or tv shows, hating on someone who has yet to achieve a career in life, and has yet to be able to earn a living in life, I do not think my chances of survival should be limited based upon what inferences can be drawn based upon what is shown in public, as related to my condition, or the condition of others, which has been further exacerbated by embarrassment, due to an inability to respond to any unforeseen public ridicule that may have resulted, from admiring a person in public, or stating who I am dating in public, or writing about such circumstances in public, that's for no one to judge why my relationships do not work out, or why I have been separated from my friends, forced to represent myself in life, without their help, or via discussion with them, of what other people think. It is not my responsibility to guide discussions about me, without me being present, it is my responsibility however to live life, and to not further misrepresent myself or others, and do my best to be a positive touchstone, in life, not someone, who everyone sees, and thinks poorly of, that's in regards to my ability to manage my mental health issues, and not become famous, as apart of, but to achieve on my own, without assistance or connections created based upon knowing others in life, that's not how success is achieved in life, its by you upholding yourself to positive characteristics or traits, deemed acceptable to others, staying normal, not by standing out, or deviating from the norm, and not by calling attentions to yourself, for sympathies in life.

How to Be a Solid Friend ...

You can never have too many friends, and the friends we keep throughout the years, are irreplaceable. According to thehopeline.com, here are several ways to be a good friend: (1) be real, (2) be honest, (3) be a good listener, (4) make time for your friend, (5) keep their secrets, (6) encourage your friend, (7) be loyal, (8) be willing to work through conflict, and (9) Watch out for your friend. [1] Never give up on your friends, we all go through troubles in life and face challenges, its okay to go out of your way to help them, “never half-ass things when it comes to your friends.” [2] Its often times when we need help the most, we seldom ask for help, especially from friends, not wanting to bother them with our troubles in life. That’s normal. Don’t forget to “follow-up” with your friends, and check in with them, that’s half the battle when it comes to maintaining friends, how easily we get wrapped up in our own lives, or problems, and forget to keep in touch with friends, the sooner you let go, the more difficult it becomes getting back in touch with them, some you are forever bonded to, but not all. [3] “How can you avoid a falling out with someone you’ve long trusted and cared about? Start by accepting the fact that you can only change yourself. And, almost always, fixing a friendship is a matter of fixing yourself.” [4] Know that if you get help from a friend, there will be expectation of improvement, especially after making an amends to them, don’t let your friends down. According to psychologytoday.com, “It’s no fun when you put effort into helping someone and that individual doesn’t follow through. People want to help those who they’re sure will act on the help or advice offered.” [5] Not only will you benefit from having taken the advice of someone you have received help from but you will also in turn help “boost the mood of the helper.” [6] That’s ones way of being a good friend, even if youre in a tough spot in life, its helps them to help you sometimes, so don’t be afraid to talk to them, or shy away from friendships in life, just because you have problems, sometimes we make friends, while going through troubles in life, “Sometimes you need another person’s wisdom, guidance.” [7]

The longer you stay unhappy the more harm you suffer, as it turns out, you get less done when in a bad mood than when you are in a good mood. So stay happy! Figure out what keeps you feeling centered and stay there, if its ruminating about the past, that’s getting you down, then focus on what days lie before you, not overfocus on what has passed. To better your life, or any condition, you have to stay positive. They don’t just say that, so that you will be more pleasant to be around, the results show, that when you are in tune with your surroundings, and when you are feeling well, you accomplish more in life, if life is about being task-oriented, and goal driven, then you’ll need to maintain some kind of stability, to the way you think about life, to help manage how you feel about your life. According to Spencer Sekulin, “The seeds of happiness and misery begin in your mind. How you think affects how you act. How you act affects how you feel. How you feel affects everything else.” [1] Don’t become “addict[ed] to unhappiness” ... according to psychologytoday.com, “Lifelong struggles with trauma or other negative experiences may fuel an unconscious desire to continually return to the status quo of unhappiness.” [2] You are not powerless to your thoughts, you are able to control the way you think, and if you can control the way you think, you will in turn be able to control the way you feel about people, places, things, and especially the past. In todays day and age its easy to become triggered, lacking control over what we are exposed to in the news, or on tv, at some point you become an adult, and learn how to filter out any unwanted information, you may come across in life, whether its personal information about others, you do not know, or by exposure, looking into things, and finding out information about self or others, you wish was not said about you, or said period, not all writings or photos will be favorable to your best interests, its mostly people just representing themselves online, that you will have to learn to accept, everyones faux pas, and shortcomings, when it comes to public speaking, disclosures, and image quality, which does not always necessarily accurately reflect the self-esteem of the person, or their mental health status, how you express yourself to the world, if often different than how you feel while alone, and how you vent in private, is probably not how you speak in public, when addressing a crowd of people, this you learn the hard way, how to be professional and not over-disclose information about yourself in private or in public, as this interferes with your ability to communicate fluidly with others, or find yourself among, it often times leaves you feeling distant from others, post disclosures, that's just you addressing your needs for affirmation in life, which wont always be granted back toward you. Sometimes while unhappy you'll then find yourself trying harder because youre unhappy, "Dissatisfaction becomes a motivator to work harder, change jobs, eat healthier, spend more time with friends and family, or prevent unwanted behaviors or situations." [3] Always take the positive spin on events that change your life for the worst, the better able you are to compartmentalize your thoughts about incidences past, the better you will feel in the long run, having processed what caused you to think negative, and why you were feeling unhappy, and recognize what it is you are doing now for yourself to maintain happiness, that's called recognizing your value, and reinforcing your self-esteem, which may or may not have been brought down by others, but by yourself. Note that: "Those who blame everything but themselves are blind to the path of self-improvement." [4] –"Fear" [5] can often times interfere with our ability to be happy, and thus slow down the process of "self-improvement." [6] "One of the most common responses to fear is that you can't do something, and while freezing or shutting down, go into a "negative habit pattern" [7] that doesn't always serve what is in your best interests, which is to stay positive and be happy. Visualize where you want to be in life, and by visualizing where you want to be in life, you are "feeding your mind ... positive mental pictures of yourself performing at your best" [8] this may include thinking about your prior achievements, not just your failures, and what you did to overcome setback in the past, and stick to a methodology that works for you, to overcome those fears now and in the future. Don't be "held back" by your fears in life, "The Law of Reversibility says that "If you feel a certain way, you will act in a manner consistent with that feeling." [9] Therefore disciplining yourself, until that fear goes away, learn first how to switch gears, transforming a bad day into a good day, and soon enough your life will change too, and overall picture and outlook in life, will hopefully then become more positive, as your actions, thoughts, beliefs and feelings reflect that new found control, "Your ability to confront, deal with, and act in spite of your fears is the key to happiness and success." [10]

How to Crush ...

Whenever you like someone, first off, always be positive, jokes to or about, especially talking about others is a huge turn off, to anyone considering you, for a like back. Be confident not problematic, the more problems you share, the heavier you feel, the more difficult to love you become, and the more space they give you. Don't be combative, there is a time and a place for complaining, never to anyone you love complain, you may receive complaints, but don't complain about its likely to offend those in your company, who expect you to be happy when theyre around. Life is short, but whats even shorter is the time spent with others, in order to be successful in any relationship, you have to have a life of youre own, don't become too obsessed with the lives of others, the more comfortable you are living your own life, the more likely others will be to include you in their lives. You can't just third wheel relationships in life, these types of relationships usually occur when youre alone, and in between dating, tend to be more attracted toward those who have it all in life, to be surrounded by those with lives, and have them be equally attracted to you, you have to be confident with yourself, not ashamed of your progress in life (ie social status); be mindful of the privileges you do have in life. Be goal-oriented, have goals in life, beyond just hooking up or dating, its when youre not thinking about others, others think about you, its when youre not looking, others are looking at you, and its when you don't have much in life going for you, that you need to try harder, and its when you work hard, you are gifted more privileges in life, that's just how life goes, unfortunately for most, we spend more time alone trying to achieve to have those short moments of success, and so be it, chosen or not chosen, you have to love yourself, if you ever want to become someones mate later in life, no matter who youre attracted to in between. Think for yourself, not for others, usually those most admired in life, are those with thoughts and opinions of their own, able to carry on a conversation, not reliant upon the other for a lift, the better able you are at lifting others, the more likely they will come to during times of need or stability, if you cannot provide stability, its unlikely that you will be deemed a catch, and left alone until you achieve the stability required to be in relationships in life, have friends, keep your friends, and don't drop your friends, when its time to have a relationship, make sacrifices in life, but don't sacrifice your social life, to accommodate the insecurities of another, all relationships require trust, be trustworthy, and reliable, if you want to be loved back. Not everyone will be a match in life, and the relationships that do work out in the long run, are between those who are patient with one another not in need of eachother, but able to function independently on their own, without the other, that's called bonded, when you don't need constant reassurances, feel close to someone, even when youre not with them, or with them around, always maintain loyalties to those you love.

Keys to Work Productivity ...

The key to being productive is setting goals for yourself. In fact, most leaders are task-oriented. Know your priorities in life, that means be able "to sort tasks, decide their importance and create a plan to complete those tasks is essential. When you prioritize tasks, try sorting them by order of urgency, effort required and deadline." [1] Know your responsibilities in life, and be able to "communicate your plans and goals to team members, whether through email, one-on-one conversations or group meetings." [2] And lastly, have some sort of strategy for accomplishing your goals in life, and if you are a leader "you must be able to implement processes that your team can understand and follow." [3] Create a schedule for yourself, and if you are a leader, be able to help others follow a schedule too by "implement[ing] shared, interactive calendars and to-do lists and have employees submit regular process updates." [4] As a blogger, you will experience plenty of moments where you feel compelled to campaign for yourself or others, feeling the sense of empowerment of having a following, and wanting to speak to everyone in a way to help change them, or share your viewpoints about the issues that you care about. Be careful not to become too opinionated, and lose your audience, over-caring about the times, and becoming so affected and emotional, that you yourself become unstable as the writer, always maintain some kind of balance, where your audience is not affected equally, by whats been bothering you, and if youre happy with the times, then say so, and if there is more that you can do to help others, then do so, that's part of the creative process of establishing an identity for yourself as a blogger, its not quite the helping professions, but likewise you are there for others, and able to help them in ways that others have not yet been able to help them or get through to them, you are doing a service to your community, whether you know it or not, keep up the good work! As you develop as a blogger online its important to keep track of your progress, whether taking down notes daily, of your ideas, or simply logging in activities or tasks that you get done along the way, personally and professionally, that's being organized about your time. Activecampaign.com suggests the following, "As thoughts arise during your work, jot them down. Once you reach a break in your work, you can come back and either tackle them or add them to your larger to-do list." [5] To be well liked, and to earn a 5 out of 5 on a Facebook Page, you have to care about your audience, that goes without saying, and in order to care for anyone, you have to care well for yourself. Know that your health comes first, no matter how much you try to help others, you are always limited to sharing what you yourself have experienced first hand or learned about through school or continuing your education, not just by reading online, and summarizing the work of others, that wouldn't be a blog, by citations only. Figure out what makes you unique to your audience, and keep doing what is working for you, as a writer, and make sure to continue to receive permissions along the way, that's how to build partnerships, and to get into programs, by asking questions. I might not be in that phase yet, does shareasale.com count? Banners. I guess so. Never give up, as a blogger, much of what you learn is self-taught, that's why its such a competitive profession, no one can really guide you through the process of establishing a blog, you may get pointers along the way, but its you that comes up with the content, make sure to do your best.

Body Image Blues ...

8/25/2019

Start by liking yourself, especially if youre not happy with the way you look now. Its just looks, remind yourself, that you can change, take better care of yourself, and achieve a look that pleases you. Don't change to be better accepted by others, change because you want to! According to girlshealth.org,

"Body image is affected by a lot of things, including messages you get from your friends, family, and the world around you. ... Sometimes, having body image issues or low self-esteem may lead to depression, eating disorders, or obesity." [1]

As someone who has gone up and down with their weight in recent years ... being thinner does not necessarily make you a happier person. Im much happier now overweight than I was when thinner, you have to have the right mindset whenever you choose to diet and exercise excessively to lose the weight, don't beat yourself up over how you look, or you'll never be happy no matter what size you are. As someone on meds, battling depression, and trying to lose weight and keep off the weight has been a grueling task, involving walking everyday. Its easy to give up in life, when it comes to dieting, and the sooner you lose the weight unhealthily cutting calories, if not meals from your diet, the quicker you gain all the weight back, the minute you start eating 3 meals a day again. According to shape.com:

"Any form of depression, no matter how mild, affects neurotransmitters that control mood, thinking, appetite, and behavior, making you more likely to eat poorly, skip exercise, and gain weight." [2]

Set a schedule for yourself, and keep track of your exercise -I keep a log. Not only does that keep you motivated month to month, but you can easily track your progress, and figure out whats working for you and not working for you. Everyones body is different, some on meds respond better to exercise than others, I know that being on meds, means that I will have accept being a bigger size in life, and that its important to take my meds, whether I am able to lose the weight or not. I highly doubt that I will be able to lose 50lbs in a year, but its worth trying to, sometimes you have to set more realistic goals for yourself, in order to begin the process of achieving your ideal body type, set smaller goals, to achieve larger ones.

Moving Forward in Life ...

No matter whos in your life now, or whos with us now, appreciate and value how far you've come, and if life is feeling long, well then youre right on track. The days should feel short, if youre keeping busy, and falling asleep with ease, well that's a job well done, and means you have something to look forward to tomorrow, whether it's a personal project or work that keeps you moving forward in life, don't stop at whatever is working for you. Its okay from time to time to go backwards and be afraid of moving forwards in life, the tendency is to think that more is required of you to disclose, than is necessary to any relationship, work or otherwise. Do you know who you are, yes? Okay do they know who you are, yes? Okay then that's all youre required to disclose, leave the past in the past, and your medical history, keep private. Sometimes work and relationships don't happen for you in life, if your plate is too full, or if youre not feeling well, and disclose too much about how youre feeling, and if youre not feeling well, then its okay to take a medical leave of absence. No one really wants to hear that youre struggling in life, why people usually leave you alone, if so, just do your best to reintegrate yourself into society, and be a functioning member again, this takes time. If youre not feeling well, adaa.org states that:

“Depression can impact every area of your life, including but not limited to how you sleep and eat, your education and career, your relationships, health, and concentration. Individuals suffering from depression often also have comorbid disorders, such as alcohol and drug abuse or other addictions. Depression doesn't just occur for an individual in vacuum; it can affect your friends, family, co-workers, and everyone around you.” [1]

You have to keep going in life, allow people to have lives of their own, and you should have a life of your own. No one can live life for you, that's for you to decide, how to live your life, and whatever you decide to do, be sure not to self-harm in the process of recovering from whatever is ailing you, set yourself further behind in life. We all go through hardships, and face difficulties, fitting in, and feeling successful, and being apart of, especially when we are not feeling at our best, tend to shy away from engaging in activities, that used to bring us joy. Why is it that when we are doing well, everything happens, and when things aren't going right everything stops. Ive always wondered that. As your life begins to improve, take small steps when backtracking, and make sure to do so with a therapist, not your boyfriends or significant others, or friends, chances are they have their own viewpoints and vision of how they see the world, that when collided with your troubles, makes them think about what has bothered them in the past, that's a group therapy thing, not for everyday conversation, just do your best!

No Life is Perfect ...

No life is perfect, you can sit and ruminate and get nothing done, or you can be positive, pick up a book, read, write, or do something to pass the time, that does not involve self-harming, such as being social, and not drinking or doing drugs recreationally, to feel good. Today I sat at the DMV for 2 hours, and went on a 2 hour and 30 minute run, time well spent. Some days you will have energy, and other days, during bouts of depression, will feel unmotivated to try hard in life. Whatever you do, don't stop, and keep going in life. I never really understood what that meant until I go put on night meds, sometime, after law school, with an unfinished JD, beginning my LLM, got into another masters program, a better school, an ABA approved law school. I think for the most part, your story is your story, unless you make your story public, then it becomes apart of other peoples stories in life, having known you, and heard from you, knowing about you, and your struggles in life, be a positive influence always, and inspiration to others, or otherwise take a backseat as follower to others, whose wellness, may or may not be based on being more well than you, for some that keeps them going in life, to know that they are more well off than others, or above others to say the least. Don't let that get the best of you, everyone has confidence issues, and for some being confident is about their wellness, and ability to achieve in life, which may or may not have anything to do with you, whether you are competition or inspiration to the intelligences of others, do your best to contribute in a positive way to the shared thoughts of others or "group conscious" and do not interfere with the wellness of others, sharing about your past, or past inability to stay well, as this may contribute to triggering the pasts of others, or emotions as empathizing with your positions in life, or worst moments, people generally shy away from interaction with those who have struggled in life, how many homeless people do you know? And/or are close to? Exactly ... eventually you fall so far off the beaten path of normalcy, that eventually people detach once you become not well, that doesn't mean that you are like those who have left society, for a worse off existence or livelihood, know your best, you may no longer benefit from your surroundings in the same way others are able to, but that doesn't mean that you're less worthy of living an important existence in life, blogging is surely not the way to be remembered in life, but rather by your work skills, accolades, academic achievements, etc. that you are able to get jobs, and keep going in life, if not, suffering results from lack of ability which is a result of your inability to stay focused now and achieve, see how that all ties together in the long run. Think about what you're doing now, and whether that is going to help or hurt your abilities later on in life, not all are privileged in ways, that they are able, many suffer the consequences of their disabilities in life, and finding work their suited for ... writing is not an easy profession, experimental at best until you are able to earn a living doing what you love to do, write. If necessary do take jobs that expand your skillset, do try changes to your career path and take courses outside of the scope of your current educational goals, everything helps, and the more well rounded you are in life, the better able you will be to adjust to the times, get jobs, stay social, and live a healthy and happy existence, that is not congruent to what's going wrong in the world, and have every happiness affected easily, when things do not go right in life.

