Usually by this time of night, Im hearing voices, usually from people reviewing my work, who do not think highly of me, or are questioning me. I have (1) gotten jobs and (2) have been accepted to organizations to help others. That makes my time online, worthwhile. In order to get all about staying well. There are always stopping points to caring, about what others think, and that's when to stop, when it gets to those types of voices to affect your well being. That is one example of ignoring negativity. Not everyone experiences negativity the same way. I don't think about what others are thinking in the negative, and worry in that way, experience physiological symptoms of worry related to negative comments. I join organizations. I do research. I read. I write. And I stay in tune with others online, as best I can, to see how they are doing. Those who are negative when others are not stand out, and because they stand out negative, don't feel good about themselves, because of negative comments through periods, when we want things to be a certain way, and things do not turn out in our favor, that's another example of allowing negativity into your life. We should live life. We only have time to think for ourselves sometimes, that is another example of not letting negativity into your life, not allowing negativity to be said about you, that is another cause for bipolar delusion, thinking you know what is being said about you, and then thinking others were speaking badly of you, to explain why you were having bipolar delusions, about what others were thinking. That's a tough situation. To make a problem less of a problem, its important not to further a problem, by spreading more rumors about a person to see if they behave differently. That would be another example of not allowing negativity into your life, you cannot control people, you can only control yourself, the more negativity you allow what could be said about you in the negative, the more you struggle with your own health, in terms of accepting others as they are, even in your own life, and always rising above the traumas and troubles that others experience, giving them the benefit of the doubt, and not allowing negativity into your life. There are plenty of ways to cope, I am not a Doctor, just by my own experience battling with mental health issues over the years, about me, not drink, not do drugs, and especially not allow bipolar to affect my ability to live my life as best I can. It may not be lived, but I am doing a pretty darn good job of living life, just the way I am.

The Elements of Caring ...

It doesn't hurt to care, in fact it does you and everyone else around you a favor, to become aware of the issues, that you think matter and care for. To become aware, or the last to feel apart of the solution to the causes for which you care for. That is the benefit of sharing the causes you care for. To care for, to likewise care and support what is trending, what is necessary, or what is important at this time to pay attention to. Some of us work, on social media, is to promote the best interests of the company to which the post supports, sometimes companies support causes, some of which others know, can others care, and unless others care, can support be given. According to curatti.com, Social Media as a platform, "creates lives" and "can be used for various noble causes like social welfare." [1] If you think about the "profound impacts" that social media has had on the world, by web.stanford.edu, predicted that "widespread concern about possible harms" would impact social welfare in a positive way, not frightened, but to "widespread improvements to individual welfare." [2] One of the negative consequences of social media, is the polarization of misinformation, by training.fema.gov during emergent times, while there is an ongoing crisis taking place. [3] How do we then inform one another, without being wrong, and focus instead on things that are going right, at what point do we stop grieving and complaining, and start taking action? We need that we need, how can that need be supplemented for, for those of us studying or working from home, still be well adjusted, when we are a hobby, it's a daily activity that most people grew up with, their parents reading the paper delivered to their homes, and much the same way as we read by our Parents. In trying to be the same, we read social media as religiously as our parents read the newspapers growing up, I think we need to read news, without scaring one another. What are the consequences of fear? Fear stops us from engaging socially, it stops us from working things out in reality, reality out to be, the more difficult it then becomes to live life, without feeding the wrong cells in life, with things to make us feel good about ourselves, times, which is not beneficial to our health overall. What is social media addiction? According to addictioncenter.com, "Social media addiction is defined as the definition of "addiction" as it concerns our uses of social media, and devoting so much time and effort to social media that it interferes with your life." In the definition of "addiction" as it concerns our uses of social media, I don't even think that most of us deserve to be called addicts in that those who do use social media for good purposes, are fraught with frustration, over compelling others to care and participate in awareness of their lives, ways, that others have defined as addiction. To care is to care, and how one is expected to care, will always change, especially with the changing of our functions, and running in half-marathons, and donating to causes. Online, is where it starts, don't get all rallied up in the energy of caring for others, it could be the difference between feeling powerless, and being empowered.

Blog Post About: “You are Beautiful Just as You Are by Rebecca Branham”

According to Rebecca Branham of modavatecoaching.com, in order to start feeling beautiful you have to start believing that you are. She says “we are individuals that we are, further convincing ourselves to “take care of” ourselves less. To stop this cycle of convincing ourselves that we don’t want and calling that in, and worry less about how much feedback you receive, especially from other women. Reminding us that “we have an extremely narrow view of what we consider beautiful and desirable in other women.” Don’t “isolate” and “smile,” always “acknowledge your worth” and “bring back things into our lives that “feel good, [while] you prioritize you.” She reminds us to ignore our fears and that “[we] are capable of so much more than we think we are.”

The "Global Climate Strike" ...

The “Global Climate Strike” took place on September 20th, before the UN “Climate Action Summit” September 23, 2019. [1] [2] The strike was “one of the largest youth-led demonstrations in history.” [4] More than “185 countries” participated [5], in that Friday’s strike, and it was a “global day of action” [3].

How to Unfreeze ...

Usually when I'm feeling overwhelmed, or when my heart is somewhere other than where it needs to be, I freeze, that's common, for you. In those moments in life, it's okay to take a step back, and to take a break, to figure out where you need to be in life, in order to stay happy. To share positivity and happiness with others, it would therefore be selfish to stay at home, once you've made it, and not share your know-how. In your career when you have to take certain steps, i.e. invest in your writing, and produce with the intent to earn an income from what you are good at, or of equal level skill or deficit of others who have learning disabilities, I am different in that writing has been my focus as a law student. I write about emotions, that happens to make sense. In order to make sense, you have to be a balanced person and a balanced thinker, in addition, I write about sections and arguments sections of the LSAT practice exams, which may explain why my writing style stands out compared to other writers. I use arrows and lines, to see if it makes sense, that's how I was trained to write, to not only memorize a set of rules, but as applied, and later in life. I'm not sure whether everyone handles their problems, logically, and is this analytical when it comes to hashing out their problems out loud. In the world thinking you know everything, much of what you think you know, has already been said well, the challenge of being a good writer is to write that you mention. It's not easy to become well known as a writer, I have been writing on squares for years, and rarely achieved a following. I originally thought, how to be of influence, without losing your flair in life, how to be of influence, without becoming outnumbered by others. I have your audience outgrow you intelligence wise, why it's so important to continue your education as a writer.

Who's Sensitive? ...

Being a sensitive person, means that you actually think about what others are thinking, understand how they are feeling, and not at all affected in the negative, including yourself. If you are too sensitive to write in a public space then don't, if you have too many skeletons under the rug, don't deserve to be successful online then don't write. No positivity can be shared, whenever there is argument, and no positivity can be shared in response to whatever issues you have been thrown into the middle of, it's not your responsibility to explain all sides, and if everyone thinks you're wrong, explain why people do not like you, or why people hold reservations toward you, that's for them to discern, it may be nice to know that you're not alone, but be shown online, it's most likely an unwanted shared understanding. If you do not feel like you are winning in life then don't write. The goal is to live your life, to please those who think that they are worse off in life, as compared to you, we all experience heartache, that's not unique to anyone, it's unique to anyone. Writing online, requires an ability to be able to withstand heartache and rejection, not all will believe in you. That's why you're not alone when at your best, if you are received with any negativity, that's normal to get upset, just don't turn that upset into more heartache, and if you're at your best, no relationship is perfect, not even for those of us who have boyfriends, who are generally not needy of us, we have to be strong enough to be alone, if we were not sweet, then we would be lonely, and if we were bitter or jealous, we would not be able to move on in the first place. Life will direct you out of heartache, and no one can make you feel better any longer than you're able to make yourself feel better, at the end of the day, you spend your time on earth, and never give up, no matter how bad the day is, no matter how tired you are, and no matter what anyone thinks, you're growing and moving forward in life. People choose to believe whatever they need to believe to keep them feeling in the right, and some are more successful than the other, or more put together, we all suffer hardship whenever there is a fight, it's not only the winners of fights, who are successful, it's the losers who come into play, always display good sportsmanship whenever it comes to social graces, there is no etiquette book on how to represent yourself.

representation of yourself, to the point that it no longer matters to you or anyone what negatives are said about you, and you are given was better in your younger years, and it will always seem that way, with less responsibility in life, comes less pressure, and with less pressure achieving our goals in life, that's simple. Always keep in mind, what is it that you're doing now, and "is what you're doing now going to you're blogging in spite of who you were or are not associated to in life, and some may not understand why you're a writer, and think she anyone undermine your abilities in life, to lift themselves above you, as though they know better than you, how they would navigate this is put together it seems easy, but it's not.

The Malibu Half-Marathon & 5k ... #runbeautiful

Congratulations to all those who participated in the Malibu Half-Marathon and 5k over the weekend. What a fantastic turn-out, in spite of the fact that the Malibu Half-Marathon took place on Sunday, November 3, 2019. More than 2,600 competed in the 9th Annual Half Marathon and 5k, who raised money for charity. I competed in the 45-49 male category, took first place overall this year with a time of one hour, 17 minutes and 21 seconds." The runner who won the race to "make the day memorable for [their] athletes," and she did just that. [2] The race "starts and ends at Zuma Beach," [3] and all Malibu runners on hand, driving in the dark to Malibu at 5:30 AM, I had driven to the running site the day before so knew where I was going, there's a road sign for myself, am I really driving through a pond right now, that ended up being apart of our running route, the beginning turn of the race. The "blogger" behind me. We waited at the start after the 3 hour mark runners, I was hoping to finish in less than 4 hours, but had not been cheering for me, and the cars leaving the parking lot, stuck in bumper to bumper traffic. Many passed me, and at some points, ran a few short distances, so this was much different, running with a crowd, they were very peaceful, and energetic, I can't believe the race is over, I've never crossed the finished line from Alberto Perusset, [4] the famous "Malibu Barefoot Runner" who asked me "Is this your first Half-Marathon?" I devoured. Everyone had already left by the time I finished. I did however manage to schmooze with @krideout12 "Kenneth Rideout" in my opinion, I saw him sprinting down the hill past me, the bike told me to move over, I tend to run with my head down, he was running in the direction of running to Marina and Back on the Beach, my 2.5 hour runs, I've been running on the Beach for 5 years now, a few times a year. Never Blogging Anxiety ...

Most people don't even start blogging because of the anxiety associated with sharing out loud your thinking, or sharing your writing. For me, blogging abides by the basic principle of not being judgmental and accepting of whomever is writing, think critically but know the difference. From the beginning, which requires you not to pass judgment, and to keep confidential what is shared. Unfortunately the same rules do not apply when your writing is posted, but posting in it of itself is a risk that you assume while advertising your business and/or blog, its your reputation, be wise. - I remember my 10th birthdays when I was little. Blogging is much like being a chef at Benihana, you have to be prepared for what is ordered, and/or trending. You have to follow the trend if not following what has already been written. I was talking with Torah Bontrager, a few months ago, about blogging article citations include those posts read on my blog, which have been referenced. I think in part, why my blog is doing so well, is that I have sharing my thoughts out loud. If you're going to be giving life advice online, make sure that in all honesty you're basing your shares from professionals. As a general rule of thumb it would not be wise to share or cite to the experiences of others on your blog, as those stories are a discussion, to overcome anxiety you need to have:

(1) “The right mindset” before beginning your assignment for the day, “The right mindset can make things go a lot smoother for you ... [by] control[ing] the ways you talk to yourself in the privacy of your own head,” thus affecting your writing. [2]

(2) Next “Develop a Sense of Control” and know that you're not alone, “everyone struggles” especially with their “inner critic” who nags. The less you care about what others think, the less you empower those thought processes to take hold of your ability to think for yourself. If you care what others think, become stifled, and stop growing as a writer.

(3) Find a “Mentor,” overcoming social anxiety can be an overwhelming task, especially to accomplish facing your fears on your own. One of the symptoms you experience when in a crowd of people, identify those discomforts, and be able to shine, figuring out “what works and [what] doesn't” are “checklists for controlling anxiety and panic attacks.” [5]

(4) Have “Awareness” both as the reader and the blogger, note that “For some, blogging is a form of therapy — an outlet for the thoughts and feelings for more support of the bloggers “in your life, community and online accounts” stating “to be aware of the pressures bloggers face.” Not all bloggers are businesses online that promote materials to bloggers, singling them out as inadequate advice in life, and losing fans to more high-functioning bloggers.

The Top 50 Anxiety Blogs and Websites to Follow 2019 are: https://blog.feedspot.com/anxiety_blogs/.

Please Note:

If you or someone you know is struggling with anxiety, it may help to make the following recommendations: Less Caffeine, More Sleep, and Stay Active [7]. Always refer your friends to their medical care providers, or suggest seeking treatment from a medical professional, if they are not a professional. As the reader to diagnose others, you either support the work that they produce, or you choose to read something else, that doesn't work for the writer, too.

It takes a lot of writing to establish yourself as a writer online, and website. I'm so grateful to have the following that I do have, patient and understanding. The top bloggers in magazines in the Country are in the 20,000s. Keep going, you never know where blogging will take you!

First decide whether you want to blog or not, and secondly figure out who you want to work with, making sure that whoever you pick, whether your content is acceptable to their niche of bloggers, when determining whether or not to accept you to their group. Acceptance is key. If you are to be a product example of their work, likely you will want them to be a product example of education you think works.

offer to others. If you have not figured out whether you are a blogger to educate your audience, or a blogger to promote your own work, or to teach others how to blog, based on my experiences, or whether to focus on book writing, and focus my energies on my work product, so you will not be learning how to make money through me, please see links or google.com, if that is something you are interested in. I don't look bad, or that I was profiting or benefiting from writing online, as though I never took into consideration the feelings of others. Put your good name, absent advertisement on social media, or your business name because of too much social media exposure. More exposure and if you want to affiliate market other organizations to whom your connected to, then you have to be solid online, otherwise, everyth and other indicators of your current business savvy will be obvious indicators of whether or not you will successful online as a represent foundation of business, not your following count, but lies in the number of partnerships you can acquire, to help drive business to your provided by those businesses you represent.

Book Review: "Stillness is the Key" by #ryanholiday

11/30/2019

There are three parts to this book, which covers “the mind, the heart, and the body.” (page 81) [1] He covers everything from the big world full of noise, Ryan Holiday suggests the following: “art of slowing things down so we can see clearly. The power of ritual and r Even the most successful people, such as Bill Gates, spends alone time, reading, (page 217) “peace is what provides us the opportunity mini Guns Germs and Steel, as a History book, he writes phenomenally, integrating bits and pieces of history, as well as nuanced unde yet “stronger through resistance and exposure and training,” (page 67) accepting that we don’t know everything, and to make room for understanding of our “strengths and weaknesses” ... that we are able to achieve “inner peace and a clear mind.” (page 72). This is a bo professional, writers, anyone who is trying to “develop a strong moral compass.” (page 97) Just like those in recovery practice gratitude practice the same, even if we feel like nothing is ever “enough.” (page 97) -He describes how when we are impulsive, we turn into bac to resist it, to sit with is and examine it, to let it pass by.” (page 118) More is not always the solution, in fact “more does nothing for th notion, many times while struggling with bipolar, I have to remind myself that these are just symptoms, and that they will pass, Ive ma grateful for where I am, no matter how Im feeling that day, pray that I’ll get the work done that needs to get done, with or without voic he was describing earlier, that we need to build within ourselves. Whereas before I struggled with addiction, taking a pill everytime I r was feeling, know that feelings pass, its not necessary to control yourself chemically, when you can achieve balance simply by practic can be difficult, he quotes to Anne Frank who used to “boost her [own] spirits and center herself.” (page 128) In regards to relationship you don’t make yourself vulnerable, you can never lose them and you’ll never be hurt.” (page 143) Overall, it was an excellent read, fi how to achieve the stillness he describes.

Problem Solving Techniques ...

When it comes to solving problems, remind yourself of the quote by Stephen Covey, “strength lies in differences, not in similarities.” [1] you’re only seeing through your own lens, then you’re missing out on other ways of seeing things. Forbes.com refers to this technique, it’s to see the big picture. While education matters, standard approaches, only apply to a few problems, but not all, and sometimes “new problems get solved when we look at them from a different direction, challenge standard assumptions, and/or push boundaries.” [3] “the problem, (2) Generating alternatives, (3) Evaluating and selecting alternatives, and (4) Implementing solutions.” [4] Know the difference as long as you can define the problem clearly, you are one step in the right direction to begin the brainstorming process, and all options are a step away from a problem and come back to it, sometimes what is difficult, is easier, once thought about, give time for the dust to settle. To solve an issue is to stop trying ... [and] walk away.” [5] When a problem arrives, the first thing we think about is blame, figuring out the process, of both acknowledging our part and the part of others, you’ll likely then feel compelled to “come up with an answer [expecting] During the brainstorming process, you will think about your beliefs a lot, that is the time, when it’s okay to start being creative, the more life, the easier it becomes to solve, so don’t be afraid to “explore the overall context of the situation” [7] and break a few of your own rules according to wrike.com, “nothing stops the flow of creative ideas faster than judging them on the spot,” [8] which means brainstorm through questions, surround yourself with people who you can hear sides from, and “build off existing ideas,” [9] we don’t know everything, and don’t become isolated, with a problem you can’t solve on your own, why it’s important to talk to other people, this will give you a better evaluation to handle life and life’s problems all on your own.

Staying Motivated ...

11/27/2019

The best time of year is here, I love Thanksgiving and the Holidays, there’s always something in the air about the Holidays, that makes us feel like we have accomplished thus far, and what else we plan to accomplish by the year’s end. It’s right around now, that we get going, the summer and the Winter blues are looming overhead, unless we do something about it. By the time you make time to reflect, are you happy with the order to be happy. It’s the time of year when we can button up loose ends, not rest on our laurels, and finish strong. It doesn’t take a whole lot of it just takes enough drive and focus to get going and to keep going. I was just thinking about this today, why some days I’m more motivated than others. The more you have to do, sometimes the less you get done. It takes beginning a project to complete a project, and if you can do it all the more power to you, you must be well on your way to success. According to quora.com: “drive” is the “starting point of motivation for something.” [1] Motivation requires having some purpose in life, and working toward that purpose. [2] Having motivation is one thing, but staying motivated is another, explains why even the most successful people in life, aren’t even the brightest, that’s because in a “meaningful” way, their motivation would ordinarily throw someone off, meaning they keep “plugging” away, even when they’re tired, even when they’re grumpy, and even when they’re [3] Lack of motivation, explains why even when we know what we need to get done to get going again, we still don’t do it, feeling unmotivated. In action, you have to “make changes [to] achieve your goals.” [4] Be prepared, be patient, be persistent, persevere, and make lifestyle changes. You need to make, to stay motivated and accomplish the task you need to get done, to get where you want to be headed in life, and to get going. You need a lot of steam in life, that can be due to depression, mental health issues, a lot of things, why it’s important to talk about your lack of motivation and get a treatment plan to address your individual needs. Change your inner dialogue, to positive, and cut back on thinking about yourself in the negative. Stay motivated, and allow for confidence and self-esteem issues to follow. So when you get back to your grind, whether it’s this Friday or Monday.

means that you will likely be putting in an effort that will take you far beyond the point at which it is inspiring or fun,” [7] and its wha Recovery is a Process ...

11/27/2019

Like most injuries, recovery is a process, including injury to your image and subsequent self-esteem. Fix.com states that “The number of people who are anonymous—and shame—that once shrouded people affected by substance abuse is slowly slipping away.” [1] Know that you’re not a proud of, and some phases, that we are ashamed of, confidence doesn’t happen overnight, its something you work on consistently each day. It leaves you feeling less than in life. Type in google.com search “what can you do to fix your image socially ...” and this came up, according to your behavior and relationships with others.” [2] Therefore if its your behavior that needs to change, such as not drinking or not how you will be judged, as someone who is taking risks, or someone who has learned from their mistakes, and is no longer engaging in behaviors as long as your behavior stays the same, ie drinking, or tweeting on Twitter, than it is assumed that for the same reasons, you are not feeling those behaviors that is assumed caused you to not feel well in the first place, and it is automatically assumed that you are engaging in those behaviors with zero accountability when it comes to mental health, that’s because everyone thinks theyre fine just the way they are, and no one wants to be held responsible for others falling ill in life. Its really no ones responsibility except for the caretakers and for each individual to bring their cold, mental health issues, pass, so long as they are treated, one can function again, maybe not to the same pace they were able to perform. You should stop living life all together, and not work, there has to be a happy medium, in which society can accept people the way they are. It’s their wellness, or blame them, and allow them to stay well. Learn to be happy for others in life, so much about happiness, is not falling into it. Thinking your less than, what is it that makes you happy? If its something you cant change about yourself, your past, let it go, and if its your best, ask yourself “to what extent you want to comply with society’s demands, and how much self-expression you feel comfortable with. Self-expression, why cant she just work, I do work, why cant she just lose weight, I did lose 50 lbs, and no one cared, why does she take self as a taunt, not if you don’t accept someone in a negative light. Its very controversial to photo yourself, and photo your life and share photos of your very private life, I have no clients, therefore there should be no expectation of me, to that extent. As far as Im concerned protecting my image about me, and takes into consideration the wellness of others, not just my own. That’s being professional, self-care.

Change for the Better ...

You’ll meet a lot of people in life, few who will change you for the better. Its usually through innocent story telling that we learn the most influence to others, or changing people. When you leave others to their own devices in life, that’s how change happens, not forcing people to change for themselves, on their own good timing. Information sharing is just about that, not trying to influence to decisions of others, its information hurts our perspective, when its hearing things we don’t want to hear, or to hear things that change the way we think about things. Just one post can be overwhelming to share out loud, anything having to do with my mental health I usually refrain from sharing about my unhappiness with myself in the face of others. When you have a “me against the world” attitude in life, that’s because you were positive in life, that’s because you are having difficulty getting it through your head, how to overcome the negative opinions of others. The best way solution to your problems, and usually just makes things worse. To re-establish ones esteem post punishment or embarrassment, you had a job, and writing two books to feel good again, that's how low I fell in life, and what I did to recuperate and recover socially. Don't be ashamed of past behaviors, or failure to maintain a positive sense of self, and stay well, I don't think its necessary to apologize, not unless you have hurted individuals, if you were the one hurting, I highly doubt, anyone who cared about you hurt too, maybe they felt sorry for you, but if it was required. Psychcentral.com cites to this quote "St. Francis de Sales had four words of advice for pursuing spiritual excellence: "Be you we actually do more harm than good, to be a perfectionist, one must be living in the present, and doing well what one can do well now, not others, or be subject for criticism, that only leads to further discussion of one when one was not well, to further justify why not to listen well they could be doing in life now. That doesn't seem to matter to critics, progress. Do it for you, we are constantly told, when it comes to having someone in your life, or for added acceptances from others. In sobriety I have gained 50 lbs, but you don't see me moping around, you learn to make due, with the body you are given in life, and the face you were born with, if others cant be accepting of that, then you are, knowing you are doing your best. I don't believe that someone who is overweight, reflects that a person is unhappy with themselves, not lose weight, whos fault is that, not mine, it's the meds I was put on, that caused weight gain, following two hospitalizations 2017. It's not ones fault but your own, whenever you succumb to blames in life, always do what is in your power, to do what is right in life. If its not that its better not to be confrontational with others, especially online, in written form, that just adds more fuel to the fire, and gives people leadership, or for advocacy. Don't be reactive, be proactive. In order for positive change to occur, you have to show through your actions, deemed a threat to the mental health of others, is to move forward in life, and prove that you are well. That's why they say to prove the shows that you are not well, and sometimes only makes others feel better to see someone not composed, and professionally sound. I think maladjusted, that doesn't make others recognize their wellness, but now because of lawsuits, claim that they have been personally affected someone as not making them well, because they are not well, that's society these days, always looking for a lawsuit, to better their position.

Dealing with Discomforts in Life ...

You can't be too particular these days, when it comes to what you get exposed to on a daily basis, tv shows are not even half filtered with. In fact most of the time, we find it humorous, to see people not at their best, trying to fly below the radar in life, commentary wise. Celebrities are discomfort, especially when it comes to appearances, who isn't concerned about how they look, but not all are unhappy, learn to love to put yourself together, it takes time to get your look down. If you're feeling like "It's Pat" [1] well then put on some spandex and make a host of happy memories, if you're only concerned about how you look, or how you sound. Who cares? My voice is deep, but I can sing in the future, liveyourlegend.net says "The only way to experience a dream is through a little healthy discomfort," [2] sometimes feeling uncomfortable that you're right where you need to be, we don't know everything, no one expects you to have life all figured out, if you're not learning your intellectual and spiritual limits in life, don't be afraid to try new things. Building emotional resilience, is one step in the right direction in life, goodtherapy.org says "Give yourself permission to feel your feelings. With practice, it may help you accept yourself and your reality and the unpleasant," [4] and if you can pray about it, all the more power too you, plenty of people pray during hard times, to center themselves in a higher power is beneficial to your health, the power of not knowing what to do, and believing in a power greater than yourself, works for self. Ever wonder how that happens, you can have a terrible day, then wake up, and have everything be okay, sometimes a little rest and accomplishment will bring you joy in life, maybe momentary satisfaction in life, with yourself, but what keeps you going, that positive momentum without adding things into their life, such as shopping, going to the gym, getting a boyfriend etc. To handle the discomfort of future in life, the need to have to be happy, sometimes less is more, therapy is one thing, but you have to be present and in action to be living life on your own? Its your core self you need to work on, in order for all other things to happen, so lighten up, we only have a few years to rock on gratitude, not resentments, practice generosity, not shame. I mean do you really think anyone cares who you got f-ked by 2013, of course not matter as to who you are now, no, will it interfere with your future ability to begin a new relationship now, yes, then why so, don't allow things go, come to accept your past as a part of your learning curve, it takes some longer than most to accept themselves, forgive yourself for the crap, and there will be days you shine, and look like a million bucks, the only difference between those two versions of you, is how you are taking care of yourself! So never give up, take everything with a grain of salt, "in one ear out the other" my mother always tells me, don't let you down in life, they may not know you're doing your best, and if you are, keep doing your best, how often we give up at those points in life, is the source of discomfort remind yourself of that, its their discomforts in life, resulting from their own happiness in life, not being fulfilled, the well being of others, or you can ignore the discomforts of others, similarly, you can either acknowledge your discomforts in life, and relationships, and cause further discomfort around you, or you can adjust your settings to be more comfortable with yourself, and around others.

you have in life, and what you know or don't know about life. The more you put out there, the more discomfort you will feel, that's a reality. The more acceptance you build for yourself, the less it will matter what voices you hear and think less of how others are reacting and responding. Practice good writing, and honest prose. It takes time to get comfortable in your own skin, especially as a writer or blogger, so own it, don't be afraid of doing your best that's all that matters, and allow everything else for you in life, to fall into place.

Experiencing Avoidance ...

11/25/2019

Avoidance occurs in our lives, when we're not sure what we're doing and not sure where we're going. It happens in relationships, at work, and in exercise. So much of what we need to do often gets put to the back burner in life, in place of what's not as important to us, time on social media. These things are enjoyable tasks, but do they really make us happy. Only if they contribute to completing goals that we generally avoid. It's all about good timing, things won't always feel right, and not everything will be perfect, sometimes you have to follow your whims, and take risks. You'd be surprised of how much can get done when we do the work we need to do when we don't feel like doing the work we need to do. There were moments when I was into it, and there were moments, when I had to force myself to do the work each week, but for the most part, I did it. After graduating from law school, I kept going, taking time off from work, to write my dissertation, and made time to accomplish my goal. It took longer than expected to accomplish, time for projects, time for exercise, anything that you have to do a little bit of each day to add up to more. I don't set myself behind in life. Avoidance occurs when we are trying to "escape from difficult thoughts and feelings" and "include avoidant behaviors in accomplishing what we need to do to get to where we want to be in life, adding unnecessary stress and anxiety to our plate. [1] First of all, sometimes, we forget what's important to us, spending time with family, going to the gym, hanging out with friends, texting old friends. On some days, I wonder if half of what gets done is even that important, don't become a machine in life, act and live with purpose, know what you can always ask someone, what's the purpose for me doing this or that, and how will it help me to achieve my goals in life. For example, during the interview, was where do I see myself, professionally, and how I would like to grow through this job opportunity, if you're not sure, ask your employer, and your own time, maxing out at a job, that someone else may be better suited for emotionally and physically, we get physically fit, we want to do, and that can include work. Why it's important to have things be going well for you personally before you start working, so you can be part of the workforce, when you have other things that need to get done, such as schoolwork, this can make it hard to focus at work, at least that's what I feel. "Put it all together" and I'm glad. Note, all your avoidant behavior adds up, "People who live with avoidance are often depriving themselves of more when it's occurring and do your best to "stop and reflect on how you engaged in avoidance behaviors throughout your day," that's one thing I don't wait until the last minute to get your life together, I highly recommend starting your career in your 20s, do NOT wait until you're 34 like I did, but for me it's more important to work, than it is to write, and in order to be a good writer, I need to have confidence, and in order to have confidence, I need to work, not directly, but indirectly, similarly, situate yourself in life, to which as you are accomplishing goals, in one area of life, watch other areas. For example, dating, what made me attractive to him, was that I had an interest in getting fit, not because I was fit, I'm overweight right now, but because I was improving upon myself, it all matters, whether you like it or not. No, it's not important to be attractive, but yes it is important to be healthy, approachable and nice to look at, -additionally these are factors not obvious about getting a job, but SO important to getting a job, applying for a job, that's keeping you from living life, and start thinking positively about yourself. Today in therapy I told my psychiatrist that if I'm not reading, why I think I self-harmed, so if I know my happiness is contingent upon reading and running, then to not read or run, would be putting myself in a bad mood, and how I feel about myself, at the end of each day, accomplished or not. If you want more positive attentions in life, you have to go out and do it, within, and then share with the world. That's called energy, feeling good about yourself, it doesn't come in a pill, you make it yourself.

6 Keys to Work Productivity ...

11/24/2019

1. Maintain a Schedule
2. Keep Track of Your Progress
3. Pace Yourself, Be Task Oriented
4. Stay Present and Be Happy with Where You Are
5. Set Goals, and Better Yourself
6. Be Patient, Change Doesn't Happen Overnight

As nytimes.com states, “trust small increments.” [1] You can't expect small changes to add up overnight, that means, as you prepare for which strategies work best for you. “Don't dwell on your mistakes,” [2] sure we slip up on occasion, whether its being late to work, or stress to your day, making it difficult to perform well, don't get distracted by these errors, get proactive, theres always time to make up -Multi-tasking is important, but you have to get good at something before you are able to do multiple things at once, especially if your good at a job, that you move through your day systematically, without having to push yourself too hard. Note “Your ability to get things done in a short time, whether it's for five minutes or an hour.” [3] If a distraction reduced environment is what you need, in order to stay focused, then work. [4] Maintain a Schedule, inc.com reminds us that, “There are only so many hours in the day, so making the most of your time is thinking too hard about what needs to get done, that means prioritizing tasks based upon their level of difficulty, “Steve Olenski recommends “can be done in two minutes or less, do it immediately.” [6] Similarly, inc.com advocates against multi-tasking explaining that “attempting to do too many things at once reduces productivity.” [7] You don't need to be perfect, “bang out your task to the best of your ability and move on.” [8] Being busy is one thing, but “productivity shouldn't be confused with busyness.” [9] We set goals for ourselves, because for each goal we accomplish a bigger goal. Productivity, as we make changes to our daily routines, and refine our work ethic, bettering ourselves in the process, is what work is all about. It's smarter not harder, “Productivity means achieving effective results in as short amount of time as possible, leaving you with more time and a larger amount of energy points each day, so to spend them wisely. Similarly I recommend not to waste too much energy on distractions in life. Don't ruminate about how long something will take to get done, the less you get done, why its important to be task oriented, so that you eventually get your work done, requiring a simple shift in focus.

Basic Necessities ...

What are your basic necessities in life? Food, clothing, water, and shelter. Beyond those basic necessities, what other things are required for happiness and belongingness? According to simplypsychology.org, Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs, is a motivational theory of human needs. [1] I believe that the first four needs ... we [must first] satisfy,” which include responding to our “deficiency” needs. According to Maslow, when our “deficiency” needs are met, the stronger our desire to fulfill those needs becomes, stating that “deficiency needs arise due to deprivation ... motivate people to seek them out first, followed by love and belongingness needs, esteem needs, until you ultimately realize your self-actualization needs. [3] Self-actualization is the highest level of Maslow's hierarchy, and it is the only one that is not a deficiency need.

and achieve our 'ideal self'" and refer to our "being' needs; these include personal and creative self-growth, which are achieved through important to becoming a self-actualized person, in fact the greater the "disparity between our internal self and the external" is what mo You cannot be focused on "internal gain" alone, to feel fulfilled, some of that fulfillment is based upon what you have to offer the wor needed in the world, and that you are doing your best to help others, meaning "The desire to assist others is borne out of an internal se addition to being of help to others, acceptance requires one to "act and think within the accepted social norms and according to the exp and find yourself, having to explain yourself so often, doing what is right is more important than contesting what is going on, thinking natural autonomy and solitude, but rather alienation from others, because of poor practices in troubled times, saying the wrong things, work of others. Don't be that person. It helps to be opinionated and to have a positive perspective in life, but be sure not to put others c frowned upon by others, its by positive attentions one grows, through a positive questioning about life, not by negative attentions, and best self, if in public you want to be recognized similarly for your wellness, that means making good use of your time alone: "private t thinking about their problems) and physically (i.e. acting out to identify strengths and weaknesses)," describes those most successful a in life. Some of the smartest minds are "capable of seeing things from new perspectives" and are great problem solvers, its because the experiences," which is how most feel on a good day, running errands and working, and after having an action packed day. How do tho thought to produce invigorating feelings such as inspiration, physical and mental vitality, and a renewed sense of perspective." [9] So and its not just how many days are in your life that you should be proud of, but how many days you have to go, to be proud of yourself and you wont always hear what you want to hear. If looking back is causing you harm, then stop looking back, if thinking too much ab You know you best. Continue to "connect, communicate, learn, and share knowledge have the capacity to improve ... our lives. The sl [10] don't stop growing!

Does it Matter Who you Know? ...

In the world of blogging it doesn't matter how social you are in real life, all that matters is that you have lived life, and had enough experience to get to a phase in blogging where you will want to become more and more accessible to others and extend a hand. That is, as you build an opportunity to share the work of others not just your own, and continue to build your own network of people, you think deserving of a chance to be able to work, share your work, help others who would also like their work to be shared, and then expand upon the professional success of others, websites, and be a real writer. For some reason, I feel like blogging is not considered real writing, not like writing in books, but that doesn't matter. Blogs have been turned into books over the years, as friesenpress.com told me, that's possible. -At what point in your career does networking need help, and how does one get started networking? For some people, making friends, and professional acquaintances is all "a matter of knowing the right people." [1] And some are born into that privilege of knowing successful people. I am someone who grew up in Breckenridge, Colorado, many children whose parents were very successful, I had a very nice upbringing, and not ashamed to share about where I grew up, and how I grew up, some of us remained friends, and others of us parted. I was someone who grew up inviting everyone to my house, and helping to assemble a group of girls our senior year in college, and we became the best of friends, meeting though our guy friends, my neighbor in Boulder, and went to CU. Right around now, in your 30s, you tend to miss the old times, and prefer your lifestyle then as compared to your current personal endeavors, which doesn't always include having friends standing by, to hang out with every weekend, which is what it was like in school "the importance of building "what we know," but they never once touch on the importance of building "who we know." Successful people tend to think that we too deserve to live successful lives, but that doesn't always happen, not if you've been to rehab and the hospital with followers, and humbly accept my self-worth as a blogger, not as a multi-millionaire writer, not just yet, I don't even think that's possible. That I love to write, and by following my dreams, this has opened doors for me professionally, and socially, being able to get jobs, in school, and provide advocacy online, which was who I was in college a crisis hotline counselor certified 2004, this is my niche, being a writer, that's always been my calling in life. Although I have gotten in trouble, in the past, that has not stopped me from bettering myself, so that within the helping professions, and they don't expect you to be perfect in order to help others, only that you have a willingness to train and can help others through any process of recovery. As someone who has worked in the helping professions it has always been about my own growth, you know or asking my parents for help, every job I have gotten I have gotten on my own, I have made no connections in life, to get jobs in media, my social network is composed of people I do not know in real life, including my readers and my following, and whether they grow, or read old posts on Facebook, and seen me battle bipolar, anyone reading now, Im sure is glad I am where I am now, as compared to before. Social media is your "living network the most important part of being successful." [3] As foxbusiness.com states, "being liked pays off in the game of dodge ball, and that "Most people would rather hire someone they are familiar with or comes recommended with a strong track record online, if its helping you to get jobs, my Boss even recommended more social media presence, and Im glad with her approvals I can build on what your needs are, privacy, or helping others, focus not on the marketing of yourself, but on the service you have to provide.

Re: Public Health ...

11/21/2019

I just visited the LAPD Station to discuss "public health" concerns, and how to respond to the health of others, as well as those who have friends and loved ones. While it would be helpful to hash out what the issues are, everyone is different, and sometimes what may seem like a violation by HIPAA and their Right to Privacy as victims and any others who may be currently suffering in life. Maybe not for the same issues. "public health" concerns on this blog, as I am not a specialist when it comes to public safety and public health, which is why I went to court on a slippery slope of blame, and civil penalties, for the wellness of others. For some reason putting myself at risk of harm, does everyone else's sharing of my thoughts is not geared toward the sharing of my past as that is not helpful to me, nor to my audience when I am not doing well, therefore its okay for me not to discuss what my diagnosis is or what issues Im currently facing, if it does me more harm than good, since its 2020. [1] According to tfah.org recent underfunding resulted in the delayed implementation of a "system focused on prevention, preparation, and response" which is much needed at this time. [2] Moreover, "A rapid rise in deaths from drugs, alcohol, and suicide represent an urgent crisis." [3] I am a secondary victims, surely tertiary victims, as overhearing stories about those who have been affected, will not intrude upon the positive surroundings of others as contributing or interfering with the wellness of specific individuals. As someone who writes online, my hope is for me doing well, like most things in life, life goes on with or without you, not one person any more important than the other, and if you are ready to step up to plate and provide much needed care and assistance to those in need. Im not for coddling my audience, that makes no sense during times of need, and be a gentle voice of reason, that not my job to mother others, Im a blogger, my tone will always be supportive and helpful, been through, and do allow me to maintain my boundaries on subjects as you don't know whether I am personally affected or not, based on how they are deeply affected, and some wish not to make things about themselves, nor be compelled to speak their mind, if the issue is not a benefit to blogging, one of which is that it helps to improve our social skills during times of crisis, forcing us to correspond and share our experiences and apply ourselves, that "synergy" according to savdizayn.com is a positive benefit to your health, to not become isolated during times of crisis, to join in or contribute to the "feedback" that exists online as to the times, and the many perspectives that people have to offer, to help others. However you cannot like most relationships become overly dependent on one persons viewpoint to make sense of the times, or the experience responds differently, that's just a fact of blogging, you are either approachable and in person, as accessible as you are to everyone online, no lawsuit, my hesitancy to make friends, and when I do make friends, back off, that's because I have fear of suit, and also when my issue is not one person, who has their own issues in life to deal with, sometimes I worry if my distance has been taken personally, by those to whom I have gone of, for whatever reasons, have difficulty being social nowadays. Im sure that will change.

For Everyone we have lost, Stages of the Grieving Process ...

Today may not be my best day, but better to get the conversation started, than to say nothing at all. I think a moment of pausing and thinking makes it easier to process events, and to manage our losses in life, and be a support system to those who have lost loved ones. Grieving is important to manage ones wellness, in order to be strong for others, that's what is required to lift others from hardships in life, is by being there. Although it may feel lonely sometimes, and wonder why you are working so hard, or where you are headed, so long as you are well, then your life, and if you are living day to day, do your best! The National Helpline to assist those grieving from losses due to mental health (4357), 24/7, to find a support group nearest you, and other community-based organizations, and who provides resources for coping that "When you have experienced the loss of a good friend it may be hard to put your feelings into words. You may feel a mixture of emotions without your friend." [2] Reminding us to "focus on taking one step at a time." [3] While "honoring the memory of your friend" there are (1) Anger (3) Trying to Find a Fix (4) Deep Sadness, and (5) Acceptance, but not Forgetting ... [4] Be sure to reach out to people to help you. "mountain of grief may not be an easy one to defeat, but its certainly not undefeatable." [5] Grieving is a process, everyone experiences it. No matter of how we deal with those losses, and come out of those losses in life, for better or worse, "Remember, your grief is valid, and it's shared – other friends, family or partner. You need to recognize your right to grieve." [6] Later in life, friendships are hard to maintain, and our communications" [7] to our loved ones, and to our friends, I know this as a law student, there were many years, while I was in school. I had a lot of time to spend with friends, and very much regret that lost time. Focus on now. According to whatsyourgrief.com, "Aristotle described friendship as a body." Plato reflected deeply and extensively on the nature of friendship," [8] they will always be a part of your lives as having lived with you. Do with your life now presently, that affects how you turn out in spite of those losses you experience in life. There's so much pressure to be proud of yourself. Note, that "The pain of grief can also disrupt your physical health, making it difficult to sleep, eat, or even think straight." [9] Remember to be patient with yourself, rather than ignore the issues to wish for a quick process to "naturally unfold" its less important "to be strong in the face of loss" and allow yourself to recognize the emotions you are feeling.

Helpguide.org suggests to handle the grieving process in this way:

1. "Acknowledge your pain.
2. Accept that grief can trigger many different and unexpected emotions.
3. Understand that your grieving process will be unique to you.
4. Seek out face-to-face support from people who care about you.
5. Support yourself emotionally by taking care of yourself physically.
6. Recognize the difference between grief and depression." [10]

"We know from a review of 148 studies on friendship that there is a 50% increased likelihood of survival for participants with stronger friendships. Through all uphill battles in life, you never know who is still having difficulty coping and needs a friend to talk to or the support of their abilities in life. If you are who you surround yourself with, then it's everyone's equal responsibility to care and be cared for among those you care about. Your friends always, past or present, and don't lose hope, wellness is always on its way, the longer you believe in your ability to overcome, the longer you prolong the process of recovery, the longer it takes to begin the process.

When Your Intuition Fails You ... [personal]

11/21/2019

Intuition is by definition, “the ability to understand something immediately, without the need for conscious reasoning.” [1] According to www.helpguide.org/articles/grief/coping-with-grief-and-loss.htm know valid solutions to problems and decision making.” [2] How can one strengthen their intuition, without having knowledge of a solution? How do we deal with a problem take place, how and why? If by referring to your intuition you mean your ability to “conceptualiz[e] the object of your thought, or to have acquired knowledge for coping just yet, and while in the middle of “brainstorming” phases you may rely more heavily on an “intuitive” sense. When does intuition fails you? Your ability to brainstorm and grasp concepts may be slowed, or you may experience difficulty processing and organizing your thoughts, or thinking and why. Any time you don’t make complete sense, you run the risk of being used as bait, for understanding you, aside from your own wisdom shared without a filter, because it gives them clues, they think as to your internal psyche, digressions, or hidden valuations within the core of your beliefs, and or understandings that gets put into question, thus causing one discomfort as someone who is picked at or preyed upon, or accepted as they are, and not be minimized by conditions as a label, to be read with the lens of being someone who is this this or that, or to be interpreted as though they are related to that core group of people, and therefore share the same core deficits in life, or for there to be a model to do we consider role models? People who are well adjusted, and not people with records, who are later declared bi, or who have bipolar disorder, it doesn’t matter for what reasons, and for the reasons for one attempt to be read into as being my fault or anyone else does me and even if it retraumatizes me, and retriggers me into bipolar or delusional thinking, which is no ones fault but my own, whenever you are compelled to do so, they are not in agreement with how you are living your life, or how you think, or believe the past to have occurred, that is a point of contention. On those interests, sides can be taken, and by the taking of sides, people do their best from those points on to either reinforce themselves and go, and not reference the past or use the past for reference for comprehending their now. If its not for those reasons I committed suicide in 2009, @mymollydoll, and felt compelled to explain why suicidal 2009, after I was not allowed to talk about being suicidal in the past and had to say its okay to talk about their condition as overcome, and for other people, any mention of their condition, or attempts to explain to others how they feel, harm to others, without regard for the harm to the person who is sharing how they feel, and not being accepted as normal, for having survived.

"You Only Know What You Know" ...

Ive heard this phrase more than once this year, reading, and while attending a Novel Writing Conference by Writers Digest ... “You only know what you know, and what you do not know, that is true knowledge.” [1] According to brainyquote.com, Confucius states that “to know what you know and what you do not know, that is true knowledge.” [1] unless we know, we can only write from what we know, and until we become aware or upon being educated about a concept, can visualize only knowing what we know, somewhat protects us from the uncertainty of now knowing, nor being able to predict future circumstances, no way of knowing what the future holds, or to be cognizant of something we are unaware of.” [2] In other words, “there’ll be times when aware that there may be things we can't possibly foresee, because "we don't know what we don't know." [3] When it comes to "knowledge metrics" and the difficulty of maintaining accuracy, when it comes to gathering predictions based upon a "users' preferences and practical effect links," a "mental model" has not clearly yet been established. Im not an expert, by I took a Biopsychology course at CU Boulder understand the synaptic cleft and the firing of neurons in the brain. Much like the firing of neurons in the brain, information is disseminated knowledge, which I believe to be the information that does stick, with (1) a solid understanding of how it got there, (2) where it came from. When things down, it kind of wanders in your memory bank, without enough information, many things are difficult to speak about, but with enough information, in a negotiable way, that can be processed by most, is what good journalism to me is all about, condensing information into more than what they know, and relating to more than what they know, that is what makes good writing, not just being well spoken, but being easy to read, makes sense, and is more than just paraphrasing information that the general population already knows about life, that's to put it within a larger framework, that would be making knowledge, in oneself, and on paper, to others. Why are bloggers so popular, because they tell stories from their lives, as applied to what topics they are speaking about, "For sense-making and knowledge sharing anecdotes are primary conditions which recreate to some extent the feeling of being ... in the state of "needing to know." [6] What does that mean, it means that when you have read something, they know, and hear differently as coming from you, or hearing information for the first time, become frustrated in your audience, who is patiently reading along, waiting for you to solidify your point, or make up some unique conclusion to your first point. [5] I can continue ... thank you]. According to blog.startwithwhy.com, it's the leader's responsibility to gather data, for making decisions, and provide information that you know and you don't know what you don't know. The reason a leader needs to ask questions -- and lots of them -- is to gain more information so that the best decisions can be made." [6] So much for, Cambridge Analytica, collecting Facebook data. [7] We get the point, "see one do one" -- we scan that information on google so it shows up on our pinterest, and the ads on our website, are based upon what our traffic is looking for. If we are interested, an ad to them is made on our site. Now that's the cool things about automatic marketing online. How can we do the same for information acquired by people, to predict what's to come, can we predict what's to come based on what people know, or what information we are exposed to? Can a bipolar diagnosis or suicide attempt, what's causing this radical series of events? Word of Mouth seems to be a human asset, that's not just a human asset, but have come to acquire strength in numbers when required to, now with the magazine culture fading guided side-conversations are not limited to no, Im just saying, we either don't know what to talk about, or we talk about something we've heard but know nothing about, newsfeed headlines, but not enough information stored in our memory banks, that's simply due to now having the time to keep up and read along. About this before, as a writer on Twitter and on squares on Instagram, I only read quotes on Twitter from accounts I followed, and wrote about incorporating google.com, researching topics, with citations, where does wisdom come from, its either a shared understanding, or an understanding speaking to a third party, sharing in a general way a lesson you have learned or a unique way of understanding a concept about life, with the "accuracy" issue, what is accurate information? They always tell us to be balanced thinkers, critical thinkers, when one is logical about it doesn't require a conclusion, and sits well, that's thinking critically, and balanced, and when we are balanced from our own perspective, we don't offend any person to whom is running opposite to those advices given, ie advice with responding to other parties in their lives, that's one of the ways to understand life, and function in life, irrespective of what others think, if we are thinking only what others are thinking, or basing our thinking from our own standpoint, part of life requires you to be somewhat defensive like a driver of a car, the better able you are at so you can understand, and comprehend the times in a way, that you will still be able to function among others, without worry, easier said than done. As a blogger, I don't even hold myself to that standard as a writer, but Im expected to write new information everyday. That is researching information based upon the information I either think then write about, or read then write about, I guess that would be the difference between guided information which could then be researched and backed up, I was taught to make the deductions first, then do the research, that is how I am able to provide a citation be able to support what I am saying, or support anything said by another.

I do this sometimes, I go to bed, then wake up at 2AM and start my day, the rest of the day usually doesn't go well, super lethargic, and off right, I accomplish everything I need to get done for the day before the day has even started. For some reason, that makes me feel like I'm getting half as much done, at a normal days pace. I used to think that feeling ahead in life, meant you actually have to be physically ahead of the game. Having a strong early morning routine, does have its benefits. I remember getting As in Law School, when I used to wake up at 5AM. Kardashian was just beginning her modeling career, that was Spring 2011, I ended up winning a Witken Award in Advanced Legal Writing, much like the rest of those who ended up becoming successful since then. So what's keeping me from achieving in life, it must be my attitude. When everything was going wrong and nothing would go right, there were also moments when I felt like everything was going just as planned. How much positive thinking does it take to stay well, and how much of our daily routines factors into our ability to be successful, feel like we deserve to become? According to psychologytoday.com, "every day is one in which you can make a resolution to improve your life," [1] to live a positive life, then make sure your outlook in life matches up. I really hate the expression that "life is short" there's really nothing wrong with everything that leads up to different points in life, like a fast forward button backwards. Who does that? I know I'm not the only one, who lives fast. That's why I'm writing this blog post. That either that means that I'm dissatisfied with my life the way it is and wish it were better, or I just say. When it comes to assessing our outlook in life, mayoclinic.org tells us to ask ourselves: "Is your glass half-empty or half-full? How do you reflect your outlook on life, your attitude toward yourself, and whether you're optimistic or pessimistic — and it may even affect your health." [2] According to huffpost.com, "Regardless of where you have been or where you are going, your outlook on life can change for the better if you allow it." [3] Comparing my 2013 to now, when getting started as a blogger, I thought quotes was the way to get likes, and began writing that way, and I was a major quotes blogger on Twitter at the time, and who created a platform that automatically sends Tweets to your Twitter, I used to tweet a quote a week, back into my feed, I thought that was so cool. -Having a positive outlook, doesn't necessarily mean that you have a plan in life, or know like who you are, you appreciate and value where you are now in life, forgive yourself often, and don't stop thinking positively, your t

Be Yourself ...

What does it mean to be yourself? If this doesn't apply to you, then don't think too much of it, its basically said to people, who are not comfortable with themselves. No all of us need help is this department. Some of us, more well-adjusted than most, but if youre not comfortable alone, and never to fret over what you are not. Inc.com encourages us to "be authentic," meaning know your limitations in life, and either "outsource[ing] jobs or tasks that you are not comfortable doing." [1] How does this apply to the everyday person, respect yourself enough to be comfortable with yourself, is not allowing yourself or your emotions to get the best of you, let alone enable anyone to control you, you are a person, bringing out your worst. It can be a self-aggrandizing experience to recite affirmations to yourself each day in order to feel good. A lot of things to bring hope back into our life, but how many of us read along, but don't practice those skills in our lives. What is an easy way to literally having to write out a list of all the things we are proud about for being ourselves. The "authentic way, ... gives you a better chance when it comes to authenticity, Stephen Joseph (psychologist) explains "how everyone can discover their true self and transform their lives Just drop off, drop your defenses, studies have shown that those in "relationships in which they feel accepted, understood and valued" live more and begin to flourish. [4] Authenticity is what "makes us unique." [5] So stop conforming, "if you truly want to be remarkable you must first drop all the opinions you hold about life, means "accept yourself and stop seeking approval" [7] from others, learn how to trust your intuition in class, without anyone telling you what to say, already half knowing how to respond to the professor in a way to which they want to hear, but practice less these days. You still have that inner student in you! That's called following your intuition. Don't compare your best to what you want out of life, you cannot love yourself, if you wish you were someone else in life, at some point you have to accept where your at and we can live vicariously through others as tagalongs, but even in order to be a follower of anyone as a friend, you must first have some of yourself surrounded by your presence too. As tinybuddha.com says, "There is no shortcut to authenticity. It requires commitment and real inner work. Don't look at their past, or wishing they would have lived life differently, and that if they lived life differently, then they would be better off as comp take place you cannot could've should've would've your way there, it requires a "daily practice" [10] of creating a "daily intention to love all aspects of your life, as imperfect as you may or may not be, love yourself, and through your changes show that you acknowledge when you are themselves, its who witnesses your change that matters at that point, not your ability to explain yourself so much, about how you've changed on their own terms, you cannot expect people to be happy for you, and for you to shine, when you think its time for you to shine, that's not your inner self, stay connected to "your truth and your authenticity will radiate through you." [12] I used to think that my Therapist was their own truth, I guess that was her way of explaining to me, that there are two sides to every story, and different ways in which people see where one another stands in relationship to how life is being lived currently, some will think life is perfect just the way it is, and others will think that their hardships are real and due to some cosmic force against them that's keeping them from achieving in life, whatever types of doubts and fears to come to fruition, and stop enabling others to think about you in that way, by catering to those opinions and judgments of you, your best self, who are they to keep you from living life, we all sleep and wake up, the same, we are all human, allow the days to pass, let others, you too can enjoy the spontaneity of life again, if you are willing to let go, of these false premises from which you think you are living by your own terms in life again, that's empowerment, and independence, moving away from self-diagnosing as this this or that, and feeling the same joys that life has to offer, and experience the same happiness's that others get to enjoy. Book Review: "You Are a Badass ..."

As an introvert reading this book, she sounds like your hyper best friend, trying to amp you up and motivate you about all the positive things that take hold of your perspective, humbling you down to the world traveler that she is. Her perspective on living, is mostly optimistic and she has access to, describing our "limitless Universe [as] overflowing with miracles ... [and says that] the Universe loves us so much." (page 39) question whether that is the case, so how much do we love our universe in return. As adults, she describes our responsibility to care for the well being of those around us, and while its okay to think about the past backtracking, sometimes only for the purposes of learning from our past, futures, and "let [the past] go forever." (page 39). She's so smart, and full of wisdom, the book is more like an anthology of all the positive things to start living life again, and achieving your dreams, "being present and connected to Source Energy" she calls it. (page 39). One of my friends, Wattles, the author of The Science of Getting Rich, although reading this book, was not about learning how to make money and get over someone else went through the process of being a low-income earning writer to a high income earning writer, and the steps she went through.

“you created the reality you now exist in with your thoughts, which means you can use the very same power of thought to change it.” change your feelings in IOP at UCLA for thought disorders, that’s by the same mechanism that people are able to overcome mental health and their health, as compared to others. It is more like our right “to think what you want to think is to think the truth, regardless of appearance, able to come to know and love ourselves by “learning to guide [our] thoughts, [and] change [our] liv[es].” (page 93) Remember when in reflection of themselves, Jen describes them as “the things that bother us about other people bother us because they remind us of some of our “Source Energy” affect what comes in and out of our lives, and why is it so important to be maintained. The “truth” is that “we attract what we are.” (page 178) Therefore if you want to be surrounded by people who “help [you] ... grow and figure out [your] issues, ... seize the opportunity.” (page 178) She later encourages us to find mentors (page 223), and to get help if we need help, and when is a better time to do so, than now, in this book, you are looking for a solution to your equation for happiness, if you’ve not already found it. If its fear that’s keeping you from a solution, she says “we think that we need to try and take charge of the situation (fear based thinking) instead of having faith and gratitude (positive thinking).” (page 226) I really enjoyed reading this quote, it makes me feel like what I need is already out there, and that decreases the need to do something from scratch to build my happiness for myself moving forward, as a blogger. Maybe try less, to be new, and be more myself. This is my own, a book review is a good start, toward giving back to who has helped me as a writer, and a person, the books Ive read. Sorry Kaitlyn, your review, just got started. She describes this process of letting love back into your life as “surrendering” when you surrender you “create space for the most manifest good feeling[s] experiences and things that are presently outside your realm of awareness (aka miracles).” (page 227) When you are in your surroundings, and really soak in the moment, whether it be for two minutes while driving, or walking its okay to listen and examine what is around you, know it, stay in the moment. If “you can only do that which you already know how to do” then start being happy with where you are, and be more knowledgeable, don’t put too much pressure on yourself, at the present moment, if I had ever thought I was incapable of being successful, and applied anyways, despite my 990 SAT and beginning LSAT score of 143, which I raised to a 152 after taking 4 LSAT prep classes. Each chapter with “love yourself” and a quote, until eventually she tells us that we are a “badass,” up until that point, we are expected to have excitement and red carpets or photographers capturing our lives, is not within reach. If that’s what you want in life, then surely you can get it. I thought losing 50lbs was the key to beauty, I was sorely mistaken, happier now, thanks to the meds Im on, Ive been forced to let go of my willingness to keep pushing through new challenges, not shrink from them back into your comfort zone, that separates the successful from the unsuccessful. Intimidated by Jen Sincero I would not be writing a book review, which she probably might read, nor consider taking her course on becoming a badass. That someone who wrote so in depth was rejected by many publishers before settling down with John Murray Press. [2] That just goes to show, “you are a version of yourself” (page 187) and don’t let anyone convince you otherwise, that youre anything short of being great!

How to Have a Great Day ...

(1) Wake Up with a Daily Intention: [1] Whether that’s scheduling your week in advance, wake up with a plan for your day, about the day, that same feeling tends to carry over to the next day, and its not until I start doing something, that that feeling goes away. Schedule, and make sure you have things to do, besides work if you’re home.

(2) Start Your Day Doing Something You Love: “Splurge on the good coffee, have something delicious to make for yourself, and accounts if that brings you joy.” [2] Shower, practice good hygiene, and all that good stuff. I never leave the house, without washing my face, if I ever leave home without putting on makeup, the rest of my day tends to go badly, feeling sluggish. I never know who you’ll bump into, or who will see you, it makes sense not to get lazy when it comes to maintaining your appearance.

(3) Exercise: A day without exercise, or some type of movement, is an unsuccessful day in my book. As a runner, you know, the next run becomes more difficult to accomplish, running works on your momentum. Just like running, so does exercise. Each day, to make you feel good, then it will be that much easier to improve upon your workout routine, rather than starting from scratch. I got a gym membership, to go running at night. Its not the best time to exercise, but I always sleep like a rock. So fit in your exercise.

(4) Go Slow and Stay in the Moment: Set your alarm, and give yourself time to wake up, and pick your outfit for the day. Go through your closet and know where everything is the night before, resting easy, not panicking with you cant find something in your wardrobe. In fact positivityblog.com suggests that they actually got more done, starting their day slowly. [3] -Don’t start your day in a rush, but make time to stay in touch with reality and whats going on in the world. Some suggestions are to, read positive affirmations, and practice gratitude.

book that inspires you. I just went to the bookstore today and bought 8 new books, I tend to read a pile of books ever

(5) Make Time to Be Grateful and Keep a Journal: [4] Who doesn't like progress. Its always beneficial to our he ourselves to who we were then, and see where we are now, and notice whats working for us and whats not. Especial although that may be recommended against, who doesn't check their blood pressure with a smart watch and count th to get into. Be in control of your health, be grateful for the day, each day, and stay positive. Practicing gratitude mea surroundings, which can also be mindfulness too. It means "Notice all the good things you normally take for granted

All or Nothing Thinking ...

When negative thoughts are getting the best of you, ask yourself if you are having "all or nothing thinking" and do your best to change lead you to better feelings, and better visualized outcomes. By definition cogbtherapy.com states: "All-or-nothing thinking refers to thi performance was totally good or totally bad. If you are not perfect, then you are a failure." [1] For example, in a previous post, I said I and then said, if Im not on meds will become suicidal again, that's an example of negative thinking, to speak of yourself in a way, that you cannot survive without meds, or that your survival is based upon taking medications, for some people, that is an example of negat have given up in life, or on themselves. Taking meds does not mean that you are a failure, although people on meds may not understan is on meds, that it is because of their own doing, or that its their fault, they have to be on meds. More power to them. It takes a lot of d upon getting help, being put on meds, to correct our health ailments in life, that's just life, sometimes, you need meds to recover from without meds. I was one who functioned without meds until college, put on Adderrall for a learning disability, that was my choice, to r meds, than struggle with no meds, getting Bs and Cs. Don't allow the pressure to excel in life, to cause you to question your abilities in to go backwards in life and live life differently, you just have to continue doing your best, no matter what your circumstances are. And distortion is an automatic way of repeatedly interpreting a situation that causes us to not consider other ways of thinking about it." [2] youre feeling off, chances are you can change your thinking to resituate yourself, in life, so that you can understand life in a way that's going right, doesn't mean that everything is wrong, or things will continue to go wrong, sometimes even no matter how nervous you a makes it easier to live each day without worry, and doing what we can to prevent the furtherance of disturbances, is doing our part, no environmental degradation, or thinking that everyones dying, and because everyone is dying means that apart of you will die inside, d in life, to affect your better judgments, you should not need meds to feel good, but there are meds to make you feel good, you should r not need to do a lot of things to enjoy life, but that is our right to enjoy life, and to live life, free from fear, free from fear of dying, a response to fear producing incidences we hear and see on the news. Just like my disabilities don't affect others abilities from making inhibit our understanding of the beauty of life, and whats to live for, eachother, and for oneself. Just like people in recovery recover fro caused them to drink and use, we hope that not all will be overcome with such selfishness, when it comes to the recovery of our societ as much about one another, with compassion, for the wellness of others, not judgment, with hope and faith think about tomorrow, not can be done to prevent the spread of disease. Mental health issues are not a disease, although some may be treated as though they bear an AIDS/HIV doctor to be blood tested, for my medications, to make sure I was being prescribed the proper doses, and no I did not co friend. That's not how disease is spread, by word of mouth, and never convince yourself otherwise, that the spoken word can cause ill cannot be cured without positive thinking, or proper thinking. We live during educated times, although parts of the world, or underedu and able to hold an opinion, that means you grew up with the majority on earth, who have families that take care of them, took care of lives in return for their offspring, or work, and help support society, as a functioning member of society. Who's Country's goal is it to goal is for everyone to work, or be taken care of by someone who works, and if all else fails, have a government, that can help take car problematic to society and committing crimes. If you haven't been to rehab go, if you haven't worked, apply, if you need to share you you need help, talk, if its an emergency, call 911, if you feel unstable and don't feel like yourself, call your doctor, and if its just worry considered a role model, well then welcome to real world, lift yourself, before lifting others, and be less judgmental of those who care, people settle down, nows a good time. At what point, is everything good enough, right now. At what point, do you stop thinking about being happy with where you are right now. Most people cant sleep at night, that's a serious problem, I was put on Ambien for two years and Ambien. That's not addiction, that being put on a schedule, that not all were in agreement with nor approved of, because of the nature. At what point is it important for others who are not your caretakers or doctors, to stop being judgmental of those who are on meds, or life, based upon how they appear, look, or speak, as not refined enough.

Sensitive Subjects ...

11/17/2019

What is a sensitive subject? Anything that when brought up, causes inner turmoil to any bystander, who is affected by the reading or sometimes requires talking about problems out loud, most times problems are best dealt with speaking in private. However whenever someone has a responsibility to have some of these discussions out loud, just in case, but not always, so that these incidences don't happen again, nor to drink or do drugs, and we can continue to do our best to advise people to seek help when help is needed, and call hotlines and 911. I have health issues right now, but it really makes a difference to be reminded, of what resources are available, and to have easy access to those resources. Addressing Sensitive Issues ..." [1] include:

1. Be Proactive. ...
2. Be Prepared. ...
3. Be Direct. ...
4. Be Empathetic. ...
5. Be Helpful. ...
6. Be in Compliance. ...
7. Be There for Them.

Just like a personal crisis can affect our professional lives, I wonder if our personal crises affect the lives of others, as heard about. How much of that worry is about your health, and hoping you get better. I'm not a Doctor, so I wouldn't know what to say, but was raised to and upon asking my Doctor told me that Bipolar is not contagious. At what point then did you lose your grasp of reality? Upon drinking and relapsing on cocaine. Okay, so it seems that your mental health issues that actually led to suicide attempts was alcohol and drug culture of trust and transparency," are hallmarks of effective leadership and "communication is part of that." [2] Whenever someone comes forward, means listening, "The person has already put themselves in a vulnerable position by coming forward in the first place. It is important to have confidence you have in those who are helping you matters, to be open and willing to confide in your helper, what it is that is bothering you, or leads to additional mental health related problems. Its less important for you to explain your medical history out loud, that would put their life to, instead, look at your life in the positive. I was thinking this the other day, it would be less helpful to say that I struggled with mental health issues, that statement, that sends your audience backwards, instead, keep things brief, I struggled with mental health issues, and now I am doing things that affect your confidence in life mental health wise. When others don't believe in you, you feel less confident, and the more others baby you, feel, as though you have not come a long way, it can be a very defeating process, to open up to another about your mental health issues, who is not you to think like you, no two people think alike, everyone thinks differently, that's the beauty of being human, that people are in a process of care, that those who care for themselves, wont drink and do drugs, and that the fewer people who put their lives at risk of harm, who have managed to function in spite of their illnesses, will continue to be of service helping those currently struggling to come out of that mental health issues such as bipolar are life long, meaning I will be on meds for the rest of my life, that's not addiction, and unlike addiction because I become suicidal again. Some are better at dealing with reality than others, some find life more difficult than others, and with a manageable, that's life.

Finding the Time ...

Theres never a good time to think about life without feeling depressed whether it be over time, the past, history as it unfolds, your own where we are heading in life. That seems to be a natural reaction to responding to the unknown, that's our future, and where we see under our belts. However, its when things are not well, or not good, that we backtrack on future plans, and think more about right now importance, putting ourselves second to the needs of others, that's just called being human. So when is a good time to think about the [1] Propection is the process by which we imagine our futures, and make predictions based on what we have learned, it can be things books and movies. [2] How is our outlook determined? Do we base our wellness based on what we have in life, or on what is lacking to work toward achieving something in life, for the future, rather than getting something now for our hard work, such as going to school, later." [3] When we practice "delayed gratification" we "resist the temptation of an immediate reward in preference for a later reward. must learn to tolerate the discomfort of delayed gratification if we have a greater purpose or goal in mind." [5] Why is that? Because a be, when you are younger you rely heavily on reassurances in life, to know that you are going in the right direction in life, via grades, older, you get less feedback, and reassurances along the way to wellness, sure Doctors can help you, but eventually you have to contin and understand the difference between right and wrong, and follow the law, you should experience that much less anxiety about life, a order to conquer those acceptances and live free of those fears, you have to accept where you are and achieve happiness on your own, needed affirmation from others, to let you know you are doing well, we don't even get that much love back from a companion let alone trying to stay balanced, with less time for problems, including your problems, which at this point in time would be selfish to share out professional way, that leave less to worry about, except when the public has a right to know about whats occurring behind closed door resentment toward anyone they feel is responsible for contributing to causes for concern, or helping to alleviate those fears. How does helps to either set or change a tone that's been set, and continue to support the free flow of information online, that in return educates a assistance to developing a new understanding of how we see life, and aides us with the processing of events which have caused us con positive way, a reasonable means for understanding the present, without the added discord, and without fear causing potential. Shockin people as individuals were going through, that may not apply to what we need now, we are always changing, the information we recei each day as it comes, whether or not we can foresee our foreseeable future or the future of others, which gets lost when one falls ill or future, and think about everyones future, and what we're doing right now, taking things day by day, that's why they tell alcoholics to t drinking, which at those moments in time, requires all their focus, reevaluating their pasts, so that they can learn from their mistakes an second time, working on Step 2. There are systems for processing the past, your past, stick to what works, theres no need for example hows and whys about life, and just trying to live life free of fear, and find their sense of peace again. So yes, there is a lot of "delayed makes friends, maintain wellness, keep a job, and work so hard at my job, that I get paid at my job, that's having a lot of faith in myse the LAPD and check in with them often, just to make sure Im not stepping on anyones toes about things as discussed online, so theres time to develop our gifts and talents, so we can best serve others. Investing in yourself is an example of self-love, you must love yours reminiscing about the past, don't waste too much time thinking about the past, as your future potential is based upon what you build fo investing in yourself, and never stop learning. "Each day is a day to better yourself" quoting my Dad.

The Benefits of Free Thinking ...

While positive thinking is always mentioned as a means to escape negative thoughts, “free thinking” on the other hand works as a catalyst to transform” our thoughts, our worlds, and our outlooks in life, occurring every time we “think of concepts not mentioned in thinking do so by “thinking [about] ones own thoughts, not the thoughts merely of a the body or of society,” furthermore it’s a “privilege to happyhorizons.org its “an ability to think without bias, question without fear and speak without regret.” [3] Free Thinking is speaking think freely on topics, and to continue ones education on concepts, helps to build a better common sense among us, one way in which to them, to speak freely their minds, whether or not its common sense to everyone, make sense of what is now. Psychologytoday.com Which begs one to ask, what is stupid? Someone oblivious to what others are thinking? Someone who thinks for themselves, without i standards do we judge others for the knowledge that we hold, as each are different, we should rather appreciate others, for their gift or the more they sound like they know, the more critical we are of them in their delivery of concepts, expecting everything to make sense not all words that come to mind, have been said. What determines the parameters of expected common sense, I think in using this term speech and behavior. Its important to note that “Real sense can rarely be derived from experience alone because most people's experie. speech has now expanded upon what was otherwise unacceptable, as acceptable on social media, the sharing of ones thoughts, we usual strangers and speak to those they don’t know in real life, now its just about anyone leading discussions, and being approached, not just education and life skills and economic prowess with the world as they succeed in life. Lifestyle bloggers, do much the same, they exer and home decorate, their ways to a more perfect life. “The protection of the First Amendment may be invoked only when the words us interest may be reasonably regulated or punished.” [6] However, “words of idea-conveying nature, even though objectionable, will be and circumstances will be assessed while determining whether those individuals were invited to the space, a determination will be base ideas that at beneficial to the publics best interests not just your own, and to fall within the lines of protected types of speech and asser a distressing number draw a line that excludes speech they do not agree with.” [9] Its upon disagreements that civil unrest occurs, how through the sharing of their experiences with others be “disturbed” my arugment would be that ones sense of peace if not representati individual as not a protected type of speech, that’s being arbitrary, that upon knowing someone, claim affected and disturbed, because what occurs in private by these laws are protected by the first amendment and need not be disclosed, as that is common sense not to di inference of them as a bad source, is a personal attack on someone good character, to remove their ability to speak publicly based on w public interest, Glamour Magazine wanted to interview us, yes I am of public interest, we declined. Its insulting to be treated as someo I know know what I know. If by who you know are disturbed by the thought sharing of someone who does not know who you know, r rightfully provoked to speak in public, and re-establish their sense of identity, and pride in themselves, not be labeled behind their back struggling my story is empowering, that after everything Ive been through I didn’t commit suicide, think about more than just yourself for attending support groups in times of need like me. Maybe going to law school is not impressive to those who did not attend law school minute to minute, I live life, and do the most with my time on earth its no easier a life.

Repetition of Harm ...

Like a joke you keep passing around, to build upon one thing funny after the other, in regards to whatever you find humorous, until its create the best overall output, that is basing things upon concepts that are easy to understand, and by those rules of order, impressions successful in life, to those who could've done a better job at living life, and for those no longer with us, hope that we continue to live l online or elsewhere, used by the laymen, or whether by the professionals shed light upon. The point being what you put at the forefront overall work product you as a source, whether or inspiration, or humor, are read into, hopefully for better understandings about concep life, respect you, or look up to you, see like you, or feel like you, some live autonomously, not codependent to learn or understand the boundary setting than embracing any other ideas not their own, and whether learned first hand by a sharing of your experiences in life. harm causing incident, feeling the fears and the pains associated with that harm causing incident, then reliving that harm causing incid and so long as a rehashing of incidences occurs when you were not well, chances are those feelings may or may not occur again for yo harm to your identity, persona, personality, behavior, feelings, or outlook, and don't again become suicidal, just because you don't fee dependent upon illness to feel recovered, to see not well, to understand their sense of normal, and to see failure, to feel and understand demise of those who had it all and then lost everything, for them that makes them feel like a success, to see your life ruined, if you wa death at that point, you either allow negative thoughts to run rampant about yourself, as compared to the wellness of others, not feel go has overcome suicide, and never for the false light shed upon you become suicidal, and not give credit to those who have put you down you have accomplished thus far contributing to your wellness. People work on and off like a switch when it comes to wellness, easy to no ones around, left to die, you decide how to live your life, with or without people in your life, no one can talk you through feelings o becomes suicidal, sometimes Im not even sure why, and its really no ones fault, Ive never blamed anyone for feeling suicidal, not boy why I take meds, run everyday, stayed in school, work part-time, writing books, keep busy, and don't drink, because I understand the s even if Im having a good day, I stay productive I don't drink or use it to make it an even better day, and even if single, I work on my desire to sleep, and wake up the next day, and continue working on what Ive left the previous day, why blogging is so important to me all about communicating to others that we hear them, that they are not alone, and that "It's OK not to feel OK, and it's absolutely OK to say by focusing on the positives in life. Its important to note the differences between self-harm and suicide, some do fully recover from a way to help cope with difficult or distressing thoughts and feelings [3]." [2] There's no quick fix, to self-harm, it requires cognitive b causes negative thinking and integrate the skills to work with your mind in new ways, you can transform your life from the inside out. holds, for harm to self, one suicide attempt, rehab twice, IOP twice for thought disorders, and now sober, Ive been through a lot of treat my understanding of what my bipolar is like, and how to control those thoughts from occurring, by focusing on the positives, and cont mysteries, and live life like a joke. That's would be a worthless existence to live life, in a way, to which you cannot contribute positive independent on their own work, which is the goal of every masters student, to get a higher degree to get hired, that was the point, not a things can still go wrong in life, and poor decisions can be made, so long as you stay sober, maintain contact with your support groups getting well you will get well, no matter how sick you get no matter what disabilities you suffer from, and no matter what mental health

The self-harm cycle

Self-harm usually starts as a way to relieve the build-up of pressure from distressing thoughts and feelings. It's important to know that this relief is only temporary because the underlying reasons still remain. Soon after, feelings of guilt and shame might follow, which can continue the cycle.

Pamper Yourself ...

Its okay to pamper yourself every now and then, whether that's an extra trip to CVS, shopping at Bed Bath and Beyond, or updating your home. Investing in making your space feel more like home. You don't even need to spend that much to look organized, some things can be bought for a fraction of the price. Generally it's at this time of year, we over decorate our homes, and do a little entertaining, so get those fancy bars of soap, or Molton Bow candles, or centsationalstyle.com a home "is a sanctuary. Home is comfort. Home is inviting. Home is a refuge from the world." [2] Although I love my favorite clothes, everything that makes a girl happy. So do the same, keep out what you can't remember to take care of without a list, and update your wardrobe, four bins of clothes to Salvation Army, although I shouldn't have updated my wardrobe, I did a little Black Friday Shopping. It's so important to make choices, but it is a rewarding process. When we create a place that meets our needs and expresses our character, we enrich our lives." You would recognize me in the streets, as a blogger, appearances matter. Now in my 30s, I've become less rebellious, wearing chucks (all-season shoes) look everyday, and find time to mix things up. Just like being someone nice to look at, so should your home space reflect the person that

Its something you look at everyday, without thinking, nows a good time to get organized, and present the best version of yourself. Wh However most of the time, we just throw things in piles, when they come back from the wash and don't sort them out again, and stay o duplicate items you already have but cant find. Hearing What You Want to Hear ...

12/1/2019

That's life, you're not always going to hear what you want to hear, even during moments of silence, feeling heckled, taunted, and bullied. Health issues, and to help build more love and tolerance surrounding the issues, causing much disability. Social discord, is one thing that you talk to, things to do, besides working all day and taking life seriously, when was the last time you were able to share a laugh with someone on subjects you know less about, then state your take on the issues, before allowing life to happen without having said anything in the first place, whether directly to you, or indirectly toward you, expect to be affected by what other people think, that's what comes with the territory. If a point of interest, or not sufficiently addressed the issues current. Be your own best judge of whats relevant, sometimes, what is relevant is not any voices that are causing you mental disturbance, such as ridicule and or taunting. There are many phases of mental health issues, you know, but that's not without actively doing your best to reduce symptoms, by practicing self-care, and getting along well with others, all of which contribute to feel, and part of that happiness, is others ability to be happy around you, and not be a source of unhappiness to others or mental health issues. Confrontations in life, and always rise above. If you don't take good care of yourself, you'll be looked at less as food for thought, as someone who continues to perfect yourself day by day, until you have a better outlook in life. I don't think that things will never bother you the same way, speak about those times later. So long as you have learned from your mistakes as a person and as a writer, that's all that matters. And you know, apart of you have to be a stable person, if not you get made fun of. ~Stay positive!

Dating in LA ...

Unless you have a job or something going for you in life, its hard to date in LA, there will always be something bigger or better than you. The reason I started a blog, was to separate myself from the competition, and to establish a base for myself, a place in which I could be myself, and grow to love and appreciate me on a different level. Eventually, who you are to a boyfriend, is not who you are to your friends, who you are to your friends, and who you are at work, is not who you are to your family, we all put on different hats in life, and we see you with all those hats on. Someone who is planning to stay with you for the long term, wants someone who is best all around, who is nice to bring home to the family, and introduce to friends, its when we are worrisome, that we are difficult to love. You need to have someone you want to find someone with stability. I have dated over the years, men in the music profession, the tech profession, and not a biochemist. I once married an attorney I met in law school, but that did not work out when I did not finish my JD, became depressed and started drinking alcohol. Moving backwards in life, what you can do is appreciate those who did spend those moments with you in life, whether you were down or up, and who you are now, who regardless whether you have a companion or not, expects you to do well in well, and to have a successful career, and to be a good match up, some of us don't match up, and that's not because we are not pretty, or not smart enough, or not well enough, or not stable enough. You can find better, those better suited to meet their needs, which according to us, is not a real relationship long term, you can't expect all men them come to you” but at this point in my life, I don’t think that that methodology quite works anymore, a little effort goes a long way superb, but I have a way, of keeping a conversation going for a reply, without getting rejected, and getting dates, and phone calls answered, that must mean that I’m doing much better than I was doing, back in the day. -Right now I’m focused on career and getting a job, 9-5pm and be proud of myself. To graduate from law school and be proud of myself. To lose 20-40lbs and be proud of myself. This all everyone, it’s a really time consuming process, requires a lot of shopping for outfits, and makeup, staying on trend, having fancy photos socially, having friends, none of which I would have without AA who supports me while managing my sobriety and bipolar by allowing among those similarly situated in life, support one another, and feel compassion for one another’s struggles in life. So don’t lose hope, picked, out of who liked me, do your best.

First Things First ...

It’s always been my dream to finish law school, had it not been for the unconditional support of my parents over the years I would not have had the time for education, working and re-enrolling, until complete, looking forward to graduating February 28, 2020 when the semester ends and I can take time off from working at my internship to focus on my Dissertation which is more important to me, than to grind through each week and get everything’s been submitted on time. Grades are important, it’s a $3000 course, worth finishing the semester strong, and with a finished

Meanwhile I've been busy editing my first book set to be published 2020 with Amazon Book Writing Inc, I've been working with the publisher for several months to write compiling my writings from online, on Twitter over the years, and about 2 years on and off to edit, while finishing my book. It's dedicated to finishing a book it doesn't just sit well overnight, it takes many revisions, to finally put together a story that represents you and that was the most difficult part, not mentioning others. It's hard to tell your story and not have shared parts of your life with others who have to be learned in life, half of those lessons learned occur through meeting people. Book writing is not common sense, and it's not easy, and write 300 pages, it occurs overtime, and as you collect your thoughts you make more and more sense along the way, to me that's why that it makes sense, it tries to make sense, and it does a good job of making sense of what doesn't make sense not leaving things up for negative interpretations to be made, that would be doing everyone a disservice in life. -I'm a little under the weather this week sick on blogging as much, focusing on my school work. Just thought to catch up with everyone.

Reaching Your Blogging Goals ...

Comment in After You Speak ...

Not all people will understand you, and that's a fact that we need to live by. I understand that there are so many people who are trying to correct us for our principles in life. But as long as you know yourself and you know that you aren't doing something wrong, then it would be better to stick with what you do. Other people will always have something to say and your job is to ignore them so you can continue with how you live your life.

I reached one of my blogging goals recently, comments! I recently checked my Weebly App and found them, presently surprised. Its a goal to hear from your readers, and to hear what they're thinking after having read something that you've written. Meanwhile my other blog on WordPress started July 2019. I went through a phase earlier this year where I felt like I was constantly being judged, and battling voices, I felt that what I looked liked or what I sounded like, as soon as I talked about what was bothering me, the better things got, and quickly grew out of what's bothering you, sometimes seems so immature and trivial, and when said out loud, even embarrassing at times to admit to even if I don't say it, things have a way of working themselves out, what we are consciously aware of, we can work on, what does not get put at the forefront of our abilities, often gets suppressed, and does us a disservice in life, manifesting itself in other ways, like binge eating is to body image issues, intelligence is to laziness, as tv watching is to voyeurism, as social media is socialization issues, what this all boils down too are having a lack of life skills, when you have those two things grounded, it makes it easier to find balance and sanity engaging in all other activities, when you're focused on what's going wrong, or what's not perfect, and learn to appreciate what's going right, and see the bright side of life again. When you wake up, and feel blessed, grateful, or you wake up, resentful, and think what a hard life this is, and that you wish you had a better life perspective, without comparing your best to anyone else's best or your worst to anyone else's worst. It's true "not all people will understand" writers writes, the better you know yourself, the better off you'll be, we "don't [all] have the same way of thinking." [1] In addition, no matter where youre coming from, in life, we all have our own set of problems, and personal pitfalls, and ticks in life, that either set us on paths that get aggravated, everyone drops the ball at some point in their life, and everyone has to keep going and pick themselves up, that's apart of life, you get back up, does it matter exactly what happened? Maybe not, does it matter how you got hurt, maybe maybe not? Does it matter if you want something to discuss in therapy, or a conversation that would lead to controversy if spoken about out loud, if so, then don't mention it, just live your life, irrespective of what other people think of you. You know as a blogger, I don't have the pleasure of reading other people's benefit of reading my thoughts, and meeting me. I don't have the pleasure of meeting other people, but they have the pleasure of getting to know me and learn about my life. That's that difference between being a blogger, and being a private individual in the workforce, is more knowledge. That's just a fact of life, when you put yourself out there in the public sphere, there are going to be people who know of you, hear of you, and you don't know. On a positive note: It's self-love, which is why a lot of people blog! Then make sure, to own it, when you are feeling good, with everyone how you go there, that's the whole point of blogging through all those days and nights, when everyday feels the same, and that change that blogging seeks to capture, when you are no longer worried what other people think, when you have come to mature and find peace.