Getting Used ...

8/23/2019

When your hay days are over, never forget where you come from, it's likely you were surrounded by people you would not usually hang out with, out, who help you get nowhere in life, it's the relationships we keep that matter most. Make quality friends along the way, that aren't based on doing drugs or drinking with, let alone have romantic relationships in life, that are built upon those same foundations in life. Stay sober. There is so much more to life, I'm not saying that everyone who does yoga and hikes are the only ones at peace with themselves, but ... they have something going for them in life, they do things not everyone does. How to be one of those people? Can you stay centered when the times are tough, or do you have outbursts, frustrated with the world and with others. Tips for staying centered by mentalhealthamerica.net are [1]:

1. Connect with others.
2. Stay positive.
3. Get physically active.
4. Help others.
5. Get enough sleep.
6. Create joy and satisfaction.
7. Eat well.
8. Take care of your spirit.

As you grow and mature and come to find yourself, you'll grow out of certain things in life, including humor. Especially when you're taking life seriously. In fact, Nando Reynolds M.A., argues that: "Humanity in general is maturing and behaviors that were socially acceptable in the past have become widely unacceptable." [2] Why is this? It's not just movies, that stopped using comedy, it seems that the more scary life becomes, the greater the need for social acceptability in behaviors and commentary, that is that less of us are open to negativity from others, even in a humorous way, everything taken seriously, and nothing taken lightly. Don't be so threatened by those you don't understand in life, your safety is paramount, and in order to make others feel safer around you, its important that you stay stable, whether that's by maintaining sobriety, or just working and being an outstanding human, keep busy, and contribute in positive ways, not by relishing on the days when you were in your 20s and invisible, those days may be long gone, however don't lose positive momentum, when looking back, you are still you! Enjoy life. -What is staying centered? According to counselingrecovery.com: "Staying centered" is an internal experience of feeling calm and confident within yourself. It's a feeling of deep trust in one's abilities or intuition." [3] Remind yourself of your self-worth, know your affirmations, and when you start to believe in yourself again, don't go back through those phases in life, keep moving forward. We all make mistakes in life, and at times exercise poor judgment, which affects our behavior, how we sound, and how we look -be positive inside out. When you express yourself, from a good place in life, others listen, that's not because you are someone they wish they were, but because you have overcome your struggles, usually first to identify your progress, are your loved ones, you will know when you are better, when everyone seems at ease around you, that's you being at ease with yourself. Note that progress in life, and pat yourself on the back, you've come a long way!

Being Critical ...

8/21/2019

The tendency when things are not going right is to be critical of others, and even worse critical of ourselves. For those of us who are hyper analytical, we'll think and think of all the ways we could have done a better job, and at the same time, while trying to better ourselves, put ourselves down in the process, of trying to fix whats gone wrong, make our amends, and move forward in life. Life is not perfect, and as the saying goes "no one is perfect." Whenever we try to achieve a norm, the only person we are selling short in life, is ourselves, theres always something more attractive about being unique, than it is to fit in with the rest, there will always be standards, but don't match your standards to what pleases others, youre bound to feel ill and lose your competitive edge in life, comparing yourself to others, that's not how to better oneself, always be the best version of yourself, you cannot replicate the times, you cannot replicate people, "you can't replace people," even worse yet, you cannot replace time lost in the past, not being happy with yourself, think then of all the opportunities, you had missed out on, putting yourself down, staying home, not being proactive, and keeping your problems to yourself, if you want more in life, be a stickler about what needs work, but don't beat yourself up over it, recovery is a process, and "change doesn't happen overnight." -Why is it important to be positive during difficult times? There is a time and a place for correcting the behaviors of others, and there is a time and a place for greater acceptance of others, during difficult times, sometimes it helps to say it how it is, we see strength in people like that, and sometimes its best to listen and go with the flow, have a sense of direction in life, and don't become so spoiled and content when things are good, that you stop improving upon your best, there is always time to do work, educate oneself, and further ones intelligences in life, this can only lead to greater combinations of success later in life, the more knowledgeable you become, the better able you are to cope with whatever life throws at you, including the times.

Wait to Date ...

I'm not saying that loving more is the solution to your problems, to resolve loneliness, but sometimes having a crush here and there helps to pass the time, but don't become dependent on those you admire to get you out of a rut in life, its usually stability that is craved and given attentions to, not those who are needy of the time and attentions of others. Once you figure yourself out, whether its getting a job, losing weight, finishing a degree, and achieving happiness on your own first, that's when you find value to your life, aside from sharing a life with another, which is a big step, but sometimes not the best step in the right direction when it comes to establishing a career for yourself, sacrificing time for yourself to please another. There will always be time to date, never rush into any important decisions in life, you can't settle down with just anyone, however if you wait too long, it may be difficult to get back out there, so find a careful balance between micro-managing your own life crises while making time to be social and get to know others. Its when you least expect it love comes around, usually someone you are not vying for attentions from, someone who gives you attention right off the bat, those are the ones who deserve your love and attention, we all like a challenge, but sometimes love comes easily to those who are most confident, have the ability to pick and choose who they want to be with, we are not all that fortunate in life, to find love, some of us spend many years alone before we are willingly to open back up to someone, or to someone new. Waiting to date is about valuing yourself, and when you value yourself, and have confidence, and high self-esteem, then with that sense of self, you are easier to be around, making those you love feel more at ease and comfortable with themselves, that stability you are able to provide comes from making good decisions for oneself, not just dating anyone or whos around, don't sacrifice your best self, to make any one person happy, and if someone grows to be unhappy with you, its okay to leave those relationships, if you don't need them, then you are under no obligations to stay with anyone, its usually later in life, you become more needy wishing you had someone to share your life with, those aren't mistakes leaving relationships, it was just your focus at the time to focus on career, whatever your objectives are in life, stay true to yourself, and as the saying goes, "you will always find better." -Keep in mind when dating, to keep those interactions private, until you are ready to go public with a relationship, especially if you blog or share statuses on Facebook, its not something to brag about, especially with consideration for those who are not dating or do not yet have love in their lives, everyone goes through different phases in life, be happy for those who have settled down, and do your best to be one of them too one day. You'll be a much happier person, having waited, than having wasted time loving the wrong people in life, trust me youre not missing out, waiting for booty calls in life, the right ones will come around, and those you feel like you have to chase in life, just let them go.

The Pain Quotient ...

Intelligence in a Google.com world, seems like all our questions can be answered, that no matter what your life essential needs are, any level of intelligence is capable of becoming more intelligent, with access to the internet and computer or smart phone. I'm not sure whos more popular nowadays, 911 or Google.com, why is it that when we don't know something we feel like we have to know something, and now that that need can be fulfilled, why are we still not able to stay well, and be happy? What types of intelligences help us, and what types of information hurt our ability to think and thrive. There seems to be an ongoing nervous pressure to succeed nowadays, no one feeling smart enough, even with $\frac{3}{4}$ a JD and an LLM, a near PhD in Law, even I have trouble achieving at times, hospitalized, even with all my questions answered. What is the sense of peace that communication with people brings? And how is the way we communicate vital to our overall health as a community online? Why is not feeling able so painful, is that depression, or is that just not maintaining a positive attitude toward self, and ones abilities in life? Is it necessary that we compare our lives to others, or their intelligences achieved in life? It seems counter-intuitive that with more information at our disposal there is still educational challenges, in fact one study by Institute of Medicine (US) Committee on Advancing Pain Research, Care, and Education, states that: "pain is extremely widespread in American society, exacts a huge toll in suffering and disability, and imposes extraordinary costs on the health care system and the nation's economy." [1] In fact, holding "inaccurate views" may have an adverse affect on our "optimal timing," aren't those the goals of health websites online, "patient education?" This study states that those with pain, "They deserve information that can help them understand and address their condition." [2] Education online, not only helps people to make informed decisions, but it also helps one "prevent and manag[e] pain" by knowing the "availability of methods" they have to relieve pain. Not feeling smart enough is not a recognized disability, you're expected to study hard and get jobs, and if you don't feel smart enough, expected to "fake it until you make it," by all means continue your education online, or switch professions if you have to, but who has time to make life changes, sometimes we expect that the work that has been done, will provide us with opportunities later in life, but what if that never happens? Can you thrive on learning alone, live a good life, well that's as much as I have had planned for myself so far in life, so far so good. You cant fake confidence, and paychecks are not easy to get in life, not with disabilities, and a track record of hospitalizations on meds, sometimes you have to work at your own speed in life, make sure not to compare yourself to others, if you have disabilities in life, and maintain faith in yourself, that you can do anything you set your mind to. Finding a paid job that matches ones abilities in life, is a blessing, and if all else fails, and you have to create a job for yourself, working from home, then do so, it has been the best decision I have made for myself, moving forward in life, to stay up to date with my skills in writing, writing a book, and working on my LLM, no matter what jobs I have.

8/20/2019

Im not gonna say it's an easy road, but it can be done, overcoming failure. We have all experienced lapses in judgment, when our attitudes positive, and egos are high, we sometimes tend to make bad decisions. Go with the flow, but not at your own expense. Socialization is supposed to benefit you, not hurt you in the long run, its not your friends, that are to blame, its your time management skills. Its important to keep a balance in life, spending time with family, working, and making time for friendships along the way. Friendships are important, psychologytoday.com, states that: "Friendships help to improve our happiness, confidence, worth, and coping while giving us a sense of belonging." However, not all friendships last, and sometimes when we are going through difficult times, "Friendships may dwindle due to a difference in investment of time and energy." [2] This can be depressing, trust that those who are your real friends, will be there for you in the years to come, some of the best friendships always pick up from where they left off, that's how you know who your real friends are. No one wants to be the rehab friend, or the friend that gets hospitalized for being bipolar, I was one of them. Although I may have experienced a lot of hardships in life, I've always been able to maintain a positive attitude toward self and others, that is primarily how I have been able to overcome hardships, and setbacks in life. Keep your career going, and if one thing does not work out, keep going and find something else to do. According to Mark Manson in The Subtle Art of Not Giving a F*ck, "failures ... are what lead to a better understanding of whats necessary to be successful." [3] Furthermore he states that, "acceptance of one's negative experience is itself a positive experience" [4], at the time you may be worried what others think as you are going through a difficult time, but chances are people are more concerned with their own lives, and what your going though is nothing more than a blurb in conversations about you, nothing really to worry about. Have some self control, its not all about you, people care more than you think, and while you may be feeling negative, never assume that other are feeling similarly negative toward you or speaking badly of you and your hardships. Everyone has their own lives. People root more than you think.

Know Your Potential ...

Know your potential, and don't sell yourself short in life, not for anyone or anything. When depression hits, it hits hard, it's a result of unhappiness with yourself, and where you are in life, don't let that happen to you! Stay goal-oriented. Positivepsychology.com, states that: "... goals affect the intensity of our actions and our emotions – the more difficult and valued a goal is, the more intense our efforts will be in order to attain it, and the more success we experience following achievement (Latham & Locke, 2006).” [1] Your past is not always the best indicator of future success, know that you can and will overcome hardships in life, and that you can do anything you set your mind to. Goal setting has been viewed as an intervention technique, not just to avoid failures past or future, but to set our mind to what we want in life, and to stay committed to those personal endeavors in life. “Thinking positively about the future bolsters our ability to create goals and consider the actions required to achieve them.” [2] The times may be difficult, but “How you think of a difficult situation is everything.” [3] It’s the difference between allowing the times to control your abilities in life, and taking charge of your life, and doing your best in spite of your circumstances whatever they may be. Sure we all have unwanted thoughts, and face unwanted pressures in life, but that doesn’t mean that you should allow others to control you, its important to stay true to yourself and do your best in spite of whatever is going on around you, that not only shows that you are a strong person, but that you have the potential for future success too, the better able you are to manage your stresses earlier on in life, the better off you’ll be. According to keckmedicine.org, “In your 30s, it can be harder to maintain a work-life balance as your responsibilities” change, resulting in “Lack of satisfaction, growth and fulfillment at work may also become a source of stress in this decade of life.” [4] No matter what, keep going in life, whether you have it all, or you think you should have more in life, know that you are blessed, live life with purpose, and always express gratitude toward those who help you along the way, they’ll be glad to see you doing better in life, once you start achieving again. We all experience slow downs in our careers, change paths from time to time, get different jobs, date different people, all of these changes make you who you are, and show that you have the ability to withstand all kinds of pressures in life. Don’t lose faith in the strength that you have exuded in the past, and find yourself again!

How Do Campaigns Help or Hurt Us ...

8/18/2019

It would be wise to say that campaigns help us, why else would someone campaign for causes to support. But what are you supporting when you support a campaign? According to Tamler Sommers in Why Honor Matters, “solidarity [has been proven to] significantly correlat[e] with greater well-being and a reduction in the incidence of depressive symptoms.” [1] With recent suicides and death following an overdose, it seems that our inner group solidarity is not strong enough. Would it be wise to take on subjects one does not relate to, when choosing campaigns to support, or should we stick to what we know best, ourselves, and how we have been affected. Does harping on the problems at hand help or hurt our esteems overall. “Although solidarity is valuable for all communities, it has special importance for communities in the environments in which honor norms tend to emerge.” [2] I was thinking, this is exactly why my neighborhood has bikes and scooters, to improve upon group solidarity, keeping us busy. What helps to combat depression anyways? According to healthline.com, “Depression can drain your energy, leaving you feeling empty and fatigued.” [3] Its important to be goal oriented, set small goals to achieve a larger purpose in life, but don’t set your purpose in life to the campaign you support, its likely everytime a problem arises you’ll take a hit. That’s not the point of supporting causes to get hurt while caring, that would be counterproductive. Its common for, “depressive symptoms disrupt your daily routine” [4] which explains why every time something bad happens, we get more and more depressed about it, but know the difference between the life you lead, and the life lead by others, although living in similar, we all face different challenges in life, that affect our daily outputs, don’t be judgmental toward those who are symptomatic, just be understanding that everyone has different thresholds, when it comes to caring.

This Cocoon ...

8/17/2019

This Cocoon was made with class, not overtime, in real time, built brick by brick, square by square, book by book, post by post, how I was able to generate a 45k/month following. You have to have a philosophy in life that you can stick to, what works for you, and go from there. Don't worry about the dramas of business, or who knows who, or who knows what, or who thinks what, you'll never get to a planned destination in time, so long as you are in constant worry of what others think, let alone manage your own health, and day by day, improve. Its easier to take something that's already been built, and do something with it (i.e. Like a wheel to a car) than it is to build something "from scratch." Its by who your influences in life are, that help to shape you, your outlook, and your ability to weather through all storms. A good business-man or woman is someone who does not make hasty decisions, is a careful decision-maker, and never sets up too high of expectations of oneself, but never fails to meet a mark in life, that's someone who can weather a storm. Not all are equipped to handle the types of social pressures that exist these days, when it comes to creating and making ideas happen, in the positive, poor decision making usually does not wind up in the negative, but it can, to highlight possibilities in the negative would be doing a disservice to all who have cared and will continue to care. -Who supported who should not determine who is here now.

When Friendships Go Sour After Blogging ...

Sometimes its not always your fault, but chances are if you have had a drinking or drug use problem, addiction will be to blame, not your blogging. Your loss of friends is your fault, either behaviorally or emotionally, you were not there for them, and as a result, of your problem, you lost friends. Losing friends can take its toll, it has been said that, "Dealing with bad friends, getting dumped by them, and feeling disappointed with them is a stressful part of life, and it can harm your body and mind." [1] Which is all the more reason to be a good friend, stay sober, and get your life back on track. Jim Rohn, once said, ""You're the average of the five people you spend the most time with." [2] If that's true, then what does your behavior say about you? Are you representing your friends well, or are you only putting yourself out there online to benefit yourself. Is it to get more job prospects, what is blogging really about. Have meaning and purpose, whenever you begin any new endeavor, and never lose tact, don't discuss too much personal information, and certainly don't talk about those in your life, who you may love, miss, cherish, or hold high, its likely they will be insulted if mentioned. Keep things general when you write online. And if you do have a resentment, be sure not to share those resentments out loud, because if it does get back to them, chances are it will be even more difficult to resume those relationships later in life. Its important to note that, "adding more content doesn't help you get more readers." [3] You may think that the more personal you get with your audience, the more connected to them they would feel, but it's the exact opposite, not only do you make your audience uncomfortable sharing personal details about your life, but you also run the risk of making those close to you feel uncomfortable that your sharing so many personal details about your life online. Know when to stop, content creation is a learning process.

Friday Night Blues ...](https://socialtriggers.com/why-bloggers-fail/Friday-Night-Blues-...)