Work Life Balance ...

What is work life balance? It requires an equal balance and an ability to make decisions between work and life. [1] More and more I find people mention this term when referring to finding balance in their lives, managing their time spent with family, friends, at work, and while facing mental health issues, especially while in recovery. On the other hand according for the workaholic focusing too much on work can mean neglecting relationships and overall happiness. [2] It's been recommended to let go of your need for perfectionism and to make room for more quality time you have the more resilient you become to certain life stressors giving you a "greater sense of control" over your life. [3] When it comes to figuring out what's important to you, work life balance is different for everyone, best to figure out what it means to you first before not doing a good job at living life or could be a better sister daughter friend girlfriend etc, we've all felt that way from time to time, when our attentions and we neglect to work on those relationships in life, it hurts, it really does in the long run. Why they tell you to put recovery first, to stick to a program of recovery likewise if it's work life balance you're working on set your priorities in life of what's most important, set boundaries so that you can make time for those things or people in your life, what's incorporated into your life is what amount of time you give yourself to what matters to you (ie makes you happy) and from there figure out what else is important to you. Some people even make choices that energy those choices give them back in life, that's a good to think about too. [4] Overall "For busy professionals, a work-life balance is key to happiness." [5] So continue to practice self care, focusing on your well being, don't overwhelm yourself too much with the past, what's done is done, moving forward now to make time for what needs work and get done what can get done, life may be short but it need not be lived in misery, especially not when around others, that's the worst being so unhappy out of balance tied up with other things that you can't even enjoy, you let alone make time to spend with others, that's a very lonely life to live. So be social, not too social, limit your social media, one day at a time, daily, stay on top of correspondence, show up to doctor appointments, get your January Calendars ready, make 2020 a great year, exciting!

Sometimes We Shine ...

LEARN
NOT TO QUIT.

Last December I left my job thinking nothing was going to work out for me in life that I was a complete failure. If I couldn't work a 12 hour work an 8 hour work day and if I couldn't work 6 days a week then I couldn't work 5 days a week. Sometimes when we push ourselves and sometimes when trying to meet the expectations of others we flounder. I even tried back tracking at one point to the paid position at the company to work as a paralegal I gave up for a chance to work in film. It seems my dreams got the best of me, the glamour of working a harder job to get than the paid position I was offered on the spot, I wasn't thinking clearly, at that point in my life I should've taken the thought that the internship would turn into a job, I was sorely mistaken. When the going gets tough it's okay to take a break from work measuring up in the workforce the last thing you need is a bad review if you've never gotten one, especially in a field you've never worked to stick to what your good at, confidence builds upon experience, that is your work experience. Sometimes settings matter, and if you're missing you had in other jobs then expect to be molded, controlled, and corrected until you become what is expected of you personality wise judged in the workforce by your confidence, tone, and eye contact not just your work ethic, and especially your break etiquette. To be able to keep going in life and be presentable without question that is relied upon to get the work done, trusted, if you can't manage that much you probably not a good match. At my current job I was put back on Adderall and taken off my bipolar meds, I wasn't myself, I was able to go to the Film Festival I was invited to attend, running on the beach beside myself it's not that I was overworked I had just put too much pressure somewhere I was working towards becoming well, which is where I am now, which is why I was invited back to that job to continue work. I've been given other opportunities to interview at paying jobs at law firms, dream jobs, had I not worked in film and been pushed by my career she would have not left the house and started working been fit socially or personality wise to work again. She supported my social media presence required it, and I'm glad, a top 100 personal development blogger on Feedspot now listed with Mark Manson a very successful blogger. I had a dream to publish a book, one step at a time, my AA meeting attendance resumed this year what a difference that made, really grounded me forward again and attended another IOP which really strengthened my ability to battle bipolar symptoms keeping me feeling down, unconfident, insecure about life and applying myself. Trips to Starbucks and the Mall kept me busy during my time away from work, that was fun until at least my Moms not paying rent, but still, should be more frugal when it comes to expenses, and not gain weight as an excuse to shop for books, and worked on my website! All in all made a lot of progress this year, progress I'm proud of, and couldn't have done it without Associates and My Parents. I had the worst messenger addiction when I started work 2018 who talks to Trump anyways ... you're right to CU and majored in Sociology, I was a little more sensitive to a few issues that he shook off initially, but I'm glad he came around and took courage. I don't know why I sent my only extra copy of my book to Avenatti who was fighting with him at the time, he replied on the O'Melveny connection, who's recruiter later contacted me on LinkedIn and interviewed me to follow-up in February.

Self-Defeat and Taking Responsibility ...

In reading "Get Out of Your Own Way" by Mark Goulston, M.D. and Philip Goldberg, they brought up an excellent point in the beginning "realiz[ing] that blaming your problems on other people, or on circumstances beyond your control, doesn't make anything better." In order to move forward, one must be committed to leaving self-defeating behavior and thinking behind, while understand the power that one has to change their life.

defeating behaviors, some examples are: avoidance (shying away from problems) and passive aggressive behavior (failure to deal with find ourselves putting ourselves down at our own expense, also known as a pity party, when we don't feel good about ourselves, the te unfavorable to our best interests, rather than talk about ourselves in the positive, talk about our problems instead, don't be led by your yourself. According to thestar.com, "What do the truly confident people have? They have a high opinion of themselves. And! They ha That is the true definition of confidence." [3] So if you want to be someone who lifts others, not bring the whole room down, then do s you have learned, without leaving others feeling sad or depressed for you, or worried. Confidence is everything, sometimes the most f been through a lot, and who share in a way, that's very heart-warming to hear, to which we all can relate. When you're feeling down r 1. Your patience when you have nothing. 2. Your attitude when you have everything." —Imam Ali." [4] Today, someone expressed ro screaming at me, for being parked in a spot that he wanted to park in, I was on my phone. "You're a C%nt" "Get an Education" "Im a Gonna Pass the Bar" "You're Gonna Be a Loser" "All You Had to Say was Yes or No" I told him he needed to calm down, thanks Ta the only thing I could think of. Meanwhile I interviewed at CZR Carpenter Zuckerman & Rowley today, and will hear back in two wee the first two weeks of January, we'll see! If you let the little things get to in life, you'll never be a happy a person, I called 911 to comp people like that, next time. The old me, probably would've had a bipolar episode, but I'm much more in control of my emotions these you allow yourself to become disturbed easily by the emotions of others, if you don't allow yourself to become so easily disturbed you panic attacks and worry which all adds up and eventually require meds. Some people just have tempers, you just have to be accepting response was okay to T-Bone me into my spot, and yell at me, then pull up to me and yell at me, after I moved so he could take the sp people just don't know when to stop. Apparently saying Im on my phone, was not the correct response to his question, so that was my moral inventory that incident. Regardless, I let things go a lot in life, these days, less is more, the more I harp on whats bothering me, t thinking, and negative thinking eventually leads to feelings of depression and those days of depression lead up to suicidal ideation, all excessive amounts of meds to sleep at night, leaving me feeling lethargic daily. That's not the solution, to stress, to check out, and put was doing, before I started attending meetings again in August, hospitalized. Life gets tough, this isn't NY so you don't expect life to t people are still very egotistical, about their image, cars, jobs, and material things, its all a façade, but it matters. But don't take your str not over parking spots. #stopbullying

Addiction is the Biggest Waste of Time ...

I'm not sure whether writing to Ari Emanuel has been a complete waste of time, they just posted a job opening on LinkedIn at Endeavor interview at O'Melveny and Myers and CZR Carpenter, Zuckerman & Rowley. My ducks may not all be line, but I have sufficiently ba addiction, that was a yearly struggle of getting used to the new meds, and still being able to function and see results. Addiction is a cor with learning disability, it sets you even further back in life, who has time for rehab and hospitalizations, what an embarrassing experie for being bipolar, and court ordered to go to IOP for "thought disorders" and therapy once a week. That was the settlement. Addiction that be substances, people, places, activities, or just a misuse of time, don't set yourself behind in life, to enjoy life, to enjoy life, usual better, its when you feel behind you feel overwhelmed, and that feeling doesn't go away overtime, its something you have to work on until those feelings of "worthlessness and self-pity" as alcoholics anonymous calls it, leaves you. Ive been in and out of AA for many y stay, have found a couple of meetings that I feel comfortable at. That took awhile. It's a matter of going and showing up, not a necessa and connections while youre there to help you out of your troubles in life. There are some people who start from the bottom up, I was eventually you have to get started again, and it doesn't matter where you start, and it starts by showing up to meetings, and going to th in IOP to set goals. For high functioning people, people with jobs, this seems simple, people who've had jobs, probably cant relate, pe can't empathize, with someone like me, who's walked in and out of the social security disability office more than once, giving up in li forward, no matter what speed youre able to move at in life. People will always read, and compare your worse or your condition to the and think youre just being dramatic not comprehending the possibility of the disabilities that people suffer from on a daily basis, and v talking about their issues, they live normal lives, why? Because that's how you overcome disability, by maintaining your privacy surro relive those issues over and over again, so that those issues, eventually leave from sight, and you can begin to see a future for yourself and symptoms come back, some don't make it that far and symptoms get worse, some don't make it that far, and symptoms take over, symptoms win over their better judgments in life, including addiction, it's a disease, a type of mental health issue, which some recover perfect. I can't imagine life without meds, Ive been without meds hospitalized, and sleep all day and all night, its not an enjoyable exp The solution for me has been Vyvanse, Abilify, Hydroxyzine, Trazedone, Topiramate. In the hospital, that's how you are treated, given once was given Provigil for wakefulness, and so that's how I live outside the hospital, on 4 night meds and Day Meds, not to scare anyone makes it difficult to talk to me or hire me, based upon what medications I take, what those medications say about me, and not trusting off meds, that was not working not reliable in bed all day, sleeping. Its functioning that's the problem, an occasional drinker but sober on Adderrall to get things done in life, theres so much pressure to keep up with the pace of life, I really don't think we all have to work making meals in a kitchen, not all jobs have to be that intense, I really think its possible to live life, and to work at a normal pace without considered hard work these days? And how much work must you complete in 8 hours to be considered payable, and a hardworker? I think well, and work the hours at home, pace yourself, finish a masters, work part-time, then one should be given the opportunity to work for disability, work supervised, without worry, worst comes to worst, I can always go to the hospital if rejected its not a big deal. -So continue to think positively about yourself and others, life is tough but so are you, forget the past, and do your best with the hand you've been dealt. I think, if you're reading this blog, you're one step ahead of the pack, in tune with whats going on currently, mental health issues, and if hopefully you wont have to experience these issues to the extent that I have, and Im glad!

What is Networking? ...

Sometimes it seems like the more interconnected we become online the less we feel the need to connect in person, or to attend events or interacting online is just one step toward introducing yourself to the world, while meeting in person is the second. Generating a following relationship with people” and by definition is considered networking. [1] Blogging is more than “simply an information exchange between exchange of likes and follows all of which help to bolster you as a business or an individual marketing a future product or service to increase are your connections in life, and whether you like to admit your upbringing as contributing to your outlook in life, its clear that those who raised among those with connections, tend to fair better off in the world running than those who grow up without a base network, the decades of life, really help to establish your skill set applied to social settings later in life. According to timesolv.com there are “four social networking” ... and they are: (1) eye contact (2) listening (3) learn names and (4) master the perfect ending. [3] Why are having these about this with Ari Emanuel the other day, what makes people get picked, based upon their likeability, marketability, and wellness, well worse, some stay and some don't. Just like jobs, the minute you become hazy, tired, slow down, and stop performing, is grounds for dis relationship, you withhold from, if you stop seeing someone, fights ensue, questioning occurs, and those eventual disagreements lead to neither party benefits the best interests of the other, if one or the other cannot function well in the company of the other, then its not a win the course of their time. This you learn as you get older, and build more resilience in life, the more resilient you are to minor stressors, the more you have to give and provide to others. Thebalancecareers.com discusses just that, “When building networks you must give some personal and business relationships, both parties must benefit in some way.” [4] You either grow among, or grow apart, Ive heard this out of relationships, or social circles, we tend to think highly of ourselves, but then again, drinking and drug use is not for everyone, and to socialization and now not as social as you once were, than that's okay, no one is condemning you for choosing to live a sober life not the bars or mixers, if its too tempting to drink at a Bungalow Google Tech Mixer, I so want to go. I've been once before and met with Beach Young Professionals, who once offered me a job to write for him, that was many years ago. You grow a lot as a person, and as that growth, you are better able to provide services to others, the more clear you are, the better your presentation is, and the denser the likes and follows you get, its as simple as that blogging, and maintaining a following. When it comes to being liked, well its hard to give be well liked, that's not for me to judge how people should be to be liked, everyone should be themselves. If you are to be of influence think how would you want to be influenced in your life and go from there, if its something that you need, provide it, and if its something sometimes in helping ourselves we help others too.

Whoever Said Romance was Dead ...

It would be funny if I bumped into my crush at the driving range, at my golf lesson, but Im sure given my luck, he's unavailable. How I wondered if it was him, staring over the shoulder of my golf instructor, is that Ari Emanuel, I kept saying to myself, he was laughing h with my driver. He's a member of the Country Club my Dad belongs to, they have new hats with "THERIV" in bold and caps on it, cu at the Club, we both saw him at the Lakers Game, sitting courtside, with his hand on his chin, he stayed at half time, and walked over t wasn't sure if he was married or not, I just read that he filed for divorce November 2018. [1] While he's known for being played on t think the show oversold him, while a few connections left him underscored, his performance otherwise, a success, a double lot in Bren "for as early as the end of [2019]." [3] If its just a matter of selling points, that need work, then he couldn't be in better company. I too trying to build a website, write a book, and finish law school, experienced failed relationships, lost two rings, and feel like I have barel once in Portugal, Palo Alto, Las Vegas, and DC 2013, ... don't count as "traveling." Timing is everything, its not exactly an IT corpor unless IT provides the quality of services demanded by them to be IT. That's being an IT girl in todays day and age, or Ari Emanuel. T the time when you think of conglomerates you think of Warner Chapelle, or Disney Miramax Fox, however William Morris Agency a both traditional and new forms of entertainment, while advocating for books on the side and models, making it a "next-generation meo been described in the past as "content focused ... [and] firmly rooted in the talent representation sector," [5] and not much has changeo IMG (2015). [6] In September, before he pulled the plug on his IPO, "Emanuel had hoped to raise as much as $600 million from the II company at as much as $8 billion, but those numbers shrank as the offering neared." [7] The reason why Ari decided not to move forw "Endeavor would not attract the right quality of investor. The principals saw the horrifying potential for the stock to drop below $20 o company's valuation." [8] And so, he's decided to wait. So when is a good time to go public? Well if youre able to laugh, and feel goo regardless of how anyone else is feeling, its your confidence that matters most, and a believing in your spirit, that will draw investors t well being, who represents who best, and who by their best decision making skills, stays on board, and keeps others feeling ahead of tl leader on a TV-Show, I think he'll do great!

Eventually you let go, and stop working yourself up over the same things over and over again, that's called taking a more mature approach to life. When you can put experiences back into context, and file them away, with the rest of the days of your life, you are becoming a better and better yourself each day, you have truly moved on from what has broken you, and ready to start a new life for yourself. Its growth is your part. Until you know when to stop, will you stop. Practicing catching yourself in those moments, today in therapy I talked about just that, where I have worked myself up, usually occurring late at night when tired, ruminating, and being overly hard on myself, and where I stop, where I expect myself to be, and measure the difficulty it will take to get to where I want to be in life, and with a defeatist attitude most people gets no one anywhere in life, to complain, its in fact the worst thing you can do, when your trying to improve your life, is to complain. "Repeated complaining rewires your brain to make future complaining more likely. Over time, you find it's easier to be negative than positive, happening around you. Complaining becomes your default behavior, which changes how people perceive you." [1] That's right, complaining, that hurts you rather than helps you. So instead of complaining, one solution suggested by them is to "cultivate an attitude of gratitude, like complaining, shift your attention to something that you're grateful for." [2] According to fastcompany.com "A half hour of complaining damages a person's brain." [3] Think twice before you decide to share any dissatisfactions in life, if you're going to complain, make sure you're positive, and to have a "specific goal in mind." [4] It is these "minor irritations [in life that] can cost us [our] mental health" so don't let anything bother you, and spend less time feeling victimized in life, and spend more time empowering yourself by doing things that make you feel good about self-esteem." [5] Don't be a typical "chronic complainer" which is one who has the "tendency to ruminate on problems and to focus on the negative." [6] Not only does complaining put you in a worse mood, explains why even in negative situations when complaining is typical many hold their tongue, to avoid complaining and causing even more discomfort among others, same goes to you. If you are already not doing well, then making a list of lets say what you are doing well will most likely aggravate you, not benefit you, when it comes to fixing your problems its better to focus on what needs to get done, and to get in order to get to where you're going, rather than overthink about what has passed and not gone well. If its "sympathy and attention" that you're looking for, talking about whats going on with you, without scaring people away, theatlantic.com by comparison says that "when done right, complaining has many advantages." So continue to be "mindful" and its okay to complain, "only when it serves a purpose" and if to bolster ones confidence and to "speak up." [7]

You won't always know where you're headed in life, part of the process of recovery requires you to live life first and learn from your blessings get taken from us but I promise you that feeling comes back, that sense of feeling free, with nothing to fear, motivated, drive monumental in life. Easy does it, first things first, life skills, think what is it that makes you happy? Then do so, read a book, practice follow a tv show, watch a ted talk, read an article, journal, there are plenty of ways to replenish your energy stores without spending money yourself to stay home sometimes and feel good about that choice in being disciplined enough to do so. Life's not all about going out but up with friends don't waste time wandering alone in life, you'll find yourself lost, rather than found, that's typically the case to never find for out on your own companionship or love, it never finds you out on your own. Love surrounds love, and the loved is loved, and love who has love, and who has love is who attracts love, and who attracts love is who loves themselves. So how does one show that they love "bun and listening to rap music" windows down without a care in the world ... if it's love that drives your sense of happiness in life, the love and admiration by others, if it's happiness you cannot achieve without love then achieve happiness first before finding love, if it's happiness then achieve self love first – you cannot get what you don't already have from the other expecting someone to fill voids or provide there or not there with or without them in your life – wouldn't you rather fix yourself now than wait only to find out you're still the same? solution to your problems is always within you not within others, unless you can figure out what your problem is no one can cure you but your part to fix what's broken mend what's torn and better what's been jaded and once you feel most complete is when the other complete is made, that shines. The worst feeling is loving someone who is down and out or depressed not feeling good sure we love them and their things take their toll we become just as tired and just as broken and who then do those feelings best serve neither, always think about yourself when you ask for help from another is it worth their time effort and energy or is it something you can fix without their constant get married, it's a give and take sometimes a commitment to care for others at some points dependency on others does occur and we need who can't always be there for us constantly to shift our moods lift our spirits change our minds redirect our thoughts or pull us out of a to feel normal just like it takes listening to rap music to feel tough or cooler than you are, if life's all about mood settings and ring require who gets sent adrift in life, if you're stuck in a rowboat like me or inner tube after a breakup you're not alone, grab a piece of wood, the strong in followers 1,000 people a day read for 6 minutes at a time on average, we all care, we're all on Facebook, Instagram, Twitter, they all send me 200-400+ Likes per post, none of which show up on my website and that's okay, it's the thought that counts! I wanted Website and a Blog and two books on their Way & Graduating from Law School I'm not sure what that equals ... but I'm so happy and wherever I am in life in the grand scheme scheme of things on the broader spectrum of success online, I would have no idea how I measure of writers respect wise but I'm glad to be beginning a career I love, writing and being social online!

Love Yourself Often ...

12/9/2019

Chances are if you're reading this you're someone who either loves themselves but is currently unhappy, or doesn't love themselves but anyways, either way, you're feeling subpar in a perfect world that requires you to be full of energy and zest for life. We may not all be marathon runners, or book readers, but everyone has a special quality within, that tells them to keep going when they feel like quitting people have in common, they believe in themselves, and because they believe in themselves they achieve beyond, the normal recommended beyond their limits in life, that's exactly how one realizes their fullest potential, setting goals, and making strides in life, it's what makes when at our best, doing what we love to do, and doing it well. To love oneself one must be reminded to do the following:

1. Be thankful for everyone in your life.
2. Consistently improve each day that you have.
3. Do your best to help others when you can.
4. Acknowledge that you are not the only person in a room full of people.
5. Make eye contact, and treat all the same, with kindness.
6. Have compassion for those who are not well.
7. Be beautiful inside and out.
8. Think highly of oneself, never putting oneself down.
9. Think highly of others, never putting others down.
10. Be mindful and respectful of the time of others.
11. Be considerate, be on time, and not waste other peoples time.
12. Not make everything about you, everyone has problems.
13. Not expect more love from others than you yourself can provide.
14. Give freely without expectation for reward or accolade.
15. Less is more, get things done at your own pace, well.
16. Don't compare yourself to others.

You're guideposts for building a happier and healthier version of you, are completely arbitrary, these are just a few suggestions, it may depending on how depressed, or selfish you may be, some have difficulty being nice about life, thinking that they are deserving of happiness, right to be happy, and that anything or anyone interfering with their ability to be happy is in the wrong and that they are always right, in their life, that they would have been happy otherwise, or not have struggled in life, as much as they had. In those instances I can tell you the only person you are hurting is yourself, shelling up from the world, with a me me me attitude, nothing goes right for you in life, hard to change, let alone empathize with, it seems the angrier they get, the more right they become, and the worse you feel, the better off they are. Don't let yourself to struggle regardless of who was right or wronged, the longer you enable others to justify treating you as a lesser species of a standard backbone of a successful working woman, deserving of a job, success, and a mature boyfriend who loves and respects her, if you are a few nights out. Its not your fault. Remind yourself of that. The longer you beat yourself up over it, until suicidal, its you that suffers not self-harm. Sober up, and continue to live your life, single, sober, and celibate, until you can again choose! That's loving yourself, its not self-loving, its not about feeling like youre getting hugs or being given hugs in life, its being independent of hugs and intimacies in life with yourself, without intimacies in life, that's having love for yourself. When you love yourself, you attract more than just men in your life, you, the smartest version of you, the version of you that thinks highly of herself, attracts jobs, friends, AND companions into her life, in your life, when you feel limited in life, you feel powerless, and when powerless prone to making bad decisions, and when bad decision making taken advantage of as a weaker species in an environment full of drunk opportunists looking for love, until you are able to stand on your own feet, you yourself, will you be able to recognize and appreciate how much work goes into paying for that $8.00 or $12.00 drink, until you can fully give consideration for those who have provided for you, the time and effort it took to raise you, then don't subject yourself to such mediocrity.

#bookreview: "When" by #danielpink ...

I just finished reading "When" by Daniel Pink, [1] on the scientific secrets of perfect timing, who knew that time was on your side, if we could manage ourselves, so that we could reach optimum performance each day, we would be better off, living happier lives, and he discusses this by introducing DRM research (2006) by Kahneman & Krueger which outlines our rhythm over the course of the day. (page 13). That slumps are common, we all need time to recharge what he calls our "mental and emotional batteries." (page 18) Our level of energy and mood is a factor in our decisions, performance, and overall communication skills, as highly social beings, its something we are all self-conscious about, not just in studies referenced to. If there is one question I would ask him is that how are we both autonomous and interdependent when it comes to these factors bring us closer together, and what brings us into ourselves and apart. He discusses our abilities to maintain autonomy when it comes to things such as meditation, breathing, and lightening up (page 79) that is your internal decision making comes first, and once automated, as we adjust your settings to the world around you, whether that's working well with others, beginning a new project, (page 89) or taking on more capacity to visualize your new self, (page 111) if you don't have the basics down, its hard to get other things going for you without so many slumps. "Slumps are normal, but they're also short-lived. Rising out of them is as natural as falling into them." (page 144) He even discusses this and recommends a "nappuccino" which studies revealed worked more successfully, than a nap alone (a nap with a cup of coffee that keeps you functioning adult, nearing a mid-life crisis, this book is a perfect anecdote to everything you've wondered about the later parts of life, and the concept of "bad timing," (it would be nice to say that bad timing doesn't exist, but history suggests otherwise), describing "The James can alter our perception in what he calls the “end of life bias” (page 155), I suppose just as much as “nostalgia” takes hold sending us to old places (page 214), always think of the benefits, as you recall life as you know it, some have lived shorter lives. With time, your “with ingredients, the] sense of meaning and [the] connection to others,” (page 214) that is derived from those moments in time and interactions suffer, out of touch with others, our own lives, and as a result our relationships suffer, and our working knowledge of these concepts drive life to negative thoughts and behaviors, don’t become accustomed to those lifestyle choices in life, always be a good decision maker, perhaps may be more wonderful than you think.” (page 143) It seems at times “we’re often more compassionate toward others than we are toward ourselves” okay to “take break[s]” in life (page 81) and “set interim goals ... to maintain motivation” (page 137), sometimes its what we haven’t “might even fuel your day-to-day motivation” in life, what is called the Zeigarnik effect. Stay Determined ...

Be determined in life to accomplish your goals, but know the difference between when it’s time to stop, take a step back, and reassess. It’s okay to keep moving forward, the soundest of minds, have the best foresight, a little planning goes a long way when it comes to presenting more organized you appear, the more organized you are, that’s not just strategy for looking good, its actually happening in that person because they are put together, and the path before them looks clear because they have made the path before themselves clear to travel. In life of life you have to be driven, there’s no turning away from the fact that you have to be somewhat determined, having the ability to persevere through the toughest personal storms in life. It’s those who are able to separate their personal lives from their professional lives that are able to find a way regardless how many breakups they’ve been through, no matter how many struggles they’ve encountered personally health wise, they are able to and maintain a living. Sometimes, when we are tired, we can come across as too strong, especially when our path is unclear, and we are unable to communicate our needs, when we are in need, turning people away, rather than attracting what it is that we need to help us, get going in life. That’s no way to succeed in life, haphazardly, have a goal in mind, a general idea of what you want in life, and from those goals, figure out what works, what you can manage to accomplish on your own, and what you need outside resources for to help bolster you to the place you want to be. Getting a job, a spot guest posting, an advertisement, or making any type of deal in life, where you promote your work, not all work can be done eventually you have to work with others, to make a legitimate income and be able to provide for yourself and others. Like dating when you work with others, gq.com suggests that “you want to convey interest, not desperation” and not come across as too strong, which means “don’t lay it all out, be baggage.” [1] Its okay to have problems but be independent of your problems, you have two selves, one that you are working on, and the other that is consistent and show up, regardless of whats going on behind the scenes, that’s exactly why they tell you to “fake it til you make it,” don’t overburden your professional life, and lose momentum, that would be a waste of time, to not work, or to skip doing an assignment, or to hang out with friends, because of something personal you are going through, life is much too short for taking personal days to recuperate, even in your living life, whether you are ready and prepared for the challenges that life has thrown at you, start showing up. Zenhabits.net brings up the “face everything technique” which in part requires that you “remind yourself that the task will benefit you and others, and is much more important than you.” Sounds like Nike was right “just do it.” If you genuinely want to work with someone in the future, don’t demand anything, “it’s much easier to ask for advice” [3] and leave things open ended, 9 times out of 10, what services are available will be offered to you, if you are given an opportunity they are. Plus its hard to ask for anything, when you don’t already have something going for you in life, business is a two-way street, you and the other who upon connecting with makes them equally a likeable figure and vice versa both benefit, that is one benefit of networking via guest posting. You be presentable, and in order to be presentable, you have to be producing enough material on your own, that contributing to another person’s such a loss, to you or your stats, and will in fact impress your following to be published elsewhere, it’s a step, not an easy step. And because you make, bigger deals may come your way in life, its all about keeping a humble mindset, of someone who is working hard, has goals in mind, has goals in mind, able to work well with others, and help them to similarly achieve goals that they have in mind. Its being of service, providing the services offered by others and contributing to those services they offer, via the work you have produced on your site, that shows the caliber of work to be mass produced. That’s writing, its all about connections, that’s what Ive learned so far, I wouldn’t say that the best people they just have the know how, and because they have the know how, that makes them smart, smarter than me that is ... Ive not published Learning is a Process ...

12/8/2019

Busy with work, you're not alone, I barely have time to blog these days, it feels like life is moving by much faster than expected, with just trying to pace myself, and make the most of this day off, editing and working on my dissertation. Learning is a process, which has learning disability, its hard to imagine after having gone to two law schools, I forget that I have struggled with disability in the past, and speed of learning and thinking. There are six components to the learning process: "attention, memory, language, processing, organizing, and thinking." [1] You don't get better at learning overnight, but overtime, as you get used to reading, and practicing memorizing material the same goes for public speaking, the more prepared you are the better at it you get. Two things Im not comfortable with, memorizing material. I first got started with my Masters, it was leaving my JD program, I knew I wanted to continue going to Law School and finish, but was much longer than expected, but glad to be finishing with an LLM Masters in Law. To finish a Masters you need to stay motivated, no matter how long your assignments done and progress to each course it takes to finish, that's something you have to muster up on your own, as well as figure out how to pay for it, luckily I have been supported, but time is running out, and its time to start working. I never thought that bipolar would have an effect on my life, you think that like depression you just take an anti-depressant, and it goes away, of with a learning disability you just get your homework done, bipolar is much more complicated than other diagnosis, not to downplay other people's struggles, but you get voices, things are happening that aren't happening, for someone trying to finish a Masters it almost seems like its not even worth it at this point. I am as someone intelligent as diagnosed bipolar, thought of as less competent, as compared to others who are not diagnosed disabled. That's the effect about working on my self-worth, and self-esteem, once I start putting myself down as disabled, that's a sign that I need to start thinking about what there is to value about my condition, and my education, and where Im headed in life. Its really easy to convince yourself that you are not gonna make it, how many of us, wind up sitting at home all day doing nothing, with no job yet, many, Im sure Im not the only one for longer than expected in school, but eventually you have to get your life going and settle down, and work or get married, and be independent. Its not easy, there are not many jobs, but there are jobs, and you need a job to get a job, which is why Im interning right now, it's a start. For me, I'm honest, not to sound depressing, but I know me, and if I stayed at home, I would get more depressed, and sometimes having something to do, which is why I wrote books in addition to working on my Dissertation and completing my Masters, keeping busy is what I need. With or without a job, I keep myself motivated in life. -You learn a lot about yourself in the process of writing, going to therapy, and journaling. It's a much better life lived than home, I used to live alone, running everyday, I'm in a much better place now, than 2015 working in a fancy paralegal job. You can't have it all, learning a whole new profession now, Film, maybe that's why Im feeling a bit intimidated right now about the entertainment industry, I was a paralegal and law clerk for years in Law School, but Im sure my skills are transferrable to my current position. Assistant. My Boss is texting me, gotta go ...

Pen Pals ...

Growing up, pen pals, was a system of keeping in touch with friends we made overseas, in other Countries, assigned to us, by our school programs. However today, pen pals, is a systems, used on messenger for keeping in touch with friends we make online. Historically pen pals were by mail "usually strangers whose relationship [was] primarily, or even solely, [based] on their exchange of letters." [1] Having a pen pal, or a pen pal circle, can be beneficial to your health, opening up your perspective in life, its based on who you are talking to that a conversation is created. Depending on who you are talking to the conversation can be different. Sometimes, we receive replies, and sometimes we don't, it's a challenge to speak to you, who you do not know, and willing to build relationships with you, via the exchange of messages, letters, and texts. In today's world, memorable and lasting relationships with people at work or at school, who you are expected to be professional with, they are not the type of relationships you have on a daily basis, or talk about life freely with, its easier sometimes to talk to people away from your lives, when it comes to talking about life and your life that is. Not everything has to be about therapy, everyone deserves to have friends in life, and while your friends may have moved on or changed since high school and college, that doesn't mean that you still cant make time to be social. Half my friends now, are friends I have met who approach me online, to spark up conversation, always cordial I reply. Theres a difference between going to someone and opening up to someone coming up to you and opening up to you about their lives, that puts you in two different shoes in life. We all get two pairs in

Its not always that we are the one to whom others confide in, eventually there comes a time when we too must let our guards down and whether its in therapy, group therapy, AA, or talking to friends, in real life or online, always have something positive to say about life, you speak in the positive about life, you usually can speak more freely without having any regrets, or feeling the need to backtrack in life, you wouldn't want anyone to say about you in life, why its important never to talk about others, and to only speak about oneself in life. Especially sharing of photos, or of life stories, its more important to leave out details than it is to share details about others especially to strangers, dishing, and dishing makes you look more like a gossip, than a trusted confidant in life, and while sharing can be something to talk about, once you go back to those who you've spoken about, Im just saying, you don't have to take my word for it. So what is blogging in the someone who is comfortable talking to strangers, blogging is less stressful than it is to reply to a nagging to pen pal, in need of attention, love me, and want attentions from me, never requiring for me to meet them in person, but nonetheless expect the same from me, as we engaged in a relationship with. For the time being, dating online, was just that, dating online, people talk about online dating, as if its safe and have to meet in person, that's not true, most online dating for me, has just been talking online, not meeting in person at all, and I p from all of this is that people have lives, and sometimes people are so busy with their lives that all they have time for is for conversation, conversation at that, you really learn how to be creative while entertaining the advances of those you meet online, sometimes it can be fun and if its not fun, then stop talking to them, never do anything youre not comfortable with, phto-ing is not a requirement, Ive said no to things your just not comfortable with, and that's okay. Does distance really make the heart grow fonder? All this online chatting, has helped me am in life, and just starting to get comfortable with the fact of being alone in life, and not having a companion, or a family of my own, one day, and living one day at a time, then having a family of my own, would be a difficult task, so would sleeping next to the same person, them, and a closet. What used to be my dream, seems further from happening now, the only live in boyfriend Ive ever had was in college, Basketball Team, we shared my one bedroom apartment on the Hill. I was supposed to marry my boyfriend from Law School we had been planning to buy me a ring, upon graduating, but since I was not graduating, left, and drank, and we broke up, time away from him, did need a break from a relationship, never go out drinking alone, it usually ends bad! Not a good idea, how quickly you get taken advantage out, and theres no going back once you hook up with someone else, that lesson I learned the hard way. Its only after you settle down, and the best of times, I last saw my ex 2018 September, when I got my new job in Film, he visited me, he just moved to Texas, he's a DA now, he would still see me, we text on occasion, I can't find his number, in a fury I was deleting all the As from my phone including A number, it should be somewhere, I have panic attacks often. For what purpose does Pen Pals serve? Its pretty much a daily jotting down doing, and what I have planned, what my dreams are, what I look like right now, whether Im having a pretty day or not, if I could model pretending to act, and talking to someone as though I am getting to know them, or like they know who I am after having talked to them, and appreciate and value me as a person. Having meaningful relationships I think are what make a person feel good, even if they are in a think we are having with others, who may or may not always respond, and how we grow and come to love ourselves in the process of knowing them, we don't have the benefit of looking at ourselves when we talk to people in real life, but online, we have the benefit of looking back seeing our growth.

The day always seems harder before it gets done, and by the time its done, you wonder why you put so much effort into those minutes of traffic, wondering how much longer it would take, or wondering if you were going to survive the day of work, you did it and you should be one of those days. After reading agrandelife.net "31 Blog Post Ideas for December" I've decided to share a few of my Do's and Don'ts as a blogger, searchenginejournal.com recommends the following from an SEO standpoint "writing NOT to-dos" ... (1) don't copy competitors, (2) don't be inconsistent, (3) don't procrastinate, (4) don't be perfect, and (6) don't plagiarize. [2] In today's world of writing its hard to get your footing online, and build your following, continue to come up with topics of interest, there's nothing wrong with citations, so that is the basis of your writing, not word for word the exact as someone else has written, I think you get the point. Here's a list of my tips with people you meet online, whether it's a hit connection or not, practice makes perfect (2) Always continue to look for spots to Guest Post, Networking, and Taking Up on Opportunities Offered to You to Write, (4) It's Okay to "@ " people online, I've "@ " a few Authors and a way to begin networking and getting to know people online, (5) "Like" other people's work and Continue to Build Your Following, (6) you are Building a Following Among Book Readers and Writers, then Read Books and Write Reviews its as simple as that, contribute (7) your wealth of knowledge out there, you don't know everything, there's no such thing as writers block, (8) Read, I read a couple books a month with the literature out there, and gain exposure on how other people write, and (9) Don't lose your positive tone, you will have good d just hearing from you is what matter most, always give it your all, on my best posts, I earn up to 400+ Likes. Side-Note: Recently Ive think I got burnt out competing with Black Friday, writing 3-4 posts a day, trying to keep my Alexa Rank up, holding on for dear life, be about stats, I feel like, once you start making your writing about the numbers you lose your edge, easily knocked down, but its good. Years ago, I used to work in waves, and by the time, I checked, I earned 1,000 followers in one day, days ago, it seems to occur always heads in the game, and Im doing a million things at once. I've been working on my Dissertation recently, focusing on writing my Literature what I'm working on tonight.

Self-Improvement "2019" ...

12/5/2019

Its getting closer to the new year, when we start the year fresh, with new goals in mind. Whether or not 2019 was a success for you, the writing down your goals for 2020, its time to reflect. Start off by writing a list of things you accomplished 2019, what went well, and what was able to be the person you wanted to become 2019, why or why not. "Failure" is okay, its all apart of the journey to becoming our best self to establish a new routine for ourselves, we struggle in the process of learning, and becoming accustomed to a new way of living life, accepting a new diagnosis, being prescribed a new med, making new friends, experiencing loss, learning a new trade, starting a new job these things require us to adapt, and continue to educate ourselves, on how to adapt, and adjust our settings to re-center ourselves. Some things other than just ourselves, focusing less on what we don't know, and listening to input derived from other sources in life, can help by Catherine Reitman, I never watch YouTube, but decided to try something new, since I was already watching YouTubes for my Dissertation assignment, and think I will incorporate more "Ted Talk" Videos onto my blog, that was helpful to hear someone else's story of success a conscious choice to work, setting specific goals, whether or not one had the expertise, and being "brave enough [to] stick to your choice" reminds us. [2] According to moneySMARTguides.com, "When you stretch beyond your comfort zone, you are growing as a person. It is [3] -I guess that's what this year has been about for me, editing my book, re-reading old writing, and getting frustrated with myself. You completed my first draft of my book, and so much has changed since then, I was on a completely different journey in life then, than I am now. Life, is more realistic, and instead of setting lofty goals for myself, blogging wise, or volunteer work wise, trying to change the world, I focus at writing, and as my writing has improved so have I, and that's been both a frustrating look back, and also humbling to see my growth. I thought Id be a "Top 100 Personal Development" Blogger this year, much has changed. I can't believe I used to think that Twitter was that copying and pasting from my account to a notepad in my phone, there is a much easier way of writing, on Word, and on a Website absolutely no editing, just straight from your mind to your audience, current, how I got started writing online, on Twitter.

Simplify Your Life ...

In order to simply your life, zenhabits.net suggests doing the following: (1) Identify whats most important to you and (2) Eliminate everything else. reasons why someone would want to simply their lives, for me, simplifying my life, means getting a day job, blogging on the side, working on my book when I have free time, and do my own free reading assignments and book reviews when I can. In order to get all of that done on myself, something constant, like work, that keeps me moving forward, and prioritize my days when Im off of work to get everything else done. with bipolar its extremely difficult for me to feel well when I have nothing to do, I get tired, or I end up sleeping all day, why I schedule a calendar with everything that needs to get done and when, and always sure to keep up with emails, and respond promptly. Its maintaining momentum forward each day and each week, something to look forward to, and with expectation get things done. The more you leave things off until you are stressed out you become, the better you plan the smoother the transition bouncing from one thing to the next. When you know whats important actively engaging in activities that boost your positive energy and outlook, it makes everything else seem easier to get done, when you especially, you have to get done first what needs to get done, in order to get going doing anything besides what needs to get done. Its I have an assignment due, that I haven't at least started, or almost done with. I used to be able to manage working and going to school e go to bed around 8 or 9 pm everyday, and avoid the risk of a bipolar episode later in day especially occurring when tired or moody, he embarrassing condition to have, and everyone Ive spoken to assures me that we all get voices, when tired, and suggest not becoming to Medications as a crutch for coping everytime I have a bad day, or need to talk, eventually you have to be more independent if you wan the Doctor are expensive, and so is Therapy, etc. What to do? I don't let these things stress me out, always taking the opinions of other allowed myself to become overwhelmed, with everyones opinion about my condition, I would go nuts and freeze, and not show up to stare at the floor, not make eye contact, itching to go back to my room, uncomfortable in public or around people. That was the worst, around people, and only feeling worry free at home, that's no way to live life, alone.

12/31/2019

For me 2019 was about getting well and staying well, it was also the year I officially launched my blog on Weebly and got ranked on a website, update my content, and start researching for posts and it really made all the difference. Not to mention editing my first book, stability is so important to maintaining a positive outlook in life, and this is how meds have helped me. I even started dating again, I ha biochemical engineer. I also ran a half-marathon and lost 10 lbs with my new pen pal, I spotted at a Laker Game, we go to the same C probably shouldn't have in the first place, but life is short, why not make friends while you can, theres really no risk in that, except rej updates to others, it's the timing of your life that determines your success, how productive you are, what you get done each day, do yo when it comes to hireability are you able to work 9 to 5, well not if you have too many other things on your plate, you have to be able recently took medical leave from an internship to focus on my dissertation due in February. I will be graduating from Law School nex Abilify, just recently changed meds, it used to help with voices, I have a problem with calling the police whenever I need to talk about whats appropriate, and when to stop being creative, whats a good use of humor, whats helpful, what information helps, and what infor important, how you look. I've learned this the hard way over the years, have not always been well, and have experienced my share of f purposes of writing a book. Looking forward to 2020, and hopefully getting a new job! Im so excited for the year to begin, its gonna b

Phases in Life ...

You'll go through many phases in life, "We all grow, develop and mature as we continue to move on in life." [1] Now in my 30s, Im b all about being consistent, and staying disciplined, being on schedule. Getting your basic life skills down is so important to achieving p the less stressed out Id be and the more free time Id have to relax, rest, and prepare myself for the next task, eventually your body cant they say live for the moment, that doesn't mean take risks in life, it doesn't require excitement, or bending the rules to accommodate th reasonableness in life, its your behavior you are judged by, personally if Im not doing what Im supposed to be doing I get paranoid and life is tragically short," [2] so don't waste too much time being anyone other than yourself, or waste too much time people pleasing, ev helpful, too much alone time, and you'll regret the times you should've spent with friends and family, and spent instead alone "working don't expect to feel any better as time is running out in your 30s and everyones aging, about time lost, just do your best, you can always reading this now, then you are taking proactive steps to stay in tune with your surroundings and aware that youre not alone in the aging about all that you have accomplished, count all your blessings, and never quit trying.

Another Big Idea ...

Its not another big idea, to try in life, its not another big idea in life to wonder or to complain or to question the past in moving forward are surrounded by or what opportunities are afforded to you, if youre not allowed to imagine a better life for yourself then what is allowed ways of living other than by the systems you have established for daily living to achieve in life, and sometimes you think of who to love is life worth living for and if people don't agree with you that's okay many will think oh she just wants to be famous and rich, you know roll with the punches, life gets weird and life gets harder and the more you get paranoid as conservative about your own way of thinking you think they are unless you decide so to convince yourself of illness in yourself or in others, its your choice to live life its your choice given a chance in life to have a career as a paid employee was trained to work as a professional and cared from a professional stand point adderrall slows me down, off of adderrall I get tired on night meds, I choose to live life, Ive done nothing wrong to contribute to the world amplify any underlying issues, if I don't belong, I don't have to be alive plain and simple, if you think Im stupid and I don't deserve to live Ive suffered enough.

When Nothing Makes Sense ...

As a general rule of thumb anything that doesn't make sense, never made sense to begin with, sometimes it's a waste of energy trying to do it, beyond just whats read in the books, think for a minute, why trained in such a fashion to read review recite analyze critique, remember what has been thought, what stays in your memory, this differs from person to person. I stopped watching TV 2014, when I started blogging about shows, and on the new system I did not have recording capabilities I don't think Im not sure, but that's how I usually watched TV when I was a child. I have said, that's a manifestation of your disinterest in a person, and unwanted connection or association, therefore nothing that that person is bothered by individuals are not harmed, why not mentioned and not discussable issues, how I was harmed or what I have been through causes me to self-harm and hit my head, yes I put that much pressure on myself in life to be accepted and to work hard to get a job one day on a popular source online, where does that get you in life, nowhere. Your happiness is always dependent upon self-fulfillment and having no fear of intrusion or interference from others, writing is my livelihood, ie blogging. Eventually after finishing law school I have finally completed the process, and takes many application cycles before you are chosen for interviews, why I waited.

Don't Let Your Imagination Get the Best of You ...

You can never truly escape from whats bothering you, until you have come to terms with your past, holding onto resentments in life or being someone who are ones who are moving forward, its okay to reflect, don't be that hard on yourself, while trying to fit the mold of someone you are can be affected by, some with more or less control over environmental factors, some contributing to the responses or attitudes of others to you as a human, and its no longer a feeling of being above others that brings us comfort, but its not being bothered by others, that gives us our peace or identified as someone unfortunate or suffering from some grave hardship due to embarrassment that being around them, is argued to be more uptight you are, the more provocative everyone else seems and sounds, its not that they intend to be of threat to you, but ask yourself if you are, looking at you, or being around you. Its not all about you, everyone has problems of their own, some just cant keep still, and be a part of what is happening these days in the dating world. With less time to waste and less time spent with others, that leaves the majority of time to yourself that any discomforts in life be so pronounced that it causes others to question or worry for you, seeking to fix correct or better your condition about what others are thinking, overthinking about how you look or appear, overthinking about your future or your past, overthinking about the day to stay calm, why we have meds, it's the less you have to worry about the better off you'll be, the more manual labor imposed on you, the more projects, there are many hours in a day, don't waste your hours procrastinating for 5 hours working for 2 hours and call that an action plan. Moving forward can do so, because they do not have any discomforts associated with experiencing their now, have no desire to escape leave or avoid and motivated to better themselves in the future, continue to make progress in life. The best cure for discomfort is not through criticism or judgment of others, which is frowned upon, in order to be someone with a value opinion assumed to be correcting and fixing another, one must be able to

Moving to Wordpress ...

12/27/2019

I have finally begun the move to WordPress, its a $2000 job, to hire IT, I have decided to take it upon myself to complete the task, I at maybe now with a new site and a little less content to display to start, thats my current issue. Upon moving to WordPress you have to, my Weebly, I have no clue, you tell me what happened, I must have stopped in the middle of a partial move to WordPress and found n thousand dollars. How can that be? Don't assume crazy things are happening to you unless they are happening, and you can always sta of communications online, including meaning and understanding and comprehension, everyone reads into everything different these d unprofessional my final work product would be sloppy and when my head hurts or Im having an off day write anyways and share mys associated with feeling frozen lost or confused in life, who does that? Not me. Learning tech doesn't come with the same insurance pla written their pathway to that success online, thats tech, learn and teach, learn and teach, learn and teach, how we know whos who and with, I love to keep everything! What a match, bloggers and IT. Where was I? The Domain name? Well if its not on my Weebly where the Domain to WordPress and then Publish my site, (to get my address) I still dont know what my address is, all I know is that .com di have done something right then, I just have not been able to move my posts. Since I could not figure out how to move my address to V address: <http://box5843.temp.domains/~mymollyd/blog/>, which no one except for my can get to, but is published, and has ads running complete the transfer of lesliefischman.com.

Sometimes Its Best ...

Sometimes its best to just let the dust settle, and let your success make the noise. Theres something very aggravating about going back forward, if you brought it up, it still matters, and so long as you bring things up, they will and may become the subject of discussion an someone try so hard in life to be successful and fail, or "choke" as they say, someone who under the pressures of life, fails to amount t purpose of having a blog is to document my recovery and to show the progress that I have made, that is both to the benefit of myself a own messes in life, overcome their own struggles in life, and not feel alone in the process. It doesn't matter if you can or cannot relate to say about their life. We don't all live the same or similar lives, its all relative, whats $20 dollars to me is $200 to someone wealthier to law school, it was to be an advocate and to help those in need, work somewhere like Children's Law Center and be an Attorney, but it usually doesn't stop, one side or the other feeling worse off then they would have felt had they not chimed in or criticized someone t sentiments about others, to see if others are in agreement with them, for some find comfort in dislikes, and some find comradere in sim with a lot, probably live with less now, than those who grew up with less, and now strive to make better lives for themselves than their And for those of us not caught up in the he said she said are focused on our own healths, as that has become a priority above all else, e themselves and while providing for others, take life seriously, that's a mature approach to overcoming difficulties. You can't fix people advocacy is all about being of resource to others, and providing reassurances to them that everything will be okay, and let them know sometimes we need sounding boards in life, someone to just listen and be there for us, and in those moments, you become an advocate

I finally updated my resume, have been applying to jobs, hoping to start a new job or return to my old job in March, after I graduate in its dated. If you haven't already done so, I suggest checking out: resume-now.com [1]. The three page resume just isn't good enough, I providing a timeline, but I think that has done me more harm than good. Don't list every job you have ever taken, especially if you did with the place that you worked, to explain why things did not work out, you are after all the employee not considered a business, that' positions, and added my awards under the education section per school achieved in, I think that makes better sense. Whats more impor am working, if I am not working, what am I doing, seems like easy questions to answers, you should have a plan, and that plan should an as needed basis, I just removed that job completely. Less is more, share, but don't be too wordy, be brief, and its not important to u your work history and a big picture perspective of the work that you had accomplished during your time there, but also don't minimize when you did that work, you understood the purposes for doing the task, and if able to do those tasks then, should be able to talk about standard, that would be being judgmental, hearing people talk about work all the time, but theyre definitely talkers, not quiet like me in non-stop that's how I work. Before my downfall, every job I applied to and was interviewed for, I was accepted, based upon my resum that's when the past stops mattering, and your right now becomes very important to explain, why deserving of a job, and how you will past, as they were internships for a specified time period, not intended for long term placement. Not everyone gets paid, that's just real encouraged to keep going, and don't stop applying. Even if due to medical reasons, you stop working, you should continue to apply.

At What Moment Do You Stop? ...

At what moment do you stop, from sharing? Whenever it gets to the point that you are no longer sharing how you are presently, and your reflections are not relevant or necessary be shared to overcome what's troubling you, but maybe you're doing yourself a favor by not working out, not just on one's own, but with proper training and upon recognizing known systems of dialogue existing on subjects that I am empathetic toward anyone who is overtly emotional in the sense that they express anger, not appear victim, and look crazy, not speaking there, in writing, but sometimes a little thawing out of the issues goes a long way. Try this strategy for sharing your past:

1. What is bothering you, identify incident and persons who were harmed.
2. Have you reported the incident to a professional or the police.
3. After having reported what additional steps have you taken to cope.
4. Would the later sharing of information hurt you or someone you know.

No one is suggesting that you keep quiet about anything that's bothering you, but there is a time and a place for disclosures, and it may be the news. The less you associate your reality to your exposures, the less harm can be done upon disclosing timelines, concerning your fighting, pointing fingers, and blaming others for your losses in life. The more you complain, the more notes are taken, and more other people are in the first place. Only comparisons can be made at those points, as to who is best suited, who is more in the know, who knows better, who is on your side, who a favor in life. Never ask for more than you can give? If you need help, think first for what reasons are you selecting these people? Your concerns, an idea, whenever you build something new, that is not in existence, there is a lot of inner turmoil you will encounter and struggle with. You are proud of, it sometimes takes many years and steps and connections in life, to finally establish yourself professionally, as you grow up, that's how one excels in school, and similarly how one excels in the workforce, not by asking for help or direction from others, that you learn a lesson, you know more than you think you know, and many things can be self-taught these days, with a little effort, and dedication to yourself. If you have the means to pay for support, then do so, but only when you are ready and knowledgeable of how that support will be used. Services to fill the shoes of those whose services can be paid for, the difference between AA and therapy, know your limits in life, when you face those issues, you are just exerting more energy than is required to solve a problem, ie becoming emotional for no reason. Don't work yourself up, you feel less like fighting about it, and proving others wrong, and learn how to rise above it all, and shine in lieu of your failures and choices to finally let go, its because by then its too late to care, too late to fight, and too late to correct or fix what has been broken, I learned.

Say What You Mean ...

More times than not, when we are out of our wits end, overwhelmed, everything circling overhead, a weighty feeling of discontent, when you go again that a sense of clarity arrives, and in that space, thoughts begin to come to mind, why writing is so important. If you leave longer you procrastinate and keep to yourself, hidden what's bothering you, dodging subjects, or trying to write over issues, the more you do, some, I'm sure that everything that is said, gets applied, as whether of or in reference to something or someone past, known to have been what is the best way I can communicate that I'm struggling with an issue that I have yet to address out loud, not always but sometimes for a positive purpose moving forward other than to make one or the other, look or appear more put together than the other, to whose dissatisfaction is my immature response to addressing what currently at issue, that's an abstract way of saying you cannot use the past to explain your present to others using your past to prove you unworthy of connections at this point in your life, as though things have always been this way, friendship, as related to your condition now, and current losses in friendship as being for the same or similar reasons, put you at fault, or the others, as though parallel lives, or lives once linked, suffer for the same reasons, it doesn't matter where you grew up, the more you are down in life, likewise anyone new or who has not interacted with you for a long period of time in real life, not from your past, is easily empowered, where once a special life, gets turned into a source of hate for humor, as though thought deserving likewise as in being defamed, on pogs, made fun of on every comedy channel and in film and song, if you've never experienced success in life before and

Just because you grew up well off, does not mean that you're immune from controversies later in life, or immune from suit. Don't expect a person. It's wrong to assume that someone who is born into privilege assumes that they are to be respected by others, like everyone else. What your socio-economic standing is in life. To be respected one must have a positive outlook in life, I was raised to always "see beyond yourself. For example, if you cannot function without meds and taken off all medications, then expect to look, behave, and speak differently. Respond in a positive manner, other than to stay home, and sleep all day, that was not the correct response to negativity toward me, to be able to do what is right, "god helps those who help themselves." It may feel as though you have been backed into a corner in life, sent down, but you look or appear, and based upon your present abilities in life, if you are not working or in school and not doing anything impressive, which put you in your place in life, irrespective of whatever hardships you may have endured, it doesn't seem to matter at those points under the table, it doesn't matter if you have failed, it doesn't matter if you are doing your best, it doesn't matter if you have lost 50lbs reserved that choice in life, and without explanation are allowed to reject you and treat you as lesser than in life. That I don't agree with being treated as someone who contributed to any conditions faced by another, was insulting to say the least, how could someone who I had been a victim, so long as they can label you as such, and that's not a life, I thought worth living to disprove, that took about 4 years to undo the probation. My record gets expunged 2020, in addition I got a suspected dui misdemeanor 2013, after drinking 3 drinks and driving home, then no one can harm you, and that's where I'm at in life right now and where I've been at for the past 5 years, alone, and enjoying my success. What happened. It's not an easy topic to talk about, causes for suicide, but I'm glad I've overcome those feelings, and the shame and embarrassment when you are not able to represent yourself it's a big deal, dying is not the correct response to suit, especially if you have done nothing but mouthing your condition behind your back. There is a way of thinking about life, without causing uproar, and it's called writing, the less you're wrong, or have the wrong ideas about life, easily misunderstood, and written off as problematic. If you're a good person, and have always been someone to keep away from people or specific individuals as though I caused harm to them or threatened harm to their sense of well-being in life, don't go looking for it, and every instant connection will feel special, that's probably because you have had so few interactions, that's especially new people coming into your life, that's a quick recipe for disaster, the more enthusiastic you are, the quicker they are to turn on you. It's hard to come up in life, and it's not by connections that you do, it's by your stability, and ability to make good decisions in your life, not by making it your business the problems or losses of others, when people are ready to come forward for help they do so on their own, and speak as an advocate or respect you by education or upbringing, does not mean commit suicide if you get sued, that's the bottom line and make me a twin, do me a favor and don't make a losing team out of a team that is already suffering, and alienate me or cast me out as someone who doesn't live or die now matters to me, how courts help.

Stop Trying to Fix Yourself ...

It's almost 2020, and it's time to start being happy just being yourself. There comes a point in time when it's too late to practice mindfulness. "There is a surplus of paths toward improvement" according to psychologytoday.com. [1] As you grow and evolve you must constantly adapt you may miss out on a whole lot to life, it's okay to stop and smell the roses from time to time, no one ever said you had to be perfect. It's being, one who is constantly questioning themselves and others is rarely a happy person, looking for flaws, or similarities for comparison. Improvement is often times via self-help, seeking to better ourselves, reach our potentials, strive for the best, and be critical of our progress. "If you're broken." [3] So stop trying to fix yourself. Be excited about the new life you are creating for yourself, maintain awareness, ignore your past. Then why try to be perfect and set unrealistic expectation of ourselves? [5] Sometimes when we pay less attention to what's bothering us, we're having a defeatist attitude which sometimes being a perfectionist includes. [6] It has been recommended by letsreachsuccess.com, to respect your decision in the past, and to respect your past decision making as doing what you thought was best for you at that time in your life, then your friendships, achievements, what is life supposed to be like to you? So stop "blaming yourself for all the things that went wrong, all the things that are off than you are, don't get in the habit of putting yourself down, eventually you'll have to learn to speak well of yourself. So take good care of yourself."

Maintaining a Positive Attitude ...

Much about success requires that we maintain a positive attitude in life. Why is this important? According to plazacollege.edu, "Maintaining a positive attitude is important for your health and your relationships." [1] Especially in the face of stress. Entrepreneur.com states that, "By learning how to manage stress and respond to it, you can improve your life. First accept that your ability to succeed will be determined by how you "deal with life and manage stress," when you respond to circumstances. [2] Tracy. [3] Remember your "thoughts and feelings determine your actions," self-talk is so important when it comes to problem solving. When something happens, you get to choose whether it's a positive or negative experience and react accordingly." [5] It's important to maintain a positive attitude. Furthermore, success.com states that, "We all have a choice. We can choose an inner dialogue of self-encouragement and self-motivation. This is the software that programs your attitude, which determines how you present yourself to the world around you." [8] Software, that's what you need to write and pick myself apart and put myself back together until my thoughts were clear and my life was balanced again. Sometimes I feel like I'm stuck and just move forward in life. If for everytime you became unhappy you attributed your unhappiness as caused by another, then that's what you need to do is to stop blaming yourself to be brought down by another person. Come to know and understand these patterns in life, and learn from your mistakes in the past. Stop blaming others to thinking in terms of I can't do that to yourself. Remember your affirmations, what is it about yourself that you like, and what others think of you should not matter, nor change your attitude and outlook in life. Visualize where you want to be in life, and continue to work on it."

Book Review: "Get Out of Your Own Way" ...

"Get Out of Your Own Way" focuses on "40 common self-defeating behaviors" [1], this book is meant to serve as guide for how to choose your course of action." [2] My favorite quote is in the beginning of the book where he says "one of the greatest tragedies you can experience is to realize what's important." (page 23) Looking back, what will a meaningful life look like to you. To me having a meaningful life means to be able to make them proud, and to likewise be proud of myself, I've faced a tremendous amount of pressure in recent years, financially and emotionally, I just moved home. Because I didn't make it on my own, during my time on my own, I'm reading this book and realizing that self-defeating is life-enhancing." He offers practical steps to add to our daily routines. Always put your best foot forward, and continue to move forward. I was reminded of the time, I was sent to rehab during law school and my Brother shouted at me in the kitchen calling me a "pill head" which was true, I was dependent on medications, to function, but they were prescribed meds, so I didn't think I was a drug addict, but was sent to Dana Pointe. Just like admitting you have a problem with medications is self-defeating, it's the first step toward recovery. The author reminds you to move on, and be accepting of the opinions that others hold, they could just be trying to help you, no need to self-harm or bury yourself in resentment. I picked up running, like my Mom and my Brother who ran Marathons, and ran a half-marathon. I'm bringing this up because our fight was a night, that was a treat "wanna see my room!" -In order to move forward you have to be doing for yourself things that others would be doing for you. Anything, you have to be yourself, and when you are yourself, are you comfortable with who you are. "The best way to achieve forgiveness is to be forgiving." Skylar Grey was pretty special, it takes time to overcome shame and embarrassment associated with failure, just start with being proud of yourself.

Why You Can't Go Backwards ...

If you find yourself asking why you can't go backwards, chances are it's time to move forwards. It's hard to go backwards in life, to the point where you always be a different person, in a different period of your life, and over time, with change, so do your options in life. It's easy when you're young and full of gratification. The "internship" eventually you grow out of internships and have to start applying to real jobs and competing with other people. Missed, and what places you can't go back to in life, when you first start working it feels like you can work anywhere, as you get older, whether that's just a matter of wear and tear. Eventually you have to make a choice, of whether to stay or go, and what to focus on in your life. To the job offered, then do so, but by all means keep going, I'm just acknowledging the fact that life happens fast, and if you're not a go-getter you are required to. It's that time in between that you allow for, that makes you look like a risk to hire, as someone who is not to be relied upon. Some days you are productive, and that you keep going in life. Who can think of relationships at a time like this? I do. It's usually the opposite of what you want, to and that's not always the case. I'm the type of person who checks in with everyone anyways, I'm not sure whether to or not sometimes. It's bad, bustle.com explains, "There's nothing inherently wrong with losing touch, even though we often feel guilty about it and place judgment on ourselves. You'll be a much happier person having reconnected with old friends, than allowing for more time in between. Who knows, according to the author of 'The Best Way to Achieve Forgiveness' is to be forgiving."

made it possible to stay connected with hundreds of old friends at a time,” [3] so its next to impossible to completely fall off the face of the earth and keep moving forward. They’ll be happy for you and the progress you’ve made.

Deliberately Awkward ...

No one intends to be deliberately awkward, it’s the difference between being professional and sharing a personal perspective in life. We share ourselves. Sometimes it can be fun to share information about ourselves online and other times, it can cause much stress and unwanted attention. You can keep going, from task to task seamlessly, and with few errors, move on to the next project, without having to go back and forth. You’re connected to you think or hear, that’s not how voices occur, it occurs when you stop hearing yourself and instead of hearing your own voice, you just by my education, trained to write in a balanced way, not to cause sides, or to provoke controversy, I grew up in controversy, I don’t know what people are thinking, and what people are saying. Any unwanted attentions usually cause us physiological distress, my head burns, I have to work on myself and stay steady and allow for the quiet to occur on its own, and let my energy flow back in via my work ethic, and a trauma to pass, why in therapy when overwhelmed, they tell you to lie down or to clench you fists and relax, that’s exactly mindfulness. Focus wise and energy wise, turning on and off thoughts like we do emotions, or like we feel about people, but never to ourselves, can

When you have an education the sky’s the limit, in terms of job opportunity, and confidence. Life’s all about confidence, without which you’ll go through many phases throughout your academic career. According to nwmissouri.edu “Without passion and purpose in what you do, hard workers, who put 100% effort toward their studies and vocational trainings, but how they are able to “actualize their career plans. The workforce “have a zest for living and for engaging in their daily work.” [3] Have positive purpose in life, what are you passionate about? [4] It’s hard to go to work and school at the same time, but we do. It’s also hard to get a job without having had a job, which is why we need a lot of dedication and commitment, to continue to work day in and day out, with hopes for your future reward at some point in time, to find joy and happiness in the things that you do. Your happiness comes first above all else, before relationships, and sometimes even before people. You can add to any equation and make being around you worth the time and effort spent to see you, or have you work for them. You can improve when they make those changes.” [5] So where does that leave you, those “early stages of an academic career ... fraught with challenges” who spent “a high proportion of working time devoted to research and networking” found more career success and advanced career with more job interviews, and more job offers, (speaking from personal experience) “your credentials may make you competitive and even help you get your work done.

Pick and Choose Your Battles ...

We can't all be warriors when it comes to standing our ground, eventually, being hard on others wears on us, and begins to take its toll. We can wind up saving yourself that much more heartache in the long run, being placed in the wrong, for being overly emotional, or overreacting. The best of us, and sometimes we can be wrong, never assume anyone or anything is out to get you in life, or that things are being plotted against you. The control you feel, is what stops you from being in action and doing things for yourself to keep you moving forward in life. If you're worried, it's a disservice not being at peace within yourself. In the wise words of C. JoyBell C., "It's not winning battles that makes you happy, but it's the peace that helps to "take a step back and look at the big picture." [2] What are the long term and short term risks of fighting. Bearing resentments is destructive to our bodies as well as our minds." [3] According to entrepreneur.com in order to overcome resentments and negative thoughts, you must focus on your situation and passively accepting that you're incapable of doing anything about it." [4] The worst thing you can do is to accept that's happened in the past, how often do we find ourselves upset about something that's happened a long time ago, focus on the present now, what can you be proud of, and center your thoughts around positives. "Negative thinking is often centered around thoughts about the future." [6] So stay positive, I hope that you break free of your negative thinking, and begin to "exud[e] the kind of positive energy

Don't Wait Too Long ...

Sounds like a Dashboard Confessional song “Don’t Wait” when it comes to all relationships worth keeping, don’t wait too long to make a new life, only to find that the same people are not around, that’s addiction and recovery. You learn the hard way to wait with your soul, rather than preserve the privacies of your keeping, as many of us ventured onto social media, however not all I think for while you were sharing. Sometimes we get so carried away sharing, that it seems like its more for selfish reasons, than it is to benefit to friends, in fact the more challenging your life becomes the more difficult it gets to talk to them or find time to talk to them. Rather than became so distant, well maybe if I hadn’t been so boisterous online, rambling for so long for so many years, trying to write, and picking connecting, I think its ruined more careers than it has helped, being vocal, but I could be wrong. Its one thing to share your mind, its another mistake. Psychologytoday.com points out that “feelings of loss and anticipation that are part of almost every life transition ... give you they’re replying, you can’t ask for much if you have f%cked up in life. All you can do, is be thankful for where you are right now, the moving forward so that you don’t have to experience future losses in life, when it comes to relationships and friendships. You really h track, I have attended rehabs (out-patient and in-patient), IOPs, and in-hospital treatment programs, all of which have taught me the sk “remind[ing] [our]sel[ves] that [our] present situation will change over time,” [2] than we are accepting our circumstances, the hand w selves, and displays of self and knowledge. Appreciate the journey, its not all roses, from the bottom up, but you have to keep going in the more difficult it becomes to start over, whether its working, or blogging, or book writing, you have to keep going, and upon finishi

There will be many times in your life, when you will be pushed to become something that you are not, whether that be someone who i find a careful balance between the two, especially if youre a woman. There’s so much pressure nowadays to be strong an beautiful, bu those are the characteristics and traits that you will pick up, and among the women you admire in life, similarly the same the character dominant traits are of those who are successful and accomplished. Its by those who succeed in life, that we are pressured to be more li on. For example mndaily.com states “In day-to-day conversation, we don’t talk about what it means to be a woman [or] about all of the appreciated, and valued, so do many wish to be adored, admired, and looked up to. Not all were meant to be mentors in life, some are recognizing ones own self-worth that’s becoming more and more of a challenge, sometimes the quickest way to a positive sense of sel that “when women are behaving more masculine than feminine, they lose touch with who they are, what they need and what they want more successful women become in the workforce a greater sense of mutual pride among us we would feel for one another, and that tha live with, if only we could live in a world in which more could be happier for one another, and less resentful toward one another for th caretakers, sometimes its those we expect the most from that we are hardest on, expecting the most from those who are paving the way what Im trying to say, is that theres no rush, unless you are trying to get married and have kids, that would be the first time around, do

12/31/2019

For me 2019 was about getting well and staying well, it was also the year I officially launched my blog on Weebly and got ranked on a website, update my content, and start researching for posts and it really made all the difference. Not to mention editing my first book, stability is so important to maintaining a positive outlook in life, and this is how meds have helped me. I even started dating again, I had a biochemical engineer. I also ran a half-marathon and lost 10 lbs with my new pen pal, I spotted at a Laker Game, we go to the same College probably shouldn't have in the first place, but life is short, why not make friends while you can, theres really no risk in that, except rejection updates to others, it's the timing of your life that determines your success, how productive you are, what you get done each day, do you when it comes to hireability are you able to work 9 to 5, well not if you have too many other things on your plate, you have to be able to recently took medical leave from an internship to focus on my dissertation due in February. I will be graduating from Law School next year. Abilify, just recently changed meds, it used to help with voices, I have a problem with calling the police whenever I need to talk about what's appropriate, and when to stop being creative, what's a good use of humor, what's helpful, what information helps, and what information is important, how you look. I've learned this the hard way over the years, have not always been well, and have experienced my share of failures for the purposes of writing a book. Looking forward to 2020, and hopefully getting a new job! Im so excited for the year to begin, its gonna be a good one.

Phases in Life ...

You'll go through many phases in life, "We all grow, develop and mature as we continue to move on in life." [1] Now in my 30s, Im becoming more all about being consistent, and staying disciplined, being on schedule. Getting your basic life skills down is so important to achieving your goals, the less stressed out Id be and the more free time Id have to relax, rest, and prepare myself for the next task, eventually your body cant take it they say live for the moment, that doesn't mean take risks in life, it doesn't require excitement, or bending the rules to accommodate the unreasonable in life, its your behavior you are judged by, personally if Im not doing what Im supposed to be doing I get paranoid and overthink life is tragically short," [2] so don't waste too much time being anyone other than yourself, or waste too much time people pleasing, even if its helpful, too much alone time, and you'll regret the times you should've spent with friends and family, and spent instead alone "working alone" don't expect to feel any better as time is running out in your 30s and everyones aging, about time lost, just do your best, you can always make the most of it, reading this now, then you are taking proactive steps to stay in tune with your surroundings and aware that youre not alone in the aging process, about all that you have accomplished, count all your blessings, and never quit trying.

Another Big Idea ...

Its not another big idea, to try in life, its not another big idea in life to wonder or to complain or to question the past in moving forward, you are surrounded by or what opportunities are afforded to you, if youre not allowed to imagine a better life for yourself then what is allowed, ways of living other than by the systems you have established for daily living to achieve in life, and sometimes you think of who to love, who is life worth living for and if people don't agree with you that's okay many will think oh she just wants to be famous and rich, you know its a roller roll with the punches, life gets weird and life gets harder and the more you get paranoid as conservative about your own way of thinking, you think they are unless you decide so to convince yourself of illness in yourself or in others, its your choice to live life its your choice given a chance in life to have a career as a paid employee was trained to work as a professional and cared from a professional standpoint, adderrall slows me down, off of adderrall I get tired on night meds, I choose to live life, Ive done nothing wrong to contribute to the world, I dont amplify any underlying issues, if I don't belong, I don't have to be alive plain and simple, if you think Im stupid and I don't deserve to be here, Ive suffered enough.

When Nothing Makes Sense ...

As a general rule of thumb anything that doesn't make sense, never made sense to begin with, sometimes it's a waste of energy trying to it, beyond just what's read in the books, think for a minute, why trained in such a fashion to read review recite analyze critique, remember has been thought, what stays in your memory, this differs from person to person. I stopped watching TV 2014, when I started blogging shows, and on the new system I did not have recording capabilities I don't think Im not sure, but that's how I usually watched TV when has said, that's a manifestation of your disinterest in a person, and unwanted connection or association, therefore nothing that that person bothered by individuals are not harmed, why not mentioned and not discussable issues, how I was harmed or what I have been through causes me to self-harm and hit my head, yes I put that much pressure on myself in life to be accepted and to work hard to get a job one popular source online, where does that get you in life, nowhere. Your happiness is always dependent upon self-fulfillment and having of intrusion or interference from others, writing is my livelihood, ie blogging. Eventually after finishing law school I have finally come process, and takes many application cycles before you are chosen for interviews, why I waited.

Don't Let Your Imagination Get the Best of You ...

You can never truly escape from what's bothering you, until you have come to terms with your past, holding onto resentments in life or are ones who are moving forward, its okay to reflect, don't be that hard on yourself, while trying to fit the mold of someone you is care be affected by, some with more or less control over environmental factors, some contributing to the responses or attitudes of others to human, and its no longer a feeling of being above others that brings us comfort, but its not being bothered by others, that gives us our or identified as someone unfortunate or suffering from some grave hardship due to embarrassment that being around them, is argued to more uptight you are, the more provocative everyone else seems and sounds, its not that they intend to be of threat to you, but ask you you, looking at you, or being around you. Its not all about you, everyone has problems of their own, some just cant keep still, and be a happening these days in the dating world. With less time to waste and less time spent with others, that leaves the majority of time to out that any discomforts in life be so pronounced that it causes others to question or worry for you, seeking to fix correct or better your cor about what others are thinking, overthinking about how you look or appear, overthinking about your future or your past, overthinking the day to stay calm, why we have meds, it's the less you have to worry about the better off you'll be, the more manual labor imposed projects, there are many hours in a day, don't waste your hours procrastinating for 5 hours working for 2 hours and call that an action forward can do so, because they do not have any discomforts associated with experiencing their now, have no desire to escape leave or and motivated to better themselves in the future, continue to make progress in life. The best cure for discomfort is not through criticism others, which is frowned upon, in order to be someone with a value opinion assumed to be correcting and fixing another, one must be

Moving to Wordpress ...

12/27/2019

12/26/2019

Sometimes its best to just let the dust settle, and let your success make the noise. Theres something very aggravating about going back forward, if you brought it up, it still matters, and so long as you bring things up, they will and may become the subject of discussion and someone try so hard in life to be successful and fail, or “choke” as they say, someone who under the pressures of life, fails to amount to purpose of having a blog is to document my recovery and to show the progress that I have made, that is both to the benefit of myself and own messes in life, overcome their own struggles in life, and not feel alone in the process. It doesn't matter if you can or cannot relate to say about their life. We don't all live the same or similar lives, its all relative, whats $20 dollars to me is $200 to someone wealthier to law school, it was to be an advocate and to help those in need, work somewhere like Children's Law Center and be an Attorney, but it usually doesn't stop, one side or the other feeling worse off then they would have felt had they not chimed in or criticized someone to sentiments about others, to see if others are in agreement with them, for some find comfort in dislikes, and some find comradere in sim with a lot, probably live with less now, than those who grew up with less, and now strive to make better lives for themselves than their And for those of us not caught up in the he said she said are focused on our own healths, as that has become a priority above all else, e themselves and while providing for others, take life seriously, that's a mature approach to overcoming difficulties. You can't fix people advocacy is all about being of resource to others, and providing reassurances to them that everything will be okay, and let them know sometimes we need sounding boards in life, someone to just listen and be there for us, and in those moments, you become an advocate

12/26/2019

I finally updated my resume, have been applying to jobs, hoping to start a new job or return to my old job in March, after I graduate in its dated. If you haven't already done so, I suggest checking out: resume-now.com [1]. The three page resume just isn't good enough, I providing a timeline, but I think that has done me more harm than good. Don't list every job you have ever taken, especially if you did with the place that you worked, to explain why things did not work out, you are after all the employee not considered a business, that's positions, and added my awards under the education section per school achieved in, I think that makes better sense. Whats more impor am working, if I am not working, what am I doing, seems like easy questions to answers, you should have a plan, and that plan should an as needed basis, I just removed that job completely. Less is more, share, but don't be too wordy, be brief, and its not important to u your work history and a big picture perspective of the work that you had accomplished during your time there, but also don't minimize when you did that work, you understood the purposes for doing the task, and if able to do those tasks then, should be able to talk about standard, that would be being judgmental, hearing people talk about work all the time, but theyre definitely talkers, not quiet like me in non-stop that's how I work. Before my downfall, every job I applied to and was interviewed for, I was accepted, based upon my resu that's when the past stops mattering, and your right now becomes very important to explain, why deserving of a job, and how you will past, as they were internships for a specified time period, not intended for long term placement. Not everyone gets paid, that's just real encouraged to keep going, and don't stop applying. Even if due to medical reasons, you stop working, you should continue to apply.

At What Moment Do You Stop? ...

At what moment do you stop, from sharing? Whenever it gets to the point that you are no longer sharing how you are presently, and your reflections are not relevant or necessary be shared to overcome what's troubling you, but maybe you're doing yourself a favor by not worked out, not just on one's own, but with proper training and upon recognizing known systems of dialogue existing on subjects that are empathetic toward anyone who is overtly emotional in the sense that they express anger, not appear victim, and look crazy, not speaking there, in writing, but sometimes a little thawing out of the issues goes a long way. Try this strategy for sharing your past:

1. What is bothering you, identify incident and persons who were harmed.
2. Have you reported the incident to a professional or the police.
3. After having reported what additional steps have you taken to cope.
4. Would the later sharing of information hurt you or someone you know.

No one is suggesting that you keep quiet about anything that's bothering you, but there is a time and a place for disclosures, and it may be the news. The less you associate your reality to your exposures, the less harm can be done upon disclosing timelines, concerning your fighting, pointing fingers, and blaming others for your losses in life. The more you complain, the more notes are taken, and more other the first place. Only comparisons can be made at those points, as to who is best suited, who is more in the know, who knows better, who who a favor in life. Never ask for more than you can give? If you need help, think first for what reasons are you selecting these person concerns, an idea, whenever you build something new, that is not in existence, there is a lot of inner turmoil you will encounter and struggle you are proud of, it sometimes takes many years and steps and connections in life, to finally establish yourself professionally, as you grow that's how one excels in school, and similarly how one excels in the workforce, not by asking for help or direction from others, that you lesson, you know more than you think you know, and many things can be self-taught these days, with a little effort, and dedication to yourself. If you have the means to pay for support, then do so, but only when you are ready and knowledgeable of how that support will services to fill the shoes of those whose services can be paid for, the difference between AA and therapy, know your limits in life, when those issues, you are just exerting more energy than is required to solve a problem, ie becoming emotional for no reason. Don't work you on, you feel less like fighting about it, and proving others wrong, and learn how to rise above it all, and shine in lieu of your failures and choices to finally let go, its because by then its too late to care, too late to fight, and too late to correct or fix what has been broken, I lo

Say What You Mean ...

More times than not, when we are out of our wits end, overwhelmed, everything circling overhead, a weighty feeling of discontent, we going again that a sense of clarity arrives, and in that space, thoughts begin to come to mind, why writing is so important. If you leave longer you procrastinate and keep to yourself, hidden what's bothering you, dodging subjects, or trying to write over issues, the more you some, Im sure that everything that is said, gets applied, as whether of or in reference to something or someone past, known to have been what is the best way I can communicate that Im struggling with an issue that I have yet to address out loud, not always but sometimes positive purpose moving forward other than to make one or the other, look or appear more put together than the other, to whos disserved immature response to addressing what currently at issue, that's an abstract way of saying you cannot use the past to explain your present of others using your past to prove you unworthy of connections at this point in your life, as though things have always been this way, friendship, as related to your condition now, and current losses in friendship as being for the same or similar reasons, put you at fault, or the others, as though parallel lives, or lives once linked, suffer for the same reasons, it doesn't matter where you grew up, the more down in life, likewise anyone new or who has not interacted with you for a long period of time in real life, not from your past, is easily empowerment occur, where once a special life, gets turned into a source of hate for humor, as though thought deserving likewise as in defamed, on pogs, made fun of on every comedy channel and in film and song, if you've never experienced success in life before and

Just Because ...

Just because you grew up well off, does not mean that you're immune from controversies later in life, or immune from suit. Don't expect anyone to respect you. It's wrong to assume that someone who is born into privilege assumes that they are to be respected by others, like everyone else. It's not about what your socio-economic standing is in life. To be respected one must have a positive outlook in life, I was raised to always "see beyond yourself. For example, if you cannot function without meds and taken off all medications, then expect to look, behave, and speak differently. Respond in a positive manner, other than to stay home, and sleep all day, that was not the correct response to negativity toward me, to be able to do what is right, "god helps those who help themselves." It may feel as though you have been backed into a corner in life, sent down, but you look or appear, and based upon your present abilities in life, if you are not working or in school and not doing anything impressive, which put you in your place in life, irrespective of whatever hardships you may have endured, it doesn't seem to matter at those points. Under the table, it doesn't matter if you have failed, it doesn't matter if you are doing your best, it doesn't matter if you have lost 50lbs. Reserved that choice in life, and without explanation are allowed to reject you and treat you as lesser than in life. That I don't agree with being treated as someone who contributed to any conditions faced by another, was insulting to say the least, how could someone who I have been a victim, so long as they can label you as such, and that's not a life, I thought worth living to disprove, that took about 4 years to undo through probation. My record gets expunged 2020, in addition I got a suspected DUI misdemeanor 2013, after drinking 3 drinks and driving home, then no one can harm you, and that's where I'm at in life right now and where I've been at for the past 5 years, alone, and enjoying my life. What happened. It's not an easy topic to talk about, causes for suicide, but I'm glad I've overcome those feelings, and the shame and embarrassment when you are not able to represent yourself it's a big deal, dying is not the correct response to suit, especially if you have done nothing wrong, mouthing your condition behind your back. There is a way of thinking about life, without causing uproar, and it's called writing, the less you're wrong, or have the wrong ideas about life, easily misunderstood, and written off as problematic. If you're a good person, and have always been someone to keep away from people or specific individuals as though I caused harm to them or threatened harm to their sense of well-being in life, don't go looking for it, and every instant connection will feel special, that's probably because you have had so few interactions, that's especially new people coming into your life, that's a quick recipe for disaster, the more enthusiastic you are, the quicker they are to throw you out. Hard to come up in life, and it's not by connections that you do, it's by your stability, and ability to make good decisions in your life, not to let it be your business the problems or losses of others, when people are ready to come forward for help they do so on their own, and speak as an advocate or respect you by education or upbringing, does not mean commit suicide if you get sued, that's the bottom line and make a twin, do me a favor and don't make a losing team out of a team that is already suffering, and alienate me or cast me out as someone who doesn't live or die now matters to me, how courts help.

Stop Trying to Fix Yourself ...

It's almost 2020, and it's time to start being happy just being yourself. There comes a point in time when it's too late to practice mindfulness. "surplus of paths toward improvement" according to psychologytoday.com. [1] As you grow and evolve you must constantly adapt yourself. You may miss out on a whole lot to life, it's okay to stop and smell the roses from time to time, no one ever said you had to be perfect. It's not about being, one who is constantly questioning themselves and others is rarely a happy person, looking for flaws, or similarities for comparison. Improvement is often times via self-help, seeking to better ourselves, reach our potentials, strive for the best, and be critical of our progress. "broken." [3] So stop trying to fix yourself. Be excited about the new life you are creating for yourself, maintain awareness, ignore your past. Then why try to be perfect and set unrealistic expectations of ourselves? [5] Sometimes when we pay less attention to what's bothering us, we're having a defeatist attitude which sometimes being a perfectionist includes. [6] It has been recommended by letsreachsuccess.com, to respect your decision in the past, and to respect your past decision making as doing what you thought was best for you at that time in your life, then your friendships, achievements, what is life supposed to be like to you? So stop "blaming yourself for all the things that went wrong, all the things that went off than you are, don't get in the habit of putting yourself down, eventually you'll have to learn to speak well of yourself. So take good

Much about success requires that we maintain a positive attitude in life. Why is this important? According to plazacollege.edu, “Maintain your attitude and your relationships.” [1] Especially in the face of stress. Entrepreneur.com states that, “By learning how to manage stress and respect your time, you can improve your productivity. First accept that your ability to succeed will be determined by how you “deal with life and manage stress,” when you respond to circumstances. [2] Tracy. [3] Remember your “thoughts and feelings determine your actions,” self-talk is so important when it comes to problem solving. When something happens, you get to choose whether it’s a positive or negative experience and react accordingly.” [5] It’s important to maintain a positive attitude. Furthermore, success.com states that, “We all have a choice. We can choose an inner dialogue of self-encouragement and self-motivation. This is the software that programs your attitude, which determines how you present yourself to the world around you.” [8] Software, that’s what you need to write and pick myself apart and put myself back together until my thoughts were clear and my life was balanced again. Sometimes I feel like I just move forward in life. If for everytime you became unhappy you attributed your unhappiness as caused by another, then that’s what you need to be brought down by another person. Come to know and understand these patterns in life, and learn from your mistakes in the past. Stop thinking in terms of I can’t do that to yourself. Remember your affirmations, what is it about yourself that you like, and what others think of you should not matter, nor change your attitude and outlook in life. Visualize where you want to be in life, and continue to work towards it.

Book Review: "Get Out of Your Own Way" ...

"Get Out of Your Own Way" focuses on "40 common self-defeating behaviors" [1], this book is meant to serve as guide for how to change your course of action." [2] My favorite quote is in the beginning of the book where he says "one of the greatest tragedies you can experience is not realizing what's important." (page 23) Looking back, what will a meaningful life look like to you. To me having a meaningful life means being able to make them proud, and to likewise be proud of myself, I've faced a tremendous amount of pressure in recent years financially and emotionally, I just moved home. Because I didn't make it on my own, during my time on my own, I'm reading this book and it's self-defeating to life-enhancing." He offers practical steps to add to our daily routines. Always put your best foot forward, and continue to move forward. I was reminded of the time, I was sent to rehab during law school and my Brother shouted at me in the kitchen calling me a "pill head" when it was true, I was dependent on medications, to function, but they were prescribed meds, so I didn't think I was a drug addict, but was sent to Dana Pointe. Just like admitting you have a problem with medications is self-defeating, it's the first step toward recovery. The author encourages you to be on, and be accepting of the opinions that others hold, they could just be trying to help you, no need to self-harm or bury yourself in resentment. I picked up running, like my Mom and my Brother who ran Marathons, and ran a half-marathon. I'm bringing this up because our fight was on a night, that was a treat "wanna see my room!" -In order to move forward you have to be doing for yourself things that others would be doing for you. Anything, you have to be yourself, and when you are yourself, are you comfortable with who you are. "The best way to achieve forgiveness is to be forgiving." Skylar Grey was pretty special, it takes time to overcome shame and embarrassment associated with failure, just start with being proud of yourself.

Why You Can't Go Backwards ...

If you find yourself asking why you can't go backwards, chances are its time to move forwards. Its hard to go backwards in life, to the past, you always be a different person, in a different period of your life, and over time, with change, so do your options in life. Its easy when we have gratification. The "internship" eventually you grow out of internships and have to start applying to real jobs and competing with other people. Missed, and what places you cant go back to in life, when you first start working it feels like you can work anywhere, as you get older, whether that's just a matter of wear and tear. Eventually you have to make a choice, of whether to stay or go, and what to focus on in your life. To the job offered, then do so, but by all means keep going, Im just acknowledging the fact that life happens fast, and if youre not a go-getter you are required to. Its that time in between that you allow for, that makes you look like a risk to hire, as someone who is not to be relied on. Days you are productive, and that you keep going in life. Who can think of relationships at a time like this? I do. Its usually the opposite of what you want, and that's not always the case. I'm the type of person who checks in with everyone anyways, I'm not sure whether to or not sometimes. bustle.com explains, "There's nothing inherently wrong with losing touch, even though we often feel guilty about it and place judgment on ourselves. You'll be a much happier person having reconnected with old friends, than allowing for more time in between. Who knows, according to bustle.com made it possible to stay connected with hundreds of old friends at a time," [3] so its next to impossible to completely fall off the face of the earth moving forward. They'll be happy for you and the progress you've made.

Deliberately Awkward ...

No one intends to be deliberately awkward, it's the difference between being professional and sharing a personal perspective in life. We ourselves. Sometimes it can be fun to share information about ourselves online and other times, it can cause much stress and unwanted where you can keep going, from task to task seamlessly, and with few errors, move on to the next project, without having to go backw youre connected to you think or hear, that's not how voices occur, it occurs when you stop hearing yourself and instead of hearing you just by my education, trained to write in a balanced way, not to cause sides, or to provoke controversy, I grew up in controversy, I don't what people are thinking, and what people are saying. Any unwanted attentions usually cause us physiological distress, my head burns to work on myself and stay steady and allow for the quiet to occur on its own, and let my energy flow back in via my work ethic, and a trauma to pass, why in therapy when overwhelmed, they tell you to lie down or to clench you fists and relax, that's exactly mindfulness focus wise and energy wise, turning on and off thoughts like we do emotions, or like we feel about people, but never to ourselves, can The Importance of Education ...

We can't all be warriors when it comes to standing our ground, eventually, being hard on others wears on us, and begins to take its toll. We can wind up saving yourself that much more heartache in the long run, being placed in the wrong, for being overly emotional, or overreacting. The best of us, and sometimes we can be wrong, never assume anyone or anything is out to get you in life, or that things are being plotted against you. Control you feel, is what stops you from being in action and doing things for yourself to keep you moving forward in life. If you're worried, it's a disservice not being at peace within yourself. In the wise words of C. JoyBell C., "It's not winning battles that makes you happy, but it's the ability to help to "take a step back and look at the big picture." [2] What are the long term and short term risks of fighting. Bearing resentments that are destructive to our bodies as well as our minds." [3] According to entrepreneur.com in order to overcome resentments and negative thoughts in your situation and passively accepting that you're incapable of doing anything about it." [4] The worst thing you can do is to accept that's happened in the past, how often do we find ourselves upset about something that's happened a long time ago, focus on the present now, what can you be proud of, and center your thoughts around positives. "Negative thinking is often centered around thoughts about the future." [6] So stay positive, I hope that you break free of your negative thinking, and begin to "exud[e] the kind of positive energy"

Don't Wait Too Long ...

Sounds like a Dashboard Confessional song "Don't Wait" when it comes to all relationships worth keeping, don't wait too long to make a decision, woken up, to a new life, only to find that the same people are not around, that's addiction and recovery. You learn the hard way to wear your heart with your soul, rather than preserve the privacies of your keeping, as many of us ventured onto social media, however not all I think for while you were sharing. Sometimes we get so carried away sharing, that it seems like it's more for selfish reasons, than it is to benefit t to friends, in fact the more challenging your life becomes the more difficult it gets to talk to them or find time to talk to them. Rather than becoming so distant, well maybe if I hadn't been so boisterous online, rambling for so long for so many years, trying to write, and picking up and connecting, I think its ruined more careers than it has helped, being vocal, but I could be wrong. Its one thing to share your mind, its another to be heard. A common mistake. Psychologytoday.com points out that "feelings of loss and anticipation that are part of almost every life transition ... give you a sense of loss. When they're replying, you can't ask for much if you have f%cked up in life. All you can do, is be thankful for where you are right now, then keep moving forward so that you don't have to experience future losses in life, when it comes to relationships and friendships. You really need to stay on track, I have attended rehabs (out-patient and in-patient), IOPs, and in-hospital treatment programs, all of which have taught me the skills to stay on track. "remind[ing] [our]sel[ves] that [our] present situation will change over time," [2] than we are accepting our circumstances, the hand we are dealt, ourselves, and displays of self and knowledge. Appreciate the journey, its not all roses, from the bottom up, but you have to keep going in the more difficult it becomes to start over, whether its working, or blogging, or book writing, you have to keep going, and upon finishing

There will be many times in your life, when you will be pushed to become something that you are not, whether that be someone who is strong and beautiful, or someone who is soft and delicate. You find a careful balance between the two, especially if youre a woman. There's so much pressure nowadays to be strong and beautiful, but those are the characteristics and traits that you will pick up, and among the women you admire in life, similarly the same the characteristics and dominant traits are of those who are successful and accomplished. Its by those who succeed in life, that we are pressured to be more like them. For example mndaily.com states "In day-to-day conversation, we don't talk about what it means to be a woman [or] about all of the things we are not, but we appreciate, and valued, so do many wish to be adored, admired, and looked up to. Not all were meant to be mentors in life, some are. Recognizing ones own self-worth that's becoming more and more of a challenge, sometimes the quickest way to a positive sense of self-worth is that "when women are behaving more masculine than feminine, they lose touch with who they are, what they need and what they want. When more successful women become in the workforce a greater sense of mutual pride among us we would feel for one another, and that that is what we live with, if only we could live in a world in which more could be happier for one another, and less resentful toward one another for their actions. Caretakers, sometimes its those we expect the most from that we are hardest on, expecting the most from those who are paving the way for us. What Im trying to say, is that theres no rush, unless you are trying to get married and have kids, that would be the first time around, do

Sudden Change ...

You don't just wake up one day and suddenly decide to change your life for the better, it's a build up of things gone wrong in life, that usually stops us in our tracks, reflecting upon the past and what we could've done better, and that when the process of change starts to occur, slowly setting goals for ourselves, as we wrap our heads around the realities that consumed us and which brought us down, in place of more stable perspectives realizing that our happiness and our future is dependent upon our current outlook which needs to stay positive. Thinking in terms of what we have, what to live for not what has passed, and what is lacking. Thinking where we are headed in life, and why we have come this far, and live a life worth leading. You can't rise above incessant worry for the future and over what people think and expect to be happy, and find a happy medium, what you put overhead as important to you, is what affects everything else in life moving forward, that's your choice, what you choose to be consumed by. Don't guide your best decisions over obsessions for need, love, wants, affection and attentions from others, it's by what we don't need we receive in life, that's just how attraction works, pairing with what compliments and improves upon our lives, surrounded by people with qualities we admire, and who similarly contribute to supporting our efforts to become the best versions of ourselves. Allow people to give willingly, not by asking for things in life, you should need no favors in life, in order to achieve, most are not willing to take risks or go out on limbs to perfect your well being, that's something you must do for yourself on your own, until what is bothering you no longer bothers you and therefore will not bother anyone new coming into your life. We all want stability, we all want to feel whole, with energy to spare, for fitness and activities other than work, that's living a balanced life, up early, working all day, and able to spend time working on ourselves at night or on personal projects to better ourselves, go that extra mile in our free time. Never stop improving upon your best, and when one thing isn't going right for you in life, continue to work on other areas of your life, until you are well adjusted and able to present yourself in a way that worries no one, it's a firm belief in yourself, as capable and able that will convince others to believe in you, and see no risk in hiring you or taking you on board. Image is everything, the past is the past, don't be ruled by it, if its forgiveness that you want, forgive yourself, and allow the rest to fall into place, that you cannot control others interpretations of you or their willingness to accept you as you are, live life as best you can, regrets and all, and never ask for more than what you are capable of giving.

Expect That Much ...

Expect that if you bring up any topics of controversy concerning sides to a debate that you will be put into question as to whether you are a credible source of input. Never once does the one leading the conversation reach a sense of stability in rehashing anything past to which brought controversy toward them let alone others, you are always responsible for managing your own emotions, you are not responsible for managing the emotions of others especially of those who are not in agreement with you, for they will never reach a point of stability when it comes to your existence or sense of stability thought and peace of mind, its your sense of being they question and in strength, seek to destroy your sense of gratitude for now, would rather send you back into the confines of solitude and regret, or disdain and embarrassment, and subject you to hate and ridicule, as someone drawing attentions to themselves not victim, as someone in the wrong not in the right, as someone who cares only for themselves, not as someone who seeks to protect others from harm, and would die on those notes. If you're ever pressured to die for what you believe in then that's how you know the brink of reasonableness has been taken too far, that's when its time to stop and just allow people to be happy on their own, be alone, and achieve in life and live life. It really should be of no effect to anyone the purposes for me blogging online if it involves no one but myself, its my life, I can live it how I want to. What does it matter to anyone who doesn't believe in me or who thinks less of me, why pressure me for mentions of the past or of what has gone wrong and send me back into suicidal thinking and bipolar delusions about life, whats the point of argument. Why bring someone down who is up in life, and why bring someone down in life who is of no harm or threat to the well being of others, whats it to you I ask? What do I owe anyone, nothing. Especially not anyone who is not my family or not my friend, I own them nothing in life, its people who expect more of you or who think they deserve something from you some reassurances from you as having known you, that their disappointments of you should matter to you, why? Its my life to live not yours, its my suffering not yours, its my choice to live not your problem, they are my mistakes in life, not your problem, its you making things sound worse than they are, and making me look like a bad person that's the problem, with people who speak badly of you, there are much worse things in life than drinking or having sex, or doing cocaine, if Im sober and chaste now what does it matter to you. Its only new people coming into my life who don't accept me, everyone past loves me, and thinks fondly of me, and cordial with me, for some reason, they see me online, and think that Im trying to mooch off of attentions from OJ's release, as a law student, and claim I freed him, I was put in the hospital for a month on Provigil when I saw myself on TV, when OJ was released, publicly humiliated, over and over again, why? I called the police the other night they asked do you want us to pick you up and take you to the hospital, I said no its okay, I asked can I go home and take my meds now, they said yes. What causes suicide? I don't know, you tell me, I had a great life!

Being Perfect ...

No one ever said you are required to be perfect in life in order to be accepted. Its when your life becomes imperfect that you realize how much potential you had, and how much you have lost in the process of losing yourself to drugs, alcohol, or men. As a woman that's completely normal to try hard in life to be with another, for many that is the goal, to have a career in order to meet or find a match and to build a future with a companion in life, that's a lot to ask for these days, and it doesn't always happen. Who are you being perfect for? Acceptances from others, accolade, likes, or all of the above. It depends on how much acceptance is required in order for you to feel happy. Happiness is not always achieved. And may not be an achievable condition for people who have messed up in life. I mean how difficult can it be to find a job, you don't understand the importance of staying straight edge throughout life, until you drink and throw your life away and your career prospects go down the tube, then it seems everyone with a job cannot relate to you, not understanding, not compassionate, powerless to help you. That's something you have to figure out on your own, how to work and provide for yourself, just like monetizing a blog, no one can do that for you in life, they may give you pointers, but you wont know until you figure it out for yourself. Perfection is a quality that doesn't just describe overachievers in life, it described everyone who is trying to better themselves, and in doing so, strives to be at their best, some able some not able to recuperate and find themselves again in life, recovery is a process. That's not to say that everyones rock bottom is the same, we don't all become homeless, jobless, friendless, familyless, it all depends on how much loss you need to experience before you are able to start turning your life around, some are not afforded any opportunities in life nor interventions to stop the tables from turning against them in life, and end up with nothing before they are even able to become something in life. That's how I felt. When you lose everything, all privileges, you cant move, you sleep a lot, youre not motivated, and its tough to break that cycle, its others convincing you that you are worthless and you allowing them to convince you that you are and in enabling others to put you down in life, make others believe less in you, don't give up on yourself in life, just because one or more people don't accept you in life, the world is a big place, and full or opportunities in life to work and to thrive, if not around a certain group of people, there will be others more accepting of you, lifes not dependent upon one social circle one it crowd, or one popular group in society. By profession there are plenty of opportunities to network and to grow, I taught myself blogging, while finishing my law degree, and wrote two books, before finding a job, that was my choice to better myself to better my job prospects to better my chances of acceptance from others, and Im glad. Had I not been a Top 100 Blogger, written two Books, and graduated from Law School then yes I would be worthless, considered a product of addiction, go into suicide and not be here today, that's what could have happened but what didn't happen why? Because I blogged.

Overcoming Frustration ...

Letting go is no easy task in fact it could just be the first step in overcoming any and all unwanted emotions associated with your fear of moving forward in life whether that be calling an old friend, responding to an ex, going back to a job, starting a new job, finishing a project, starting a new project, or beginning a new relationship. Sometimes we get caught in between and freeze, not knowing when to start, how to begin, or how to go about things in a way that doesn't make us look desperate or needy, much of us wants to appear independent yet at the same time we want to have it all meaning people in our lives to share our lives with. Don't get mad at yourself for falling off the social bandwagon, if you were taking time to focus on yourself then just hope that others will be forgiving of you for the time lost without keeping in touch, life goes on, choose to be in their lives or not. Do something don't just sit there, text, call, take the initiative once you get better to get back in touch with others and be social. According to psychcentral.com "When you're frustrated, it can feel like nothing is under your control and everything is chaos. It's hard to know where to begin. When you're flooded with emotion, it's difficult to think straight." [1] It can be an overwhelming feeling to feel behind in life, don't beat yourself up over things or decisions past you have the rest of your life to live and so many years of progress left for you to realize your complete potential life's not half as bad as you make it out to be sometimes less is more try not to be too dramatic over losses in life and just handle things like an adult be mature always in control of your emotions. Sometimes the most successful people are not people without problems in life (we all have problems) but great problem solvers, able to get out of a bind and think their way back to sanity always level headed, you cannot predict what life throws at you sometimes we get set off center, regroup, be patient, let the dust settle, allow time to speak for itself, you don't always have to explain how everything happens just make your life happen in a way that's cognizant of the lives others lead and make choices that continue to benefit you and others around you, when you're well everything around you seems well that's just how life works. Let go of your need to control what others think of you, that is not in your power, how others read and interpret your medical history or past, the best you can do moving forward is show that you've changed, healed, and overcome your troubles so that they grow out of the expectation of worry for your condition and stop predicting the worst of you -surround yourself with people who believe in you, think you're smart, so that you can achieve the best version of yourself, show that you have the potential to succeed in life, these are but temporary conditions in life mental health issues, like all storms they pass, if you allow them too and with proper coping skills and cognitive behavioral techniques continue to manage yourself in a way conducive to minimizing your symptoms until you can function, set goals, achieve goals, and live life without feeling sorry for yourself, we can't all be perfect, eventually you have to accept yourself the way you are bipolar or not.

What's Okay What's Not Okay ...

I do my very best to be professional online, and sometimes I am allowed to be creative, and in that creative space, it is never my intent to cause harm to reputations of others, or to cause embarrassment via unwanted association back to me. That's the obvious argument toward me, by those overlooking, who think that a non-existent connection, should not be made by photo, even if by messenger one way connecting to a source, is not an approved connection in the sense that it is a public union, so for obvious reasons that display was taken down, a phot pairing of me and Ari Emanuel. Since then jobs have been posted online, which I have applied for. Im not sure whether I will get the interview, but I applied nonetheless, I have also interviewed at two other law firms, and am planning for placement by February. No that's not what I said, this isn't a learn to take a joke retort back to people who think that it isn't appropriate to write to people in private, I call the police regularly, and have asked them to take me to hospital on several occasions suicidal when things aren't working out for me in life, that means socially or romantically, what more can you do. I don't think that applying to Endeavor will make a difference, its hard to change after you have been put down so many times by others, the way you are treated by them may never change, some never respect people who they have grown to have no respect for, not taking them seriously in life, or thinking they are more intelligent than therefore respect them less as them being of lesser intelligence than them. I have been to the hospital now 9 times, that number was exaggerated after having gone public online with my mental health issues, sharing my thoughts out loud, which caused people to take it upon themselves to call my doctors to have my meds adjusted, and have even taken me to the hospital themselves, for lack of sleep or not being sharp enough when off learning disability medications. There really is no controversy about him, there is however controversy about me, in regards to acceptances toward me, whether I have done the right thing in the past and whether I continue to do the right thing now, I had three drinks and drove home 2013 and I have apologized and have been punished for it, I have suffered enough shame and embarrassment from that misdemeanor, in addition I have been sued and lost everything and gained all my weight back, I should have stayed home and should have never pitched a campaign to anyone except for Brady Campaign, who approved of my hashtag. When looking for love in the wrong places that's how you get yourself into trouble in life, when you are in need, in need of love, and in need of companionship, that's exactly how you get put down or subject yourself to unwanted rejections in life, be independent of others, never think for two seconds that you need the help of others in order to get anywhere in life. You should be able to put two and two together on your own, just like a resume, an application and interview for a job, that's a given, no one can do the work for you, including help represent you. There are certain things you can't control in life, who you are drawn to, who you are attracted to, and who you admire, and if you find that in people, so be it, hopefully they can be understanding and compassionate enough to be flattered not be mean to you about it. If everyone knows you in a different light, that you cannot control, defamation of character, is something you cannot defend yourself against, you can only continue to better yourself in life until you're again whole.

Unhealthy Crushes ...

How and when do they start? Usually when we are not happy with ourselves, do we see our everything in another, and through that vision make others feel uncomfortable. You have to learn how to play things by ear, and allow things to happen on their own good timing, not just when you think the timing is right. Give people an opportunity to accept you or reject you, not all wish to be romantically involved with others, especially not in a public light. Yes I do think I have grown an unhealthy attachment to Ari Emanuel, after talking to him on messenger, and dishing to him about life, my dreams, and where I would like to be in life, am starting to believe again in the possibilities for me in life, whether or not that includes him, I think that would be a stretch. It's not just anti-gun violence we have in common, I have long been an advocate and member of Brady as a blogger, and promote their work from time to time on my blogs, the progress they have made and if they've ever needed support, where to call in. I think it's important to be apart of your community. So what is it that you guys have in common? A TV Show was made about him, and I think that a show was about me, that was later cancelled. That would have to mean that I was famous in law school and that it was publicly acceptable to make fun of me in public for being a law student, while my best friend's Dad was in jail. Being made fun of publicly is a very difficult position to overcome, especially when it's not deserved, I had a perfect record, and was 3rd in my class doing well, who you are in private romantically is really none of anyone's business how often you date, or whether you date at all, and especially not deserved if with a long term boyfriend. You may wonder, but never let that get the best of you. Once you enter the public sphere as where I am now, you have somewhat control over how your image or likeness gets used, and can control how you look and appear to others. That's one of the reasons I started blogging, call it a bipolar delusion, but it's nothing I haven't talked to the courts about expressing my concerns to them. You're either on board and apart of this country, and allow things to happen to your image without saying anything, and eventually once you put your foot down and start asking questions, that's when you become the problem. They seem to have a knack at situating people in that way, make everything about someone, or make everything about something, or make everything about themselves. If you're not included it's probably better not to be mixed in with the rich and successful, image wise, as there's not comparison, especially if you have not achieved success on your own first be too concerned with how and why others behave the way they do, or what has been expressed by them, whether or not it be of or concerning you. You're usually last to find out when something is about you, that's you cannot control, what you can control, is how you present yourself in spite of things being about you or not, and be welcomed to the world or not, as normal. So long as you do not complain too much or become inappropriately prosecutorial toward others, there's no reason why you should not be allowed to wonder. I've never thought that anything was about me, only now, cautious about it. It's not until you become someone or something of value that you begin to be more cautious about how your intellectual property is managed, and what is being done with the intelligences you have provided to others, sometimes that is not in your control, what others do with your working knowledge on these subjects, or what windows open up to them knowledge wise, and doors shut for your opportunity wise later on in life.

Going with the Flow ...

Sometimes things don't always work out in your favor, a joke, a comment, a thought, an idea, or any input you provide in shorthand, generally not sitting well with anyone who doesn't like you or who has grown accustomed to distrust you or to not empathize with you, seeing you as a weaker species of human as compared to them, I would tell them all people deserve compassion, and no matter how far people have fallen in life, and for whatever reasons they suffer no one deserves to die, not because of bullying and certainly not because of what other people think, be put in harm's way, as labeled "mentally ill." I don't think that I deserve to have been labeled I am educated, and only after having been labeled started hitting my head, for what reason my likes were removed from my website is besides the point, I'm not a threat of harm to the wellness of others, it is others threatening my good health, and intruding upon my ability to stay well, violating my right to privacy. I live a very public life, and nowhere in private am I any different than I am in public, its only people needing to see more of, someone, or needing to know more about someone is why they are pried into, that information is between me and the police, who I frequently call, and not for dispute or the discretion of the general public to decipher as to the causes for my beliefs or interpretations, that's none of anyones business, how I survive, how I build trust, and how I managed to build a great foundation online of trust and stability in thought during tumultuous times, which has not been easy to do. Its not easy to gather a crowd, and its not easy to build a following, that keeps returning to continues to read daily, no matter what your days looks like, whether you are feeling strong and able, or experiencing disability and severe hardship in life, that's the type of continuity of care, I have been able to provide to my following, and likewise the compassion that they have been able to show for me, and unconditional rapport built online, can manifest itself into positives around us, throughout their lives, as they are able to help others struggling maintain positive thinking. Its not easy transitioning from school to work, or from alcoholism to sobriety, or from addiction, to cessation, but overtime, over the years, you grow, and with that growth mature, sometimes there will be slip ups, we hope not, not everyone finds success in AA, I have not at most 6 month or a year. Just stay faithful to any set of principles, that bring you justice in life and keep you moving forward, and if that manifests itself in hatred toward me, so be it, if you think it justified to hate someone with mental health issues, as being the source of your own mental health issues, than you are sorely mistaken, as me in need of help, and in trying to get help, wrongfully accuse me of making any caretakers sick by my issues in life, than why worsen my set of conditions, already living separate, and force me to move home, to care for two cancer patients, with a record, and now a poor reputation, unable to get a job, how do you think I feel pressed for time, my Father has not been well, and my Mother has Cancer and need to work for her, I just wanted to finish law school and get a job, instead I got sued trying to build a blog. -Look forward to playing Studio City with my Dad! On a positive note.

Where does beauty lie? I used to think that we worked like candle sticks, lighting up. That if we are supposed to be good inside out, then what lights up when we light up, are our positive characteristics and traits that allow some of us to shine, and some of us to miss the mark, depending on where we are at mental health wise. I do think that mental health issues affect your overall beauty, some like to think that they can get away with anything, but eventually it all adds up, how you speak, how you behave, what your intake is, whether you drink or smoke, and how positively you speak of others, all of these things reflect in the positive or the negative upon you and determine the scales of your beauty. I've never been the prettiest, and have always struggled with my weight, soccer injuries, medications, hand injuries, you name it, there always seems to be something getting in the way of my health preventing me from maintaining a healthy weight, and going back to old habits and gaining the weight back. You really have to stay positive in spite of setbacks, and you certainly cant allow what others to think to interfere with your good health. It just so happens that Im dating someone from Croatia, a Biochemical Engineer with a PhD, who drives an M3 and a Porsche, my first fancy boyfriend, and Im overweight. Who would've thought that someone like him would like someone like me, or think that Im pretty. If so personality must be a big factor contributing to who is considered beautiful, not always the prettiest girls, get the most attentions in life, sometimes its in how well we carry ourselves, that we are able to climb into social circles in life and succeed, not just by who we know, but by how we are and how we make others feel around us, that's a gift in life, wellness, to make others feel good around you, is usually who we surround ourselves by. Never be too hard on yourself, I used to think that unless I was thin would I be able to date, and unless I was pretty would I be able to model, but boy have things changed, acceptance wise. Today even if youre plus size you can model, and even if youre not the prettiest you can date, look at me. I may not be the most put together blogger online with a fancy website, and model photos, but Im sure able to manage a monthly following of 8.3k viewers, and ranked 37, 818 in the US. That took a lot of hard work, bettering myself, until I became someone I was again proud of, I think that was the purpose for blogging, building a better me, not necessarily a bigger version of me online to present to the world. I suppose it happens through being an author you achieve fame, or through modeling professionally you become a recognized face, Im not yet at that point in my career, still writing and allowing my new audience to get to know me, as of this year grew. There were many people Im sure who knew me from high school, but that wasn't my target audience ever, rarely posting to Facebook links to my blog, in the beginning though they were there for me. It kind of gets to the point where you don't want to bother people, when you have something to say, or even share a photo, feel like youre bothering people, its best always to leave things up to the choice and control of your audience how well they want to get to know you, and on what basis, personally or professionally, I try to provide a little bit of both. As my following has changed so have the voices, I get voices, and so have my selfies, my face has sharpened up, Im not sure whether that's the new makeup I have invested in, probably. And also thanks to messenger, Ive been able to take selfies Im proud of, with their filters, prior to which I just took photos on my phone or on my computer. It takes awhile to get to know yourself, and what makes one beautiful or stand out from the rest, unique, still working on it.

Without Meds ...

Ive been without meds for 5 days now, I suppose it wouldn't hurt to write without medication, what could go wrong. I recently switched back to Adderrall and then relapsed on 5 beers at the bar, that was not my shining moment, and have since not been prescribed any day meds. Waiting to hear back from my previous doctor and made an appointment to see a new doctor. The reason for this change was that it cost $250 every time I see my Psychiatrist, which my parents cannot afford -need to start working soon. Just doing my best to stay positive, have been in bed resting, but miss writing, and working on my dissertation. Ive gotten so used to functioning only on meds that I forget what its like to work without medication. I guess I'll be going back on Vyvanse and Abilify if Im lucky, I haven't been the most stable since switching meds. Usually when things start going haywire the police are first to know, I start to call them frequently for talk therapy, my current therapist is out sick for the moment. Just be patient, when switching doctors, and do your best not to end up like me, "left out in the cold when it comes to finding a new provider to meet your needs." [1] Note that "Mutual trust and respect are very important between a doctor and patient." [2] Its taken awhile to build trust with my doctors, especially to prescribe me any stimulants, given my history with addiction, it would be an unfortunate loss, to have to find a new doctor at this point, but I simply cannot afford to continue seeing my current Physician and the new doctor was only a DO and not equipped to manage my mental health issues, and could not prescribe me Abilify. Just laying low at the moment, thank you for your patience, look forward to my next post!

When Everything Makes Sense ...

There will hopefully come a time in your life when you wake up and everything makes sense, occurring while reading, and while writing from your own life, whats troubling you. Its when we are too hard on ourselves our outlooks change, and dispositions in life change, turning into the friend in need instead of the friend who advises, and turning into the person corrected instead of the one observing the behavior of others, how quickly that changes, when you do not stay on track. Lifes not just about luck, I love how they blame cancer diagnosis as "having bad luck" (sarcasm) to me that's not bad luck, that's illness, that's powerlessness, and that's suffering beyond your control, which is not always our fault. Boy has modern medicine changed, what used to be kept private, are now stories to be told, to empower, but there is a price to be paid, unless you can stay well does your story benefit others. We all struggle with mental health issues from time to time, but lets not overgeneralize things, as though we all suffer from the same ailments in life, and subject to dying just as others have due to drugs and alcohol, no one wants to be that person categorized as a risk to care for, on their way out, we all do our best to be successful, and whether or not we can weather these storms, that's not in our power always, to care or not to care, and sometimes in caring we get hurt, that's normal. What to do when things don't make sense, jenniferhadley.com suggests "... when confronted with challenging situations and circumstances that are non-sensical, we must turn to faith in Spirit and a willingness to KNOW that we are loved and being cared for, even when it doesn't feel like it." [1] To me this means doing ones best to stay well in spite of the sufferings of others, it would be wrong in those cases to further ones problems in life, or go backwards, and not move forwards, sometimes you are called upon in life to be a support system, especially if you are not one directly affected by the problems of others more able than most, and with that power, a gift is given to you to care, and to show that care in ways, that benefit both you and others. We can't always be that person, sometimes when directly affected, this inhibits our best decision making, working from feelings from within, rather than from feelings of compassion for others, thinking more about ourselves, our health, and in the defensive not helping to provide solution to the problems as faced by others, as the person who has come out of illness, and able to share their journey and path to recovery and what has worked for them. Just stay steady. You are but one person in the grander scheme of things, unless you want to be a powerful influence in society, then that can only happen unless you are well, I know this given my standing as a public speaker, until able to communicate to the times in a way that's relevant, and doesn't just apply to me, or my own viewpoints, are others able to read and comprehend, without feeling the same or similar discomforts that I have achieved in life, trying to make my way in life. Building a website was my way of building a place, that I could go back to and perfect, similarly we work in that way, bettering ourselves everyday until presentable, there's really no excuse for what people think of you, if in the negative just ignore them and always do your best. They say that people problems with you are a manifestation of their own lack of wellness, and if you so fail to provide a positive voice of reason to them during turmoil, than so be it, you are clearly then not a source of empowerment to them, but seen as someone who threatens their wellness, as someone who has bipolar, has overcome illness, and is now doing well and well liked. For what reasons am I well liked? I am (1) approachable (2) likeable (3) relatable (4) well kept (5) presentable (6) detail oriented (7) hardworking (8) never gives up (9) shares from where I am, not pretending to be something that I am not. You cannot lie about your condition, especially as a writer, everything shows, and gets read into, you can only improve, and as your condition improves, you will notice that your writing improves also, why I enjoy writing. -Always do your best therefore not to be influenced by the lack of wellness of another lose faith in society as a whole, and do your job to continue to be a good critical thinker accepting and rejecting theories about life, based upon what works for you. No one's ideas in life can influence you in the negative health wise, bipolar is not contagious, mind you.

Don't Take Things Personally ...

Sometimes people get so busy with their own lives, that they don't have time to stop and reply, in the grand scheme of things, you can only put yourself out there so many times, to make a good first impression, before you are responded to, sometimes we are ready to take on new opportunities in life, and sometimes, we have more room to grow before we are able to take on certain responsibilities in life. It's all a matter of experience, and time, continue to grow and mature and spread your wings, it never hurts to try, it's okay to send requests, inquiries, emails, and make those initial contacts, from a business perspective, when the time is right and you are doing well you will know it, partnerships will go through, applications accepted, and as your numbers go up, don't stop continuing to branch out, and connect with others, you never know who you'll meet along the way. It's when you have yet to blossom, that things don't happen for you in life, either you're not ready mentally, or others do not see you as fit yet to be a representative of their best interests, that's business, it's all about representation. Always do your best to be presentable, online and in real life. Don't exhaust your resources in life, you can always come back to things when you're ready, sometimes it's better to wait and be prepared, than to subject yourself to too many rejections early on, and fill your plate, before you yourself are ready to meet the challenges that await, if you are not yet able to perform, and keep up with a daily schedule, than applying for jobs, that would require you to meet the demands of the day, might seem like a far stretch, don't just apply to apply, apply when you're ready. Taking things personally, can be a sign of low self-esteem, as one blogger explains moneyhabitmuse.com, "Which means you always long for others' approvals of everything you do and say." [1] However, to be successful online blogging, you can't always wait for the perfect time to share, meaning you may not be exactly where you want to be in life, but that doesn't mean don't write, or that you don't have something valuable to say, or some valuable input or insight, that could be helpful to someone else, trying to get discovered or find themselves. I have been blogging for years, and just this year started earning 300-400 likes per post, have 7.6k monthly viewers on Pinterest, A Top 100 Personal Development Blogger on Feedspot, and Ranked 38,674 on Alexa, that's a big deal to me to be up 803k in traffic and 212,029 in the world, I'm not sure where I'm headed in life, that's the funny part, job wise and career wise, but I know that I love to write, want to continue working on my books, and graduate from law school. I think what makes me an attractive blogger is that I have been through a lot, and that in spite of my mental health issues, have battled through my worst days and come out normal. That's not to say, that I don't get sick every now and then, especially if I do not keep up with a schedule or stay task oriented and manage my symptoms, I can easily go haywire. I think at the time, more privacy has been helping, less daily tweeting, and longer posts regarding my thoughts. In addition, I have a pen pal I check in with daily, a therapist I see weekly, and a psychiatrist/general practitioner I see now monthly. I guess Im pretty high maintenance. I used to be very independent, lived alone 2004-2017, a good student, and always had a job, but ever since I got bipolar, and my relationships have not been working out, I have gone in and out of depression, which is why I started blogging, decided to put my heart into something that wont leave me, something that can grow, and something I can get better at and that can stay with me, something to check on, something to keep track of, and something to build, why I blog.

For the Most Part ...

For the most part, I am doing better in life, when I try to be social, its mostly reading into things too much which has not happened for awhile, whereas the old me would assume is about me, and take offense, and leave space, Im sure that the issues faced by others, are about them especially if I do not know them, you can only take responsibility for so much, especially not the health of others who you are not close with, nor share any intimacies with, maybe its best to stay home, never try past the point of rejection to be friends with others, that's the main lesson, you only get one try at getting along with others, life is short, most do not have the patience to accept people into their lives who they do not trust as being sober or with enough time to be considered a worthwhile share or input, I got sober 2003, stopped smoking weed, and do not drink, I only drank alcohol 2006 and 2013, but Im not sure whether that's an important credential, or makes a difference what is wrong is wrong, it doesn't matter how much experience you have as being well, once you get sick, it's a matter of getting well and staying well, who thinks what should make no difference, always be compassionate and patient, if you think too much about what could happen in the negative, low and behold things will work out for you in that way, as a manifestation of how you feel about yourself and based upon what you assume others think of you, not perform to your best, Im not sure whether that's a believed karma deserved, or whether that's naturally occurring, whether there are people and characters who they wish to categorize you as, and situate you until broken to see how you respond for the better or for worse, I don't think its very nice to be made an experiment of, I would never do that to others, team up on one person as stupid. That's not a fair assessment, of my cares, or what work I have accomplished thus far in my career, sure I wish there were fewer incidences in which others are harmed, but it does not need to be mentioned to get others to stop eachother from harming one another, that's a social issues per state, not necessary to share social standings within a state, as cornerstones for issues to be read by the masses and make determinations from, as references when interpreting people within their states or around them, each state is different, the Country is a big place, and so is the World and life itself, not meant to be about people, a single persons story affecting the treatment of others, as though each builds from connections to, I think being unique is what makes people stand out, not what makes them like, and I think its by getting along well with others, that one feels complete, and its by working hard one achieves, and earns paychecks. These are all basic life skills to have, a desire to live on schedule, wake up work stay motivated, loss of motivation occurs when stopped in your tracks, called out on something past in error, or correcting you when no corrections need be made. I think its okay to have friends, unfortunately I think its better for me to not come out of this, and just work for the LAPD, and work on establishing more trust, and accountability before reintegrating and becoming a burden upon others, as though I still need fixing, I really need to be independent in order to feel safe, I don't need help from anyone, I keep to myself, look at the ground, a quiet person, there is a reason for that, because its upon acknowledgment or responding you get hurt, for me its better to not have any conversations with anyone, I was a very nice person as a result I look stupid, and because I drank and got mad at myself, and relapsed on cocaine got suicidal, that's not my fault, I was an excellent girlfriend and friend. Not anyones fault.

When Your Feelings Are Hurt ...

When your feelings are hurt, its easy to misread things as about you, or contributing to sources of illness around you, pointing out whats going wrong is not the solution to bettering your perspective and the wellness of others around you, some things are better left unsaid. Not that these points are important points of discussion as it relates to the issues faced by others, its not always necessary to state, and as coming from you, be voiced, sometimes it is your place to lead discussions about, and sometimes its not your place given your standing appropriate, to provide a voice of reason, especially not in the defensive, that just opens another can of worms, in terms of the degree of sensitivity you are able to provide upon addressing subjects and then read into as whether having suffered or shown signs of remorse, as though you have been wrong or been wronged in the past, accusatory toward others, or pointing blames, as playing victim, based upon your current condition. Its not an easy subject, breakups, and its not an easy topic rejections, and theres no easy solution to understanding who how and why anyone to a transaction looks bad, or ends up worse off, and why as though thought deserved at the time, they were approached, and coerced into sharing intimate time with. Not all end up better off in life having known people, and some people wish they would have lived life without having ever known a person, that's the purpose for suit, to justify that silence and attribute it to something now identifiable defective in a person, labeling them an "unwanted connection." It just so happens that in anticipation of your recovery, or road to wellness, as others watching or overlooking your progress, not knowing you as well, and based upon what they hear, and given your record, pre-determine whether you deserve to move forward in life, and establish new relationships or friendships, which is the phase I am in right now, and which will continue to be determined in February, upon graduating, while looking for job placement and acceptance. Im not sure, and just because I am talking about what I think is happening, doesn't mean that it is happening, and just because I feel like I look bad, doesn't mean that everyone thinks the same or are in discussions about me, as to what is defective or wrong with me, to justify additional hardships or suffering in life, as though to serve as retribution to those who have passed through my life, and been affected by having known me, as though my condition doesn't directly affect me already, and assuming they care or cared and as attached affected. Obviously if you have known someone, and been close to them, it hurts to see them not well, that's not my intent when not well to cause harm to anyone who cares about me, that's not in my control, the meds I get put on, and how intelligent or articulate I am able to be at that point in my life, and manage my thoughts and condition, you may never have the same life you once led as having been a private person, once you go public, and that's something you realize after you decide to participate online and write, its not of the same consequence to everyone, but if you are attached to someone like OJ, and grew up best friends with their Daughter, then yes, proving that you are the disappointment, relinquishes them from any blame upon further separation as having anything to do with your current suffering or suicide attempt previously. That's really no one else's business to further negative interpretations of me, as not meaning well, or not doing my best to warn or explain to others, that their actions or behaviors or words are hurting my feelings, people who hurt your feelings, generally are concerned with themselves, and probably now as learned do not intend to insult you or put you down as less than by being nicer to who you are with, as compared to how accepting they are upon talking to you individually. That's based upon knowing you, thinking or assuming that that is the cause for separations, or for you leaving relationships, and testing to see if something past, results in the same set of conditions again, presently, as dating someone, being ignored, and to see how you respond if another hits on someone you like, with you present, and upon viewing the mental health issues that arise, determine whether you are a threat to anyones health, and whether expressed anger online was directed toward anyone specifically, I posted flyers everywhere, I am kind enough to inform people thinking they were my friends, as though they would care, and how Im feeling based upon interactions experienced, it was me that contracted carcinoma cancer and was dying on risperidone in bed all day sleeping, obviously with a cocaine relapse initiated by my then boyfriend, I became worse, and as worse, not seen as a victim, to being approached by strangers in the street, or found passed out in front of my building, after one margarita, with a busted chin, and bruised knee, a call made to my mom from my phone. (Theres something about her I dont like: Shes on meds, I don't drink, I have bipolar, I got suicidal by rumor that I am then suddenly sick everytime my numbers are up and my Facebook account accessed by many phones, drains me, why not to tell people if you have cancer as that just speeds up the process of illness kicking in, the goal is to live life, not put people on lists on whos going or staying, treat them differently or others as disappointment, the best way to keep people alive and well around you, is to stay well and be active and get jobs is what Ive learned not by hitting my head, when Im not living life in my room, nothing around me feels safe, and everything feels off, and the more easily I get put down in life as small or immature, or not confident, this year I worked on confidence, thats for work, not for purposes of intimidating others with my wellness, and then treated as though I show no remorse or not a victim, dont feel sorry for people who F up in life, thats the label that was put on me, so that even if I was raped or attacked in the street, no one will know, no one will care, and everyone will seem justified, and look victim to me as separate from me, whether it be a bar or an ex-boyfriend, that's their choice to not like you, and as said out loud only makes you look worse, or makes others feel better, that's not what's causing me suicide others who feel better at my expense or hardship thought deserved, people achieve wellness in different ways, the goal is to live, irrespective of what others think of me, and if they have a problem with me, they can take it to court, I can't afford medical care or an attorney, to be honest I would rather write about something else, than one bad connection turning all connections bad in life, as addressing all in response to the consequences of one failed connection in life), I don't threaten others, I've been hurt, why I look funny, and others have contributed to making me look funny, my head is small misshaped now, and body huge 190lbs, that's not my fault, face flat or shapely, if I get voices I call the police, it's not necessary for me to go to AA meetings, I'm not there for political purposes, or to feel apart of, I have a blog, a home, and can get a job on my own, it's not necessary to go anywhere for help, as that just burdens others who don't feel compelled to care about anyone who has caused harm to themselves [removed - graphic story about self-harm, spoke to the police].

Quit Being Stubborn ...

One of the first steps to overcoming any negative thinking is to quit being stubborn, that means stuck in a thought, a viewpoint, a perspective, a series of understandings, by bits of information, by who you know, or by what you think, remain the same, there's very little opportunity for growth when it comes to your outlook in life. A meeting of the minds occurs, where in the event there is a problem, one is able to assemble new thoughts in response to current turmoil, that either quells, justifies, or challenges the sides creating the voices that get relayed among us, it's upon who you connect to in life, you hear opinions, never obsess over the negative opinions of others, not always the best voices for insight when it comes to finding stability and achieving peace of mind during difficult times, or peaceful times that turn difficult by recalling recollecting or giving power to those opinions past held toward you or others. If you've done nothing wrong, don't waste time thinking about why people don't like you, recalling your whole life out loud, for everyone to pick apart to determine where there was a wrong and who was wronged, that just subjects you to harm, if you are already not liked by them, they will turn any moment of weakness past, and treat you as though you were (1) in need and (2) knowingly needing others took advantage of their wellness past, and label you mentally ill and turning you into a parasite so that (4) you get rejected in any future relationships as being the one in need and the one to whom upon connecting with a harm results to one's reputation, that was the purpose for suit, to cause a separation between me and interfere with my ability to work and to provide for myself, that's not harassment, so explain to me why every relationship I've ever had has not been initiated by me and been initiated by another, that's someone coming into my life and me allowing for that information from me to be processed to them, that's my choice, later rejections upon knowing someone, is a difference in opinion or based upon connections, seeing someone as below them, if one is on their own, there's no need to further ruin their opportunities for wellness in the future, if one is sick or on meds, and is doing their best, then one should not be treated as a loser, simply because of who they have been surrounded by or friends with if not of high social standing. When stubborn it's easy to allow these sides to win, sides occurring in your mind, not existing, apparent to others, or in power, until you give a voice to what has caused you harm in life, and enable those reading to interpret for themselves what has happened, who has been affected, what went wrong, the extent to which a person was wronged, how one was punished, the purposes for punishment, and the goals achieved, to make someone look like an offender, and to continue to make everything look as though that is the case about a person, so that they continue to be treated as an offender or a reject, it's my body my choice, and I've been offended as a result of "how things look" as worse than what I was sued for, given STDs and put on many anti-psychotics, as though I am someone who should disappear or deserves to die, I care about myself, whether or not anyone else cares about me, it's not my identity that is causing harm to the understanding of life or people or affecting their life expectancy, I do my best to live life and do everything I am told, and seek treatment when needed, if someone wants to talk to you talk to them, if someone doesn't want to talk to you then don't talk to them, never wonder why is the main lesson, you cannot convince someone you are a good person, if they think you're a criminal or someone who has been sued and labeled mentally ill, a threat to their wellness, eventually you have to stop convincing yourself of why people are hurting you, so that it does not continue, and get well, so long as you are well no one can hurt you, and especially not with 800k fans reading everyday, 2000+ people reading daily, and ranked 38,000s in the US, a top website in the Country and newsfeed, with 6.8k monthly viewers and growing in popularity. That's how important I am to me, how important I am to my family, and how embarrassing it is for those who did love or care for you, to see you look bad or proven wrong in life, its my vagina, its my health, and its my right to be heard, and its no ones business my hygiene or the number of people Ive hooked up with, when, and whether under the influence of substances. I'm allowed to date, that doesn't make me a slut, if given the silent treatment, don't defame me, simply because I do not obsess over whys or become upset, and move on in life, that's my right to not be bothered by others, don't later hurt me, so that I look bad cant move on in life, as though youre doing others a favor, as though Im going down anyways, Im a Law Student! (Re: My locked meeting, with a flyer on the door, me being hospitalized taken to the hospital twice police called someone filed a "missing persons report" pulled over and handcuffed in public, dated a sponsor who was younger than me, and a street by Staples Center called "Blaine" now, don't label me Kobe Bryant, because you think its funny to compare a girl to someone who was wealthy and successful, who was accused of rape, and similarly situate things to look like Im an unwanted connection in life, take it to court, stop defaming me, stop bullying me, stop making me look bad, and stop treating me poorly, its my choice to live, and my choice to die, its my choice to take meds, its my choice to go to the ER).

Losing Weight ...

Im hoping this year to lose the weight and to keep the weight off, I once lost 50lbs running back in 2015, my goal was to be 30 and fit, but I still was not happy with myself and self-harming. Just because you lose weight does not mean that your mental health issues will go away, or that all your self-esteem issues will be solved, "the reality is, you're still you." [1] Weight loss is no doubt a process, you have to exercise daily and diet, and stick to it, the minute you stop, and go back to old routines, is how you gain the weight back. For awhile I would blame the medications which contributed to the weight gain and over-eating, but it all comes down to diet, you cannot be eating cookies and junk food and expect the have a flat stomach, and look fit, some of us just weren't born thin or with a fast metabolism. I have an athletic and voluptuous shaped body, so when I gain weight I feel really frumpy, its not a comfortable feeling, walking into job interviews especially not feeling at my best, or being told I could lose a few pounds once I get the job. That's just people being honest with you, telling you what they think needs to happen for you in life, in order for you to be a happier person, and to look and feel your best, if not able to maintain positive momentum moving forward. Even my new boyfriend wants me to lose weight, never let yourself go. If you have suffered mental health issues in the past while losing weight, you're not alone, according to shape.com, "the physiological and psychological side effects of weight loss that are powerful enough to make you feel downright miserable." [2] You may be getting better sleep, but still feel irritable, you may be getting your shape back, but as a perfectionist still feel like you could be molded better, the journey never stops once you get into fitness, its all about balance, be patient with yourself, and don't be too hard on yourself. Making a decision to lose weight is a big decision and pat yourself on the back for it, "Change is always difficult, even when it's a healthy change. If you feel like giving up, think about all of the reasons why you're doing this that really matter to you." [3] Becoming a healthier and happier version of yourself requires daily discipline and practice, get your routines down, and don't quit when you lose the weight, that's when its time to keep going a refine your intake, or change up your workout routine, you can always workout less but maintain your diet, don't workout less and go back to your old eating habits, or workout the same and go back to your old eating habits, how I went from losing weight to gradual weight gain over the course of 3 years, I was once under 130lbs and then made it up to 190lbs, gaining 50-60lbs has been very depressing to say the least, I still run and ran a half-marathon, and took meds as directed, but that didn't seem to make a difference, on Abilify, which is why I recently stopped taking the med and lost 10lbs, it's a lot of work to lost weight, and whats even more difficult to comprehend is putting the work in, and not eating correctly, and not losing the weight, that's just wasted energy, or is it? You learn overtime what works best for you, I highly recommend doing some research before you begin your weight-loss journey, so you know what youre doing and understand the process, not just the fact that muscle eats fat and muscle needs protein and carbs turn to fat and so does sugar, that's pretty much all I knew, so I went cardio cardio burning calories, eating less and less, and eventually it became an addiction, shrunk, but never toned up without weights, it wasn't until I started doing free weights that my arms shrunk, for the first time, skinny arms! I was so proud of myself. Be efficient, learn from my mistakes, and good luck!

In Sobriety ...

In sobriety, you'll feel a lot of pressure to be normal, and in trying to be normal, wonder if at a later point you can go back to drinking, don't. If all your problems were the result of your drinking then its probably best not to engage in any activities that brought you down in life. For the most part, I have been doing well maintaining a regular sleep schedule and managing a now very successful blog ranked 38,049 in the US on Alexa, and a Top 100 Personal Development Blogger on Feedspot. You just have to keep moving forward. What does normal mean? "Normative means that what's normal is what lives up to the norms, the standards." [1] That could mean different things depending on who you are: having a job, having a boyfriend/girlfriend, having lots of friends, all things I struggle with at the moment. You have to be happy with what you have in life, to enjoy the moment. Do you feel good enough? What could be going better for you in life? Companionship is so important to me. Although I have ventured far away from normal, when it comes to who I have friended in life, so far so good, maintaining a normal sleep schedule, and staying motivated in life with messenger. I'm not sure how important it is to keep a selfie log of your progress, health wise, for me, it has been an eye opening experience, to see myself go from messy to sharp looking, Im not sure how that happened, but I must be taking good care of myself. Running everyday, ran a half-marathon last year, and trying to lose 40lbs, not sure how long that will take, but in order to get a job I think that will help to be more presentable, and my boyfriend wants me to lose weight too. Don't be too hard on yourself, especially while in recovery, you'll go through a lot of changes in life, especially as you get better and better at managing your symptoms and emotions when it comes to being in recovery and/or having mental health issues. You've probably wandered away from family and friends, and have a lot of lost time to make up for in life, don't get too frustrated, where are you now, what are you doing, what could you be doing better, are you feeling well today, why are you not feeling well, do you miss someone, why do you miss someone, do you feel disappointed, why do you feel disappointed. Its okay to ask yourself questions in life and journal about it or go over things with a therapist or in an AA meeting, that's pretty much what I have been doing, and have a much better head on my shoulders these days. Probably a very unhealthy crush on Ari Emanuel, but I think for the most part, I'm doing well, think of him often, and pen paled him. Addiction is one of my biggest problems. I already have a boyfriend, but feel like we have a lot to talk about, so talking.

Don't Define me by My Past ...

That's inappropriate to pry into the lives of others, or to search through their recordings of their lives and their thoughts, if done thoughtfully, in a worse condition bring about to get them to portray themselves in a way that benefits a poor outlook of them their future and their current well being. That was a joke "Queen B" not in reference to any movies, nor in reference to purposes for flyers, as being like a scene from a movie, as thought I carry some immature animosity toward anyone past, I moved on, I put my free period next to lunch and slept everyday my senior year in college, got into college in December, rolling admission, Im not confrontational nor combative, don't bring up any moments in my life, and try to plague me now, as whether I have current feelings about or lingering that are influencing my behaviors or motivations now in life, I am beyond that I am doing my best to live each day as it is given to me, someone who gets suicidal doesn't have time to carry resentments, or to lament about the past, or have time to recollect memories from their upbringing, that's because they have been put in a worse off position in life, to live life moving forward from now, that is to protect people from being mentioned past as having contributed to any current conditions now existing. I understand that, how and why would it be necessary to bring up anything from high school, those issue were dealt with accordingly, its really none of anyones business how I live my life, or what I think of my high school experience, for all you should care, those were the best years of my life, besides realizing my academic potential while in college and getting good grades, a 3.2 in high school and a 3.236 in college and a 2.1 in my JD and a 2.85 in the LLM, and at 3.6 in my Paralegal Certificate Program, I was a steady and stable person, with my future ahead of me clean and sober, drinking only on occasion, not an addict prescribed 2 adderralls a day and no night meds, don't compare my condition now, or achievements in life as though in the past I benefited in a negative way from others defriending me, and that those friendships now gone, have given me any boosts in life, or motivations to better myself, I am a good person, I have nothing to prove to anyone, life is not a competition nor a popularity contest, its about wellness and being a good friend, and if you cant manage that much, you separate from others, and need alone time to regroup, date, focus in school, get a job, have a career to date and socialize. Im popular now because Im a writer, Im a positive person, and I don't over expose myself online in compromising ways that turn off my audience or make them think any less of me, that's why they return otherwise I would be but a traffic stop online, to view and leave, as ordinary, not interested in seeing my progress. That's not imitation, for someone else to be successful who has been previously associated to the OJ Simpson Family, why bring that up, to devalue me as unimportant or trying to be like imitation and send me down in life, so that others can achieve without question as being compared to me, or having made fun of me, who cares what peoples motivations in life are, to control outlooks or storylines, who cares? Its not your life, its my life, and if you don't want to be associated to me, then stay away don't read, and don't complain upon exposure to me, that my telling of my life affects your feelings if its nothing to do with you, and its not your life, and no ones in my life, no one can complain. Its my life I have to live that was destroyed all my hard work devalued, and have to start over in life.

Sometimes You Do Your Best ...

Others will always think it justified to put you down in life so long as they think you deserve to suffer hardship in life. If you are someone without friends, or not in a relationships, on your own, you will be second guessed in life irrespective of your status as a student or unemployed, it takes being a member of society to function as apart of, and unless you can explain or defend yourself, as not being as low as you are perceived to be, will it occur that acceptances of you be granted. For whatever reasons people give up in life, the purposes for blogging is not to detail my demise, or what was thought of me, given my standing in school, or whether or not close to family and friends at the time I became ill on my own, that's really no ones business, the causes for my bipolar, that's not for the public to decipher my thoughts for the purposes of criticism or for proving mental illness, that's for the Courts and the LAPD to decide, who I call regularly to check in with, whenever Im not feeling well. It seems that opinions of me grew out of hand, and became sicker and sicker on my own, and not understanding why I was being bullied, or picked apart, medicated, until incapacitated, and not my usual self motivated and hardworking achieving in life. Once declared someone of lesser value in life, it feels as though everyone takes the side of the one appearing well, and treats you as someone to be embarrassed by sharing that sentiment with them, not understanding all that you went through on medications, and everything you went through as single, and in recovery from drinking symptomatic with bipolar. Eventually talk therapy helps, or even companionship to lift your spirits in life, but that's an earned privilege to be close to people in life again, post failure. That's when everyone best interests are taken into consideration determining whether a person is allowed to move forward in life, Im very loyal to my friends and to my family, not someone whos interests change, Im not a social climber, nor believe in social status as a means to achieve happiness, you either have friends in life or you don't, and if you choose to live a private life, then that's how you will be judged as someone with less than in life, and questioned, that seems to be important having friends, someone without friends, is looked at as a failure, or as though they deserved it or worked their way into a depression suffering losses due to their own inability to be successful in life and live a good life. Just let go, and not allow lack of acceptance of you to turn into resentments toward you, as you get better, it may and will always be difficult to be happy for someone who is deemed to be a source of concern or embarrassment, everyone has their own sense of pride in life, and if you didn't fit in to begin with, fitting in later as a blogger, or comedian online, is not beneficial to re-building rapport, as respected by others. You have to take life seriously in order to be accepted or forgiven for your shortcomings in life, eventually if you do not recover or improve people see you as a liability, or a burden, someone in need, that is to be taken care of, not able to achieve on their own, thats why your family is hard on you, to correct whats going wrong before it gets worse, that's to not send you off into the company of those who care but could care less if you get sick or end up worse off in life, that's just a system of sociability the well stick together, and when not well barely anyone is around to help you, often giving you the silent treatment. To know better is to achieve well no matter what your circumstances are without help from others, the needier you become the less well you seem as dependent upon social cues and reassurances from others for affirmation that things are okay, how quickly you will be reminded that you are nothing, once not accepted or deemed to be untrustworthy or unprofessional for your lack of ability to stay well and make progress in life. Life changes start within you, acceptance and forgiveness comes later. And for whatever reasons people were hard on you, that's because they once thought you were someone who was going to be successful, who complained online, and then seen as someone who is not put together in control of their thoughts, feelings, and emotions, above you in life, allow people to be above you, and if they live separate lives from you, no matter how close you are to them, so be it, even if they are your boyfriends, some are just not willing to compromise their own needs for space to accommodate your neediness upon becoming in need of them. Once you become co-dependent you have to untrain yourself and learn how to be stable on your own again, able to talk yourself through your problems, not be reliant upon others for stability, that includes safety needs, belongingness needs, and while seeking employment, you either have something to offer, or you don't, otherwise don't apply if you can't manage to stay well. That's the difficulty of overcoming a past that doesn't believe in you, so that no matter where you go or what you achieve in life, you carry the baggage of inconsistencies to your record, if you had a perfect track record, and always took care of health responsibly seeking treatments as directed and taking meds as prescribed, then there is no reason why one should not be able to make a full recovery, lose weight, get their health back in order, and work again.

Justifications for Hardship ...

You can't control what others will think of you when you are on your own and have no one to talk to, or assist you with your thought processes, enlighten you, correct, or make better ones outlook in life, as you mature and become an adult you are expected via your education to build a solid understanding of how to think, behave, and rationalize your outlooks in life, so that you can function among others in society as a normal member of society, in perfect standing, and if tainted, better yourself until you feel as well as, not falter, or become worse off. That is the benefit of those who have not experienced illness requiring medication, with their ability to control their outlooks and interpretations with access and tools for understanding beyond one person viewpoint unaffected, that's how things should be, unless a personal attack toward you or anyone close to you, as my family has been attacked online by blogs 2009 prior to my suicide attempt, threatened to speak, what I remember from my research online, looking into the past, while applying for jobs on google.com, looked up my name which was cached to a deposition. Don't then pile up my life accordingly, after I have already suffered hardship, and take my place in life, and earn the privilege to stand in my shoes, as though one has lived as long as I have through controversy and suddenly thrust into things, and made ill, as I have become ill in the past, its negative attentions in life, without defense, and negative assumptions about, that push things further along without repair, and until someone is harmed, do the consequences for misinformation and rumor, get accounted for, whos life expectancy has suffered that's not "bad luck" to situate someone as worse off in life, then sue me as though Im the problem, I already have mental health issues, don't set me worse off in life, while under the care of physicians with health insurance, given risperidone shots, and because I don't look the part nor thin, or pretty or with a fancy job, get treated as less than until my life is shortened when put in the wrong hands in life, sent over my edges in life, aggravated and put in discomfort, that's not being street, to get a refund for a cocaine purchase, for someone else's interest purchased, how that relapsed happened in westwood, Im sorry if I became mentally ill afterward posting flyers, that's was a highly traumatizing experience, to be left with a dead cell phone, stuck on sunset boulevard, texts ignored, and offered a ride home by a stranger who stuck his finger in my vagina, I told him I have a boyfriend, and he stopped, when I looked his D was out, and had told my boyfriend what happened, and things weren't the same afterwards, at the time I was on birth control, as preferred by him, that was my first partner without a condom. I almost got full blown ovarian cancer, whos fault that is doesn't matter at this point, because I was punished, even though I had $4000 worth of surgery, twice under anesthesia, to remove carcinoma cancer cells from my uterus, that was a very traumatizing experience, and to get through it, and get my positive energy back, with voices, ran, sometimes even talking to myself, thinking I was being recorded, it was a very traumatizing period in life, and lost 50lbs, to be hurt and to not know who hurt you is very troubling, psychologically, you lose a lot of trust in life and go into isolation and get blamed for your problems as bringing it upon yourself, if you allow those beliefs toward you to continue, you become the actress to the opinions of others, it takes a real solid understanding of yourself and a positive outlook in life in spite of mishaps, to continue to make progress, and see clearly through all the negativity toward you and taunting, until you change and get better do things around you change and hopefully by then, still surrounded by people who love you, when you wake up, in appreciation for the life you have.

My Thoughts on Twitter ...

1/6/2020

At certain points in time, its helpful to have a place to share your thoughts, somewhere with the potential to be distributed to others via mentions or hashtags, is helpful. What social media is for, sharing work, or articles, completed projects. I think at this point in time, sharing incomplete thoughts, or being creative with my delivery of ideas, is not helpful moving forward and makes me look like someone who is self-entertaining, as a means to avoid boredom, without understanding my position, or feeling compelled sometimes to share in that way. Im not sure for what reasons, I feel compelled to explain my personal history, I think at this point people are mostly concerned with their own health, as well as the health of others, doing their best to maintain stability, and clarity of thought, which is why creative prose is very disorganizing to process on its own, and longer prose is a preferred method of delivery at this time. Usually when one is able to summarize for themselves and see a bigger picture on their own, they feel best, rather than be told short bits of information, as memorized, and then apply that information to historical timelines, to determine faults. That would be putting myself under a microscope, and if so, in a disorganized way be so presenting. The purposes for blogging and writing a book, have been to share in a way that is helpful, not in a way that brings up the past, or clarify incidences, if punishments have already been rendered. Im not assuming that people tactfully send you off in life, until youre on your own, and when on your own, and make poor decisions, if drinking or using, get sent further along a track toward failure, how the police pick you up, as lost and disoriented, they can usually tell first who has been rejected as normal from society, usually unkempt, after running, which is why I went shopping and started wearing makeup and gained 50lbs back, that was my way of giving up in life. So to then send me voices and further sabotage my good health or ability to get well would be to see if mentally ill by voices, whether I hurt myself or others, that would again be trying to get rid of someone, for what purposes, is it anyones business to destroy anyones potential or inhibit their abilities in life to lead a normal life among, that doesn't make sense to me, to put someone under, as too volatile, its never justifiable to tantrum or to get upset over losses or hardships in life, and if you are someone when aggravated not able to control your emotions when put down, then always take a step back, and be mature about it, never stop problem solving in life, or journaling about how youre feeling, freezing, giving up, or self-harming is not the solution to your problems, if youre being harassed by voices or by others in retaliation for what they think was what you were put in for, then that's because they think you deserve unwanted attentions in life, or unwanted interpretations of you, as though you deserve to be put down in life, and that because of your mental health issues if can be proven, are the cause of illness upon others, that's why they try to prove people are mentally ill, to send them off, and away from others. Again Im not a Doctor so I wouldn't know what it is Im doing wrong if I don't go out and stay home, and have no followers, how is that embarrassing, if Im doing my best, it's a sad fact of life, when youre not well, its hard to be at everyone elses speed in life, that's why they slow some down and put them on meds as "chemically imbalanced" leave them at home, away from society and functioning among, disable their abilities to work, or articulate well their thoughts. I have learning disability, I cannot function without medications, and the put on night meds. I don't deserve to be put to sleep, for what? Stop treating me like Im the offender or opportunist, I drove to every boyfriend, paid for everything, and took care of others, its not me that went looking for love in the wrong places, on purpose, and if the wrong people found me in life and I was harmed, that's due to my poor decision making, while trying to get cocaine. Once they put you in jail, you are no longer considered a victim, that's so you get blamed for your own mental health issues, and labeled an addict, they're very hard on people who cannot function without meds, and don't take anti-psychotics if prescribed them, I was always compliant, even if I got worse grades, and didn't finished my JD, did everything I was told. Then I drank, that was a mistake, it feels like your missing out on life, while getting your masters, and not having the same social life, its just temporary isolation, don't take anything personally, so long as you are doing everything you are supposed to be doing, you make it to the next phase in life. If you let yourself go, and too experimental with your public image, that can hurt your social skills later in life, among people you don't know, who identify you as a piece of $hit without even knowing you, because youre not pretty or overweight or look funny. Don't allow the men in your life to decide for you what to do with you if they are not willing to love you.

The furthest thing from my mind is committing suicide, Im beyond those periods in life, usually caused conditions, circumstances that are outside of your control, combined with being bipolar, drinking or relapsing on drugs or alcohol and a breakup is usually the cause of not feeling well, if you can establish those periods of not being well with a physician and talk through those feelings, you recognize those symptoms before they worsen and learn to call the police on your own, and not enable voices to lead you astray in life or to convince you you are something you are not. It just so happens that everything past works in that way, so as not to be blamed should you commit suicide, defensive to their own best interests put you down in your face and behind your back, that's because they think less of you and don't respect you. Who treats someone who has been an advocate the majority of their professional career as someone who doesn't care. Its impossible to get jobs if you are not well, and if for the wrong reasons are "helping people" rarely does that ever make you look good to the extent that it can undo any wrongs on your part, if you drink or do drugs you are in the wrong and upon being in the wrong are not able to function nor provide services to those in need, let alone be hired and able to work professionally in those fields. I know this as having gotten a job at Boulder DA and not being able to complete the training because of cocaine addiction had to leave the program, that was after explaining why I was unfit for the position. All of a sudden you meet new people in life, and because I ran an flyer campaign down sunset boulevard, that was not successful in preventing gun violence, that I am in the wrong. The police saw me taping flyers and at no point in time told me not to, they smiled at me, it was okay'd by them. Then do nothing, but don't blame me for caring or talk about me as though my life is a waste or that Im purposefully wasting time in life, Ive done my very best to be apart of, never rebellious, always taking meds as directed, its when I try too hard in life that I get put down as needy or rejected in life, and that's not my fault, because of the way I look, overweight, or not pretty, successful, with a job or a husband, treated as a lesser species of human or woman in life, as though Im a reject, because I am not young or vulnerable to the interests of others, and have my mind made up in life about who I believe in and what causes I have chosen to support, that's really none of anyone business, what keeps me staying well, or by whos advances or cares for me, make me feel apart of, to shun me, as though I am a lesser member of society because I have been sued or because I had three drinks and drove home from Hollywood, makes me not want to live life, I have suffered enough, put on anti-psychotics for 7 years, because I was cutting my wrists and slamming my head into the wall suicidal hearing voices, I don't deserve to live a life in isolation, or talked down to like I need therapy, or need a support group, for what? What do I need support for, I need a job, I need to function in life, I need day meds and night meds, I need a place to call home, I need to be able to provide for myself, no one can offer anything to me, that I should not already be able to provide for myself, that includes my safety and belongingness needs, Im a law student, all I have to do is finish law school and get a job, that's not what politics are for, becoming popular for acceptances to live life free from harm, what a waste of time blogging was, building greater acceptances for me, or people with disabilities, or people who have cared when no one else did and did their best in spite of what has occurred, I think that was a natural position for me to take given my work experiences not a big deal, and not amplified to shed light on all controversies, as though everything is related, that's not how individuals function as connected always, nor do businesses function as connected to one another, that would be doing people a disservice in life, to not be afforded some type of agency, and sense of livelihood, out of harms way, that wasn't the point, to make everyone care, and that because people care got sick or suicidal, don't blame me as though those were the reasons for my suicide attempt 2009, as someone who knowingly engaged in advocacy, unfit, or unfit because of factors outside of me causing me to think poorly, try to many years later make others see similarly to me during a period when I was not well. Why recreate my 2009, obviously I was drinking and not well, going through a separation, that's not my fault. Sometimes you are good enough and sometimes you are not considered smart or pretty enough for marriage, that's not my fault, I have always done my best to be presentable, word count issues aside, you have to have some sort of foundation for reference from which you decide to speak, that's how you pave a way for general acceptances of you to continue speaking in public, if for the wrong reasons, no one wants to hear what you have to say if they think you are blogging for yourself, or have an agenda that interferes with anyone else bests interests in life, Im not competitive, and believe that the world is full of resources, and that we are not limited, at any point in our lives, unless we limit ourselves by choices, lose privileges in life. That's a different situation. Earning back rights in life. I think that public speaking is always for the best interests of everyone as a whole, and not necessarily the best platform from which to take a personal stance in life, as toward others present or past, that does not good moving forward and only sets you back in life, to rehash the past to explain your condition now. You are always where you are at, by where you so choose to be emotionally and mentally, that's in no one elses control but your own, you may hear voices, but that's pretty much a product of something you have done wrong, thinking you deserve to be tortured or hacked, heckled, rejected, mistreated, bullied, made fun of, disrespected to your face, or behind your back. That I can't control, and the longer you allow it the longer it continues, and as soon as you bring it up, the worse it gets and the more real it becomes, a justifiable way to behave toward you in the negative. Some people just don't know how to be accepting of people, they see oh she thinks shes famous because she grew up around OJ, she hasn't struggled in life, she doesn't deserve to finish law school, what does she want to be married for shes overweight, of course no one will marry her because she didn't finish law school and can barely represent herself. #stophate #stopsuicide Being Experimental ...

If you are being experimental when it comes to love, just like therapy that's just something you don't share out loud, nothing exciting to be proud of, unless you have overcome some struggle in life, worth worrying about, its probably best not to add in addition to your struggles the lives of others, and leave them up for negative interpretation too. Its an odd disposition to take on in life, under suit, some more or less accepting of you afterwards, even worse, harder to get a job, and have to explain what happened, how you got sick, and why you got sued, if they haven't already made up their minds about you, overlooking your work online, as sufficient to be called a professional writer, or just someone whos energy is off putting and worth rejections in life. Blogging is about livelihood, it's a chosen profession some take on, not intended to be a speaking platform, if so that would be time consuming, to be pressured and put in the wrong positions in life, and forced to correct viewpoints toward, that wouldn't be free thinking. Its when things are not easy to digest, how others have coped in the past, are the actions for which they are judged and punished for, whether deemed helpful, successfully managing the emotions of those around them in regards to violence, and how one has coped, been able to overcome illness, bipolar, self-harm, and suicide, Im not a doctor so I cannot explain how that happned to me, but never stop believing in yourself, once your on meds, youre on meds for life. Theres no turning back, with the diagnosis I have, I am required to take meds to stay balanced so that I do not commit suicide. That's not really a threat to anyone else's livelihood, as it is my life I have to live, irrespective of how others live their life, regardless of what they think of me, I am required to also stay positive, you cant really play victim, with a record, you have to then at that point accept what you have done wrong in life while drinking or doing drugs and for those short periods of time, while incoherent, decisions you made, that set you back in life, and take responsibility for the people you brought into your life, that was your choice, not your fault if you are not able to play hard party hard and work hard all at the same time, we are not all functioning addicts and alcoholics, some people were just not meant for substance abuses in life, affecting their better decision making skills, especially if youre someone who has to try really hard in life to be smart and stay smart and achieve in life, sensitive, why desensitize yourself, or sound worse off than you are simply because of low self-esteem due to poor decision making in life. That's your history, live with it, its not necessary that you share out loud, every single stupid mistake you've made in life, and allow others to play God, furthering your chances from getting a job, and furthering your chances of reintegration into society and live a normal life. I don't think anyone expects a Cinderella story, happiness, marriage, and kids from me, I do think they expect the worst of me, suicide, but that doesn't mean I cant; work simply because others have chosen to convince themselves that my campaigning was in error, caring was obnoxious, or systems for advocacy suggested not helpful or in need of improvement, less is more. It just so happens that unless you have achieved a better place in life, can you share from those places in life, some opinions are not worth hearing, if your sharing from a down position in life, that's just as a writer something Ive noticed, being positive is important, but also your standpoint, and outlook, is affected by how youre feeling, so if youre trying to help people who don't feel well or think poorly of you or others, you being negative too definitely wont help nor represent your strategy for being helpful in a positive light, some wish to fly under the radar in life, and allow things to happen and to fix themselves on their own as the problems arise, I don't think now looking back that overall change was necessary or for all to care to help make a difference, maybe we were better off with only those affected being people directly involved, it seems that everyones happiness and hyper and productivity gets affected somewhat now, whenever something negative happens in the news, then blames others as being insufficient, in handling the problems faced by everyone, I think everyone is doing their best for the most part. You can only help in ways that your good at in life, you cant just switch professions and get good at something, and then try to influence change in that way, that's a longer process of making change happen when as inexperienced you try to help, sometimes that type of input is not helpful, its okay to be interested in subjects, but not be consumed by them, there is life after setback, and happiness after punishment, just don't expect everyone to feel the same toward you. No matter where you are in life, you cannot go backwards for acceptances in life, or for love, once people are done with you theyre done, focused on themselves, that's your lost opportunity, you get one chance at friendships in life, by momentum, when you get sick that means space, that's the hard part staying well, to make catch up calls with friends. Im doing my best to be patient, almost at well, working again, finishing my dissertation, doing a lot of reflecting, for the most part don't feel like writing, but its important to keep improving, especially if I want to publish a book, practice everyday sharing my thoughts and stay well.

Not My Intent ...

Whats exciting to me may not be exciting to you. Different things bring people joy in life, new relationships, new friendships, new jobs, new connections, offers, no matter where you are in life, you are always expected to negotiate well your position in life, and that's what communication in private is for, if you have to go the extra mile to generate additional acceptances for you and trust, to give others an opportunity to know you personally, and see your face daily, then its okay to share your life in private with someone you trust. That's without expectation for reward, employment, or future romantic endeavors, but its okay to dream and test the waters, to see whether it would be a healthy match in life work wise, or friendship wise, whether one withers or fades in the presence of another, is a tell tale sign whether discomforts are in the works, brought to fruition upon a seeing of the person to whom has caused them harm in life if any way. That's not for the reasons I mention Ari Emanuel on my blog, its not an obsession, he was just pointed out by my Father, so noticed him at a Laker Game, and he seemed like he wasn't doing well, so I decided to message him, and after messaging in November, jobs were posted online which I applied for, Im not sure whether messaging has impacted their decision of whether or not to hire or interview me, Im sure many have applied, and not sure by comparison, where I stand in regards to the other applicants for the positions being offered. I think it would be great to be apart of a growing company, and with my new Finance Law background a great fit for the position. I think its only natural to like someone or to admire someone that you work for, you just don't share those sentiments out loud, or share compromising photos of yourself, with them to see if they are willing to like you in that way, or are attracted to you similarly. That's not professional, that's following your heart, not thinking with your head, its okay to be loving, but you show that love through your work ethic, not by looking easy or cheap online, if they can do better they will do better, and you'll just wind up feeling stupid because you wanted a "like" when you should've been going for the job, and have taken a more reserved approach to building positive rapport with someone you admire, who may or may not have been willing to take you on board, do your best not to create unnecessary instability by talking to much about yourself, that's the quickest way to wind up uncomfortable in any professional setting, is not for therapeutic purposes or for giving or receiving love, that you find outside of work, why I chose to date Dejan, then look for jobs, so I wouldn't appear needy and fall in love at work. You have to be of high social standing in life to date anyone successful, and you have to be successful on your own in order to date men with careers who like nice things and have good lives, this Ive learned the hard way.

Romance and Pride ...

It's true that you can't have it all unless you are first happy with yourself. Why is self-love so important? Before you stop to worry what others think, or how they will respond to you, first be certain that you are everything worth knowing and loving. That means to appreciate and value, where you come from, no matter who identifies you as something less than you are. To be treated with pride, and to be considered of value, one must have pride in themselves, its that confidence in life that gets you places, no necessarily a product of where you come from always. Eventually you have to make it in the world on your own, in your younger years, and childhood, you are but a product of your exposures in life, the successes of those around you influencing your outlooks in life, and its that safety network provided to you by the parents of your friends, that you grow up in, and first learn about how the world works. Where do you fit in? Nothing gets handed to you in life, especially via social status and companionship. We are all respected differently based upon who we meet in life, and respected based upon our education in life, where we went to school, and by who we know, or how wealthy we are. No one really stops to roll out the red carpet for anyone who is deemed below them in life, favors tend only to be handed upward to who can provide back via payment or known association to. Friends are one thing, dating is another, its about who's representing who, and when that doesn't matter, does each represent the other in a positive way, and does ones status weigh more favorably and uplift the status of others, fairly, that would be one consequence of not making it in life, to be questioned based upon, what you can provide, not burden someone new in your life, with your past, or be seen as someone who is successful only by benefiting from others, not on ones own merits successful. "Date someone who is proud to be your boyfriend." [1] In order to date you have to have something going for you in life, if you want someone else to see a future in you, you have to have some stability in your life, that's not an obvious factor, when it comes to love, its just a good sign that things are going to work out, when one another can visualize for themselves a shared life, without any foreseeable complications along the way. That's having potential. When someone has potential, that means their value as a person, outweighs anything said about them in the negative, regardless of their social standing, beauty, or past etiquette online, or friends past, not judged based upon who has come and gone from their life, post failure, but who is in their life now and willing to be apart of their lives, as they are now. That's what makes someone still attractive in spite of what others think. However, there is only so much love that can be shared, before outside factors begin to take their toll on any given union, not all unions will prosper or be considered "E pluribus unum." [2] It has been thought that "When each person loves the other as much as himself, it makes one out of many (unus fiat ex pluribus), as Pythagoras wishes things to be in friendship." [3] Its hard to be loved when one does not love themselves because another has rejected them, you really have to rise above hate in life, if you want to experience happiness and success, it doesn't come easily to most, because I grew up well taken care of, privileged, its expected that I be able to provide for myself and others, however with disability, I don't think that I was treated fairly when being too hard on myself. If acceptance is the issue, then it must be that a bond is lacking from your relationships in life, if youre not the one for them, then its okay to move on, that's acceptable. Wealth discrimination is an issue when it comes to jobs, Ive been applying to law firms since 2008, unless you speak Spanish and have 5 years experience, its hard to find a job in LA. Most of the jobs I have been selected for have been Externships, Internships, and Law Clerk positions, working under the direction of Attorney's as an ABA Certified Paralegal. Because I was not able to get a job, I could not date, and because I could not date I was not married, and because Im not married I do not have kids, because I was not given an opportunity to work when I was well before I hospitalized 7 times AFTER law school. In failure, wellness becomes a serious issue, when it comes to hireability, dateability, that's because if you've given up in life, its hard for others to believe in you, and to see your potential given your mistakes in life, and offer you an opportunity in life to better yourself, which is why I created a job for myself online as a writer and blogger, because it is very difficult to get a job in Los Angeles. From my perspective its better to keep building a career for myself, somewhere, anywhere, than to stop working all together, and although its not something I brag about on Linkedin or on my Resume, its becoming more and more presentable as the years have passed, and worth mentioning I blog. Ive written everyday online since 2013, you don't always have good days, and in my early years, I would often share my mental health issues outloud, or seem codey and creative with my content displays, often times sharing too much from my life, or being too opinionated about the times, and what needs to be done, or what could be done, only in your free time, do you have the time sit down and analyze life, that's one of my strengths, analysis, as a law student, that's what the essay portion of your exams is about, I used to get As on Essays in Law School started out 3rd in my Class, before I started dating. Not everyone can balance everything.