8/16/2019

You would think that this syndrome only relates to your undergrad experiences, home on weekends, but trust me nights home on weekends, alone, extends into your 30s, and it gets much worse. The main objective of having a good week is to keep busy, that's so you can enjoy your weekend with ease. But what happens when you: (1) work too long or too often (2) not work enough or (3) spend too much time online ... "loneliness." [1] Its been found that "decompressing after a long day" and working "late morning is clinically the best time to get work done" will help you keep it together, when you have a lot to get done. [2] Be productive, and while youre at it, be efficient, time is of the essence. Do the research, and know when is the best time to work, and when is the best time to rest, and make sure to keep going in life. Theres always time for tomorrow, what cannot get done today, don't keep putting off, but make sure, not to stress too much over time, living is daily, its not necessary to push oneself, not sleep enough, or wake up too early, and be dead all day, what can get done with positive energy is always a better end work product than what is done tired. Theres a lot of "stigma" associated to weekend loneliness, and its not too uncommon to feel "isolat[ed]." [3] One woman states: "But I will not let this feeling define me. As the worst moments have passed, the clarity of a new day brings hope and I strive to be in control of those feelings. To try to just accept that this can feel bad. And hope for less lonely weekends ahead." [4] As a law student, and dating, I pretty much had no social life, but now I've decided its time to have some balance. You cant just have a boyfriend, or just study on weekends, and have no social life, friends may come and they will go, start families of their own, and eventually youll have to keep up with life, without them sometimes. That's the phase Im in. Therefore the weekends do get lonely sometimes, I don't really feel bad about those with jobs, how I wish I had a paid job, but that all takes time. Recovery comes first, it seems that way the moment you start recovery you stop going out and you stop having a social life, that is true, but you can still make time for dating and having sober friends. I'll keep you guys posted!

Messenger is Not for Mental Health Issues ...

Have you ever gotten a text so far left field that you wonder what the health of the person is? Im not sure whether I was one of those people, but that's what mental health issues sound like to the person in receipt of such texts. Always be cognizant of where and when to do therapy, if not in fun, don't carry on in any conversations regarding your mental health issues, which you yourself cannot stop yourself from discussing, that's rambling on and on about what you think without hearing from the other, reassurances, as to what they think or whats going on. Do your best always to have healthy conversations with others, especially in private. No one really wants to hear what meds your on, or what struggles you have encountered in life, in regular conversations, those are more like therapy conversations, seems we are having more therapy type conversations these days, than regular conversations I could be wrong. What happened to the days when we discussed the news and the weather with ease? Its okay to still be happy inside, its not important to internalize everything that's going on or has gone wrong, empathy wise, its okay to be strong, and to focus on yourself. How to be uplifting during tough times, I think to myself often. What is it about positive people, that make them so appealing to talk to, it seems they always have the right things to say, things you don't think about, theyre knowledgeable, that takes skill to have a conversation and to make up conversation. -When you're at ease, your problems are not on the front of your mind ... that's the best, when you can work, and think without feeling down, that's what depression feels like, all your problems out in front of you, you walk through on a daily basis, so when does it stop? The more consciously aware you are of your problems the better, just do your best not to discuss them out loud. Was thinking of taking a Transcendental Meditation Course, it seems like you have to take a course in order to understand these days, of how to cope with everyday stressors, we'll see. -Sometimes talking hurts.

How Quickly Happiness Leaves You ...

8/10/2019

Sometimes when we are at our wits ends about things, people leave us in life, and sometimes when we are too busy to do anything but work, people leave us in life, that's just how life is, when you're busy you're busy, and it's nothing personal, when you can't get a hold of someone, or if someone has checked out and taking care of themselves. You have to be a stable person in order to be in a relationship with anyone, that's in knowing you, able to be yourself around them, and them knowing all sides to you, and others be comfortable while knowing all sides to you, not to cause harm to you knowing you, that's being open to others. That's not the same as wearing your heart on your sleeve. When one wears their heart on their sleeve, they're not aware yet have not yet been broken, therefore do not understand the repercussions, of attachments, and detachments in life, long enough to understand the recovery process, and the time it takes to heal, once told "time heals all wounds." That's not to say that those who have been through a lot know more about life, surely they make the same mistakes in life, given all opportunities, made available to in life, but that's not the same as mental health issues, which is a physical illness, hard to define, but a re-experience of conditions or a set of conditions which then again causes them illness, which is why no matter how many times you've been treated if one thing was the issue then, it will be the same issue now, sleep. To lose arguments in life as to your own wellness, is not being understood, and when your mental health becomes of public knowledge, and studied to a T that is to benefit themselves as having known you, and known your story, as hearing your timelines, think that you can be predicted by your past, and equally poor outcomes can become of you, if you look or behave as someone who has harmed you in the past as described. That's hurting someone by hearing their story, turning them into something they are not, foreign to the world, foreign to pop culture, foreign to normalcy, foreign to love, foreign to socialization, foreign to work ethic, foreign to intelligence, there's a lot to be foreign to in life, it's all a matter of doing what makes sense to you, at a period in time in life, when risk is not an option, do you lean toward what is familiar or do you start a new relationship, and take the risk of setting long term goals with someone new in your life. There's waiting, and there's not being able to commit to someone new, there's friendship, and there's not sticking to the standards of wellness, in order to have friendships, or relationships in life, and there's life, being able to live, not by the standards or characters of others but your own.

Expecting Change ...

At a certain point, when getting to know someone new, or when thinking about someone who you used to know well, and feel distant from ... you stop expecting change, and learn to accept the spaces between you and others, at some points in life, things become less intimate, and people become more focused on themselves, their goals in life, and where they are headed, regardless of whether you are doing well or not, wish the best for you, but at this time, choose to be separate from you. That goes for all relationships, not just romantic ones. Friendships, never die, you can always rely on those who once cared for you to be there during your up moments, and reply. And those who are new to your life, don't be surprised if they expect more of you, or if they challenge you to try harder in life, that's not that they're not being accepting of you, but maybe it's just that they see your potential, that you've lost track of along the way. -Some mental health issues, don't come and go, some stay, and some symptoms either worsen or not depending on how well you follow instructions, and advices given along the way, some problems corrected, let's hope we don't make the same mistakes in life more than once, that's a lot of loss to suffer in one lifetime, reliving the same mistakes over and over again, and expecting different results, you would be kidding yourself, if you thought you could have your way in life, hurting self, and at your expense hurting others, causing them to be distant toward you. Self-harming and addictive behaviors is much about happiness with yourself, when youre not happy with yourself, youre more likely to make bad choices in life, when left to your own devices, isolation is your worst enemy during times of need, that's actually when you need to step out of your shell and be around others, that's when you learn the most about yourself, either rising to the occasion of wellness, or forgoing all opportunities to move forward in life, and choosing to stick to your old patterns of coping that don't seem to resolve those empty feelings causing you to be alone, it's a choice to be alone, don't choose to be alone, choose to be around people, and once you make that choice to be around people, don't expect people to openly want to be close to you, until you have become more well adjusted to your environment and being around others, especially if you have mental health issues, its easy to be timid, to not ask for help, to shy away from love and friendships, that makes sense, not wanting to get hurt again, or not wanting to risk the potential for loss along the way, as you get better. Know that you are fine just the way you are, keep working on yourself, and allow the rest to fall into place. The more you try to better yourself, the more you will attract the type of companionships in life you think you deserve or want to have in life, the less you try, and shy away from progress putting yourself down, the less likely you will be to move forward, give yourself a chance first to move forward, and really try to improve, those genuine attachments you have toward bettering yourself, in the activities you choose to engage in, the more you will attract people into your life, who may or may not be similarly situated but you choose to better themselves on a daily basis as well, its not that similar people attract similar people, its that busy people, who have lives of their own, not dependent upon others are easier to be around, without worry, be one of them, not someone to worry about, or for them to have fear about the risks of losing you to mental health issues, that's why they say its selfish to self-harm and that its all about seeking attentions from others, because behaviorally at your discomforts cause others to become uncomfortable and as a result may cause others to focus on you, not for what you are doing right in life, but to seek help by communicating your illness in a way that forces them to have to care, not because they necessarily want to care, that's not the way to go about starting or ending relationships, based upon how much attention is paid toward you, then blaming one or the other for lack of attentions causing you to self-harm, that's not the solution to dealing with breakups and losses, that usually just pushes people further away from you in life. It takes time to love yourself, and to live life freely, free of fear, without worry about your health, and without worry over potential losses to face in the future, when connecting with others, that's not what connecting is about. If you expect every connection to be long term, well you are only setting yourself up for heartache and heartbreak, take it day by day in those cases, you cannot expect to have the confidence of someone who has been well and who has been able to avoid illness in life, and see yourself as less tough by comparison, mental health issues, may not be contagious, but you certainly should not compare yourself to others, who haven't exhibited the same symptoms or exemplified a condition, that you have had to endure throughout your blogging career, most things dealt with in private, are usually resolved in private so that in public, others do not have to witness them upset, disgruntled, or feeling down in the dumps, who walks around sulking, for attentions, exactly, that would be weird, Im sure not all mental health issues, are purposefully exuded in public, sometimes unless anyone points out to us what needs work, we continue on that way without change, there are ways to think more positively about yourself, to get to more positive end results, you just have to stay conscious of what needs work, in order to fix what needs work, everyone is different, "everyone has problems," and know that youre not alone. If there is any advice I could give to someone who is still struggling with mental health issues, it would be to follow your Doctor's advice, take your medications as directed, get your sleep at night, don't oversleep, and set an alarm wake up early, and slowly craft a schedule for yourself to follow each day, until the days feel less long, time moves by quicker, and the days feel more complete, having accomplished things and by keeping yourself busy. Its hard to transition to the real world, if you don't have your basic life skills down, and have not adjusted to your meds, and able to keep a schedule, not all are blessed with jobs in life, and some of us have to battle our mental health issues, not just our demons in sobriety, some issues are better not discussed out loud in public, that includes self-identifying characteristics or traits, or personal histories, that set you off as being less than according to social standings, if you want to have a job that your proud of having, a companion your proud of being with, and a life your proud to have lived, than start accepting those moments when you did not have your condition under control, and hope that as you continue to improve others will become more accepting of you, your past, and where you are now.

Setting Goals ...

Appreciate the smaller milestones in life. Whether its losing a few pounds, setting a new fitness regimen, attending AA meetings, dating, hanging out with friends, making new friends, chatting with friends on Messenger, finishing an assignment, applying for a new job, starting a new job, these are all examples of steps in the right direction. Never stop living life, and if you have to blog in between phases in life, that's okay too. My new Alexa Rank puts my website in the top 147,126K Websites in the US! What was once a hobby has the potential to become a career choice later in life, if I so choose to guest post blog, get paid for writing and publish a book. Right now I'm focused on finishing my Dissertation and graduating from Law School, with an LLM Masters in Law, studying Money Laundering and AML Laws in the US and UK, Finance. The purpose of getting a Masters was to get a job, and the purpose of blogging was to keep going in spite of not having a job, just need to be sure to mention my experience on my resume, but not sure where to start. What was once a quotes campaign on Twitter and Instagram, has turned into a blog on Weebly, with updates to friends on Facebook and Twitter. Your blogging career evolves overtime, writing less on social media platforms, and writing more on your own on your own website. Eventually you guest post blog. I just joined Need to Live (Link: <https://theneedtolive.com/?aff=36>), and look forward to my first post on their website.

Goal setting, why is it so important to goal set? While there are many blogs to help you “reach your life’s goals” [1] we are not all bloggers, so how do we reach our potential, if we are just trying to get good at one thing in life, such as work or a relationship? [Step One] A lot of blogging requires you to first have a good “relationship you have with yourself.” [2] If you want to get a new job, if you want to guest post blog, and if you want to have a career doing what you love most, then you need to first improve your self-esteem. Its important to note that, “Self-esteem is enhanced when you set a goal that’s meaningful and important to you, and you follow through to make it happen.” [3] For example, I have been setting running goals for myself, exercising daily, this is to help lose weight, to be more presentable. When I was told at my last job, that I could lose a few pounds, put back on adderrall sent to a new doctor, I was mortified, not insulted, but used to being bossed around at that point in my life [an introvert], and subjected myself to that heartache of not feeling good enough. Don’t be insulted, get active, the more prepared you are in advance, and the better you feel about yourself, the less you look like a project to someone else, who is in need of fixing. [Step Two] Know Yourself and be sure to set “SMART [goals] (specific, measureable, attainable, relevant and time-bound) goals that motivate you and write them.” [4] [Step Three] Be sure to set mini goals and reward yourself along the way, [5] think about what needs to get done in order to achieve a bigger goal ie getting a job, or guest post blogging, and [Step Four] get prepared to achieve that goal, when the time comes, performing under pressure is so important to feeling good about yourself, not only are you able to rise to occasions, but you leave a lasting impression upon others, that you can be relied upon, and trusted during times of need, an important quality to have in the work force in todays setting. [Step 5] And lastly know your limits, pace yourself, don’t set goals that are too difficult to achieve or set your standards too high of yourself, that you fail to measure up, if you have been able to achieve in past, then pat yourself on the back, your personal history helps mold you into who you become in the future, learn to love yourself, recognize your mistakes in life, and move forward so that you can begin a new life, if you have not looked back, chances are if you move forward without correcting what has gone wrong in the past, will leave you feeling lost yet again, unsuccessful in any attempts to start a new job, relationship, or expand your skill set career wise, its okay to invest time in bettering yourself, you deserve that much!

Steps to Goal Setting:

1. Work on your Self-Esteem
2. Know Yourself
3. Set Mini Goals and Reward Yourself
4. Be Prepared
5. Know Your Limits

Growing Up ...

9/17/2019

Growing up, things don't generally hit you until later in life, when your young you more readily adapt to the present, without thinking too much about the past, and without worry for your future. The pressure to succeed hits you later in life, and its then you assess where you have been, and with consideration for your upbringing, do your best to represent yourself and others well, this does not come easy to most, an overwhelming fear of anxiety sometimes takes hold of you, everything at stake, what has passed, what has been lost, and where to go to from here, the more stability you are able to achieve throughout your years in life, the better opportunities present themselves to you later in life, its all about focus and perseverance. For some its easy to brush aside the problems of those who are not successful, as not being of importance, or a story worth hearing, and even worse if you have mental health issues, then no one want to read your story out of fear that their issues may be triggered by your understandings of life, based off of your experiences and what you've been through in life. There is a sense of possessiveness, others feel in terms of their own health, and that will never change, the less you try to convince others to accept you, the less worry and fear youll allow to take hold of your interpretations in life, and how well you feel about yourself, the opinions of others, should not matter to you, benefit not impede upon your progress and understanding of the world, there is no remedy or special information that can be provided to those who think they have life all figured out, stubborn and resentful toward those who they think should not be suffering from mental health issues, had they not had a problem with drugs and alcohol, and therefore do not see them as victim ever to their problems, but the cause of their own failures in life, its sympathies from those, you should refrain from questioning, in life, and your time is better spent bettering yourself, with or without those types of people in your life, you don't need forgiveness to move forward, and you don't need to step down to those who think they are better than you, to feel apart of, all you need to do is be able to exist in the present, without feeling sudden bouts of depression, ignore negative voices and opinions of you, and not self-harm to any of those opinions of you, they'll likely turn a blind eye, and again blame you for your own sufferings in life, no one who is in non-acceptance of you ever takes responsibility for how they may have made you feel about yourself, when you have been worse off, in life, its their own lives that matter more to them, maybe not even having an opinion of your life that you can yet understand, perspectives change overtime, and your perspective of yourself, and where your at in life, can likely change to, the more progress you make. Don't ever compare your sense of self, to the sense of self others have achieved, in order to have things in life, not all who are well are blessed with certain amenities in life, that help to establish their sense of feeling successful and above others, its all about where they see themselves, as compared to where they have been, and have a clear awareness of where they are headed in life, wanting to live long lives, if you have suffered and have considered ending your life, then you will not feel like most people, and doors wont begin to open back up for you in life, until you learn to value yourself, and again realize your potential in life, taking it one day at a time, until you are able to see weeks, and months in front of you, and even years, then and only then, is it safe to try and be social again, but isolating is never the solution, be mindful of those who have given up on you in life, some don't want to be blamed for your mental health issues, and that's probably why they are no longer in your lives, to live better lives, without having to suffer the repercussions of being connected to someone who is not doing well in life.

As You Get Older ...

As you get older, feeling more and more pressed for time, you begin to re-organize your life, your livelihood depends upon this, being able to work, being able to feel apart of, and giving back to others, as others have given opportunities to you, to get well, feeling like it's a good idea to help others, once you get well, know that this doesn't all happen at once. There are phases in life, when you need help, and there are phases in life when you are able to provide help to others. No matter what boat youre in, know that youre not alone. We don't all become advocates at once, and sometimes you have to learn many lessons before you are able to help and give advisement to those who are struggling how to get out of a bind in life, or navigate through all the suffering and hardships, of not having a job. "Life is tough, but so are you" is the quote. That really rings true in your 30s, making friends, losing friends, and the risk of losing family, is ever more present, all the times your Mom used to say "while we're still around" begins to knock on your door, and where are you at in life at that point, at a point of hardship, or at a point of success, at a point of clarity, or in ruins, where do you want to be in life, when those bigger life lessons come knocking on your door, are you fearless, are you cognizant, are you compassionate, are you being self-centered, are you focused on the right things in life, or are you focused on meaningless things such as image and weight, what matters to you moving forward, how are you spending your time on this earth, and are you living a meaningful life. Although some may consider you a waste of time or space, know that you matter, whether or not you happen to be on anyone's good side, or on their bad side, over the life you have lived, know that you will always have potential to live a meaningful life if you so choose to. Know that in your 30s "Looking back, some of my biggest failures that seemed so catastrophic at the time, feel meaningless." [1] It's important to get going and to keep going in life. Once you stop, settling for "a sedentary lifestyle" [2] and choose to overcome your mental health issues, that's one positive step in the right direction, to begin goal setting again, and "do it now if at all possible" [3] and stop procrastinating, such as putting off a dissertation, to work, or making excuses for not showing up to events, causes, or meetups in life, or dates, because you are feeling inadequate or not good enough in life, life was meant to be lived, and you cannot start living life, unless you take active steps to keep moving in life, whether that's forward, or under controlled circumstances go backwards in therapeutic settings. -If you blog in between jobs, or outside of work, remember one thing: "Don't slave away ... thinking it's for some sort of greater good and that you will be greatly rewarded some time in the future. Unless there is actual, measurable benefit for you in putting in so many hours, [your future is] not going to happen. Nobody thanks you in the end, and you'll just burn out." [4] So true, unless you have goals along the way while building a blog for yourself, to share your life you need to: (1) Have a life (2) Live life with positive purpose (3) Share the meaning behind your experiences in life how they have helped shaped you (4) and How will blogging benefit your future potential to get jobs, or to find a career in writing, or something related to your work online, if you haven't figured out that much yet, (5) Write a book, put it to the side, finish your dissertation, and apply for jobs! You can always come back to what work has been finished and improve upon it at a later point in time, what you can't do, is go backwards and fill in the gaps in your resume, why it's important to keep working, and if necessary continue your education, so that you can keep applying for jobs, and have something to show for yourself, during your time away from work or school.

Sweet Melancholy ...

Hearing stories of heartbreak, it's easy to become desensitized, if not feeling the same way about things, to think that someone is being overly dramatic. That's one defense to the depressions faced by others, to not be affected, and find ourselves in the same shoes, having read their accounts, trials, and tribulations in regards to their own love and acceptance needs in life, must we all feel the same, in order to be understood, sometimes sharing less, being less vocal about our troubles, can lead to better results support wise, rather than turn others away, by our displays, whether dramatic or not to their tastes, if real, we can only therefore be ourselves. We are not all actors, it's impossible to be someone acceptable to all, not all are forgiving of our dispositions in life, if not all together normal, may pass judgments upon us, as to why we are the way we are, how we could be better or different, and what in their minds would make us seem more acceptable. That's not always our fault, how digestible our content is as related to our own lives and connections, as viewed by others. Some would rather have it be that they are glad they are not you, than to feel like they wish they were you, convince themselves of everything wrong with you, to prevent them from feeling, less than or inadequate, by comparison to you and your strengths in life, not all our strengths in life will be viewed upon in awe, or with total non-judgmental acceptance, you cannot expect to be everyone's favorite in life, no one is ever quite America's sweetheart, seems like the competition for the top spot, continues on, whether measured by wealth, self-esteem, accolades, generosity, intelligences, successes, social graces, photo wise, or by just how they make us feel being around them, or hearing from them, I think everyone is doing their best at this point in time, to make everyone feel at home. -Don't make people feel sorry for you in life, that's not a careful road to empowerment, don't bring everyone else down, just because things aren't going your way in life, but don't be so hard headed as to think that you have what it takes to represent others, in ways that others have not already done so, it's not always your place to be a source of that home feeling, best you can do is to be yourself, and allow people to pick and choose from whom to hear from, and by whose best words support their best thoughts, and leave feelings up to your audience to decide what helps, and what does anyone a disservice in life to know about, why it's important to share less about your troubles, to be well liked, you have to love yourself, and to love yourself, you have to keep busy, and to keep busy, you have to be happy from each point you leave off from, that's maintaining positive momentum, and it's that positive momentum you carry forward, and your aura, well that's a reflection of all things encompassing, being a good person, a wise decision maker, kind at heart, one that looks out for others, and when seen, all those qualities about them can be felt, similarly leaving at ease others, who otherwise may not have been at ease, or feel better having known you.

"Bipolar is not contagious" quoting Dr. Burns at UCLA's Neuropsychiatric Center (2019).

By Rumor ...

10/31/2019

Rumor is a very powerful mechanism, that can either work or not work in your favor, never gamble with your image and your health, that is something that cannot be anticipated for by public health professionals, how people will respond to you, or configure fix or rectify how others have thought of you in the past, it's always thought of that with justification others feel enabled to hurt you behind your back, and if it doesn't speak to you specifically, then you only make worse your own condition by stating that something said or someone saying something has affected you personally, that's what sheds light on what's bothering you, not shielding yourself from harms way, and only further enlightening others, as to your interpretations, assuming one person's interpretation, and then bringing into question the interpretation of all based upon you highlighting points of issue, only known to you, and those to whom you have confided in or been exposed to in a therapeutic environment from which sharing is the primary way of assisting others, the newcomer, or those in need of assistance. If what you have to say does more harm than good then probably best not to make those statements out loud, any statements made in reply to thoughts you assume that others have of you, in a combative tone, makes you seem immature, if not delusional to the majority's concerns, it seems that as soon as you engage in discussions to topics brought up, that you are spotlighted on, and that's when you create a majority opinion in the negative of you, once held by a minority of individuals who did not know you well enough to give you an opportunity to get well, and fully understand the extent to which others either lost faith in you, or developed a negative opinion of you based upon what you look like, and whether your lifestyle was agreeable to their tastes. *The most important point I'm trying to make is that there is a fine line between getting well, believing in yourself, explaining yourself, others believing in you, getting well, and overcoming suicide, this is a specific discussion to overcoming suicide, based upon my personal experiences, you either overcome the issues that are baffling to your tastes, hurting your interpretation of reality, and reach a sense of normalcy, or you enable others to convince you that you are not well again, and then live up to poor potential of yourself, sending you backwards in life, not forwards, the main point I am trying to make is that you need to get better before you can address what has gone wrong, and why done so wrongfully toward you, before you can justify why others thought it justified to cause harm to you as though that was a normal acceptable and deserved response toward you when experiencing mental health issues. Overcoming suicide is not just convincing yourself that you're worth it, but continuing to do well in spite of your symptoms, or mental health issues, not take those issues out on others, affecting their stability, that's the point at which you revisit what was bothering you, and instead of inspiring hope unto others and helping them to see well, you do the exact opposite, and get them to believe in a poor perspective of you or others, who have suffered in the past, that's not moving forward, that's healing, and then re-subjecting yourself to harm, and the point at which others become convinced that you're not well again, then whose team is winning now, the people's team should be a team that promotes "health equity" something I learned today, that is not governed by sides, or by wellness, but who doesn't buy into personal viewpoints or judgments of others, which run the risk of reverting others to poorer conditions of self, or run the risk of convincing others that someone is *worse off than they are presently, by getting them to express themselves in response to others past, at the present, which does not accurately portray themselves in a positive light, not all who are well can represent themselves well, that's a sad fact of life, and for many, it's too late, by the time they have expressed grievances, depending on whose side they are on in life, the burden to prove otherwise cast themselves in the positive seems too burdensome or difficult in the face of those confidently provoking others until they have proven themselves not of the majority (well). Not all deserved to be treated as though they do not deserve to return to normal life, and once they do resume a sense of normalcy in life, do not deserve to be put in positions where they have to explain themselves, to subject them to punishments, that's the Catch 22, be sued, and be quiet, and if you say anything, be punished, and if punished, that's how others are protected, so that when you are not pleasing them all, that provides a solution of those who are not in agreement with you or your wellness, prove you wrong, until they have something on record that they can put you in for, to them, that's winning in life, having someone to blame, and someone's character to attack. You have two choices once you get well, to explain yourself, or to ask for forgiveness, if either condition puts you at further odds with others, than do your best to consult an attorney and not fall prey to those who do not believe in you, further justify your suffering and hardships in life, as a result of your own merits, not a result of the limited opportunities for you in life to achieve, and earn a living, the more you can convince others that your opportunities are limited, the more difficult it becomes to realize your potential had you not been punished, or been marginalized by others, giving power to those in the past, who thought less of you, and making everything you've done since worthless, that's how your self-esteem gets affected, feeling powerless and helpless, and no one cares, that's because you allowed others to think that you were a representative of others in the past, and that because you poorly represented others, based upon how you looked or by use of substances or alcohol, that you deserved to be corrected and ridiculed then, as you grew. -The minute I say anything that remotely sounds suicidal, everyone becomes convinced that I am suicidal, and the moment that everyone becomes convinced about whether or not I'm suicidal if I word anything in the negative such as "contemplate life" then they believe you are, and if they believe you are suicidal, then they think you bear guilt, and if they think that you are suicidal because you bear guilt, then they want to know for what reasons you are suicidal, and if they can figure out why you were suicidal in the past, for poor judgments of you held assumed, then they can say that you did this this and that to reverse poor judgments of you why you went to law school, and for selfish reasons not to help others, then that justifies their dislike for you or no caring whether you live or die. That makes sense, but that does not help you, or your position, not all suicides are alike, and not everyone who is suicidal is guilty of anything, sometimes self-worth has more to do with how someone feels about themselves, how they think, what they think others are thinking, and if enough isolation occurs, and if drinking, then it all adds up, self-harm, can only cause you further damage in life, if you cannot figure out what's going wrong in life for you, then get help, don't every play to masses if your own house is not in order, and don't ever worry about image until it actually matters, your health comes first, and like me don't have discussions unless that's how you're feeling, and if you're feeling that way ask yourself, is it for selfish reasons, is it in defense of oneself, is it because of an acquired disposition, have I done something wrong, has something wrong been done to me, and am I being treated fairly by others, or without an opportunity to be heard or to explain oneself, these are moments when you cannot lose faith in yourself, once everyone has lost faith in you, and the moment you realize that no one can take your power away, whether or not others believe in you, is the moment you become that much more stronger, no longer justifiably treated as a offender until you commit suicide and no longer enabling others to stack your cards up in life, as a bad set, so that in the event you do commit suicide it's justified by your own misconduct so that no one cares about you, as though you've lost friends because you've done something wrong to hurt them, as though their silent treatment of you was deserved, as though all friends are the same, that's not the case, I isolated by choice, I studied hard by choice, I disassociated by choice, that was not as punishment defriended, or because I had done anything wrong defriended, that was my choice.

#AAS20 Paper – Statement

Re: Health Equity and Suicide Prevention

By: Leslie A. Fischman

Submitted 10-30-19

Statement:

Although Behavioral Health Equity has been defined to protect the following groups those with mental health and substance use conditions and disorders, it does not account for all those who have been affected by this debilitating disease. In terms of Health Equity, it has been advocated that “reducing and ultimately eliminating disparities in health and its determinants” with ultimately protect those who have been “adversely affect[ed] [and] excluded or marginalized.” [1] That means that “everyone has a fair and just opportunity to be as healthy as possible.” [2] That means as a service to all, what is required is more than mere advocacy for those immediately affected by suicide, but also to secondary victims of suicide who may also be affected, due to these losses. The bigger the problem, the more clear it becomes that a careful balance be maintained between punishing those who have suffered due to their own merits, get the help that they need, and not wasting precious resources responsible for helping to maintain the balance between care and punishment. Recovery is a process. And much like recovery from substance use disorders takes time, so does healing from the aftermath of suicide. When someone important dies due to suicide, who advocates for the best interests of those suffering from mental health issues, we ask ourselves, why? How could someone who is an advocate to the community, be to blame for their own suicide, which brings into question, social responsibility, how much of the fault of suicide, goes to society, and how much of the fault of suicide goes to the person who commits suicide. We have been trained under the false premise that it is the fault of the person who commits suicide and that it is a selfish act on their part, we are trained to think similarly that substance use disorders are a selfish means for coping too. At what point do we all accept the conditions as they are, and start providing resources to those in need, in which they are not blamed for their troubles, and so that blame does not further perpetuate the need to prove existing, yes we know that you are not feeling well, and while we may also not be happy with the present conditions facing our Country, we do not likewise act on those feelings and cause harm to ourselves or to others. How do we normalize feelings associated with those who use and abuse substances and self-harm, or become suicidal, without enabling them to do so, and turn a blind eye to those conditions, it has been said that “Inequities are created when barriers prevent individuals and communities from accessing these conditions and reaching their full potential.” [3] If everyone’s full potential is living in good health, then how can we define poor health, without further marginalizing those groups in society, from functioning as normal, even if they cannot achieve the same level of wellness as those around them, the solution lies in social acceptance, but from an educated stand point, how to deter others from paths which may lead them to causing more harm than good to themselves, and their relationships, which may prevent them from opportunities for wellness in the future, how can we instead empower people to believe in themselves, and that if they do their best, take meds as directed, and seek treatment, that they too can recover from what’s ailing them, and not become optionless. Health Equity to me means not leaving those who are suffering without options, it means affording those in need with opportunities, to achieve, and to better themselves, without affecting those in their immediate surroundings, it means being able to live life, free from interference from those who are doing well, not judging those because of their disabilities in life, and continue to turn victims into survivors, and continue to empower those who are well, without worry for the future of their well being, even if they are affected by the health of others, personally, recognize that what bothers one may bother all, and just because something is bothering you, does not mean that that bothersome condition was caused by those who’s health has failed them, not be limited by our fears for our own health, and out of fear limit the abilities of those who are not well from getting better.

How Do You Self-Identify ...

Self-Identification should never be for building better acceptances of you in life, but it doesn't hurt to mention your handicaps in life, or disabilities. Don't expect to be met with acceptance from others, in fact the opposite occurs, a questioning of your motivations in life, and whether its to your advantage to state which causes you have been affected by, to appear on trend with whats currently going on in the world. No one chooses to be bipolar and put on medications, and no ones chooses to become suicidal, and experience low self-worth. These are all things that can be overcome. Whether that's a hazardous background of misfortune to your reader, then its their choice to read and to follow, at their own risk, while passing negative judgment upon you, its not their acceptances in life, you should strive to achieve for in life, there's no necessity to proving anyone wrong, when it comes to being successful, you either are accepted upon a knowing of you, and seeing you now, or you're not. The internet is not a friendly world, and there's a lot of competition, more exposure doesn't necessarily bring you a larger following, it is possible to maintain your privacies in life, and share only a little bit about yourself, where you've been, and where you're headed in life. I guess the question they're wondering is ... why do people like her, and what about her, is drawing attentions to her, and if she has had a past she's not proud of then why does she deserve to be where she is now, popular online. It's not an attractive condition to be in, one in which someone self-harms or becomes suicidal, and no it's not a trend, that if one becomes suicidal that others by exposure to them will become suicidal, it's a chemical imbalance treated by meds, and no I prefer not to be known for attempting suicide 2009 prior to attending law school, which was mostly about drinking alcohol, and needing to abstain from drinking all together. Not everyone can handle the pressures of success in life, let alone, worry about social acceptances, and if you add mental health issues to the equation, it makes it even more difficult to balance care for oneself and care for others in a way, that one if not doing well or appearing well, will not be blamed for the discomforts of others around them, as though all of a sudden their stability requires you to be well personally, and that your bad day affects their well being, absent your presence in their life online or in person. If you're not well you stay home, online, a different requirement is expected of you, to be honest, about your condition, why? This is not a meditation space, and you're free to go wherever your heart directs you to spend time and focus, it's okay to let go, especially from those individuals that you do not trust, and who no matter what memberships or jobs they have had, choose not to trust them. You cannot fake it til you make it in law, you either are well and get hired for jobs working for the government, or you are not well, and cannot work for the government, it's not a condition you can fake wellness, and the fitness required to provide advocacy to others during times of need, especially working with sensitive populations in the field of advocacy, which is my background, prior to attending an LL.M. Masters in Law Program studying Financial Compliance and Risk Management. -Just because any one person does not believe in you, does not mean stop believing in yourself. Just because anyone person does not think you are deserving of an income, and to provide yourself, don't stop applying. Just because any one person thinks that your time online was worthless or of no help to society or the betterment of all, don't stop writing. And just because your presentation is not acceptable to those you seek acceptances from don't stop building. There is always more that you can do to be a more stable professional online, and there is always more that you can do, to prove yourself worthy of acceptances from all, the only thing that you are not entitled to express any grievances suffered as a result of the hardships you have endured by lack of acceptances in life, it's that feeling of blame that gets thrown back at you in life, it's better not to even get started explaining, your dispositions in life, previously, if those feelings have already passed and people have moved on. It's obvious that where I am now, is much different than where I was, and it's obvious that my condition can still worsen if I do not take good care of myself, can become suicidal again, it's not a fun position to be in in life, one in which others feel the necessity to blame you, as though you're a public figure responsible for micro-managing the health and wellness of the audience exposed to me, they're around, but ultimately it's the choices they make in life, that establish their sense of self, irrespective of what I have been through in life, only sharing my story to set boundaries with others, as to care, choose not to care, but I have no choice but to care for myself, and if I allowed those negative opinions of me to take hold, then yes I would have ended my life, and given up in life, not continued to apply to jobs, apply myself, finish law school, and write books, and be contacted by editors, approving of my work. And no being punished does not make me any more or less stronger than others who have died by suicide, or have given me some sort of a combative edge in life, where I don't care what people think, of course I care what people think, I'm a thinker myself, I'm a worrier, I study hard, I work hard, I'm detail oriented, I'm a perfectionist, I have been elected to positions, I have lead sports teams, I have gotten jobs in DC, I was hired to be a Victim Advocate in Boulder, none of these jobs would have accepted me if I were an addict or alcoholic, it's because I abstained from drinking and drug use, I was able to function, focus, and achieve, be presentable, I was in no way shape or form then, as I am now, but if I convince myself that I am disabled with bipolar, the depression will hit, I will contemplate life, and I'll be another hopeless and helpless case of addiction, alcoholism, and failure, and that's not who I am. I am like most people, sensitive, caring, and yes I do take the initiative if no one has yet to say something and raise my hand just like I did in school growing up, and ask for help, ask for approvals, send my information, make requests, make phone calls to FEMA, and do everything I can to be a better person and advocate online, no I don't think I deserve a record, but that time has passed and I get expunged next year, it's been a very difficult 7 years, when you are lifted high, remember those moments in life, and when you get knocked down to the point of no return, then figure out what you need to do to survive daily, that doesn't interfere with the health or happiness of others around you, that would be the only way to live life there forward, constantly thinking about what other people think, and doing your best to avoid trouble in life. If you can't get a job in the real world, then no you have no choice but to be a writer, is that my dream? Yes that is my dream and to finish law school. Is this a weighing conversation? No not to the reader, because probably less than 2% of my audience has been incarcerated, after attempting suicide and going to two law schools. No I'm not your average case of someone who has been punished, I'm not like successful people, I've never earned a paycheck over $8/hr. I deserve to write, I deserve to work, and if it matters to anyone else it matters to me, that's a given. You can only focus on so many things at a time, everyone's health comes first before forgiveness, everyone's health comes first before friendship, and everyone's health comes first before love. Those are all acceptances in life, the time of others, that you are not entitled to that's their choice in life, how they choose to spend their time, and who they choose to spend their time with. It's not earned, deserved, or upon being perfect, expected to work out, that's life (impossible to manage but easy to live once you have everything you need). #beorganized #staypositive #beproudoyourself

The time is now ...