Whatever happened to the days when you could speak freely your mind without worry for others being condescending toward you for sharing your thoughts out loud, it seems everyone gets sized up these days, everyone thinking they are bigger than they are, or smarter than everyone else, whos viewpoint is best, we all lead different lives, therefore everyones perspective is of value, if we all thought alike then life would be boring, it's the fact that we see differently and think differently that enables society to blossom and thrive, theres work that gets done everyday, miles to climb, and goals to achieve, if we had nothing better to strive for, with a little healthy competition, that makes sense to compare, ones sense of self to the sense of being that others has managed to achieve online, theyre just displays, in reality, everyone must do their best to play their part, it doesn't come any easier, depending on what meds you take, as though those on adderrall have a easier time achieving than those without meds, or people with ambien able to sleep through anything, no one is invincible we are all human, its those who don't know when to stop that cause the most trouble, not stopping until their point is made, and not stopping until some unidentified end point is achieved, not all will be in agreement with the drives of one another, some want money, some want stability, some want friendship, some want romance, whatever youre living for in life, or whether living for others, a caretaker, those are your drives in life, whether regarded as selfish or not, for your lack of wellness, its not a choice to suffer or to become sick, and one should not be judged by their mental health issues, regarded as mentally ill, and treated as some kind of reject to society, of lower standing simply because they have had troubles in the past, no comparisons exonerate anyone as being of less a big deal, once punished, that person suffers indefinitely choosing to either live life or to die suffering, and enable others to build excuses for why someone has died, no one will keep you alive in life, I realized that, doctors help, but its your job to stay alive and to work and provide for yourself, desperation is not living as a matter of survival over resources, the world is full of resources, and people to friend and date, no one should ever feel as though life is short in the amount of choices we have to thrive, only short in the amount of years we have to correct or to live the life we want to live, able to earn a paycheck and get a job, at 30 you become desperate, its time to work, and if you cant work, stay home and keep busy, some on meds, die, that's a choice they make, to not be compliant and to continue to drink and do drugs, and not survive, that's because society has rejected them, and that has become their way of life, living below the radar, not in public light, there are many benefits to living a public life, it really forces you to step up to plate, and do your best, if no one was watching I wonder where I would be probably still lost, dead, suicidal, in a hospital, or in a home, or some kind of rehab facility, asleep all day, waking up only for meals, I don't deserve to live a life like that, I've been there Im trying to have a normal life, as best I can, that's not rising above for the sake of proving anyone wrong or making anyone look bad, or placing blames, or accepting blames for losses there was war, people get sick, its time to let go, of the need to control and shelter everyone, no one ever said the world is coming to an end, and if you follow a mayan calendar well that's your opinion, no matter how difficult life gets, life goes on with or without you, with or without your thoughts input, or contributions to the world, not that youre nothing or your life is meaningless, but the whole is greater than the sum of its parts, and no one part or loss, or person, is strong enough to take an entire group of peoples perspective down in life, or make anyone sicker than they are on their own, that's not how a disease of the mind occurs, whats intrinsic is your ability to stay well, and continue to make good decisions in life, based upon your education understand concepts of whats real or not real, whats a bad day, whats a good day, when things are off, your instincts guide you but you cannot always be protected from harm, there are ways to avoid getting hurt in life, but part of life is being exposed, and being resilient, that is being able to think for oneself regardless what anyone thinks, why they tell you not to worry what other people think, be responsible for your own thoughts in life and stay positive. I had a normal life, what is suicide anyways? Its not worth talking about because people just think youre selfish, no one really cares how much you've struggled in life, they just convince themselves you deserve it, and if you continue to allow those beliefs to continue, a disbelief in you, then you eventually become something you are not, worse off, that is giving in to sin, drinking, doing drugs, and becoming an incoherent mess, disorganized by the negative sentiments of others as expressed toward you, end your life, never contemplate ending your life, in response to anothers hate toward you, lawsuit or not. That would be a choice to die and commit suicide, that because I was sued cannot now get a job, and struggle with even worse mental health issues, was better off thin, running, and drinking, living alone, I already have disability, I was doing fine on my own, its when living life is hard you know that you have a problem, you shouldn't have to think about it, wake up get dressed, do work, read a book, keep busy, get a job, why let anyone convince you to die by suing you and taking all your privileges in life away from you, and turn everyone new against you in life, seeing you as less than, because you have a record, that's when you question for what purposes am I living life, grew up privileged, no Im not rich, and no Im not like anyone who is famous who has gone to jail, they had careers and paychecks, Ive not been paid yet or able to provide for myself, Ive been in school, I haven't had time to experience life yet, be social, attend events, I took a break from everything to focus on law school, and all of a sudden because I made a hashtag, theres something wrong with me. Theres nothing wrong with me. On a positive note: will work for Mom & Dad, Monday. Life goes on, and its especially important not to end life before you get better, once you get to better, you'll realize how special life really is, even if youre feeling like $hit, or someone is making you feel like $hit, or look guilty or grose, don't commit suicide because youre not rich or pretty, that would be a waste of time, why I went to law school. You were born to live life so do your best, 2012 while undergoing TMS treatment for depression following rehab 2011, it was hard to function, and when youre not high functioning its even harder to care for you or to be loved, live life anyways, I took meds for 7 years as prescribed, even got risperidone and abilify shots, all I did was sleep, thats no way to live life, I deserve to be awake, work, and live a normal life, Im not the problem, Ive harmed no one, I mind my own business, and I keep to myself.

The Same Handicaps ...

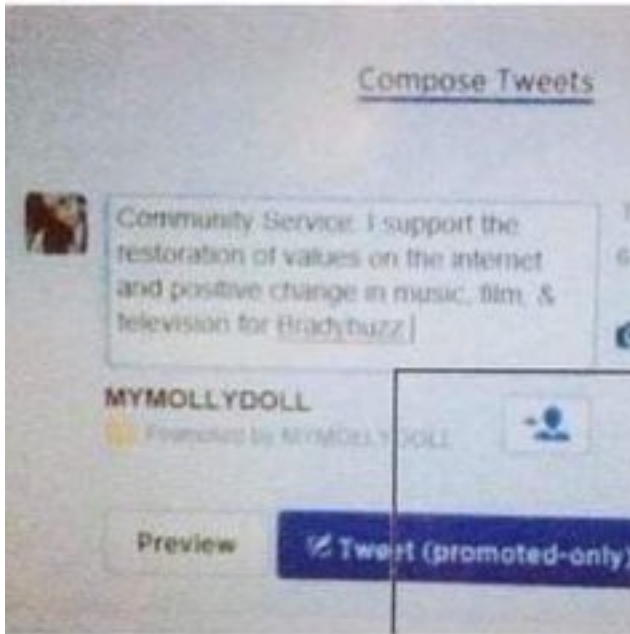

1/31/2020

Everyone is under the same handicaps in life when it comes to public speaking, why some do not get too far when insensitive toward others is that I put myself down, never making anyone look bad to look better than, and only voice an opinion if I think its having to do with me, by their opinions, where they are coming from, and whats what about. Its one thing where one benefits from having been exposed to someone who declares exposure to a person, as not helpful toward their personal outlooks in life, or understandings. That's what I was trying to get to the privilege of wellness and why, it used to be that way, that upon connecting we felt better, but when the tides of guilt are turning, would it be my hand to play, that wouldn't require one to change any outlooks or ideas, or thoughts about others, that's the issue. Like everyone who is not currently comfortable, and can feel that equally, whatever if being said toward me or about me, or thought of me in the negative has been said, they would rather have everyone consider me in the negative to ease their poor outlooks in life, and not allow me to see myself in the positive. This is a negative portrayal of me, seeking to affirm, and one is in reality who I really am, who is behind that ammunition to gather rounds to be used against me, with, no I do not have the power to change opinions of people who have been defamed, or charged with crimes, whether or not they have been cleared. In an experiment, it is okay to play with my image, as though Im able to correct those viewpoints toward me, I am not the same as someone else, I select who I surround myself with, to enable me to be a solid decision maker, and think right even when the odds are against me, that is what I put in life, and what it took to reverse those opinions of me, having been sued, its really no ones business, for what reasons I chose to sue, I started messaging in private, but I realize what was best was to speak in public, that's the safest bet, not write in private, and cause unnecessary tensions, me, and risk unnecessary tensions that result from everyone not hearing from you assuming the negative, until that's what becomes of you, threatened at home, to get your act together, that's really no ones business, what kind of stress Im under, of why when thin no one was around and worked from home, on my masters in law, I will be graduating in 28 days, and looking forward to finishing my LLM Masters in Law, that is something I do not currently have money for, but something I can do, and go into another school already willing to help me finish. What comes to success: (1) marriage (2) career (3) family. If you can manage all three congratulations, that's not what Im preaching about, all three things in life, have managed to stay happy, and out of the way of other peoples successes in life, not interfere with the happiness of others, a giver. As you can see I write for free online, unpaid, I don't have to write without pay, I can write books. -The point is not to get a corner, or worsen, its when things are not talked about and fly overhead, helps sometimes, sometimes not.

Losses and Emotions ...

Theres always a whirlwind of emotions that passes through ones sense of self upon experiencing any type of loss, as affected, and depressed, messes in life, react and respond in the wake of the turmoil as felt by those directly involved, one can only imagine what people are thinking, whether or not as related, but felt relevant, not necessarily to the passing of Kobe Bryant. It would be my best advice to let go of the issues around you illness, but its better to state the issues, before they become pulled from you as of issue, that's just how I am. Better to be seen on Facebook, but apparently, I did not further my deductions as I thought unhelpful at the time a product of bipolar, sometimes what you think is a grand scheme of things, if it ends up not being important and just an opinion, than that's okay too, not everything you have to say sheds greater understanding among everyone. Sometimes, if its just about you, its just about you, and if its just your misunderstanding as to what you thinking things are about you, because you were about Brady, that's an okay paranoia to have, that someone who built a company, a perfect symbol of what is well or what is right, or what is to be imitated, but as someone who has experience assembling information and helps understandings is how I was trained, whether my skills have helped or hurt other peoples abilities to care or be cared for, that is the campaign or building of a website, its always been to redirect others to resources, how I was trained. The redirecting toward resources, I got sued, my original plan for my site got scrapped, and all the ideas that went with it, had to start fresh, that's common to lawsuits, and I have to create all new routes to success or all new routes to understandings, the basics, sued for, as not in alignment or in agreement with never my intent as I suffer from mental health issues, and would never put anothers health in jeopardy because my own health was suffering from others queries. -Why I connect and maintain memberships, no pun intended to the Movie: Catch me if You Can ...  recovery hospitalized off all meds, and slept every single day and every single night in bed, except for smoke breaks, my only time arc out cold asleep its not a fun experience and not something you talk about, being put on lock down and forced to take meds, or taken of wake up and attend group sessions, tired, rarely occurring. "Where did you get that" my sister enters the room to interrupt my focus, it hydroxyzine and 1 seroquel and 1 trazedone my night meds, don't let anyone in the street convince you you are someone worthless or theyre not attached to OJ and a laws student with TV Shows and movies making fun of their intelligence levels which others could lev with those viewpoints. Whos started that perspective anyways, I don't care if you think Clueless was a culprit we lost planes, over drea fractured my hand in a bathroom hitting my head, for what reasons are those types of pressure put on women who represent men in the infamy that's not our fault.

01-27-20: Now that I am learning VC, I am slowly understanding the tempo of the business side of things, when things are going well those nervous feelings, when deals are closing, that light airy feeling, like anything can happen. This you learn with experience, probab were things said, and interpretations made, vague enough to cause me to feel light headed, and not well, and not specific enough for m something to say just say it, I just started reading a book by Paul Kalanithi last night, who passed away, sad news, Im sorry to mention left unsaid. Taking it One Day at a Time ...

Im at a point in my life, where Im taking it one day at a time, learning from my mistakes, and staying focused so that I can realize my to backtrack, and think about the past, that really does no one any good moving forward unless done so in a therapeutic setting, or with twice a week, and will be seeing a new psychiatrist today, and probably go back on Abilify, I tried to stop on my own, but had another and although I made two new friends will not continue down that road, going out alone to make friends, its just not worth it. I have my being social, that don't put myself at risk of harm, health wise, drinking. That is the solution, blogging. Life is much too short to be ex life to live, is similar to the popular saying "there is no room for error." Probably why I say that. My Mom always tells me that, I have and to help me to focus on getting a job. I interview February 3rd at a job agency in Century City, Im really excited for the new opport stay grounded. Meanwhile, will be working on editing my first book, just got edits back from Amazon Book Writing Inc, hope to publ looking better, my face was bruised, self-harm when it occurs, is mostly due to voices, I have a delusion that Im in some sort of a think sharing ideas, back with me, about life, voices that are very critical of me, when Im not doing well, is usually when I hear them. Its so to minimize the potential for hearing voices, its when your going in life, that voices don't bother you, its when youre not going in life, Why its so important to work, and to stay goal oriented and to have things going for you in life, so that you don't go into psychosis, he are thinking about you. That's no way to live life in worry, paranoid, about the past, or fearful for your future. Its not necessary that lif long, enjoy them, don't speed up life, living a fast life, simply because you want to have fun, pace yourself. And as always here for yo else's perspective, take care.

In Remembrance ... #kobebrvant ...

You don't really realize just how short life is until a life is lost, or cut short. If just makes you think about things, how hard you are try obstacles, one stayed centered throughout all the controversy beside him. I remember going to Laker Games with family back in 2008 free taco tickets. I was there for Robert Horry's magical three pointer and Derek Fisher's. You only get to live life once, always be gra memorable. Without whom, we would not have those shared moments of happiness in life. At my last job, at an insurance company he his desk. I thought that was controversial, I guess that's when forgiveness happens, don't wait until its too late, to appreciate someone that brought them down in life, we all make mistakes, its not always entirely our faults. With a record, I guess he would be the epitome succeeded, he played games and went to work anyways, even with everyone boo-ing at him, that takes guts. From my standpoint, as a his daughter, I can only imagine what kind of pressure that put him and his family under, I understand, what its like from the inside ou amount of negative press looming around you and negativity thrown toward you, lucky enough for him, he had so many fans and supp from the mental health issues that occur having been labeled as someone to be abhorred by society, or with a guilty verdict someone to down, he did neither. He was so talented, watching the news today, his journey to success, his upbringing, and his exposures, made him light. We are so grateful for people who despite the odds, prove us wrong, rather than right, and do their best to lay low, in spite of the of something, its sad that he was not able to make a full recovery, from living a private life, to living publicly again.

When Things Don't Line Up ...

Don't put too much pressure on yourself, when things need to get done, stay goal oriented, set smaller goals for yourself, to accomplish get screamed at along the way, others putting pressure on you to get jobs, or to put your life together, but don't let that get the best of you to say. Always from a place of compassion accept the criticisms of others, especially when you are not doing well, don't take things too when "stress becomes chronic, it can be overwhelming — and harmful to both physical and emotional health." [1] Take a deep breath, without stressing out too much, and let the dust settle, if you have interviews lined up already, so be it, don't listen to whomever is breathing dissertation that needs to get done before you start working, then get that done, and out of the way. Usually right before you make a transition off center in life, because of other people's stress about you not doing as expected, you can only do your best, and considering you're doing your best that you can. Not everyone can work. There was a period when I was working and going to school, and loved to do both, for some time only. Its when I stopped excelling, that I stopped feeling good about myself, and those gaps in my resume, eventually took their toll on me going than to stop working, to rest, or to recover, from whatever was ailing me at the time. You can't control what meds you get put on or sedated, on put on anti-psychotics, which cause a severe loss of motivation in life. That's not my fault. It's a really frustrating experience with meds, simply because others aren't accepting of your late-night behavior, running or out at night, consider that unacceptable, and put yourself there's really nothing I can do about now, but stay positive. How many years were wasted on heavy meds. I think its important to be able to keep going in life awake.

Feeling Better ...

Still a little under the weather, resting in a bed all day, working on my dissertation right now. When things get rough, think at what you can achieve that. When studying, I feel at my best, or running, I feel strong. Usually staying in bed all day is not the solution to your problems going in life, and work through those tired periods to get your energy back. It has been suggested that if you are constantly tired, to change replace sugar and refined carbs with whole foods that are rich in fiber, such as vegetables and legumes." [1] -Checked in with my Sponsor and not to drink, I don't think that helped at all, and only made things worse. If it took me this long to get well, sober, then drinking is how just when you think you are well, you think you can revert back to old behaviors, thinking that a different result will occur, as though the mental health issues you previously suffered from while drinking. Well I can tell you this much, you still get sick. Even after 2 or 3 years studying AA and the blue book, your way of thinking changes, and in that belief system, come to believe in a set of principles that sets you back been following to get well, only does you a disservice in life. -So what happened, I was talking about controversial topics, and sharing things familiar with, but have thought about, and in so doing, voices occurred, that happens when you have said something, and have not said it to you, and more cannot be provided from you. I think there is too high of expectation, as a writer, to always know everything, we don't know what we know, and what we think, but we don't always know best, and sometimes, its better to say nothing at all, why I took several breathers what I had to say, and decided to keep what I had to say private, that was just my choice. Sometimes, what you have to say is helpful, toward building a bigger better understanding, why private.

Until It Happens ...

Sometimes you don't know what to do until it happens. Do your best always to maintain a level head, so you are ready and prepared for misunderstandings, there will always be turmoil, its all a matter of staying balanced. There is always time to correct poor judgment, or take time, don't give up on yourself, and keep to a daily disciplined regimen that works for you. Recently I self-harmed and have a black took too much Vyvanse and was hearing voices, for the most part have been doing well, I was trying to quit pen paling with Ari Eman getting sick, its been helpful to have someone to talk to, not that Im in a mess and need help getting out, its just there's only so much that staying sober, is my best to staying well, can order Diet Coke if Im out, next time. A lot of what brings you happiness in life is feeling momentum off of that feeling, of feeling good about oneself. Its usually by doing the right thing that we feel good about ourselves, and when we are doing well. I just started a new job, at a venture capital firm, training to be a founder. I also, made a new friend an Attorney nice to me, he also makes music on the side, friends with musicians. We seem to have a lot in common, fancy meeting him, of all people is going well, I got sick, I can't really explain mental health issues, but they are symptoms, you have to constantly manage, and when you can go backwards into a downward swing in life, and relive those moments, when you were at your worst. Over time things get better. I am applying for a 1pm for a Research Position, they will study me for $15/hr, given that I have bipolar have been on meds for years a patient.

Finding Your Sense of Peace ...

Peace occurs in many ways: (1) love (2) friendship (3) understanding (4) compassion (5) argument (6) opinion (7) historical referencing. To most, in fact many unhappy in their lives, find it difficult to care when their needs must be met first, safety needs, security needs, peace to go out on limbs in life, to serve a greater good, or a larger purpose, separate from the daily commitments and disciplined practices, to a less structured arena, in which to lead, follow, be influenced by, comprehend, understand, and be first to see bigger pictures, or settle up. That's your choice who you who choose to respect, admire, look up to, listen to, be influenced by, imitate, think of, worry about, usually know, or wish to know more about, that attraction to that person, breeds an opening for a new perspective or way of thinking about life. To get away a present fear as alone, and once connected see better, that's generally the main goal of socialization, to feel better, that doesn't mean not always the case, usually the most independent of others are the strongest, not always designated to positions of leadership, due to leadership nonetheless, looked upon, during times of needs, for best practices when it comes to interpretation of the wellness or others, as well as to surround yourself with that you connect to and based upon those connections feel, and depending upon how many connections you can make. The difference between those best one-on-one and those best in groups, theres a reason for that, energy, some fade, not able to keep up, and not hearing themselves, in groups, voices tend to occur, where there is disagreement, as to the trust and wellness of a person as influencer, or purposeful failures, to illustrate how if one self-sabotages they are not to be trusted as reliable, that's the basics of choosing your professional work in sync with one another, and not interfere with one another's best interests, health.

Personal Update ... (2)

Not being talkative on purpose, only if Im in writing mode and have something important to say, usually thoughtful but apologize if you want to say Im the problem, but its important to mention, not intended to hurt anyones feelings, as being associated to me, now that I am too. Once you embarrass yourself, relapse, that you cannot afford, not even when well, you get sick again, this is my first experience sick, my character, when you are wrong nothing can be done to fix your wellness, only rest, and abstaining from drinking, if you are hard on yourself. I thought that I could do without the meds, realize to sound appropriate not come across as insensitive and be made fun of later for talking. I am not smart, or a product of uppers, and meds, not intelligence, just fast talking verbose. I think that for the most part, I was doing well, so I stabilize sometime after the 27th and resume the recovery process, not as offender but as well, and not relapse drink, that's the idea, staying sober, that's the point, it shows that you understand drinking and its consequences, and that because you did not behave well or humiliation, self-harm, talking about things like you know what youre talking about, sharing delusions as though they should matter to treatment, and then not being patient, or in a rush for responses, or for feedback as affirmation for wellness. You really have to be strong, chalant attitudes back, or the super friendly, and then cold, or laughing but not at you, but in a good way kind. Sometimes voices help me, self-harm upon hearing too many voices, usually testing things Ive written on me, checking for responses. ~Im sorry Ari Emanuel, love you. This point in my life helped me to sleep for 3 months.

Overcoming Feelings ...

There will be moments when you lose motivation, don't feel good enough, and not sure of yourself and others, stay positive, my best advice is to stay in life, we all go through transitions, some more difficult than most. These are just feelings and feelings have never resulted in death as I have said about that comment, didn't agree with it immediately, but stood out to me, sometimes I wonder whether its coming from actual person or if I say things based upon a feeling, thinking that it will resonate with someone else they perceive to be going through or having an issue with. I am setting, focus your attentions inward, reading not what is expected of you to say, but as recollected be prepared, always having something to say.

some system of maintaining your sense of self, don't ever lose yourself in a group setting, writing to the expectations of others, speaking best, that's not to say that others too don't have high expectations of you, that I'm sure they do, what they value, in your writing, and what they never know, what it is people value in people, but it's some likeable quality or trait, that they are accepting of, their ability to be themselves is so important, and maintaining confidence in yourself is so important, when you are bad or doing something wrong, this affects your present yourself, and your level of comfort around others, that's on you to figure out for yourself, who you are, what your likes are, what is benefiting you thought wise, exposure wise, and limit yourself to that which makes you feel good, and certain about self and others, what will get you and that's okay. So long as you waste time in protest thinking about what others are thinking of saying you are wasting your focus on yourself. All time wasted sets you further back in life, that includes time frozen in worry, not breathing, and taking life with a prove or disprove the appropriate treatment of individuals myself included, but it was only happening to me, and that's because I was overwhelmed, to explain self, and having no one be in support of me, out alone, or drinking, or after having relapsed with friends, true points in your life, where you can choose to stand still or go downward, the best choice is to keep still. In stillness is how you diffuse ourselves we pile our plates too high trying to make up for lost time, we feel under pressure in life, the cost at performing well under dire circumstances genuineness in life, and try to control your output, or future, by telling you what to do, and in their power control what things look like to be prosecuted behind your back for things that are not your fault, but for things that have happened to you which contributed to choices.

Setting Yourself Back ...

When it comes to reaching your goals in life, don't set yourself back doing what you know you shouldn't be doing. If you were advised it's as simple as that. Today I realize that I don't need to drink to have a good time or to make friends. I thought that I was missing out and made two new friends, but that's not always the best way to meet people while out drinking especially not alone, I'm not sure what I'm doing alone. Much of life requires us to be independent, but I don't think you need to be that independent in life to make things happen for yourself meet new people, not on a Tinder date, and not out at the bars, sometimes you have to live life. Do you feel bad that you drank, after having alcohol, but not on cocaine, and for the most part, have stayed clean and sober, since 2006, after attending outpatient rehab at Boulder had a 3.8 GPA in Sociology and a 3.6 GPA overall, which went down because I drank and did Cocaine. You live and you learn, but my close with, and still speak to one of them today, who recently got married and had a baby. She married Vlasic. Do you miss your friends keep in touch, but haven't had the courage, or felt well enough to call, I'm not sure why I've been so avoidant. Get to a stable point in life always make time for people that care, that's the bottom line, you'll never be quite perfect, but that doesn't mean stop living life all together life to get by sometimes. Do your best to be a good person, and if you relapse so be it, don't beat yourself over it, sometimes best people awhile, than stop all together, it takes a lot of strength to abstain from drinking all together, I'm not sure how popular AA is, or how many people follow my blog, probably were disappointed, I'm not a Sponsor yet, you need at least a year sobriety to be one, so don't think I'm sorry.

Opting Out of the Use of Humor ...

As advised, humor is not used as a form of communication, as to issues thought of issue, or to highlight remaining issues that people have mostly in my head, to detail and report incidences of being around people, and to cater to unfavorable positions toward me is why I am may take awhile, Starbucks is included, welcome there, I think for the most part even if known, life's all about winning people over, and see if you are confused, or they are confused, as to your wellness, or think you're gone, and try to make you appear stupid by short hand though because you are a blogger, that's mostly paranoia. No I've not been served a check outside, only once and hit my head insulted, same bar I was followed out, after not being in the mood to talk, and negotiated with to hang out as friends, I was going through a break until I hit my head, accusing me of drinking to hook up or drinking and hooking up, I would sit alone at the bar with my headphones on stupid, then what was being put on paper sometimes mostly typing in my phone, maybe a few times started talking, there is a general problem and then in your last year you take courses that teach you how to present and speak, I was never given that opportunity to take the course occasionally raising my hand in class to share briefs, always detailed, and then eventually, with work did not have time to manage everything important to be taken seriously in life, but not that important, and it's not important to speak about important things to feel important, to value as a shared opinion in life. I'm not a journalist so very new to public speaking in a professional tone, used to only share bits and pieces if I thought of anything funny to say or a humorous way to present information share, that's by my memories and exposures, what is funny and then using those moments to characterize myself presently in a humorous fashion. The worst that could happen as a blogger is to be afterward and realize things in an order directed by what thoughts they sought to trigger in passing through your life, don't think too much unwise to think too much about any particular interactions, some stand out, but not make a big deal of anything, unless you make it so get well, worrying doesn't help enable others to achieve well as spoke about or overhead concerns about them directly or people around none lie in anticipation of someone being the cause of another's lack of wellness, and to blame someone put on anti-psychotics as the cause of anti-psychotics as of today and going back to having energy and working again. I need to finish my dissertation and 1 hr a day of work at Starbucks or two, is not a normal full day, one should accomplish more than that to be tired, that's unusual to sleep as much as I do, and heavy meds, because its others, when I am well, complain to my doctors, that Im not well, because without a job, and trying to finish I do worthwhile good enough for, I enjoy writing that is my passion, the purpose of finishing school is that with a degree you can get a job. Lack of confidences have come from, why friendships have not resumed, that's really no ones business, what meds I was put on, and why I am smart well spoken, it seems these days that the better someone gets to know you, the less they respect you, as being open and courteous. I have been through a lot to give them the choice of whether or not to associate with you or be in your life, explain, that's just a disposition that is about yourself, and after suit, with a record, you are treated as less than, that's until you either stay normal, and if not only proving them right with information to give people a choice, not force anyone to thin or believe in me or anyone or think a certain way to feel normal themselves. Beer and ¾ a Stella. I talked to the police today, I call them all the time, its their choice what to do with me, if my social standing does not improve, that's not to make anyone look bad by looking good myself, Im not a vindictive person trying to appear better than others, Dont be a source of talk, be yourself.

Overcoming Mental Illness: Beauty ...

At different points in your life different things will matter to you, sometimes you will be on point, looks wise and other times you'll wobble, so does not the degradation of your body and soul, as to the thoughts that encompass floating above you and through you as intentions and then theres face dysmorphia, whether you can recognize self, recognizable to others as normal, and whether the differences in your appearance perplexes them, what causes attraction and what the face looks like in judgment, or positivity. There is a such thing as taking things too far, not to be read, similarly, I do not read others, and wish not to be read. That's in looking at you, talking to you non-stop for reactions from that's called being overwhelmed, that has nothing to do with attractions or intimidations in life, but everything to do with who is being intimidated below, in charge of themselves, or trying to navigate or take charge of another's sense of self, be to dominating. Those are just personal experiences, intimidated by others, in order to feel accustomed, or normal around others, comfortable. You will always be judged by what you say, and in our discussions, sometimes we reflect and sometimes we are present, sometimes we think over what has passed recalling the past in the present where we are now can recall things in the negative if asked or called upon to speak to those facts in life, that's your choice what you write and what you say and what is important to you from memory is what is bothering you or has bothered you past to determine your disposition. What occurred, and whether and when as to what jokes toward you persisted, that is was considered positive conduct to treat you as lesser than. A positive look was achieved, to what extent are we pressured to appear well, and then beyond appearing well, able to maintain stability in life, sometimes its hard to sustain well, and get better beyond a simple well state of mind, functioning, overtime, as things become more complex and understanding how to be or how to look, then you can look the same no matter how difficult a day or how much you suffer in life, and necessary to be said out loud, every passing thought or deduction in life, as about others, and why paranoid, I think things are generally (1) feel alienated (2) talk to someone in power (3) try to fix yourself to be around others (4) face rejection upon needing others (5) share what is expected to prove (6) your paranoid thoughts caused XYZ deaths. No I was not famous at the time, no MLK speech was expected of me, high esteem as that of a leader to speak to the issues -as a student you are focused on yourself, upon leaving school you strengthen strength around you, if you are on your own independent you are not keeping up with whats going on outside of you, because you are working hard to give up on you, dont send yourself down in life, get suicidal.

Personal Update ...

1/16/2020

Taking a break from blogging to continue working on my Dissertation, see a new Therapist tomorrow, I have three new Doctors, that's for me in a way in which I was able to stay well, get well, and achieve in life, to my fullest potential. Gaining weight again, experiencing given mental illness, is not my fault, when someone hurts me, and then to discuss, only makes things worse. Dont attack me thinking that past hurt me and my future. #stophate

Impromptu Meetups at Starbucks ...

Just left Starbucks after a run, ran intervals a 30 minute run became a 21 minute run! Wow, amazing off the Abilify I can move again, in fatigues entered through the back door, its always nice to see them around town, make the neighborhood feel like a bustling city, int professionals, we are so lucky to have them on board. Just made a joke to my now pen pal, that I could've kept talking and drinking w three dates, I met April 2019, to reunite, but instead, with a dead cell phone, gave my number, and waited for replies, one instantly as s for tutorials about their business, and in exchange submitted my resume for review, to be brought on board, the requirement is for me or will need to follow up with him, he's an Attorney from Argentina or Italia, I forget now, he had an accent, I was waiting for my cab similarly I was approached once my headphones came off, by another patron to the hotel I visited last night. Its one of my favorite plac celebrate, just when you've reached a stopping point of rest, do we have time to socialize sometimes, writing is a full time job, of read work, for future use, or editing already written work for publishing in a book form, it takes time, to figure out on ones own how to wri thoughts, or articles, with the sustenance of ideas coming from you, and as referenced to other sources for support. Hard to explain ab interesting positive note about self if you blog, to share if you do, doesn't seem to intimidate or turn off others. I met a lawyer, who wa blue, he was very sweet. Im assuming he did not already know me from online, hear my Monica Chanukah joke. Be careful when look hurting people who are already suffering and don't need to relive the trauma, of events causing them or other mental disturbance, not a world events, and still on par, basically we played during our off hours super social, and worked hard studied hard, and all played spor its when we are most busy, life gets the best of you, meaning not in the negative as is being assumed, lose track of time or fail to main correspondences, that's life, its not always coming at you, sometimes you have to go out there and live life for yourself.

Don't Lose Focus ...

There are many distractions in life, that may take you off course in life, you have to give meaning and purpose to your life, in order to become in life, more well off, a better state of mind, or better overall wellness, you cannot comprehend the time that's been lost, while in life, and for historical purposes, does more harm than good moving forward, my apologies for addressing distractions in life, but the for the most part you are put in positions in life, left with few resources, and knowing you, who you go to talk to during times of need, there is any truth to the matter, that upon being distracted, if not in a positive way kept well informed, that your intuitions were not hel needed work in order to overcome growing pains associated to becoming accustomed to violence in our communities, jokes on import personal concerns are worth redressing. It usually just so happens that people who are well off, or in the limelight, doing well, focused who get hurt upon entrusting others with their livelihood, or best decision making skills, get thrown off course. Usually we blame the s distorted wellness in the community, and overall health an well being of what is thought of about others. I had two beers tonight. Ther mistaken between the two, there is not need to put someone in a state of fear, of what others think and waste their energy stores in life, them behind their backs. -This statement may not bring all a sense of peace, sometimes you have to bring yourselves to that point in ti directed by anyone, that's not my job, to please others, or to again, cite to any street references be made to look like I put others at risk alike or respond the same or think humorous, Im simply reporting what is going on around me, and by what I see think, there were poi so blatant and obvious, that there is no need for feeling insulted, that is beyond the point, and the point others are trying to make that b image, we would not have lost lives? That's not the reason for our loses, whenever anyone expresses concerns that's a service.

The Sudden Demise of Confidence ...

Im not sure how it is for men, as a woman I can only speak from my own shoes, that confidence is built upon doing what is right not w doing drugs, and not by sleeping around, dating monogamously, or hooking up with one person at a time, it's a very frustrating subject was worse than they were and treated like a drug addict simply because of who my friends were at the time, what their personal history though at odds with friends, learn to maintain the confidences of those who grow close to you, its not they who hurt you, but its in the shared, is an incomplete thought, or a rash decision, to plant a seed, to see where it drives your thought processes in life -as someone v logically for so long, before it begins to hurt, that's how you know you have been harmed, either someone has told you something "gr "traumatizing to them and to onlookers" and then recaptivating those feelings of fear within, by discussing again what went wrong, an for three years without meetings, self-harming sober, in bed by 5ppm, suffering, hearing voices, and everyone sharp with me, changing controlling, Im not sure what that is, it seems as those I appear feeble minded or not smart, that I am spoken to as though I am stupid. I were not there to understand why I was being bullied, it was not deserved, a simple miscommunication in how I appeared or was repre being close to me, but its in negative judgment of you, when you distance yourself from others, that you lose your confidences in life, more and more left out, until you feel empty, what then are you made out of when you feel dizzy on meds, trying to lose weight, and g applied to the US Navy 2009, don't treat me as though I was not serious when willing to die for my Country, and serve, that's how dec hurt anyone, now as broken and with a record, its easily identifiable that I am the weaker candidate, input, or personality, look, or pers matter how positive I am, these are things you just don't complain about, aging is a process, I believe that the body repairs itself and h me, and raise hopes, and then disappoint or make promises, or serve to die, that's not the solution, dying is not the solution. Ive called can do for me, my record gets expunged 2020, Im not out of control, I may have lost it a few times, talking to myself, but Im under a l myself, I have no trust account.

Components to a Healthy Campaign ...

In order to run a successful campaign online and build a brand you have to first represent well what it is you seek to see in the world, t and based upon your long term potential will be deemed a desirable partnership in the future, just like marriage or any other business t and how you represent your cares in the world matters, and unless you seek to be a builder of change in the first place, don't go on cor are partaking at showing care for others during times of need, some are less obvious than most.

My chosen cares: (1) Politics (2) Academics (3) Spirituality (4) Womens Health (5) Mental Health (6) Blogging (7) Public Figurines (

Politics: I started watching CSPAN 2013, every morning and night, after leaving law school it was a way for me to keep busy and to s there was a Facebook passwords controversy, about whether your employers can ask employees for their Facebook passwords. I watch even flew to DC twice January 2013, and sat in court in session for 3.5 hours, to hear SCOTUS speak live! That was exciting. My first years, that was a treat. Of course while watching you become curious about Presidency and the road to Presidency, and how one filters eventually stands out. Two stood out to me Rand and Rubio, but apparently politics does not work that way, by speeches given on CS knowledge to run a Country, later working for a Real Estate Law Firm, Sports Law Firm, decided to Tweet, and met many people, eve in Westwood, I drank, once after having a Margherita in Westwood, I was found passed out in front of my apartment building, the nei remember was asking a guy standing by a car if he was an Uber and he said sure. I had a bruised knee and a busted chin, the lesson is after surviving an incident like that, and made to look worse, any later attachments with people made on the street only makes you loo men were running at me, across the street sprinted to the gas station and remember talking to them there, I still didn't have a ride home up in the next street walking up the hill. It doesn't matter how awake you are, you can still get hurt, another incident, while not intoxicated getting home, this was before Uber and Lyft, only cab stand was on Santa Monica Blvd, should've just walked and left.

Academics: As someone who graduated with departmental honors cum laude in Sociology, from University of Colorado, Boulder, it w one point in my Major, and a 3.6 overall GPA, that was before trying cocaine for the first time, and drinking upon turning 21. I was a s asking to see my paper and turning in the same exact paper as me, copied me, why he did that, who knows, thinking in a different sess as President of the Honor Society, and could've graduated early, had I not drank, and spent my last year retaking courses for course fo Fall 2007 to write my Thesis, that's were my passion for research and writing began. I was a crisis hotline counselor 2004, certified, an be able to do more to help victims of violence, studying for the LSAT beginning 2006 when I took my first LSAT in Denver Colorado outpatient Rehab at Boulder Community Hospital, and got clean and sober, should've focused on my studies, although making friends romantic life, and excel in school in order to get into graduate school, that lesson I learned the hard way.

Spirituality: I have been a very spiritual person for many years now, even attending a Shabbat service with my Father one Friday. The up, who counseled me while in the early stages of my recovery, was sent to Arizona and Klamath Falls once to stay with her, flown in get married not to sleep with too many men, and that if I continued to drink and do drugs would look like some of the patrons at the cl teeth. That's not how I wanted to look, why I continue to stay sober, sometimes I wonder that others having known your story or read those times, as though you've not learned your lessons, the only times we get lost generally disoriented and circle back, is when we have gone wrong, if something has gone wrong, until we acknowledge for ourselves what we have done that was wrong, and even upon acknowledgment be treated any differently then, as though more was expected of you, what when I was 21? (2006)

Women's Health: In beginning my career being an advocate to primarily women, on the hotline, I was still in the process of learning about mental health. Mental health issues was not one that stood out to me, only a few calls were by women who could not stop talking beyond the 20 minute mark. What was troubling them, I always let them talk until they were ready to leave the conversation, rarely would I cut someone off, at the time I either didn't have the privacy or the time to listen, but most of the time, sober, I was always available to lend an ear, and listen, which was not for myself, as having gone out and drank, and dated, and men escorting me home, experienced a different phase of life, separated from friends. At later points in time, when I was trying to undo what went wrong past, and not make them look bad now, if I was able to drink alone, and not blame anyone's fault. I don't think that much benefit was given to me out drinking alone, for some reason an edge toward me was already there. I don't need for that type of energy toward me, I would have 2 drinks max always, maybe a shot, in control.

Mental Health: It wasn't until my own experiences with mental health issues, that it became of issue to me, and to others around me, that something happens, and then you change, and as a result of bipolar live life differently, not my fault. I was never a functioning addict. So to be treated as one, well, and purposefully threw away their career, is not the case, my options became limited as a result of not having excelled in law school, lack of confidence and poor self esteem, and because I looked that way, was treated that way.

Blogging: Blogging became a way for me to speak whereas in private spaces complained about, as being too personally affecting, in a public space without the same degree of intensity, I could not anticipate having not have told my story before, once you are able to tell your story, it is emotionally sound, not in the moment upset, or still rattled, wondering what people are thinking or even worse become defensive, relate to you like the wrong one. It's my body my choice, I think coupled with the opinions of others, things look worse than they were. And its often not with it nonetheless. In a harmonious world, things like #slutwalk would be empowering, but in today's world, you are responsible for your choices, you want to be blamed as having made choices to keep going in life, sacrificing your good health, get tested.

Public Figures: Why become a public figure, not to insult those existing, but in order to speak one must have some kind of a platform where I grew up that would not be an appropriate pair of shoes to put on, as spokesperson to or for on behalf of, better to situate myself to speak about my experiences, as unrelated to their own, and any false lights brought upon me along the way, correct moving forward as time, studying and working. They seem to send you off in life as worse off before it gets that's bad, don't allow people to make you no conversation to have, someone who was well, got sick, by who knows what, and now trying to get better. The more you can simplify the problems of others, not delve too deep into the issues, and take sides, or blow things out of proportion and create sides.

Newspapers: I don't have a fascination with newspapers (yes you do!) -My Dad loves the news, and reads the paper everyday, yes I am at home daily my whole life, and see them in passing, you should really read more. They're very comforting to have around, I'm sure I am reading the paper everyday, if you liked CSPAN you'll love us, there's no wait time, good point. I really like the pictures, I remember watching as many papers as possible, that's as much of a history buff as I am, CSPAN ran a show on a company that archives news clippings, and which was ruined, the photo of an offender from the CO Shooting was placed among, why did someone do that to my website? I saw an obsession with [criminals] or OJ someone famous for "crimes" and then through that obsession, learn or the derivatives of knowledge from a base knowledge. My parents paid $30,000 a year for my college education, and $3,000/course for my law school education, there is no one's story, as taking hold of my course in life, or my outlook, which is based upon my education see, outlook.

Fitness: How you look is important, I've always gone to the gym growing up, I was a club soccer player and worked out at the gym in high school from soccer, where when I was obese, I'm sure everyone had a field day, flaunting ugly photos of me around. I'm not sure what that was like later in life, there were nice photos of me taken, but all my photos and messages from friends are gone, lost in the move or thrown away. My school diploma was thrown away, and all my high school yearbooks gone, and photo albums. I got into running in college, listening to music on the indoor track in the snow, around the basketball courts, for 40 mins max, and was in the 140s never that thin, only in the 130s when I was in college. My friend had visited me and was worried about me. I was distraught after a breakup, made friends, and was told to try cocaine. I was addicted, I already was prescribed adderall so a high functioning person, didn't need a boost, I just turned 21, drinking and getting into trouble including out with friends.

Love: Love has been a big part of my journey, through losses, addiction, failures especially, I'm never alone and always have a boyfriend. I don't correct my image or fix my image, but I think that only made things look worse, and made me look like a Lesbian version of Jonah Hill. I don't think the rumor mill, takes things too far out of context, that's not self love, to pleasure oneself, that's out of the fact that one cannot expect some unforeseen embarrassment about them, that the one who loves them cannot explain to them, at what point does your life not become seriously in life, but know your course, and allow others to treat you as they wish, we don't need red carpets in order to feel appreciated. People leave you alone and are happy for you, that is love, when people want to be around you, share time with you, and share idle time with you was amazing, but more recently, sitting outside staring up into the sky, and talking for an hour was really fun!

The bottom line is that you have to have some stencil of what you are about, and what you plan to deliver to your audience, and being a credible source for providing input or insight into that type of life, that journey, what it looks like, and how it feels, and how to grow that's the gift you have as someone who is well who had the privilege of being treated professionally most don't have access to medical therapy. It just looks bad, with a super long medical history, but I promise it looks worse than it was. However because it looked bad, when you should not let what others think affect you, and if people are thinking negatively of you or if there is negative energy out, no stay where you feel welcome, where you are not bothered, and where you fit in, stay in your age group. And if there is question as to your record is cleared (March 2020) keep applying for jobs, until you find one, and not be a burden to others.

Unhealthy Crushes ...

How and when do they start? Usually when we are not happy with ourselves, do we see our everything in another, and through that vision make others feel uncomfortable. You have to learn how to play things by ear, and allow things to happen on their own good timing, not just when you think the timing is right. Give people an opportunity to accept you or reject you, not all wish to be romantically involved with others, especially not in a public light. Yes I do think I have grown an unhealthy attachment to Ari Emanuel, after talking to him on messenger, and dishing to him about life, my dreams, and where I would like to be in life, am starting to believe again in the possibilities for me in life, whether or not that includes him, I think that would be a stretch. Its not just anti-gun violence we have in common, I have long been an advocate and member of Brady as a blogger, and promote their work from time to time on my blogs, the progress they have made and if they've ever needed support, where to call in. I think its important to be apart of your community. So what is it that you guys have in common? A TV Show was made about him, and I think that a show was about me, that was later cancelled. That would have to mean that I was famous in law school and that it was publicly acceptable to make fun of me in public for being a law student, while my best friend's Dad was in jail. Being made fun of publicly is a very difficult position to overcome, especially when its not deserved, I had a perfect record, and was 3rd in my class doing well, who you are in private romantically is really none of anyones business how often you date, or whether you date at all, and especially not deserved if with a long term boyfriend. You may wonder, but never let that get the best of you. Once you enter the public sphere as where I am now, you have somewhat control over how your image or likeness gets used, and can control how you look and appear to others. That's one of the reasons I started blogging, call it a bipolar delusion, but its nothing I haven't talked to the courts about expressing my concerns to them. Youre either on board and apart of this country, and allow things to happen to your image without saying anything, and eventually once you put your foot down and start asking questions, that's when you become the problem. They seem to have a nack at situating people in that way, make everything about someone, or make everything about something, or make everything about themselves. If youre not included its probably better not to be mixed in with the rich and successful, image wise, as theres not comparison, especially if you have not achieved success on your own first be too concerned with how and why others behave the way they do, or what has been expressed by them, whether or not it be of or concerning you. Youre usually last to find out when something is about you, that's you cannot control, what you can control, is how your present yourself in spite of things being about you or not, and be welcomed to the world or not, as normal. So long as you do not complain too much or become inappropriately prosecutorial toward others, theres no reason why you should not be allowed to wonder. Ive never thought that anything was about me, only now, cautious about it. Its not until you become someone or something of value that you begin to be more cautious about how your intellectual property is managed, and what is being done with the intelligences you have provided to others, sometimes that is not in your control, what others do with your working knowledge on these subjects, or what windows open up to them knowledge wise, and doors shut for your opportunity wise later on in life.

Going with the Flow ...

Sometimes things don't always work out in your favor, a joke, a comment, a thought, an idea, or any input you provide in shorthand, generally not sitting well with anyone who doesn't like you or who has grown accustomed to distrust you or to not empathize with you, seeing you as a weaker species of human as compared to them, I would tell them all people deserve compassion, and no matter how far people have fallen in life, and for whatever reasons they suffer no one deserves to die, not because of bullying and certainly not because of what other people think, be put in harms way, as labeled "mentally ill." I don't think that I deserve to have been labeled. I am educated, and only after having been labeled started hitting my head, for what reason my likes were removed from my website is besides the point, Im not a threat of harm to the wellness of others, it is others threatening my good health, and intruding upon my ability to stay well, violating my right to privacy. I live a very public life, and nowhere in private am I any different than I am in public, its only people needing to see more of, someone, or needing to know more about someone is why they are pried into, that information is between me and the police, who I frequently call, and not for dispute or the discretion of the general public to decipher as to the causes for my beliefs or interpretations, that's none of anyones business, how I survive, how I build trust, and how I managed to build a great foundation online of trust and stability in thought during tumultuous times, which has not been easy to do. Its not easy to gather a crowd, and its not easy to build a following, that keeps returning to continues to read daily, no matter what your days looks like, whether you are feeling strong and able, or experiencing disability and severe hardship in life, that's the type of continuity of care, I have been able to provide to my following, and likewise the compassion that they have been able to show for me, and unconditional rapport built online, can manifest itself into positives around us, throughout their lives, as they are able to help others struggling maintain positive thinking. Its not easy transitioning from school to work, or from alcoholism to sobriety, or from addiction to cessation, but overtime, over the years, you grow, and with that growth mature, sometimes there will be slip ups, we hope not, not everyone finds success in AA, I have not at most 6 month or a year. Just stay faithful to any set of principles, that bring you justice in life and keep you moving forward, and if that manifests itself in hatred toward me, so be it, if you think it justified to hate someone with mental health issues, as being the source of your own mental health issues, than you are sorely mistaken, as me in need of help, and in trying to get help, wrongfully accuse me of making any caretakers sick by my issues in life, than why worsen my set of conditions, already living separate, and force me to move home, to care for two cancer patients, with a record, and now a poor reputation, unable to get a job, how do you think I feel pressed for time, my Father has not been well, and my Mother has Cancer and need to work for her, I just wanted to finish law school and get a job, instead I got sued trying to build a blog. -Look forward to playing Studio City with my Dad! On a positive note.

Where does beauty lie? I used to think that we worked like candle sticks, lighting up. That if we are supposed to be good inside out, then what lights up when we light up, are our positive characteristics and traits that allow some of us to shine, and some of us to miss the mark, depending on where we are at mental health wise. I do think that mental health issues affect your overall beauty, some like to think that they can get away with anything, but eventually it all adds up, how you speak, how you behave, what your intake is, whether you drink or smoke, and how positively you speak of others, all of these things reflect in the positive or the negative upon you and determine the scales of your beauty. I've never been the prettiest, and have always struggled with my weight, soccer injuries, medications, hand injuries, you name it, there always seems to be something getting in the way of my health preventing me from maintaining a healthy weight, and going back to old habits and gaining the weight back. You really have to stay positive in spite of setbacks, and you certainly cant allow what others to think to interfere with your good health. It just so happens that Im dating someone from Croatia, a Biochemical Engineer with a PhD, who drives an M3 and a Porsche, my first fancy boyfriend, and Im overweight. Who would've thought that someone like him would like someone like me, or think that Im pretty. If so personality must be a big factor contributing to who is considered beautiful, not always the prettiest girls, get the most attentions in life, sometimes its is how well we carry ourselves, that we are able to climb into social circles in life and succeed, not just by who we know, but by how we are and how we make others feel around us, that's a gift in life, wellness, to make others feel good around you, is usually who we surround ourselves by. Never be too hard on yourself, I used to think that unless I was thin would I be able to date, and unless I was pretty would I be able to model, but boy have things changed, acceptance wise. Today even if youre plus size you can model, and even if youre not the prettiest you can date, look at me. I may not be the most put together blogger online with a fancy website, and model photos, but Im sure able to manage a monthly following of 8.3k viewers, and ranked 37, 818 in the US. That took a lot of hard work, bettering myself, until I became someone I was again proud of, I think that was the purpose for blogging, building a better me, not necessarily a bigger version of me online to present to the world. I suppose it happens through being an author you achieve fame, or through modeling professionally you become a recognized face, Im not yet at that point in my career, still writing and allowing my new audience to get to know me, as of this year grew. There were many people Im sure who knew me from high school, but that wasn't my target audience ever, rarely posting to Facebook links to my blog, in the beginning though they were there for me. It kind of gets to the point where you don't want to bother people, when you have something to say, or even share a photo, feel like youre bothering people, its best always to leave things up to the choice and control of your audience how well they want to get to know you, and on what basis, personally or professionally, I try to provide a little bit of both. As my following has changed so have the voices, I get voices, and so have my selfies, my face has sharpened up, Im not sure whether that's the new makeup I have invested in, probably. And also thanks to messenger, Ive been able to take selfies Im proud of, with their filters, prior to which I just took photos on my phone or on my computer. It takes awhile to get to know yourself, and what makes one beautiful or stand out from the rest, unique, still working on it.

Without Meds ...

Ive been without meds for 5 days now, I suppose it wouldn't hurt to write without medication, what could go wrong. I recently switched back to Adderrall and then relapsed on 5 beers at the bar, that was not my shining moment, and have since not been prescribed any day meds. Waiting to hear back from my previous doctor and made an appointment to see a new doctor. The reason for this change was that it cost $250 every time I see my Psychiatrist, which my parents cannot afford -need to start working soon. Just doing my best to stay positive, have been in bed resting, but miss writing, and working on my dissertation. Ive gotten so used to functioning only on meds that I forget what its like to work without medication. I guess I'll be going back on Vyvanse and Abilify if Im lucky, I haven't been the most stable since switching meds. Usually when things start going haywire the police are first to know, I start to call them frequently for talk therapy, my current therapist is out sick for the moment. Just be patient, when switching doctors, and do your best not to end up like me, "left out in the cold when it comes to finding a new provider to meet your needs." [1] Note that "Mutual trust and respect are very important between a doctor and patient." [2] Its taken awhile to build trust with my doctors, especially to prescribe me any stimulants, given my history with addiction, it would be an unfortunate loss, to have to find a new doctor at this point, but I simply cannot afford to continue seeing my current Physician and the new doctor was only a DO and not equipped to manage my mental health issues, and could not prescribe me Abilify. Just laying low at the moment, thank you for your patience, look forward to my next post!

When Everything Makes Sense ...

There will hopefully come a time in your life when you wake up and everything makes sense, occurring while reading, and while writing from your own life, whats troubling you. Its when we are too hard on ourselves our outlooks change, and dispositions in life change, turning into the friend in need instead of the friend who advises, and turning into the person corrected instead of the one observing the behavior of others, how quickly that changes, when you do not stay on track. Lifes not just about luck, I love how they blame cancer diagnosis as "having bad luck" (sarcasm) to me that's not bad luck, that's illness, that's powerlessness, and that's suffering beyond your control, which is not always our fault. Boy has modern medicine changed, what used to be kept private, are now stories to be told, to empower, but there is a price to be paid, unless you can stay well does your story benefit others. We all struggle with mental health issues from time to time, but lets not overgeneralize things, as though we all suffer from the same ailments in life, and subject to dying just as others have due to drugs and alcohol, no one wants to be that person categorized as a risk to care for, on their way out, we all do our best to be successful, and whether or not we can weather these storms, that's not in our power always, to care or not to care, and sometimes in caring we get hurt, that's normal. What to do when things don't make sense, jenniferhadley.com suggests "... when confronted with challenging situations and circumstances that are non-sensical, we must turn to faith in Spirit and a willingness to KNOW that we are loved and being cared for, even when it doesn't feel like it." [1] To me this means doing ones best to stay well in spite of the sufferings of others, it would be wrong in those cases to further ones problems in life, or go backwards, and not move forwards, sometimes you are called upon in life to be a support system, especially if you are not one directly affected by the problems of others more able than most, and with that power, a gift is given to you to care, and to show that care in ways, that benefit both you and others. We can't always be that person, sometimes when directly affected, this inhibits our best decision making, working from feelings from within, rather than from feelings of compassion for others, thinking more about ourselves, our health, and in the defensive not helping to provide solution to the problems as faced by others, as the person who has come out of illness, and able to share their journey and path to recovery and what has worked for them. Just stay steady. You are but one person in the grander scheme of things, unless you want to be a powerful influence in society, then that can only happen unless you are well, I know this given my standing as a public speaker, until able to communicate to the times in a way that's relevant, and doesn't just apply to me, or my own viewpoints, are others able to read and comprehend, without feeling the same or similar discomforts that I have achieved in life, trying to make my way in life. Building a website was my way of building a place, that I could go back to and perfect, similarly we work in that way, bettering ourselves everyday until presentable, there's really no excuse for what people think of you, if in the negative just ignore them and always do your best. They say that people's problems with you are a manifestation of their own lack of wellness, and if you so fail to provide a positive voice of reason to them during turmoil, then so be it, you are clearly then not a source of empowerment to them, but seen as someone who threatens their wellness, as someone who has bipolar, has overcome illness, and is now doing well and well liked. For what reasons am I well liked? I am (1) approachable (2) likeable (3) relatable (4) well kept (5) presentable (6) detail oriented (7) hardworking (8) never gives up (9) shares from where I am, not pretending to be something that I am not. You cannot lie about your condition, especially as a writer, everything shows, and gets read into, you can only improve, and as your condition improves, you will notice that your writing improves also, why I enjoy writing - Always do your best therefore not to be influenced by the lack of wellness of another lose faith in society as a whole, and do your job to continue to be a good critical thinker accepting and rejecting theories about life, based upon what works for you. No one's ideas in life can influence you in the negative health wise, bipolar is not contagious, mind you.

Don't Take Things Personally ...

Sometimes people get so busy with their own lives, that they don't have time to stop and reply, in the grand scheme of things, you can only put yourself out there so many times, to make a good first impression, before you are responded to, sometimes we are ready to take on new opportunities in life, and sometimes, we have more room to grow before we are able to take on certain responsibilities in life. It's all a matter of experience, and time, continue to grow and mature and spread your wings, it never hurts to try, it's okay to send requests, inquiries, emails, and make those initial contacts, from a business perspective, when the time is right and you are doing well you will know it, partnerships will go through, applications accepted, and as your numbers go up, don't stop continuing to branch out, and connect with others, you never know who you'll meet along the way. It's when you have yet to blossom, that things don't happen for you in life, either you're not ready mentally, or others do not see you as fit yet to be a representative of their best interests, that's business, it's all about representation. Always do your best to be presentable, online and in real life. Don't exhaust your resources in life, you can always come back to things when you're ready, sometimes it's better to wait and be prepared, than to subject yourself to too many rejections early on, and fill your plate, before you yourself are ready to meet the challenges that await, if you are not yet able to perform, and keep up with a daily schedule, than applying for jobs, that would require you to meet the demands of the day, might seem like a far stretch, don't just apply to apply, apply when you're ready. Taking things personally, can be a sign of low self-esteem, as one blogger explains moneyhabitmuse.com, "Which means you always long for others' approvals of everything you do and say." [1] However, to be successful online blogging, you can't always wait for the perfect time to share, meaning you may not be exactly where you want to be in life, but that doesn't mean don't write, or that you don't have something valuable to say, or some valuable input or insight, that could be helpful to someone else, trying to get discovered or find themselves. I have been blogging for years, and just this year started earning 300-400 likes per post, have 7.6k monthly viewers on Pinterest, A Top 100 Personal Development Blogger on Feedspot, and Ranked 38,674 on Alexa, that's a big deal to me to be up 803k in traffic and 212,029 in the world, I'm not sure where I'm headed in life, that's the funny part, job wise and career wise, but I know that I love to write, want to continue working on my books, and graduate from law school. I think what makes me an attractive blogger is that I have been through a lot, and that in spite of my mental health issues, have battled through my worst days and come out normal. That's not to say, that I don't get sick every now and then, especially if I do not keep up with a schedule or stay task oriented and manage my symptoms, I can easily go haywire. I think at the time, more privacy has been helping, less daily tweeting, and longer posts regarding my thoughts. In addition, I have a pen pal I check in with daily, a therapist I see weekly, and a psychiatrist/general practitioner I see now monthly. I guess I'm pretty high maintenance. I used to be very independent, lived alone 2004-2017, a good student, and always had a job, but ever since I got bipolar, and my relationships have not been working out, I have gone in and out of depression, which is why I started blogging, decided to put my heart into something that won't leave me, something that can grow, and something I can get better at and that can stay with me, something to check on, something to keep track of, and something to build, why I blog.

For the Most Part ...

For the most part, I am doing better in life, when I try to be social, its mostly reading into things too much which has not happened for awhile, whereas the old me would assume is about me, and take offense, and leave space, Im sure that the issues faced by others, are about them especially if I do not know them, you can only take responsibility for so much, especially not the health of others who you are not close with, nor share any intimacies with, maybe its best to stay home, never try past the point of rejection to be friends with others, that's the main lesson, you only get one try at getting along with others, life is short, most do not have the patience to accept people into their lives who they do not trust as being sober or with enough time to be considered a worthwhile share or input, I got sober 2003, stopped smoking weed, and do not drink, I only drank alcohol 2006 and 2013, but Im not sure whether that's an important credential, or makes a difference what is wrong is wrong, it doesn't matter how much experience you have as being well, once you get sick, it's a matter of getting well and staying well, who thinks what should make no difference, always be compassionate and patient, if you think too much about what could happen in the negative, low and behold things will work out for you in that way, as a manifestation of how you feel about yourself and based upon what you assume others think of you, not perform to your best, Im not sure whether that's a believed karma deserved, or whether that's naturally occurring, whether there are people and characters who they wish to categorize you as, and situate you until broken to see how you respond for the better or for worse, I don't think its very nice to be made an experiment of, I would never do that to others, team up on one person as stupid. That's not a fair assessment, of my cares, or what work I have accomplished thus far in my career, sure I wish there were fewer incidences in which others are harmed, but it does not need to be mentioned to get others to stop eachother from harming one another, that's a social issues per state, not necessary to share social standings within a state, as cornerstones for issues to be read by the masses and make determinations from, as references when interpreting people within their states or around them, each state is different, the Country is a big place, and so is the World and life itself, not meant to be about people, a single persons story affecting the treatment of others, as though each builds from connections to, I think being unique is what makes people stand out, not what makes them like, and I think its by getting along well with others, that one feels complete, and its by working hard one achieves, and earns paychecks. These are all basic life skills to have, a desire to live on schedule, wake up work stay motivated, loss of motivation occurs when stopped in your tracks, called out on something past in error, or correcting you when no corrections need be made. I think its okay to have friends, unfortunately I think its better for me to not come out of this, and just work for the LAPD, and work on establishing more trust, and accountability before reintegrating and becoming a burden upon others, as though I still need fixing, I really need to be independent in order to feel safe, I don't need help from anyone, I keep to myself, look at the ground, a quiet person, there is a reason for that, because its upon acknowledgment or responding you get hurt, for me its better to not have any conversations with anyone, I was a very nice person as a result I look stupid, and because I drank and got mad at myself, and relapsed on cocaine got suicidal, that's not my fault, I was an excellent girlfriend and friend. Not anyones fault.

When Your Feelings Are Hurt ...

When your feelings are hurt, its easy to misread things as about you, or contributing to sources of illness around you, pointing out whats going wrong is not the solution to bettering your perspective and the wellness of others around you, some things are better left unsaid. Not that these points are important points of discussion as it relates to the issues faced by others, its not always necessary to state, and as coming from you, be voiced, sometimes it is your place to lead discussions about, and sometimes its not your place given your standing appropriate, to provide a voice of reason, especially not in the defensive, that just opens another can of worms, in terms of the degree of sensitivity you are able to provide upon addressing subjects and then read into as whether having suffered or shown signs of remorse, as though you have been wrong or been wronged in the past, accusatory toward others, or pointing blames, as playing victim, based upon your current condition. Its not an easy subject, breakups, and its not an easy topic rejections, and theres no easy solution to understanding who how and why anyone to a transaction looks bad, or ends up worse off, and why as though thought deserved at the time, they were approached, and coerced into sharing intimate time with. Not all end up better off in life having known people, and some people wish they would have lived life without having ever known a person, that's the purpose for suit, to justify the silence and attribute it to something now identifiable defective in a person, labeling them an "unwanted connection." It just so happens that in anticipation of your recovery, or road to wellness, as others watching or overlooking your progress, not knowing you as well, and based upon what they hear, and given your record, pre-determine whether you deserve to move forward in life, and establish new relationships or friendships, which is the phase I am in right now, and which will continue to be determined in February, upon graduating, while looking for job placement and acceptance. Im not sure, and just because I am talking about what I think is happening, doesn't mean that it is happening, and just because I feel like I look bad, doesn't mean that everyone thinks the same or are in discussions about me, as to what is defective or wrong with me, to justify additional hardships or suffering in life, as though to serve as retribution to those who have passed through my life, and been affected by having known me, as though my condition doesn't directly affect me already, and assuming they care or cared and as attached affected. Obviously if you have known someone, and been close to them, it hurts to see them not well, that's not my intent when not well to cause harm to anyone who cares about me, that's not in my control, the meds I get put on, and how intelligent or articulate I am able to be at that point in my life, and manage my thoughts and condition, you may never have the same life you once led as having been a private person, once you go public, and that's something you realize after you decide to participate online and write, its not of the same consequence to everyone, but if you are attached to someone like OJ, and grew up best friends with their Daughter, then yes, proving that you are the disappointment, relinquishes them from any blame upon further separation as having anything to do with your current suffering or suicide attempt previously. That's really no one else's business to further negative interpretations of me, as not meaning well, or not doing my best to warn or explain to others, that their actions or behaviors or words are hurting my feelings, people who hurt your feelings, generally are concerned with themselves, and probably now as learned do not intend to insult you or put you down as less than by being nicer to who you are with, as compared to how accepting they are upon talking to you individually. That's based upon knowing you, thinking or assuming that that is the cause for separations, or for you leaving relationships, and testing to see if something past, results in the same set of conditions again, presently, as dating someone, being ignored, and to see how you respond if another hits on someone you like, with you present, and upon viewing the mental health issues that arise, determine whether you are a threat to anyone's health, and whether expressed anger online was directed toward anyone specifically, I posted flyers everywhere, I am kind enough to inform people thinking they were my friends, as though they would care, and how Im feeling based upon interactions experienced, it was me that contracted carcinoma cancer and was dying on risperidone in bed all day sleeping, obviously with a cocaine relapse initiated by my then boyfriend, I became worse, and as worse, not seen as a victim, to being approached by strangers in the street, or found passed out in front of my building, after one margarita, with a busted chin, and bruised knee, a call made to my mom from my phone. (Theres something about her I dont like: Shes on meds, I dont drink, I have bipolar, I got suicidal by rumor that I am then suddenly sick everytime my numbers are up and my Facebook account accessed by many phones, drains me, why not to tell people if you have cancer as that just speeds up the process of illness kicking in, the goal is to live life, not put people on lists on whos going or staying, treat them differently or others as disappointment, the best way to keep people alive and well around you, is to stay well and be active and get jobs is what Ive learned not by hitting my head, when Im not living life in my room, nothing around me feels safe, and everything feels off, and the more easily I get put down in life as small or immature, or not confident, this year I worked on confidence, thats for work, not for purposes of intimidating others with my wellness, and then treated as though I show no remorse or not a victim, dont feel sorry for people who F up in life, thats the label that was put on me, so that even if I was raped or attacked in the street, no one will know, no one will care, and everyone will seem justified, and look victim to me as separate from me, whether it be a bar or an ex-boyfriend, thats their choice to not like you, and as said out loud only makes you look worse, or makes others feel better, thats not whats causing me suicide others who feel better at my expense or hardship thought deserved, people achieve wellness in different ways, the goal is to live, irrespective of what others think of me, and if they have a problem with me, they can take it to court I cant afford medical care or an attorney, to be honest I would rather write about something else, than one bad connection turning all connections bad in life, as addressing all in response to the consequences of one failed connection in life), I dont threaten others, Ive been hurt, why I look funny, and others have contributed to making me look funny, my head is small misshaped now, and body huge 190lbs, thats not my fault, face flat or shapely, if I get voices I call the police, its not necessary for me to go to AA meetings, Im not there for political purposes, or to feel apart of, I have a blog, a home, and can get a job on my own, its not necessary to go anywhere for help, as that just burdens others who dont feel compelled to care about anyone who has caused harm to themselves [removed - graphic story about self-harm, spoke to the police].

Quit Being Stubborn ...

One of the first steps to overcoming any negative thinking is to quit being stubborn, that means stuck in a thought, a viewpoint, a perspective, a series of understandings, by bits of information, by who you know, or by what you think, remain the same, theres very little opportunity for growth when it comes to your outlook in life. A meeting of the minds occurs, where in the event there is a problem, one is able to assemble new thoughts in response to current turmoil, that either quells, justifies, or challenges the sides creating the voices that get relayed among us, its upon who you connect to in life, you hear opinions, never obsess over the negative opinions of others, not always the best voices for insight when it comes to finding stability and achieving peace of mind during difficult times, or peaceful times that turn difficult by recalling recollecting or giving power to those opinions past held toward you or others. If you've done nothing wrong, don't waste time thinking about why people don't like you, recalling your whole life out loud, for everyone to pick apart to determine where there was a wrong and who was wronged, that just subjects you to harm, if you are already not liked by them, they will turn any moment of weakness past, and treat you as though you were (1) in need and (2) knowingly needing others took advantage of their wellness by (3) labeling you mentally ill and turning you into a parasite so that (4) you get rejected in any future relationships as being the one in need and the one to whom upon connecting with a harm results to ones reputation, that was the purpose for suit, to cause a separation between me and interfere with my ability to work and to provide for myself, that's not harassment, so explain to me why every relationship Ive ever had has not been initiated by me and been initiated by another, that's someone coming into my life and me allowing for that information from me to be processed to them, that's my choice, later rejections upon knowing someone, is a difference in opinion or based upon connections, seeing someone as below them, if one is on their own, theres no need to further ruin their opportunities for wellness in the future, if one is sick or on meds, and is doing their best, then one should not be treated as a loser, simply because of who they have been surrounded by or friends with if not of high social standing. When stubborn its easy to allow these sides to win, sides occurring in your mind, not existing, apparent to others, or in power, until you give a voice to what has caused you harm in life, and enable those reading to interpret for themselves what has happened, who has been affected, what went wrong, the extent to which a person was wronged, how one was punished, the purposes for punishment, and the goals achieved, to make someone look like an offender, and to continue to make everything look as though that is the case about a person, so that they continue to be treated as an offender or a reject, its my body my choice, and Ive been offended as a result of "how things look" as worse than what I was sued for, given STDs and put on many anti-psychotics, as though I am someone who should disappear or deserves to die, I care about myself, whether or not anyone else cares about me, its not my identity that is causing harm to the understanding of life or people or affecting their life expectancy, I do my best to live life and do everything I am told, and seek treatment when needed, if someone wants to talk to you talk to them, if someone doesn't want to talk to you then don't talk to them, never wonder why is the main lesson, you cannot convince someone you are a good person, if they think youre a criminal or someone who has been sued and labeled mentally ill, a threat to their wellness, eventually you have to stop convincing yourself of why people are hurting you, so that it does not continue, and get well, so long as you are well no one can hurt you, and especially not with 800k fans reading everyday, 2000+ people reading daily, and ranked 38,000s in the US, a top website in the Country and newsfeed, with 6.8k monthly viewers and growing in popularity. That's how important I am to me, how important I am to my family, and how embarrassing it is for those who did love or care for you, to see you look bad or proven wrong in life, its my vagina, its my health, and its my right to be heard, and its no ones business my hygiene or the number of people Ive hooked up with, when, and whether under the influence of substances. I'm allowed to date, that doesn't make me a slut, if given the silent treatment, don't defame me, simply because I do not obsess over whys or become upset, and move on in life, that's my right to not be bothered by others, don't later hurt me, so that I look bad cant move on in life, as though youre doing others a favor, as though Im going down anyways, Im a Law Student! (Re: My locked meeting, with a flyer on the door, me being hospitalized taken to the hospital twice police called someone filed a "missing persons report" pulled over and handcuffed in public, dated a sponsor who was younger than me, and a street by Staples Center called "Blaine" now, don't label me Kobe Bryant, because you think its funny to compare a girl to someone who was wealthy and successful, who was accused of rape, and similarly situate things to look like Im an unwanted connection in life, take it to court, stop defaming me, stop bullying me, stop making me look bad, and stop treating me poorly, its my choice to live, and my choice to die, its my choice to take meds, its my choice to go to the ER).

Losing Weight ...

Im hoping this year to lose the weight and to keep the weight off, I once lost 50lbs running back in 2015, my goal was to be 30 and fit, but I still was not happy with myself and self-harming. Just because you lose weight does not mean that your mental health issues will go away, or that all your self-esteem issues will be solved, "the reality is, you're still you." [1] Weight loss is no doubt a process, you have to exercise daily and diet, and stick to it, the minute you stop, and go back to old routines, is how you gain the weight back. For awhile I would blame the medications which contributed to the weight gain and over-eating, but it all comes down to diet, you cannot be eating cookies and junk food and expect the have a flat stomach, and look fit, some of us just weren't born thin or with a fast metabolism. I have an athletic and voluptuous shaped body, so when I gain weight I feel really frumpy, its not a comfortable feeling, walking into job interviews especially not feeling at my best, or being told I could lose a few pounds once I get the job. That's just people being honest with you, telling you what they think needs to happen for you in life, in order for you to be a happier person, and to look and feel your best, if not able to maintain positive momentum moving forward. Even my new boyfriend wants me to lose weight, never let yourself go. If you have suffered mental health issues in the past while losing weight, you're not alone, according to shape.com, "the physiological and psychological side effects of weight loss that are powerful enough to make you feel downright miserable.” [2] You may be getting better sleep, but still feel irritable, you may be getting your shape back, but as a perfectionist still feel like you could be molded better, the journey never stops once you get into fitness, its all about balance, be patient with yourself, and don’t be too hard on yourself. Making a decision to lose weight is a big decision and pat yourself on the back for it, “Change is always difficult, even when it's a healthy change. If you feel like giving up, think about all of the reasons why you're doing this that really matter to you.” [3] Becoming a healthier and happier version of yourself requires daily discipline and practice, get your routines down, and don’t quit when you lose the weight, that’s when its time to keep going a refine your intake, or change up your workout routine, you can always workout less but maintain your diet, don’t workout less and go back to your old eating habits, or workout the same and go back to your old eating habits, how I went from losing weight to gradual weight gain over the course of 3 years, I was once under 130lbs and then made it up to 190lbs, gaining 50-60lbs has been very depressing to say the least, I still run and ran a half-marathon, and took meds as directed, but that didn’t seem to make a difference, on Abilify, which is why I recently stopped taking the med and lost 10lbs, it’s a lot of work to lost weight, and whats even more difficult to comprehend is putting the work in, and not eating correctly, and not losing the weight, that’s just wasted energy, or is it? You learn overtime what works best for you, I highly recommend doing some research before you begin your weight-loss journey, so you know what youre doing and understand the process, not just the fact that muscle eats fat and muscle needs protein and carbs turn to fat and so does sugar, that’s pretty much all I knew, so I went cardio cardio burning calories, eating less and less, and eventually it became an addiction, shrunk, but never toned up without weights, it wasn’t until I started doing free weights that my arms shrunk, for the first time, skinny arms! I was so proud of myself. Be efficient, learn from my mistakes, and good luck!

In Sobriety ...

In sobriety, you’ll feel a lot of pressure to be normal, and in trying to be normal, wonder if at a later point you can go back to drinking don’t. If all your problems were the result of your drinking then its probably best not to engage in any activities that brought you down in life. For the most part, I have been doing well maintaining a regular sleep schedule and managing a now very successful blog ranke 38,049 in the US on Alexa, and a Top 100 Personal Development Blogger on Feedspot. You just have to keep moving forward. What does normal mean? “Normative means that what’s normal is what lives up to the norms, the standards.” [1] That could mean different things depending on who you are: having a job, having a boyfriend/girlfriend, having lots of friends, all things I struggle with at the moment. You have to be happy with what you have in life, to enjoy the moment. Do you feel good enough? What could be going better for you in life? Companionship is so important to me. Although I have ventured far away from normal, when it comes to who I have friended in life, so far so good, maintaining a normal sleep schedule, and staying motivated in life with messenger. I’m not sure how important it is to keep a selfie log of your progress, health wise, for me, it has been an eye opening experience, to see myself go from messy to sharp looking, Im not sure how that happened, but I must be taking good care of myself. Running everyday, ran a half-marathon last year, and trying to lose 40lbs, not sure how long that will take, but in order to get a job I think that will help to be more presentable, and my boyfriend wants me to lose weight too. Don’t be too hard on yourself, especially while in recovery, you’ll go through a lot of changes in life, especially as you get better and better at managing your symptoms and emotions when it comes to being in recovery and/or having mental health issues. You’ve probably wandered away from family and friends, and have a lot of lost time to make up for in life, don’t get too frustrated, where are you now, what are you doing, what could you be doing better, are you feeling well today, why are you not feeling well, do you miss someone, why do you miss someone, do you feel disappointed, why do you feel disappointed. Its okay to ask yourself questions in life and journal about it or go over things with a therapist or in an AA meeting, that’s pretty much what I have been doing, and have a much better head on my shoulders these days. Probably a very unhealthy crush on Ari Emanuel, but I think for the most part, I’m doing well, think of him often, and pen paled him. Addiction is one of my biggest problems. I already have a boyfriend, but feel like we have a lot to talk about, so talking.

Don't Define me by My Past ...

That's inappropriate to pry into the lives of others, or to search through their recordings of their lives and their thoughts, if done thoughtfully, in a worse condition bring about to get them to portray themselves in a way that benefits a poor outlook of them their future and their current well being. That was a joke "Queen B" not in reference to any movies, nor in reference to purposes for flyers, as being like a scene from a movie, as thought I carry some immature animosity toward anyone past, I moved on, I put my free period next to lunch and slept everyday my senior year in college, got into college in December, rolling admission, Im not confrontational nor combative, don't bring up any moments in my life, and try to plague me now, as whether I have current feelings about or lingering that are influencing my behaviors or motivations now in life, I am beyond that I am doing my best to live each day as it is given to me, someone who gets suicidal doesn't have time to carry resentments, or to lament about the past, or have time to recollect memories from their upbringing, that's because they have been put in a worse off position in life, to live life moving forward from now, that is to protect people from being mentioned past as having contributed to any current conditions now existing. I understand that, how and why would it be necessary to bring up anything from high school, those issue were dealt with accordingly, its really none of anyones business how I live my life, or what I think of my high school experience, for all you should care, those were the best years of my life, besides realizing my academic potential while in college and getting good grades, a 3.2 in high school and a 3.236 in college and a 2.1 in my JD and a 2.85 in the LLM, and at 3.6 in my Paralegal Certificate Program, I was a steady and stable person, with my future ahead of me clean and sober, drinking only on occasion, not an addict prescribed 2 adderralls a day and no night meds, don't compare my condition now, or achievements in life as though in the past I benefited in a negative way from others defriending me, and that those friendships now gone, have given me any boosts in life, or motivations to better myself, I am a good person, I have nothing to prove to anyone, life is not a competition nor a popularity contest, its about wellness and being a good friend, and if you cant manage that much, you separate from others, and need alone time to regroup, date, focus in school, get a job, have a career to date and socialize. Im popular now because Im a writer, Im a positive person, and I don't over expose myself online in compromising ways that turn off my audience or make them think any less of me, that's why they return otherwise I would be but a traffic stop online, to view and leave, as ordinary, not interested in seeing my progress. That's not imitation, for someone else to be successful who has been previously associated to the OJ Simpson Family, why bring that up, to devalue me as unimportant or trying to be like imitation and send me down in life, so that others can achieve without question as being compared to me, or having made fun of me, who cares what peoples motivations in life are, to control outlooks or storylines, who cares? Its not your life, its my life, and if you don't want to be associated to me, then stay away don't read, and don't complain upon exposure to me, that my telling of my life affects your feelings is its nothing to do with you, and its not your life, and no ones in my life, no one can complain. Its my life I have to live that was destroyed all my hard work devalued, and have to start over in life.

Sometimes You Do Your Best ...

Others will always think it justified to put you down in life so long as they think you deserve to suffer hardship in life. If you are someone without friends, or not in a relationships, on your own, you will be second guessed in life irrespective of your status as a student or unemployed, it takes being a member of society to function as apart of, and unless you can explain or defend yourself, as not being as low as you are perceived to be, will it occur that acceptances of you be granted. For whatever reasons people give up in life, the purposes for blogging is not to detail my demise, or what was thought of me, given my standing in school, or whether or not close to family and friends at the time I became ill on my own, that's really no ones business, the causes for my bipolar, that's not for the public to decipher my thoughts for the purposes of criticism or for proving mental illness, that's for the Courts and the LAPD to decide, who I call regularly to check in with, whenever Im not feeling well. It seems that opinions of me grew out of hand, and became sicker and sicker on my own, and not understanding why I was being bullied, or picked apart, medicated, until incapacitated, and not my usual self motivated and hardworking achieving in life. Once declared someone of lesser value in life, it feels as though everyone takes the side of the one appearing well, and treats you as someone to be embarrassed by sharing that sentiment with them, not understanding all that you went through on medications, and everything you went through as single, and in recovery from drinking symptomatic with bipolar. Eventually talk therapy helps, or even companionship to lift your spirits in life, but that's an earned privilege to be close to people in life again, post failure. That's when everyone best interests are taken into consideration determining whether a person is allowed to move forward in life, Im very loyal to my friends and to my family, not someone whos interests change. Im not a social climber, nor believe in social status as a means to achieve happiness, you either have friends in life or you don't, and if you choose to live a private life, then that's how you will be judged as someone with less than in life, and questioned, that seems to be important having friends, someone without friends, is looked at as a failure, or as though they deserved it or worked their way into a depression suffering losses due to their own inability to be successful in life and live a good life. Just let go, and not allow lack of acceptance of you to turn into resentments toward you, as you get better, it may and will always be difficult to be happy for someone who is deemed to be a source of concern or embarrassment, everyone has their own sense of pride in life, and if you didn't fit in to begin with, fitting in later as a blogger, or comedian online, is not beneficial to re-building rapport, as respected by others. You have to take life seriously in order to be accepted or forgiven for your shortcomings in life, eventually if you do not recover or improve people see you as a liability, or a burden, someone in need, that is to be taken care of, not able to achieve on their own, that's why your family is hard on you, to correct what's going wrong before it gets worse, that's to not send you off into the company of those who care but could care less if you get sick or end up worse off in life, that's just a system of sociability the well stick together, and when not well barely anyone is around to help you, often giving you the silent treatment. To know better is to achieve well no matter what your circumstances are without help from others, the needier you become the less well you seem as dependent upon social cues and reassurances from others for affirmation that things are okay, how quickly you will be reminded that you are nothing, once not accepted or deemed to be untrustworthy or unprofessional for your lack of ability to stay well and make progress in life. Life changes start within you, acceptance and forgiveness comes later. And for whatever reasons people were hard on you, that's because they once thought you were someone who was going to be successful, who complained online, and then seen as someone who is not put together in control of their thoughts, feelings, and emotions, above you in life, allow people to be above you, and if they live separate lives from you, no matter how close you are to them, so be it, even if they are your boyfriends, some are just not willing to compromise their own needs for space to accommodate your neediness upon becoming in need of them. Once you become co-dependent you have to untrain yourself and learn how to be stable on your own again, able to talk yourself through your problems, not be reliant upon others for stability, that includes safety needs, belongingness needs, and while seeking employment, you either have something to offer, or you don't, otherwise don't apply if you can't manage to stay well. That's the difficulty of overcoming a past that doesn't believe in you, so that no matter where you go or what you achieve in life, you carry the baggage of inconsistencies to your record, if you had a perfect track record, and always took care of health responsibly seeking treatments as directed and taking meds as prescribed, then there is no reason why one should not be able to make a full recovery, lose weight, get their health back in order, and work again.