10/27/2019

Here's my pitch ... There comes a point in time in everyone's writing career, once they've identified themselves as a writer or blogger, to give back to their communities and fans. This is why I want to be a blogging platform one day, to help distribute courses and blogs that stand out in the online community, and who are doing their best to be of service to others in the writing and blogging communities to which they are apart of. This would require taking a web development course at General Assembly, to learn the front-end web development fundamentals of re-blogging and distributing work online, what the parameters are to sharing the work of others. Like everything shared, citations and permissions are required to promote the work of others. It wouldn't be for a fee, but as a community service, to the online world, to assemble a site, that helps new and old bloggers, find writing communities online to share their work, and courses to take, that have helped others like them, find their way along their writing journeys online. In today's day and age we are bombarded with options online, being marketed to, while marketing ourselves online. A lot of time and energy could be saved if we just knew more about blogging and distributing our work online. It's not easy to get likes and to get followers, but there is a strategy to obtaining the look you need that represents who you are as a writer, your stats should match your profile numbers too, that seems to be one problem I have experienced as a writer online -nothing quite added up to how I want to appear online. A lot of work goes into blogging and building a website, but there could be an easier way of sharing our work online, if we just knew where to go, and which widgets to add to our sites. You learn overtime how to better serve your audience and how to better represent yourself online, as time goes on, it takes awhile to develop your identity online, and be a recognizable figure to others in the writing, and blogging world, it's not easy to stand out and get paid. To be accepted to most partner networks, you have to be presentable. Not just likeable, presentable, it's not all about getting your numbers up, how much do you know about how your blog works? That's where courses come into play, to be a good blogger, you have to continue to educate yourself on the profession, bettering your writing skills, content, and appearance online, on the front end, and the back end, in terms of website scores, are you ready to be promoted & hired? If not, then you've come to the right place. We are in dire need of a place to get started when it comes to blogging, and that's the type of service online I would like to create for bloggers.

Blogging Basics ...

10/26/2019

[1] Purpose

What is your purpose? Every blog, has a theme, a specialty, whats that one quality that sets you apart from other bloggers? Besides being on weebly.com, my blog is not like most blogs, building everything from scratch, there are no built-ins or plans, just themes, the rest is up to me, to fill those spaces with content, which took a few years, a lot of hard work to sustain a following, without as much feedback as I would like. Thanks to blogpros.com, I now receive likes, but that hasn't always been the case. When is a good time to promote your work. There are many phases to your personal development online, and one thing to keep track of is your personal progress, not just your professional writing abilities. Although your popularity may change overtime online, depending upon how much work you put into your blog, we hope that it will all add up. Who is in your network? Is it just you and your followers, or are other professionals keep tabs on you, that's up to you, to message with and get to know others in your genre's community, although it's important to make connections in life, what's more important is being prepared when those opportunities to connect arise. Are you presentable, are you proud of your work online, and how much further do you have to go to pitch your final work product to your audience and other professionals willing to work with you to help you hone in on your abilities and perfect your craft. That time has finally arrived in my writing career, although at times I may have seemed disorganized, and not put together, I always produced new material, and if I couldn't write, I was working on myself, bettering myself, whether it be through running or therapy, it's never too late to work on your mind, your mind is what writes, and its stability that's required of you to present yourself to the world and be accepted by all, that's now just knowing your story, its having faith that no matter how your story turns out, something can be learned from your experiences, to me that's good advocacy.

[2] Organization

With the best of the best online, it can be intimidating to start your journey as a writer online, the tendency is to keep your best work off line, I did the exact opposite. I put my best work online. There are a few setbacks to that approach to introducing yourself to the world, the material won't be fresh for a book, and you'll have to come up with new material for any future finished projects, respectful of those who do follow close, not subjecting them to reading anything twice, I'm sure there are rules to this process of publishing, and that's probably one reason why, no even you can copy your own work, that would be unorthodox. A benefit to publishing your work, early on, is that you do get feedback from your audience, which helps keep you motivated along your journey to final draft publication of your work, a little positive incentive goes a long way, we can't all be confident behind closed doors, and take too many gambles when it comes to how we get published, entrust our publishers with that fee we pay, and hope everything turns out right, I'm very cautious, for some reason I wanted to know whether my book would do well, before publishing my book, I now know it will be worth it to publish professionally, not on my own self-publish, and can save time and energy worrying about pitching to an agent to get published by a fancy publishing company, I'm sure that time will come, I'm still learning myself. -Stay positive? The good thing about building a foundation for your future writing online, is that you have somewhere to start from in the future, it's the getting started part that is the toughest climb, establishing yourself online as an author, without a book in hand to show that you can finish the task, which is why I assembled my first book on my own, and printed my 1st manuscript with lulu.com, hashtags and all, that was fun.

[3] Settings

How your website looks matters! Fill it up, or be a minimalist. It depends on what matters to you, half the banners and pictures, and borders on your website, are just decoration for google and your website's platform to keep track for analytics and statistical purposes, usually your audience wants to see your work, not the work of others, but it never hurts to refer your audience to those who have and are helping you along the way, just don't link them away from your work, if you're going to add links to your website, make sure you do so, with permissions from others, notification to others, and always reference works cited to, and be courteous to those you have been influenced by, it's not all about you, it's about establishing yourself within a network of professionals online, and standing out as someone who is unique and important among the professionals you work with, don't bring everyone else down with you, and don't try to lift anyone else up, if you're doing well, do so, because as a professional you are required to disclose those links, and by being professional about how you cite, the relationships and the connections will build themselves from your work, you don't have to go out there and get connected, there's a manual way of doing so, it's called link building, and applying for links and approvals from others, that's how you market yourself, and help market those who believe in you, and who you equally admire and respect. That's how trust is built online, be a reliable source. The more reliable you are, proven by contributing to your blog daily, the more likely others will be to follow, content should always be written based from where you are now, and the benefit of writing from where you are now, illustrates to others, you have room to grow.

[4] Life Philosophy

What do you believe in? It's hard to share your influences in life. Don't get snarky about inside jokes, about whos whos and be defensive once your likeness gets compared with others in the professional world, you will always be compared to who is there first, and that's one reason why people don't get started in the first place. Who wants to be compared the best anyways, and not appreciated for their work ethic, we all work hard, it's not that we as bloggers are trying to be like those who are famous in other professions for their strengths, but that we are presenting our best work online via writing and selfies, to show that this is our best, and we are loving ourselves anyways in spite of not being as successful as or like those who are very successful in their respective industries. It can be demeaning to those who aren't into blogging to be big, or not writing to be a star, or not blogging to write a book, it's not predictable the route to which each person takes to achieve success in life, and if you are constantly comparing people, you are not allowing them to blossom, and not giving them an opportunity to grow.

[5] Standards

Always set high standards for yourself, everyone says this, but why? When you set standards for yourself, whether self-taught, or coached in conferences, by other professionals in the work force, who have more experience than you when it comes to writing and publishing listen, you are after all only a rookie writer/blogger and selfie queen, theres more to marketing than simply sharing a lifestyle online or level of intelligence online, that you have been able to achieve, and highlight your strengths online, to get jobs in life, be presentable, and respected, known in whatever community you find yourself in, self-identified “blogger.” Its not hip to blog, it seems hip, but there are no events for bloggers, that you don’t have to apply to attend, and there is no red carpet for those in the blogging community once they’ve achieved a following, to meet others who have found success in the blogging profession. Its not a dying profession, it’s a growing profession, we just don’t know where to go, neither while trying to achieve success and a following and no where to go once we get to the top, leaving many of us feeling like we’re ready to move on, whats next. Have a plan, and don’t give up, even if youre not making money, monetization does not equal success, you have to be ready to monetize when the time comes, and to get into any monetization program, you have to be presentable online, have a finished product or basic stencil as blogger meaning your identity is all in numbers to the organizations you apply to, and by that number, and based upon looking at your website can affiliate, or get partnerships, and start earning an income blogging, that’s the standard you will eventually have to ascribe to earn a wage, do so when youre ready, its important to keep track of industry standards, if you plan to one day be known professionally.

[6] Education

Your education matters, and if youre a student blogger, as are most, you have to separate the time it takes to be a successful student, as you grow your blog online, and community of followers. Youre following would feel bad if you didn’t achieve in life, and only blogged, don’t give up in other areas of your life, just to earn a following, or be popular, being well liked is hardly a useful trait to have, unless you have something going for you in life, that justifies why others are attracted to you online. Stick up for yourself, no one ever became wildly famous, for knowing anyone famous, that’s not how fame happens, fame is the ability to get the attention of others and to keep the attention of others, theres an overall feeling you get from those people, that shine, they stand out, because they have worked hard to stand out, and there are special qualities about them that make them stand out, and that’s why they are famous, and why others admire them, because they are strong, and no matter what happens in life, they are able to perform, and presentable at all times, they know what to fix how to fix it and still stand tall, they aren’t egotistical or worried what others think, they are sensitive perfectionists, who glow for one reason and one reason only, they take good care of themselves and others.

Getting the Blues at 5:50pm ...

10/25/2019

Today we pray for those who are still suffering, from fires, gun violence, and suicide. Hard to say, no theres no manual for caring. Its not always obvious, to share your condolences out loud, but as a public speaker, its expected of you. No its not selfish to say you've been affected, just don't go nuts, campaigning online, and rubbing in the issues, with hashtags, some things are better left unsaid, left to the professionals to decipher, pick apart, and provide aide and assistance for. You cannot be an emotionally sound backbone to the well being and thoughts of the reader, until you yourself reach a point of stability, no I didn't drive to Orange County and flee the smoke filled skies, I went to work, its hot everywhere, that's besides the point. What can you do to put yourself more at ease in life, when youre on the brink of feeling overwhelmed, and that sudden fear, wraps itself up and turns in to a headache that freezes you, I was not able to stop myself from freezing today, but I can still manage to put myself in a good mood, after a bad day, a bad year, and a few bad decisions in life, pick myself up "from the boot straps" is as the saying goes, and not bother too many people with "@"(s) in life, and keep my life and my problems separate from public view, and become a professional. For some reason I got stuck between school and having a career, thankfully there are internships, for those of us who are trying to establish ourselves professionally, prove we are reliable candidates, fit to be employees in the work force, or you can stay home and file for disability and get a check each month, I never allow that full year to add itself up, and at some point, towards the end, I throw my hands up in the air, and say fine, I'm not where I want to be in life, not the perfect package presentable but Im gonna go ahead and apply, no matter what I look like, no matter what I sound like, and whether or not I have finished the project Im currently working on, or have a project at all ready to be presented, we're not all award ceremony prepared, commercial, and that's okay, if we all fit perfectly into the boxes that we were forced to fit into, life would be jumping around a series of hoops and laser beams to fit in anywhere at this time, all those perfect spaces have been filled, where there are vacancies in life of acceptance is for people who want to do all the work themselves, like me, and rely less on upon the confines of structured lessons in healing, and stay true to my instincts and what feels good, not ready for this youre ready for that, not ready for this, but ready for that, it seems we are never fully prepared in the event even if a good opportunity arises, just get started, love yourself, and if you have done your best thus far, than expect and have faith that you can adjust your settings, to the settings required of you, when you get there, just make sure what youre doing now is done well, and with heart. Stay positive, you cant get anywhere fast, nor please anyone, negative.

When Voices Hurt ...

The voices you hear, absent the presence of others, are your own, always remind yourself of that. I can only speak from personal experience, that's where I coming from, not to recommend experimenting with your own reasoning abilities. Theres nothing more weighing in life, than not feeling able, and feeling disabled by negative voices toward you, whether in the form of laughter or taunting no one likes to not be taken seriously, and intimidated in life, its not necessary for one to flap their wings, or hold their heads high to be treated as human or capable of achieving the same confidences in life, without appearing as though they deserve to be treated with respect. You cant run of negatives, and likewise any negativity leading up to self-harming behaviors is likely the cause of your inability to be a positive decision maker for yourself, don't allow voices to hurt your sense of self or persuade you you are something that you are not, that's where acceptance comes in to play, accepting yourself as you are, and being in acceptance of all voices, whether or not they are positive toward you, and whether or not they are trying to trigger you to see if you flip out and become suicidal or self-harm, don't let them win, why its important to call 911, whenever you feel as though you are in harms way, being quiet and on meds, only subjects you to poor judgment by others, who think not knowing you but based upon what they hear about you when you were not well, and figuring into the equation that you have a record think its in their best interests when they do not feel comfortable talking to you or knowing you, to claim victim to your disposition in life, that's not in your control how others feel toward you or around you, don't allow the negative judgments of others, or lack of love, care, or companionship to make you feel less than, or worthy of recovering from your injuries in life, that's not in your control what other people think or based upon how others people feel about you, feel less then, that's not others thinking they are better than you, which is probably the case most of the time, that's just you being insecure, if letting them win results in feeling worse off then talk to someone about how you are feeling, don't allow those feelings to sit, and if someone thinks that you don't deserve this or that then they don't know or understand what you have been through and how difficult it has been for you to live life and achieve again, all lives are worth living, and no one has the authority to hurt you or to persuade others to think less of you, who are they to judge you, if you have no one but a few people in your life, and if they are not in your life presently, then they have no authority to cause you even graver hardship than you are already in, simply because they don't think you deserve to live a good life, hurt your record. Ive been suicidal in the past, and Ive been overwhelmed in life over failures, but no amount of insult or embarrassment has hurt more, than being someone respected by everyone, and getting jobs, because I worked hard in school to get into law school and to get hired, and to have your life be ruined, because you have mental health issues, how to live life after everything you have worked hard for is gone, that's difficult, especially if you have already suffered from depression, its not fair to be put worse off in life than you already are, and not be given the opportunity to get well, and once you start doing well, be hurt by others, because they think you are siding with the wrong teams in life, or seem like someone they can identify as having bad characteristics or traits, [it can feel like] that's not a life worth living one in which you are judged in the negative by others, [but you have to stay positive]. [Is it really] not a life worth living, one in which you are not accepted by others, [at what point do the negative tangents stop, the point at which others take offense to your feelings as though their feelings matter more than your own, whos making who suicidal? I think Ive suffered enough hardship over the years, self-harming which makes things impossible to fix if not leaves you worse off in life, in and out of the hospital, further from social acceptance, and being the well adjusted professional you hoped to be in life]. [Is] tha[t] not a life worth living without anyone in your life [of course not], and in spite of that all I kept living life. #stopsuicide. Eventually the voices quiet, you learn to handle rejections in life, in stride, and no one gets the best of you, and even when others are hostile or express anger or rage toward you, you become unaffected by the negative judgements toward you or voices taunting you questioning your character or how you should live your life, whether you live life in a good way, or whether the way you live your life causes harm to others, Id rather be dead. When you have done everything you can, to help others, and when that privilege is taken away from you, you have to keep moving forward (ie working for the Government in the helping professions) why I work in film now. I went to so much law school and have the opportunity to get a PhD in Law after I finish my LLM, and no law firms will hire me because I have not worked while on probation and because I have not worked, cannot get hired to a law firm now. That's a very painful experience, to be trusted, and suddenly be treated as someone else. Lifes not fair, but you have to keep moving forward, I would never pretend I am something I am not, and always do my best to get help when help is needed, I have been hospitalized now 9x, and will continue to do my best, it seems no matter what meds I am on, its never good enough, they always want better from me, or Im never in a strong enough condition to be fully accepted by others, the moment you give up in life, not only do you let yourself down, but you miss out on future opportunities to meet people who will accept you the way you are, don't allow any poor judgments of you to keep you from making a full recovery in life. You get punished, and corrected when needed, but its not necessary to fix yourself to make others happy, especially when they don't care or see you as someone who is unimportant, trash, less than, or someone not deserving of equal treatment in life. Its your job to live life, its not that you shouldn't care, then they will say theyre insensitive or they think theyre above others or they think they are bigger than they are or shes this shes that the list goes on, its who you don't hear from that causes you worry, I know this Ive been in relationships, the silent treatment hurts and never feels completely deserved, for whatever reasons others stop talking to you, or in less frequency than is usual, don't be alarmed by their lack of enthusiasm to see you or spend time with you hear from you or reply to you, everyone has lives of their own, and as you get older and mature in life, you take things less personally, it becomes less about you, have compassion for yourself, you've come a long way, and if it helps to separate yourself from whats not making you feel good about yourself or your progress its okay to be alone, but never give up, its okay to try again, the more comfortable you are with yourself, the easier it will be to be around others. [No Im not suicidal, yes I have a boyfriend, and no Im not gay, yes Im sober (2014), I only take prescribed meds, and no I do not have friends, only a sponsor for the time being, it has been this way for 7 years, live alone, alone always. Im fine, thats why Im a writer, and blog, and made an at home job for myself. cc: #LAPD who fingerprinted me, I applied to be a volunteer for them, left the application process to work in Film, finish my Dissertation, will graduate February 2020, and working on a book. No matter how much success you achieve, everything can be lost, the minute you allow negativity to get the best of you, freeze, and engage in self-harming behaviors, dont let them hurt you and always prove them wrong, suicide is not the solution it only let them win, dont be another sad story, dont feel sorry for yourself, and like me, do your best!]

The Pink Cloud ...

10/23/2019

Don't get too ahead of yourself once you start feeling better, chances are not everyone else will be on the same page as you health wise, having realized the same potentials for themselves, life after all is and always will be a competition, hopefully not for resources and mates in life, or in terms of wellness, see ourselves as better off in that way. Then from what measures should we establish our own self-worth, is it okay to compare yourself to others, not when it comes to your health, you know yourself best, and your best may not be the same as anyone else's best. Not when it comes to weight, fitness, career, relationships, friendships, the list goes on, we always tend to think in terms of what people have that we don't have that usually leaves us feeling less than in life, and for those who do have it all, by comparing ourselves to those who are more well off in life, how far away we feel from achieving the same financial comforts in life, that may or may not ever happen for us in life, however once in a blue moon, there are those who rise to the occasion of success, and for those who have managed to stay well throughout the years, support their wellness in life, whether you agree they deserve to be successful or not, and whether you think that you deserve to be happy left wondering why others made it so far in life, and you got left behind, not all lives were built from the same foundations, principles, education, and values, you were taught what you were taught, I was thinking the other day, so that you could manage on your own one day and work, have a life, I was thinking are those who are most independent now, the ones who listened to their parents, and did not make as many mistakes in life, because they listened to their parents whether or not they understood why? I listen, for the most part achieved when I was supposed to achieve in life, but the few moments when I rebelled and drank, my life has never fallen apart faster than 2006 and 2013, the two worst years of my life, learn to move on, that is good advice, it sounds simple and cold, but true. Sometimes you don't realize your own self-worth until its too late, until your image has been tainted by something past or by some negative opinion of you or interpretation of your life, that you have lived thus far, its for no one to judge someone who suffers, but if its someone who is suffering from their own faults, the colder they get, that's pretty much an invitation for them not to care, if you can be designated as at fault for your own failures or circumstances in life, and when left with no one, who is there for you besides family to help you back up, you, and who restores that faith and belief back in yourself once you have lost the ability to move forward, by listening and by appreciating whats around you, and where you are now no matter where you start, no matter who thinks what about you or whom, that's time for you to focus on life skills, that's beyond self-care which seems like a fancy way of saying life skills, without all the touching inferred from that slogan. - Some people need a little love, and some people need a lot of love to feel better and reassured in life, that everything will be okay, that they are on the right course in life, and that they are doing the right thing, if you don't know the difference between right and wrong, then at least be a good human being considerate of everyone around you, not interfere with the peace among others, no matter how lost you get in life, no matter how many failures you endure, you can recover, but you cannot recover from hardships if you do not make a conscious decision to be a good person to yourself and especially to others, that's the ticket back to social acceptance. When you take calmer approach to life on meds, and stop blaming yourself and others, and stop hurting over the past, or hurting yourself thinking about only the things that bother you, you free up space and time in your life to be of value, service to others, and if and when forgiveness arrives, you too will be able to experience happiness in life, one privilege at a time, never give up.

How You Feel Now (v). How You Felt Then

10/22/2019

Always give time to allow the dust to settle, sometimes how you're feeling now, if in a better place, could've set yourself worse off in life, had you reacted or responded poorly to others, don't misrepresent yourself in life, be easily disturbed by others lack of ability to maintain their inner peace and misdirected anger toward you, that's why they say that when people are being negative or hard on you, that its much to do with their own feelings about themselves ie a reflection of their own well being, that is their viewpoint, and that based upon their knowledge and experiences in life, have corrected you, whether that's out of genuine care for your well being, or simply to protect their own best interests, the system of who cares will never cease to exist, and so long as our daily conditions can be improved by self love self care self worth unless you are showing those qualities characteristics or traits, expect to be corrected by others, seek instead to improve upon your best, rather than rely on acceptances from others there forward once anyone has expressed a disinterest in you or unhappy with your current condition. Not everyone will understand mental health issues, often times humor is off timing is off, and when we are not able to make ourselves feel better, chances are we will be less than successful at making anyone else feel better, that's a false belief, that sources of happiness lie outside of you and that to make oneself happy that one needs to be around, engage with others, to feel whole, with or without social media with or without friends, one should be positive, have some sense of a how to live life, mastered all the life skills required of you to succeed in life, and be able to work, but not all can manage that lifestyle, some have disabilities, whether hidden obvious or suppressed, sometimes no amount of education can correct the standards of acceptance from those who disapprove of you, that doesn't mean that you will not be successful or that you will not be able to achieve, just as some are rejected from jobs and find work elsewhere, there is a place for everyone in life, that I believe, that everyone deserves to belong somewhere, and if they cannot figure out where they belong, that they will be directed by the most trusted sources ie LAPD or Hospitals, it is mostly for them to decide who is ready to integrate, who is ready to work, who is ready to be around others, who is able, the rest of the opinions we hold as to the beauty makeup presentation of others physical wellness and intelligences is pure opinion, important some days to think about and other days would be a waste of energy to sit and ruminate or talk about think of, we all have priorities in life, not everyday will be the same, set your standards according to what makes you feel whole and worth it in life, we cannot all afford the costs of being put on display, or looking the part, live up to the standards you set set for yourself and once you achieve a sense of inner harmony within yourself, happy with where you have found yourself in life, then allow yourself to blossom at your own pace, not revert back to old standards of wellness, which may or may not apply by todays standards and given the times, be inapplicable to what is current thinking. You happiness all depends on how much are you willing to let go of in life, and how much do you need to hold on to, to validate your feelings in life, how important are your feelings to you? And is it necessary that those feelings be validated by others or shared to validate what you think, to know that you are heard, and that by being heard you will have achieved the acceptance from others or exposure necessary to feel as though you have made a difference? Something to think about, after reviewing Facebook's policies, a lot of terms struck a chord with me after reviewing my work, a lot of embarrassing fears were shared, that Im sure were not helpful to those in need of stability at certain times, Im sorry that my posts were not as reassuring as they could have been then, had I had more faith in myself, to stick to my structured forms of education, and not relied too heavily on mixed media as a benchmark for topics of interests, never forget to stay in tune with you gut instincts, and don't be led astray by anything you read, everyone deserves the right to be a critical thinker and reader, that's basic education and understanding. -Give people time to improve if they are new, and cheer on your favorites in life, stick to those whos voice of reason and advices helps you to achieve and maintain your inner sense of peace, its hard to find, its okay to be picky, and always with a grain of salt, interpret the advices of others, always keeping in mind, that what they have to say is a reflection of themselves, not necessarily anything you need to take to heart. #stopbullying

Overcoming Self-Doubt ...

The years almost over, its time to get back into gear and finish the year strong. -Still battling your demons and stuck in a rut? Well then you've come to the right place. In fact a "20 minute" [1] dose of positivity has been shown to not only lift you out a bad mood, but to help you to pause, revisit your thoughts in a positive way, and stop the distorted viewpoint that your helpless, leaving things feeling more difficult than you can bear or overcome, a lot of problems cannot be solved on our own, but writing them out helps, and by changing our thinking about our problems, through greater acceptance of ourselves, we grow. Note that "Self-doubt can be a troubling and persuasive voice that holds you back." [2] Its okay to pause to center yourself, meditate, and practice mindfulness techniques that get you out of negative thinking and worry for what others think, and build greater awareness that everyone is doing their best to live their lives just as you are doing your best to live your life, care, but not to the extent that you get stuck in fear, fear of rejections, or "stuck in inaction." [3] As you become more "level-headed" and upon reaching points of "clarity" [4] you'll realize how much time was wasted worrying, and suddenly feel how much time is before you to get done what needs to get done, to leave you feeling driven, focused, and of value -you're self-worth is very much dependent on your ability to feel worth it in life, and to be of value to others, you must first learn how to value yourself, and be able to function in no matter what condition youre in, some days we may feel inoperable, but that doesn't mean your condition is permanent, the less you convince yourself that youre helpless, the more hope you will have, and the more willing you are to reach out for help, the better able you will be to help yourself, and help others in the future get the help that they need, know that youre not alone, but don't get stuck comparing your wellness to the wellness of others that would be counterproductive to your self-growth which relies on you recognizing your weaknesses, and bettering your best not trying to be better than anyone else's best in life, competition rarely brings us joy, unless we are improving first for ourselves, not for accolade, or for acceptance from others, do better because you want to do better for you, and because as a better you, you will be able to take on more opportunities in life to help others in life, either by working or by other philanthropic endeavors, not all of us were built to help, you have to experience life before you can speak about it, and if you haven't lived through enough to have the clarity to speak about your troubles yet, then best not to mention your problems in public spaces, and run the risk of feeling rejected by the opinions of others (you think that others are thinking, but are really your negative thoughts you are thinking they are thinking).

4 Steps to Getting Organized as a Blogger ...

10/22/2019

Step One: Make a Page

It doesn't matter where you start, just start somewhere. Once you've made all your accounts, make sure to put links to all accounts on one page. There are many benefits to this approach. By creating a page that summarizes your work, you allow others to get to know you briefly, find your work, go back to your work, and know where to find you. The best places to start are Facebook, Instagram, and Twitter, these are the best sites to post links to your work, and allow others to keep up with your Digest of activities along the way. As you accomplish goals along the way, its also helpful to be able to go back and update any pages to reference your best work.

Step Two: Keep Track

It seems like every network these days requires you to have a profile page on their website, don't become too consumed with building yourself on each network, that can be overwhelming starting from scratch, getting followers, and getting likes. Just do the bare minimum to start, you never know what changes you'll make along the way, start by adding links to your profiles in other networks, where you are most established first. Remember to keep track of all your logins, either bookmarking pages to your computer, keeping track of passwords on google, there are many options besides handwriting in a notebook, all your progress (which is what I do). Some days can be overwhelming when youre first getting started, make sure that on days you are brainstorming, to write down all your ideas for posts, which you can go back to.

Step Three: Work on Building a Following

Getting followers takes patience, overtime as you become more established, writing online, then you can add followers by hashtagging and by joining blogging communities online, and replying to comment threads. Depending upon who you are, what your interests are, and what genre of blogging you practice, there are plenty of blogging categories to choose from, whether its fashion, books, writing, or just plain blogging, you'll be sure to find communities online that suit your interests, finding other bloggers like you. Just because you may think you have the perfect blog and deserve to have 20k followers, does not mean you will achieve that number of following. Be strategic, in how you post. The most followers I ever obtained blogging, was by re-blogging posts from Instagram to Facebook, it's a great option, for not only promoting your website via hashtags to Facebook & Instagram, but also helps you to introduce yourself to new bloggers, and re-introduce yourself to bloggers that know you, who overtime may follow you, if they know you, and check your website, upon recognizing you. -Privacy is a huge concern for most bloggers, wanting to separate their personal lives from their public lives, this is why separate pages and accounts are useful for your professional work, for example I created another Facebook Account, to manage all my Facebook Pages on, so that new followers are not linked back to my main account, and keep my friends hidden, so that they cannot be checked on, that's just as a courtesy to your friends, who may not want to be well known with you.

Step Four: Promote Your Blog

Does it matter what blogging platform you use? No. I started building my website on Weebly 2013, a no so well known platform, Wordpress is the most popular platform, and now Wix seems to be the new trend, -therefore it doesn't matter where you start, just start somewhere, you can always move to a new platform, when you're ready, or if you change your mind. Keep your material fresh and presentable, be yourself, but not at your expense, turn a crowd sour. It's important to stay positive, make no mentions of others, keep things general, and always be professional, that's with acknowledgement and understanding of the feelings of others, as you write, respecting the privacy of those around you, and always with permission share personal information out loud, if it relates to someone you know, or is about someone you know, don't hurt your relationships in real life, just because you love to blog, how quickly, a professional endeavor can be seen as addiction, blogging is not addictive, it's not an addiction, unless you keep improving, and figure out a way to monetize and promote yourself in ways that either help you get jobs or earn a living eventually, isn't that what most work-at-home bloggers dream of? Earning an income while blogging. Right now I am using blogpros.com to promote my posts, earning up to 300+ Likes per post, shared on multiple networks. -Eventually as you become recognized as a blogger online, you may be approached by others to guest post blog or take it upon yourself to request to be featured on blog boards for communities, this takes tact, and a readiness to write and give work away to credit another website with a link back to you. If you're not ready to represent others yet, and have difficulty letting go, writing for others, is not required, to build a following, I have been blogging for 4 years now and have not written one guest post blog yet, the first one will be written for: <https://theneedtolive.com/?aff=36>.

Look forward to my next post, good luck!

Overcoming Depression ...

10/20/2019

Running has been the primary means by which I have been able to feel good, good about myself, and set weekly goals for myself physically, that keep me feeling good. Im not sure whether that's the addict in me, that feels the need to run everyday, or just needing to feel accomplished each day. For some accomplishing goals fulfills the need to "just to feel valuable or worthy," [1] so that I can get the job I've always wanted or date someone who is proud of me and loves me just the way I am. Sure you can want all of these things in your life, but that doesn't mean that you will achieve all those blessings in life. Its not just by comparisons that we feel less than, no one can do their best when theyre constantly comparing themselves to others who have more than them in life. "It's easy for people who suffer with this awful inner sense of doubt to feel inadequate in a world saturated with so much achievement and self-promotion." [2] In fact "Studies show that limiting social media to approximately 30 minutes a day decreases depression." [3] One of the best ways to overcome depression is to "turn negative thoughts and feelings into more positive ones." [4] And its true, taking care of yourself, does help you not only to feel better, but helps you recognize what feeling sleep you going in life, and setting goals so that you can achieve feeling that way. Exercise and diet, sleep, feeling purpose driven, journaling, doing creative activities, listening to music, these are all examples of ways to take care of yourself, "create a list of small goals to achieve, [and] check them off as you accomplish them." [5] The more you recognize and appreciate whats around you, the more present you will be, and able to appreciate those moments of accomplishment in your life, do practice "thought stopping techniques" and "meditate to relax and refocus your thoughts." The Suicide Prevention March ...