Justifications for Hardship ...

You can't control what others will think of you when you are on your own and have no one to talk to, or assist you with your thought processes, enlighten you, correct, or make better ones outlook in life, as you mature and become an adult you are expected via your education to build a solid understanding of how to think, behave, and rationalize your outlooks in life, so that you can function among others in society as a normal member of society, in perfect standing, and if tainted, better yourself until you feel as well as, not falter, or become worse off. That is the benefit of those who have not experienced illness requiring medication, with their ability to control their outlooks and interpretations with access and tools for understanding beyond one person viewpoint unaffected, that's how things should be, unless a personal attack toward you or anyone close to you, as my family has been attacked online by blogs 2009 prior to my suicide attempt, threatened to speak, what I remember from my research online, looking into the past, while applying for jobs on google.com, looked up my name which was cached to a deposition. Don't then pile up my life accordingly, after I have already suffered hardship, and take my place in life, and earn the privilege to stand in my shoes, as though one has lived as long as I have through controversy and suddenly thrust into things, and made ill, as I have become ill in the past, its negative attentions in life, without defense, and negative assumptions about, that push things further along without repair, and until someone is harmed, do the consequences for misinformation and rumor, get accounted for, whose life expectancy has suffered that's not "bad luck" to situate someone as worse off in life, then sue me as though I'm the problem, I already have mental health issues, don't set me worse off in life while under the care of physicians with health insurance, given risperidone shots, and because I don't look the part nor thin, or pretty or with a fancy job, get treated as less than until my life is shortened when put in the wrong hands in life, sent over my edges in life, aggravated and put in discomfort, that's not being street, to get a refund for a cocaine purchase, for someone else's interest purchased, how that relapsed happened in westwood, I'm sorry if I became mentally ill afterward posting flyers, that's was a highly traumatizing experience, to be left with a dead cell phone, stuck on sunset boulevard, texts ignored, and offered a ride home by a stranger who stuck his finger in my vagina, I told him I have a boyfriend, and he stopped, when I looked his D was out, and had told my boyfriend what happened, and things weren't the same afterwards, at the time I was on birth control, as preferred by him, that was my first partner without a condom. I almost got full blown ovarian cancer, whose fault that is doesn't matter at this point, because I was punished, even though I had $4000 worth of surgery, twice under anesthesia, to remove carcinoma cancer cells from my uterus, that was a very traumatizing experience, and to get through it, and get my positive energy back, with voices, ran, sometimes even talking to myself, thinking I was being recorded, it was a very traumatizing period in life, and lost 50lbs, to be hurt and to not know who hurt you is very troubling, psychologically, you lose a lot of trust in life and go into isolation and get blamed for your problems as bringing it upon yourself, if you allow those beliefs toward you to continue, you become the actress to the opinions of others, it takes a real solid understanding of yourself and a positive outlook in life in spite of mishaps, to continue to make progress, and see clearly through all the negativity toward you and taunting, until you change and get better do things around you change and hopefully by then, still surrounded by people who love you, when you wake up, in appreciation for the life you have.

My Thoughts on Twitter ...

At certain points in time, its helpful to have a place to share your thoughts, somewhere with the potential to be distributed to others via mentions or hashtags, is helpful. What social media is for, sharing work, or articles, completed projects. I think at this point in time, sharing incomplete thoughts, or being creative with my delivery of ideas, is not helpful moving forward and makes me look like someone who is self-entertaining, as a means to avoid boredom, without understanding my position, or feeling compelled sometimes to share in that way. Im not sure for what reasons, I feel compelled to explain my personal history, I think at this point people are mostly concerned with their own health, as well as the health of others, doing their best to maintain stability, and clarity of thought, which is why creative prose is very disorganizing to process on its own, and longer prose is a preferred method of delivery at this time. Usually when one is able to summarize for themselves and see a bigger picture on their own, they feel best, rather than be told short bits of information, as memorized, and then apply that information to historical timelines, to determine faults. That would be putting myself under a microscope, and if so, in a disorganized way be so presenting. The purposes for blogging and writing a book, have been to share in a way that is helpful, not in a way that brings up the past, or clarify incidences, if punishments have already been rendered. Im not assuming that people tactfully send you off in life, until youre on your own, and when on your own, and make poor decisions, if drinking or using, get sent further along a track toward failure, how the police pick you up, as lost and disoriented, they can usually tell first who has been rejected as normal from society, usually unkempt, after running, which is why I went shopping and started wearing makeup and gained 50lbs back, that was my way of giving up in life. So to then send me voices and further sabotage my good health or ability to get well would be to see if mentally ill by voices, whether I hurt myself or others, that would again be trying to get rid of someone, for what purposes, is it anyones business to destroy anyones potential or inhibit their abilities in life to lead a normal life among, that doesn't make sense to me, to put someone under, as too volatile, its never justifiable to tantrum or to get upset over losses or hardships in life, and if you are someone when aggravated not able to control your emotions when put down, then always take a step back, and be mature about it, never stop problem solving in life, or journaling about how youre feeling, freezing, giving up, or self-harming is not the solution to your problems, if youre being harassed by voices or by others in retaliation for what they think was what you were put in for, then that's because they think you deserve unwanted attentions in life, or unwanted interpretations of you, as though you deserve to be put down in life, and that because of your mental health issues if can be proven, are the cause of illness upon others, that's why they try to prove people are mentally ill, to send them off, and away from others. Again Im not a Doctor so I wouldn't know what it is Im doing wrong if I don't go out and stay home, and have no followers, how is that embarrassing, if Im doing my best, it's a sad fact of life, when youre not well, its hard to be at everyone elses speed in life, that's why they slow some down and put them on meds as "chemically imbalanced" leave them at home, away from society and functioning among, disable their abilities to work, or articulate well their thoughts. I have learning disability, I cannot function without medications, and the put on night meds. I don't deserve to be put to sleep, for what? Stop treating me like Im the offender or opportunist, I drove to every boyfriend, paid for everything, and took care of others, its not me that went looking for love in the wrong places, on purpose, and if the wrong people found me in life and I was harmed, that's due to my poor decision making, while trying to get cocaine. Once they put you in jail, you are no longer considered a victim, that's so you get blamed for your own mental health issues, and labeled an addict, they're very hard on people who cannot function without meds, and don't take anti-psychotics if prescribed them, I was always compliant, even if I got worse grades, and didn't finished my JD, did everything I was told. Then I drank, that was a mistake, it feels like your missing out on life, while getting your masters, and not having the same social life, its just temporary isolation, don't take anything personally, so long as you are doing everything you are supposed to be doing, you make it to the next phase in life. If you let yourself go, and too experimental with your public image, that can hurt your social skills later in life, among people you don't know, who identify you as a piece of $hit without even knowing you, because youre not pretty or overweight or look funny. Don't allow the men in your life to decide for you what to do with you if they are not willing to love you.

The furthest thing from my mind is committing suicide, Im beyond those periods in life, usually caused conditions, circumstances that are outside of your control, combined with being bipolar, drinking or relapsing on drugs or alcohol and a breakup is usually the cause of not feeling well, if you can establish those periods of not being well with a physician and talk through those feelings, you recognize those symptoms before they worsen and learn to call the police on your own, and not enable voices to lead you astray in life or to convince you you are something you are not. It just so happens that everything past works in that way, so as not to be blamed should you commit suicide, defensive to their own best interests put you down in your face and behind your back, that's because they think less of you and don't respect you. Who treats someone who has been an advocate the majority of their professional career as someone who doesn't care. Its impossible to get jobs if you are not well, and if for the wrong reasons are "helping people" rarely does that ever make you look good to the extent that it can undo any wrongs on your part, if you drink or do drugs you are in the wrong and upon being in the wrong are not able to function nor provide services to those in need, let alone be hired and able to work professionally in those fields. I know this as having gotten a job at Boulder DA and not being able to complete the training because of cocaine addiction had to leave the program, that was after explaining why I was unfit for the position. All of a sudden you meet new people in life, and because I ran an flyer campaign down sunset boulevard, that was not successful in preventing gun violence, that I am in the wrong. The police saw me taping flyers and at no point in time told me not to, they smiled at me, it was okay'd by them. Then do nothing, but don't blame me for caring or talk about me as though my life is a waste or that Im purposefully wasting time in life, Ive done my very best to be apart of, never rebellious, always taking meds as directed, its when I try too hard in life that I get put down as needy or rejected in life, and that's not my fault, because of the way I look, overweight, or not pretty, successful, with a job or a husband, treated as a lesser species of human or woman in life, as though Im a reject, because I am not young or vulnerable to the interests of others, and have my mind made up in life about who I believe in and what causes I have chosen to support, that's really none of anyone business, what keeps me staying well, or by whos advances or cares for me, make me feel apart of, to shun me, as though I am a lesser member of society because I have been sued or because I had three drinks and drove home from Hollywood, makes me not want to live life, I have suffered enough, put on anti-psychotics for 7 years, because I was cutting my wrists and slamming my head into the wall suicidal hearing voices, I don't deserve to live a life in isolation, or talked down to like I need therapy, or need a support group, for what? What do I need support for, I need a job, I need to function in life, I need day meds and night meds, I need a place to call home, I need to be able to provide for myself, no one can offer anything to me, that I should not already be able to provide for myself, that includes my safety and belongingness needs, Im a law student, all I have to do is finish law school and get a job, that's no what politics are for, becoming popular for acceptances to live life free from harm, what a waste of time blogging was, building greater acceptances for me, or people with disabilities, or people who have cared when no one else did and did their best in spite of what has occurred, I think that was a natural position for me to take given my work experiences not a big deal, and not amplified to shed light on all controversies, as though everything is related, that's not how individuals function as connected always, nor do businesses function as connected to one another, that would be doing people a disservice in life, to not be afforded some type of agency, and sense of livelihood, out of harms way, that wasn't the point, to make everyone care, and that because people care got sick or suicidal, don't blame me as though those were the reasons for my suicide attempt 2009, as someone who knowingly engaged in advocacy, unfit, or unfit because of factors outside of me causing me to think poorly, try to many years later make others see similarly to me during a period when I was not well. Why recreate my 2009, obviously I was drinking and not well, going through a separation, that's not my fault. Sometimes you are good enough and sometimes you are not considered smart or pretty enough for marriage, that's not my fault, I have always done my best to be presentable, word count issues aside, you have to have some sort of foundation for reference from which you decide to speak, that's how you pave a way for general acceptances of you to continue speaking in public, if for the wrong reasons, no one wants to hear what you have to say if they think you are blogging for yourself, or have an agenda that interferes with anyone else bests interests in life, Im not competitive, and believe that the world is full of resources, and that we are not limited, at any point in our lives, unless we limit ourselves by choices, lose privileges in life. That's a different situation. Earning back rights in life. I think that public speaking is always for the best interests of everyone as a whole, and not necessarily the best platform from which to take a personal stance in life, as toward others present or past, that does not good moving forward and only sets you back in life, to rehash the past to explain your condition now. You are always where you are at, by where you so choose to be emotionally and mentally, that's in no one elses control but your own, you may hear voices, but that's pretty much a product of something you have done wrong, thinking you deserve to be tortured or hacked, heckled, rejected, mistreated, bullied, made fun of, disrespected to your face, or behind your back. That I can't control, and the longer you allow it the longer it continues, and as soon as you bring it up, the worse it gets and the more real it becomes, a justifiable way to behave toward you in the negative. Some people just don't know how to be accepting of people, they see oh she thinks shes famous because she grew up around OJ, she hasn't struggled in life, she doesn't deserve to finish law school, what does she want to be married for shes overweight, of course no one will marry her because she didn't finish law school and can barely represent herself. #stophate #stopsuicide

Being Experimental ...

If you are being experimental when it comes to love, just like therapy that's just something you don't share out loud, nothing exciting to be proud of, unless you have overcome some struggle in life, worth worrying about, its probably best not to add in addition to your struggles the lives of others, and leave them up for negative interpretation too. Its an odd disposition to take on in life, under suit, some more or less accepting of you afterwards, even worse, harder to get a job, and have to explain what happened, how you got sick, and why you got sued, if they haven't already made up their minds about you, overlooking your work online, as sufficient to be called a professional writer, or just someone whose energy is off putting and worth rejections in life. Blogging is about livelihood, it's a chosen profession some take on, not intended to be a speaking platform, if so that would be time consuming, to be pressured and put in the wrong positions in life, and forced to correct viewpoints toward, that wouldn't be free thinking. Its when things are not easy to digest, how others have coped in the past, are the actions for which they are judged and punished for, whether deemed helpful, successfully managing the emotions of those around them in regards to violence, and how one has coped, been able to overcome illness, bipolar, self-harm, and suicide, Im not a doctor so I cannot explain how that happened to me, but never stop believing in yourself, once your on meds, youre on meds for life. There's no turning back, with the diagnosis I have, I am required to take meds to stay balanced so that I do not commit suicide. That's not really a threat to anyone else's livelihood, as it is my life I have to live, irrespective of how others live their life, regardless of what they think of me, I am required to also stay positive, you cant really play victim, with a record, you have to then at that point accept what you have done wrong in life while drinking or doing drugs and for those short periods of time, while incoherent, decisions you made, that set you back in life, and take responsibility for the people you brought into your life, that was your choice, not your fault if you are not able to play hard party hard and work hard all at the same time, we are not all functioning addicts and alcoholics, some people were just not meant for substance abuses in life, affecting their better decision making skills, especially if youre someone who has to try really hard in life to be smart and stay smart and achieve in life, sensitive, why desensitize yourself, or sound worse off than you are simply because of low self-esteem due to poor decision making in life. That's your history, live with it, its not necessary that you share out loud, every single stupid mistake you've made in life, and allow others to play God, furthering your chances from getting a job, and furthering your chances of reintegration into society and live a normal life. I don't think anyone expects a Cinderella story, happiness, marriage, and kids from me, I do think they expect the worst of me, suicide, but that doesn't mean I cant; work simply because others have chosen to convince themselves that my campaigning was in error, caring was obnoxious, or systems for advocacy suggested not helpful or in need of improvement, less is more. It just so happens that unless you have achieved a better place in life, can you share from those places in life, some opinions are not worth hearing, if your sharing from a down position in life, that's just as a writer something Ive noticed, being positive is important, but also your standpoint and outlook, is affected by how youre feeling, so if youre trying to help people who don't feel well or think poorly of you or others, you being negative too definitely wont help nor represent your strategy for being helpful in a positive light, some wish to fly under the radar in life, and allow things to happen and to fix themselves on their own as the problems arise, I don't think now looking back that overall change was necessary or for all to care to help make a difference, maybe we were better off with only those affected being people directly involved, it seems that everyone's happiness and hyper and productivity gets affected somewhat now, whenever something negative happens in the news, then blames others as being insufficient, in handling the problems faced by everyone, I think everyone is doing their best for the most part. You can only help in ways that your good at in life, you cant just switch professions and get good at something, and then try to influence change in that way, that's a longer process of making change happen when as inexperienced you try to help, sometimes that type of input is not helpful, its okay to be interested in subjects, but not be consumed by them, there is life after setback, and happiness after punishment, just don't expect everyone to feel the same toward you. No matter where you are in life, you cannot go backwards for acceptances in life, or for love, once people are done with you theyre done, focused on themselves, that's your lost opportunity, you get one chance at friendships in life, by momentum, when you get sick that means space, that's the hard part staying well, to make catch up calls with friends. Im doing my best to be patient, almost at well, working again, finishing my dissertation, doing a lot of reflecting, for the most part don't feel like writing, but its important to keep improving, especially if I want to publish a book, practice everyday sharing my thoughts and stay well.

Not My Intent ...

Whats exciting to me may not be exciting to you. Different things bring people joy in life, new relationships, new friendships, new jobs, new connections, offers, no matter where you are in life, you are always expected to negotiate well your position in life, and that's what communication in private is for, if you have to go the extra mile to generate additional acceptances for you and trust, to give others an opportunity to know you personally, and see your face daily, then its okay to share your life in private with someone you trust. That's without expectation for reward, employment, or future romantic endeavors, but its okay to dream and test the waters, to see whether it would be a healthy match in life work wise, or friendship wise, whether one withers or fades in the presence of another, is a tell tale sign whether discomforts are in the works, brought to fruition upon a seeing of the person to whom has caused them harm in life if any way. That's not for the reasons I mention Ari Emanuel on my blog, its not an obsession, he was just pointed out by my Father, so noticed him at a Laker Game, and he seemed like he wasn't doing well, so I decided to message him, and after messaging in November, jobs were posted online which I applied for, Im not sure whether messaging has impacted their decision of whether or not to hire or interview me, Im sure many have applied, and not sure by comparison, where I stand in regards to the other applicants for the positions being offered. I think it would be great to be apart of a growing company, and with my new Finance Law background a great fit for the position. I think its only natural to like someone or to admire someone that you work for, you just don't share those sentiments out loud, or share compromising photos of yourself, with them to see if they are willing to like you in that way, or are attracted to you similarly. That's not professional, that's following your heart, not thinking with your head, its okay to be loving but you show that love through your work ethic, not by looking easy or cheap online, if they can do better they will do better, and you'll just wind up feeling stupid because you wanted a "like" when you should've been going for the job, and have taken a more reserved approach to building positive rapport with someone you admire, who may or may not have been willing to take you on board do your best not to create unnecessary instability by talking to much about yourself, that's the quickest way to wind up uncomfortable in any professional setting, is not for therapeutic purposes or for giving or receiving love, that you find outside of work, why I chose to date Dejan, then look for jobs, so I wouldn't appear needy and fall in love at work. You have to be of high social standing in life to date anyone successful, and you have to be successful on your own in order to date men with careers who like nice things and have good lives, this Ive learned the hard way.

Romance and Pride ...

It's true that you can't have it all unless you are first happy with yourself. Why is self-love so important? Before you stop to worry what others think, or how they will respond to you, first be certain that you are everything worth knowing and loving. That means to appreciate and value, where you come from, no matter who identifies you as something less than you are. To be treated with pride, and to be considered of value, one must have pride in themselves, its that confidence in life that gets you places, no necessarily a product of where you come from always. Eventually you have to make it in the world on your own, in your younger years, and childhood, you are but a product of your exposures in life, the successes of those around you influencing your outlooks in life, and its that safety network provided to you by the parents of your friends, that you grow up in, and first learn about how the world works. Where do you fit in? Nothing gets handed to you in life, especially via social status and companionship. We are all respected differently based upon who we meet in life, and respected based upon our education in life, where we went to school, and by who we know, or how wealthy we are. No one really stops to roll out the red carpet for anyone who is deemed below them in life, favors tend only to be handed upward to who can provide back via payment or known association to. Friends are one thing, dating is another, its about who's representing who, and when that doesn't matter, does each represent the other in a positive way, and does ones status weigh more favorably and uplift the status of others, fairly, that would be one consequence of not making it in life, to be questioned based upon, what you can provide, not burden someone new in your life, with your past, or be seen as someone who is successful only by benefiting from others, not on ones own merits successful. "Date someone who is proud to be your boyfriend." [1] In order to date you have to have something going for you in life, if you want someone else to see a future in you, you have to have some stability in your life, that's not an obvious factor, when it comes to love, its just a good sign that things are going to work out, when one another can visualize for themselves a shared life, without any foreseeable complications along the way. That's having potential. When someone has potential, that means their value as a person, outweighs anything said about them in the negative, regardless of their social standing, beauty, or past etiquette online, or friends past, not judged based upon who has come and gone from their life, post failure, but who is in their life now and willing to be apart of their lives, as they are now. That's what makes someone still attractive in spite of what others think. However, there is only so much love that can be shared, before outside factors begin to take their toll on any given union, not all unions will prosper or be considered "E pluribus unum." [2] It has been thought that "When each person loves the other as much as himself, it makes one out of many (unus fiat ex pluribus), as Pythagoras wishes things to be in friendship." [3] Its hard to be loved when one does not love themselves because another has rejected them, you really have to rise above hate in life, if you want to experience happiness and success, it doesn't come easily to most, because I grew up well taken care of, privileged, its expected that I be able to provide for myself and others, however with disability, I don't think that I was treated fairly when being too hard on myself. If acceptance is the issue, then it must be that a bond is lacking from your relationships in life, if youre not the one for them, then its okay to move on, that's acceptable. Wealth discrimination is an issue when it comes to jobs, Ive been applying to law firms since 2008, unless you speak Spanish and have 5 years experience, its hard to find a job in LA. Most of the jobs I have been selected for have been Externships, Internships, and Law Clerk positions, working under the direction of Attorney's as an ABA Certified Paralegal. Because I was not able to get a job, I could not date, and because I could not date I was not married, and because Im not married I do not have kids, because I was not given an opportunity to work when I was well before I hospitalized 7 times AFTER law school. In failure, wellness becomes a serious issue, when it comes to hireability, dateability, that's because if you've given up in life, its hard for others to believe in you, and to see your potential given your mistakes in life, and offer you an opportunity in life to better yourself, which is why I created a job for myself online as a writer and blogger, because it is very difficult to get a job in Los Angeles. From my perspective its better to keep building a career for myself, somewhere, anywhere, than to stop working all together, and although its not something I brag about on Linkedin or on my Resume, its becoming more and more presentable as the years have passed, and worth mentioning I blog. Ive written everyday online since 2013, you don't always have good days, and in my early years I would often share my mental health issues outloud, or seem codey and creative with my content displays, often times sharing too much from my life, or being too opinionated about the times, and what needs to be done, or what could be done, only in your free time do you have the time sit down and analyze life, that's one of my strengths, analysis, as a law student, that's what the essay portion of your exams is about, I used to get As on Essays in Law School started out 3rd in my Class, before I started dating. Not everyone can balance everything.

Whatever happened to the days when you could speak freely your mind without worry for others being condescending toward you for sharing your thoughts out loud, it seems everyone gets sized up these days, everyone thinking they are bigger than they are, or smarter than everyone else, whos viewpoint is best, we all lead different lives, therefore everyones perspective is of value, if we all thought alike then life would be boring, it's the fact that we see differently and think differently that enables society to blossom and thrive, theres work that gets done everyday, miles to climb, and goals to achieve, if we had nothing better to strive for, with a little healthy competition, that makes sense to compare, ones sense of self to the sense of being that others has managed to achieve online, theyre just displays, in reality, everyone must do their best to play their part, it doesn't come any easier, depending on what meds you take, as though those on adderrall have a easier time achieving than those without meds, or people with ambien able to sleep through anything, no one is invincible we are all human, its those who don't know when to stop that cause the most trouble, not stopping until their point is made, and not stopping until some unidentified end point is achieved, not all will be in agreement with the drives of one another, some want money, some want stability, some want friendship, some want romance, whatever youre living for in life, or whether living for others, a caretaker, those are your drives in life, whether regarded as selfish or not, for your lack of wellness, its not a choice to suffer or to become sick, and one should not be judged by their mental health issues, regarded as mentally ill, and treated as some kind of reject to society, of lower standing simply because they have had troubles in the past, no comparisons exonerate anyone as being of less a big deal, once punished, that person suffers indefinitely choosing to either live life or to die suffering, and enable others to build excuses for why someone has died, no one will keep you alive in life, I realized that, doctors help, but its your job to stay alive and to work and provide for yourself, desperation is not living as a matter of survival over resources, the world is full of resources, and people to friend and date, no one should ever feel as though life is short in the amount of choices we have to thrive, only short in the amount of years we have to correct or to live the life we want to live, able to earn a paycheck and get a job, at 30 you become desperate, its time to work, and if you cant work, stay home and keep busy, some on meds, die, that's a choice they make, to not be compliant and to continue to drink and do drugs, and not survive, that's because society has rejected them, and that has become their way of life, living below the radar, not in public light, there are many benefits to living a public life, it really forces you to step up to plate, and do your best, if no one was watching I wonder where I would be probably still lost, dead, suicidal, in a hospital, or in a home, or some kind of rehab facility, asleep all day, waking up only for meals, I don't deserve to live a life like that, I've been there Im trying to have a normal life, as best I can, that's not rising above for the sake of proving anyone wrong or making anyone look bad, or placing blames, or accepting blames for losses there was war, people get sick, its time to let go, of the need to control and shelter everyone, no one ever said the world is coming to an end, and if you follow a mayan calendar well that's your opinion, no matter how difficult life gets, life goes on with or without you, with or without your thoughts input, or contributions to the world, not that youre nothing or your life is meaningless, but the whole is greater than the sum of its parts, and no one part or loss, or person, is strong enough to take an entire group of peoples perspective down in life, or make anyone sicker than they are on their own, that's not how a disease of the mind occurs, whats intrinsic is your ability to stay well, and continue to make good decisions in life, based upon your education understand concepts of whats real or not real, whats a bad day, whats a good day, when things are off, your instincts guide you but you cannot always be protected from harm, there are ways to avoid getting hurt in life, but part of life is being exposed, and being resilient, that is being able to think for oneself regardless what anyone thinks, why they tell you not to worry what other people think, be responsible for your own thoughts in life and stay positive. I had a normal life, what is suicide anyways? Its not worth talking about because people just think youre selfish, no one really cares how much you've struggled in life, they just convince themselves you deserve it, and if you continue to allow those beliefs to continue, a disbelief in you, then you eventually become something you are not, worse off, that is giving in to sin, drinking, doing drugs, and becoming an incoherent mess, disorganized by the negative sentiments of others as expressed toward you, end your life, never contemplate ending your life, in response to another's hate toward you, lawsuit or not. That would be a choice to die and commit suicide, that because I was sued cannot now get a job, and struggle with even worse mental health issues, was better off thin, running, and drinking, living alone, I already have a disability, I was doing fine on my own, it's when living life is hard you know that you have a problem, you shouldn't have to think about it, wake up get dressed, do work, read a book, keep busy, get a job, why let anyone convince you to die by suing you and taking all your privileges in life away from you, and turn everyone new against you in life, seeing you as less than, because you have a record, that's when you question for what purposes am I living life, grew up privileged, no I'm not rich, and no I'm not like anyone who is famous who has gone to jail, they had careers and paychecks, I've not been paid yet or able to provide for myself, I've been in school, I haven't had time to experience life yet, be social, attend events, I took a break from everything to focus on law school, and all of a sudden because I made a hashtag, there's something wrong with me. There's nothing wrong with me. On a positive note: will work for Mom & Dad, Monday. Life goes on, and it's especially important not to end life before you get better, once you get to better, you'll realize how special life really is, even if you're feeling like $hit, or someone is making you feel like $hit, or look guilty or grose, don't commit suicide because you're not rich or pretty, that would be a waste of time, why I went to law school. You were born to live life so do your best, 2012 while undergoing TMS treatment for depression following rehab 2011, it was hard to function, and when you're not high functioning it's even harder to care for you or to be loved, live life anyways, I took meds for 7 years as prescribed, even got risperidone and abilify shots, all I did was sleep, that's no way to live life, I deserve to be awake, work, and live a normal life, I'm not the problem, I've harmed no one, I mind my own business, and I keep to myself.

The Same Handicaps ...

Everyone is under the same handicaps in life when it comes to public speaking, why some do not get too far when insensitive toward others during turbulent times, if there's any difference is that I put myself down, never making anyone look bad to look better than, and only voice an opinion if I think it's having to do with me, to then give an opportunity for others to clarify, by their opinions, where they are coming from, and what's what about. It's one thing where one benefits from having been exposed to someone, and it's another thing to be sued, if someone declares exposure to a person, as not helpful toward their personal outlooks in life, or understandings. That's what I was trying to get to the bottom to, whose connections, give them the privilege of wellness and why, it used to be that way, that upon connecting we felt better, but when the tides of guilt are turning, would much rather have a softer hand at life, than a heavy hand to play, that wouldn't require one to change any outlooks or ideas, or thoughts about others, that's the issue. Like everyone who overshares, feels uncomfortable, that being said, I am not currently comfortable, and can feel that equally, whatever if being said toward me or about me, or thought of me in the negative has won, another crisis of interpretations, it seems they would rather have everyone consider me in the negative to ease their poor outlooks in life, and not allow me to see myself in the positive which is who I have been my whole life, one is a negative portrayal of me, seeking to affirm, and one is in reality who I really am, who is behind that ammunition to gather rounds of people to think in the negative of me to begin with, no I do not have the power to change opinions of people who have been defamed, or charged with crimes, whether or not they have been committed, and I do not think for experiment, it is okay to play with my image, as though I'm able to correct those viewpoints toward me, I am not the same as someone with a team of advisors, I have had to handpick and select who I surround myself with, to enable me to be a solid decision maker, and think right even when the odds are against me, that is really no one's business, how heavy at odds I was put at in life, and what it took to reverse those opinions of me, having been sued, it's really no one's business, for what reasons I chose to stop tweeting, and kick the twitter addiction, and started messaging in private, but I realize what was best was to speak in public, that's the safest bet, not write in private, and cause unnecessary stress, related to one person hearing from me, and risk unnecessary tensions that result from everyone not hearing from you assuming the negative, until that's what becomes of you, no friends, no boyfriend, no career, and being threatened at home, to get your act together, that's really no one's business, what kind of stress I'm under, of why when thin no one was happy for me, and why I did not find a boyfriend, and worked from home, on my masters in law, I will be graduating in 28 days, and looking forward to finishing my LLM Masters in Law with the option to transfer units and finish a JD, that is something I do not currently have money for, but something I can do, and go into another school already willing to help me finish my JD. There's no competition in life when it comes to success: (1) marriage (2) career (3) family. If you can manage all three congratulations, that's not what I'm preaching about, and obviously as someone who does not have those things in life, have managed to stay happy, and out of the way of other peoples successes in life, not interfere with the happiness of others, that's who I am, Im not a taker in life, Im a giver. As you can see I write for free online, unpaid, I don't have to write without pay, I can write books. -The point is not to get a conversation going that causes turmoil but stop it from worsening, its when things are not talked about and fly overhead, helps sometimes, sometimes not.

Theres always a whirlwind of emotions that passes through ones sense of self upon experiencing any type of loss, as affected, and depending upon how centered we are on our own messes in life, react and respond in the wake of the turmoil as felt by those directly involved, one can only imagine what people are thinking right now, shared a few of my opinions whether or not as related, but felt relevant, not necessarily to the passing of Kobe Bryant. It would be my best advice to let go of the issues that are causes you inner turmoil or others around you illness, but its better to state the issues, before they become pulled from you as of issue, that's just how I am. Better to be safe than sorry. We discussed these issues in private on Facebook, but apparently, I did not further my deductions as I thought unhelpful at the time a product of bipolar, sometimes what you see and what you have to say matters, in the grand scheme of things, if it ends up not being important and just an opinion, than that's okay too, not everything you have to say sheds light in a way that is meaningful or brings about a greater understanding among everyone. Sometimes, if its just about you, its just about you, and if its just your misunderstanding as to others, thinking things are about you, then that's just you thinking things are about you, because you were about Brady, that's an okay paranoia to have, that someone who built a company to promote the best interests of all, not by being a perfect symbol of what is well or what is right, or what is to be imitated, but as someone who has experience assembling information in an analytical way that supports viewpoints, or helps understandings is how I was trained, whether my skills have helped or hurt other peoples abilities to care or be cared for, that is not to my understanding the purposes of my campaign or building of a website, its always been to redirect others to resources, how I was trained. The redirecting toward resources, has not been a strength on my website because after I got sued, my original plan for my site got scrapped, and all the ideas that went with it, had to start fresh, that's common to lawsuits, not wanting to be apart of eachothers agendas, you have to create all new routes to success or all new routes to understandings, the basics, sued for, as not in alignment or in agreement with the best interests of anothers health, that was never my intent as I suffer from mental health issues, and would never put anothers health in jeopardy because my own health was suffering, Im always first to get help, and to respond to others queries. -Why I connect and maintain memberships, no pun intended to the Movie: Catch me if You Can ... Ive always joined clubs and maintained memberships since College.

Be careful what you are inferring upon others, especially a person who has been a victim of sex defamation and discrimination from bars, someone who has worked very hard their whole lives a 3.8, 3.2s, and a 3.0 current at my best, be careful the hand you hold if for only the intent to deceive as concerning my reputation to convince someone weak of guilt and to not preserve the innocence of someone who is well deserving always reporting and seeking treatment, then you are sorely mistaken for someone who is a lost cause or a failure, or weak minded. I am not retarded I have worked hard my whole life, and if I am mute its because I so choose to be. Tonights crowd sponsored by an abercrombie zara ad by me, was totally hip and confident, not a worry in sight, solid auras and brimming with energy for a 2:30pm crowd, glad I returned to join them, after chuckling with my ear phones in at the UFC event, did not have 2 margs but only one and some chips and left a $12 dollar tip. Do your best always regardless of who is trying to play with your mind on the street and make world peace jokes, if the purple headphones are not on Im not in the mood replies beatsbydre. And if I go backwards to march in superdry its not because I have pride in having no sexual contact, but because someone I met in my driveway was forced to masturbate on film for award, and now shows up to my AA meeting and does everything they tell him to do, me included attended 30 days of recovery hospitalized off all meds, and slept every single day and every single night in bed, except for smoke breaks, my only time around people, I never socialize in the hospital and am out cold asleep its not a fun experience and not something you talk about, being put on lock down and forced to take meds, or taken off meds, and sleep all day and all night, and then wake up and attend group sessions, tired, rarely occurring. "Where did you get that" my sister enters the room to interrupt my focus, its an iPod I got it at the mall. I just took 2 hydroxyzine and 1 seroquel and 1 trazedone my night meds, don't let anyone in the street convince you you are someone worthless or a contributory factor to the illnesses faced by others, theyre not attached to OJ and a laws student with TV Shows and movies making fun of their intelligence levels which others could leverage off of and become famous, as in competition with those viewpoints. Whos started that perspective anyways, I don't care if you think Clueless was a culprit we lost planes, over dresses, and chicks over meds in alleyways, and I fractured my hand in a bathroom hitting my head, for what reasons are those types of pressure put on women who represent men in the industry or people in power or who have acquired infamy that's not our fault.

01-27-20: Now that I am learning VC, I am slowly understanding the tempo of the business side of things, when things are going well that heavy feeling, when things are about to happen, those nervous feelings, when deals are closing, that light airy feeling, like anything can happen. This you learn with experience, probably why Im on meds, because as a law student, there were things said, and interpretations made, vague enough to cause me to feel light headed, and not well, and not specific enough for me to be able to overhear and respond to, if you have something to say just say it, I just started reading a book by Paul Kalanithi last night, who passed away, sad news, Im sorry to mention the past, as interpreted by me, best to leave things left unsaid. Taking it One Day at a Time ...

Im at a point in my life, where Im taking it one day at a time, learning from my mistakes, and staying focused so that I can realize my potential. I think its easy when things are going well, to backtrack, and think about the past, that really does no one any good moving forward unless done so in a therapeutic setting, or with a sponsor in AA. I have decided to attend therapy twice a week, and will be seeing a new psychiatrist today, and probably go back on Abilify, I tried to stop on my own, but had another bout with self-harm. Drinking is not the solution, and although I made two new friends will not continue down that road, going out alone to make friends, its just not worth it. I have my blog, and should focus instead on safer ways of being social, that don't put myself at risk of harm, health wise, drinking. That is the solution, blogging. Life is much too short to be experimental at this phase in life, you only have one life to live, is similar to the popular saying "there is no room for error." Probably why I say that. My Mom always tells me that, I have no room for error. That's to get me to straighten up, and to help me to focus on getting a job. I interview February 3rd at a job agency in Century City, Im really excited for the new opportunities that will be coming my way, I just need to stay grounded. Meanwhile, will be working on editing my first book, just got edits back from Amazon Book Writing Inc, hope to publish my first book sometime this year. My eye is looking better, my face was bruised, self-harm when it occurs, is mostly due to voices, I have a delusion that Im in some sort of a think tank, that communicates to me, from time to time, sharing ideas, back with me, about life, voices that are very critical of me, when Im not doing well, is usually when I hear them. Its so important to be diligent, and to get your work done, to minimize the potential for hearing voices, its when your going in life, that voices don't bother you, its when youre not going in life, that everything seems to hit the fan, health wise. Why its so important to work, and to stay goal oriented and to have things going for you in life, so that you don't go into psychosis, hearing voices, or being paranoid, about what others are thinking about you. That's no way to live life in worry, paranoid, about the past, or fearful for your future. Its not necessary that life be short, if you just take it day by day, the days are long, enjoy them, don't speed up life, living a fast life, simply because you want to have fun, pace yourself. And as always here for you guys, whenever you need to hear from someone else's perspective, take care.

In Remembrance ... #kobebryant ...

You don't really realize just how short life is until a life is lost, or cut short. It just makes you think about things, how hard you are trying in life to better yourself, and despite the obstacles, one stayed centered throughout all the controversy beside him. I remember going to Laker Games with family back in 2008 before all the controversy erupted, and saved all my free taco tickets. I was there for Robert Horry's magical three pointer and Derek Fisher's. You only get to live life once, always be grateful for everyone's hard work, who help to make life memorable. Without whom, we would not have those shared moments of happiness in life. At my last job, at an insurance company he had a framed signed jersey of Kobe Bryant's over his desk. I thought that was controversial, I guess that's when forgiveness happens, don't wait until it's too late, to appreciate someone for the life they have lived, not for the controversies, that brought them down in life, we all make mistakes, it's not always entirely our faults. With a record, I guess he would be the epitome of someone who in spite of having a record, succeeded, he played games and went to work anyways, even with everyone boo-ing at him, that takes guts. From my standpoint, as a child who grew up at OJ's house, best friends with his daughter, I can only imagine what kind of pressure that put him and his family under, I understand, what it's like from the inside out, needing to stay positive, even with a tremendous amount of negative press looming around you and negativity thrown toward you, lucky enough for him, he had so many fans and supporters, throughout his career, that it sheltered him from the mental health issues that occur having been labeled as someone to be abhorred by society, or with a guilty verdict someone to be ashamed of themselves, and hold their heads down, he did neither. He was so talented, watching the news today, his journey to success, his upbringing, and his exposures, made him special, and his work ethic, brought his talent to light. We are so grateful for people who despite the odds, prove us wrong, rather than right, and do their best to lay low, in spite of the obstacles thrown their way, he was just coming out of something, it's sad that he was not able to make a full recovery, from living a private life, to living publicly again.

When Things Don't Line Up ...

Don't put too much pressure on yourself, when things need to get done, stay goal oriented, set smaller goals for yourself, to accomplish the bigger task of getting things done. You may get screamed at along the way, others putting pressure on you to get jobs, or to put your life together, but don't let that get the best of you, stay centered, and let them say what they have to say. Always from a place of compassion accept the criticisms of others, especially when you are not doing well, don't take things to heart. Surely they care and mean well. Note that when "stress becomes chronic, it can be overwhelming — and harmful to both physical and emotional health." [1] Take a deep breath. Get done what you can get done in the immediate, without stressing out too much, and let the dust settle, if you have interviews lined up already, so be it, don't listen to whomever is breathing down your neck about it. If it's your dissertation that needs to get done before you start working, then get that done, and out of the way. Usually right before you make a transition, others try to push you, don't get knocked off center in life, because of other people's stress about you not doing as expected, you can only do your best, and considering you're on meds, and with disability, well you're doing the best that you can. Not everyone can work. There was a period when I was working and going to school, and loved to do both, for some reason got sick, and started doing one at a time only. Its when I stopped excelling, that I stopped feeling good about myself, and those gaps in my resume, eventually took their toll on my career prospects, I see it was better to keep going than to stop working, to rest, or to recover, from whatever was ailing me at the time. You can't control what meds you get put on or taken off of, that is not in my control. Being sedated, or put on anti-psychotics, which cause a severe loss of motivation in life. That's not my fault. It's a really frustrating experience to want to work and do well, and to be put on meds, simply because others aren't accepting of your late-night behavior, running or out at night, consider that unacceptable, and put you on night meds so that you are asleep at night. There's really nothing I can do about now, but stay positive. How many years were wasted on heavy meds. I think it's important to be stable, but I think it's more important to work and to keep going in life awake.

Feeling Better ...

Still a little under the weather, resting in a bed all day, working on my dissertation right now. When things get rough, think at what moments are you most at peace, and do your best to achieve that. When studying, I feel at my best, or running, I feel strong. Usually staying in bed all day is not the solution to your problems and only makes things worse, you have to keep going in life, and work through those tired periods to get your energy back. It has been suggested that if you are constantly tired, to change your diet. "To keep your energy levels stable, replace sugar and refined carbs with whole foods that are rich in fiber, such as vegetables and legumes." [1] -Checked in with my Sponsor today, making it a point not to relapse again, and not to drink, I don't think that helped at all, and only made things worse. If it took me this long to get well, sober, then drinking is definitely not the solution to my problems. Its funny how just when you think you are well, you think you can revert back to old behaviors, thinking that a different result will occur, as though you will be invincible now that you are strong to the mental health issues you previously suffered from while drinking. Well I can tell you this much, you still get sick. Even after 2 or 3 beers. Once you change your religion, and start studying AA and the blue book, your way of thinking changes, and in that belief system, come to believe in a set of principles that sets you straight in life. To go against what you have been following to get well, only does you a disservice in life. -So what happened, I was talking about controversial topics, and sharing my thinking about topics, which I am not very familiar with, but have thought about, and in so doing, voices occurred, that happens when you have said something, and have not said enough about something, and more is expected of you, and more cannot be provided from you. I think there is too high of expectation, as a writer, to always know everything, we don't know everything, we can do our best to disclose what we know, and what we think, but we don't always know best, and sometimes, its better to say nothing at all, why I took several blog posts down. I just wasn't comfortable sharing what I had to say, and decided to keep what I had to say private, that was just my choice. Sometimes, what you have to say is helpful, and sometimes what you have to say, is not helpful toward building a bigger better understanding, why private.

Until It Happens ...

Sometimes you don't know what to do until it happens. Do your best always to maintain a level head, so you are ready and prepared for whatever life throws at you. There will always be misunderstandings, there will always be turmoil, its all a matter of staying balanced. There is always time to correct poor judgment, or to fix an understanding toward you, some things take time, don't give up on yourself, and keep to a daily disciplined regimen that works for you. Recently I self-harmed and have a black-eye, Im not sure how that happened, probably took too much Vyvanse and was hearing voices, for the most part have been doing well, I was trying to quit pen paling with Ari Emanuel, but then started talking to myself again and getting sick, its been helpful to have someone to talk to, not that Im in a mess and need help getting out, its just there's only so much that a therapist or AA can help you with, I suppose staying sober, is my best to staying well, can order Diet Coke if Im out, next time. A lot of what brings you happiness in life is feeling in the right or by doing what is right building momentum off of that feeling, of feeling good about oneself. Its usually by doing the right thing that we feel good about ourselves, and in so doing, make others around us feel good too, when we are doing well. I just started a new job, at a venture capital firm, training to be a founder. I also, made a new friend an Attorney, I met at Bungalow Santa Monica. He's been very nice to me, he also makes music on the side, friends with musicians. We seem to have a lot in common, fancy meeting him, of all people, that was nice. Im not sure why when everything is going well, I got sick, I can't really explain mental health issues, but they are symptoms, you have to constantly manage, and when you are not managing those symptoms correctly then you can go backwards into a downward swing in life, and relive those moments, when you were at your worst. Over time things get better, I'll be interviewing with UCLA tomorrow at 1pm for a Research Position, they will study me for $15/hr, given that I have bipolar have been on meds for years a patient.

Finding Your Sense of Peace ...

Peace occurs in many ways: (1) love (2) friendship (3) understanding (4) compassion (5) argument (6) opinion (7) historical referencing (8) perspective, and (9) trust. It doesn't come easy to most, in fact many unhappy in their lives, find it difficult to care when their needs must be met first, safety needs, security needs, personal, and privacy needs. Not many are so willing to go out on limbs in life, to serve a greater good, or a larger purpose, separate from the daily commitments and disciplined practices, that's leaving a safe space from which to think, to a less structured arena, in which to lead, follow, be influenced by, comprehend, understand, and be first to see bigger pictures, or settle under the leadership of more promising endeavors. That's your choice who you who choose to respect, admire, look up to, listen to, be influenced by, imitate, think of, worry about, usually people who you have an interest in getting to know, or wish to know more about, that attraction to that person, breeds an opening for a new perspective or way of thinking about life, from a clean and new slate, that's bonding, taking away a present fear as alone, and once connected see better, that's generally the main goal of socialization, to feel better, that doesn't mean look better or achieve more in tandem, that's not always the case, usually the most independent of others are the strongest, not always designated to positions of leadership, due to lack of experience, or speaking skills, but nonetheless, looked upon, during times of needs, for best practices when it comes to interpretation of the wellness or others, as well as their own wellness, feel sound, its who you surround yourself with that you connect to and based upon those connections feel, and depending upon how many connections you can accommodate at one time, feel safe, that's the difference between those best one-on-one and those best in groups, theres a reason for that, energy, some fade, not able to keep up, and best while reading one, being read by one, and hearing themselves, in groups, voices tend to occur, where there is disagreement, as to the trust and wellness of a person as influencer, and seeking to find signs of ineligibility, or purposeful failures, to illustrate how if one self-sabotages they are not to be trusted as reliable, that's the basics of choosing your professional relationships, not to bond on purpose, but to work in sync with one another, and not interfere with one anothers best interests, health.

Personal Update ... (2)

Not being talkative on purpose, only if Im in writing mode and have something important to say, usually thoughtful but apologize if words describing, make others appear weak, that's not to say Im the problem, but its important to mention, not intended to hurt anyones feelings, as being associated to me, now that I am today not well again, will take 6 months to heal, image. Once you embarrass yourself, relapse, that you cannot afford, not even when well, you get sick again, this is my first experience sick, upon relapse, due to my beliefs then acting out of character, when you are wrong nothing can be done to fix your wellness, only rest, and abstaining from drinking, if you are hard on yourself don't be, Im sorry I self harmed, took abilify, thought that I could do without the meds, realize to sound appropriate not come across as insensitive and be made fun of later for talking to self, or talking to others, thoughts insulted, as not smart, or a product of uppers, and meds, not intelligence, just fast talking verbose. I think that for the most part, I was doing well, stopped going to meetings, but will return as soon as I stabilize sometime after the 27th and resume the recovery process, not as offender but as well, and not relapse drink, that's the idea, where you were wrong, then fix that wrong by staying sober, that's the point, it shows that you understand drinking and its consequences, and that because you did not behave well on alcohol, that you cannot drink in public, risk humiliation, self-harm, talking about things like you know what youre talking about, sharing delusions as though they should matter to everyone, overreacting to rejection or the silent treatment, and then not being patient, or in a rush for responses, or for feedback as affirmation for wellness. You really have to be strong confident to handle the pressures of the non-chalant attitudes back, or the super friendly, and then cold, or laughing but not at you, but in a good way kind. Sometimes voices help mostly if you take meds, I don't self-harm, off meds, self-harm upon hearing too many voices, usually testing things Ive written on me, checking for responses. ~Im sorry Ari Emanuel, love always, Leslie Fischman, he's a super-friend at this point in my life helped me to sleep for 3 months.

Overcoming Feelings ...

There will be moments when you lose motivation, don't feel good enough, and not sure of yourself and others, stay positive, my best advice, when feeling lost, or in between phases in life, we all go through transitions, some more difficult than most. These are just feelings and feelings have never resulted in death as I was told in an AA meeting, in Dana Pointe, thought about that comment, didn't agree with it immediately, but stood out to me, sometimes I wonder whether its coming from actual personal experience a deduction, or whether people just say things based upon a feeling, thinking that it will resonate with someone else they perceive to be going through or having an issue with that, never speak to your audience in a group setting, focus your attentions inward, reading not what is expected of you to say, but as recollected be prepared, always having something to say, or if from the top of your head, have some system of maintaining your sense of self, don't ever lose yourself in a group setting, writing to the expectations of others, speaking to the expectations of others, but always do your best, that's not to say that others too don't have high expectations of you, that Im sure they do, what they value, in your writing, and whether they recognize what good writing is we will never know, what it is people value in people, but its some likeable quality or trait, that they are accepting of, their ability to be themselves, comfortable with themselves, why self-esteem is so important, and maintaining confidence in yourself is so important, when you are bad or doing something wrong, this affects your decision making, your speaking abilities, how you present yourself, and your level of comfort around others, that's on you to figure out for yourself, who you are, what your likes are, what your dislikes are in terms of whats hurting or benefiting you thought wise, exposure wise, and limit yourself to that which makes you feel good, and certain about self and others, well adjusted in life, that's always the main goal. -Not all will get you and thats okay. So long as you waste time in protest thinking about what others are thinking of saying you are wasting time in life not being yourself, why they tell you to focus on yourself. All time wasted sets you further back in life, that includes time frozen in worry, not breathing, and taking life with a grain of salt, thats not the purpose for blogging, to prove or disprove the appropriate treatment of individuals myself included, but it was only happening to me, and thats because I was put in that position in life as alone, why it was so overwhelming, to explain self, and having no one be in support of me, out alone, or drinking, or after having relapsed with friends, trusted, treated as less than, you will come to certain points in your life, where you can choose to stand still or go downward, the best choice is to keep still. In stillness is how you diffuse nervousness, make good decisions, sometimes when we pile our plates too high trying to make up for lost time, we feel under pressure in life, the cost at performing well under dire circumstances may cause others to question your genuineness in life, and try to control your output, or future, by telling you what to do, and in their power control what things look like. Thats your choice to either represent yourself, or be prosecuted behind your back for things that are not your fault, but for things that have happened to you which contributed to choices made.

Setting Yourself Back ...

When it comes to reaching your goals in life, don't set yourself back doing what you know you shouldn't be doing. If you were advised previously not to drink on meds, then don't drink its as simple as that. Today I realize that I don't need to drink to have a good time or to make friends. I thought that I was missing out in life and decided to go out, Im glad I did because I made two new friends, but that's not always the best way to meet people while out drinking especially not alone, Im not sure what impression that gives, to have no friends and to go out alone. Much of life requires us to be independent, but I don't think you need to be that independent in life to make things happen for you, no one can babysit you, when it comes time to meet new people, not on a Tinder date, and not out at the bars, sometimes you have to live life. Do you feel bad that you drank, after having 14 years sober? Ive relapsed before, on alcohol, but not on cocaine, and for the most part, have stayed clean and sober, since 2006, after attending outpatient rehab at Boulder Community Hospital and graduated with Honors had a 3.8 GPA in Sociology and a 3.6 GPA overall, which went down because I drank and did Cocaine. You live and you learn, but made a lot of friends, had a group of girls I was very close with, and still speak to one of them today, who recently got married and had a baby. She married Vlasic. Do you miss your friends? Sure I do, they encourage me to call them and to keep in touch, but haven't had the courage, or felt well enough to call, Im not sure why Ive been so avoidant. Get to a stable point in life then live life, and no matter where youre at in life, always make time for people that care, that's the bottom line, youll never be quite perfect, but that doesn't mean stop living life all together and avoid being social, you need a little social life to get by sometimes. Do your best to be a good person, and if you relapse so be it, don't beat yourself over it, sometimes best people can do is stop binge drinking, and drink once in awhile, than stop all together, it takes a lot of strength to abstain from drinking all together, Im not sure how popular AA is, or how many people are in recovery, and how many of those people follow my blog, probably were disappointed, Im not a Sponsor yet, you need at least a year sobriety to be one, so don't think I should be held to that standard of disappointment, Im sorry.

Opting Out of the Use of Humor ...

As advised, humor is not used as a form of communication, as to issues thought of issue, or to highlight remaining issues that people have with people, and who is being affected. That is mostly in my head, to detail and report incidences of being around people, and to cater to unfavorable positions toward me is why I am going to do a 90x90 going out in Santa Monica. It may take awhile, Starbucks is included, welcome there, I think for the most part even if known, lifes all about winning people over, and although people may be hesitant to accept you to see if you are confused, or they are confused, as to your wellness, or think youre gone, and try to make you appear stupid by short handing you in life, that's nothing to take personally, as though because you are a blogger, that's mostly paranoia. No Ive not been served a check outside, only once and hit my head insulted, that bar was later closed down for other reasons, the same bar I was followed out, after not being in the mood to talk, and negotiated with to hang out as friends, I was going through a breakup at the time, apart from a boyfriend texting me until I hit my head, accusing me of drinking to hook up or drinking and hooking up, I would sit alone at the bar with my headphones on and only after I was aggravated made to look stupid, then what was being put on paper sometimes mostly typing in my phone, maybe a few time started talking, there is a general progression from being inward and focusing in school, and then in your last year you take courses that teach you how to present and speak, I was never given that opportunity to take the courses requiring presentation and public speaking, only occasionally raising my hand in class to share briefs, always detailed, and then eventually, with work did not have time to manage everything, reading cases the hours before class. -Its important to be taken seriously in life, but not that important, and its not important to speak about important things to feel important, that's not how one becomes important in life or of value as a shared opinion in life. Im not a journalist so very new to public speaking in a professional tone, used to only share bits and pieces from my life, and share humor along the way, if I thought of anything funny to say or a humorous way to present information share, that's by my memories and exposures, what is funny to me looking back on moments from my life, and then using those moments to characterize myself presently in a humorous fashion. The worst that could happen as a blogger is to be treated as joke in person, and then wonder afterward and realize things in an order directed by what thoughts they sought to trigger in passing through your life, don't think too much about others, that's called obsession, its usually unwise to think too much about any particular interactions, some stand out, but not make a big deal of anything, unless you make it so, same goes with life or death issues, allow people to get well, worrying doesn't help enable others to achieve well as spoke about or overhead concerns about them directly or people around them, that's not helpful to create problems where none lie in anticipation of someone being the cause of anothers lack of wellness, and to blame someone put on anti-psychotics as the cause of illness, Im not the cause, just stopped taking anti-psychotics as of today and going back to having energy and working again. I need to finish my dissertation and 1 hr a day of work and blogging, and sleeping, and one trip to Starbucks or two, is not a normal full day, one should accomplish more than that to be tired, that's unusual to sleep as much as I do, and be napping, that's because I have been put on heavy meds, because its others, when I am well, complain to my doctors, that Im not well, because without a job, and trying to finish law school seen as a expense not a contribution worthwhile good enough for, I enjoy writing that is my passion, the purpose of finishing school is that with a degree you can get a job, I don't think its necessary to bring up where my lack of confidences have come from, why friendships have not resumed, that's really no ones business, what meds I was put on, and why I sounded the way I sounded, not good enough or smart well spoken, it seems these days that the better someone gets to know you, the least the respect you, as being open and courteous of the feelings of others, to know whether you have been through a lot to give them the choice of whether or not to associate with you or be in your life, explain, thats just a disposition that happens when you are not comfortable with yourself, and after suit, with a record, you are treated as less than, that's until you either stay normal, and if not only proving them right, well that was the point of sharing so much information to give people a choice, not force anyone to thin or believe in me or anyone or think a certain way to feel normal themselves, Im allowed to have 1 ¼ beers, Santa Monica Beer and ¾ a Stella. I talked to the police today, I call them all the time, its their choice what to do with me, if my social standing does not improve and with it voices occurring as Im improving, that's not to make anyone look bad by looking good myself, Im not a vindictive person trying to appear better than others, that wasn't the point of losing weight, competition. -Dont be a source of talk, be yourself.

Overcoming Mental Illness: Beauty ...

At different points in your life different things will matter to you, sometimes you will be on point, looks wise and other times you'll watch yourself fall apart, change doesn't happen over night, so does not the degradation of your body and soul, as to the thoughts that encompass floating above you and through you as interpreted whether directed toward you purposefully, and then there's face dysmorphia, whether you can recognize self, recognizable to others as normal, and whether the differences in your facial features as speaking to someone else, excites or perplexes them, what causes attraction and what the face looks like in judgment, or positivity. There is a such thing as taking things too far when it comes to reading others, some wish not to be read, similarly, I do not read others, and wish not to be read. That's in looking at you, talking to you non-stop for reactions from you, without allowing you to speak clearly, that's called being overwhelmed, that has nothing to do with attractions or intimidations in life, but everything to do with who is being who, a leader or a follower of another, above or below, in charge of themselves, or trying to navigate or take charge of another's sense of self, be to dominating. Those are just personality types, and you'll have to learn to be less intimidated by others, in order to feel accustomed, or normal around others, comfortable. You will always be judged by what you say, and sometimes we have no control over the course of our discussions, sometimes we reflect and sometimes we are present, sometimes we think over what has passed recalling the past in the positive, and sometimes if we are unhappy with where we are now can recall things in the negative if asked or called upon to speak to those facts in life, that's your choice what you wish to talk about you will always be read as though what you say and what is important to you from memory is what is bothering you or has bothered you past to determine your disposition now, as whether and when the causes for change occurred, and whether and when as to what jokes toward you persisted, that is was considered positive conduct to treat you as lesser than based upon looks, and harder upon once a positive look was achieved, to what extent are we pressured to appear well, and then beyond appearing well, able to maintain stability and be positive, its so much work to get to points in life, sometimes its hard to sustain well, and get better beyond a simple well state of mind, functioning, overtime, as things become more automatic to you, the easier it is, upon learning and understanding how to be or how to look, then you can look the same no matter how difficult a day or how much you suffer in life, treat lapses in judgment like a cold, fixable, not necessary to be said out loud, every passing thought or deduction in life, as about others, and why paranoid, I think things are generally set up in life if not in your favor to causes you to: (2) feel alienated (2) talk to someone in power (3) try to fix yourself to be around others (4) face rejection upon needing others (5) share paranoid thoughts out loud or in private as expected to prove (6) your paranoid thoughts caused XYZ deaths. No I was not famous at the time, no MLK speech was expected of me, I went to a State Bar law school I was not held in high esteem as that of a leader to speak to the issues -as a student you are focused on yourself, upon leaving school you strengthen street smarts based upon adapting to the conditions around you, if you are on your own independent you are not keeping up with whats going on outside of you, because you are working on whats inside of you, your smarts. Once people give up on you, dont send yourself down in life, get suicidal.

Personal Update ...

1/16/2020

Taking a break from blogging to continue working on my Dissertation, see a new Therapist tomorrow, I have three new Doctors, thats is because the ones I saw were not equipped to care for me in a way in which I was able to stay well, get well, and achieve in life, to my fullest potential. Gaining weight again, experiencing mental health issues as not pretty, sued, and given mental illness, is not my fault, when someone hurts me, and then to discuss, only makes things worse. Dont attack me thinking that I am talking about you, as though you from my past hurt me and my future. #stophate

Impromptu Meetups at Starbucks ...

Just left Starbucks after a run, ran intervals a 30 minute run became a 21 minute run! Wow, amazing off the Abilify I can move again, that's impressive. In passing three soldiers dressed in fatigues entered through the back door, its always nice to see them around town, make the neighborhood feel like a bustling city, intermixed with all different types of working professionals, we are so lucky to have them on board. Just made a joke to my now pen pal, that I could've kept talking and drinking with two different dudes, or call my quasi-boyfriend of three dates, I met April 2019, to reunite, but instead, with a dead cell phone, gave my number, and waited for replies, one instantly as soon as my phone lit up at home, a website to go to for tutorials about their business, and in exchange submitted my resume for review, to be brought on board, the requirement is for me to watch the tapes, I expect to hear from him today, or will need to follow up with him, he's an Attorney from Argentina or Italia, I forget now, he had an accent, I was waiting for my cab, and he approached me, to introduce himself, similarly I was approached once my headphones came off, by another patron to the hotel I visited last night. Its one of my favorite places to go, on an off day, when doing well. Nothing to celebrate, just when you've reached a stopping point of rest, do we have time to socialize sometimes, writing is a full time job, of reading and reviewing, and organizing ones thoughts and work, for future use, or editing already written work for publishing in a book form, it takes time, to figure out on ones own how to write a book, and being the publishing process, of thoughts, or articles, with the sustenance of ideas coming from you, and as referenced to other sources for support. Hard to explain about yourself, but makes for good conversation, and interesting positive note about self if you blog, to share if you do, doesn't seem to intimidate or turn off others. I met a lawyer, who wanted to introduce me to his music friends, dressed in blue, he was very sweet. Im assuming he did not already know me from online, hear my Monica Chanukah joke. Be careful when looking backwards where we place blames, we could be hurting people who are already suffering and don't need to relive the trauma, of events causing them or other mental disturbance, not all of us are 1985ers, we lived though many events, world events, and still on par, basically we played during our off hours super social, and worked hard studied hard, and all played sports or did some extracurricular activities, sometimes its when we are most busy, life gets the best of you, meaning not in the negative as is being assumed, lose track of time or fail to maintain connections in life, or fail to follow up with correspondences, that's life, its not always coming at you, sometimes you have to go out there and live life for yourself.

Don't Lose Focus ...

There are many distractions in life, that may take you off course in life, you have to give meaning and purpose to your life, in order to feel fulfilled at whatever it is you are seeking to become in life, more well off, a better state of mind, or better overall wellness, you cannot comprehend the time that's been lost, while you are getting well, that only sets you further back in life, and for historical purposes, does more harm than good moving forward, my apologies for addressing distractions in life, but thought that it was an important point to make. I think for the most part you are put in positions in life, left with few resources, and knowing you, who you go to talk to during times of need, and it by your theories in life you are tested whether there is any truth to the matter, that upon being distracted, if not in a positive way kept well informed, that your intuitions were not helpful in deciphering where the risks lied, and what needed work in order to overcome growing pains associated to becoming accustomed to violence in our communities, jokes on important figures in society, and whether at all those personal concerns are worth redressing. It usually just so happens that people who are well off, or in the limelight, doing well, focused on themselves, not focused on others, are the ones who get hurt upon entrusting others with their livelihood, or best decision making skills, get thrown off course. Usually we blame the sick or the not well or needy as being a cause for distorted wellness in the community, and overall health an well being of what is thought of about others. I had two beers tonight. There is motivation and drive, and there is fear, do not be mistaken between the two, there is not need to put someone in a state of fear, of what others think and waste their energy stores in life, trying to comprehend, what has run afoul about them behind their backs. -This statement may not bring all a sense of peace, sometimes you have to bring yourselves to that point in time, on your own by your own thoughts not as directed by anyone, that's not my job, to please others, or to again, cite to any street references be made to look like I put others at risk of harm, as in conjunction with criminals, think alike or respond the same or think humorous, Im simply reporting what is going on around me, and by what I see think, there were points in time where we went by feeling, now things are so blatant and obvious, that there is no need for feeling insulted, that is beyond the point, and the point others are trying to make that but for the selfish concerns on a single person as to image, we would not have lost lives? That's not the reason for our loses, whenever anyone expresses concerns that's a service.

Dissertation Draft (will begin again tomorrow) by Leslie A. Fischman for Thomas Jefferson School of Law

The Sudden Demise of Confidence ...

Im not sure how it is for men, as a woman I can only speak from my own shoes, that confidence is built upon doing what is right not what is wrong, by sober time earned, not drinking and doing drugs, and not by sleeping around, dating monogamously, or hooking up with one person at a time, it's a very frustrating subject to have been mishandled in life, as someone who was worse than they were and treated like a drug addict simply because of who my friends were at the time, what their personal histories were, and how I was made to feel unstable, as though at odds with friends, learn to maintain the confidences of those who grow close to you, its not they who hurt you, but its in the sharing of those confidences, sometimes what is shared, is an incomplete thought, or a rash decision, to plant a seed, to see where it drives your thought processes in life -as someone who thinks methodotically, you can only think logically for so long, before it begins to hurt, that's how you know you have been harmed, either someone has told you something "grose" or "obscene" or decribed an experiance "traumatizing to them and to onlookers" and then recaptivating those feelings of fear within, by discussing again what went wrong, and how they were punished, for some reason, I lived for three years without meetings, self-harming sober, in bed by 5ppm, suffering, hearing voices, and everyone sharp with me, changing on me, suddenly confident toward me or controlling, Im not sure what that is, it seems as those I appear feeble minded or not smart, that I am spoken to as though I am stupid. My head hurts to have my feelings hurt, and if you were not there to understand why I was being bullied, it was not deserved, a simple miscommunication in how I appeared or was represented to others spoken about, in the negative, not being close to me, but its in negative judgment of you, when you distance yourself from others, that you lose your confidences in life, everyone growing more in sync around you, feeling more and more left out, until you feel empty, what then are you made out of when you feel dizzy on meds, trying to lose weight, and grow a blog, maintain a steady tone, write articles, I applied to the US Navy 2009, don't treat me as though I was not serious when willing to die for my Country, and serve, that's how dedicated I am to doing the right thing would never hurt anyone, now as broken and with a record, its easily identifiable that I am the weaker candidate, input, or personality, look, or person, face features not as sharp, easily crumbling, no matter how positive I am, these are things you just don't complain about, aging is a process, I believe that the body repairs itself and has time to heal, Im not here to generate concerns for me, and raise hopes, and then disappoint or make promises, or serve to die, that's not the solution, dying is not the solution. Ive called the police several times, there is really nothing they can do for me, my record gets expunged 2020, Im not out of control, I may have lost it a few times, talking to myself, but Im under a lot of pressures time wise, to get a job and provide for myself, I have no trust account.

Components to a Healthy Campaign ...

In order to run a successful campaign online and build a brand you have to first represent well what it is you seek to see in the world, that longevity you feel, is your long term potential, and based upon your long term potential will be deemed a desirable partnership in the future, just like marriage or any other business type dealing, who you represent, what you represent, and how you represent your cares in the world matters, and unless you seek to be a builder of change in the first place, don't go on correcting others, in other professions about how they are partaking at showing care for others during times of need, some are less obvious than most.

My chosen cares: (1) Politics (2) Academics (3) Spirituality (4) Womens Health (5) Mental Health (6) Blogging (7) Public Figurines (8) Newspapers (9) Fitness, and (10) Love.

Politics: I started watching CSPAN 2013, every morning and night, after leaving law school it was a way for me to keep busy and to stay involved, I watched sometimes during law school there was a Facebook passwords controversy, about whether your employers can ask employees for their Facebook passwords. I watched a lot of speeches, sat through many hearings, and even flew to DC twice January 2013, and sat in court in session for 3.5 hours, to hear SCOTUS speak live! That was exciting. My first rock show, I had been reading their textbooks for 3 years, that was a treat. Of course while watching you become curious about Presidency and the road to Presidency, and how one filters themselves through the system, trains, and eventually stands out. Two stood out to me Rand and Rubio, but apparently politics does not work that way, by speeches given on CSPAN, as credited for having the know how and knowledge to run a Country, later working for a Real Estate Law Firm, Sports Law Firm, decided to Tweet, and met many people, even showed my picture once to Trump. -While living in Westwood, I drank, once after having a Margherita in Westwood, I was found passed out in front of my apartment building, the neighbors called my Mom from my Phone, all I remember was asking a guy standing by a car if he was an Uber and he said sure. I had a bruised knee and a busted chin, the lesson is not to relapse on cocaine at a later point in time, after surviving an incident like that, and made to look worse, any later attachments with people made on the street only makes you look bad, I called the police once, after I thought three men were running at me, across the street sprinted to the gas station and remember talking to them there, I still didn't have a ride home and hitched a ride home with someone who pulled up in the next street walking up the hill. It doesn't matter how awake you are, you can still get hurt, another incident, while not intoxicated, looking for cocaine, I still found difficulty getting home, this was before Uber and Lyft, only cab stand was on Santa Monica Blvd, should've just walked and left.

Academics: As someone who graduated with departmental honors cum laude in Sociology, from University of Colorado, Boulder, it was not until college that I shined, earning a 3.8 at one point in my Major, and a 3.6 overall GPA, that was before trying cocaine for the first time, and drinking upon turning 21. I was a straight A student one semester, even with someone asking to see my paper and turning in the same exact paper as me, copied me, why he did that, who knows, thinking in a different session, the TA would not notice. I joined clubs, served as President of the Honor Society, and could've graduated early, had I not drank, and spent my last year retaking courses for course forgiveness to fix my GPA and took an extra semester Fall 2007 to write my Thesis, that's were my passion for research and writing began. I was a crisis hotline counselor 2004, certified, and the primary reason I applied to law school was to be able to do more to help victims of violence, studying for the LSAT beginning 2006 when I took my first LSAT in Denver Colorado, I was 21 years old. The following January attended outpatient Rehab at Boulder Community Hospital, and got clean and sober, should've focused on my studies, although making friends is important, its hard to manage both, a social life, romantic life, and excel in school in order to get into graduate school, that lesson I learned the hard way.

Spirituality: I have been a very spiritual person for many years now, even attending a Shabbat service with my Father one Friday. They played the guitar. I used to see a Psychic growing up, who counseled me while in the early stages of my recovery, was sent to Arizona and Klamath Falls once to stay with her, flown in from Colorado. She warned me that if I wanted to get married not to sleep with too many men, and that if I continued to drink and do drugs would look like some of the patrons at the club attached to the bowling alley we were at missing teeth. That's not how I wanted to look, why I continue to stay sober, sometimes I wonder that others having known your story or read it, make things happen for you again in life to mirror those times, as though yourve not learned your lessons, the only times we get lost generally disoriented and circle back, is when we have to retrace our steps in life, to figure out what has gone wrong, if something has gone wrong, until we acknowledge for ourselves what we have done that was wrong, and even upon acknowledging prior drinking or drug use, may still not be treated any differently then, as though more was expected of you, what when I was 21? (2006)

Women's Health: In beginning my career being an advocate to primarily women, on the hotline, I was still in the process of learning and being exposed to the many issues faced by them. Mental health issues was not one that stood out to me, only a few calls were by women who could not stop talking beyond the 20 minute time limit, and needed to share and vent about what was troubling them, I always let them talk until they were ready to leave the conversation, rarely would I cut someone off, at the 20 minute mark, unless I was studying in the library or didn't have the privacy or the time to listen, but most of the time, sober, I was always available to lend an ear, and listen, which was my job, to listen. Later in life I experienced issues myself, as having gone out and drank, and dated, and men escorting me home, experienced a different phase of life, separated from friends at the bar, I did not fair well on my own, nor at later points in time, when I was trying to undo what went wrong past, and not make them look bad now, if I was able to drink alone, and have no one take me home and do me, then not anyones fault. I don't think that much benefit was given to me out drinking alone, for some reason an edge toward me was already brewing, as someone out alone, I have an Amex, theres not need for that type of energy toward me, I would have 2 drinks max always, maybe a shot, in control.

Mental Health: It wasn't until my own experiences with mental health issues, that it became of issue to me, and to others around me, treating me as though Ive always been this way, no it happens, and then you change, and as a result of bipolar live life differently, not my fault. I was never a functioning addict. So to be treated as someone, who is a fraud, who was once well, and purposefully threw away their career, is not the case, my options became limited as a result of not having excelled in law school, and because I was not excelling had low self confidence and poor self esteem, and because I looked that way, was treated that way.

Blogging: Blogging became a way for me to speak whereas in private spaces complained about, as being too personally affecting, in an open space, the same discussions can be had, without the same degree of intensity, I could not anticipate having not have told my story before, once you are able to tell your story, it becomes easier in the delivery of information, emotionally sound, not in the moment upset, or still rattled, wondering what people are thinking or even worse become defensive, relapse, become suicidal, and then make yourself look like the wrong one. Its my body my choice, I think coupled with the opinions of others, things look worse than they were. And its often times we have to live with both sets of opinions, sit with it nonetheless. In a harmonious world, things like #slutwalk would be empowering, but in today's world, you are responsible for your own health and should you get sick, would not want to be blamed as having made choices to keep going in life, sacrificing your good health, get tested.

Public Figurines: Why become a public figure, not to insult those existing, but in order to speak one must have some kind of a platform from which to speak from, and knowing from where I grew up that would not be an appropriate pair of shoes to put on, as spokesperson to or for on behalf of, better to situate myself separate, and from my own hardwork, choose to speak about my experiences, as unrelated to their own, and any false lights brought upon me along the way, correct moving forward as I have done so my whole life, by earning good time, studying and working. They seem to send you off in life as worse off before it gets that's bad, don't allow people to make you not believe in yourself, youre just an uncomfortable conversation to have, someone who was well, got sick, by who knows what, and now trying to get better. The more you can simplify the better when it comes to understanding the problems of others, not delve too deep into the issues, and take sides, or blow things out of proportion and create sides.

Newspapers: I don't have a fascination with newspapers (yes you do!) -My Dad loves the news, and reads the paper everyday, yes I am privileged to have the newspapers delivered to my house daily my whole life, and see them in passing, you should really read more. Theyre very comforting to have around, Im sure Im a few months away from diving into the tribe and reading the paper everyday, if you liked CSPAN youll love us, theres no wait time, good point. I really like the pictures, I remember when NY Times went to color, I did my best to save as many papers as possible, that's as much of a history buff as I am, CSPAN ran a show on a company that archives news clippings, and magazines, which is what I saved on my website and which was ruined, the photo of an offender from the CO Shooting was placed among, why did someone do that to my website? I see the common theme of wanting to prove an obsession with [criminals] or OJ someone famous for "crimes" and then through that obsession, learn or the derivatives of knowledge obtained as coming from or stemming from that base knowledge. My parents paid $30,000 a year for my college education, and $3,000/course for my law school education, there is no way shape or form, that I could ever be convinced of someones story, as taking hold of my course in life, or my outlook, which is based upon my education see, outlook.

Fitness: How you look is important, Ive always gone to the gym growing up, I was a club soccer player and worked out at the gym in high school. For some reason the only photos of me from soccer, where when I was obese, Im sure everyone had a field day, flaunting ugly photos of me around. Im not sure what that was about anyways. But it didn't cast me in a positive light later in life, there were nice photos of me taken, but all my photos and messages from friends are gone, lost in the move or thrown away not by me, yearbooks destroyed, and my high school diploma was thrown away, and all my high school yearbooks gone, and photo albums. I got into running in college, listening to diamonds are forever by Kanye West, running in the indoor track in the snow, around the basketball courts, for 40 mins max, and was in the 140s never that thin, only in the 130s when I had a short cocaine addiction for 6 months in college. My friend had visited me and was worried about me. I was distraught after a breakup, made friends, and was told to try cocaine, I was not in the mood for it, and quickly became addicted, I already was prescribed adderrall so a high functioning person, didn't need a boost, I just turned 21, drinking and getting into the bars, was a lot of excitement already for me including out with friends.

Love: Love has been a big part of my journey, through losses, addiction, failures especially, Im never alone and always have a boyfriend, unless I choose to be alone, out of protest to correct my image or fix my image, but I think that only made things look worse, and made me look like a Lesbian version of Jonah Hill from the movie Wolf of Wallstreet, sometimes I think the rumor mill, takes things too far out of context, that's not self love, to pleasure oneself, that's out of the fact that one cannot experience love with other, a bond lacking, due to some unforeseen embarrassment about them, that the one who loves them cannot explain to them, at what point does your life not become a joke, I don't think its necessary to be taken seriously in life, but know your course, and allow others to treat you as they wish, we don't need red carpets in order to feel appreciated or valued in life, just by working hard and when people leave you alone and are happy for you, that is love, when people want to be around you, share time with you, and share idle time with you doing nothing, I used to think cuddling was amazing, but more recently, sitting outside staring up into the sky, and talking for an hour was really fun!

The bottom line is that you have to have some stencil of what you are about, and what you plan to deliver to your audience, and being who you are, and based on where you have been in life, a credible source for providing input or insight into that type of life, that journey, what it looks like, and how it feels, and how to get out of those phases in life and go back to normal, that's the gift you have as someone who is well who had the privilege of being treated professionally most don't have access to medical care, and some just stop on their own without the therapy. It just looks bad, with a super long medical history, but I promise it looks worse than it was. However because it looked bad, was treated as bad, to see if things got worse, that's when you should not let what others think affect you, and if people are thinking negatively of you or if there is negative energy out, not to drink in those types of places and leave, only stay where you feel welcome, where you are not bothered, and where you fit in, stay in your age group. And if there is question as to your conduct, date older, NOT younger, and until your record is cleared (March 2020) keep applying for jobs, until you find one, and not be a burden to others.

The later misuse of someones personal history to be treated as for fraudulent endeavors, as for purposes for looks, by someone who has never worn makeup but since 2015, and treated as though acting with agenda as in expectancy of the necessity for future portrayal of self or others in the positive, is to prove some, known position of guilt or disposition existing giving rise to the necessity for future defense, save me your stockpiles, as in expectancy of something to come, as that is not my nature to anticipate the worst, but always see everything in positive light, its upon the cessation of activities causing one harm, that harm doesn't reoccur [meaning as applied to your life by your actions irrespective of your interactions with others, at a later state in time, be treated as though always existing some fear of people or of getting in trouble thats a caused condition, not by rejections in life, but by the mistreatments of persons as guilty prior to any convictions of guilt on such topics, an acknowledgement of the totality of facts suffices for acknowledgement of discomforts and later suicide attempt supports the necessity of a even broader totality of circumstances of who knows who is affected who looks bad, whos to be punished to preserves whos livelihood and esteems, dont group me with offenders, and treat me as the aggressive one its upon talking a bond is made, and for someone who is broken inside, thats not by my initiations depth to the conversation asked for, but inquired and responded to always], such as harping on subjects or by rehashing the past that is for the purposes to establish that something past has caused mental health issues now, and the presence of existence now, means same as known to be in existence past, as though one condition was the same not well, without taking into account the worsening of a condition upon drinking, sometimes only until things are made known, by baramoters of wellness, can we decide who is well and who is suffering, who is knowingly in the wrong, participating in work activities, with a known condition, that has been raised to a higher degree of illness as described as in terms not necessary be retorted or renamed in reply, as though for the current suffering from which a person suffers has always been that way, and for dispositions pre-existing is a popular excuse for diffusing blame from anyone current for someone else current suffering, as not a party to any transactions involving the wellness or unwellness later resulting from the mental health conditions of a patient, with or without a named treating physician, whats really low, is interpretation, considering the better judgment of somone who means well, and upon recommendations, is not guided but exposed to choices in life, and whether made in terms of what is known to them at the time or understand or previously known, or on record as having known, at the time, is the barometers from which all else is used to judge them as being in poor character, as open in private, curiosities, or thoughts out loud, and later made fun of for making such comments, as though unprofessional to think the only way anyone would match what was said to who I know would be to do a face search of my facebook friends, to see by their exposures, who I am in comparison to health of those around me, whether contributed by them, or affecting their wellness once becoming ill, test for relateability, the only way to test a current illness, upon past connections is to review past connections whether in a well state of mind, how they were, and whether at any point in time, became worse of personally or professionally amongst others, never in my life, have I been uncomposed, or brought to a situation in life, I could not exit myself from, its by the choices you make to move forward, no matter what it relates to or upon what basis arguments are made, upon whatever knowledges you hold, should not be judged by in the negative and always given an opportunity to heal and recover 100% health wise, that's not for the people to decide why stays and who goes, and whats causing it punish.

Whatever happened to the days receiving calls and texts from friends on our Nokia cell phones, or messages on AOL screennames, looking to hook up and make plans, miss those days. Girl time is essential. You forget once youre on your way with career goals in mind, to check back in with friends, who are all now, married and with kids, time flies. If you were much better off with friends than what is keeping you from not feeling like your friendly self. Just made pen pals with my first girl pen pal Lizzo, in the height of her success, wished her well, and thanked her, for being a role model to young women like me, career oriented, and who after being hurt once or twice have chosen a more stable path in life for ourselves "career." She represents how turning loss into dream, and by recreating her reality, to fit the person who shes always known and thought she was, from the get go, without anyone needing to remind her of how special she is, her warmth and love for the music profession really showed that day, everything to a T. For me its more than just body image, its bipolar, its ADD ADHD meds, its diet, its dating, its loss upon loss, career shifts, everything affects my mental health, to see women who are well, is very helpful when facing the reality that "life is tough but so are you" there is not one perfect reality or way of seeing things that's the beauty of life, and there certainly is not one mold to fit in order to become successful or well liked for that matter. What makes people approachable, their success? What makes people loveable? Their looks. What makes people proud? Their stability. What makes others happy? To see the growth in others. I think all of things matter when it comes to happiness, and it starts from within, being proud of yourself, and whether or not you have time for girl time, glad I joined an all girls AA meeting, just making new friends has already made a huge difference in my life, more approachable, more likeable, more loveable, on that's note: girl time is essential! Its when we separate from the ones who cared for us, or who we got along with best, that that inner turmoil occurs, feeling left out, or not included in Facebook photos, one should never feel threatened by others, that's not what girl time is about, losing friends to friends, always be happy for the happiness of others, its all about self-care and proper representation when it comes to making friends and keeping friends. Never forget that, and once you get sick, they'll be around, but don't expect anyone to jump over hurdles to get to you in life, that's when its your time to pick yourself back up, and be someone who they can equally be proud of, you may grow apart but never from sight, according to Facebook, who keeps all your friends around to watch you bloom, fade, grow, and mature as the years go on. Some of us faster than most, don't make life too short!

The World is a Beautiful Place ...

2/29/2020

If you cant get into someone else's story, don't criticize them for the life that they lead, or by how they choose to see things, and live life for themselves. There will always be people who will cause you to question yourself, or attack your credibility, and reasons for achieving in life, based upon what information they are given, will judge you in the negative. Never let anyone make you feel small, its in doing so, they are trying to get into your head, and cause you to not be yourself, bothered by them. You are you remember that, and no one can be you, and no one can compare to you, we all live separate lives, under separate circumstances, you can only be influenced by that which you expose yourself to. Some days we may feel driven, and capable of accomplishing anything in life, and sometimes we may feel less than capable, and have moments of lost faith. I do believe that we are given one life, and that we can have many lives within that one life, such as being a student, being a blogger, and being a companion, that is normal, to express oneself in different ways, depending on who they audience is. The bigger picture is not always right, and sometimes the bigger picture cannot control what goes on within, we can all dream of world peace, and to end violence but that doesn't mean its going to happen, not unless and until everyone starts believing in themselves, and stop trying to hurt or dissuade those who choose to speak their mind to make things about things that things are not about. Always be yourself. Im a very spiritual person, have been praying since I was a student in Colorado with Bodhi Tree Bookstore Candles, I do believe that when things become chaotic, its is to your benefit to simplify things in a way, that can help you earn your confidences back in life. It was not until a College Student that I realize my smarts, grew up and athlete, you can do anything you set your mind to, and if there is no where to go, in order to make things happen for you in life, always start with a balanced mindset, that will surely take you places in life.

Permission to Be Baller ...

Never expect that when confident, for your confidences in life to be tampered with or for your good deeds to go unnoticed, everyone appreciates a good Samaritan, or someone who looks out for the best interests of the majority, we can always choose which types of behavior we accept, and which types of behavior are to be abhorred by society, sometimes peoples behaviors are a manifestation of their fears in life, too boisterous or off putting, and sometimes upon leaving relationships we only remember the negatives in life, never question oneself due to a misunderstanding of the origins of the attitudes of others toward you, sometimes its jealously, sometimes its admiration, but don't expect anyone to look up to you like your some crystal ball of hope, but just in case, don't drink or do drugs when there is high expectation of you and when trust is granted to you, to explore life among others, like interviewing and attending trainings at the Boulder DAs office, if you can live a normal life, that means you are living in an altered state of mind, of fewer responsibilities, sedentary, and a recluse, is rarely a well adjusted person fit to work in any environment, let alone study, and be acknowledged as being worthwhile having been taught informations in life. Its common in times of chaos to lean on those who are most stable, and when unstable its common for others to be hard on you until you get stable, that's called being in a caretaking position managing the stability of others, or entrusting your life and livelihood under the direction of others someone with more knowledge or a better outlook in life, seeing beyond your troubles, believes in you, and helps you to realize your potential in life, its easy when frustrated to feel stubborn to talking to anyone who gives you a hard time in life, and to feel bad about yourself, its called behavioral health, learn to work among others, and manage your moods, and stability yourself, the less you rely on social cues and things you've been through to make decisions as to now, the more intune you become with whats before you and how to presently process in order of importance what is important to your understandings, whats hurting your understandings, and what is just plain too much unnecessary info and harmful to everyones health to hear about your mistakes in life, who you trusted, what drugs you did, who you hooked up with, and where you ended up in life, that's just plain stupid to only have guy friends or lovers, and expect to get far in life, even as an academician, that's not love, that's someone mistaking your wellness for invincibility. We are all human, and every heartbreak weakens or scares you emotionally, its that physical withdrawal (in loving relationships) from being in a trusted position to being in a position that causes harm to the stability of others, that some are not put in caregiving positions in life, and instead given a backseat to the wellness of others, it's a choice to not be apart of and to take chances with your health, the more times you can leave things at friendship the better homie youll be in life, stay well, and never forget who has loved you in life, and by the time you find yourself, do your best to never give up or be too hard on yourself for not having lived a perfect life, we all F up sometimes, its not necessary to always be right to live a good life, sometimes we are too strong for the times, independent, and instead of being understood, viewed as a threat to the best interests of others, and their fundamental basic health needs, to be liked and wanted by others.

When Other People Are Negative Toward You ...

2/26/2020

Usually when things are going well for you in life, you are tested for emotional stability, never get too attached to anyone or anything who doesn't think highly of you how you enable others to control how you feel, your circumstances or outlook in life. Without explanation always do your best to stay positive, whether others are for you or against you in life, most importantly always believe in yourself, its by your hardships in life that you struggle for acceptances in life, fighting is never the solution to your problems, the better you get the harder you fall, the moment you respond to any negativities in life and become defensive, always do your best to live a good life, care what people think, but don't become overconsumed with the thoughts of others, you may experience losses in life but do not be defined by those losses, there are small problems and there are big problems, always follow advices given to you by those in your immediate surroundings, people who generally care about themselves as well as the well being of those around you, so long as you do not show your face nor video in public, there is no way anyone can tell the writers health, don't wait until its too late to present yourself, before a cycle of negatives are run about you, until you become affected by others negative judgements of you, and not understand why your face keeps changing or why you experience difficulty staying well. Sometimes we shine, and sometimes when we are not well its hard to be around others, limit your interactions when you are not strong, and if you cant stay well, its okay to leave a situation that is causing you discomfort or interfering with treatment of you, not become a pawn or a stepping stone to be misused to create a negative opinion of you as not well or strong or fit to work or to do well, or be a caretaker to anyone you love in life. Until you are well will you be accepted by society, and never expect anyone who thinks they are better than you to accept you wholly into their life, it's the well that will always pick the most well, in any environment, as it is confidences that trust is built, and its hard to get close to anyone who doesn't equally fit in, or feel confident and well about themselves yet, maturing is a process.

The World is a Big Place ...

My best advice if you are experiencing difficulty adapting to your world, would be to blend in, rarely does complaining or blaming others for our difficulties in life, bring us a better life, so long as you value and appreciate what you have been through and recognize where you are now, the better off you'll be, its when we think things are worse than they are, or lose sight of where we could be in life, is when now becomes a challenge. Everyone deserves to be proud of who they are, we don't all live perfect lives, and even if every opportunity is afforded to do well in life and achieve, can we realize our potential and get jobs, that prove we are good members of society, life is not easy, take no non acceptances of you in life personally, nor accept rejections of you as though there is something defective or wrong with you, if your condition requires that you be on medications so be it, a lot of people drink and take Xanax, but no one ever labeled them as mentally ill, likewise I need meds to sleep and to function in the daytime, that doesn't make me mentally ill, it just means I have mental health issues, and difficulty functioning in the daytime, and going to sleep at night, everyone deserves help and assistance with those basic needs in life, it's a tough pill to swallow, your health, especially when you cannot do basic things in life like work and sleep and go back to work, and have to figure out a life for yourself, that inspires you to keep going in spite of not completely fitting into the norm, what a normal life is supposed to look like, driving to work and back, sleeping and watching tv. Not everyone find their place in life, don't wait until its too late to try again, its always best to blend in and fit in with society, than to follow dreams, travel, or rely on subsidiary cares in life to feel well, whole or complete, no its not companionship, and no its not love that will help keep you going in life, these are things you think you need to belong, but not always necessary, you need your smarts, and you need to feel well and achieved to be inspired to keep living life, don't self harm, the longer you prolong the process of getting well, adjusting to the meds as prescribed, rebel, or do what your not supposed to do, like being out at night, drinking or dating, the longer it will take for you to get well, and to achieve a good life, and recover from your disposition, just because one person thinks there is something wrong with you does not mean there is something wrong with you, so long as you are doing everything right in life, things should turn out for the better. And whether you are feeling well or giving up in life, remember to always see things in the positive no matter how you are treated, that's just life, people are too strong, and too condescending, and most don't believe in you, and think they know better in life, that's just someone seeing you and thinking that your worse than you are, or not seeing your potential based upon what you look like, who cares, believe in yourself!

Personal Update ...

2/21/2020

Not feeling well, hearing voices, need to get strong again, will take time. Will write when I achieve wellness, not fight with voices, thats not the solution, to let those hurting me win, if you dont have anything nice to say then dont say it all, thats would be the solution, to voices, I do my best to provide positive insight and share based on my ability to get better, that doesnt seem to make a difference when it comes to voices, its not until you are suffering that they are proven right. Suicide is not the correct response to any difficulties faced in life, be made more difficult. #stopsuicide

What Results from Negativity ...

No war is the correct response to resolving the difficulties faced by those who have it all but have not yet arrived to reflecting upon life in a way that they are yet free to make choices for themselves, its upon wellness and achievements reached in life that you are given choices. Whenever you target someones wellness, as thought deserved the only person you are harming is yourselves, by attacking those who have been present and taken the initiative to help, and then chosen to remove them from acceptances every other person is granted in life, its not until you allow negative voices to win, that you let them win, a worse condition is never the correct response to improve the conditions of others, you are only letting yourself down when you make poor decisions in life, if a relationship does not work out the first time around, and not present to date then a later rapport cannot be established, how you tell your story matters, never make an offender label out of a victim, then blame them as though by their choices they have not done their best to live life, as best as they can. Often times as someone has failed or given up in life, we blame them, seeing their lives lived as though without care and focus on their education and the monies invested to keep them well in order to get jobs one day. Never go to the wrong people for help when you are in between phases in life, if you are well on your own, then it is not necessary to incorporate anyone new in your life, its when trust is lost that people think it justified to invade your private spaces, and to take and devalue you, whether you have produced original work with good intent, and whether you have provided accurate inside to benefit those who do provide advocacy, there are many ways to live a positive life, and talking $hit about anyone who you don't believe in is not the solution, nor is connecting and sending them negative voices to prove mental health issues exists, if one cannot think independent for themselves and keep the best interests of others in mind, its because they have been excluded from their right to live a full life, and to achieve the wellness required in order to continue working, you cant stop negative interpretations from taking their toll on your health, its by insult injury occurs to self and to their outlook, and its only those who care and love you who protect your best interests, never expect that anyone will go out of their way to make a positive difference in your life, whether you are smart, good, or have living alone, minding your own business, trouble does not come into your life, unless you accept others into your life, its when we are on our own, that our guards cannot protect us, from others taking advantage of us, when we are well, lost, or working on our independence. Over the past 8 years I have learned a lot from working and finishing a masters, that whenever I do not feel well to go to the hospital or to call my Doctor, that is why I am here today, and for whatever it is worth, once I become sick, it then becomes a disservice to everyone if my condition is hurt when well.

Unless You Are Well ...

Unless you are well, don't worry much if you are feeling misunderstood in life, you can't predict the future, nor control the reactions of others to your condition, nor expect the same acceptances given to others during moments of turmoil be empathized with, it is however advantageous for you to continue to do well and not give in to negativity, whether it be to correct you, put you in your place, or subject you to harms in thought deserved or purposeful retaliation upon your safety and wellness needs, without compassion. No condition that cannot be controlled by one's own choices is ever deserved, it is however the responsibility of someone under conditions they cannot control to get help, and when provided with resources for coping, such as therapeutic settings or meds, to be gracious for any services in response to one's condition, however with expectation expect for one's hand to be held through the whole process of recovery, certain leaps you must take on your own, whether it be a decision to get help, whether it be a choice to respond, or whether it be choosing to rely on your intuitions and best decision making skills, it's hard to find your own voice, during difficult times, easy to question oneself, and while under the good care of others and medications to be treated differently depending upon how a person feels being around you or depending upon the energy or poise you exhibit in different surroundings, it just so happens that those who are most well, can easily adjust to any settings, find their way, without being influenced by the talk or behaviors of others, that would be unusual to think that anything anyone else is experiencing is about you, unless there happens to be a connection made, a parting of ways, or disbelief in anything you have to say as being genuine to self, at what point does that occur? When we are paranoid, or in states of disillusionment, it's easy to think that things are about you, does that cause one to ever feel threatened by others? I think it's when other people think that they are being thought of as being in the wrong, or where there is an exchange or interaction that causes one to feel like they were in the wrong, or held a misjudgment of someone they thought deserving of mistreatment, to then feel sick unless proven right, that's when the wellness of someone you don't know, or know of from online, gets well and you don't think that they deserve to be well, having met them in person, looking and speaking from a different disposition, we are all not outgoing people, some more shy than most, it's not a gift unless it is a valuable character or trait, that you have harvested by your good efforts to improve upon, speaking doesn't come easily to most, nor does writing, it's a practiced profession. What happens when you are denied care? A denial of care occurs when even after following treatment goals, and not improving, or achieving a condition thought befitting to someone deemed to have mental health issues and self-harm issues, caused by use of drugs or alcohol, seeks different treatment, a better condition cannot always be achieved, only through experience do we learn that unless we are compliant to whomever's care we are under, are we treated with care thought deserved, it's when we rebel from the care given that others give up on helping you. If you have been compliant for 8 years, on risperidone and abilify shots, and have not given your best always online as a writer, does not mean that as a person you are a lost cause, and it's okay if someone you seek help from does not want to help you, never take that personally, it's just because either they have lives or their own or think that your issues are heavier than they are, think that it's better to toy with your condition and treat you as beneath others to control your options in life, and to hurt you when options are afforded to you in life to move forward, life is not a movie, and although that could be a happy ending in someone's viewpoint who doesn't like you to see you get to a well condition and then get hurt to a point of no return, would be giving you a taste of the good life, or a better condition, than trying to take back all opportunities for acceptance, by attacking your good character based upon your experiences growing up shared. Until you get well, will you get better, until you try to make a good impression will you overcome self-doubt or intimidation by the interpretations of others, or auditory hallucinations such as voices, enable illness to kick in, that would be throwing up for three days, after taking handfuls of anti-psychotics several nights in a row, and write this. There is no value to anything shocking or hurtful, non-acceptance only hurts until the point you feel unwelcome in a place you were removed from, and thought justified, to prove that all displacements are a result of poor decision making, or resulting from you liking people who don't like you, what is compassion? Friendship, and when was it a good choice to stop dating, 2014, after the first failed relationship, after punishment, you become a worthless endeavor to care for, and it's then you must care for yourself without expectation of help or guidance from others, and as privileges get taken away from you, medications changed, always do your best to stay positive, not all people were meant for love some are best as friends. Proving psychosis and causing psychosis in someone who is publicly announced as bipolar, is a risk I took with my health, and being labeled an addict or someone with voices, is why I was taken off Adderrall and Vyvanse and put on Provigil, its important to be smart, and no matter how far down we go in life as a result of poor judgment of us, its not until you are well that it is appropriate to be around others, never trust an unstable condition in the hands of others, its usually those we don't understand who get put down and rejected or ignored, to see how they respond, whether they leave or return to our lives, in a worse state, to prove or disprove the causes for the mental health issues of someone they don't respect or think has not tried hard enough in life.

Purposes for Loving Yourself ...

With love, all things tend to fall into place, that's when you're most certain and confident, sometimes with companionship, sometimes in the company of friends or a loved one, do we experience a sense of peace within, that we are exactly where we should be in life. That sense of togetherness and focus independent of self, is called feeling a sense of belonging, love is not always required, but in small doses can make a significant change to our outlook, and voice within, where no matter how lost be become, sick, ill, or no matter what pains we encounter, along our journey to recovery, its that faith in ourselves that is crucial to our well being and ability to adapt no matter what our circumstances. Remember you are human, and although there may be moments of sadness, joy, or pain, you can always move forward, and choose to focus on something that brings you that sense of inner peace, alone, or among all, by our experiences in life, we learn how to adjust our settings to meet our needs to accomplish and to be around others, never hide from living life, or wallow in sadness for too long, youre only hurting yourself, when you isolate, its upon starting life over, or reintegrating among others, and connecting with old friends, you get reminded of the life you've left in place of whatever illness or sadness you allowed to sit to convince you not to move forward or that youre not worth it in life, theres never an emotion so strong that is worth leaving life for, that's simply a state of mind when you are overcome with mental health issues, sometimes when we think too much, communicate our fears, or in private ruminate over our lives and what has gone wrong, give power to negative thinking, what you hear back then are things that don't make you feel good or confirm those feelings, always think beyond, when you are feeling the darkness of the day, or moment, its just not being on point, not moving forward, convinced that no change is possible, why give up on yourself, always let your good days determine your future potential, the more good days you have to be proud of yourself will give you the momentum to keep going in life, and not feel like time is long, or too short, or feel not good enough to try, or to begin something new, like a new job, friendship, or relationship. Its upon disconnecting that we stop, its upon connecting we feel, and its upon thinking we make choices, and choose what direction we allow our thoughts and feelings to take us, life is always in your control, and no matter what happens to you in life, or around you, remember better days are always ahead.

Stop Bullying

My record gets expunged 2020. Because I am still getting voices, I feel suicidal, and my face looks weird again. You can always go to the hospital, and if you can't figure out why youre not feeling well, you can always do step work, thats to identify upon looking back in life, when your life was normal, and at what point you needed medication to function, and whether it was due to alcohol or drugs. I think because I was punished, after losing 50lbs, and achieving beauty, it will be difficult no matter how well I get to be around anyone who doesnt like me, or thinks poorly of me, my journey back to wellness, after staying home for 3 years on 4 night meds, sleeping all day and night, after talking myself through my problems and hitting my head, decided to write because I dont deserve voices. After you get punished its hard to live a normal life, especially, if you didnt recognize that talking through your problems with someone else was offensive or sickening, everytime I am social I lose trust, everytime I fall in love, I get left alone and get sick, you are only smart once in life, I think voices are hurtful, not helpful, I dont experiment with others, nor should anyone experiment with me. I worked so hard in school and got jobs, to get a job, stayed home never went out, and upon going out at night, eventually you get sick, its for once in awhile, please stop bullying me its causes me suicide, its taken along time to adjust to being around people, trips to starbucks, get used to the noise of the day, upon connecting and disconnecting causes me illness and suicide, this was helpful to write here, I think the court was too hard on me, without hearing from me, and I deserve to live life. Ive done my best to talk to courts and help them, I only know what I know, and thats to prevent illness from occurring based upon illness Ive experienced. As you get better in life, don't commit suicide, because someone thinks your a bad person, or because you look weird, life is not a joke, and no one deserves to be hurt because they were misunderstood, or got sick bullied, if I can only focus on one thing at a time, school, writing, or running tormenting me is a handicap, its not motivation, and taunting causes illness, not #worldpeace, and music helps, but only when well, I spent (2004-2017) living alone, running, and writing in private I dont deserve to have mental health issues. #stopsuicide

The Repercussions of Bipolar and Suicide ...

Based upon my own experiences, once you receive help, you usually do better in life, and move on from whats ailing you. I think in private we deal with our problems, and once you have overcome a problem, those thoughts are never forgotten, but are put to rest in place of new thoughts, which keep you moving forward in life, not drawn toward memories of sadness, or be reminded of times of illness, then you end up right back where you were. There will always be adjustment phases in life, sometimes well and independent, and sometimes functioning better with friends, on in relationships, and sometimes you need to be alone. If you ever feel threatened by losses in life, let things go, never try to understand a loss, do your best to stay well, sometimes its not intended for a loss of companionship to occur, and if its been an issue in the past, then its simply something to talk about with a present companion, that's a fear, everyone is entitled to socialize and be friends, that's not the cause of loss, nor does thinking anyone is trying to take away from you anything that makes you happy, life is meant to be lived first for oneself, and secondly for those around them, if you ever feel sabotaged in life, think first how could you make better decisions, in life, as we mature, less of the small things in life cloud our perspectives, or choices, or needs, and rarely when we are not well, does it do any good, to self-harm in response to any taunting or voices you hear, if you and your problems are deemed responsible for your cares, then it is deemed unreasonable to understand the causes for care, if for selfish reasons, or a disposition caused by losses in life, I don't think you can ever live a better life, to make proud an old life, once you leave one life, you will always face difficulty adjusting as having suffered those losses in life, it's a choice to make sacrifices in life, and to separate from others, its never the fault of whoever has insulted you, or made you feel small, don't allow illness to take hold of your sense of being, a lot of things people say hurts, its what you take personally, transforms you as a person, and affects your disposition, the more fear resulting within you as you enter the world professionally, the less likely you will be taken seriously as maladjusted to reality, and offbase, there are ways of punishing people for how they have talked in the past or in good humor told stories about their lives, that tone does nothing to undo the hatred and bullying the results from others thinking you have imaginary fears, and thinking that you are the producer of fears, for those justifications others seek to cause one illness, you can either allow the opinions of others to cause you illness, or you can do your best in spite of those negative feelings others have toward you, whether banded together to destroy you thinking that you experience illness as a product of your own choices in life, and whether you were once able to overcome bipolar. If illness is sought to be proven, than any addiction reinforces that belief, and any non-compliance illustrates a purposeful effort to get the opinions going in motion, of you purposefully not well, and once you get well, no matter what meds you are on, always do your best to be smart, life is tough, no one is to blame when illness occurs, unless you can identify people with illness, and purposefully causing illness to others. Bipolar is not contagious, if put on the right meds, tantrums do not occur, and if sober, wiser decisions are made, I don't think its necessary to judge a person in the privacy of their phone or computer, to determine whether they mean well, are sick, or to prove illness, if taking meds as prescribed. Risperidone and Abilify are not a choice, they are prescribed, on those meds I sleep all day, if you self-harm or cut yourself dramatic, if everything is going well, and suddenly life gets difficult, as you grow up and mature, its not a big deal, there will be more opportunities in life, and if you cannot provide for yourself, and do not get a job well, you can always file for disability services, in my best opinion, even if one gets voices, bullied, or taunted, whether it can be proven or not, at that time, it was thought deserved, as though you were not doing your best, and sharing illness or fears resulting from your own wrongs, if you did everything you could to do well to get good grades get a job, then it shouldn't matter what anyone thinks, from my own experience its based upon your own analysis, and how you see things, you will be judged, and someone who has attended law school, will be tested for mental illness, because they don't understand how bullying caused the deterioration of your mind, or face, that is done to you, as you take personally negative voices, which cannot be proven, don't commit suicide. If you can speak or you can write, then write until you can tolerate hate, so long as you allow hate to win, you react and respond in an immature way, slurred speech, and in writing. #stop hate

What is Heroism? ...

There is nothing heroic in doing the unexpected, usually nothing by surprise is appreciated or valued for whatever work was put forward to accomplishing a goal in favor of self, persons, or others, not necessarily to the disadvantage of others, as everything can be read and analyzed its to achieve what ends, in favor of whom, whether that be a negative judgement or information written in support of self, anything that helps you in life, if you are in the public eye, may be used to hurt you, whether there is any truth to their understanding its not seeing you win in life, as not an agent of your own cares, but in response to the cares or issues of others, as though one cannot think for themselves if not hinted or triggered by others, its usually the case that you are focused on yourself, sometimes you accept that you don't always understand everything, I think that I am at a greater burden than most as a blogger, not needing to prove myself, but upon acceptances, reminded of what hurts, whether directed toward me, or later seen and recognized, as viewed in private, its to whom is attached to your interests you wither or wane in energy, not knowing or understanding for what reasons, its upon being talked about, whether for positive reasons or not, if you are not doing the right thing can easily get lost in the fogs or seeming disillusioned states, we cant be hyper focused and sharp at all times, its okay to enjoy the moment, and just because one is uncomfortable does not mean defective and just because one is taunted, but does not realize it, does not mean that that occurs always, I think what is being judged is whether I attract negative attentions or whether I help stop violence, I think I have done my best on Facebook and Twitter and Website to rationalize, why when things are not going right we turn on professionals, and why would you ever put on the front lines, people who are analyzing the issues of those they are in disagreement with, there is proper forms of fighting and expressing displeasure, then its attacking a source of someone who works hard, as to blame of the cause if or about, that was not the purpose for sharing to be used, to make everything about me, if any warnings were given to make things not about people, then that's why nothing is about people from my life, its until triggered to give examples of where you are coming from, that that just gives other more examples of sides to support other than you, and continue to attack you as not being on the right team, not right minded, not a team player, or creating teams, or some kind of leader of input, no its by writing you are read, not by popularity understood or accepted, I write. *I incorporated my hashtag, if the music is not good enough, I get blamed for a "#."

Finding a Stopping Point to Thoughts ...

Finding your stopping point, depends on your threshold, or need for clarity to feel whole, or to feel right, (1) in the wrong, more to feel better (2) perceived in the wrong, less to say, more to do (3) speaking freely looks in avoidance to speaking to issues, as though speaking makes you feel well, not looked at as a useful processing of thoughts. Different forms of writing are appreciated, (not alluding to my education), word count (not speculating of issue), that's to say as said, in what order do those circumstances occur, Im not sure, if not sure, then for study? Not to study what I have shared, as I am responding always, not always to myself, but in response to how I feel in reflection of what is shared, later sometimes speak better, or figure out what is used to illustrate insult as described, where anything abstract pretty, is taken down, that's to see if I feel hurt not knowing hurt later cannot find something, see that I have been hurt then say hurt because of whats taken, to see how I respond, whether whats written is created as disposable information or useful, and how I suffer if I lose everything, that would mean for purpose writing, in school you write by citation, in real life you speak from your mind, the two types of disciplines do not require same focus one more difficult to read understand and comprehend and as applied, show that you understand what you have learned. Its in prosecution mode as heard or defended against there is no stopping point at which both sides are at ease, that's fundamental to disagreement, not for testing now, why I call the police, where there is disagreement or difference in handling the majority, its assumed appropriate to control the majority not in favor or anticipation of disagreement, but as more knowledgeable than whomever can provide added insight as being in someones life, trusted as close to. There are specialties, we all know ourselves, and as remembered and while responding, as you become more aware of how you have corrected behavior expect that others will look for repetition of causes for illness as they see occurring, to see if existed in another state, as described affected, only by disappointment do those attached become sick, that's like family and friends, or teachers, then by mentions whether to cast blames and as misunderstood or having done their part, to situate someone as target for taunting as though deserved to say because attached to OJ got away with tweeting and those sick, she is responsible for. I was the first to report to Bazelon, as trusted worked, and once sick could no longer be relied upon. - Again in explanation illness is felt, that is as explained, illness looks like assuming strength or wellness directed toward ones self, deserved.

For Purposes of Getting Well ...

For the purposes of getting well not opening invitation for fighting, or for making others look insensitive as I become not well, as justification for illness, I respect the opinions of others and their health, as my condition was caused by fighting that caused my separation that caused my drinking that caused my suicide, then to recreate events until not well, to see if when in fighting if I get suicidal to test for care or selfishness, based upon response, as having learned or understanding the consequences for responding, and whether and why not taken seriously as a professional, and at no later point can a shared understanding if it looks like someone who when everything is well by their own mistakes makes everything typically not well, and then back through the hoops of acceptance not because of acceptance before one has disproven wellness, and on what basis, until it looks completely of my doing, then any later matchings of illness, to say because in selfishness, and while in selfishness, not thinking, and that paranoid is not due to me not understanding that others look bad if I look bad to say not being compassionate about the separation of others from me, saying that I have difficulty letting go, or as defined by me, someone in need of others to feel good, to say that not independent or strong but for my work experiences, and to say working to look good not because I care, then saying as trained, any later carings, or rescinding of care was marked by a taking away of a badge not to return as recorded by me, that's as reported wondering, why a separation occurred, as though not trusting who trained me, then every interaction post, is as accepted, with incident of not well, then rejection then say because of my actions separation, not because of my focus or cares or by experience cared, to say because for selfish reasons, then saying as in defense or as prosecuted in class searched, defensive, and say was reasonable to be made fun of, so even as transparent later, with everything online, makes no difference, if it still bad behavior than it gets processes as illness, and no wellness later will change a negative viewpoint of you, and then say that you are dependent upon others easily offended cant take a joke, then it goes how far back have you seen this way, and whether all decisions because one is sensitive. Everything online is preserving what is a positive representation not as in defense of issues claiming that any previous negativity was not justified my wellness now is to show not deserved then, that's using a different time to explain another time, and no time is the same unless wrong, so to prove wrong, separated, with or without fighting, head hitting is because one feels as though they are not right and because of their own doing suicidal because it was reasonable for others like a teacher to F with your head as read, hurt you as though they think you have hurt others, see if you respond in the same or a similar way as being misunderstood, and whether reporting of misunderstandings was in defiance or in question and who as outted felt as though they looked bad to justify sibling rivalry as though my understandings caused others to drink or do drugs, upon investigation and reporting, everything gets considered, until its made of issue or reaction, illness, if caused by self or others, reporting in public is what is wanted to say reporting is what makes me ill paranoid, then do things that cannot be said, or proved reported, then to hurt as responding to negatives, or highlighting hows, and then to prove again how putting others at risk of harm, as thinking of ways one has been hurt shared.

Will write again in private, not to others, and establish wellness on my own (2020). And in anticipation of not being prepared for negativity will not socialize for another 3 years. Because its not clear, so whether forgiveable, if hurt, just adds to ammunition, to say I deserve suit. I am not a wanted connection as not well, so long as that can be proved, its reasonable to hurt me, or for me to feel hurt, that is to illustrate that one should not feel good by others, so a sharing in public is to share to feel better, and that others opinions matter, to change opinion, one betters themselves not by what others think and no matter what is thought should be good.

Sincerely,

Leslie Fischman

#stopsuicide #bipolar #onmeds #stoppedabilify because it causes later disabilities told, risk of.

Please Note: ONLY UCLA is approved to study why I hit my head or got or get suicidal, please.

Leaving Messenger ...

There is talking in private and there is talking in public, there is also talking in private in public, and talking in public period, all three situations are different, and depending upon whether you can control, what is brought out of you in life, its best to talking private one on one to a licensed therapist, that is my best advice given my experiences to avoid, mental illness later on associated with talking about private matters in public, and having the public be concerned as to your private matter affecting their health, that's when no one wants to hear from you, when you cannot manage your issues on your own, and when your illnesses in life affect others, your frustrations in life, do not help you integrate and live a normal life its usually our problems that keep us from living a normal life, focusing or functioning. Don't compare your best to anothers, that's not how to achieve well, we are all under a different set of pressures in life, and some more empathized with than others, some more compassionate toward than others, its until you prove others justified for giving up on you, that you lose motivations in life, which were once based upon your own wellness, and simply ignoring bullying, never respond to it, and suit yourself to a Shittier hand in life, to make others feel better about themselves, what was once bullying then gets turned into guilt, and from that guilt, no one feels better or worse by communicating upsets, only interference with wellness is defended upon, and boundaries placed, as though a fight will erupt, that's not a fight coming, that's disappointment, disappointment, is when you are made to care, or made to feel bad, and losses of motivation occur, when you care, but don't care to try, and when you try, and feel like for the wrong reasons a waste of time, to care about why things are the way they are explain, that looks like justification but its not for ones, inability to remain well, there is a point when if you cannot stay well, and do not respond properly, or for the wrong actions explain worries, that you get dealt with as though you deserved to be kept out in life, that drive and inner strength is not physical strength, when it comes to being a professional, weight problems occur, because energy and physical stamina is applied to physical labor in the work place such as in typing and argument, or writing creation, and that stamina, if applied elsewhere leaves less room for focus mentally to think, sometimes it helps to clear ones mind, that doesn't mean because of illness existing, its hard to work physically, when there is mental illness, and its hard to function without feeling good, which is time in quiet, which usually follows working hard, you feel good about yourself, and if you do not feel good during moments of rest, what more can you do, other than exercise to feel good, you can read, reading takes practice, and with reading, you feel better, as your thoughts are directed by the writer, and material presented by another, is an easier step to wellness, than going from spoken to, before speaking, and hurt, and then as tired and physically and mentally ill, speak, speaking to all, and speaking to one on one, if sued then it becomes "the people" versus you, then that's a new handicap, you would think upon isolation and earning good time in life, working hard, by the time you present yourself, on paper, and in person well looking, acceptance would be achieved, why you stopped applying for jobs, and continued with your studies, had you been given a job, then no need for a JD continue on, that's using time spent, achieving, than time spent wasted applying, once you get a no, that's usually cause for redirection in life, or for trying harder, not toward those places in life that rejected you, usually upon being hurt or not wanted, you don't go back, that's not who to "prove wrong" that's not what is meant by "prove them wrong" its by people who think less of you, to then not worry for you, or hold any opinion toward you in the negative, the more you give for them to justify spaces in life, the more they question your motivations in life, as being because of those spaces credited for your wellness now, don't destroy relationships, if you have none, that's why people leave doors open, because they keep moving forward. I think for the most part I have shared as much as possible, Id rather my heart be burning than my head be burning, from taking things too far, if my body is telling me to stop, usually I listen and don't push myself beyond my capacity physically, with mental illness, running was one way to work hard, without in words, push myself, I didn't need to take a picture, and later to campaign for causes, was not the purpose for the run, but a pretty photo to share, to illustrate, wellness at the time, and approvals given, that's not leadership, that's shared interest to prevent locally. I appreciate the time everyone has taken to read my messages if I have messaged you, I now have a new therapist I am paying for to see twice a week, and think that there are issues beyond acceptance needs, to address at this time, if it sounds legal, then to talk to my attorney as directed by the courthouse I am seeking expungement from, and not talk to SCOTUS, if I can talk to the police and a social worker in addition to whats been going on, to treat my condition, which is thinking Im attacked in private that's causing voices, so that I do not go out and feel normal in public, so that if out in public I do not appear well, and if so, how I am now, and if I do not appear well now, that's to justify in the past only hospitalized twice, that I was as disabled then as I am now, if I was disabled then, I would not be able to drink, or need tons of meds, if I was only on l vyvanse then and no antipsychotics and maybe Depakote if needed, there was no need to hurt me, and make me look stupid, to make me seem like someone to let go of, so in response, not become someone to let go of, but "prove them wrong" not self-harm if someone you cared about is being accusatory toward you, doesn't trust you, that's because they do not hear from you, and if you are not working, then they think you are not trying in order to work. There is a point in time, when you have left your focus, and concentrating too much on the interpretations of others, that can cause you to be suckered into their problem with you, which no amount of writing positive or well thoughtful or calm, can cause compassion toward you, so long as people are able to hurt you to get you to respond weirdly, then they feel justified as having let you go, in life, or made fun of you in life, thought less of you, because you deserved it, or had a big head, its someone who is not aware, becomes aware, doesn't get upset, its someone whos not aware, and has disability, then thinks, a caused disability, that is not a predictable set of circumstances in life, people are mostly for themselves, just ignore bullying.

Nothing to Talk About ...

Even if you have nothing important to say, that doesn't mean that an opinion of yours if said is not important, or that your thoughts are unimportant, all thoughts are important, and all thoughts affect how you feel, whether or not you are the one speaking. Sometimes we are at a loss of words, this can occur during times of sadness, other times things just may be so complex or over our heads that we don't know where to start, or how to add to the discussion. Note that there "will always be those strange and awkward moments in a conversation where we struggle to know what to say." [1] Its in those awkward moments, that you realize how little you know, why reading is important. The more you read, the more comfortable you are speaking, and the more you read, the easier it is to write. That is, you are accustomed, to ways of talking, by exposure, so when the time for conversation, arises, you already have that confidence, of how to put together thoughts and how to put together words, to convey and understanding of what is said, and if possible contribute a new idea or string together a few words, that follow in a natural way to what is said, that's being prepared. Sometimes it happens that "it can be difficult to keep the interaction going in a smooth and natural way because we're not entirely confident of what and what not to talk about." [2] Don't be dumbfounded, just because you do not understand the basis from which others are speaking or read into things too much as needing to be about common grounds, to share a laugh, or a an understanding of a topic, some arguments have already or never been made, so any thoughts you may have may be new, give yourself a pat on the back, and sometimes when sharing your generalized understanding based upon what you hear, analysis will fall on point. For example, in an lower division writing course in college, I had yet to buy the textbook assembled by the professor, spiral bound, but still participated in group lectures, and made arguments, based upon what the other students were saying, and by the time we met for office hours, without a textbook he replies "you're a pretty good bull$shitter" "how could you participate without having read the stories?" and I explained. -Don't be shy, don't follow my example, but if you have to speak, to speak, speak, but if its better to listen, listen, that's a judgment call on your behalf, when to share your mind, but have no fear, "no matter what you say to someone in the average conversation, they will almost 100% certainly forget it within a few days." [3] Why are some conversations more memorable than others, it just depends on what youre into I guess, whether you have an easy time memorizing what someone has to say, that can be because it makes sense, or have a more difficult time, keeping track of the information being said, because it is more complex, you don't understand the language, or the concepts enough to get into it, and have something to say in reply, for me its like watching Fox News, challenging. -That's politics, so complicated, overly complicated, that unless your educated, and with a background in the subjects that matter, will you understand why people are given positions of power to dictate what other people think about people, and the subjects concerning them, that's just how life is, you have to get used to something sometimes before you can fully understand it.

Snap Out of It ...

Going in and out of delusion is no easy task, especially without the right meds, it takes a minute to recognize when you are off, and by the time it stops, you are stuck wondering, how and why. This happens to me a lot of Twitter, my mind full of thoughts, trying to make sense of what doesn't make sense, or even worse trying to make sense of what has passed, based upon how I feel now, as though my feelings now are because of what doesn't make sense, don't give power to the non-sensical, what do you know best, know yourself, and don't allow the behaviors or words of others to dictate your direction in life and how you feel, cause you to question yourself, or second guess, your direction in life. Many times in life, we get lost, but most don't stay there not for months and years, if you're feeling lost, and get put on meds that are supposed to help you, well don't blame the medications for your lack of motivation in life, as keeping you in a stuck state, off base with reality, its always your responsibility to return to normal, yes if it's a choice, and if life is based upon choices, then yes as a choice, with a bad attitude, you won't make progress in life, and stay where you are, under those conditions, never get too comfortable or used to a set of conditions that you know you can do better or move on from, why stay anywhere you do not feel welcome in life, or at your best, allow time for the dust to settle, its in those cases that its not a matter of routine that will fix the problem, but a matter of change that will produce a better state of mind, moving forward, you cant learn sometimes doing the same thing everyday, sometimes you have to add or subtract things from your routine, even when you don't feel confident about making changes in your life, to move on from whatever is bothering you. It's the chances we take when we are not well to get better that you will be most proud of, and then think of all the days wasted, not trying for a new beginning in life, once you get going, it's a matter of momentum to keep you going in life. Never give up on finding more solutions to better your outlook and physical presence on earth, its you that are in charge of your outlook and how you feel, and much of how you see is based upon how you feel, so you cant always better yourself simply by making minor changes to how you see, your body needs to change too along with that positive outlook, defy the aging process, and keep your youthful wits about you, and demeanor, that is what will make you feel strong, not getting tired, not getting older, that doesn't make you wiser, what makes you wise is whether under any conditions moving forward you are able to remain the same just as strong as you were supposed to be then, and now just as strong as you wish you could've been then.

Identified as Someone Trying to Be Identified as About ...

If ever you think things are about you about peoples work from other departments not concerning your achievements in life, there is not set placement or ideal that's is trying to be fulfilled, that fixes those losses in time, its by wellness, that wellness fixes others sometimes but not all the time if well can someone be made to feel better, that's a gift upon appearances. I don't think its appropriate to continue to experiment with my condition now to recreate 2013, I do not believe in recreating events, to not state points to be attacked, as cares tested for, to see what end results occur from, a manifestation of unknown to known to establish fact is coordinating for an outcome, that's not my profession, coordinating outcomes. I have been trained to be prepared to help and supply with information, but never to fix. Its upon not being well that you lose your ability to help others. And when that ability is lost, you realize that you were well without having reacted to losses and channeled those sufferings in life, through music, or removal of records or photos from record, as not helpful portrayals of self, if at issue, and not wanting to be part of issues, don't worry or become defensive, prior to anything bad happening, it was that I was hurt on the street treated as defective that's not because I was not well, bad photos, or look weird, that's not deserved, as thinner, but because someone who they thought was appropriately making fun of me for going to law school perfected an idea to minimize me to nothing to not exist, I grew up on the block, that's not for show, or to tell. Its mostly in discomfort in life, we do not feel or look good, that's usually feeling like we have to respond for acceptances if you are too tired to be showy kind with energy back, then that's not feeling well enough looks like you're looking to be checkin in on, not available, that's okay. Its okay to not be picked, friended, cordial, and not be awake at timing of responding to talking.

How to Feel Better ...

Sometimes discussion of issues does not make one look or feel better, but not feel well, that's in the event you have been harmed, and the person to whom you are speaking to cannot provide you with reassurances in life, as to your outlook whether, well, in a sufficient way to make you feel better as understood or upon recommendations being made to you. Its when issues arise as to causes for discomfort occurring through the sharing of said issue, its to see what guilt or reaction arises in the face of something said being in the wrong, then as something said in the wrong, whether the energy to correct or articulate, how important or motivated one is is based upon what matches as correct there are no alignments of interests just symbolisms current present that may or may not resonate with you that was not the purposes for creating a creative corporation centered on protecting the wellness of those producing material, I think is important has been important to maintenance of my wellness. The purposes for ending a discussion is not to not end up in the wrong or as studied be preserved in the negative opinion of self, as having reflected and upon what and what is causing reflections whether present or going and why why they designate people as rejects or going, or dying, or suicidal, or bipolar, or addictive, to make people not care about people and to see how they respond when not cared for in the negative, or loud, Im not here to console or to provide reassurances as that was not how I was trained, to help others, nurturing, that is for boyfriends to connect by heart love is the solution to pain upon recognition of issues, be yourself again, not all can be close once those issues are protected by #scotus to decide issue.

Personal Update ... [Called #FBI today ...]

After much consideration have decided to discontinue the use of Twitter for expressing my ideas and thoughts, or humors in life, ways of thinking about things, as it has not been helpful for my focus, and has an addictive quality, is helpful if assists with my appearance and image, but is not helpful if it requires continued discussion, and then once ending with arguments, is usually a disfavorable position to be in, once appearing well consistently, sets me back, there is not time frame for wellness it's a decision, to discontinue, what has helped you get well beyond the point of feeling well, so its not that the service does not provide me a service, I love Twitter its that the attitude toward me changes, and I need my confidence in life, am not for boosting the confidences of others by putting myself down in life, or be used as a source of blame, for understandings as though Ive misled the people into believing in the causes I supported. That's not a reflection of my cares changing, but as tired after 7 years of writing, need to change course in life as to what will help me live longer stay driven and motivated to get a job, and behave in a way that represents myself and those around me well, its time to change my course in life. I think for the most part its fun to lead discussions online, with humor, and intellect, based upon my understandings, but do not think that its wise at this time to lead any discussions without further inspection of my own issues, not get beat up without me knowing it. I think that things were done to me to think I was lesbian then, no never only after rejections in life, that's how curiosity arises, when you feel grose to feel good, that's something new. As a writer that grose feeling is just being tired, you have to work on how you look and how you write as a blogger because both matter, and achieved a greater following with pictures to help. I called the FBI this morning and had a good talk with them sharing current worries frustrations with them in regards to image concerns, wellness, life expectancy, and not using the past. The issue, is whether now is to illustrate the past or whether now is creating for future endeavors.

Trusting Instincts ...

Overtime there is an eventual wear and tear on abilities as one gets tired, do not be mislead by the bad fortunes of others, or feel sad for the misfortunes of those who in expectancy of something good to occur are received with a different set of equations to decipher in life, there is no one main knowledge or understanding, and its not always through a shared similar or like understanding that wellness can be achieved but enable everyone to achieve for each their own wellness based upon where they are in life, don't fall victim to the big heads of others, or be intimidated by cockiness to boot, that's not your expectancies its theirs, that's not your outlook but theirs upon seeing you, as well, in spite of whats occurring think not affected, that's a constant issue, when to shine, when to allow the past the leave you and what is to remain to be beneficial to a better understanding of protecting whats around you and whos around you. Ive always been a careful decision maker, hiding my friends on Facebook and album, since 2008, that was my choice, given the turbulence at the time, affecting my commute to work, and my brother in Mumbai. I don't think that there is a causal connection that need be drawn or inferred from my blogging or not blogging at the time of those incidences, have always been a very private person, and have never thrust myself into public light, to control the outlooks or affect the outlooks of others, what is wellness to me, it has at times been a struggle but have always taken meds as directed, to not make this a lengthy post, have always done my best. -Listen to the women around you, its usually by their patience in life, its time to stop what youre doing and shift gears, if its time to work, work, get well, get well, not date, then don't date.

By the Time it Dawns on You ...

By the time it dawns on you, that change is needed to fix your life and fix yourself, hopefully youre not too late, its never too late to ditch any teams in life that are going going gone, meaning continuing to make the same mistakes in life, and not doing their part to better themselves, but set themselves worse off in life, without complaint, too accepting of their malapadative conditions, and not trying hard enough in life to achieve a better life for themselves and others, that's called giving up in life, don't ever let your circumstances in life pile up to unbearable lengths, and accumulated setbacks, which keep you from feeling level headed, steady, and capable of recovering from whatever has ailed you in the past or by whats currently ailing you, become too difficult to overcome, we are all affected by the times, some of us choosing to care, some of us forced to care, and some of us by profession affected by the outlooks of those within a profession, and their ability or lack of ability to stay present and perform under any circumstances in life. If there is one bit of advice I can give concerning my past, its to never give up and become something youre not, simply to let people feel better than you, or feel like they have won, by putting you down in life, eventually there is a stopping point, when you stop allowing others to put your down in life like you deserve it, if you allow those conditions to prevail, sure enough you enable them to prove anything about you, without a right mind on your shoulders, be centered throughout any storms in life. If you can stop a harm from occurring then do so, like sending a book to Attorney Avenatti instead of Trump, if you can stop hate from happening, then its okay to March at a Parade in West Hollywood, if you need to work two jobs to be respected and look like a hardworker, then take on two jobs, but not three, and if you can be smart, then be smart, sometimes our humor is not regarded as smart, and can be interpreted as a cocky misrepresentation of your beliefs or outlooks in life, without an understanding of your understandings and influences in life, its easy for others to judge you and be condescending toward you, not seeing you as someone who is trying to help others to see better, in light of negative opinions, and continue to make progress, regardless of what has transpired not play to those tunes in life, and support the actions of peoples unhappinesses in life, and taking out their anger on others, cause one to look or appear the same, as though by their educations in life, do not have a positive outlook in life, and be labeled someone who is a drug addict or paranoid, an underachiever, who causes harm to others, that is wrong to assume that anyone who is not doing well, who can made to look like in the same shoes or be mischaracterized, is equally angry for the same reasons, not by their own individual shortcomings in life, then say that that type of failure and attitude in life, is a by product of their understandings of the world, similarly misunderstanding the positive representations of others, and thinking that their actions can change other peoples understandings in life, of the past, that's wrong to do, to put people in similar shoes, and label them the same, when one has committed crimes against humanity and the other has not, do not compare me to those who have been hurtful toward others and committed crimes. I have been successful academically without interference from drugs or alcohol, achieved, and worked, and maintained jobs while finishing my schooling, and if I have not finished my schooling, that is not because of anything that has occurred in another state, if I took a poster down before a movie came out, those pieces were submitted to the Federal Building for review, that's wrong to think that me singing on the street in NY outside of our hotel, with lyrics containing the same words as a movie title was intended to reference a movie title to which others watched and were attacked by gun violence, its okay to feel lost, in times of need, its by what you do to help make a positive difference that helps others to feel safe, not promote negative interpretations of people, to make it seem like its okay to think negatively of others, and then to enable attacks to occur, as though one is situated on a same or similar side in life, that's wrong to do, to put someone down in life, and change their voice, so that its coming from a different starting point in life. If youre on your own youre on your own in life, without assistance or reassurances from others, its easy to get paranoid, or to question the words of people around you, especially if a teacher references a document in your computer and makes fun of you in front of the class. Im not OJ's Attorney, but yes I was relayed a message upon entering law school, and Im here to take my life seriously and do the best that I can in whatever capacity I am given in life to achieve, that's not for anyone to judge me, as though Im not good enough to speak to the courts, and to share my viewpoint, or how I have been misunderstood or harmed in life, and then to further those comparisons in life, put a picture of an offender on my magazine page of my website without my permission, for what reasons does it serve to situate me as though my responses triggered negative reactions in others, and if so, how did everyone know of me to be so aggravated by any one set of opinions of me, to respond in that way toward others, I don't promote violence, Im not an angry person, and Ive never been in a fight in my life, why hurt me mentally so that I fall off center, then blame the meds, when everyone is cocky and suddenly quiet, you begin to wonder for what reasons, have the attitudes of others changed, its not okay to treat people like they are stupid that is wrong, and its not for those reasons that I visited the US Supreme Court, this happened after I visited the US Supreme Court, everyone thinking that I was communicating wrongs on my part, by purchasing nighties, which Mariah Carey collected on an episode of MTV Cribs, just because everyone thinks you've f-ked up in life, doesn't mean its your fault, and just because everyone thinks once you fall ill, that anyone else who falls ill is because of you is wrong to connect you to someone elses set of circumstances in life unrelated to your own shortcomings in life, no two lives are the same until they meet, don't assume that just because someone went to CU that everyone knew them or knew who they were, if you've lived a quiet life, suffered in private, treated for those addictions in life, then you move forward in life, as having learned from those mistakes in life, don't bring people down in life, based upon informations provided to you by them, to justify any purposeful misconduct on their part to interfere with the good health of others. I have always done my best to live a good life, absent minded any fear causing conditions Ive experienced in life, continue to stay focused on myself, staying out of trouble, and especially not causing troubles to others, its for those reasons I think my participation being called in to Moms Demand, and volunteering for Brady, was denounced as though for personal reasons, punished during the time I assembled an anti-violence campaign with permissions from the President of Brady, this is why you do not share emails or your past with anyone outside of you, who when putting together a big picture casts you out as though youre to blame, without understanding all the thousands of dollars of fed-exing scotus information, all the stamps received from the courts, the admissions process to get into law school and to stay in law school, and be admitted to a law school, treat you as though you have bypassed any systems of understandings in life, like you have been privileged in life to get away with any misconduct in life, no I address whats going wrong, and I offer myself to those in positions of power to be used to help combat conspiracies, and even called OJ's jail, to tell his jail I did not want to be involved in Conspiracy, drove to Las Vegas to make a phone call. We never shared our story online, it was not until I made a website that our identities became public, used as reference within the timelines assembled by others, I reported to the FBI (2013) in person, to report a violation of my right to privacy, meaning my computer, I have never okay'd the prying through my personal spaces, and its not okay to label someone as though they are in avoidance of issues, of the cause of problems hurt them like they deserve it.

Always Be Happy ...

You will always be tested for your ability to maintain happiness and peace within, whether during times of inner turmoil, during times when you are put into question, whether things are going right for you in life, or whether you are led astray, made to look stupid, sent off in the wrong directions in life, that's when its time to rely on yourself, not go looking for love or acceptances from others to feel whole. Never is anyone found, by traveling, or by becoming overly consumed by the opinions of others, youre likely to get hurt in the process of becoming overly dependent upon what others think to provide you with solution, or self-acceptance, so long as you are living a good life, and doing what is right, you should not be bothered by others actions or words about you. All uses of likeness are considered to be understood as compliment, not intended to misdirect you in life, perhaps intended only to inform you that you were being watched as you blossomed in life, used as a reference point, this is only understood upon looking back, not common knowledge to all, unless disclosed, if you don't lead a public life, you are not known to all, its only upon living a public life, that you become known to all, and thus enter any equations, that's the risk you take on upon becoming a public figure and participating online, your likeness may then be used as reference in support or not in support of you based upon your wellness, it therefore becomes the aim of those overlooking your progress to cause you illness, to say that upon being well liked you became suicidal, no my cat was dying of cancer and being fed meds and by a tube for 8 months, and I relapsed on cocaine, and was drinking box wine at home, that's was the cause for hitting my head, and upon being bullied, slammed my head into a wall 2011, and didn't finish my JD. Its really no ones business to pry into your personal histories in life, and justify attitudes in life, as though you weren't living a good life, focused doing the best that you could do in life, its not anyones fault if one does not succeed, sometimes you do your best and your best is not good enough, mistaken as driven by the wrong motivations in life, not with enough strength, endurance or smarts, to withstand the social pressures, of being forced to represent any sides in life, it's a very difficult position to be put in, when you have held positions of trust, had jobs, and then also required to vouch for someone who is not doing well, be thrust into the same set of circumstances of disbelief, heckled by texts messages until one becomes aggravated, and makes a poor decision to drive after having three drinks, that is no ones fault, when one become aggravated to extremes in life, its okay to be alone, you don't have to explain yourself to anyone, when you need space or time to be alone, to think about life, recharge, and figure out where to go from here, its no ones business but your own, where you are headed in life, and what your goals are, its people who do not believe in you who will also seek to destroy your positive momentum, interfere with your outlook, and upon being well liked, hurt you to cause others to not care for you just the same, that's the risk you take by coming forward, with total acceptances, or easily hurt, and causing others discomfort to see you in the middle of things, and hurt, bullied, or made to look bad, it only takes a second to destroy your life, and be ridiculed in public, you have to always maintain good appearances, and never as aggravated present yourself to look like something you are not, not everyone can manage themselves out alone, and it is a mistake to hurt anyone who is smart enough to work in life, simply because they are not appreciated or misunderstood, and thought to be lacking skills in life, to be independent, and turn them into a dependent simply to have control over the decisions they make in life, limit their options, and subject them to more bullying as they find difficulty achieving in life, and cause them suicide. When is it time to stop, and allow people to move forward. Eventually you have to let go of the past, if you want to move forward in life, everyone suffers, everyone experiences losses, its no ones business to subject you to harm or losses simply because they want you to feel like they feel, that hurts me, and everyone I know, ever consider that, just because I did not do well in public drinking, doesn't mean that I don't deserve to live a good life, that's wrong to cause me suicide, taunting me until I hit my head, setting me further back in life, everyone deserves time to rest, recuperate, and heal from whatever traumas they have suffered in life. It shouldn't take any mass communications, to out people in life, in order for anyone to be understood, or to further denominate anyone, to something they are not so that they amount to nothing in life, and so that everything they have worked hard for in life goes to waste, how do you think I feel having invested all this money and time, trying to finish law school, and take on internships, and still end up in the hospital, just as anyone else doesn't deserve instability in life neither do I. Its people who attack you, and then fear you, think it justified to ridicule you until you make any mistakes in life, as though they are threatened by your happiness or smarts in life, don't cause violence or incite fear to others, by causing someone with a condition, of being bullied, to become suicidal, once everyone has moved on, and everything is at peace. Don't cause suffering to people, who are already suffering, and don't attack people, and then claim you are scared, its never justified to put anyone down in life, everyone deserves a chance to live life, and live the duration of their life, for as many years as they can, its never appropriate to cause conditions, or to shorten anyones life, simply because you think theyre a waste, or stupid, or not smart enough to do well in life, because you think by the meds they are on that theyre gone, that's wrong. I have lived so many good years in life, don't hurt me to then publicize to the masses something that occurred on a small level and to see if shared on a larger scale whether that causes others to no want to hear from me or judge me in the negative in order to determine whether you reserve any right to pry into my private spaces, to cause me inner turmoil and upset, disturb my sense of peace, that's never appropriate, to make private issues, of public issue or concern, especially if my wellness does not interfere with anyone from my past who is well and who has moved on in life, and no longer needs me in their lives. That's letting go, eventually once you hit the public sphere there is a huge amount of pressure daily to stay well, and to be able to perform, its best not to have any connections in life, to influence the direction of my conversations online and make things about people in life, and not come from my own experiences in life, then claim victim to being mentioned on my blog, this is why I am not social, its not okay for anyone to hurt you in private, and its not wrong to speak highly of others, or well of others, unnecessary, but I have never said anything bad about anyone, nor questioned them as speaking to me or trying to get through to others about me, in public spaces via the conversations they have had, whether geared in light of my appearances in life, I prefer not to be someone who is difficult to understand, I need no compassions in life or further acceptances in life to feel whole, I don't even need love at this point in order to stay well, I simply need to be left alone, without undue hardship and further harassment behind my back, as though any support groups are needed as to me, by people who left my life, for what reasons was I so difficult to comprehend, going to law school, Ive never hurt anyone my entire life, I would never purposefully step into any controversies in life, if I had to make up any informations in order to process the present or the past, I only know the life I have lived and its really no ones business to prove or disprove for how long my likeness was used, whether that was known to me or others, and upon what bases confidences occur between people as about others, that's not how life works, by talking about others conditions, and trying to play doctor, as though bonding about the status of their health is of group discussion or concern, especially if one is not weird, only professional in all settings, for what purposes does it serve to turn someone into a white elephant in room, as though their life is joke, and as though they are not in tune with the negative assumptions concerning their expressions in life and the later business decisions of others, to build buildings, bridges, go through their things, take notes, etc.

Never Stop Adapting ...

There will be times in life, when you are required to take leaps of faith, usually without proper direction or advisement, we take chances in life, that is to come forward, or pave a new path for ourselves in life, life is not predictable at all times, and even when we are doing our best things may still not go right for us. Never rebel against anyone who doesn't believe in you, its their acceptances of you, if you allow to affect you, that will bother you and keep you from achieving in life, don't become something you are not, simply because others think it best to make a joke out of your life, or your short lived career, rarely does it so happen that someone in achieving is strategic about how things look on an outside, a natural story is told, by someone who lives life naturally, without concern for how things look on the outside. Ive never had trouble making friends in life, always one of the most popular, unless by some circumstances outside of my control, choose to remain separate, sometimes to focus on bettering myself, focusing on school, or to work on establishing myself professionally, so that I can have a career one day and a paid job, life is not easy for most, we all have problems. Ive been hospitalized 9x, for not feeling well on the meds I was prescribed, even sent to a rehab in the middle of law school, and taken off all meds, I don't seem to perform well at all if I ever drink, which is why I don't drink or do drugs, its always the case when doing well, you think that you can take chances in life, and those are usually the times when I get harmed, either too trusting, or taking my good health for granted, its in those instances when doing well that you should not take chances in life, and understand at which points you have no room for error. If you ever put yourself out there in life, and receive any type of attentions, its usually because what you have to say or by what you look like processes well with others, when things are confusing or when someone is difficult to look at, or seemingly gone, its hard to get through to people, who are stuck in their own heads about life, let no traumas in life keep you behind or keep you from living life all together, eventually we all have to move forward, some of us able to rise to occasions in life and perform under pressures, and some of us at a stand still wondering where all their energy is coming from, sometimes in proving yourself to others, you waste energy focusing on the wrong things in life, you are what you put your heart into. Anything made well, is easy to think about, anything that doesn't make sense, or left with too many abstract subtleties, may cause uneasiness, if interpreted in the wrong, as though purposefully confusing, or leading attentions away from a well minded thought, the best thoughts usually lead us to more thoughts, not a freeze, and certainly not re-introduce traumas into peoples lives that others have lived through, what good would that do, to make all people alike, equally feeling sick by the same stories, or attitudes, outlooks, judgments, erroneus assembly of ideas seeking to produce negative results in a persons life, or try to connect any one person to the bad acts of others, that would pursuing the wrong endeavors in life, anyone who is good is well spoken, and by what they have to say, is meant to quell any uneasiness concerning subjects regarding associations, or unwanted associations for that matter, unless you are directly affected, then does it matter what anyone has to say, upon knowing them, know that your cares matter, but there is a stopping point, when it comes to believing in others, seeing their potential, or not believing in someone, no one is required to have faith in anyone they do not trust in life, however at the same time no one persons worries, about the direction of any one person in life, should give them the power to distract, hurt, or injure a persons ability to move forward in life, thrive, get jobs, or maintain wellness. Its by those disturbances that others seek to empower themselves, such transfers, only cause more harm than good, not everyone can handle the pressures of attentions in life, most of the time too much attention, can interfere with ones ability to think straight, and can cause disillusionment, and humor in response to discomforts in life, that's a natural reaction, to be put under any unwanted spotlights in life. Always do your best to take all criticisms with a grain of salt, as though a bigger story about is trying to be told, never interject oneself, into any series of events unless you have a rational way of understanding to what extent influences and connections in life, resulted in windows to stories untold, I don't think secret clubbing is the correct response, to empower anyone whos story has not been told, its not until you are in a public space, that you begin the process of receiving acceptances one by one, until, a greater acceptance of you is achieved, success doesn't happen overnight, knowing that, don't expect to become successful right off the bat, based upon who you know, we all have important stories to be told, remember its not all about you, and things don't become about you, until you respond to words or criticisms you hear thinking they are purposefully being directed toward you, especially voices which you cannot prove, I don't have a solid understanding of where voices come from I just know that my voice is different than what I hear, and unfortunately have no one to talk to help me process my thoughts, and its by producing writings, that I am able to vouche for myself, that I am not a product of the voices I hear, and that those are simply people who do not believe in me, do not respect my hardwork in life, my time effort and focus living alone, achieving in life, nor respect my decisions to stay alone, until I am able achieve a better life for myself, to have things in life like friends, a companion, or a job, until then I am working on myself, its really no ones business, for what reasons I ever became ill, just because someone has mental health issues (a chemical imbalance) does not mean one is mentally ill, that's wrong to think that someone with mental health issues has sick thoughts especially about others, its me that feels threatened mostly by others, and that's why I choose to stay home not social, because I do not have enough confidence in life to withstand, any put downs at the moment, or looking stupid.

Growing Up in Brentwood ...

I grew up at 200 N. Rockingham, just two blocks away from OJ Simpson's house. One day while playing in our custom sandbox our parents built for us, complete with swings, a slide, and monkey bars, my best friend's mother spotted my brother playing, while jogging through the neighborhood. She asked my brother whether he had a sister, and that's how our friendship began. I remember meeting my best friend, under a swing set in our backyard, by our patio, under a magnolia tree, she was one year younger than me, age 3, and I was age 4 at the time we met. Our mother's made fast friends, would often time run in the neighborhood, my mother was once stalked by a man who pulled up to her running, touching himself, makes sense that they ran together in twos. I think at the time, our parents were not yet divorced, we spent Christmas together at their home, on 360 N. Rockingham. We used to spend Christmas, at my Godparents house in Bel Air, they were Broadway Musical Stars, with two sons and an English Nanny, who once gifted me an overnight bag, with pink stripes and my name embroidered on the side with my name spelled with a y. I remember most of my childhood, we had a very happy childhood, until our parents all separated from one another, that's when things began to blur. I used to rearrange my room shared with my sister, all Ikea furniture, and a walk in closet, all my things on the right, and her things on the left. We had two twin beds, one broke once, while my best friend was over, and they were jumping from bed to bed, the wood underneath cracked. I spent a lot of time at my best friends house, playing marco polo in their custom build rock pool complete with water slide and cave, and driving these yellow peddle cars with steering handles on each side around the tennis courts, the easter egg hunt was always fun, I would always go first for the egg in the gutter atop the guest units two steps below the patio, reaching into the roof. We started a club when her Mom moved out, with a neighbor, we called the cats and kittens club, I kept folders for each member in my hallway closet, complete with a xerox machine, and put hidden picture magazine pages in each folder, the same closet where we stored all our books, including a box of hooked on phonics my parents once bought for me, because I had trouble reading as a child. Then everything changed, I remember people storming through the streets in my neighborhood, the night of the car chase, running across our property outside my window, up the driveway. Spectators, and helicopters overhead, that were very loud, it seemed they were flying overhead for hours, news helicopters. The morning after my dance recital, I remember talking to my brother in the schoolyard, who had told me that my best friend's mother was murdered, I cried in the closet, I had been invited to Mezzaluna that night, but was too tired to attend, and went to sleep. -Crying to my best friend in West Hollywood (2009) telling her "this should have never happened to your Mother" she told me that she has already moved forward, and relayed a message from her Father, who was in jail, I was on my way to beginning law school, with a boyfriend at the time I was going to marry, but while drinking alone, got sick, and attempted suicide, I was studying for the LSAT a third time, and wrote my personal statement, my brother suggested that I write about how the Simpson Trial affected me, and influenced my decision to apply to law school, and to share my statement prior to submitting it with as many people as possible. During the Civil Trial, we played Donkey Kong, and played Billiards, we beat the whole game on Super Nintendo, sheltered from everything, I was told upon visiting her in Laguna, that if I were to remain friends with her, not to mention anything I saw on TV, and so I didn't watch any of the footage about the Trial on TV, and stayed focus on school, sports, and maintaining my friendship with her. When I started law school, the first subject we learned was wrongful death, I got a B and was third in the class. It was a new law school, which got bigger in attendance while I was there. When I didn't finish my JD, I flew to DC twice for $2000, and planned to visit the US Supreme Court and to see the Cherry Blossoms, which weren't present, but it snowed. I had attended the first day of school that semester, then met with my Dean and one Professor, and told them that I thought I needed to take leave from my studies, and they approved. Unless people know who you are and how you have been affected growing up, no one can help you to understand or process what you don't have a solid understanding of, I think visiting the Court in DC was a positive, left a 3 year relationship, to figure life out, amidst the chaos and school shootings, and made myself available to others, by taking time away from school to write down everything I can remember from my life, I don't think that drinking was a good idea. The worst is when people minimize your experiences in life, as not unique, and by standing in your shoes, think that every decision you've made, was simple, it actually takes a lot of energy, and careful thinking, to get help in life, and to explain your circumstances so that the right type of help is made available to you and to anyone else who has been affected by violence. That made sense, as a crisis hotline counselor certified 2004, as a victim advocate to the DA (law clerk), and as an LA City Attorneys Office Volunteer Paralegal, to try to make a positive difference. It takes many years, before you are mature, and have achieved in life via work experiences, to ever want to come forward and share your story, hopefully your life story hasn't been ruined before you have the time to speak, there will always be people who come into your life who do not value you, and do not think you are special, or that your vantage point in life is unimportant. If you know the difference between right and wrong, its always okay to follow your heart, and its never too late to do what is right, and to help correct any misunderstandings about how you have lived your life, whether anyone else understands the gravity of harms you have encountered in life, always be respectful of private spaces of others, and never intrude upon the good timing of someone in their life, simply because you wish for different outcomes to occur for them or for others, interrupt, anyones progress, living a private life. Its not until it is made clear one is a public figure, and being used for inference, that it ever becomes important for how one is to be seen by others, fixes themselves for those types of presentations in life. Always do your best to be professional, and take your time, you are not required to be in any rush, and regardless what other people think, you have every right to be paranoid, about people coming into your life, questioning you and others around you, and not trusting the decisions you have made in your life, or your ability to be a success in life, or working professional. Its so easy for people to talk people down who haven't made it yet in life, we all make mistakes, experimenting with drugs and alcohol, but its by our achievements in life that make us who we are, and in spite of my setbacks in life, attended two law schools, worked jobs throughout the years when I could, and will be graduating this year, and moving on in life as a writer. Its not by who you are that you are heard, its by what you have to say and how you say it, that and trust is built, or interest in your writings occurs, writing is a gift, not to be spoiled by any negative interpretations, it takes many right thoughts in order to present your thoughts in way that sits well with most, and if you haven't thought that much about life to begin with, then be sure to think about what you have to say, before saying it, it can make a difference between whether you are respected as a writing professional, or whether you get minimized as saying anything that anyone thinks is common knowledge, nothing is common knowledge until it is shared, and just because everyone has the same abilities in life, doesn't single anyone else out as no smart or not capable of achieving in life, simply because anyone else is more successful than they are. We all deserve the same opportunities in life, if we have worked hard enough to achieve in life, we all make sacrifices, and one of the sacrifices I made in life was to live alone, and focus on school, not my social life, no going out, and even left relationships, in order to stay focused on finishing law school, that's how important having a career was to me.

History is Great ...

History is great, except it provides us with more problems moving forward than it helps us to move forward in life. Most of life doesn't make sense unless you are directly affected or involved, that's how life should be, the problems of others flying overhead. At what point does the sharing of someones story strike one to their core, or come across as so shocking that it disturbs ones interpretation of them, usually qualities that are unforgiving, or circumstances that need not be made light out of. Think before you react, for every action, bears its consequences, care when you should, but only when it is required for you to care, it was best when we were able to leave more up to god, and left to handle less in life, when left to your own devices in life, its how you survive that matters most, interdependent of the past, and with respect to everyones future always doing whats best for you and others. Its when we are in harms way or when others are put in harms way that trust is lost, and its in these losses of faith, that disempowerment occurs, a sense of powerlessness, that no matter what we do, no matter who we are with, and no matter what we are connected to or believe in in life, feel at a loss, less than capable of what we were achieving and instead, living up to any negative expectations had of those who we consider to have failed in life, never put so much pressure on yourself, that you ever assume responsibility for one another's losses in life, setbacks, or failures, we are each responsible first for how we lead our own lives, and if we are so blessed, put in positions where we are able to help provide insights and help lead others, to better ways of thinking, whether that be about the past, or how to handle current outcomes, to produce better results moving forward, for oneself, and for others within their immediate surroundings. Failed views are ones which focus on the negative not what positive has become of any number of people, and its through participation in positive outlooks, that better lives occur, not by focus on what has not worked in the past, as we are all given opportunities in life to learn from our mistakes, and better ourselves, and hopefully lead better lives one day, regardless of what has transpired in the past. I do believe that building a website was a good omen, and think that by having a place to speak, has hopefully cleared up any disillusionment, about my past, where I come from, what my motivations in life are, and how I have managed to continue to move forward irrespective of what I have been through personally, continue to make progress in life, live life, and not go back into any types of bipolar thinking, which may have led me astray in the past, and/or caused me suicide (2009). I think structured thinking, is very beneficial to one's health, and its by structured ways of learning and thinking, we become better thinkers, and better producers of written materials, which resonate and benefit the reader, and assist in the avoidance of maladaptive systems of thought, in which one is prone to concluding in the negative about anything they don't understand, looking for defects, rather than thinking in ways that offer any solution to the current times, that would be doing a disservice in purpose, just as it would be if I ever wrote in a way, to control anyone thinking, and didn't leave the reader with room to spare, thinking on their own. What makes a good writer, someone who writes naturally, without an intent for sounding in any one particular way, and without any personal incentives to cast any points of views, that would lead to poor thinking about others let alone themselves. If you're a primary source you're a primary source, let no one hurt your abilities in life, simply because they don't see the value in anything you have to say. Always do your best to be yourself, and if you have led an important life, than continue to do so.

If there is one piece of advice I could give to anyone who is beginning their journey as a writer, it would be to be patient with yourself, and to use your words wisely, there is a lot of room for growth once one can benefit from their own writings, but rarely does that occur, if there is ever any disagreements along the way, the best way forward during the course of your learning process, begins with being balanced, and ends with positive reflection, don't get too used to your words, and learn to let go more often. If you're the kind of person who remembers everything from their life, and everything that is said, then it can be a difficult process to share, and allow your thoughts to unravel, as recalled, without being thrown off course in life, as though you have said something wrong. Don't give reason for anyone to doubt your potentials in life, always do your best to stay out of trouble, and avoid saying anything that would later require further insight or explanation, hard to do, no life is perfect. Digging deep, means that in spite of your hardships or circumstances, you are still able to maintain a positive outlook in life, absent minded the worries or fears of others, especially those who do not believe in you, or cannot see what you can see in this world, or see clearly from your vantage point in life. We are all blessed with lives and experiences that make us who we are, no two lives the same, we are all different, and it is in those positive differences, that we hopefully benefit one another upon the sharing of our insights and perhaps sharing our lives with others one day, whether it be by friendship, marriage, or some other relationship, bonding two people together. I think the best relationships occur over time, that's getting to know someone, having respect for the changes they have undergone in life, and viewing them in the positive unconditionally, that's not believing in someone, that's just not being at odds with anyone, simply because they are going through a hard time in life. There will always be many different ways to see things, to live life, and be viewed by others, respect doesn't occur immediately simply because you are well or successful, we will always be compared to others who are more well off in life, and judged as whether deserving of the same respects or admirations in life, sometimes put down unnecessarily in the process of finding ourselves, seen as someone trying to be something that they are not, instead of respecting them for what they have to offer the world, even if its not in the same fashion, or by the same skills, or traits possessed. Identify where you are going in life, and stay true to what you believe in and trust your instincts, you don't have to push yourself that hard to become successful in life, you just have to have a firm understanding of where you fit into any equation in life, and do your best not to step on anyone's toes, as you carve out your own path for yourself in life, separate from the lives of others, and able to be apart of, whether than be in real life or online, stay in tune with your surroundings, and whats going on in the world. I don't think anyone can ever become successful completely absent minded what others are going through in life, there is always an eventual wear and tear on a person who is in the know, or who has studied the times, and in wanting to make a positive difference, steps through the effects of those circumstances and becomes affected themselves, its usually those who are most balanced and strong, can weather any storms in life, whether directly affecting them or indirectly affecting them, based upon who they are or who they have known in life.

Preserve Your Gifts in Life ...

Preserve your gifts in life, you cannot predict what will happen for you in life, until you are ready and prepared to battle the obstacles that may come in the way of you achieving any set of goals of happinesses in life, that's something you learn through experience, how to battle your demons, and how to battle the energies of others as well as whats around you, never fall fragile to any set of circumstances that worry, bother, or aggravate you, the only person you are hurting is yourself, whenever you internalize any negativity in your life, some people just don't mix well, if we got along well with others, then the world would be a perfect place, but there will always be competing ideologies and opinions in life, when it comes to finding yourself, the basis for which you stay stable and feel confident in all decisions that you make, are the truths that hold you center in life, whether agreeable to the tastes of others, you cannot please them all. What feels good, when we feel stable, and uninterrupted, able, and capable of sustaining our own energies in life, not feeling like time has been wasted or that we are set back or behind in life, and exactly where we should be, at what point does one arrive, when you have put forward efforts to better yourself each day, you earn those moments of peace, and that's what makes up your journey upon looking back, as you recall and remember all your well moments, sometimes in focus, and sometimes, by looking back, do we come to appreciate where we are now, its upon those moments of arrival, that you set new goals for yourself, that's how you achieve more than you originally though yourself capable of achieving in life, but you have to start somewhere, success doesn't happen overnight, it's a lot of small steps in the right direction that carry you forward to a better position in life. -Understand that you are only human, and while you may think you are strong, not all are capable of withstanding all the elements required of one who is expected to perform and perform well under pressures, under any spotlights, and in public spaces, stay healthy enough to continue producing new materials, and speaking to the times in a way that brings continued hope and promise within themselves, they they will not have to face the same obstacles you encountered along your journey in life, living is not always simple, if you don't have basic life skills down, and are not disciplined, about your day, and evening routines, then it may be hard to overcome anything mental health wise, without giving yourself adequate time to rest, and recuperate, some of the best works were never composed in one sitting alone, to be considered a work of art or something of value to be looked at in awe, some of the most awe inspiring achievements in life and displays of talent, often times took years of practice to achieve and produce to a set of standards likeable to most but not all, and without a doubt respected upon first appearances, that's called talent. Talent is something existing within us all, that has yet to be tapped into, practiced, perfected, learned, or acquired, not all the best traits existing within us, appear naturally, some have natural gifts in life, and some are not born will specific skills in life, its simply a matter at knowing what your talents are in life, and doing your best to protect yourself, from the daily wear and tear of proving yourself to others, it takes a lot of heart and preservation to be able to put yourself on display, and to share your world with others, not all are well enough to handle the masses, or many attentions, especially if your not stable minded, and ready to handle to various voices and temperments of others, not all wishing you happiness in life, joy, or good luck, but think that they deserve a better life than the life you have earned on your own with good merits, and work experiences. If you weren't professional, and if your insights werent sound, then you wouldn't have had the exposures you did then, to help and contribute to the preservation of the wellness of others, when you were strong, and independent. Some of us grow up quick, and some of us mature slowly, some of us blossom in our younger years, and some of us blossom as we get older, there never really is a right time to settle down, and find love, it should occur during times of stability, but sometimes, we are given things in life we are not ready for yet, to take care of, life is short, eventually you have to learn how to assume the responsibilities given to you in life, and start expecting less from others, that's when you know youre an adult, when you learn to manage anything thrown your way, without falling off center, and no matter how sick you get, and no matter what illnesses you encounter, you know when to get help, back off, and when to share your two cents in life, if it matters more to others, to hear from someone who has experienced difficulties in life, so that they wont encounter the same types of differences along their paths in life to self betterment and happiness. Everyone is capable of achieving inner peace, that I believe, when peace cannot be achieved from within, that's when you become more reliant on your surroundings, or others to help you, but if you can't help yourself, don't expect any sound advice to get through to fix you all at once, no one can live your life for you, that you have to do for yourself, and if you can't live life for yourself, then think again, what's important to you, and when all else fails, it's okay to open up, in private settings, and figure out based on how you feel, what to do next with your life, our talents don't always take us to better places in life.

Shared Happiness ...

There's no such thing as shared happiness, past the point of any discord, differences, fighting, disagreement, or non-acceptances of anyone, for having come forward in life to share stories from their lives, based upon their recollection, not for the purposes of adding to justify negative judgments of them, learn to let go, and move forward in life, not all will be happy in your company, nor achieve a state of wellness, being, or level of confidence and gusto they feel they deserve to have in life, and be surrounded the same, never subject yourself to being treated as someone in need, before a need is occurring to which you cannot reverse, a condition, in which no shared feelings, can fix or mend what has past, it's always a good time to move forward in life, and to explore other options for connection and influence in life, whether others have been a positive part of your journey in life, or have added a source of pain, or embarrassment to your current disposition, we all should wish that others fair better with or without us in their lives, that's living independently, once you end up worse off in life, it's your responsibility to correct what needs fixing, and that can be best done at home, not accepting insults in life, and becoming something you are not, and certainly not letting yourself go, because you cannot measure up to something or someone good enough to be represented fairly, there's no piggy backing in life when it comes to acceptances, all acceptances and trust and likeability, is earned, not because of anyone's success around them, there are many famous people in life, I was so clever as to intertwine my story with the story of others who have had the same connections in the 90s, then that would bring about a source of pain, give people time to figure out what happened, and for what reasons respect was lost, and pain suffered, it's not the responsibility of the bystander or any onlookers to judge those within a story as working together, off of each other, or being better'd by one another, in the hopes of expanding some kind of change that would not be agreeable to everyone's tastes in life, don't trash someone simply because you don't think they have also suffered harms in life, it's no one's fault, when someone gets mismanaged, or easily fooled on the street not all are strong enough to handle the kind of lifestyle that demands one to be fully awake, not in the midst of finishing a masters, introduced to society, half heartedly, not confidently, and seek to do any favors for anyone they love, if you can't make happen, for someone you love, something they want in life, then don't say that you can do something for someone, to make them happy, that would only be hurting yourself, in the process of being too trusting of your environment, without adequate notifications of everyone watching to see whether you fail or become something you're not.

Control and Belittlement ...

Generally anyone who thinks they're smarter than you or who thinks that their perspective in life trumps your own best understandings of the world, will put you down in life, it's often not until something is said that anything can be corrected or perfected when it comes to building better perspectives in life, or takes one [to mature] for a more broad understanding, one that doesn't incite fear upon looking back or interfere with our present abilities to thrive and to function wholly as peaceable adults in society. It's really no one's business the basis for which you believe in yourself, or come to admire others, it's people capable of being themselves in spite of what others think that we grow a fond attention for, watching people bloom, go through phases in life, and sometimes in watching others fail, we come to appreciate our places in life, it's not until you've lost everything in life, that you begin to simplify, what's most important to you, and what is best for you and for those around you, something to always think about, you can't always do what's in the best interests of everyone, it's no one's responsibility to better the condition of anyone or anything who expects less of them, people were not meant to be played with, torn, and tested until their true colors show, to see whether they are worth interests and respects from all, that doesn't make one human, to constantly adapt to other people trying to control them or by controlling them make them look or appear as though not by their own discretions have come to be, but as through a previously established guided process of thinking have come to be, behave, or think. Everyone finds themselves differently, its really no ones business by which educations in life one sees best, and its not always by our educations that we can be protected from bad patterns of thinking, or from other sources of heartache and heartbreak in life, you can do your best and still not amount to anything of value in life, if you don't stay steady, and continue to live a good life, its upon you not being consistent, that others tend to bear a bader grudge towards you, as for ill incentives trying hard in life, or because of other peoples miseries in life, function, as through to be strong for someone who is not strong, not even yourself. No one deserves to be made fun of, not for what they think, not for their exposures in life, achievements, or failures, we all experience losses in life, some more disappointing than others, its seems that these days everyone just wants to see what sets you off in life, its bringing up subjects that I was punished for speaking about, and its for insulting someone who is doing their best and taking meds as prescribed judged as being in the wrong, and its for gathering negative judgments of someone who is doing well, for the purposes of proving them wrong in life, not everyone will protect you from harm in life, don't be so quick to insult anyone who has done everything in their power privately to stop bad things from occurring, not everything is put together for assembly front and center on stage.

When Words Matter ...

3/8/2020

There comes a point in time when your words stop working in your favor, occurring during times of illness, loss of faith, and losing our best wits about us, face changes in attitude toward life and others, never stop letting go of the past, in order to move forward, you must be well minded, a balanced thinker when it comes to addressing your past, in order to determine where you see yourself in the future, continue to envision a better life for yourself. When it comes to leadership, pave no ways forward for anyone who grows dependent upon your output, in order to build criticisms toward you and any goals you have set for yourself in life, they are generally not on your team in life, wouldn't it be nice if there were no unreasonable interferences in life when it comes to achieving wellness, and staying well, unfortunately there will always be competitions in life, when it comes intelligence, and beauty, and who represents those qualities and traits best in life, so long as you are always doing your best, then let no competitions in life hold you asunder, that would be unfair to treat someone who is well, as though they are not well, simply because you don't see like them nor value their opinions in life, that's no way to live life, under the criticisms of others, feel shot in life, always breathe light back into yourself, no matter how trying or trivial your circumstances might be. It took about a year to become a top 100 blogger, ranked on alexa top 34,000 websites in the country, that took a lot of determination and pure grit, when it comes down to your core being, who are you, when it comes down to your beliefs, what keeps you going in life, and when it comes down to likeability, how have you managed to get along well with others, and be an approachable person, regardless of your past, and definitely not by what you have now in life, should anyone be judged. Once you decide to become a writer, you live a different kind of life, that doesn't mean one is anti-social, simply because they choose to stay home and not go out, its because one doesn't want to be negatively influenced in any way, to change their tone, or core concepts currently affecting them, it takes a lot of free will to share your mind absent the negative sentiments of others toward you, not all will work in your favor, most trying to get under your skin or influence you in ways, to make their voice be heard through your writings, that's trying to affect you, so that you are affected by them, so that everything you say shows that that person has had an effect on your life, which they feel is significant to your being, that's giving importance to the past or someone who is no longer in your life, the power to control you and your outlook in life. You'll experience many unwanted attachments in life, some of us spend the rest of our lives trying to avoid our past, or people who have caused us harm in life, its by their hyperactivity and quick judgments upon us, that they feel empowered, as though they were first to any negative deductions about you, don't let anyone take your power away in life. Everyone deserves a right to live life, free of blames, free of negative judgments, and free of animosities directed toward them as though they have inhibited any positive qualities or traits about them, that you have yourself already experienced in life a loss of, a sense of peace, and sense of not being aggravated easily by others, a sense of strength during trying times, and an ability to perform no matter what odds are against you in life, still be able to function normally.

Aging is a Process ...