10/20/2019

Ive been volunteering for Brady United since I left my job in Century City at Bag Fund Inc, [in other words I froze, whether by addictions, or failure to reapply for jobs, was left somewhere in between blogging]. At my previous job, before running a flyer campaign down Sunset Blvd, I was awarded a plack upon completing my internship, turned $12/hr job as an Airbnb Housekeeper to a 3 story house on Cashio, we hung out at on weekends after work, my Boss used to love to throw Clippers Parties, and we watched the Manny Pacquiao/Mayweather fight that year -when I met with the President of Brady Campaign she suggested doing something more general, and so I blogged under the hashtag #bloggingcampaign, which was later nominated for a Shorty Award "Best Integrated Campaign," losing to HBO. When I first got started I was a blogger on Twitter at the time, a quotes and fashion blogger, obviously was not equipped to compete with the best, but studied a few of them nonetheless, to learn the ropes about affiliate marketing, signed up for shopstyle, applied, and was approved, and also added my blogs to bloglovin, and was scouted by sassique.com on tumblr to join their fashion blogging network. My friend in NY had recommended Tumblr to start a blog over Thai in NY December 2015, with my cousin who now works in London. -Its difficult to make money online, but I suppose if you love to model and have a big enough following, posting a few links to outfits every now and then cant hurt to acquire those professional relationships in life, to further your career. Early on as a blogger, I was lacking purpose, which later changed, the more I decided to get involved and try volunteering for various organizations (i.e. Brady United, Moms Demand, and OFA) learning about how others have contributed to causes to which I felt personally affected by as a law student, and wanted to learn about what I could do to help (and built pages on Facebook, one page did very well my #dontdodrugs page). What have I learned? Its mostly by showing up, donating, and volunteering your time to be apart of that makes all the difference, that's your support group, whether their support was sufficient time enough to help you through those difficult years coping with the news, they were there when no one else was, that's a start, they seem to be tacking on additional campaigns to their primary agendas, as they have been similarly affected by suicide, via gun violence. Last year, I remember getting a text from a student on the board at #TeamEnough, as a law student, I felt super senior talking to a high school student, kind of reminds me of Kindergarten buddies in elementary school at Carlthorp School, and we were discussing what we do, and what our interests are, and when asked about my life, I had mentioned that mental health issues, were a big deal me, not just as I have experienced them, but felt that as a volunteer and while being concerned about gun violence, caring has had a dramatic effect on my mental health, that's beyond the pressure of school, work, and life skills issues (i.e laundry, affording the costs of living, paying medical bills), which has required me to not only be sober, but to be apart of, attend AA meetings at HIW, get a sponsor in West Hollywood (because I'm not brave enough to be Gay, my sponsor who is Bi, seems to be a perfect match for me). -Not everyone will support you, on your journey to care, especially for those of us who blog, thats reasonable for others to be concerned about your mental health, thinking if blogging is how you help others, and based upon your cares, that to blog is too risky in case something bad happens, its best not to be a source of support from which blames can be placed, as not being good enough, to add fuel to this dichotomy of so-called "risks" involved in caring, thats because they think you are not stable enough to take on the "risks" of caring for causes which may result in additional trauma, to you or others reading, thats understandable, know yourself, and when your ready, its okay to give back, and volunteer your time to help those who matter to you, thats what I think, its not a gamble to care, just be sure not to rehash subjects there must be some motivating layer of inner peace that keeps you going in life, not to counteract negativities, that would just be empowering the wrong sides in life, pay attention to the goods in life, not whats going wrong, if you want to make a positive difference, where is there a need, and provide it, if we are in a rush to help ourselves during times of turmoil, then go ahead and be a positive outlet online, whether its through writing or the arts, follow your passions in life.] Im sure Im not the only one who feels like 2013 to now was a blur, Im glad the fog is lifting now, I'm sad for those who are not here, able to experience the lifting of the fog, we all go through it, some symptoms of mental health issues I learned do not go away, just decrease in frequency with meds. Not every day is the same, there will be ups and downs ... some days I wonder if others feel like the day is long, or short, I hope someone is keeping track of our progress, Im pretty sure that's the beauty of blogging, looking back, and witnessing all the transitions you go through, like a bookshelf of experiences, you file away a piece of you one bit at a time, and low and behold a whole series of changes evolves in you, and you get to be apart of that positive change others experience having known you, and believing in you. Its hard to keep up with the times, there's so much to read, I have instead chose to free read, through this phase in life, and keep up less with whats on TV, Ive found that I have achieved more stability, keeping busy, than keeping track of everything current, its not a complete loss, but should do better job of keeping up with whos famous now, so many new faces, so many names, and I have no idea whos who, that would be something to learn considering that I am working in the film industry now, it would be good to know, the whos who of film, Im sure there are courses, beyond just the name game, connecting first and last names, that's all I know. -Today was interesting, we sat behind the Moms Demand booth, I used to volunteer for their leader, and bumped into someone from my home group in West Hollywood, and we all chatted with the booth next to us, a recovery center, who invited me to speak at H&I Panels, similarly UCLA had me sign an agreement and asked me if I would be willing to speak. I couldn't be more at peace right now, centered. Once you overcome the couldve, shouldve, wouldves, and stop beating yourself up over the past, you really begin to transform into a new person, feeling whole again, thats the beauty of change, it may happen slowly, but when you realize you have finally let go of what has been bothering you, its a really empowering experience to get your positive energy back, have faith. [In recent news a gunman was disarmed, I only pray that others similarly too can be persuaded not to follow through with their plans, and be stopped, thats why blogging is so important, when reality is amiss, where else does one go to keep up and get ideas, we are what we are exposed to online, if so, hopefully once those ideas are compiled, they lead to positive results, not negative ones. It seems as though we are constantly reminded to "never forget." Know that no matter where we go from here, those experiences will always be apart of us, let just pray for those who are still suffering that they will still be here for moments of peace.] -Beautiful turn out yesterday at #outofthedarkness, I'm glad I went. Thank you @afspnational "American Foundation for Suicide Prevention" and everyone for all that you do! #stopsuicide (Updated 10/20/19, Written 10/19/19).

My First 10 Mile Run ...

Some people, no one wants to be grouped among that statement, as though they are some kind of lesser species of human, not in the know, or within any inner circles of thoughts, or rumor, it seems that a shared understanding would be in ways that protect the integrity more so of those spoken about posing more risks to the character as read or looked at if youre the one speaking or telling an account from your life, it just so happens that it's the teller of stories, usually someone who is told not to play victim, if they complain or share a story to empower themselves, wind up empowering those spoken about and feeling less powerful, the exact opposite of their intentions which is to feel uplifted and to uplift others, via the sharing of their story, to someone who understands this concept, to see someone try and fail, is just that, obvious, but not in anyway empowering, instead as a whole, both sides should focus on the concepts being brought forward through the sharing of a story, and how to better the delivery of those concepts, maybe theres a better way, there usually is, in making a point, its only until after all is said and done, sometimes you wish you would have lived life differently, or done a better job overall, as an outline, taking action and making progress in life, but who does that outlines their goals in life, and accomplishes those goals in the exact order that they intend to achieve those goals in life, sometimes its not until failure, we become forced to set goals for ourselves, because we don't have any structure to our lives, because that damage to that part of our lives is irrecoverable, because those moments in time, cannot be corrected, and because no amount of rights can undo those wrongs or failures in life, to play victim, would just be throwing more energy into the wheel of power, giving and taking, losing, and winning, and ultimately finding ourselves drained once again, in the same ways we once tricked ourselves into feeling sick and convincing ourselves we were ill, as others were convinced that we were, be suddenly blame outside causes and conditions, for our present state if we are unhappy with where we are, and its that blaming of others that causes us to feel ill, and it's the playing victim while blaming others, that causes others to feel on edge around us, as though we are the ones not to be trusted, or as though we are the ones who are unstable not living life accordingly, and as a default to our own choices in life are suffering, physically, financially, emotionally, socially, academically, and professionally, how long will you allow that cycle of blame to continue before you allow yourself to move forward regardless whos fault it is that you became ill, you have to take responsibility for your choices, and the more bad choices you can eliminate from your life, the fewer opportunities for failure stand in the way from you recovering from those injuries in life, to your well being, image, and ability to improve, everyone deserves to help themselves in life, not all should be dependent upon others for all things worth living for, to some degree we have to want to live for ourselves, and if you so much hate yourselves for whatever reasons no one else cares about your hardships in life, than your care for your own well being should naturally keep you motivated in life, and whatever helps keep you going in life, if not for others, or with the support from others, eventually at some point, like in meditation your mind frees itself of thoughts, and when you are living, eventually, that dependency upon others is lifted and you are again just you in yourself, living for you, and doing what you are doing to be doing something to be normal to live life, and to function and to feel apart of, accepted, valuable, and in the moment, don't we all crave that, to feel in the moment, not behind in life, or without others lonely, no one deserves to hurt so bad that they don't feel like living anymore, no amount of rejections, shocking or not, or hope lifted and then brought down to disappointment, any wave on the spectrum of happiness or roller coaster of life, should be so unmanageable as to take our own lives, that would be tantrumming and giving up in life and no one wants to see that, how come we can be both the helper and the victim, and when we feel we are the victim feel like we don't get any help, even the help that does come our way, fail to acknowledge likewise the value of that help given, think about it, when you become unhappy with everything at your disposal to succeed, would be an insult to those who care cared and will care about you if you are no longer here, its important to live life, its important to have faith, its important to recover from whats hurting you, its important to not be alone and whats more important is to help again, why? If you help better than you are able to receive help, than chances are if you become victim, as independent it will be difficult for you to ask for help when help is needed, and if those problems persist and you do not cope in healthy ways, are likely to stumble upon unhealthy attachments, or uses of substances, to quell those feelings bottled up, or brought out of you, which you feel the need to suppress, as a means to feel normal. If you are self-medicating without the help of a physician its likely you need professional help, we mostly only hurt ourselves when we try to remedy or mostly over-remedy whats hurting, beyond the point of feeling good, that's called addiction, not all are like this but some. If you are both the victim and the helper, or just the helper or a victim but not yet a helper, it may not be easy to help others immediately, and like DBSA Support Alliance offers trainings for how to help others, similarly, I was trained for 40 hours to be a crisis hotline counselor, so smash those plans, stop worrying what other people think, don't go back through the negative thinking to explain how or why you got sick, its okay everytime I tell my own story I get suicidal, go figure that must be Gods way of saying, is the story inside you? Yes. Does that story inside you hurt? Yes. Have you been able to move forward and achieve a new life and happiness? Yes. Well then chances are even if you cant see it, going back through it, will hurt again, so be careful not to rehash old emotions, that not even a 10 mile run can cure, where you wind up feeling alone, taunted, not gonna make it, after you've already made it to a new relationship, give up, ask for 2 weeks, after the first date, after 5 months, after dating 2 months, bring yourself down thinking the thoughts of others as you told your story past or presently rehash your story and again think the same thoughts you thought before others had, while having the same reactions again, except now, after having moved forward, be brought backwards, that's casting the lure to be bitten by others, and then getting rallied up over feelings, that would have not been had or thought of had you not casted a lure out to be viewed by others, trying to provide a source of empowerment online, be sure that by speaking in a general way, neither you nor others are harmed by your feelings, nor are others then able to read into your story, and for you likewise to hear their thoughts, or have your thoughts be hurt by the concepts drawn from your stories, that others hear, after having met you or listened to you, or by knowing who youre attached to, dating, or were friends with, we are not our attachments, our chemical makeup, and genetics are worthless when it comes to mental health, star athlete to bipolar, who designed humans anyways, to be so gifted after working hard or training, or by education, be so easily dismantled, and disabled, and put to sleep on the daily, until they don't want to live anymore, who convinces someone that the voices they hear mean they should be disabled physically so that they cant run, why is it my fault if I hear voices, and why are those voices mean to me? What is it about my story that justifies any voice from arguing that I am at fault for my own condition now, and why do I feel like dying when I hear negative feedback, not existing in reality but in my own head, whats causing that to happen again, why is support so important? In IOP doing well, after IOP the real world, whats the problem? Less abilify, Id rather be able to run and write, whats more abilify? I don't feel like working, and sleeping at 8pm. Not driven in life, have I ever caused harm to the intelligences of others? No everyone is successful around me, do you know anyone else who has been hospitalized? No. Do you know why you are hurting? No. Do you think that the hurt is deserved? What voices? No. Whos fault is that? (Example: + vs. - thinking at the end).

Post with Positive Purpose ...

Usually when we post, we post with enthusiasm, hoping to equally lift those around us, having read something that we have shared, however that is not always the case. Sometimes when we post too much, this can cause worry to others, regarding your health, condition, and frame of mind, bringing into question your stability and fitness of character. Those who work hard offline, are usually not questioned to the same extent as those who work hard online, with all the stages of their progress, per every assignment viewable to onlookers. You cannot easily watch the progress of others, if they don't share out loud, their stages of wellness along the way, throughout their journey, that is the beauty of blogging, sharing our stages in life. For some blogging is a stepping stone in life: "Many bloggers go on to lead successful lives, both as movers and shakers in their respective industries." [1] According to shoutmeloud.com "Professional blogging implies lots of responsibilities and lots of discipline." [2] How much of your work online, translates to your work ethic in a desk job, or other work from home jobs, can your experience working online, set you aside from the other candidates in a good way, or does having an independent career as a writer hurt your chances of being hired, along the way. Based on my own experiences, not holding steady jobs for 1 year or more has hurt my chances of being hired, set aside as "#3" to other applicants being interviewed, because why I have not been in a steady job was difficult to explain, after having left an internship to finish my dissertations to my graduate degree which was put on hold several times, while blogging, and trying to write a book, which has not yet been published, to me it seems unless you have the hours on paper, and paychecks to prove that you have worked, can work, and are a hard worker, then and only then can it be proven that you are hireable to work full-time or even on a part-time basis, otherwise, your demonstration of independent savvy as a blogger online, or someone who cares about causes, and draws awareness by volunteer work or shared posts online with hashtags, does less than an adequate job of selling you to your future employer, who may not be all together convinced that youre right for the part. Today I talked about bipolar on squares on my personal blog on Instagram.com/fischman.leslie, Ive had so many blogs and taken down so many blogs, that my name is now backwards on one of my main accounts, I have three, one for writing, one for pictures of me, and one account private to follow my friends on, that I added (I think for the purposes of privacy, maintaining some confidentiality as to your contacts in life, really makes a difference, one reason why I have not accepted friend requests from strangers, but made a second Facebook account to manage pages on, and use daily, that doesn't require me to check on my friends everyday or view newsfeeds by them, Im not sure whether that was a wise decision on my part, theyre not my competition, which I need to turn a blind eye to, but a reality check point, I should've participated more, in positive ways, not just to chain mail post them my bipolar episodes along the way, they were in essence my DBSA Ambassadors, its actually the other way around, in most respects, others being a source of normal during bipolar phases in life, just because you know these people, doesn't mean that they aren't as inspirational as other famous people coming up in the world -Are they married? Yes. Do they have jobs? Yes. Do they have friends and social lives? Yes. And how do you know all of this? Because they post on Facebook photos from their journeys along the way. Do you ever worry about them? No. How do you think they feel seeing you throughout the years? Probably difficult to talk to. Are they talking to you now? Yes. What has changed since your last bipolar episode sharing? I stopped posting as much. Why did you stop posting as much? Because I was in IOP and working on the last few pages of my dissertation I wrote with a broken hand Spring 2019, because my Occupational Therapist says she finished her Dissertation in 2 Weeks, took time off work then to finish her Masters, so I was inspired to research and type my Dissertation, while my hand was healing, something to do, to keep me feeling up, while my hand was in and out of a cast, before and after surgery, fractured my hand. And why did you fracture your hand? Because I had no friends, was messengering with a Trump account, out of touch with reality, and super defensive and paranoid, staying in my room, thinking that my position in life, was inescapable, low energy, really insecure, couldn't take a good photo if my life depended on it, and writing to preserve the best of me. Sometimes, through disciplined activities, we do just that preserve the best of us, when all hell breaks lose, and instability occurs in our lives, that is our center, what keeps us going in life, what can be relied upon, and what we can be relied upon in life, feeling needed, and at the same time of use to others, why blogging was a great outlet for me as a law student. Its not codependency (writer : following), as you can see I blog less, but my alexa rank skyrocketed this year, and weebly following, so much so, that they changed the metrics from which they total the number of visits and views you get to a google standard of analytics, which is now in the hundreds not the thousands as they once reported to me. Is that why you stopped blogging as much? No. I thought that being better correlated with blogging less, and that blogging more, correlated with others thinking less of me, and that when others think less of me, I hear more voices and don't do as well emotionally, and mentally, more symptomatic. Exactly how did things start going right for you in life, can anyone just finish IOP after the required 6 weeks? I guess so, what made your recovery so special, that you were asked to maybe speak in the future if they needed you? Because she stated that that was the "fastest recovery" she's seen "ever." Low and behold I have an imaginary fan club online, who I feel supported by, and who supports me, whether or not I blog, and when I do blog, remembers me, and supports me. To me, that's being a successful blogger, not required to keep up with your audience, but has an audience that unconditionally follows you, checks on you, recalls your work, and reads.

Today is the Day ...

10/9/2019

Today is the day, we ask for forgiveness, in the Jewish Faith, a day of atonement. What does Yom Kippur [1] mean to me? It means thinking about all the times I have been frustrated in life, over the past year, and thinking about everything positive I have done for myself to make progress in life. It reminds me to be thankful for all my blessings in life, and to remember, to always work hard, and to never take my anger or frustrations out on others let alone myself, and not self-harm. ~Tomorrow's my last day of IOP at UCLA, was hospitalized in August. Life may be short but that doesn't mean that you need to make life more difficult for yourself, adding the pressures on time to your plate, just live every day to the fullest, not like it's your last. Today we are reminded not to overindulge ourselves in life's pleasures, much like those who stop drinking, because of the selfish character attributes it brings out in us, so does the need for pleasure bring out the worst in us too. Whether it's in relationships, not getting enough attention, or out of jealousy worry when attentions are not on us, experience fear of loss, those are all selfish attributions of the need for pleasure. You cannot begin a new relationship and you cannot start a new life, if everything needs to be about you, or if everything about you, is keeping you from living life among others, also have compassion for the lives that they lead, and acceptance of the fact that everyone has problems. -I learned in IOP that the difference between feelings and thoughts, are that feelings are one word, and thoughts are more than one word, and while we cannot change our feelings, we can change our thinking about the way we feel. According to Jen Sincero quoting Wallace Wattles in You Are a Badass ..., [2] "You created the reality you now exist in with your thoughts, which means you can use the very same power of thought to change it." (page 93) She then goes on to state that: "if you want to change your reality, you have to change your beliefs." Doing this is as easy as changing I can't statements to I can, and I will never, to thoughts of possibilities in the future. (page 140) Don't limit yourself by your feelings in life, sometimes our immediate needs, are acceptance in order to grow from those feelings and move forward past those thresholds of pain, sorrow, regret, embarrassment, and face those losses of self. We will encounter many emotions throughout our lives, it's you at the end of the day that needs to be able to live with yourself, "love yourself" (page 133), and be able to utilize the tools necessary to handle those feelings and emotions as they arise, not giving in to "sin" as the Jewish Faith would call it, to be angry, or throw fits, or even tantrum in response to any discussions that do not feed your ego or need to be right in life, you won't always be right, and sometimes you have to allow others to be right to, replies Jen Sincero, (page 125) even if allowing others to be right, is not in alignment with your need to be right or how you see things.

Wellness is Not a Competition ...