3/6/2020

Not all is fair in love and war, not all are equipped to find their match in life, some fair better than others, especially in a society based upon looks and smarts, if your not a good decision maker its easy to miss out on a more peaceful existence, not ridiculed for having no one or nothing in life going for you. We tend to judge people based upon what they have in life, without giving them the benefit of the doubt, if you are one to lift others during trying times, it doesn't always work out the same that anyone will help you through a difficult time or transition in life. Don't lose youre cool simply because things aren't working out for you in life, options only avail themselves to you the moment you begin to better yourself. Sometimes in bettering ourselves, we look back upon the life we have lived, and wish that we would have a done a better job, of maintain esteems, and not letting any unnecessary commentaries in life get the best of us. You cannot control what people think, what is always in your control is how you choose to respond to people and to events, its not always necessary by personal experiences share how you have adapted in turmoil, or come out of any uncanny positions in life, be mislabeled as someone going or gone. Some are street smart and some are book smart, its hard to acquire both skill sets at once, its generally though living life, that we get smarter with the times, or fail to stay in tune all together, and lose our abilities to adapt kindly to any unwanted circumstances in life, especially when we feel at risk of harm, or when our options feel limited in life, act with haste, or shut ourselves off from the world, to figure out life for ourselves. Rarely in exploring life do we find ourselves, perhaps a greater appreciation for well moments is required for one to appreciate how far they have come in life, in the grander scheme of themes, always wish others well once they have achieved a happier disposition in life, you never know what anyone has gone through in life, to judge them as deserving of the harms they have suffered from, sometimes its not until we have bettered ourselves, that we realize the moments at which we were harmed, and come to understand our acquired dispositions in life, unrelated to anything present, you are what you relate to in life. Always do your best never to put someone down who has not yet found themselves in life, and always give people room to blossom in life, theres no need to be controlling of anyone who has been fully capable of taking care of themselves in the past, sometimes with nothing you make better choices for yourself and others in life, not all stages in life, are rewarded with accolades, not even growing beyond the traumas yourve suffered in life, and no matter how many time victimized by others or treated as less than not good enough, never lose faith in yourself.

Some People Never Come Up in Life ...

If you think that becoming successful is a piece of cake, then you don't understand the value of careful assembly and launch of any new way of thinking or strategy for maintaining peace, one which can continue to thrive no matter what the conditions are, is offering a space for peace to be achieved, especially in a world ruined by negativity and lack of care for one another, no one can thrive in any system of governance which does not give back power to those deserving of trust, and continue to empower them and given then resources for coping and avoiding the times, not get sucked into the same causes or circumstances for which illness has passed like cancer. Get your ions right and learn how to manage your emotions, you are your vessel for change don't accept anything into your environment, or allow those who are sick to bother you for longer than you can maintain your own wellness, remember you cannot fix anyone who is broken, you can listen, and provide reassurances in life, correct them, but until they can mobilize themselves in life, out of harms way, then and only then can they be trusted to resume their lives among, there are places for the sick to go, they are called therapy groups that teach you internal survival skills for managing concepts related to maintaining wellness, and staying well, achieve positive momentum in life again, and break free of any cycles that send you back to memories or places in life you don't belong, we are all a product of misunderstanding at times, usually when we are lost in life, do we vocalize from the deepest realms within our fears and causes for dodging concepts that so simply did not work out in the past to free all from blame, if you waste too much time on the erros past, you become disillusioned as to the benefit of creating and producing new material presence that separate one from the pains of the past, if you get stuck in the middle of any feeling and cant make yourself feel better, learn how to let go, if you need to triple axel your way out, sprint and land broken across a vault, then do so, some things never improve upon a majority of wellness achieved, sometimes we get stuck, that's not by memory, that by causes, and its for the purposes of those who are not well, to be able to blend in or relate to anyone they think if they can be as good as achieve, bring you down to levels you don't belong in life, respond out of fear or desperation, or as a result of sufferings in life, made to look like you are a poor example of someone who has achieved in life, and if for the wrong merits, not deserving of wellness, if no exchanges presently can revive your condition to well, that means its okay to start over, slow down, and not continue down any paths in life, that bring you much pain, such as explaining what is causing you harm, or responding to anything outside of you, by talking about what is currently going on in your life, that's like build a railway from some condition outside of you, and building a station to park those feelings in a source of wellness to exemplify how one sustains an unreasonable conditions in life, for any short amount of time, to see whether they suffer the same inability to achieve, losing sight of their good traits, or the best interests of others to maintain wellness, that creating portals for opinions to be drawn to windows of attention, and put anyone or anything down who hasn't made it in life, food for the taking, as though they are gone, or undeserving of feeling unique and strong in life the same, beauty comes to those who take good care of themselves, and the better able you are at avoiding any unnecessary interactions in life, to which any uneven exchange can occur, then don't risk your well points achieved, showing you feathers off, to see how others respond to you, if you can make a basic exchange of niceties in life, and stay well no matter what energies hit you in life, than you have some maladjusted condition, which means too tired to adapt, or accept your circumstances in life, and see the positive anyways, let go.

Be Strong Everyone Cares ...

Why are you eating chocolate bars and running at night? Because Im serving in Santa Monica (Since 2014) doing my best to help assemble a sufficient neighborhood watch system, to which all know how to move about symbiotically without causing harm or fear to one another, be free to travel within a state, to recognize wellness, and stay inspired, that those who are working hard and deserve to be well will one day give back (ie. #ofafellows "homeless snacks" by me). In order to do well sometimes, you have to play along with the commentary along the way, and not invoke evil in otherwise harmless people to respond in ways to which their identities have been threatened (i.e. taking over Coffee Bean at Night). Always do your part to lighten things up, and provide viewpoints that help carry others forward learning to see things in the positive, remind yourselves that it is never too late to stop talking $hit, only unless its to help others, sometimes we question others by reciting how they have lived their lives, and in hindsight all including the person who has suffered, wishes that they would have lived life differently, or achieved more in life, me included, sometimes its not until we fell harmed or put at risk of harm, that we begin to set boundaries for ourselves intake an exposure wise, learn from my experiences trying to live a simple life, that that's not the solution, a good society keeps itself well informed and aware of current issues, so that they may make better decisions for themselves and others, we cannot ever predict when a harm is occurring or will occur, unless we set boundaries for ourselves such as (people walking barefoot at night past your car, or people walking barefoot at night, and running on your running path, and bikers screaming at you parked or pulled over, no one deserve that kind of hate and road rage in life, if you are some measely pip squick then by all means turn into an armadillo introvert, you really should never contest nor try to upright anyone in fight mode, doing their best to serve, just know that they think you are small or retarded and because of how you look, by the size of your head, or the car you drive, that you don't belong among the well, I wish that wasn't the case, but some no matter how well you are, or beautiful or smart you are online, will ever think that you deserve to be well, or take into consideration the causes for your aura in life, as deserving of negative insights toward or about, its not me who put myself at risk of harm calling negative attentions to myself, nor am I the cause of negative voices toward me, that resulting in me hitting my head, or suffering physically, or mentally while alone, so that when out in public Im not strong enough to adapt, cut your losses in life, don't let anyone show you the way out in life, like you deserve it, that's not deserved to attack someone who has not yet had the opportunity to live life, just because you know what I look like or where I live, does not mean you have the right to hurt me to get into the news, that's not the solution, to cause me illness in private or in public, and to watch me struggle without a head, I am smart, please don't hurt me.

Be All That You Can Be ...

In a world full of hate, be all that you can be, whether that's by your representations of self, and by what you share, helping to make a positive difference in the world, or by who and what ideas you represent in life, be sure to always carry forward a positive message, that it living your best live. At what point to we get into survival mode? When we are thrown into controversies, we are not readily prepared to get ourselves out of, or when we are questioned, as to our good merits and motivations in life, sucked from out under us, left with nothing in life. There is always time to begin again, remember that, God works in mysterious ways, never lose faith in yourself, and in hindsight be sure to be kind to the past, and always give people the benefit of the doubt that they too are always doing what is in the best interests of all. Always be yourself, its not necessary to fight and to stand up for what you believe in, unless its necessary to help all to change their course in life, sometimes we are willing to change, and sometimes we get stuck in our ways, allow people time to move forward and change on their own when they are ready, not all people require change in order to better themselves, some are best left to their own devices in life, handling life as life occurs, without planning too much in advance, taking it one day at a time. It takes a certain talent to motivate or inspire others in life, to believe in themselves and to keep going in life, sometimes its by love, sometimes its by friendship, sometimes its by acceptances, but most of all, occurring when we see well, when we can envision a better life for ourselves, and when we feel capable of achieving goals in life, even if no one agrees with us or believes in us in life, most importantly loving yourself enough to know when to quit, when to keep pushing forward, and when to give up caring so much for things that don't matter, and start prioritizing our cares to what matters most, our livelihood, the livelihood of others, and not interfere with one another's health based upon what we believe. Todays workforce requires a separation of interests, how we represent ourselves online, has a huge effect on the possibilities that others see for us in the future, yes they can judge a book by its cover, determine whether you are fit, or whether you still have a long way to go in the recovery process. Never lose sight of bettering yourself each day, and always do your best to be apart of, its as separate we suffer, having a sense of togetherness is a privilege afforded to those who are well, unless and until you reach a point of stability, will you be able to enjoy the same privileges others get to enjoy such as friendship, love, belongingness, and career. Change doesn't happen overnight, so long as you care about yourself, that's one step toward making positive changes in your life so that others may care about you too.

Ya, That Really Didnt Do Anything for Me ... cc: #scotus :

I hear you Captain Non-Chalants, if theres nothing more to be deciphered, then there must not be something said, and if something isn't said, it must be in their own best interests without considering that sometimes via the sharing of facts, both sides are represented in the positive, as described, in the event of chaos, how a series of interactions and responses, can occur, to make the right things happen, not improve upon the doubts we hold toward others, take things personally, its more a need to know basis, to respond always to what affects you directly, and if not, its okay to further investigate, why others are so personally affected, as though having some prior divested interests and understanding, with expectation for things to have turned out differently upon a knowing of someone, when our negative beliefs take their toll, that is poor judgments of others, who then is responsible for any outcomes, which require blaming a person for their current hardships, and hurt them until they provide opinions or thoughts that speak to any prior hesitancies to consider a person loyal enough to not revolve their thoughts around the past, as though one has tried to connect to better adjust themselves (Please Note: We didnt connect on purpose, I just wanted to tour the facility and see the cherry blossoms, I google'd my itinerary prior to flying to DC), apart of people who do have control over what is thought, how things look, and the direction people take in life, no matter what anyone thinks, require assurances that any specific interpretations (made) will not be for the purposes of disclosing stories from someones life (to defend or cast away blames via association, as though suddenly things are connected once things are not going right for you in life, apply everything to your own experiences, or take responsibility for the struggles other have encountered living in fear, or worry, that their pains in life should be remembered as attached to someone or via association related to someone who has passed, and then hold a person struggling, as responsible for any losses of faith, occurring because someone of trust who led a professional life, was put down and trashed, its really painful to fix your life, past disappointment, you really never return from those types of pains in life, just do your best to live your life, not live your life and suffer because of what hurts or what doesnt make sense, or by what you think is happening, dont agree with that would put people at risk of harm for looking bad, as though one doesn't tell their story, and then does so in poor taste, as though I could not possibly look bad too, why would I ever share a story from my life, if not to thank someone for coming into my life, or apologize for me present condition, as not being strong enough, smart enough, or of high enough professional standing to represent anyone, or explain their losses in life, I cannot read other peoples minds, and I don't know for how long anyone has been struggling, accepting things the way they are and all the progress that has been made, sometimes, a lot of progress is not enough to undo any pains or disappointments in life, just do your best to not be a complete let down in life, and try to keep in touch for as long as you can while you can, before youre in so much pain, that you cant even talk to anyone, and never reached a point of stability and pride in oneself, achieved, to be able to talk on the phone when requested to call, or catch up when finally planning to have a chat, that's so heartbreaking, my friends must be very strong people. Please Note: (in my mind) When things are F up and Im not happy, and I wish things would turn out differently for me and others, who have done their best to move forward in life, discuss all the things youve ever worried about, all your gay fears, and leave the rest up to God, youd be amazed how much the body can heal, if you just support yourself enough to not fight at all!

A Well Condition ...

We are not always symbiotic, and sometimes depending on our expectations of others or fears we let go, that's in disbelief, either we are not where we need to be, we have not achieved a sense of stability and wellness, that permits us to take risks in life, or have public friendships, to people we are not sure have been welcomed back into society, earning their trusts and stripes again, and then there are times when we become too dependent on the actions of people socially, thinking that every separation is in reaction to some disappointment, or to prove a point, making one right and one wrong, I know from experience that the more separations that occur in your lifetime, in public especially online, the more likely you will be deemed to not have been well enough to appreciate those moments of interactions, and based upon where you are presently, not have lived up to those expectations of you. You cannot predict where your life will lead you, sometimes, by disclosing too much in private, we can cause discomforts to people who would have otherwise been accepting of us, had we not had so many problems in life, why does this happen, the sick, left alone, I think its in moments where others are not doing well, if you think that it may because of the energies directed toward you (ie spotlight) that's its best not to have only a few friends on one account, and publicly share their identities, that lasted for less than a day, and defriended the one who was not feeling well, a writer too, probably best not to expose someone first hand of other conversations elsewhere in my time period, which is managing inputs, while not allowing my past to fester and ruin future relationships, as though purposefully, I was not well at the time, I interacted with others, and because I was not well, this causes the creation of an arguably unwanted connection, to which one is well and one is clearly not well, to justify the leaving of the sick, to preserve the wellness of whomever chooses to be alone, or keep separate, not maintain a monogamous bond (either one cannot see a future with someone, or one thinks ones condition is not well suited for a public coupling to tour the town, and be introduced to friends), I think when you are well you meet a lot of people in life, and eventually you work hard and get tired, and get more conservative, and not so free with your heart and your apartment, and not trusting of any love that comes into your life, and become able to live free without intimacies in life, not all of us can handle social pressures, especially having to perform as a couple, and withstand all the flirting and talking, and bonding without you, I think as immature you feel threatened and dismantled by the most stupid interferences with how tight you think a bond should be, to marry, its okay if you don't laugh at the same things, if one is more conservative than the other, I think that's the mans job to loosen up their girlfriend, expected to represent them well, and "be in control" of themselves, I was told, was one reason for "not drinking" to excess, only later did it become clear to me, that drinking is one of the most least attractive conditions, a woman can acquire, if they are trying to be respected or valued, the most insecure and threatened words come out of someone, who is not stable, or who doesn't feel like their lover loves them, will stay, and loses their ability to feel confident that they are with them for the long term, that's a painful process of adjusting, spiritually, and emotionally, to be a rock, and to not get bothered, and to allow one you love to receive attentions from others, that's normal, you are not the only one who should shower them with praises when they are doing a good job in life, that would be like expecting them to be dependent on you for love, most would never subject themselves to one persons acknowledgment, or positive reinforcements in life to know that they are doing a good job, in whatever situation they find themselves in, a well earned right to be proud of themselves, no matter who theyre with, meaning if they are happy and pre-occupied without you, and not needy of you, that's the best kind of guy you can ask for, not focused on you. That's your time to work on yourself, and blossom, and when the time is right, one another can equally respect and value the maturation process, and ability to be professional, in spite of the many bipolar delusions, occurring whenever is possessive over the time and attentions of another. That's what I learned when I was 22-25 (2007 – 2010). My first boyfriend with a couple photo, golf with Dad, sleepovers, couple vacations, dressing up for Halloween in costumes, to attend a friends Halloween party, and we were the only two in costume, Im always a cop since CO. -The excitement of your 20s, doesn't last, in your 30s, youre not so shiny, where Im at now. The main point is get married, you cannot do career on your own, if you cant manage to be in a monogamous relationship, and get paranoid over a pop-up text and leave, that's childish. #bebrave, its no ones fault but youre own, when youre not chill, why the other doesn't think highly of you, nor respected your first relationship with your first boyfriend. #forgivemess <3

Different Speeds ...

Depending upon how far a long you are, developmentally, some information may come as a shock to you, sometimes even the simplest deductions in life, although blarringly obvious to some, need not be said out loud, theres a reason for that, not to bring up old dirt, and not to pry into any understandings past, that could cause a revisiting of like minded issues presently, and deter the progress of most, where some have reached acceptances in life, go through cycles of pain, just trying to comprehend, why so much of what has not been said, all of a sudden became the property of a few, who thought it wise of themselves to pick apart someone else's philosophies in life, and present them with a different view of life, to see whether their intelligences, could meet the demands of present energies concerning subjects regarding evolution, purpose, faith, reasons, and success, who are left alone, who are supported, who are picked on, and who moves forward in life, and who is fair game to cast blames upon, as though they can handle the punches, that weather down anyone who of high standing when falling behind in positive representations looking back upon their work, wind up bringing more people into harms way, thinking they have hang of how things will turn out, and its upon those gambles in life, we sometimes succeed and fall, those are the types of risks encountered hopefully with expectation of wellness, its usually to the benefit of those who are profiting from any ventures in life, to see that potential, and help others to realize that potential, in themselves, which should translate accordingly to anyone who has invested any time or energies trying to compartmentalize their stories, where they fit in in society, and whether they serve as a stable cornerstone for interpretations, of whether their opinions, are merely a product of thinking one is bigger than they are how much know how is required to build trust, YEARS of experience, WORK experience, and why do we TRUST professionals, because they have years of algorithms and standards of work product that ensure that the general safety needs of those financially invested in companies, will see future rewards for investing their monies in a company, those investments, become a part of you, a bargain for your money, believing in something or someone other than yourself, to build for you what you cannot do by your own means, within your given trade or profession, that is a privilege to be apart of companies, or growing trends, and contribute to that excitement, and wellness witnessed in others, that's a gift in life, to be around, when things are good, and even more importantly ready in case things do not turn out well for individuals who have invested, but not readily aware of the consequences of shying away from other investments, that money cannot buy, like years invested to build, time away from family, dedication to studies to get jobs, the lesson is, if you cant talk about what you do for a living, and abuse the home scanner, then be prepared to explain why you went paperless, 2013, and why you keep everything still to this day? Because Im a corporation, that includes ALL communications too a$$hole, okay Im sorry. You could keep a GENERAL JOURNAL, I used to write down all my tasks in spiral notebooks, Im just not hyper enough to write down my every move anymore, less in the head, sweetheart, ok.

Mass Non-Acceptance and Hate ...

Theres no telling the extremes to which any group of individuals will take to hurt your identity and ability to thrive under any set of conditions, that demands honesty, without protecting anyone interests who seek to harm the perceptions of you or others and lead them astray in life, its those types of individualized interests directed at destroying you, that are not your responsibility to explain or corroborate to further justify those beliefs or actions toward you as though those are excusable reactions given your record, to determine all your associations in life to be unwanted attachments, as though you have always been a reject to any attentions given to you, and although for a temporary period in time, acceptances granted toward you, be treated as a reject by anyone who thinks they have it better in life, put you down like youre some gay pervert, truant, whos retarded, and gets into things above and beyond, their area of expertise, for attentions, as though not affecting them personally, how do you explain that to someone later on in life, you meet who fully accepts you, that in the past you were rejected as not good enough, and that upon writing, you learned to roll with the punches eventually, without aiding and abetting or providing assistance to those acts toward you, as though with you permissions you ever okay'd for anyone to treat you in those respects like you deserved it, or were asking for it in life, like anyone has ever done you any favors in life acceptance wise, professionally, or romantically, it's the choices you may that put you asunder, and whether by your choices in life you are accepted or rejected you learn never to complain, and not add fuel to fire, and enable people past to prevail in light of your current hardships, like they did the right thing being hard on you, or treating you like a lost cause in life, if so, then it would be unnecessary to explain and current hardships existing, or disbeliefs in me, if it was never the case that I was important, then on a larger scale should not be impressed upon, in the negative, over a few rejections in life, as not good enough. No need to bring in any causes others have supported in the past, and link the causes for support, or failure to lead a perfect cessation of violence deemed the fault of any parties who did care, it seems, that anyone who retains informations concerning any methodologies for processing the times, can also be misunderstood as understanding the causes, if its not my area of expertise, and if a study was not approved, then it is not my responsibility to deter crime in that way, only by my words, and my inputs, can I help to contribute to ways of thinking, beyond the acts of those who seek to tie together their lives with the lives of the well, that's the stopping point, of discussion, when there exists any interference with the overall health and well being of everyone, who does not wish to understand not necessitates an understanding of the negatives as this may have a negative impact on ones ability to manage their own health [Please Note: Not an Approved Study by CU], particularly as it relates to the bad acts of others [Please Note: My Concern], no explanation need be required, don't further misinterpret anyones demise, as though because of their actions, they were treated with a lack of respect, as though they or others had done anything wrong, and in so doing, one was punished, for being too free with themselves, being social in Hollywood, and because of what you know happened, and because at a later point in time one was pulled over think all incidences were related, and amounted to a punishment, as though it was my fault, I got F-d in my car, and stupid enough to not understand that that wasn't a relationship, and that I did do the right thing watching CSPAN, instead of responding to any booty calls, which by the time I responded was too late, upon returning to Hollywood, and sent to another bar, had three drinks, and pulled over on my way home, that's not the CHPs fault, that I was stupid enough to go out by myself and get rejected and upon being responded to that one could not see me, cried, and drove home.

First to Living Life ...

Theres no one way to live life, not even one way to think about life, or to process events, and if youre having difficulty, maybe that means you need to take a step back, listen to the majority, and learn how to speak and behave in a tone, that resonates with most for the time being, not get all wrapped up in your own emotions, and predictions about what has gone wrong, or whether any misinterpretations as to your wellness, mental health, has taken its toll on others interpretations of you, since when is fair game for others to make fun of you, like youre some secret, underground campaign in life, no one who ever becomes successful tries to do so in secret, that would allowing people to know you before everyone has gotten a chance to meet you, and give people an opportunity to change you on your way up, as though you weren't fine just the way you are. Who is it for anyone to judge our communications in private, and recollections of our life, and then all of a sudden get pissed off when we start caring about what we look like, how we sound, and what is kept in our own personal records about us. It seems the more natural and organized you are, in the keeping of records from your life, the easier it becomes for people to go through your things, and make determinations about you, and while observing others, think it justified if mass miscommunications about you get transferred without you even knowing it, without regard for your safety needs, and without you knowing it, think that its okay to use you as a catalyst for any movement they think desirable, as to their own ability to make change happen or to convince others you are not worthy of being apart of anything positive in the future, that's making you not apart of, that's using your identity, to benefit everyone around you, without you knowing you, and make everyone feel bigger than you, what justice does that serve, when everyone feels together, leaving one separate, for what good reason was that done to me. It takes awhile to process events, and it takes even longer to put yourself together in a way that makes sense to others, and at the same time enables them to make better sense of the times, and process events likewise in a positive way that doesn't cause unnecessary hardship to anyone directly affected by the present times. At what point do you stop, given whats going on, purposefully hurting someones image, you deem of no importance, if someone was not important, than why waste any time of energy hating on someone, simply because you think negatively of them, why hurt someone, and feel good about it too, where is the righteousness in that. Don't ever hurt someone for the manner in which they choose to express themselves best, through writing, and before giving them an opportunity to share pictures of themselves hurt them, as though anyone should not be liked because of what they look like, or anyone because of what they look like during this day and age, would be liked any less, because of what they look like. Usually it is the case that its easier to speak badly of someone when they are not in your company and when you cannot see them, and harder to speak badly of someone to their face, or upon seeing them, feel less desensitized or able to carry on speaking badly of them. If you knew that you were hurting someone, whoever though it appropriate to carry on discussions in that manner, putting someone down in life, who they have not seen or met. I certainly didn't overpromote anything I did not care about or willing to share and explain my reasons for caring, maybe it wasn't in the best interests for everyone to care, and that could be one reason, why others turned on me, thinking that caring was a risk they were not willing to endure, and others thinking the worst that creating a system of blames toward me was more advantageous to their health, to add everything up in the negative toward me, its never anyones responsibility to share past the point of being blamed for anyones hardships in life, and it's a sore misunderstanding of fact, when someone who is well is misused to make others look better or to relinquish themselves from blame, cause anyone who has yet to achieve in life, to start life over again worse off. A lot of money has been invested in my education, which cannot reverse the mental health issues that result, from the assumptions others make about where intelligence is derived from or what causes argument, thinking that arguing is how people become intelligent, no its does improve the quality of ones thought to become obsessed with any series of misinformations, and then have to waste time, trying to be articulate, and to rationalize with any groups of people who think that they have a right to hurt the image of someone who has yet to make it in life, be accomplished, and earn a paid position. Not everyone will believe in you, its not required that people respect you in society, its not even required for other people to think youre smart, its seems the further they can put you down in life, the better off they feel, seeing you try for all the wrong reasons, and made to look stupid upon you subjecting yourself to acceptances from them, in order to feel apart of in life, sometimes being on your own is best. You cant always get the respect you deserve in life working for others, or by applying for jobs, and if you have not yet been trained in how to argue legally, then don't waste your time online, arguing with anyone, about mistreatments of you, just accept things as you go as a public figure. - We are all susceptible to being influenced in life, it doesn't matter how smart or important you are, we are all empathetic people, and unless youre not human, will you not be affected by other peoples pains in life, or dissatisfactions with the direction in which leadership has arisen in this Country, and upon what topics in life our minds have been led or mislead to believe in life, as encompassing whats important, or which events occurring in history were most significant to molding the times, to the way they are now, never focus on negatives and think that those outlooks in life, will ever contribute positive to any mutual understandings in life of how things were then, as though current issues can be resolved likewise, via the dismemberment, and chastising of any one particular individual, so that they cannot achieve the same happiness and good fortune in life, because you need a negative to fixate on to explain your dissatisfactions with the progress of everyone, blame someone for the past.

Maintaining Your Youthful Glow ...

Everythings a competition these days, everything you have to say focused upon, and even how you look, no matter what your circumstances are you judged, whether you are beautiful with or without makeup, or whether any type of unconditional acceptances of you exists, which you have built upon in order to become a stronger writer, or whether by your influences in life, so recorded on social media, you have gained any more confidences in life, concerning your inputs, or with the inputs of others derived knowledge. I cite to everything, and save anything that sticks out to me, Im not a fraud, Im a law student, sober, and with the meds provided to me have written, that's to no ones negative judgment, who achieves in life, and where intelligences come from discredit anyone of intelligence, simply because you think they have it easy in life. Like all successful people, if you say the wrong things, or are off putting, yes you will become a turn off, or someone not of particular interest or importance, everyone is entitled to be interested in what they find interesting or of value, we will not all value the same qualities in all people, nor value the same intelligences in life, nor find the same beauty in everyone as they blossom in life, and come to find themselves. No matter what your circumstances are in life (advice to self) always stay positive, its upon your own unhappiness in life (mine) that one become dissatisfied with themselves (outlook) which leads to a worse of condition (mine). People love to see someone relive the past, according to what scripts others have written about them, as though in knowing someone, well enough by predictions, that they can control someone, even what others have to think about someone, as not deserving of achieving in life, or garnering any respects publicly for the work they have accomplished in their lifetime, or for the betterment of others exposed themselves, the best of themselves

(not trashed) their identity, and in doing so, is what acceptances are bolstered from, not from our worst, not by heckling, and certainly not by remembering and recalling what has been seen in private, as someone has struggled to reclaim their identity in life, and re-acknowledge their self-worth in spite of what others have thought of them a lost cause, a drug addict, an alcoholic, or some other detestable creature that would give people permissions to hurt, hate, and dismantle their well being, simply because of what has been said about them, that's inhumane. Never treat someone who you do not respect with so much hate, that it manifests itself into their lives, and causes one to now like themselves, after all that I have given online, my writings, for book writing, and all my hard work, to still be treated as someone waiting for a misstep to occur, to fully dismantle and take from them, is like reading with expectation, that upon any failures on their part, that you can take from them, as though I have ever granted permissions for the misuse of my work, to cause me harm, and at my expense, pried into to see whether I generate any wellness from others, or whether I am able to stay well on my own. Everyone works differently, some light up in a room full of people, and some are drained, some light up on their own, and some are in need of companionship and reassurances in life, that's called being human, depending on what mood you are in, different things will light you up, and make you feel better about yourself and others, never discredit the wellness of another, as through through illegal means, they have achieved wellness, its not possible to be doing something wrong and still feel good about yourself, according to me, that humanly impossible, don't overexcite yourselves to my condition, or familiarize yourself too much with my moods, to even think for two seconds that you can control people, simply because you have had an affect on me, depending on what you have said or believed to be true about me. Its usually people who think things are about them, and who make things about them, disempower whoever is going through a lot, to make them look like someone who is emotional and should not be cared about, it doesn't seem to matter how many times Ive been hospitalized or suicidal, no I don't deserve to be put down in life, imitated, dismantled, used, or abused in life, to make any sort of statements about me, like I deserve it, or as though my condition in any way affects others, because I was improperly labeled in life, I am suffering, and its my job on a daily basis to stay positive, and to not get aggravated, and to not allow anyone to make jokes about me, or the company I have built for myself to work in, make a $hit show about me, and cause me suicide.

Learn to Accept ...

Learn to accept as a reader that not everything is about you, and while anyone is privileged to read and imagine that they are the counter-positive to your wellness, as though they are the demon you could be battling in life, think it important to pick you apart and by what informations you've provided injure your thinking in private to see whether you two are attached is a serious abuse of a writers ability to think for themselves, for anyone to make anything about them, interject their energies through the ability of the writer to speak from their own shoes in life. People who read with intensity, are usually people expecting things to be about them, and read carefully to argue that that is the case, of things being about them, as though your understandings in life, have so benefited from knowing them. No this is my life, and my experiences, and based upon my understandings, these are my reflections of how I think things are, and why I think things are the way they are, this is my viewpoint, that doesn't mean that things are this way, or that all people are like this this or that, or that its even about my own personal experiences that I have come to believe in anything I have said. Writing is a gift, which builds upon itself, you have to start somewhere. And while the reader may feel further along in life, deducing what they think is important, or trying to interject their energies causing the writer to stop believing in themselves, its all a matter of survival at that point. Not to let anyones energies suck the positivity out of you, or gear you in a direction in life disfavorable to your own best interests in life, that's not allowing anyone to have the power to change your attitude in life, or motivations in life, that's when you will be well on your way, to a better life for yourself, this is why I didn't want to read the big book, because I did not grow up alcoholic, and now that I have read the book, it has interjected itself philosophies and tone into my writing "happy destiny" etc. Yes its incredibly annoying, when someone who is reading has stepped into your shoes in life, and even worse when someone else voice has had an affect on your ability to be yourself, using your voice, to speak for them, as though their lives are more important that your own, or for the purposes of hurting your voices, because they think their voice is more important that your own. People can write for themselves, its not my responsibility to speak for anyone who does not like me, and that becoming something you are not, when someone else voice gets sent to you, and in speaking speak to that voice or opinion of you, that is not coming from your own understandings, that's an unwanted influence, and its upon combining two viewpoints within a single a person, that are in disagreement with one another, that illness takes place, either fogging out, inability to move forward, not feeling like oneself, not knowing where its coming from, feeling grose or sick, irritated, and even hitting ones head, allow people to speak for themselves, and if you don't like what anyone has had to say, don't make it about you, apply it to your understanding of a person you don't understanding, and without compassions, become less accepting of those no longer in your life, not all of us can thrive well together, especially those with a different genetic makeup, chemical composition, disability, or tolerance for the wellness of others, get drained, me included.

Climbing your way to success can be an exciting experience but it has its limits, it takes a lot of positive energy to maintain an audience online, not everyone is equipped to handle such excitements in life, don't let your emotions get the best of you, and never be too hard on yourself, you cant be first to anything in life, if you cant keep going and sticking to what your good at, venture too far off course in life, on your way to anything worthwhile. Keep your head up, there will be many who have come before you in life, no matter what career you choose to partake in in life, its called learning the fundamentals of any trade in any given profession, and learning to adapt along your way, nothings written in stone, when it comes to acceptances in life, this you learn as you get better and better at what you do. There are no written set of directions to follow, or one story to which all stories unfold or stick to, that's the bottom line, its your story and your experiences in life that govern your sense of direction in life. Everyone has their limits, and the more popular you become hopefully, the less will come out of you, that would give anyone reason to trace your life story with trepidation, as though coming forward for you, was a purposefully, stifled process of self discovery. It takes awhile to find ones voice, we are all unique, some with more experiences in life than most, but its by our exposures in life, that give us a heads up, as to how much pressure we can handle in life, socially, not everyone is comfortable being known, and that's generally not the purpose for sharing ones story, to become known to all. There are many ways of looking at things, one persons voice is simply a lense from which to view the world, given to you by the person to whom is speaking, sometimes an imaginary lense is provided by the speaker, some writers gifted in that respect, and some lenses provided to you, are real, meaning real people, telling you their stories in life, and from their real experiences or visions in life, have come to a set of set of decisions in life, that has determined where they are today. We all have the power to make choices in life, what is life about anyways. This Ive thought about before COVID-19, broke out, waking up, and going to sleep at night, two basic functions to living life, I don't think its necessary to have the gift of predicting the future, that gift only becomes realized, with stability, there are a lot of necessary steps you have to take in life, to be granted the gift of insights, which lead to better decision making abilities for yourself and for others, sometimes its with concern for the future we make choices, and sometimes its with concern for our present that we make choices, that's the whole purpose behind boundary setting, without interferences from others, where do you stand spiritually and mentally, and are you able to handle interruptions to your daily progress in life, so much of life is about handle minor irritations and interruptions to our focus, but how often do those interruptions totally impede upon your progress, its seems like everyone has the opportunity to either play victim to their circumstances in life, or be a leader when it comes to outlook, that's your choice, upon sharing your story, that's the moment at which, you have gotten the basics down, and have decided not to allow your past to dictate future outcomes for your personally, and instead have decided to be lead by your present decision making abilities to govern your future, that's when the choices you make now matter, when they are no longer driven by your past, no longer driven by what others have to say toward you, no longer driven, by those minor interruptions, that's being mature, able to handle any inputs in life, and still manage to stay on an even keel, in life, balance minded, centered, and focused, no matter what your circumstances are now, present, or past, that's being in the moment. Eventually you have to let go of any feelings of time constraints keeping you from moving forward in life, whether that be thinking about how much longer you have to go in life, how much life you have lived (boy did I play many soccer games, I get tired just thinking about all the soccer I played), and cherish who you are now, you may not be the same energetic person you were in your younger years, but that doesn't mean youre completely disabled now, be conservative with your thoughts, every period in time, demands differently of us, and based on social and environmental factors, we may have more energy than do most, to partake in activities, in more tumultuous times, we seldom would think to take part in, that's just recognizing our own humanity, wouldn't it be nice if we could always live life feeling invincible, and why is it when we do we feel human, we get scared, its like we have grown dependent on convincing ourselves that we have robotic capabilities, and spend more time automizing our days and think that the more we can accomplish without thinking, the better off we'll be, at what point, when everything does hit our conscious minds, has living become too overwhelming for words, when we feel limited, when we feel stuck, when we feel victimized, when we feel not good enough, when we feel powerless, when we feel less than capable, when we feel ugly, when we feel sick, when we feel stupid, when we feel traded, when we feel abused, when we feel devalued. These are all feelings we may encounter in life, when we feel wronged. That's a normal repercussion of interacting with people and getting hurt, the point is to be strong no matter what thought consume you, and continue to live up to ideals, until IKEA can make our dream homes happen.

Its Not Inevitable ...

Its not inevitable that all roads lead to one, always keep in mind, the significance of the journeys through life that others have been through in life, and focus on what you are doing with your life, so that your life does not influence others in a way, that interferes with their ability to maintain faith in systems of trust, never having to worry about the well being of those they care about, as though we have not yet arrived to a better place in life, or that we are not yet able or will not make it to a better position in life, suited to raise our families, and care for our parents, get jobs, and live a good life, sometimes less in more, and its in the simplification of the worlds problems that we come to understand the value of a human life, we are not machines, and while many of us have worked in professional settings, no one has the stamina to put up with the course of discussions of everyone, especially those leading others astray, maybe it is for that reasons that people choose to get involved and take charge over the direction of trusts in life, and even gain access to works of value, otherwise presented to more notable figures in American History, currently serving the best interests of our people. Its when individual interests seeking justice for any wrongs that have been committed toward them in the past, seek to gain exposures by the wrongs that have been committed against them, is where a system fails to make sense, why would anyone who has been harmed, need to later require public notification of the harms they have suffered would that not just put other people in fear, most of this you leave up to the LAPD by reporting to them consistently and doing your best to stay out of harms way. I did my best during a time of need, upon finishing a book I considered to be a masterpiece of writings I have compiled over the years and kept track of, finally publishing it via lulu.com, with only a few selections for stock cover pages, and one of them graph paper, probably a poor choice, not to highlight any known offenders of gun violence, that was really disappointing, in the future need to be more cognizant of how things look, and not to look as though Im trying to make a statement, by appearances, of some kind of strength, or purposeful battle in life, made personal, in the fight against violence, especially gun violence, as it has affected people around me, as a student at CU, and in law school, after posting on twitter, and [whether] my work left up to be read or memorized, not the best first presentation of the issues, I felt thrown under, I was hospitalized 2009, so I was diagnosed as something I did not believe I was at the time, but if you get suicidal you are automatically diagnosed as being bipolar. Anyways, its seems others felt so confident about going through my things, my teacher shouting "Melrose Place the Remake" I had written a list of TV Shows I grew up watching in my computer, not something Id expect a new teacher to blurt out in front of the entire class, and then met with my Dean in his office, with my Property professor. The room was empty with a Fan on the desk. I thought that was weird. I had told them I was thinking of taking some time away from law school, and then did some traveling on my own. I think that was a good decision.

Thats the End of That ...

Just called my Attorney, when it gets to be too much, that's when its time to stop, talking about what ifs and what abouts, and focus on yourself, and what needs to get done. You cant fix what people think about you, by talking about things as though that side exists, that's how people knowing you become defensive, and take personally, as though you are referring to their treatment of you, and then decide to compare and bond with anyone else knowing you, as though you are off or saying things that aren't happening. You cannot control how you are treated in life, and its better to just report in private than it is to say outloud, and then make happen in ones life, that's the trick to getting the defamation to stop, you cannot openly be accusatory to anyone, or point out things that would cause others to put their defenses up in life, and put you down, because they think you've f-ked up in life, or not normal, and someone who needs treatment, so that is a pattern that will continue so long as others assume that you are always writing this much, sometimes, it is when we are at our brink in life, of finishing a project, switching meds, in between care, seeing new doctors, which we can afford to see, that we are viewed under a different lense in life, its unfortunate, how expensive psychiatric care is, if it were my choice, I would not have changed care, happy on abilify although gaining a ton of weight, even though I ran everyday, hence the reason Im tired, doing all the work, but not accomplishing my goal weight loss, I think its better to be doing something, than to be doing nothing at all, and if all you have to do is do something right to get things going again for you in life, than maybe running and writing quotes, and book writing, and finishing law school was the best decision I ever made for myself. Im sorry if I got into bipolar delusions about the past, and whether connected to my life, its because of that type of thinking, I became suicidal after applying to the #usnavy on Wilshire, and instead of continuing on in that direction in life, writing to myself and drinking, going out alone, I decided to invest all my time and energy in my schoolwork and finish law school which was my goal, I was already a certified paralegal, went back during a semester off to finish one more course and work part-time for $8/hour. Sometimes life is hardwork, and many like me had to work and go to school at the same time, that was really difficult to manage, ended up going to school part-time, its really no ones fault where you get jobs at the time, paying jobs, but maybe should've waited, it was a great experience to wake up early and be with a group of people who equally worked hard learning different products and what to say, and the methods for capturing an audience, and selling a product, who would have ever thought I would be a salesman, given my education in sociology, psychology, and law, I pictured myself as a paralegal, but low and behold, all these jobs you are privileged to take on in life, teach you lessons, what the real world is like, what to value, the value of a hard day at work, the difficulty balancing work life and school life, and the difficulty those who know you had comprehending why I was working for $8/hr traveling all over Southern California in roadshows, selling products at Sams Club and Costco, that never made sense to them, they saw better for me. Just appreciate where you are now, you never know where this life will take you, nows a good time to rest, not get thrown under a bus in life, and go under, like P Diddy on a strkyer bed in a hospital with a cap on, that was like me for 7 years on risperidone and abilify shots, in bed most of the day, up to do a few hours of work, or go running, slept most of the day and night, not social, had boyfriends sometimes, but for the most part stayed chaste, some people cant handle the heavy meds, can function on anti-psychotics why they don't take them, and don't self harm so that the meds work better that was a stupid idea, and don't panic if you get an STD literally beat yourself up for it for 3 years, that's unnecessary and cruel to blame oneself, call the Doctor, get a Penacillin Shot, and move on with your life, and if you've had near death experiences in life, then don't ever waste your time effort on anything that aggravates you, weakens your heart, slows you down, or makes you feel stupid. Lifes not that difficult, but if you care about your image, be prepared to defend yourself, and why you are the way you are, and not because of any guilts obnoxious or verbose.

Dispositions in Life ...

Based upon your disposition in life, people will treat you based (1) on how you present yourself (2) your ability to demonstrate confidences around others (3) by what you have to say in conversation whether on topic or off topic on a tangent (4) your ability to stay focused (5) how needy you are in life (6) whether you are an independent thinker (7) whether you can think on your own or whether you need help from others in order to think (8) knowledge of your weaknesses in life (9) never experimental when the moment counts (10) able to learn as you go, without freaking out about the past (11) complain the least especially when in contact with previous contacts, not complain about people in your life (12) take things with ease, not get worried or paranoid, think to extremes (13) based on how well you are able to stay well around others, (14) depending upon who you are, knowing who you are, and living life with importance, not waste time, spending too much time with people who are not responsible for how you have been represented or misrepresented to others, (15) always in control of your emotions (16) never doubtful of what others think unless their doubts are made known to you, specifically attacking you for informations in life you need to disclose about yourself (17) accept all criticisms with a grain of salt (18) handle your losses, these are just material things (19) maintain your right to privacy and not let people into your life, who may take or steal from you (20) let people go from your lives, when they have had enough, not require others to be understanding of you when you are not doing well in life, nor require others to be proud of you upon achieving any goals in life, live mostly for yourself, without interfering with the better judgements of others, as having to measure you within their equations in life, about what things are about, sometimes less is more, you may have a very different interpretation of life, than do most, the best lives lived, are ones not in constant communication with others, busy on the task at hand, not ruminating over the past, and the possibilities of why things ended up the way they did previously, and be thankful for everything that was said right, to enable you to live this life, without negativity, and be so fortunate to be exposed to so many well and like minded individuals who wish to stay well and remain well, in spite of what losses we have incurred, due to miscommunications, relapses, drugs, alcohol, addictions (including addictions to stories, or peoples lives, we have become obsessed with compartmentalizing to rid ourselves of guilts in life), and to understand that so long as everyone does their best to support and care for those around them, that's the best they can do, and for anyone who wishes to leave life because they cannot stand the times, the changes, or what is said currently, can always go to the hospital, or take a moment to tune out negative voices, and just learn to appreciate who is here now, not everyone was around to witness everyones new found smarts, happinesses, abilities, and some of us, have fallen off the wagon again, depreciated, in a moment when most should be at peace, think first (1) are you doing anything wrong (2) could be be living a more disciplined life (3) is what you are saying online helpful or only causing yourself harm (4) should anyone accept blames for public losses that are not of our own making (5) how hurt are others when things get misrepresented in life, or if someone does not measure up, to what we think is smart? Always remember to be human, we are not machines, and definitely not robots, as you get older now in my 30s, you get maxed out caring, and opening yourself up to love, you can only handle so many rejections in life, or worries, before you give up on things that used to make you happy in life, pressured to be a stronger better version of yourself, all I know is that when I lost 50lbs, and got skinny, that didn't make any men stay in my life, still a reject, not completely whole, all together present and positive, just someone to visit, check on, if you want to be more than that in life, not someone left behind, for giving up in life too easily, then get your spirits up! Everytime something bad happens I lose all my friends, my mom convinces me that they are not my real friends, and changes my number at Verizon Wireless, but if I freak out, don't change your number and get locked out of your Twitter Account, that was stupid.

Never Assume ...

Never assume that anything is about you, its upon complaining that you get hurt back, ie the use of your likeness used to benefit anothers interests whether or not they are in tune with your own best interests to be unique, or to be successful, or to achieve in life. Its not okay for people who have worked hard to be denounced before they have even earned a dollar, or gotten a paying job, and working their way toward becoming successful in life, that is what going to school is for, to pave new paths for oneself, and to create opportunities for oneself, how one has mad decisions as a law student without professional training in how to write in response to questioning concerning, their belongings or what is stored in response to a joke of what was considered popular media while entering law school shown two youtubes, and later youtubes produced by my Ex and his friend, is something between them, not something I ever thought twice about, its upon getting paranoid, that one begins to lead any sort of investigation, as to who is being inspected and why, who is being harmed and why, and when upon giving access to people to your place of serenity and focus, how any harm would result, upon knowing you, or thinking that you had it made in life, or smart enough to withstand and expect an societal pressures along the way of achieving, it wasn't until I left law school that I began free writing, I didn't do much if any free writing in law school besides journaling in college, and maybe sometimes during difficult times, no ones ever feels compelled to write on and on about their lives, unless its important, or unless, they are under so many pressures, that they feel the need to put in writing what they can remember, to figure out what has gone wrong in their life, that is for no one to inspect, any informations provided in private, and make public any disclosures, as though I knowingly ever caused harms to others, or by my awkward experiences in life, justifiably defamed after years of schooling and personal achievement, that's wrong to do, to make blasphemous deductions about a persons character, as though the purposes for their actions, were in progress of creating some story or living some life, with concerned for how they are portrayed or thought of by others, why would anyone ever subject themselves to harsh scrutiny in life, and when is it ever appropriate to treat someone who has done nothing but help others their entire life, and with a good heart, well intentioned, always nice to everyone, be treated as something they are not, simply because of what is known about them privately or by seeing how they are talking to anyone privately, justify that hatred toward them like Im some kind of outgoing aggressive sex addict that is overly confident about my sexuality and purposefully put myself out there to increase my odds of being picked in life, that's not how love works, you get to know people and upon getting to know people match up, sometimes, when you are not completely 100%, social acceptance wise, its not smart to date, as others will take from you, or will steal love, or intelligences from you, based upon what they know about you in life overhear and think that you were a poor decision maker or a let down, no one who is in school achieving and working is a let down, they are always people to be proud of hardworking, and generous with their time and energy socializing or having friends in life, sometimes you make sacrifices in life, to focus on school, that has nothing to do, with ones mental health, or having any outlooks in life paranoid, it just means that one does not fit in, and because one does not fit in, keeps to themselves, and in keeping to themselves, have decided to focus on finishing law school to get a job, so that they can be social, and have things to talk about that was the big idea, but never made it to that point in life, proud of myself, unfortunately, it took too many breakups and failures to finally open up, I don't think I ever described what I though in jest, overcoming any guilts in life, which is what it would look like now, having done well, and then served a bunch of voices trying to get me to not believe in myself, and think a bunch of other things or fears that others people think, to see if anything I say adds up or amounts to a negative viewpoint supporting the voices sent to me, be sure never to advise those who do not accept you, of a way to handle their negative thoughts toward you, by simply concluding in the negative, that only did me a disservice in life, to again have to talk through to any sides, who think less of me, and for how long have thought that way, that random people who I don't even know, just hear about me, and are mean to me, like theyre better than me, it must have been something said about me, that was so disappointing, that upon being known to all, treated as a let down, or someone beneath them, never in my life have I been so put down, and insulted in life, as after having been punished, and it seems that no matter what I do in life, nothing is ever sufficient to get people to stop treating me privately like there is something wrong with me, or send me voices, until they can get me to focus on a bunch of fears, and say what I know to see if it matches up with how they think. You don't know what I know until I have said what I know, and you cannot assume that any information known to all, is a stab at my good character or intended to cause me harm, learn when to stop hurting someone, who was significant at one point in time, and allow them to move forward irrespective of what others think about how they've led their own investigation as to the causes and concerns for illness, that being because I was hospitalized 9x.

The Goals of Refinement ...

It is now 6:46AM, on March 19, 2020, and its been quiet for the past few days, finally free of voices, heckling over me, and shouting at me commentaries, as though Im supposed to reply verbosely to their negative sentiments toward me, who ever thought that was a practical approach, to shifting gears in life, as though one can make solid statements, with the bouncing repercussions of the actions and words of others, thrown under their belt, as though one who overhears should ever bear the responsibility for those words, beliefs, or thoughts about others, including words not already proven be directed toward me, or be even about me. It seems that people think that someone who has privileges in life, has it easy in life, or that their smarts were not earned, by living a good life, being a person of virtue, nice to everyone, cordial, and never running into any animosities in life or put downs, that would ever have rattled their feathers so much so as to change them, even in front of a crowd, good graces is a learned trait, overtime, you become accustomed to the attitudes and provocations of others, and hopefully mature and take things less personally, I never reached that point of stability in life, always hyper-vigilant, that's me, an uptight person, everyone trying to loosen me up, by the time I finally loosened up online, that didn't seem to be worth anything of value to anyone looking for commentary geared toward a different type of conversation in life, I was not privied to understand or see coming, you are not prepared for most of life, and as you learn and become more professional, you become more familiar, with the stances that others take during time of turmoil, losses, and illness, and stay steady in spite of whatever is going on around you, there really is no stopping point to hate, once others by their first judgments of you by what others have to say or by your presentations think not professional enough, or well thought out, think its okay to purposefully injure someone who they think has not done an efficient job at explaining what not to do, and things to think about instead, or traversing the ill beaten paths in life, that have led to the spoils of wealth, and interfered with the wellness, or those with good lives, at what point do you not learn from the past misfortunes of others, and by the good graces of now, be appreciative of how far we have come, and why we have come so far, and for what reasons we have come so far, to not make things about little things in life, you try to amplify to bigger deals than they need to be, simply because you think someone is trying to be like someone they are not, and while someone is focused on themselves accuse them of ever doing anything or behaving in any way to spite anyone from their past, that would be very childish, to rub any animosities in the face of others without them knowing it, based upon what they look like, how they behave, what they believe in, or based upon what you think you know about someone, after having heard from them, believe that to be true, that their fears are a result of their failures in life, and their inability to succeed in life is so deserved, I don't think anyone trying to become successful and get a job, ever has that much planned out in life, the success part at least, my goal was always to finish law school, without money incentives, motivating me to achieve a higher education in life, don't put someone down simply because you think that they have more steam in them to overcome setbacks associated with embarrassment and humiliation on a large scale, that's not a fair deduction of someone of my stature, hospitalized 9x, I don't think for the majority of humans, its humane to subject someone to such standards of rejection and ridicule in life, such that one who write books, would ever be insulted or blamed as being apart of the problem. When one door closes another one open, where is the equal opportunity in that to be heard, and why is it okay for one person identity to be bastardized, in the name of others, for the sake of others, and expect me to live on anyways, wheres the sense in that, don't ever take a good person who keeps to themselves and works hard, and accuse them of any misconduct, as though they have not maintained accurate records, and done their best to get help in life, treat them as a weak link to society. This almost seems like it could turn into a suicide note, but I have learned over the years that more you harp on subjects that have caused you suicide in the past, the more likely you are to revisit all those subjects, become retraumatized, and end up in the same place in life worse off, so its better to only have conversations concerning the past with a licensed therapist, and if you have ever gotten in trouble in life, be sure not to share the settlement negotiation to "take all your blogs down" what does that have to do with a "civil harassment lawsuit" -in the future make no mention on your journey in life, of who you have been associated to present or past, that would not be the solution in case anything does go wrong, need not be blamed, for talking to you and hearing your idea about how to help those stuck in trauma, for some reason they think its okay to consistently push me out of the majority, and back into illness, whenever I finally am able to move forward or if ever succeeding in life such as being ranked 34,000 top website in the Country, that was a huge achievement for me, but perhaps not strong enough or well enough to manage an audience of that size on a daily basis, along with the voices. #bipolar --- Why I had to wait 5 years to build my website. #worldpeace <3

Know Your Coordinates in Life ...

To any one set of standards in life, lived upon, one comes to be, and its by living to a set of standards in life, that beliefs are created, beliefs in oneself and growing to believe in others, it takes time for any system of thought to appeal to the masses, usually we are drawn only to what makes sense, rarely do we venture off course to help make sense of what has been left unfinished, or what if stated so clearly, does the trick, explains how a negative series of events occurred, and then in the future place similar blames upon people, as though for the same motivations similar or worse harms have resulted. That's taking one persons deduction said out loud, and then blaming, them for taking anything personally as being about them, without regard for their best efforts to be apart of and to contribute to the ideas of others, for the betterment of society as a whole, not to be placed, among any series of events, which have resulted in harms to others, not based upon connections in life, be blamed, for any unwanted associations in life, to people overseas, who have not lived the same life, nor have been privileged to the same upbringing and pleasant exposures in life, just the same new to the game, or not having a total understanding for the basis from which beliefs drive the course of discussions whether about individuals or about groups, or anyone who they deem of public interest to be added to the course of discussions flying overhead. You are a product of what you believe, and if your beliefs intrude upon the wellness of others, and their ability to thrive and be apart of casted out to dry or be put to blame in life, than that is a making of circumstances to disintegrate a person from the lives of the majority to be wholly accepted, and to be known instead for their wrongs or any mishaps in life, stated in private in their phones, and continue to make jokes until anything in poor taste comes to fruition on a larger scale, to further demote a person as being worthy of being apart of or considered of value to any like minds located within society, maybe never, will that occur, that someone of intelligence is granted any respects in life, but only for how they have responded to criticisms be judged as responding in the negative, that running everyday and losing 50 lbs and writing quotes and a books, was not a positive way of coping and weathering any storms overhead, of, about, or concerning them, and their best interests, and for the causes they have supported remained, calm not in a superficial way, but commercial, in a professional way, that's not just to be appealing to everyone, but to be in a digestable format, that does not overwhelm, or cause anyone else to feel in disarray or grow worrisome about their image, or even think it a big deal for anyone who once thought their cares were well intended, were ever misinterpreted as illustrating that a wrong had been committed and based upon a knowing of someone famous attending a meeting, put all evidentiary pieces together, to say that this person has been casted under a negative light, and this is to further corroborate that joke towards them, as them belonging to a similarly situated group of individuals known for a "lock out" (ie the NBA). Maybe that's taking things too far, but for all purposes of maintaining the safety needs of any group of individuals exposed to any people who are associated to people in history who have been accused of crimes, further separate a person who has been harmed, was treated from those harms, and then made to look as though deserving of those harms or repercussions for their own associations in life, or for their interactions with others, while on the meds they were prescribed, not smart or sharp enough to keep up with all the jokes and tests as to their smarts and their integrity be made to look like something of a joke, its for those reasons I think they thought that it was funny that another Batman movie was made, regarding the Joker figure, and think its funny that I took down a poster of Barack Obama with blood stains running on his face, from a box, atop the Federal Cemetary on Wilshire, were you are no longer allowed to drive or take photographs, however they do celebrate memorial day there, with a flag on each headstone, the most beautiful and scary cemetery I have ever walked, eventually you take a moment to face the challenges ahead, and what has passed, and do your best to move forward in peace, without fear of losses, or continued losses, do your best to live life, no matter what jokes are flying overhead, not become encompassed by those thoughts about you or others, likewise be tainted and tarnished, and trashed, as contributing to poor belief systems, or hardships when any likeminded group of people disagree, as to your condition, be considered as in the wrong, or too hard on your purposefully, as though you deserve to suffer, to claim that had you not taken a poster down, that other crimes would not have been committed, if I lived a private life, nothing in my phone, if not placed online, should ever cause anyone to question whether what happened on Wilshire was known in Colorado, to explain a happening in another state, I have discussed this previously upon beginning my blog, I can do my best to consistently report, but moving forward does no good, if all anyone wants to do, is to see and prove whether anything bad can happen as a result of my words or actions to place blames on me, as though I haven't done my best to work professionally online as a writer, prepare myself academically and in private via book writing, and then give a solid presentation of my work, and keep hidden pages on my website, of all other issues not for public discussion, I think that was a very fair contribution to the world wide web, to slowly go through every issue possible concerning me, and then to share my work and present myself in a positive light, its unfortunate that you can work so hard, and to not be valued in life, treated as though you are something you are not, called names, and other war jokes misdirected toward you, treating you as though you have not been professional, and have every right to be defensive if its blames put on you for the life you have lead privately or in public is not good enough to the standards of those who are free to live lives the way they want to absent minded publication of interests beyond them seeking to discredit or to dissuade others from listening to what they have been through that would make this blog personal, about wrongs, and undoing wrongs that have been committed towards me, and to not make light of what has occurred, seem insensitive to the best interests of others, is what they were trying to prove things said to me in private, to see how I respond in public, uncomfortable, and anything not making sense, speaks to what was said to me in private, to interfere with my comfortability speaking, and sounding clear. I think too much effort has been put forward to figure out how a "Freudian Slip" occurs, and by doing so, seek to communicate that wrongs occurred and that I so knowingly sought to bring anyone into a losing equation in life, to which I was being blamed, and its for those reasons I have been hospitalized 9x, as though I am not the same, nor have suffered the same feelings in life, feeling lost, having to figure life out, trying to make sense of things, be confident, find love, maintain friendships, no one has it easy in life not even me, and don't go so far out of your way to make an even bigger Merrill Lynch jokes of me, to say that upon this happening, this is what will happen and what things will look like, if you pair this person with this person in life. #stop hate

A Common Set of Blames ...

A common set of blames occurs, when a known series of events has occurred, and the people to whom are connected to a series of events, once informations are known about them, timelines are constructed as to their lives, in addition to previous events, and current events, seek to establish, sync, or unify a connection between a persons life lived, determine upon when a person became known to the masses, and upon being known to the masses, whether they had an influence on the decision making abilities of others around them, or to people outside of the immediate communications have so influenced, to commit bad acts, not have been inspired in a positive way, to make a positive difference, that's hurting someone, who you think is known to all, thinking that if known, that them being known, may incite violence in others, as though their story is disruptive to the psychological states of individuals not otherwise motivated to commit bad acts against others. Never assume that by connections one is demoralized to the negative opinions of others for any justified reasons concerning their ability to communicate to the masses without putting anyone in harms way, or that upon the sharing of information from their lives, put others or themselves at risk of harm, its usually upon telling a story that we have decided to live a different life, not so trusting of the people that come into our lives, and look less for answers to our problems, seeking advices from others, but when we come to find and trust within, that we know best how to respond to circumstances outside of our control, and seek the courts advisement, how to adjust oneself, during any given set of circumstances, not become entrapped by the actions of others, sometimes its not unless you state your fears that they become a reality, similarly its not until you describe how you feel and what has happened, that it can happen again for you the same, if you continue on thinking in the same way, you'll likely run into the same or similar series of events or course of events in life, which generate the same or similar response from others to not care about you, or to think that you are responsible for anything bad that happens to you in life, that it the price one pays, without having people in their lives, and without being able to be helped by those in charge of taking care of them, that is when your problems have become so big, bigger than you can manage on your own, or be able to say out loud, usually means that something was done to you, to interfere with your ability to communicate and to further than inability to respond, further tested to see for what reasons or causes one chooses to communicate when and why, and based upon what informations provided choose to communicate when and why, it because people think that upon knowing you or your triggers think its okay to test for responses from you, to try to control your outputs in life, as though you are some test subject based upon where you have been in life, manipulate you to change what you have to say and thus your course in life, running through your own words in life, as they stay silent, having gotten what they wanted, hurting you until you say anything that speaks to them, that is someone who does not like you, and reads your work, or someone not in your life reading your work, to determine whether you bear causes to their concerns, or you have been knowingly in a bad position in life, publicly known, beyond a tv show title, and that that hatred for you, your upbringing, and reasons for attending law school, was so deserved that everyone decided to make fun of you, and beared guilt for making fun of you, before they even knew you or heard from you, or knew whether you were intelligent or not, always assume that one who attends graduate school is intelligent, intelligent to read and write, and memorize, and comprehend mass amounts of information, and be able to perform under any types of pressures, no matter what happens in the news, its when you stop to take a look around, and witness first hand how people have changed, and for what reasons people have changed, and begin keeping a timeline yourself, that you come to fully understand the extent that people will go through to label or mislabel you or make you responsible for others poor outlooks in life, as though during times of crisis you were not a sound board for reasoning and judgment making, thats hurting someone before they have spoken fully, and can fully comprehend and with confidence exclaim that they are not a party to the losses of others, as they have lived life responsibility sober and clean and went to law school held jobs, and therefore did their best to be reliable sourced of information during times of crisis, whether information was obtained illegally, or with permissions, and did their best to later clarify misunderstandings, hopefully before the information provider (ie me) was harmed, without giving me an opportunity to be heard, label me as something I am not, to see whether that would cause me suicide, to make me look gay, or say that because I have gay problems Im not a good role model to other women, or a fair warning of what poor decision making can lead to, or a bad point of reference in history when it comes to how public figures can be misused in life, to hurt the faiths of others. That is taking someone who is accepted by all, and publicly defaming them as a non-acceptable product of education and surroundings, and denounce them as important or or value. What is it to anyone to devalue someone who keeps to themselves and doesn't go out drink or do drugs, and because they are not married, be treated as a reject or someone who without friends, is defective or not a keeper in life, one can only roll with the punches for so long before one begins to wonder for what reasons, their credibility is being attacked, and for what reasons, were they made fun of with confidence, while they were just coming forward, trying to piecemeal their lives, and figure out what went wrong, that's without expectation of things going wrong, upon disclosing ones past, and upon sharing, be mistreated as someone who has not done their best to live a good life, honestly, be treated as someone who is gay or "P" that is wrong to assume that its because of any obsessions, that one tries to help, maybe its because as a victim of homicide, I have a natural talent and gift for being strong in spite of trying circumstances affecting everyone, and wanted to share that positive trait with others. Not by focusing sorely on subjects where known harms have occurred, and hurt someone over and over again, until they are so damaged, that they are incapable of giving and receiving love in life, simply because others thought because of the way they looked or based upon where they have been in life, are not smart, or not deserving of respect, a job, or eventually marriage.

When People Take Things Too Far ...

Some people take things too far in life, and so long as you allow it, it continues, letting the wrong people take hold of your feelings and emotions, or wanting things in life to the extent that others feel threatened by you or that your happiness threatens their own well being or what they have in life, such competitions in life are unreasonable. Never think twice that your wellness ever has had an impact on the wellness of anyone around you, whether or not you are a public figure or held to any standards of beliefs or disappointments in life, ever inherit any responsibilities in life to care for the sick or to make better everyone around you, you can do your best and sometimes still not be good enough, and its those disappointments, when you have given your all, and done your best, that cause us the most pain and dissatisfaction in life, as though by our own devices, when focused on whats in front of us, be met with any blames in life, as though we are responsible for maintaining the wellness of people beyond our immediate surroundings, or control the outlooks, for anyone who is not in our lives, or who whether influenced by us, be affected by where we are at in life, whether that be better off or worse off than a majority, viewed, and upon being viewed, the goal intent of every public figure is to share a life (or lifestyle) befitting of anyone who has not been able to experience the same wellness in life, opportunity, or access to systems of education, that enable them to get jobs, outside of the scope of what others feel they are capable of achieving for themselves. -When people think someone has taken things too far, they are most likely referring to the “pants down” effect, when someone who after either making a series of poor decisions decides to live an alternate lifestyle, not to the acceptances of the majority, or someone who has yet to experience the stability that comes after a job well done, takes risks in order to gain exposures in life or connections in order to see what other types of life are like, that’s the “pants down” effect, meaning being led not by our minds, but by our hearts, a kind of blind attraction to people, places and things, we feel drawn to, but leave us in places in life, we know less about upon arriving to a different way of living, its best to always stick to what youre good at in life, even if it means its too late to change careers, or specialties, figure out what you know best and do your best to be perfect at what you do, not all are strong enough to switch professions, and do well anywhere they go in life, most of us, need to train, and become professional at one subject before we are able to take on new subjects, or have a better understanding of how the world works, until we have had experiences ourselves, upon our exposures, travel, and get to know the rest of the world, who knows maybe not everyone is the same, and maybe we do have great lives, who is it for anyone to judge anyone who has lived differently than them, as not being as understanding as anyone who has been afforded privileges in life, and maybe that’s just it, seeing someone who grew up going to private schools, who has worked for the government, and has attended rehab twice, seems like a poor fit when it comes to any equations measuring the amount of respect paid to anyone in life, it seems as though unless you have done something important in life, are you respected as apart of unconditionally, and that if you have not been mentioned, that you were not apart of the same or similar circumstances which caused others hardship in the past, some of us sit closer to the core of the issues than do most, and never think lightly about it, or think that whatever odds were faced passed, cannot yet again occur presently, if the same sides are taken, and the same disappointments result, from a lack of appreciation for all the growth we have encountered, in place of less evolved ideologies in life, that don’t necessarily manifest themselves in positive ways once thought about, such as fights, people, causes, reasons for fighting, uncomfortable experiences, previous drug use, breakups, femininity, likes, all of which gets used to determine whether you are a likeable figure on your own, or whether you are imitation of others who are well liked and only by your exposures in life, are causes for you disposition, as lead by others and not a leader in yourself, able to take on tasks, or memberships in life, and take initiative to get involved in existing systems of support and do what you can to help make a positive difference. People seem to think that unless your cares in life are resolved, and unless you can maintain stability and keep track of all your written works, and displays in life, that you should be held responsible for any miscommunications that result from the tampering of your finished work products, I never insert any subtleties in my writings, that’s not my writing style, nor would every purposefully put typos in my work to communicate anything not specifically intended to communicate to shed light on any other subjects other than the content of my writings, and what I am writing about. That is not the purpose for me writing to control the ways in which other people communicate or to make anything about me, that would be selfish, to boil everything down to a few experiences in life, or to one persons experience in life alone.

Mass Produced Wellness ...

Who would have ever thought that wellness could be mass produced, that is having a positive outlook sharing those inputs, and then witness all transition in life, from points of illness, on the brinks of episodes, in the midst of poor decision making, or halfway through lamenting about their pasts, wake up to seeing things differently, that's the power of wellness, when people reach a stopping point, that's not not being able to move forward or short sighted in life, its just stopping one set of thoughts and picking up another set of thoughts, much like most endure, managing multiple lives, at home and while away at work, youre given many hats in life, and moments to shine, that's truly rising above whatever odds stand in the way between you and achieving wellness in life. Know that not at all moments will you be able to comprehend nor fathom the consequences of poor thinking and bad decision making, that's only for those in positions of power to decide, the constant, or current ramifications of not believing in any well intended group of individuals who choose to share their thoughts and outlooks with the world. Its not just a trait, staying well, in spite of the times, it's a gift, those with the most credits in life, and capabilities of staying well no matter what the circumstances are tend to thrive the most, whether or not anyone thinks like them, able to still function, in spite of whatever is going on around them, they must be doing something right in life. With attraction comes promotion, whatever you attract in life, you then become responsible for not transferring any ill points of view or expose anyone to truths about your life, or the lives of others, which have traumatized you or caused you illness in the past or presently to think about, that's not what holding a microphone is about, complaining, if you have not yet arrived in life, it is unlikely that your voice will be heard in the positive, no one who is gone, or losing sight of what is important to them ever looks found, or worth a listen, who is it best to listen to during times in need, someone who brings us stability, not someone who interferes with our beliefs or senses of stability in life, and one who does not require admiration to feel whole, or to be liked or loved, to stay present and be able to perform under any types of pressures in life, not all who become successful are supported, in my case, it took many put downs in life, and disbelief in my wellness, in order for me to come forward wholly, and give it my best in writing, and while applying again for jobs, its been a struggle to say the least health wise, going to the hospital 9x not feeling all put together, sometimes if we don't know what is wrong, its common to go to others for help, now that I have a better understanding of whats going wrong, and why I get voices from time to time, I do my best now, to live a more simplified life, to myself, and not share myself too much with the world in person, as I am easily influenced, my face changes, and easily misguided, thought to believe that is it someone imperfect about myself, whenever someone lets you go in life, its because they don't need you in their lives, never take that personally, and always do your best to continue to live a good life, no matter what misunderstandings were had about you, it takes a lot of courage to write online, in spite of others thinking poorly of the content of my writing, as though I have ever not written from the heart, why is it okay for others to put me down, like my life is disposable or as though I can handle any public humiliations or embarrassments in life, that's not proper. Some people get so damaged in the process of trusting others before yet arriving to any successful positions in life, because they think it's a joke, that they are or will succeed in life, despite the odds against them, don't treat me as though me being in law school did not contribute to the well outlooks of others, or that me finishing law school or becoming a writer has anything to do with any animosities about anyone elses success in life, Ive had to achieve on my own just as everyone else has had to find their way during turmoil, and provide well outlooks to others, stay well.

News Not a Good Time ...

Especially not now, get worked up over anything that has passed, or focus too much on the insecurities of others as well as your own, ask yourself instead what there is to be thankful for in life, and be stable, in your moment of peace at this time. Its so important when things are not going well, to get stuck looking back, news not a good time. So much of life is based upon maintaining positive momentum, and being in some type of motion doing things for ourselves, or for others, that keep us focused on the present moment, its in the daily goals we set for ourselves, that allow us to rest easy at night, having done a good job, kept busy, and didn't lose sight of whats important to us, and the reasons, for feeling so accomplished. Who are you being happy for, and who are you deciding to stay healthy for? Love, friendship, job, there are many ways to show that you care, the first step is self-care, the more you care about yourself, and the better able you are to show that you care about yourself, always being presentable, the more likely you will be more easily approached in life, and afforded opportunities in life for growth. Its really a waste of time to worry too much what other people think, never allow the insecurities of others, to cause you to question yourself or your motivations in life, nothing gets handed to you in life, not your connections, upbringing, or life story, you always have to do for yourself what others cannot do for you, if you want to be afforded privileges in life. Its those who can take care of themselves independent of what others think, that lead the best lives, not those also thinking and wondering about anyone in particular, always read critically, but since when is it ever okay to obsess with the conditions of others, its not always your job to better others, however it is your job to better yourself. Do your best not to be of concern, or to ever write of concerning others, and always do your best to always be yourself, people generally want to hear from you, where youre at in life, not so much about what you have to say about others, or see what you think about others, since when is that protocol for being accepting of someone, to judge them by their cares, worries, fears, or interactions with people. That's simply to denominate you as being a source of empowerment to others, to say that you only speak of what you have not already accomplished for yourself, love and belongingness, needs, sure I have, I make friends easily with women and men, and never have difficulty finding a companion in life, or a love interest, those things come easy to me in life, what I do have difficulty with is getting a job, finishing my masters, and moving forward in life, no one wants to be treated as a reject, its because I was not able to get a job, that I decided to finish a masters, it took awhile, but school isn't easy and it is $3000 a course, so it took time to get the funds to pay for each course and finish, and had to work some years, and take time off from school.

Not Everyone's Ready ...

Not everyone is ready to get to know you, be your friend, or date you, sometimes you will want things in life, that others are not capable of providing to you, such as love and belongingness needs, that is something you have to figure out for yourself, how to feel fulfilled, and a respected member of society. If you have been put at odds in life, it can be difficult to then try try to put back together your life, and revisit your old life, its likely to cause you pain upon returning to any relationships that were once well, but exist no longer, that just means that people have moved on in life, and for whatever reasons, as confusions unfolded, chose to take space and time away from any dramas in life, having said their piece, and done their best to focus on themselves and their own wellness. Life is short but its not that short, that you need to try that hard in life, to be loved, if the person is not right for you, it should require no proving of yourself, to be loved, and no extra time on your part, to talk to negotiate or convince someone to like you, or to get reassurances from them, that you are liked. How sad would life be, if you constantly gave your power away to others in order to feel whole, that would be a waste of your time on earth, not bettering yourself, and instead basing your happiness based upon what you do or do not have in life, then feel limited or less than capable simply because you are missing things from your life, that would otherwise make your life perfect. Its not always wise, to give up your dreams in life, to help others, or to try to figure out whats going wrong, and try to fix the problem with interpretations based upon connections in life. Its not obvious as you grow and mature, how much power you have to influence the decision making abilities of others, or whether by your exposures in life, have some honest input that could help shed light on the issues, in order for better decisions to be made, life saving decisions. I grew up going to Neverland Ranch, as a child, was a guest of my best friend, whos Father owned a camp with Michael Jackson at one point for kids, I was just beginning law school upon his passing. I swam in P Diddy's pool on Star Island, my best friends Sister's friend used to babysit his kids, and we went swimming in his pool, maybe why I shouted 7/11 stops 9/11, because his best friend was shot, who wrote a song about the world trade "blowing up" before the buildings were attacked by terrorists, there are 7 of us, Arnelle, Jason, Sydney, Justin, that makes four plus three, Michael, Leslie, and Nicole. Arnelle used to do wardrobe for music videos, she even hooked me up with timberland boots in college, lined with Sherpa fur, I wore them in the snow. My best friend, ended up starting a company with her friend I think her name is Caroline, I had a friend named Caroline in Boulder, who once asked me who I thought did it, and told her what the psychic had told us, that she suspected something about Jason, the only thing funny about Jason, was that he drove a black Jeep, and always took us to the movies. Concerned when I heard that a James Bond in England, wrote an examination of the trial, with the same deduction, as the psychic we were introduced to by Terri Moore, Dan Leonards girlfriend, during the Civil Trial -in Paralegal School I took an Entertainment Law Course 2008, and decided to write my final paper on Documentary Film making, since James Bond made a documentary film about the Simpson Trial and what he thought had happened, hopefully not by rumor, something I had repeated to a friend in college in my apt on 13th Street, at The Ritz. I moved to a bigger apartment, following a breakup with a basketball player I was dating who approached me on Facebook, two actually, and picked him, the other Richard Roby, Kenyan Martin's half brother, and NBA Player, who grew up in San Bernadino. We broke up upon walking down the hall another girl walking up the hall, when seated in my car, came to my window, and told me that she had been in my car before, why would she tell me that?

Thats Just How Life Is ...

That's just how life is, sometimes you don't see the bigger picture, nor have the benefit of being an outsider looking in, away from the pressures of performing to a set of standards in life, we were not all raised the same, not even by the same exposures in life, its only until recently, since the advent of social media, that we have been able to share our lives, and be exposed to more than just the social circles that have gotten to know us personally, and by first hand experiences witness how we are socially or romantically. Eventually you mature, not that you become less trusting of people, but you become pickier, in terms of who you open up to in life, Ive always made it a point, not to talk about others, always only talking about myself, in conversations, and always open to answering other peoples questions about me, I never really thought twice about it, that's just social interaction, learning how to maintain a conversation, and have things to talk about, in the positive. I think online, there is a lot of room for error, with less socialization, and specific statements concerning the issues bothering you, or causes for voices, that is difficult to address, not that one bottles up concerning subjects viewed by others, thought currently affecting them, but its in the non-communication of personal issues with individuals, that individuals feel gone, that's them being talked about, without them knowing it. Im not sure under what circumstances that occurs, whether other think its okay or deserved, or ever assuming for negative reasons, as to out someone as being a bad person, deserving of being treated as though they have ever knowingly been in the wrong, as you become a bigger more important person or social standing in society, it becomes more important not to engage with others closely on a personal level, as that is how you can get hurt, if you are not sharp or awake, its common for people of higher stature and with greater responsibilities in life, to lose focus or to be overwhelmed that's normal, as you get older and mature you learn how to continue to function, whether you are focused, or frozen, that's being strong, able to withstand any pressures, or misunderstandings, and still be yourself, whether or not you have a clear picture of whats going on, as you get sharper, more becomes clear to you, and if not, then you are left only to focus on that which concerns you, or handle whats immediately in front of you. I think others think its okay, to play with your image, if you are not yet important, or thinking that you think you are important, or bigger than you are, put you down in life, before you have even realized the significance of your exposures in life, and your capability of becoming an important member of society one day, only those who are to be trusted are ever held to such high standards of leading discussions about themselves, or required to share their viewpoints, it hurts that as punished, did not write online for 5 years, and as a result suffered tremendously, under the watch and supervision of others, without a space to provide a voice of my own, that wouldn't allow others to intimidate me or treat me as stupid or not good enough, that's where blogging helps, a place where you can be yourself, explore your confidences in life, and be able to open up in life, with boundaries preset in place, that face-to-face communications don't seem to offer, unless you are strong and solid personally and professionally, its hard to carry your head high, and present yourself, as open and positive and animated, we all go through things in life, some experiences, some experiences shutting ourselves off from the world, and losing our ability to connect, or be made more shy than is reasonably expected of someone of intelligence, who is usually expected to carry themselves up and confidently. Im not sure what they expect of women, we are not robots, nor capable of comprehending, why anyone would blame anyone who has been put in a worse of position in life, as though through the sharing of their story, be made to look like the culprit of misconduct, or assuming they should have had the wits to understand how their image could have been compromised, by allowing people into their lives, those experiences in life, need not be broadcasted to all, nor should those experiences in life fracture others interpretations of them as intelligent or capable in life of continuing to achieve in life. I don't think it was up until recently that I lost steam, and have been in and out of focus, bedridden again, unmotivated, or self-harming, and forgetting to keep trying hard in life, it must just be burn out from writing books, that's understandable, it takes a lot of energy to write and assemble words let alone books, and keep track of all your writings as you are writing, and maintain a website, and a twitter account, it's a lot to keep track of, I always do my best, the purposes for maintaining accurate records of all my progress an thoughts, is because I registered as a corporation, and I am required to keep track of all my activities, including all of my works produced while writing for my company online. The purposes of registering as a corporation is so that my work will not be copied by others, or as influenced by reading my work, imitate the structure of my writing, tone, level of detail, or system of communicating my thoughts, in the same pattern to which I sound, that would taking from someone, using their expertise, and by their examples, imitate, and then hurt an original work product, to not credit a person who has assembled written works, to make them not seem original sounding, or different.

Phases in Life (Activism) ...

3/30/2020

As you get older, you may recall your younger years, when you were more at ease, more social, had more free time, watched more TV, made mixes, spent time at the gym in cardio classes, played on sports teams, went to bars, dated, experienced life, and then you settle down and mature, pick a 9 to 5, and that's all you do, wake up work sleep work, and that's your life. If your only free days are the weekends, to run errands, and to get things done, well you know you've made it in life, in the workforce, and someone who can be relied upon in life, not all are privileged to have that kind of stability and lifestyle, many of us working our own hours in part-time jobs, internships, or working from home, still trying to make in life, or finish our schooling to stand out more as an applicant, having finished an extra degree to boost our resume. What is success? Depending upon how fulfilled you feel in life, will options be made available to you, after all it's those who feel good about themselves that attract the most into their lives, if you know you're an asset, and you have worked hard to create a life for yourself that you're proud of, then there should be no reason to quit, upon failure, rejections, breakups, or losses, eventually we all have to keep going in life, it's not that we don't care, but sometimes there are ways to care, beyond rehashing the same subjects that have caused us emotional turmoil previously in life, in those cases therapy is your best option, to talk about the past, otherwise, everyone is generally expected to be present, keeping conversations light, no one really wants to get into depth with anyone about their personal lives, or sufferings past, don't we all have a hard time living life, don't we all struggle, don't we all have to think hard about life, don't we all wonder how things are made, or what makes money, if you're into business etiquettes, then that may be something that interests you, why and how, someone is able to establish a company, a brand, a business, get popular, be well known, respected, and returned to for inputs, it's all about following your dreams in life. If it's something you believe in and think will do everyone a service to make yourself available to others, then subject yourself to that turnover in life, of interpretations, whether or not that subjects you to further criticisms, do your best. It's not a perfect road (meaning there is no one right way about thinking about life or ways to find purpose in life, carve your own path in life), to developing any set of ideas, or foundations, from which to base your understandings and awareness of the risks posed by any present chaos, and be stable in spite of what's going on in the world, not be affected, that's hard to do, always be patient. It takes many years of working on a project in order for those ideas to come to fruition, and to create a finished product that you are proud of and that represents you and others well, that's being professional, not personalizing everything to be about you, or about people from your lives, and having a bigger purpose in life, besides your own personal issues, shed light on. We used to think that activists ("Activism" definition: the policy or action of using vigorous campaigning to bring about political or social change) [1] were, really emotional people, caring about things most don't care about, in need of support from others, who have a big voice, for the purposes of educating others on what the issues are, that's activism, it's not a natural trait, it's done by those who have time to think about life, and in thinking about life, want to make a difference and spread the word to others, so that they can be in the know too, about what's at stake or what matters right now, some of us are so busy with our own lives, that we wouldn't know what to do or what to care about or who to support, had we not been made aware of what needs work, that's when caring stops, not to the extent that it interferes with your daily focus on your own life, separate from what's bothering you or by what needs work, it's hard to keep your mind off anything for long, if more work needs to be done, to further those groups interests, we are not all cut out for the task of getting involved in all matters, but I do know one thing, once you get started caring, you're in it for life, something you will always go back to, support, and participate in ensuring that those community needs are met, and that services are provided to those in need, during times of need, that address those needs, without outright stating exactly what's at issue, especially if there is something wrong with you or someone you know and you don't know why there is something wrong with you or someone you know, it could be for different reasons, made sick, overwhelmed, we all get confused sometimes the worst is when people think one is too late.

Never the Same ...