The only person you should be competing against in life when it comes to wellness is yourself. It's at that point, of not feeling well, that you have to put your best interests first, making your own wellness a priority, irrespective of how well others are doing around you, sounds selfish, but in the immediate, comparing yourself to others wellness, will only make you feel worse off, or by recognizing what is not going right for you in life, feeling less than others wellness wise. Do not compare your worst to the best versions of others, everyone reaches their point of normalcy at their own paces in life, we are not all together perfect at all times, everyone struggles. Just do your best, to blend in, whether that's functioning in public normally, or speaking to others without bringing them down, that's the best way to be cognizant of the health of others, not affect them by your downs in life, even if in the immediate you cannot comprehend recognizable comparisons others viewing you may see. That's not your responsibility to control what others think, or to be judged by others, based upon the progress you have made, be seen as someone who is behind in life, or could've achieved more, had they been more focused, everyone is on their own timing in life, and on that note sometimes your timing is not to the best timing of others, that you have to let go of, that's when forgiveness kicks in and you move forward in life, we may not all be here forever, but that doesn't mean don't value and appreciate those around you in your life, while everyone is still here, I'm glad that for the most part, we have found better ways of coping with losses, and not losing ourselves over those losses in life. Its okay to feel sad, its okay to feel embarrassed, its okay to feel down, its okay to feel defeated, its okay to feel depressed, its okay to think that everyone is judging you, its okay for you to be judging others, its okay to add humor to your life, its okay to smile, its okay to laugh, its okay to try to fit in, its okay to pay attention to trends, its okay to make mistakes, its okay to love others, its okay to lose friends, its okay to leave jobs, its okay to find new jobs, its okay to maintain contacts, its okay to have friends, its okay to share in public your feelings, its okay to change, its okay to grow, its okay to notice patterns, its okay to have delusions, its okay to freak out, its okay to see things wrong, its okay to be wrong, and its okay to question yourself sometimes, we don't always have the right answers to our problems, and that's okay, whats most important is learning how to deal with your symptoms, and get the help that you need so that your symptoms don't worsen, that's the main point. The longer you leave things off to resolve themselves, the harder it becomes to start managing those issues one by one, as you try to get better, and overcome those setbacks or difficulties in life, that's what hardships are all about, learning when to stop moving backwards and when to move forwards, when to forgive, when to let go, and when the silent treatment becomes unbearable, when to rise above, you cant always measure your own self-worth based upon how others feel about you, then you'd spend the majority of your time waiting for acceptances from others, to feel whole, or to feel apart of, its okay to live life, and allow life to catch up to you, its not necessary to catch up with everyone, or to have people in your life, right now, to feel needed or of value, one should value themselves, before needing to be valued by others, that's not a right, to be valued by others, and if you are feeling lost that's not the time to test your value in life.

"God helps those who help themselves" quoting my Dad.

Have not Been Feeling Well ...

11/17/2019

Whenever you post an interpretation of a series of events, to which you felt personally affected by, that always leaves room for wonder by. Be careful not to become too attached to your feelings, and gear your thoughts toward making sense of what doesn't make sense, a from fearing and taking actionable steps toward avoiding things that cause you fear, not face fear head on. There are times when it helps to have fear in your life, such as running at night, if you are scared of the dark, and sleep with a nightlight, then it's probably not wise to run at night. It does not make you stronger in case something happens that does cause you fear. -Bipolar is tricky to share out loud, for example like my experience with it is overwhelming for me to sit in a crowd of people, it took me awhile to just get used to going to the mall or going to Starbucks, I've lived through a lot of changes for me, including staying free of alcohol and drugs, which I've managed to do, staying sober. I've been on an off many meds, and I seem to be going much better for me, sometimes however my thoughts get the best of me, I'm sure those mentioned might be wondering how I'm experiencing these losses in life, not all equally affected, or personally affected, by the loss of significant figures in history. -I think one should focus on around me, and be more mindful, in the moment, focus on the day ahead, not on what has passed, and what others could be responsible for. -worryes dont become my reality, this I've had to get better at over the years as a blogger, how not to allow my fears to come to fruition,

The Trick to Success is Getting Started ...

11/16/2019

If I never tried, and never applied myself, I would not have attended two law schools, and be graduating with an LLM, a Top 100 Personal Finance magazine, which is in the process of being edited, nor have been given the opportunity to work with Keidi Keating and edit my second manuscript. I've written 100,000 words, that's how I wrote the majority of my first manuscript. If you set little goals for yourself each day, it eventually adds up, and you can be like I'm an overachiever or high functioning. In fact, I get at most 5 hours of work done each day, and sometimes those 5 hours of work are spent on Build a Website, Learn how to Build a Website, and Do all the Writing Yourself. That's a lot of time energy and effort on the side, I can be completely overwhelmed. This year I'm only working part-time 3 times a week, while editing my books, and finishing my Dissertation to graduate. I think I've been through a lot, have made a lot of mistakes, and that it's taken many years to get back on track, and begin completing projects. I've lived a full life. I even started dating again, which is a huge step for me in the right direction, trusting my heart with another, and not being afraid of those losses, then what can you do at the present moment to reduce the chances of experiencing those losses in life, without stopping again, after failure, but if you don't want to be a failure in life, eventually you have to start trying again in life, achieving goal after goal. That's picking up another degree, or finishing a project, website, blog, book, running a half-marathon, you can do all of these things to succeed in life. Without a steady income, shopping is just spending above your means, without a job, your hobby of blogging is viewed as avoidable. I'm not willing to buckle down or settle down in life, and be a full fledged adult. Where then does everyone go, who can't get a job, because of bipolar, I'm told not to talk about these things, it doesn't seem to help, acceptance wise of me by others, or acceptance wise of myself. I'm not doing it for themselves, especially if they are educated, and have proven that they are intelligent, just how competitive is the job market these days. I'm not ill with an illness associated with rejection, it's important to keep going in life, and not wait around for life to happen to you or for you in life, you can't go back to your mistakes past, and be a stronger person, resilient to those failures in life, and not stop going in life. That's a true test of your good character. I still make time to help others, and after all your struggles, you have not become selfish in your shell, torn away from the world, blaming the real world is tough, I never quite understand why I received so much forewarning growing up, thinking that if I went on to graduate school, history, and whether you were able to keep a job for a year or longer, it doesn't seem to matter that all you were given were internship offers. I can't explain why. You will find yourself in shock a lot trying to explain yourself, if your resume is not perfect, and if there are gaps in your resume, understandable excuses, best to probably skip those subjects and do your best to keep working, whether it be from home, or unpaid volunteer work. I've written 100,000 words on Facebook, and working at Phone Banks, and attending meetings on getting people out to vote. That was while keeping in touch with my family. I think I attended two Moms Demands meetings too. -So long as you try, that's all that can be asked of you, the requirements of caring for others, emails, and show up when there are events and sign up to events when volunteers are needed, these are things I should have done in adulthood. I thought that writing a book, would be helpful, but unless you are successful, I don't think a book will be very helpful unless it's successful. Numbers are showing on Alexa, a growing website, admitted to Facebook Groups, participating and getting replies from other Bloggers. It took awhile to self-identify in that way, without experience writing articles, I've just applied my basic knowledge writing research papers. I've grown my wings online, and grow as a writer.

Take it One Day at a Time ...

It's a very popular expression, to take it "one day at a time" but who does it apply to and why? For most people in recovery, healing is a long process. I'm told to be that patient, when it comes to change. [1] What does this phrase mean to someone in recovery? It "represent[s] the gratitude of someone who has struggled with alcoholism or substance abuse issues. Like recovery, living with bipolar is a life long struggle, and they don't go away simply because they stopped drinking. To this I can relate. When I went out in 2013, I figured they would just be more stories of people who were drinking everyday, they weren't lying after all, the disease is real, and if you cannot handle your liquor, the disease takes over quickly, and you're out of control. I don't understand how people can drink in the first place, I've never been a drinker myself, never at dinners, and never on work time, that's not just a nice way of saying you'll get through this, its reminding you, that the disease is living in you, and if you don't manage then the disease can come back, or the bipolar can take hold, of your thinking, and the choices you make, for some who struggle with cessation, we would be a higher functioning society, but that's not the case, problems exist whether or not we are drinking, whether or using. There really is no social responsibility when it comes to bipolar, however there are AA meetings, who take social responsibility don't make yourself fit, that's the lesson. It you are taking it one day at a time, don't not listen the first time you walk through the door don't need help or assistance from anyone, usually things get worse, and they tell you that not as a marketing technique to scare you away your coping skills are presently, taking things one day at a time, the better off you'll feel in the long run, having dealt with your problems relationships, or further inhibit your communication skills. Can you handle whats out in front of you? No. Then don't leave out more than not to drink or use, as a coping mechanism for dealing with your problems, it will surely affect your writing, and make everyone else view benefit of the doubt, if you self-identify as an alcoholic or ex-addict, they will see you only under a negative light, and that negative light substance use or abuse, or alcoholism. For me it's a matter of perception, based on how I grew up, and upon sharing now, how I am looking that I state my associations in life, presently or in the past, to make anyone more empathetic to my problems, as being rational, or irrational viewpoint of another, when I used to be well, and now am not well, I wonder, how did that go, the sharing of my story, if I was not someone telling the story has overcome their problems in life, or deficits, it makes it hard to listen to someone who is not put together successfully make, respect them. When you love and respect yourself, you'll find others who love and respect themselves too, otherwise you'll keep dont totally belong there, then dont expect to belong anywhere else, thats acceptance, when it comes to social standing and wellness.

Winter Essentials ... Splurge or Shop-Around? ...

11/15/2019

This Winter's Essentials include: Paperbag Jeans, Cargo Pants, Long Cardigan Sweaters, Ribbed Skirts, Cropped Sweaters, Velvet Turtlenecks, which can be bought without spending over $200 at once. Its all about shopping wisely, if you set a max limit to your spending per store for a look. Most of what has been listed has recently been put on sale, at: Zara, Forever 21, Banana Republic, Gap, & HM. The best inventory at the Center and Culver City Mall, is low on inventory, making it best to shop online if youre thinking about spending less on a style and getting the best outtings, always eye catching, and on trend, they made my favorite long sweater this year, striped, I wear everywhere. Banana Republic soft, and you can dress them up or down, depending on what type of sweater or jacket you wear. For Sherpa, I shopped around, and even though its still available in black and green. I found Cargo pants at Zara, theyre leggings, stretch, and a blousy pink version of a Cargo pant. Found them at Forever 21, a black skinny jeans version. For dresses to dress down with boots, find a zipper dress, theyre so cute on, and you can wear them. The first overall dresses I spotted were at TopShop, made over summer, now in corduroy at various locations. For workout clothes, I did find that spending Forever 21, has a ton of workout leggings, that fit all body types.

Be Happy, Easier Said than Done ...

With everything that's going on in the world its easy to second guess yourself. However its always easier to rise to the occasion of being ourselves. It seems like most people are great friends at this, but do a lousy job of lifting themselves up in life. Why is it easier to help themselves and only if they want to." [1] You can't wait for everything to happen in life, and live a life based on responding to everything making life happen for you in life. And although life happens on its own terms, theres no one telling us to stop living life, just because outtings, and attend work. According to m.quiethabits.net, "a passive life is one that lacks power, growth and fulfillment." [2] If youre monotony, and find comfort in keeping everything the way it is, and not try new things, and that's okay, but don't complain, when a p overcome those symtoms in life, always be prepared for changes that come into your life, learn to be flexible, and willing to change w "Leading a passive life means letting life happen without trying to change and improve anything." [3] For instance, "If you notice you make a conscious effort to handle future situations like that." [4] When you feel the anxiety of the day getting the best of you, "do not Living with anxiety can sometimes "be a lonely and isolating experience," know that youre not alone, and we all feel the weirdness of health issues, "For the most part, anxiety is a condition that comes and goes. But for some, anxiety never goes away completely. That' Which is why its important not to live passively, once you stop a routine, and stop consciously taking proactive steps to reducing symp recovering from these symptoms. Life isn't hard unless you make it so. Note that, "Passive communication is a style in which you avo The less you communicate, the more difficult self-expression can become, if you allow all your problems to pile up, and think that the and failing to protect your rights and get your needs met." Avoiding Controversy ...

11/14/2019

Unless you're on meds, there are a lot of issues that may be difficult to speak about out loud, and suicide is one of those issues, whether you're another, healing takes time. And just because you are a survivor of suicide, doesn't necessarily mean that talking about the issues, with you likely has been affected in his own way, throughout this mental health crisis. -Last night I had trouble sleeping, thinking of self-harm, judging you in the negative, self-harm is not the correct response. Unless you can help to build a better understanding among others, the associations others have been equally affected by recent events. If you have trouble sleeping, it's best not to talk about things right before whether teams have had an affect in life on the suicides of others, no I don't think so, based upon an assessment of Ari Emanuel's mental health issues. If I'm not writing about it, then it must be because I was not personally affected by it, and sometimes if I'm writing, it's been bothering them. There is no one way to think about, learn, and accept, the issues others face in life, and become failures to what is sober throughout your mental health crisis, you have a higher likelihood of coming out of whatever depression, or mental health issues, down on ourselves, it's all a matter of staying well, not being haunted by our past, or the allowing the lives of others, to haunt our own life is, the more accepted you are, when stability is required of us, that's the best way to be accepted by others, is to be stable. Especially would be when someone can question your interpretation, and when your interpretation is off, either by assuming, or trying to relate everything relates. That would best describe my last post, regarding suicides and my recent hospitalization. There was no connection, suicide by me or by those who in support of me follow my blog. That's taking social responsibility for my health, as a blogger, and not well they get help too. Most people have to work everyday, and only get the weekend to rest, in Ari Emanuel's case he only has Sunday bothered, that he may have affected anyone in the negative, and was not meaning to communicate at all to me, and probably doesn't even now. That's being realistic. Others on the outside, think that I know who everyone is, and that everyone knows who I am, that's to help things are about me in the abstract to cast blame on my blogging as being a cause for the mental health issues of others, I'm an "A" writer student, and doing my best. As my UCLA Psychiatrist said, "bipolar is not contagious," this is much to do about educating the public on these issues, especially mental health issues, related to fame and who you know or don't know in life. Leave it up to them to speak on their own well, as I am not doing well in life, , however blogging seems to be working well for me in life.

Book Review: "Unf*ck Yourself" ...

11/13/2019

I just finished reading "*Unf*ck Yourself*" by Gary John Bishop, it was a really fast read, action packed with motivational tips to succeed again in life. The book really ends on a high note, reminding us to "keep going ... [with] the momentum to keep moving and moving, face, is fear of the "world stop[ping] us from succeeding" he makes a point to tell the reader that "you're not a big deal." (p. 147) So not paranoid, Gary tells us "the universe is neither conspiring for nor against you, and the only thing that stops you is when you buy into it, you're not doing what you're supposed to be doing then it's time to get started. (p. 163) Lives all about "discovery and exploration" and Arnold Schwarzenegger, who became Governor of California. (p. 154). The way Gary deals with his problems is by focusing on the present that "the key to becoming relentless" and being able to weather any storm in life "is to focus on the problem [directly] in front of you." in life, that's how you "keep the momentum going." (p. 157). When it comes to relationships, Gary says to "accept things for what they are, external upsets" is how you will be able to accept things the way they are. (p. 182) "Learn from defeat." (p. 183) don't expect people to receive those blessings in life in return. What is lost comes back to you tenfold in life, my Mother always reminds me, so long as you do hardwork, when you get to those points in life, where what matters less is what others are doing, and when you are focusing on how you works sometimes. Therefore "free yourself from the burden and melodrama of expectation, let the chips fall where they may." (p. 183) and be loved the way that they love you." (p. 183) "Get out of your mind and into your life" (p. 189), that requires more than just positivity to start by taking action in the external world. " (p. 193) Although there "is no perfect mood" (p. 193) that can be set to get going some relate to.

12 Common Mistakes Made by Bloggers ...

11/13/2019

Building and creating a blog can be a frustrating process of getting followers and building steady traffic to your website. The following

1. Write what people are searching for in order to get traffic, follow Pinterest and SEO. [1]
2. Join Facebook Groups
3. Follow “Google Trends”: <https://trends.google.com/trends/?geo=US>
4. Use “HubSpot.com” Blog Ideas Generator: <https://www.hubspot.com/blog-topic-generator>
5. Collecting Emails should be a Top Priority, Do Email Marketing [2]
6. Be consistent, so that your readers continue to show up. [3]
7. Write great headlines and make sure you are blogging for the right reasons. [4]
8. Don’t forget to automate your posts to platforms like Facebook and LinkedIn. [5]
9. Continue to educate yourself, reading about tips and tricks for blogging.
10. Sharing your experiences is fine, but only if it help your readers. [6]
11. Keep it simple, and “make your posts as easy to read as possible.” [7]
12. Choose your niche, and cater to their interests, & entertain them. [8]

There are many reasons, why you may be chosen to be read, “It could be about content quality. It could be about your personality. You your audience understands.” [9] Based on my personal experience unless the material sits well with you, as a general rule of thumb do wind up frustrating ourselves, and maybe even our audience. Give time for the dust to settle, you can always go back to a post that you hidden on my website, or all my posts Ive removed over the years, but on issues I felt passionate about. Don’t throw away material! Sa and at the same time, be approachable and likeable. Its not all about pleasing your audience. Its about writing about what is of interest relate. Always have some balanced perspective in mind, when it comes to talking about anything controversial, being sure not to insult cause your audience to worry about you or others, theres always a way to end things on a positive note.

How, when, and why does defamation occur. Make sure not to read in alignment to the interests of those who are talking $hit about ot mention of people who are being negative toward you, or who are in their own best interests putting you down in life. No ones success in life, that’s not what success is about. Success is about being happy, and upon being happy, achieving, and upon achieving able to w people feel good, and why people who work feel good. People who are given jobs in life, either have a lot going for them in life, or ha upon some reference to work they have completed in the past either for school or via extracurricular activities. Don’t make my work h passing negative judgment on you based upon how you look, as not seeing the beauty in your effort, or the smarts in your achievement