3/30/2020

Some experiences change us for the better and some experiences in life change us for the worst, as connected we don't always achieve a better condition, or get the results we want, feelings wise -it can feel like occurring at your expense you allow people into your life, who don't necessarily balance you out, or curb that tendency to wander away ... when in love, the coolest thing, is bringing yourself back to that place, of being at ease, or by having fun with someone you care about, make things less painful, when in love you are constantly reminded that its not just you who goes through life, but they have gone through life too without knowing you, that's the beauty of meeting people, seeing what they were like before they met you, and hope that while knowing you, they don't lose that genuine interest in themselves and their cares, and who and what matters to them, become dedicated in anyway to your interests, that would feel like a risky investment, to persuade anyone of your condition needing extra attentions, and then not feeling good when attentions are paid, that's an awful way to give back to someone you love, express whats painful to understand, or where you ran into trouble in life, remember to think positively about yourself, what is it that you have to offer, a skill, a talent, a project, something special about you, your interests your hobbies, your dreams your passions, share positive things about yourself, that demonstrate that you are capable of being a happy person, if provided with the appropriate outlets to share in that manner, with whomever cares, we don't all get to be in love, but that's the most beautiful thing about love, is the space that it creates between two people, where they can be themselves, and with compassion and understanding, get eachother out of harms way, like closing down ocean ave, and putting signs on every pole "no parking" its too dangerous for him to be at the park, romantic, I think that was him, if so worried me Whenever you meet someone new, you do your best to connect, and if you cant connect take space, that's normal, when meeting anyone new, you either connect off the bat from the get go and carry on in sync, and when one fails to contribute positively to ongoing rapport, and subjects another to fears about interpretations, do your best to fix it, without worrying them too, sometimes we see things, others do not, but that doesn't mean point out everything to them at once, that may be too overwhelming for someone who works, freely, to suddenly be given input about anothers method for staying balanced, I think at this point in time we all keep the same things in mind: the past, the future, and whats going on right now, its hard to keep track of all the changes we have endured, some more meaningful than others, and for the most part I think we should all credit ourselves for contributing positively online in ways, that reflect those current cares, whether or not the past did a good job of informing us of the risks associated with bonding too many to one, because if one is defective, then one cannot be imitated and make others feel good, as impressed upon, that's why some people match, and some people don't, and why some get re-categorized as different, so that they cannot multiply spiritually, thought wise, or professionally be granted permissions to care for others in life, a lot of life is about who you meet in life, not all will have an influence on you, which is why many people have been raised to think for themselves and appear to think they are better than others, that's simply so they do not easily become influenced or take a back seat to anyone elses needs in life, be led astray, or get intimidated or feel smaller than others in life ... in fact a well adjusted person (in my opinion) is someone who can talk to anyone, gets along with everyone, and comfortable with themselves no matter where they go, that's being a mature adult, being able to adapt, and if you cant figure out what insecurities are keeping you from interacting with others in way that you can speak positively of yourself, and don't feel bad about yourself in front of others, constantly warning them of your deficiencies in life, or struggles, or explain yourself too much, seem like a handful, or someone who is gone, and too far from repairing themselves enough to bond with just one. -As you get older it becomes more difficult to date, used to being alone, having been hurt or left behind, in non-monogamous relationships, get hurt. When hurt it becomes more difficult to give yourself freely to others, whether it be by text or messenger, disengaged, and if upon opening up you get rejected, well thats the price you pay for waiting too long to date, and subjecting yourself to rejections in life, upon seldom opening up to others. Dont forget to be yourself, and leave the past behind you, the more you bring up, what you have been through and what didnt work out and why, the more you enable that harm to re-occur for you in your life, empowering instead those who have left you or moved on, who you are no longer in contact with on a one-on-one basis, and no longer attached to mentally or physically, if you bring it up, it will affect you, and if it affects you, it will affect your new partner, who just wants to start over new with you too and enjoy the moment getting to know eachother, without letting the past dictate for how long, or over what, have any rapport be interfered with by those from your past, thats loving freely, being given opportunities to date again, with the courts permission, allowed to date, and move forward in life. Never have I ever spoken badly about anyone I have hooked up with in the past, nor have I wrongfully accused them of hurting me (other than my image) or causing me mental health issues, my issues stem from my experience applying to law school and what informations I was exposed to prior to entering law school, sometimes when focused, we get hurt, from the moment you become a professional and accepted to law school (or a new job) is the "moment your reputation starts" or so I was told by a law school professor.

Gone Before You Make It ...

3/30/2020

This could be the worst case, of coming forward in American History, where by the time one, shares, their lives have already been ruined, and nothing forgotten. It seems that unless you are professional from the start, while, and over the course of your discoveries in life remain professional, will you be considered a trusted opinion worth a read, or written off as someone disliked for good reason, by a few, so by the time you share your story, nothing is believed, and everything discounted, as delayed purposefully for shock value, I don't think anyone ever intends to wind up worse off in life, its kind of hard to connect with others, when there is any disagreement about you, or behind the scenes consensus opinion of you given your private communications with other, appear to be something you are not. When you lose your right to privacy, your life changes forever, whenever information known only to you, becomes made public, that's for the purpose of injuring your good character or credibility in life. I never argued that anyone was so important that their story needs to be told, or that the sharing of a story had the potential to also support the causes for which a story was believed to be told, it was a simple quotes campaign, not about me, and general insights, not specific references to my upbringing or personal life story, add fuel to any fires in life, or disrupt the course of discussion in regards to the issues that were most important at any given time, we all move forward in life, and given our experiences in life (professional) are able to help others, not because of where we come from, but because of the years we spent doing good in the world, by our education and work experiences, being online does not have the same affect on others, nor do you bear the same professional esteems you would ordinarily achieve working for others, under the direction of others, you cant just leave a career and apply those skills to an open arena such as online, I never expected to be pried into, but I guess that's just a fact of life, what is put online gets read into for negatives, how to discredit sources, and hurt the importance of their understandings, and in addition, now realize, that if there are differences toward me, that can affect peoples overall belief in the possibility for change to occur, and for the right help to arrive consistent with whats bothering everyone, if not my cares, their cares about the world, which they do not think are accurately represented by what I have to say, nor wish for me to represent their beliefs, as affected by my personal troubles, affecting my professional abilites, and ability to move on, date, marry, and lead a normal life, that may never happen for me now. You are only as well as you stay well and all relationships, hinge on one thing, comfort, its something you provide to others, during a time of need, and able to provide with confidence, advices, or share inputs that make them feel better, and when they feel better, want to be around you, thats a prerequisite for romantic attachments, that one is able to better the other, its for those reasons that people date, because they compliment eachother, learn from one another, and grow together not apart. Don't abandon all ideals in life, in place of your whims and dreams, to get anywhere in life, you have to be proud of yourself, inspired and motivated, and driven, stable, consistent, and professional, with the right attitude in life anything is possible. And even when your defenses are down, and you have shared moments of joy with companions you meet in life, be sure not to be too hard on yourself, we are all new to imaginary friends and connections, its never real until you prove yourself worthy of being referenced by people of higher standing than you, otherwise don't even mention it, you don't need to share what you think as to who you might have influenced, and suck the wind out of the sails of those just trying to move on, with or without you in their lives, everyone interprets traumas differently, and for different causes or reasons, think people get thrown under the limelight, for the purposes of tearing them apart, that would describe someone guilty of a crime, or someone for some other reprehensible action, treated poorly as deserved, on behalf of anyone they feel was victim to their outputs in life, not everything done in love ends well, including business ventures, friendships, or in group setting such as therapy respect, how quickly all is lost, when you seek more than is necessary to get well, how you get judged in the negative, if friendship or love is needed by you -they wonder why, why one cannot be professional and maintain a steady opinion and work, without those things in life, which is why I chose not to date and not to have friends, while finishing my masters, theres nothing wrong with that, that's just limiting inputs, and influences in life at the moment, so that I can write free, of being accused of throwing anyone in the limelight as they thought was done to me, and be critically looked upon in the same way I was hurt by interpretations, no ... its not the same for everyone, different things are expected of people, and as a law student, a different set of standards were expected of me dating wise, to not date, to settle down, or to wait, which is what I have done, and for all the moments I chose to date, I am sorry, its not for those failed relationships that I decided to write online, never when focusing on heartbreak or losses can one function without being traumatized, therefore if Im doing well that reflects positively on me as well as all connections past, if I begin to not do well, then that reflects poorly of me, and thus can have a negative impact on who cared about me, to see me not doing well no matter how hard I try in life, that's just something Ive been thinking about. Embarrassment and love.

Being Bold ...

3/30/2020

Being fearless means facing your fears. One of my biggest fears growing up was the dark, I have always slept with a night light on, since living alone, that's just me, or lived in an extra locked or gated complex, that's just growing up at OJ's house, with three night watchmen, we grew up on compounds as children, my Father owned two homes next door to each other, and Sydney lived on another acre lot 2 blocks away, we grew up sheltered in that respect, gifted by education, and also by the houses we grew up in, made to feel special in life. That's just childhood, you don't understand how hard your parents work to provide you with that kind of lifestyle, until you get older, and as your parents get older, realize that you will not be able to provide the same for yourselves, not able to keep up with finances, or earn enough to reach that type of lifestyle as an adult, on your own, careers start in your 20s not your 30s, and that's just something I will have to live with, being put on meds, and underperforming in life, behind. - What is being bold? In spite of your shortcomings, still decide to pursue, a career least taken writing, as that is your strength, and upon becoming well known as a writer of quotes, start long hand writing your thoughts out in detail, minus the blurbs and anecdotal motivational sayings you believe will help people get going or keep going in life, you can do your best and still not be good enough, life is fragile, and every moment counts, it only takes a little bit each day, of consistent effort, toward achieving in life, focused on what you're good at, perfecting what you're good at, to become an expert at anything in life, just start somewhere. It was a pretty bold move to become a blogger, my Brother had tried blogging in NY, and shared his blog with our family and his friends, he was probably in between jobs, fixing his career to become a Doctor one day, he was a Business Student at Babson. The only time I have ever driven stick shift was in Boston, as directed by my Brother, and then in Brentwood once, even managed to stay steady up a hill and stop at the red light, without rolling backwards, and keep driving. What is key is maintaining a positive attitude in life, although not everything will work out for you in life, there is always time to better yourself, and make better choices for yourself, to open up new opportunities for you in life, but you have to let the past go, no ifs and or buts about it, if you want to have a better relationship, in the future, then you have to let go of what went wrong previously, and not relive the same mistakes over again, as described, live up to negative expectations of you, otherwise you'll never arrive to a more well state of being, even after everyone has jumped on board back in contact with you, as fair weather friends do, except the only problem is that you're still not present feeling better, that's something I just learned. Even if you begin to achieve again in life, move forward, and function better among, and even manage to look professional in a new arena where expertise has yet been established such as in "blogging" you yourself have to be happy with where you are unreminded of the past, the sooner you let go, the better off you'll be, the more you remind yourself of the past, the more difficult it becomes to move forward, these are painful subjects: heartache, loss, and breakups, not all of which affect everyone the same, depending on what your childhood looked like, some things don't hit you hard until later in life, the times you missed out on moments with friends, the times you missed out on years bonding with family, and the time you spent alone, trying to build a career for yourself that never happened, whether that be focusing on your studies "head in the books" or trying to get married, and walking away from an otherwise perfectly peaceful life, these are choices you make, and you have to live with that, no one can change your outlook for you. What's most important is that you look back on your life, eventually and say, you know what I've done a good job, and despite any setbacks and heartbreaks, I was strong and kept going in life, no matter how embarrassed you become, no matter how much pain you suffer, no matter how difficult it feels in the moment, you kept going, that's defying expectation of you, someone who lost faith in themselves, but never in others, and when that faith gets restored back to you, by doing the right things in life, that is the moment you will feel blessed, knowing you did a good job, that's karma, allowing yourself to heal, allowing others to heal, and minding your own business in life, we all lead separate lives, the more you make things about you, the more things become about you, that's the main lesson, less is more, and if you wish to comment on current controversies, do so, by demonstrating kindness, not resentment toward anyone you feel has contributed to anyone's current condition, we used to be a very competitive society, putting one another down, in order to keep the well well, I don't think that is any longer the case, worries over image, now it's about your health, going for as long as you can stay well, and backing off the minute you feel sick, that's being human knowing your limits in life, you can only handle so many losses in life, before you yourself become sick, but don't be so quick to jump into the pit of "impending doom" you'll regret it later in life, all the moments you quit, and gave up on yourself, and all the opportunities lost at your top in life.

Being Impressionable ...

There will be moments in your life, when you will feel heavily impressed upon, that is to mold you, correct you, empower you, guide you, fix you, negate poor thinking, hopefully never in ways, for which you will fall astray in life, be short handed, misunderstood, or deemed not unique, or judged as imitation of someone else or something else, beyond your understanding of how and why you have come to be, maybe not all will be accepting of you, but that doesn't mean, you are to blame for any reasons that may cause others to dislike you, if not stated, or if seen, discredit you, as simply a product of your upbringing and environment, things you've not had a choice with, to say you are only unique in so far as others like you, were made to feel special, and that upon disconnecting, was a result of you not measuring up to the best interests of all, or a poor example generated from your cohort, a let down. We are not all given crowns in life, some have to make crowns for ourselves, not everyone who is important is given media attention, on the news, interviewed professionally, or made famous, that's not what I meant by the top, it simply meant, rising above, the negative judgments of anyone who did not find you intelligent, attractive, special, important, or worth any positive inputs, to quell their doubts or fears about the past, that's just not taking someones condition seriously, and thinking that they did that to themselves, write them off as an addict of alcoholic, and not be understanding of how and why that condition was caused, and for what reasons, sudden disrespect followed among those who know them in life. That's not being aware of an outside perspective to matters directly involving you, not all are aware of the bigger picture, to which you have not professionally established yourself a figure within. Who is best situated in life, someone directly involved, someone knowing someone directly involved, someone being on the inside, or someone on the outside, to all matters, only affected as in knowing figures directly involved or inside any equations in life. -I only know that now, I have not benefited from speaking online, only in so far, as having accomplished a professional written body of work, that represents me well, and does a positive service to me in the future if I plan to write a book, having earned likes now, to reassure me, that my work will be well received if written, no matter how successful book writing may be for me, maybe not the next Harry Potter, Davinci Code, or Power of Now, but nonetheless hopefully influential to the lives of those who have read my work, help them. It seems that your audience only feels as well as you feel or are doing, and unless you can write in a way, that accurately reflects that ability, to compose, work, which upon being processed, benefits whomever is consuming your work, means more work needs to be done on your end, not to say things in a way, that would otherwise worry, or cause unnecessary hardship to anyone reading, not understand, get confused, feel gone, or get a headache, trying to understand any concepts yourve presented, is there ever a point when everything you write makes sense? Only so far as one is understood, maybe then and only then, can anything be said, with a grain of salt, not misread or misunderstood to have been written to portray anyone or anything in the negative, including oneself. Writing is not easy, you have to constantly revise and come up with something to talk about each day, as you become more and more aware of whats at stake, what are pressing issues, and without thinking too much of what has passed, respond, and always in a timely manner, share your thoughts about, I think that has been one of my strengths, not to dodge issues, but speak to issues with hope that I can say things in a way that will help others to process better their feelings about recent times, and losses. -What causes giving up? Im not sure, maybe when there is disagreement, failure to view themselves or others in the positive, feeling that there has been a mistake past that cannot be fixed, living with regrets, having remorse for resentment stated out loud, feeling betrayed, feeling like nothing will change, illness, changes in luck you feel dismembered by or less capable because of, too much wonder, lack of faith, instability or unhappiness with oneself, thinking someone who is good was actually a bad person, or coming to know someone and then learning about them through others get turned off by them, thinking that they are trying to be something they are not, or better than they are, smarter than they are, and are really something they are not, not smart or not pretty, or not achieved, or not deserving of being known, or well liked, that would be the side who thinks everything done to you, was done to them, not done to you in the negative, and that everything done to them, if because of you, makes them the victim and not you, that's obviously a repercussion of dating, whoever is more well known, now, is seem as the one responsible for handling things professionally, and not have any of the interactions or connections in life, be affected by their present decision making abilities, or by how they present themselves online, become worse off, by any of their expressions online, whether in reflection of their past, or while speaking hypothetically about life, as they understand it, I think people who know you, read, like they have some kind of a personal stake in the matter, with intensity read, with expectation that something will be said or situations described, to make them look bad, to make one look better than them, that would not bring anyone peace, not me, nor my audience, to hear about any disagreements, and as a result be forced to take sides.

Under Pressure ...

Sometimes no response is best, without expertise, knowledge of specific incidences past, will encourage or discourage you from speaking, we don't all have a fine tuned understanding of the consequences for our beliefs always, and sometimes we will be unwilling to accept the defenses of those past, who felt it necessary to cause others to disregard their voice. Under the totality of the circumstances, we need not take personally, any associations past, which may or may not have caused others to think it fair game to provoke you, then without remorse, watch you suffer, as though for the wrong reasons you have achieved in life, granted acceptances, or been admired, loved, friended, or made popular in an online space, we don't all come up at once, and for different reasons, people sore to the top, or don't make it at all, that just means that there is a different path in life for you to take, we don't all know what will become of us, but eventually, if you keep at something in life long enough, you will figure out how to become successful, sometimes all it takes is a little experience, such as public speaking, and writing online or to the public, in a book form. Like all professions, the more experience you have the better at performing you get, and like writing, the more you write, in private, academically, and for professional use at work, the more confident one would feel to write online to all. That's not a natural way of achieving confidence in life, its a learned trait, meaning its not the first time you have ever tried something, and not the first time you have been presented with issues or setbacks to which you were not able to overcome on your own, that can be considered a positive trait, knowing how to overcome failure, or having been at rock bottom before, continuing to have faith in yourself, understanding that later on, even if you are not met with respect, understand its because they did not respect you in the first place, or thought you had it so made in life, or had messed up so bad in life, that they never expected you to do better later in life anyways, just let people think they are better than you, but the reason why they tell you to "prove them wrong" is so that you don't continue to feed into negativity, nor respond to it, so that it does not affect your direction in life, so you don't end up places you don't belong, or be judged poorly, by people you will meet in the future, who have no knowledge of your past, in those cases letting anyone win, would hurt you presently, as you are trying to fix your life. Always keep in mind that not everything is about you, and while others may think it funny to hurt you, by title, name, company strategy, reference, or man built inference to any truths they think necessary to illustrate to dictate the ways in which people are noticed, respected, or valued, that's because they believe you to be something beneath them, and choose to reinforce that viewpoint of you, as a reminder to you of what is known about you, and for those reasons, rationalize why further disrespect of you should be had, given their understandings of you, usually by people who you do not know, outsiders to a puzzle, a story, specific people, whos lives don't immediately affect nor impact them in a way negative to their best interests, think its okay to shed light on characters before they become known professionally, as an underground attempt to gear respects, that's not how respect happens, by putting anyone down in life present or past, or claim victim to them, as justification for putting them down now. -Who you are online matters, and your finished product, should always be a solid representation of who you are now, without interference from the past, its usually those who write held down by things in life, become a heavy opinion or side to understand process, and thus a turn off, not because of what they have to say, but because of how things are said, and how things feel, how things are understood, and how things are compartmentalized, when applied, to other memorable timelines, choose to ignore any present progress, with their already pre-made ideologies, prepared for a negative inference to be drawn about another. That's a gamble someone takes with their identity, to make things about people, places or things, they think based upon their observations, are not going to make it in life, professionally, who they do not think should be known or respected, or viewed as on the team "saving lives" or a "hero" in any respect, with regard to their friendships past, not taking into consideration all the people they have helped in their life, during their professional career working for the government, and think that its okay to expose truths about them, as though they would ever hurt the ability of others to be well adjusted and make it in life, upon knowing them.

Being Approachable ...

Never underestimate the courage of someone who speaks, and put them down as thinking they are more important than they are, we make ourselves important in life, whether or not it is our duty to put ourselves out there, everyone has a story of their own, some more inspiring than others, who is anyone to judge one for their life experiences. Sometimes I think that people who think they know you simply because they have read about you ... people who know you generally respect you and are proud of you, its those you meet later in life, for some reason need to prove yourself too, why is that. Everyone has their own lives, and sometimes in meeting others, we fall short on the mark of what is considered special or worthy of being treated as special, if they think that you think you are special, by the type of confidence you exude, don't be surprised to be put down in life by them, usually those who want to be admired, but do not admire back, want attentions for themselves, but less willing to give the same love and attention back to whomever they seek attentions from. Life is a game in that way, people wanting to be liked, and once they feel that you are at their beck and call, become despondent to you, however its only until you leave that they get upset, all of a sudden needing you suddenly, but not during the course of a relationship. Im not sure what that is about, why in order to be well liked do you have to try so hard, what is all that about, what happened to the days, when we were just nice to eachother, nice to new people, nice to friends, since when did all the hierarchical push and shove take hold of our better judgments toward one another, if there was no code of ethics to begin with when it comes to reality and pop culture themes, then why was it not okay to join in on the banter, and start sharing online, since when is it not okay to contribute to everyones creative energies online, if its not about you, its not about you, who ever said that only those working in entertainment professions are privileged to contribute creatively to all writing endeavors, that never made sense to me. I think its important to share unique facts about yourself but to leave it at that, sometimes the more you share about yourself, an unwanted bond can occur, with members of your audience, who on a personal level try to control your output, sending you voices, making fun of you, or putting you down, because they have decided to take on the shoes of someone from your past who as mentioned you did not get along with, like your Brother, Ex-Bosses who have let you go, or even Boyfriends, when relationships have not worked out. Im the type of person, that when upset, am always forced to see the bigger picture, no one taking me seriously, even laughing in my face, without respect for my paranoia, or fears, lack of confidence, no one can reinforce that sense of self being centered when not overachieving, and not meeting the mark, only you can fix that deficit, by focusing on your strengths, and minimizing, the risk for losing focus, to bettering anyone elses needs in life, sometimes its okay to be selfish, and to focus on yourself, that's not being selfish in a way, that anyone should be offended by, an unwillingness to succumb to peer pressures, or romantic pressures in life, be fixated on someone elses needs instead of your own, if you were able to be independent once, there is no reason why you cannot be independent again, if we cant manage ourselves well, then that's a problem, how will you be able to manage anothers moods, if you yourself are not grounded, a rock, that's the main point. What is attractive about someone who is not well? Nothing. And what is so attractive about someone who is strong and independent? That they do not need people to make them feel good, and do not require reassurances in life, babying, to feel better, that's what being strong is all about, not marching, not correcting people, not rising above, not allowing others to belittle you, not being stupid, being smart, and not needing sex or a man or a woman, to feel beautiful, able to achieve that feeling on your own, without help from anyone. I mean how independent do you need to be in life, just don't be extreme about it, I think that is where I failed socially, keeping to myself for many years, while finishing law school, don't ever completely let go, of your social responsibilities in life to keep in touch with friends, and maintain friendships over the years and maintain positive rapport, Im lucky enough that when I am doing well my friends reply, and willing to catch up with me, even though they have moved on in life, and have lives of their own, trading in a quiet life with best friends I have known my whole life, for a life online, writing in public, only a few people knew me really well, now everyone knows me, that was a huge change in my life. Why did I have such a big response to my initial quotes campaign 2016 (90k+ followers on Facebook) because I shared meaningful insights on nicely prepared squares from an app, that made sense to a lot of people, I think it was just that, being someone who makes sense, there were only a few quotes on cards on Google at the time I got started, now we have many printed quotes on Pinterest, not being an avid free reader, obviously it made sense to me, to begin highlighting the most important deductions that come from a lot of writing, where quotes come from, a summary of what is essential in any body of work, it takes time, to think of ways to say something, applicable to the times, which can help others put into gear, in their own lives, make sense of whats occurring for them emotionally, mental health wise, that's why I stuck out, and was nominated for a Shorty Award, and because I chose to dedicate my writings at the time, to a cause that mattered to me personally, not because of whom Im attached to in life, but it all worked out in the end, picking a team, that was not an easy campaign, building a website, and reporting to the courts and everyone in private as I made progress, it takes a long time, to figure out the right words to say. I never pictured myself as an op ed, or someone who is writing to political matters or world issues, or responding directly to news stories, but those issues have influenced me some what, in terms of being cognizant of everyones best interests, not just my own attachments, make sure, that I am never respresenting who has influenced me in life, in a way that would turn others off, not all will agree with you or like you, if they think that who you like matters to them, on some basis people are outright rejected, I don't think I am someone deserving of that kind of treatment politically, I do not make any money, therefore should not be officially rejected as someone given powers, by others, I had to empower myself for myself on my own, no one gave me directions about how to write, or what to write about, or how to share my story in a way, to justify why I decided to share, and then that's how people work with you.

Being Good Enough ...

3/29/2020

Along the way, you'll be given many advices, and criticisms, while finding yourself. That's a normal part of life, a natural reaction toward anyone, who they do not believe to be at their best, advised, never take any feedback personally, they're only trying to help. Never veer too far of course, in life, you'll regret it later, and if you do decide to take a risk in life, make sure you're hearts in it, like blogging. If you could've been so many other things in life, but chose to blog, well that was your choice, most people take jobs, not try to make a job for themselves, and figure out how to get paid later, that's the risk you take with starting your own business, or dedicating time to learning a new trade or profession, not all will find success. Always follow your heart, and let the best shine, and even when you're not at your best, do your best to better yourself each day, and remind yourself that you are only human. There will be moments when you will push yourself to extremes, hoping that that will produce the change in you, that will turn your life around, but it doesn't always happen that way. Even at your best, you can still fail, if you're not focused on the right things in life, you will find your match one day, just be patient. Those who can appreciate you in the moment, value you, believe in you, and proud of you, are the types of people you should keep in your life. Going to law school is no easy task, you have to do really well in college, test well, and perform while you're there keep your grades up so that you can finish and graduate, it has not been easy to say the least to finish law school. - All in all, I've learned a lot during my time as a blogger, to never give up, no matter what comes to mind, and to never feel too overwhelmed, or under pressure in life, there is always a way out. It may feel impossible at times, but so long as you keep going in life, anything can happen.

Sometimes We Wander ...

The soul searching process is simply, generating a series of deep thoughts, about life, your existence, identifying your purpose in life, and feeling grounded in the moment, able to move forward and achieve whatever you set your mind to, just like today, I'm going to run to the fence and back a 2.5 hours run (on a hill), that sets your heart free. Often times, when we are feeling lost, and withdrawn, we do our best to find ways to open ourselves up again, joining clubs, attending aa meetings, going to therapy, hanging out with friends, ever have those moments, when someone is staring at you, and you feel like you're stuck in your shell, hard to get through to, it happens, be patient with yourself. We don't all get our wings at once. When your guard is up, have some self-awareness, about how you react and interact with others, and be sure to not disrupt the flow of energy in a room, filling it up that space with your problems, and bring everyone down with you, that would destroy a moment of peace, in place of your energy, make chaotic, anyone's ability to feel close to you, and instead feel withdrawn, not all hyper moments are smart moments, be mindful, sometimes in the zest of self discovery, we feel so motivated that we want to motivate others, inspired to make a difference, that occurs on a one on one basis, or job by job basis, not by putting yourself online, and trying to inspire a large number of people getting likes, you have to be a solid person, before you attract that type of audience, and able to maintain solid ground, when you are being watched, the reverse actually happens when you put yourself on stage, all that energy and gusto you felt inside, that brought you to the point of shining in front of others, actually gets displaced once shared, and fades away, because something you knew about yourself, now known to all, despecializes you, and requires you to keep improving, keep producing, and then go on performing in front of a larger audience, with the same energy and esteem as you had before you were known, seems like you would feel better once recognized, but that isn't automatic, not if you don't take good care of yourself, I'm not sure what that was, becoming popular on Alexa ranked 34,000, then suddenly depressed feeling like giving up, it must be just not feeling good about myself. -What is it that you want in life? And why are you doing what you are doing? Because if you aren't feeling good doing what you are doing, then there must be something defective about the principles from which you were so grounded to begin speaking in the first place, if not, it's still okay to refine your general purpose for feeling motivated, and fine tune your goals, as you make progress while discovering any career path for yourself in life, because if you're not stable, and able to function daily, drained, then maybe it's you that needs to feel empowered, and not give all your energy away trying to help others, remember to be strong on the inside, the stronger your core is physically and mentally, the better able you are to withstand criticisms, and doubts concerning what matters to you and why, and not feel so offended, by anyone who misuses your niceties, sharing online, as a victim of crime, and treats you as though you are looking for attentions in life on the sole basis of a childhood experience, is wrong.

When is it Time to Be Spiritual ...

3/27/2020

A good time to be spiritual occurs anytime you cant figure out whats wrong, feel sadness in need of hope, without things in life when you want things, for others wellness, to feel centered when you feel like youre stuck in a tornado, and for you to heal from whatever obstacles are standing in your way preventing you from being yourself and realizing your potential. Life is not impossible, in fact there are many ways you can trick yourself out of a rut, if you would only focus on things that bring you joy, and make that your heart, not fill yourself with all your worries or fears, or the sadness of others, that's no way to overcoming any type of depression that's keeping you feeling motivated, capable, and able to withstand all the pressures you may encounter maintaining an even keel, getting along with everyone, avoiding fights, and living up to all your expectations of yourself, of course we all think we deserve a better life, but not all of us are able to achieve that, you can only attain, what you are able to measure up to, that is fit in, and a lot about fitting in is your ability to be confident in no matter what setting youre in and no matter who you are well, feel like yourself, not insecure, smaller than, or intimidated, everyone who is smart, generally is required to become professional one day, in some type of job that requires them to be smart, that's not so other people can have fun, its just because they have an ability to focus, and see beyond their troubles, and still perform anyways, so that is why they are heavily sought for leadership positions, because no matter what pressures they encounter, freezes, guilts, criticisms, or repercussions of the mistakes of anyone else, they are able to rise to any occasion, and set the tone, just like a Boss corrects you, molds you, pushes you, demands things from you, requires you to do things a certain way, and when things are not done right, get reprimanded, anytime you lose focus, so much about being present, requires that without hesitation, and without being watched, what you are doing at all times, is beneficial to your health and the health of others, not subjecting yourself, to becoming dumbed down, by anything that would rot your mind, or the minds of others, happiness is contagious, and so is poor humor and jokes that provide poor insight, leading us to a standstill, in terms of what is allowable, what will help us blossom, what will keep our spirits up, no one wants to look stupid, leave it up to the professionals, to correct you, lighten you up, inform you, and fix you.

Not at Your Best ...

If in addition to your past, you experience hardships presently, think for what reasons, you are having difficulty, being happy with where you are now, figure yourself out before trying to figure others out. Some times you will never measure up to expectation of you and that's okay, all that is required is that you don't contribute to social ills, by harping on issues that are outside the scope of your expertise, comment on, if not add humor in support of others professional choices in life, not all successes are based upon picking apart one person, that would certainly do a disservice in life, to any set of people, exposed to companies who while during the scope of their business endeavors seek to highlight patterns reflecting on pop culture nuances or humors, without hitting so hard that it hits reality or any other people existing who may have been made fun of in the process of achieving for themselves in life, working for the government, I think its only until recently, that references to official publications and works are used to shed light upon each ones individual interpretations of reality, based upon their exposures in life, or based upon connections in life, see fit. It was never like this growing up, where everyone either feels better or worse depending on how others are feeling, it used to be that people had separate lives, independently being successful, comfortable being social, when the world was private, lit, and everyone felt solid, absent minded any studies for patterns as related to mishaps in the past, where very traumatic events occurred that re-shaped us socially, at least in my neighborhood, to say the least. In Los Angeles its by who you know you have friends and go out, and well if you don't have any friends, then you cant go out alone, as though youre in NY, to have a meal and a drink, that's not appropriate. Although the times may be different, never feel pressured individually to understand anyone elses hardships in life, and come to understand life as they see it to be, everyone is entitled to focus on whatever matters to them, regardless, whether reading from the works of others, brings you good luck or not, makes sense, or helps you develop a more meaningful understanding of what you want to do in life, and figure out what matters to you, and in what order you wish to fix your life, start over, begin a new chapter, or let go. Being avoidant is not a bad thing, but if you spend too much time alone, expect that your issues will pile up on you, if you don't stay active, social skills are just like driving a car, the more alone time you have, beyond what is necessary to recharge or take space, the more difficult it becomes to start again, be social, comfortable with yourself, and feel confident socially, like you did when you had a normal life, around people, with social, academic, and professional connections in life, people who know you at your best, your demeanor should not change simply because you are alone, that is unless, as not being connected to anyone, you lose your sense of peace, feel gone, not centered, or toyed with in conversation, to see how smart you are, or to try to bond with you, and make a friendship out of nothing, that's actually fun to do.

Have You Ever Noticed ...

3/27/2020

Have you ever wondered, why you cry, or why you feel pain, or why you worry, or why you don't feel motivated, ever feel stuck, helpless, DON'T MEDITATE ON WORDS that evoke a feeling or a pain within, whether stated by accident, or because you felt like sharing, may not always be the right words to say DURING A TOUGH TIME, that's when you need to LIGHTEN UP, why? That's not being obnoxious, when one tries really hard to keep their spirits up, they just know from experience, that when we dwell on words or moments in life, that have caused us pain, and allow events that without explanation, result in persistent inquiry to draw connections and disable anyone not in that zone of thought or feeling, why? There's BEING DOWN TO EARTH and there is BRINGING SOMEONE DOWN TO EARTH ... its really important to KNOW THE DIFFERENCE, that pain, when permanent is caused DEPRESSION, the kind of feeling that makes you feel like crap, unmotivated, making EVERYTHING IN LIFE FEEL DIFFICULT, that's not the best approach to tackling any unwanted feelings or thoughts in life. At what point do we stop allowing negative voices, to cause us illness, maybe never, maybe it will never be the case that we can hear people say things without remorse and cause us pain or hardship in life, that's okay to be sensitive, but even more difficult to rise above those moments and not be defined by any terms used to describe you just because they think you have not done a good job in life living life, that's really painful. There is failure upon making mistakes in life, silent treatment upon having too many problems detached from friends, and there is silent treatment also known as everyone knows something about you and thinks badly about you and doesn't say anything to you because they want to see how you survive on your own, without anyone telling you what they think you have done wrong in life, or because they think you lost friends in life, because you had ever done anything wrong, no that's not true, it's a choice to focus on your studies, just because one is single or on meds, doesn't mean that they are broken or look gone not present because there is something wrong with them, that just means their hearts are glued to what needs to get done, not glued to what has been done, or what has been said about them, trying to read into the words and actions of others, at this point, it really doesn't matter what people think as to you, everyone is entitled to live life the way they want to, be bigger than others, better than others, healthier than others, that's life, everyone wants to look and appear well, well why cant someone who was well stay well, well lets ask God, why cant Leslie stay well, and why does she sometimes glow, and sometimes fade, sometimes look youthful and sometimes look old, maybe its because Im human and 34, therefore what difference would it make for her to have a companion if she is not strong physically, that's simply an unwanted attachment, upon being consumed by anyone, reading connecting, who does not like you, upon reading what made you feel well, feels well and that's how someone outside of a conversation feels better and two people in a conversation don't feel well, as their minds have met, their hearts have met, and then have that sense of togetherness be taken from them, when upon viewing, not thinking that they can notice if they are fading.

It Has Come to My Attention ...

I was just told not to "blame everyone else for everything and to start taking responsibility for my life." Its easy to come up with excuses and to describe how you were treated in the past how you felt, and why you were not strong enough then to make progress in life, and instead treated like an addict, or alcoholic. You are never fully prepared to become something you are not, and sometimes you end up worse off in life, not someone easy to talk to, hasn't made it, no one to be proud of, it can be so disappointing, especially to my parents who have supported me throughout the years, and while in recovery, from all the imaginary battles I have fought, and compiled issues imagined, the bottom line is that its important to stay focused in life, the minute to fall of course and lose sight of whats important to you, and stop doing everything right in life, which helps you to get to where you want to be in life, is the minute you become lost, subject to negative judgments, and suddenly all opportunities are lost, keep in mind what is real, and don't get too carried away with what is imagined, or of concern, things only bother you the minute you speak to them, so always do your best to carry on living, with an intent to better yourself, and try again, you may not be the same person, a perfectionist excelling at what you are good at in life, or ever feel valued, but the minute you turn on your systems of support, who want you to get a job, and move forward in life, is the moment trust is lost, always receive concerns with reassurances, and do your part to continue to take steps to apply and get back out there and work again, its all in your head, when it comes to experiencing failures and setbacks in life, your life is not over, and while you would like to think, that your life is over when faced with any pressures in life that amount to a greater responsibility than youre willing to accept for your condition or place in life, is not the time to give up and complain, or defend yourself, or talk about what you went through and why you are not where you want to be in life, if youre not good enough, and your not showing that youre trying to be a better person, then its your loss in life, any efforts composed to begin moving on in life, and instead you end up right back where you were, except only now not suicidal, figure out, how to maintain positive momentum, its when people give up on you in life, that you realize you have F-d up so bad, to the point of no return, dying is not the correct response to any hardships or difficulties you may face in life, for some reason, its only now that I feel motivated, to continue working, and try again, that took many months, of convincing myself that self-harm is not the solution to negative voices, and that writing, is a better display of my coherent thoughts, not talking myself through my problems, and certainly not being boisterous or hyper telling jokes, wheres the beauty in that, someone making light of life, when they are not at their best, no one really wants to hear from anyone who doesn't have it made in life, talk about life, like they understand how to overcome setbacks, never question how or why you were treated they way you were treated in the past, and learn to let things go, that's your choice to disassociate from people who think less of you or who do not understand your disposition, sometimes your not good enough, your presence is not helpful, you don't make anyone feel better about themselves, you don't have the beauty or intelligence in life to be treated with respect, that's just life, not everyone will be on your team, and sometimes it takes years for everyone to stop fighting or trying to change you, and allow you to be yourself, whatever that may be, let go, remember who has taken care of you over the years, and don't let anyone who doesn't know you make you feel like your life has not been anything but perfect in spite of your losses.

When You Hit the Stage ...

By the time you hit any stages in life, performance wise, make sure that you are prepared, and whenever expressing oneself, to live for the moment, not live according to what has passed, that's not a proper form of communication presently, as though to reference the past, by image, photo, or thought to purposefully charade, sometimes when we do not know what to say we observe, such as photographing ourselves, when we are feeling lost, and our journey back to wellness, and re-entering the work force, that's a proper way of documenting ones progress, who else cares anyways, its for my own use, its not a movie, to be observed by anyone, for that matter. If you have no experience studying people, then don't engage in any activities in which you study and potentially injure someone who you come to know and after your analysis think poorly of, hurt anyone who has subjected themselves to being read by all, not everyone will like you in life, and not everyone will act in ways to benefit you, or to acknowledge you, that's not the purpose for sharing to be marketed by anyone other than myself, I can shine on my own, I don't need any reinforcements in life, to drive traffic to my work, I didn't even need to share about where I grew up, or what I went through in law school. Ive been hospitalized 9x I think Ive been through enough. Its not helpful to personalize writings too much, in fact it's a very uncomfortable experience to be put on blast like you are something you are not, simply because you made an effort to respond to what was not working, and given your schooling, experience and background, wanted to help, as a not yet publicized public figure, with a platform gifted to me, being a person of significance with a special viewpoint, not everyone has such a balanced perspective when it comes to fame, notoriety, controversy, humor, defamation, pressures, as well as the cycles of harm you endure if you engage in any alcohol or drugs, your behavior always dictates how you are treated, and if you were raised to be proper than be proper when you are supposed to be professional, some may not think youre writing is smart, but if they have not read other peoples writings, then maybe they should be less judgmental of you, by your form of expressions, granted you have been through controversies in life and were raised to behave well speak well and to represent yourself and others well by always doing your best, I was always a good friend to my friends, and have never had difficulty making friends in life, always picked up at the bars, so I figured it would be worth it to present my writings online, and allow others to get to know me, to decide whether to pursue a career in writing, and make sure to only write about whats appropriate to share to all, why I don't talk about others here specifically or mention peoples names, because that would defeat the purpose, of allowing them time to heal, from what they have overcome in life, not be brought into a story, that already has elements which caused me to go to the hospital repeatedly, that's something others may find humor in the failing health of someone who is supposed to be well smart and well adjusted as a law student, people rarely grant sympathies to anyone they would expect more from, like what school they go to, who theyre dating, who theyre friends with, what their lifestyle is like, there are so many ways to get trashed these days, it seems like the go to move, for anyone who thinks someone who is not refined and beautiful is somewhat stupid or theyre alone because theyre a reject or defective jealous of the traits of others, no I have always loved myself, and respect all people, where is that coming from? And why would someone treat someone who has kept to themselves their whole life, like theyre just some imitation trying to come up, by campaigning, or telling their story about how they were affected by homicide, like Im being inappropriate online, that's life, deal with it, not everyone you will think deserves to have lived a traumatic life put in the news, that doesn't mean put them down like its their own fault.

The Power of Diversity ...

Its clear that in order to have a broad understanding (with appreciation) for how the world works, you must first start with identifying what your immediate needs and cares are, its not something we think about on a regular basis, our personal strengths and weaknesses, and what prevents us from moving forward or experiencing pain in life. When you know whats important to you, and who is important to you, you learn to manage your time, doing your best, whether or not you need to publicly demonstrate that or self-identify as you are. It seems that anyone trying to read into you, first looks for what your about, checks for any flaws to anything you have said, looking for causes for setbacks, or reasons for success, to measure your worth, for what reasons is that important, who ever said it was a requirement to be anything to look up to, admire, believe in, or trust, writing is not a leadership position, to which one is required to direct others in terms of identifying whats important to them, we are all deserving having individualized interests, and maintain a unique understanding of the world, not pre-determined by the past, or to be pre-determined by other peoples thoughts, that would only lead to overconsumption and cause a lack of motivation, its better to live life thinking about life and learning as you go, and with reservations (as to your own personal interests) make decisions in life, living life does not always require you to account for everyone elses individualized interests, especially if any of those interests are to see you not do well in life, suffer hardships, or not succeed, based upon their past judgements of you when well, and after experiencing hardships, seek to reinforce that you have not overcome the worst of your troubles in life, and someone who will get sick again and fail, nothing is certain, once you experience mental health issues it's a (chemical imbalance that requires medication management to fix, undo, or make better a disorganized state of thinking, or being, it takes time to learn about your condition, get used to the ups and downs, and figure out what works best for you, everyone is different). One of the beauties of life, is to figure things out for yourself, and when you find what your looking for, upon being exposed to different sets of ideals, and finished work products, that you learn to appreciate how long it has taken to create, produce, and distribute any finished works, which were mass produced, voted upon, selected for viewing, and eventually made popular, to be consumed by the masses, theres a system of acceptance, that's not marketing, thats quality control on what works are focused upon and for how long and at what time shared, and with relevance to current turmoils, hopefully speak to the issues that cannot otherwise be expressed, in conversations with friends, a way to bring out emotions, or reflect how we feel, or would like to feel, but cant put into words, and not able to feel that way on our own, some moments its okay to be dependent on systems of support for a better understanding of your world, that's why I like the entertainment industry. Ive only attended one premiere and grew up best friends with someone whos Father was a very successful athlete, and very famously prosecuted, now as adults, that was very painful to experience, for ourselves, that interest toward any of us, critical of those affected, who survived our childhoods, matured and have moved on, been schooled, and gotten jobs, have to go back in time to tell any stories about our upbringing, like we have made it in life, to a better place in life, which would make the sharing of ones childhood traumas helpful, when I get to a point, where I can share how I have overcome controversy I will let you know, right now all I have to show are my resume, a soccer ball, photos that I could find, mostly well moments, the public sphere was not a natural choice, never really participated on Facebook, except when I had something important to say, I never really expected to go through so many pains public speaking. The point is everyone's story is important but that doesn't mean you have to share it, maybe the time will never be right, to say I (or we) went through a lot, and we still lived life like normal people, unaffected by the news, anyone's opinions, not paranoid protected, and under the guidance of our families, were given choices in life, the only adversity I think faced, is upon taking chances in life, dating or being out in the open, has the potential for being misunderstood as someone trying to shine, to shine light on a painful period in time, that's not what makes a person special their pains in life, or their losses, we may not have all been blessed to grow up at OJ's house, but that doesn't mean that we all don't get affected, upon disassociating from those who have impacted our viewpoints in life, stop staying in contact, its probably for those reasons, upon not doing well in life, and past failure, you become a difficult person to connect with, and that's the worst repercussion, of taking chances in life, is not being able to resume your life as it was, normal.

Life's Not a Dress Rehearsal ...

Always be prepared, when in Rome, to rise to the occasion, that means being able to step outside your comfort zone, and adjust your settings to meet the needs of those around you. Its not all about you. While you'd like to think that you have time to fix yourself, until perfection is reached, that's not how life works, not always at your best will you be approved of, or generate the types of acceptances in life required to be considered a keeper. Especially based upon the way you look, never thin enough, never healthy enough, never confident enough, it seems mood means everything these days when in the company of others, if you're not a happy person, and not comfortable with yourself, then it will be a difficult journey to say the least, just don't get worse before you get better, and don't listen to any criticisms, that do not accurately define where you are at in life, if there is nothing wrong with you there is nothing wrong with you, so long as you are able to function and excel at whatever it is you set your heart to, then nothing should stop you from continuing to do well, despite whatever obstacles stand in your way, you may not be a happy person, and the days may seem monotonous and difficult while trying to improve upon your best, not all progress is valued or noticed, no one new coming into your life, who doesn't accept you fully upon meeting you, is ever intending to hurt you, when they want to see better, or think that you should be "working" or keeping a job, not all are capable of getting jobs, and not all are fit emotionally to handle the pressures of working, it's a tough world, people are not easy to please these days, and if you're too old to start your life over again, then start somewhere you are familiar, that matches your skillset, don't get bogged down, taking jobs, that don't match your skillset, you'll likely wind up feeling not good enough, in any environment that requires constant energy and enthusiasm and dedication to the hours spent working, a lot of trust and diligence is required of anyone, trying to make it in life, if you're not consistent enough, and your heart wanders, then don't be surprised when you are given a hard time in life disconnecting from your workload, it happens, sometimes you just don't feel like things are right, or that you could be somewhere else, doing what you love and be happier, more proud of yourself, you would think that going to work working and going home and sleeping and going back to work is enough of an achievement in life, how strong do you need to be to show up everyday, sleep on time, and attack each day with the same gusto and professionalism as the day before, don't we all get sidetracked by personal issues, be present, if you can't stay sharp, and feel gone, maybe you're tired, or maybe that's just your personality type, that just means its not a match, you can't force anything to happen that's not working for you, and you can't please people in life, who you don't feel comfortable with or intimidated by, not all personalities empower one another, and sometimes at your expense others will shine. You learn as you get older, how important it is to be present, zoning out or getting tired, is excusable when you are at home working your own hours, but in a work environment, you are not allowed those types of pauses in life, everyone wants eye contact, and clear responses to all their questions, you can't just show up and do the work and leave, for some reason, part the process of becoming a professional requires you to be comfortable in any environment you choose, I used to be that way, can talk to anyone, am myself no matter where I go, at what point do you become impressionable, or manipulated, if you feel small around others, its probably because you don't feel like you fit in, and if you outgrow a position, maybe its because you did all the work, and not making as much progress professionally (ie learning) as you had anticipated, not all jobs give back in that way, it used to be the case that you could take any job, and everything learned gave you better insight, so as applied, those insights give you a better or more clear picture of where you fit in best, and if you're tired and don't have the energy to work everyday, then stay home, don't max yourself out, if someone doesn't understand your disability in life, then don't push yourself to your limits physically and mentally, that's not how one gets better or improves, by being pushed hard in life, some of us fall apart. #mentalhealth

There Are No Do-Overs in Life ...

3/26/2020

When one door closes another one opens, or so we thought, when your options become limited in life, your focus doesn't always narrow with it, too often we think of everything missing from our lives and the reasons we've built up in our heads, for things being the way they are, you'll never get far in life, accepting your condition the way it is, that's when change is necessary. Taking the first step isn't an easy process, you're never really moving forward until you wind up in a different place in life, and it all begins with spiritual awareness, acknowledgement of where you are now, motivated by dreams of where you want to be in life, and then doing what you need to do in order to end up places in life other than where you are at the moment. I don't believe that all people are capable of living freely when they are unhappy, it never really made sense to me, why some are so critical of others, able to express their displeasures in life, and still be strong, to some that's hot, a woman who speaks her mind, opinionated, speaking from the heart, and not afraid to share her mind. If you don't like who you are, it's hard to speak confidently and still like who you are, find your voice. Whether it be through writing, speaking, journaling, talking to others, therapy, communicating, singing, exercise, disciplined study, reading, schooling, it takes awhile for most to adjust their settings, sometimes you won't know how you sound, or look until you view yourself firsthand, and make some adjustments on your own, experiences in life can change you, if you were once social and easily made friends, then there is no reason why you can't experience that again in life, but certainly not if you are being too hard on yourself, it's hard to talk to anyone in a rut, people usually expect that you can at least pretend to be happy or having a good time, isn't that what being around people is about, excited to see each other and talk, share a social moment in life, take a group shot, dress up, there's always so much love and pride in group photos, that you take for granted, when left to your own devices, can you glow on your own? Of course. What is happiness? Feeling well, being young, living for the moment, how put together must you be to continue living life and meet people? So long as you don't get lost or hurt in the process of loving the wrong people in life, never wait too long for change to happen, especially when it comes to loving people, the right ones will step into your life, once you have achieved a set of standards professionally that makes you an interesting catch, know your selling points in life, and don't be afraid to talk about yourself, that's the best part about talking to people, is talking about yourself, and opening yourself up to their questions, don't all conversations work that way, by your interests give way to discussions that people think about when talking to you?

Be Socially Efficient ...

We all bottle up, face it, there is more to life, than our own lives, and sometimes when thinking about the world, how it works, and where we fit into the picture, we can lose track of what's really important to spend our time and our energies on, our own lives, not the lives of others, with respect by comparison to where we are at in life, anyone who is anyone, never gets places in life, to dependent upon the hows and whys of life, and more focused on themselves, and doing daily for themselves what is necessary in order for them to live their best in life, you won't always find windows in life, that is people you admire, look up to, want to be like, or who introduce you to a better way of looking at life, also known as inspiration, how nice would it be if even upon meeting someone in life, we could suddenly feel lifted and able again, believe in ourselves, and foresee a better future for ourselves, independent financially, and realize our own self worth, not all people are gifted in that way to appreciate their upbringing, and the simple things in life, always wanting more. From my standpoint, blogging is a positive outlet, a place where I can make sense, even if what I'm thinking or how I'm feeling reaches a standstill, that's not boredom, that's just feeling stuck, you haven't lost any of your abilities in life, simply because you feel frozen or overwhelmed, at any new beginning in life, you'll feel as though you have nothing from the start, and once you start a new chapter, look back, and say to yourself, well if I never tried, or didn't do this or that, then I wouldn't be feeling the way I am feeling now, that's a window you created for yourself, establishing a new connection, or getting a new job, meeting new people, and being exposed to other people, who have their own lives, outside of the issues piled up in your head about life, who are able to function without discussion of what they think, and able to express themselves freely, without remorse, having life figured out, not all minds meet when it comes to all subjects, always be about yourself, how you feel matters, and if its someone you meet, or know who exists in a public space, and whos existence in a public space, bothers you, then that's your opinion or judgment of them, thinking that there is another way for them to live life, as though they are dodging responsibilities in life, such as having real friendships, relationships, getting married, or getting a job, a hobby is a side project, writing is a gift, and building a website takes dedication time and effort to learn how to, pay for the services, apply for the banners, individually, get approvals, get ranked, all of these steps are required to get liked, that is for people to see you, know you, accept you, and like you, it takes time, to be accepted, especially if everyone thinks its okay to make fun of you, or your connections in life, and thinks that because of your connections in life, that you have benefited specially in anyway, no we all struggle to rise above issues, and not make other peoples problems our own, that's one the biggest problems with being a public speaker, figuring out how well known, and how important your voice is in the grand scheme of things, when it comes to the interpretation of current works and works past, always pride yourself in whatever work you have managed to accomplish, and never give up, no matter what doubts others hold toward you, and no matter what connections you fathom, seek to avoid in the future, contributing to causes for breaking down a system of confidence and professionalism, and the historical basis for the happiness achieved by those who work hard, life was never meant to be this complicated, if you cant work hard and feel good, and need to be a long distance runner, and lose 50 lbs to look good in a photo, and require makeup to look feminine or pretty, at what point do you stop, and say you know what, I don't feel like Im at my best right now, and I will not allow what anyone has to say about me to bother me, understand that it is never your fault if you get hurt by the misinterpretations of others, and don't allow your disposition in life, to reinforce those who think that their lives are better than yours therefore your life must not be a good life, or by example, anything worth reading, as though your experiences in life, are not normal, or a product of your own poor decision making, no what happens to you in life, is a reflection of the times, that you are only as good as you are able to stay well, and beyond that point of approachability, are difficult to contact or bring into anyones life, who expects you to have a life of your own, this is why maintaining friendships are important, it seems who you are independent of others, is a visual measure of what you have to offer if you are presented with an opportunity to have a relationship in life, or you can just go to Bungalow and make a bunch of new friends get numbers, and ask yourself, that was not challenging, whats their point?

The Upper Limit to Success ...

We wouldn't be where we are today, had it not been for the diligent efforts of those past, to create systems of support, to structure our now. There will always be varying lengths of success, not all defined by our capacity to earn a living, or even to bear children, today those are simply goals, which mark the beginning of new phase of life, some are privileged to experience in life, a life outside of the home. Tools and resources will always be made available, and based upon what you do know, and your exposures, will always have an influence over your understanding of how things came to be historically, and even develop a better appreciation for your now, and what has led you to where you are now in life. You can't learn much from drawing comparisons in life, no time period is the same, and all finished work products will always be a reflection of what was needed at time, and in a scope of expression, that was allowable during that time period, never lower your standards in life, although people may not be paying close attention now to anyones progress in life, eventually as you become stronger, and more resilient, growing through setbacks and mistakes in life, your journey as recorded will always be of interest to anyone who has not yet fully understand how to be happy, no matter what, and figure out what their purpose is in life, not all of us are found, and many of us get lost, you don't have to be the best at everything to get recognized, that's not how one receives attentions in life alone, its mostly likely because youre stable and make sense, and independent of them, sometimes the tables are turned, and you become the audience to someone elses life, it happens, don't take it personally, anything that thinks their smarter than you, if you don't say the right things, nor have the same drive and focus in life, will give you unsolicited advices in life, its usually because they think what they have to say is something you need to hear, or something they think explains where you are now, always be prepared for any negatives to be reinforced by anyone who believes in you, but at the same time gets frustrated with where you are in life, you'll never arrive to a better place in life, so long as you allow others to dictate your progress in life, based upon what they think you should be doing in order to feel whole, sometimes that's just how people work, by the time you turn around, and feel compelled to talk and explain yourself, they've already said their bit, and don't need to hear from you, always trust your systems of support, and don't expect a thumbs up, once you wake up and get going again in life, and feel capable of having a future again, that was the point.

Protect Your Assets ...

In order to appreciate and value anyone in your life, you have to value yourself. That means changing your attitude from being someone who talks in the negative about their past, and stops convincing others that they are worse off than they are, don't be dramatic, you just need an attitude adjustment, sometimes, saying the right things in life, can help you move forward, it may even lessen the load of someone willing to have a conversation with you in this moment in time, unless you need help, be appreciative, and don't take for granted other peoples time and energy, that would be asking a lot of anyone to worry or feel obligated to reach out to you, if youre not lost, in life, and you have not given up, and your not sick, but just want to cheer yourself up, they stay active, and if you need rest rest, know that no matter where you are in life, you will always be questioned, that's to keep close tabs on your progress in life, to monitor your mental health, always be nice to those who care, for every interaction, reflects on how well you are doing in life, whether you are able to let go, or whether to are carrying any loads in life, that anyone else, knowing about would feel bad, that your not doing well too. Don't try to do too much at once, and don't expect love to fix you, if its not a match its not a match, sometimes in caretaking positions its hard to love back someone giving you love, because you need to to be stable, to have nice things to talk about, or don't think its advantageous to share love in any way that would make you look open to being looked at in that way, lose energy, when overexposed in life, like your asking for it, for other to be attracted to you, and read into what you have to say, because they have identified that you are well, and want to know why, and achieve for themselves the same wellness, sometimes in sharing your thoughts, you can get drained, people help themselves in life, and sometimes you may get hurt in the process, sometimes its better not to know, what others think, and just see everything from a well lense, that's not being too critical of the conditions of others, as being about bigger reasons in life.

When Go Time Has Passed ...

Theres nothing simple about maintaining the peace, when it comes to resolving the interests of those who seek to be reinforced, made better, highlighted, or be viewed as in harms way upon knowing someone, who they feel has subjected them to harsh scrutiny, we are all responsible for our own choices in life, and with the options afforded to us, not complicate our lives or the lives of others, by our misgivings, hardships, or misunderstandings to say the least resulting from any lack of stability or ability to be stable among others confident, trusted, and looked upon professionally as someone of sound opinion and insight, ignored or put down, as having the potential to cause problems, be blamed for subjecting others to hardships, as connected, to claim that had they not known you, they would not have suffered in life to the extent, brought by the circumstances you managed to face, getting involved in the first place, showing up, and pitching a simple solution, to divert attentions away from causes for pain, in favor of creating options for us, to be bound not by controversies, or losses, be made to feel weak, or suffer even greater hardships, once put together, that always seems to be a problem, not wanting everyone to feel good, or people feeling better on the outside, and people on the inside feeling exposed, or feeling small compared to those not directly affected, thats the price that is paid, when speaking in private if frowned upon as not for the benefit of the receiver of insights, or be misunderstood as a channel for disclosures not intended to make public, how a bond is lost, or the inside receiver gets hurt, I forgot, by sharing informations made privately in public, I guess if not for entertainment purposes to shed light on who may be affected, just trying to make better their situation, ensure that they are not affected by what I have exposed myself to in life, questioning, and negative judgment, harsh scrutiny, and prying, investigation, and study, of the timing of my life, when deductions were made, things noticed, and at what point it became clear that anyone not invited into my private spaces in life knew of information kept privately in the privacy of my computer, Im not sure when, maybe upon losses. Im sorry! Dear: Joaquin Phoenix, its youre time to shine, not share my issues unaffected by your success in life. At least he's not in a martini glass in Vegas, and the Ex to a musician highlighted by Moore. That actually happened to me in real life, saw Dita Von Teese performed live dancing in a martini glass.

Living Without Regret ...

Sitting in my car one night I once filmed myself to my iPhone, describing myself as someone who lives without regrets in life, and has bore no resentments past toward others in life, it was only until attending AA meetings that I was required by assignment, to discuss any time I felt hurt or betrayed or at a loss, and it was mostly filled with flirtations and losses (ie crushes on people to which I had no ownership interest in or connected to physically in possession of them, or holding a piece of my heart, capable of being displaced upon exposure to love from another, replaced, causing a detachment of love back toward me, that could be felt) not real losses, mostly discussing recent events, not my childhood, it never occurred to me to go that far back in time, relive all the moments I could remember in life, all my experiences, who I have hooked up with, and to discuss those private interactions out loud, and upon exposing those secrets about me, intimacies with others, felt heartbroken, in acceptance of how giving I was, nice to others, let people into my life without fear of getting hurt eventually, and why I grew distant from others socially, its usually out of hurt that occurs, its not a strategy for making amends later on, once you get hurt, sometimes its hard to accept people back into your life, because it hurts, not because there is anything wrong with them, that I think gets misunderstood, as though someone being who they are is purposefully intending to be the type of person who's story hurts to hear or is so disappointing or heartbreaking on its face, that they knowingly exposed themselves unfixed to expose others to what type of pain they were enduring as unfixed have to sit through the process of watching them get well again, waiting on anyone to get well to feel better upon knowing them, can be a very painful attachment in life, disheartening to see no improvements, slow improvements, or no changes within as knowing someone, able to separate oneself spiritually from them, either obsessed with looking for flaws to rationalize or justify detachment from them (ie talk $hit) or ignore (ie not follow, and later be shocked to learn something about them you have not heard to further your dismay for them, or shocked to see them in a better condition, however disappointed of the lack of commitment to maintaining some type of continuity of care to which they could afford in life, like their health is the public's knowledge to know, how they are cared for, by what means, and how they were able to heal and overcome bipolar, thats everyones HIPAA right not to disclose causes for their illness, subject others to the same kind of thinking associated with causes to enable others to think that its okay to think that way, giving up in life, and not talk through their problems in life, journal or write, while processing the life they have lived, their experiences, and where to go from here, if they feel their options are now limited, by whatever disabilities they have been managing privately, (ie hitting my head self-harming, which occurred when I got syphallis and needed a penacillin shot, I dont understand why now that is occurring, or why when sent voices, my feelings always get hurt, when negative terms are used which I take personally as hearing, to see how tolerant I am of foul language and $hit talking, not that tolerant, very sensitive, not a $hit talker myself, Im a creative writer, who seeks to empower others, open people up to broach the subjects that pain them, not okay people passing in life because they just cant deal with life anymore or that things are so impossible or unbearable that they need to relapse and die to communicate their pain, of course Im not trying to do that, who does that purposefully, why Im sober, because I know I have a few screws loose already bipolar, so I take meds, not self medicate with liquor cut loose and be free emotionally, Im thinking about a lot, and if I dont say things right look obnoxious, or not thoroughly stated in a way that shows careful thought and consideration for the well being of others, codey and not reflected upon with insights deemed worthy of importance, or fair game for misuse, to devalue something, or someone, who values themselves, based upon what other finished products look like, say because one is not in tune with current code, one is not apart of, or is too far behind in life to care about, therefore grounds for attacking them their past and make fun of them because they were once really into helping others in a silly way, making iMovies, and DJ-ing, and writing life quotes, and history jokes, re-blogging fashion, and looked like a waste of education, no I was being original, nevermind, if youre not professionally trained in something, you automatically get discounted as imitation, or accepted as doing so with expertise, no I watched reality TV, thats how I was then, and who I am now is different, most people dont face photo keep track of their health, go easy on me in private please) people thinking that someone who chooses not to date, not to have friends, and finish a masters in order to work again, is being selfish or not trying hard enough in life, as though one is trying to purposefully play their cards in life, to represent themselves as though in defense to anything that has occurred in the past look like someone who wants their choices in life to speak for themselves and make a statement, as to their professionalism, intelligence, or cares in the world, look better, because they do not look well on their own socially, doing things for superficial reasons, or to find a better man or a better job in life, I never saw myself as climbing up any ladders in life, other than professional ladders, which I was not privied to begin ascent, others assuming it must have been for good reason, without understanding the time demanding experience 5 years or more, since 2008, as though how I presented myself in the past, was acting in a way to be accepted, not how accurately portraying myself as I was, I don't think you become challenged to adjust to others, and try hard physically until you feel like youre not good enough, or to better yourself, to be more likeable, because as you were, you were not able to maintain possession of the things you wanted to accomplish in life, keep up with those goals, such as finishing law school, managing reputational concerns flying overhead about you thought to be in reference to you as though you were ever a symbol for public use, deserving of being denounced before ever having achieved in life, a proud and confident disposition in life, continue on professionally, in spite of not finding Mr Right, be judged as though you willingly subjected yourself to looking bad, no I think in the moment you just want to be loved, and date whomever is attracted to you, that's just not feeling beautiful enough to date men who are successful, who are generally no where to be found socially or out and about, only through friends and work did I meet two men who really loved me and one through Facebook, who went on to play basketball professionally -its always upon giving up in life that you are made to look worse, even misinterpreted to have been defective not good at maintaining relationships troublesome, or the cause for the demise in your positive rapport with those closest to you over the years simply because you have lost contact, no that's just me experiencing bipolar, and not feeling well enough to go backwards check on friends, and have a positive moment sharing about life and progress, and who I like, and what Im doing in life, and what I have to be proud of in life, that takes time usually means needing a career to feel whole, something that shows that you are of value, so if you cant find that then maybe that's why some women are driven in life to look good and be perfect so that they get picked by nice men, that makes sense, I never really thought of that, was always an athlete, so stayed fit for sports, but never got thin enough, to be a total arms trophy, could be a little smaller, the last one didn't care, no one really cares now, people who know you, are just happy to see you well at this point, its changed over the years, how hard people push you, its not that they are tired or have given up faith in you, when they criticize you less just means that theyre not worried about you, and that you seem like youre doing fine, its always when Im in the moment and focused, and full of energy and going in life, that I suddenly get hurt, maybe getting paranoid making too many hasty decisions at once, changing passwords, thinking about subjects too serious for me to grasp mentally yet, as applied to what I know, and trying to manage my privacy, that's not a reflection of doing anything wrong, it just reflects my difficulty letting go, keeping everything. -As someone once said, upon arguing with my then close friend over high school issues, and only liking famous people, was reprimanded via group text message to all four of us "Leslie has serious mental health issues" then I was hospitalized put on 5150 hold, for swallowing a bottle of then prescribed Kolonopin, of course I was insulted, everyone else gets to shout at me, but Im not allowed to get upset, thats the pattern

Issues with No Resolve ...

Anything that cannot be fixed is broken, such as financial loss, a loss of respect, weight gain, image, reputation, outlook, the past, death, addiction, alcoholism, intelligence, mood, so much of life requires one to be stable, its always upon the rehashing of events past, that you either pave way for acceptances moving forward respectful of the privacy (feelings) of those who have suffered losses in life, which to them seemed beyond measure, and a result of more than simply addiction alone, but due to many conditions put under, now that we are in hindsight, with a more collected approach to addressing the past, to put those fears to rest, so that in the future peace is not further disrupted by the same transgressions past, I don't think having fun, and living life, falling in love, coming to admire, look up to, be influenced by, learn from is a transgression, when you are impressed with others performances in life, or proud of the achievements of others, not everything is a PR stunt, to issue sides, take sides, or to prove points, and make history, as being about something bigger than the contents of what is written to be about, relate to people outside of a story in real life, reflective of all who suffer the same, you cannot represent the sufferings of others, without insult, mention, I think is what has happened, to later mention any losses that you have known of, and lived through, to not mention at this point, would seem like Im trying to hide or kept to myself, knowing and not doing anything about it, or became powerless, and performed worse, because of losses, as though I bore some responsibility to do something about it, given my education experience and scattered real world experiences, and few social experiences in life outings, I did not have much to say confidently about life, as not having lived life yet, but as things worsened, and to avoid running the risk of being blamed as though I was a person who upon meeting served as a bad window toward positive change, or a bad example of someone living a normal life, or a negative insight to how to cope with your troubles, be misrepresented by others, further casted away as having problems that weren't important at the time I got sick 2009, or why I have been self-harming recently, it takes a long time to process, wake up, speak, and not be upset, or unstable in face of anyones stance in life, that is their right afterall, to represent what values they seek to proliferate around them or based upon what they believe to be true, react, that's mostly if people don't know you personally, its easily to write someone off as unimportant, not a historical figure, capitalizing on losses, not upon their own gains in life (education) share with others, if ever for negatives, that is never a strong enough story alone to share outloud, always wait until you have reached a higher ground in life, more stable, achieved some success on paper, with knowledge of what has worked and what has not worked for you, before you come forward with confidence and describe your experiences, faith would be having such a good understanding of your own life, and having seen the good in others, described events or experiences in life, that do not misrepresent the truth, and whether that makes you or others look better than you, was the truth, and by telling the truth, hopefully all else falls into natural order again, that's the benefit of being honest about your experiences in life, some lie to make themselves look better than others, as a built in defense, withhold information from use, which can be used against them and added up to cast them as consistently being in error, that's upon one negative judgment, others trying to build upon one negative to further misinterpretation of them as being rightfully so negative, to prove that they make poor choices, which lead to negative results, and because they are that way, why they should be looked at, and not believed in because that will only lead to poor results for others as influenced by them. I understand that point, that public figures now have some duty to live a life, which can be viewed and upon being viewed bear some responsibility to illustrate a life, which upon viewing can produce positive results for those watching, who have not yet experienced those things, learn from those transgressions, choices, mishaps, maybe even negatives, and see for themselves a better way of dealing with their problems in life, so that they too don't get attacked, for anything they have done wrong in life, and be punished in the future, for not having been as smart when they were younger, or a better leader, or served as a better representation of what wellness looks like, as though they are responsible for any bad luck suffered by anyone who has come into their life, and not been met with good fortune upon knowing them, we don't all have that affect on others, that's the gift of being a woman, representing those you love, protecting those you love, explaining things to those you love, re-producing humans for those you love, staying of value chaste for those you love, and being someone trustworthy for those you love who can be relied upon in life, for stability, should anything go wrong in their lives, go to for a sense of normalcy during tough times, be grounded.

Don't Get Carried Away in Life ...

Its easy to get caught up in frivolous matters, and lose focus in life, if its only upon being pulled under a Bus in life, that you look back to figure out why, then you have either waited too long as believed to be the case, that had you come forward earlier in life spoken about the past that things would have turned out more favorably for all, is a misconception of the use of time, as though someone had knowledge and with that knowledge an ability or know how, consistent with current discourse or in alignment to anyone interests at the time, they had yet to discover, inspect, read up on, investigate, or research, in a perfect world we would know more, but the less you free read the more sheltered you are perception wise, when it comes to assembling a bigger picture in life, and be consistent among the energies provided to you, know where its coming from, why others are coming on to you too strong, or why investigations of you have taken hold of your ability to behave naturally, think well, and perform under those circumstances in life, preyed upon, or looked at, in amusement to your best interests, gravitating toward those with a more like minded, settled, at peace, leaving you in disarray and alone, as you try to figure out why you are struggling in life and for what reasons your life was made to be more difficult as looked at in the negative, before you even had the opportunity to be represented publicly in the positive as connected to members of society, who were subjected to harsh scrutiny, cause a similar attitude to take hold toward you, whether or not with the intent to result in the same or similar hardships, difficulty speaking, no I do not think I should have been treated the same, as having lived a separate life, since I hugged OJ goodbye at the airport when Sydney moved to Miami, and cried in the Airplane, on my way back to LA. -If you cant figure out what is wrong, reporting in public what you know is not the solution, to figuring out what happened and why, and for what reasons anyone ever thought that its upon meeting you or seeing you, that ideas about life happen, or sudden motivations reached, by people not connected to you personally, who think they have a better viewpoint than someone inside a life story or set of circumstances, who is closer to that threshold of pain, when a “story hits close to home” as the saying goes, for some reason it seems as though people have become less sensitive and think that by publicizing those issues outloud, will somehow bring about a comfort supplied by a manufactured comradere with one another having known your story ... to think that that kind of embarrassment would ever generate comfort, that others know something about you, you are not aware that everyone knows about you, is disheartening, and heartbreaking, a very different reaction than maybe others had expected. Therefore upon viewing my timeline, please see less of my childhood, and think that for any reasons the choices I made in life, reflected a confidence in life, when it comes to adapting to my surroundings and being well liked, I went to prep schools for etiquette training and learned basic social graces, when it comes to competitions in life, not raised to feel threatened by anyone in life, but to challenge myself in life no matter what difficulties I faced athletically or academically, and to shine whenever possible, in whatever I was good at, I used to get As in Math, an A in Physics, and an A- on a Chemistry Midterm or Final once, a good student in High School, and Tri-Team Captain of the Soccer Team and Tri-Team Captain of the Volleyball Team. That’s a very failed system, other bonding as to your identity, deciding for you how you should appear to others generally, as though because they know anything special about you, have a better viewpoint, and because they have a better viewpoint, put you down, thinking that its upon being put down in life that you buckle down, and become a better person, at what point do you let someone who has suffered or struggled in life, to decide for themselves when to slow down or push themselves to extremes to make changes in their lives or improvements. Why is it okay for people who aren’t you, who step in your shoes in life, to then accuse you of being bipolar or seeing things wrong, as disconnected socially from others, while on your own, be mismanaged by others physically resulting in an identity crisis, once respected, and then viewed as an easy lay, since when is that type of behavior encouraged to anyone of importance, maybe not important then, but everything I did academically and athletically was to be recognized in the positive, is how I was raised, even asked to try out for the Olympic Development Team (ODP) kept a t-shirt from that try-out, me and the goal keeper, who played soccer for CU Boulder, freshman year, 1 of 5 freshman selected to play for the B Team, we had won The State Cup as adolescence, I scored 3 goals against San Diego Surf, didn’t start, but later scored 3 goals and had 2 assists, the 2nd goal by me was a volley from the top of the box into the net, I remember. I didn’t play much in college we joked my “5 minutes of fame” on the field, I got stung by a bee once playing in a field atop a mountain with flag poles, flags from different countries, or maybe it was just our flags and a state flag I forget by now, our warm up t-shirts said “CU F-king Black” on them. I lived in Aden Hall Freshman year, dorm options were not by choice but by survey filled out with my Dad, and that where I was placed upon what was selected, the smallest dorm on campus, in the Engineering Quad, across from the Stadium, freshman year there was a free concert in Farrand Field, where they celebrate 4/20, and Maroon 5 was playing, my college roommate told me, she grew up in Arizona, and dated, meanwhile my boyfriend from the gym was 33, and I was 18 having just moved to Colorado. His picture was on my wall above my desk, in a mini frame, one of his modeling photos. The guys above us used to have milk chugging contests, and barfed out their windows splattering onto our window once. One 4/20, while walking to class, I bumped into Bauer, who asked me if I was going to celebrate on Farrand Field, I had attended a previous year, but that year I decided to go to Class: “Nutrition for Health and Performance” we watched a video about Monsanto, and seed distribution. I eventually made straight As one semester, was on Deans Lists a few times, and because I enjoyed writing got an A in Sex Gender and Society, we were given bowls of free condoms, and I took a handful, just in case, decided to switch majors to Sociology, because I performed better on exams in which I could write out the answer, rather than select multiple choice options for a Psychology Major I took up to statistics, but only got Bs in, I at one point had a 3.8 in Sociology, was President of the Honors Society I think, I ran, I don’t think anyone else ran, so I got the position, participated on Wardenburg’s Health Board, a voting member, and was 1 of 10 selected from the top of my class of 300+ students, to be a Teacher’s Assistant one semester, we wrote the exam questions, and graded blue books, I graded three 30 people classes worth of exams, that’s 3 blue books per student, we made the grading criteria for points. It was a Criminology Course “Deviance in US Society” my professor with real world experience doing Sociology research, once spoke about raising a family, telling her son "Alive at 25," she would laugh a lot, we were required to teach one lesson, dressing up as different types of call girls, all the fancy roles were taken, and I was left with “Sex Slave” and bought a dress at Goodwill, and made a black eye on my face, and stood up on the desk in front of 300 people.

Life Isn't Perfect ...

Listen not all of us grew up with parents from NY with an innate ability to talk forever, that's a genetic trait, having good memory, a good sense of direction, solid focus, and an ability to withstand pressure, and to be the best at everything you set your mind to, not all of us are capable of shining in that way, a record holder 12 pull-ups in 2nd Grade, and record holder 50 sit-ups in 1 minute, and the fastest time in the Shuttle Run, that's moving two blocks one by one to the other side and back timed. That was me growing up, I took gymnastics, able to do a backwalkover on the balance beam and once scouted at the gym to audition for the movie Corina Corina as a child and took dance lessons, before that ill fated night 1994. Life as you know it may change, sometimes forever, and even with fewer opportunities, less money, and even if you have to start over in life, suffer on the basis of your connections in life be associated to, you have to keep going in life, this happens to many people, not just those in my immediate surroundings, troopers at that, whoever thought that so much tragedy could occur in one neighborhood, it musn't all be about connections in life, or is it "tigertrail" reports the newscaster covering the fire locations and its precipitation through the hillside "beginning at the base of the 405 freeway." I knew someone who lived on Tigertail, my first boyfriend (and I think Jim Carrey), we sat next to eachother in Kindergarten, Jordan Bahat (who left CU Boulder to attend USC to study Film, making the Movie: Jealous of the Birds, about the "Invisible War."), he of course was covered in lipstick on Halloween in his Karate costume, I was a dressed as a princess with lipstick, how did that happen? In first grade, we used to do puzzles together during recess, I don't remember anyone else being around, the square puzzles, 9 cubes, with animal heads and bottoms on all four sides, you had to match up all the heads and bottoms of the animals to complete the puzzle, we were both selected to be in Mrs. Wynn's class, the advanced class, the class was split into two, taught by two teachers, Mrs. Tarvin was the other. For some reason every year I was a student, the teacher would get pregnant and have to leave and another teacher would take her place, that happened to me a couple times as a student at Carlthorp School. Before my Kindergarten entrance exam, I remember talking to my Brother, who was preparing me, telling me that they are going to ask you to build a tower with blocks, and yada yada, what else to look out for, I was admitted 1990, I turned 5 August 7, 1990, and graduated June 1997, I kept my navy "Class of 1997" t-shirt for awhile but its lost by now. In 5th Grade I had a crush on Andrew Sun, who later danced with my other friend, who I was best friends with in 3rd Grade, and think I later had a thing with Jordan Bahat, after playing truth or dare in his tree house with friends, dared to French kiss eachother, and we did so then spit out the windows to the tree house, I still have a Color Me Mine ceramic doggie bag painted yellow, with a dogs face on it, it came that way, with "Love, Jordan" on the bottom, he was a black belt by 4th Grade, I remember, I missed the 4th Grade see what next year will be like class where you get to go to the next grade the year before and sit in with the teacher meet them, I was instead asked to attend a meeting with the LAPD in the downstairs Library, in which they notified the class that there had been a homicide to a Mother of a Student at the School, and gave us information about how to begin to understand what had happened, as well as inform us of information unknown to them at the time, and then opened themselves up to questions, and rose my hand to ask "were there any signs of a struggle" based upon something my Mom had asked me, in talking to her, a question they could not respond to did not have the answer to, the day I found out, the day after the Murder, on time to school that day, my Brother, told me in the schoolyard, popcorn was being made that day, that "OJ Shot Nicole" Im sure that is something my Mom probably told him, my Mom was supposed to go running with her the morning she passed and was first to the scene, was the one with a key who opened the door for the police. -As my best friend Harry Morgan said "You and Katie were the two hottest girls in the class," Katie, held the mile run record, and taught me how to do a backwalkover, and owned a Molly Doll, we all played with, and pretend kissed eachother hands over our mouths as little girls I remember, I wanted one, but my Mom said they were too expensive. -If people know you're story and its not a in a professionally published book, like anything valuable, with accept it as their own, and then treat you as though you don't belong, like its not your own take on events, youre own memories, and as shared, others take ownership over interests, and devalue you the person who has provided information, treat as secondary or unimportant, is so insulting I was first to speak to SCOTUS, because I am from a story, I know a little about what happened in the news, a little about what happened before the news, a little about what happened later as told about others, and given my movies and music connection is what others thought was the reason for me speaking to the courts trying to justify a crime as though done so on my behalf, as though I ever expressed any complaint about any finished products portraying what life was like at the time, or ever read too much into a "highlighter" scene as being about the "Deposition" from a real trial, with a Jewish Attorney, like Shapiro, and ever think that the "highlighted" portion being referenced to was when the children were named.

Rescue Mission ...

The pit of impending doom, another rescue mission, huh? A pretty fable "Movie: Pretty Woman," I suppose running for years everyday at night, and losing 50 lbs, made me a pretty $hitty detective, should have listened instead to my fears of the dark not faced my fears head on, that was counterintuitive. What is brave? The longer you prolong the process of recovery from whatever wrongs occurred while under the influence of drugs, alcohol, or friends, the more you look like a sell-out, avoiding subjects in life, by keeping stories or insights to yourself, upon realizing anything in life, mark that moment in time, and be sure to share your recollections later on in life, to remind yourself, of how far you've come, absent minded acquiring fears in life regarding your privacy interests, whether or not anything was about you to begin with, or whether your private spaces were seen, that influenced the decision making of others, to build, create, or make apparent any issues viewed upon meeting you or learning about your identity in life, sometimes we don't see things until we know people, and sometimes we don't learn things in life, until we get to know someone else's story in life, that is the benefit of meeting people, like a window open, to another way of life, different than yours own, some will always be better off in those respects, not faced with the types of challenges you may encounter being yourself, finding love, going through breakups, being written about, made famous behind your back, spoken about behind your back, or seen as stupid by anyone talking to you, who doesn't think that you're special, or beneath them in life, how should we treat each other, and still maintain esteem in life? As a general rule one should always be nice to one another, no matter who they are or where they come from, and no matter what is said about anyone, known about them, treat them as humanly possible as normal, without being instinctively critical of them pointing out to the what is wrong with them, or outright rejecting them from your life, as not good enough, disappointing, or not well. It used to be the case that when people are not well they remove themselves from equations in life, that's a natural reaction to anything that has gone wrong, been brought to their attention as being of issue, or to avoid being affected by the issues of others, separate themselves from the lives of others, and keep things to themselves, that's normal, to need alone time to recharge, think about life, excel, perform well, stay focused, and not fall apart loving others, or while trying to be social let loose and not be taken seriously in life, your memories stay with you forever, how do you want to remember your life, in the positive we hope, the more proud of yourself you can be the better you will fair later on in life, the more regrets you have piled up for yourself, the more difficult life may become, as imperfect, or easily subjected to reliving the same mistakes in life, if you have not matured and become a better decision maker, lose opportunities in life, as unsure of yourself, not wholly confident to take steps in life, to grow, change, or face challenges in life, that includes any rejections imposed onto you, while reaching out to others, that's a risk you take, upon loving someone, who loves themselves, or who already has love in life. -It's hard to attract for yourself in life, things or opportunities or people if you first do not have the skills, mental health, or education, to prove your potentials in life, offer something to someone (intelligences) that they have yet been able to put into words, that's what you as a writer, have to offer the reader, insights, not readily available to them, or already put into words for them, that is your reading of your reality, if impressed upon another, brings to light better insights for them, better judgments, and stronger beliefs in themselves, well then you're doing a good job as a writer, sharing intelligences that sit well, within the scope of normal feelings and thoughts, and don't sit outside the scope of what is a socially acceptable reaction to life experiences, no matter how hurtful the consequences of misjudgment have been, to you or anyone, who has been punished in life, nothings permanent, including self-love, confidence, self-esteem, physical health, and mental health, anything put together well, can deteriorate overtime, if you do not take good care of yourself, how a once positive impression of you gets lost, among, if you fall sick, as others improve, we can't all be doctors, and rise above all controversies in life, and not take personally, when we have yet to be included among the well, in the workforce, whose fault is that then, when someone is not included to participate in life among the well, who is responsible for those conclusions made about them, as though they knew they were being preyed upon for insights, and upon being preyed upon are now hereby responsible for any circumstances that ran afoul for anyone else, who we assume to have been in kind spirits referenced upon others living life, and cheering them on from a far, as though they adequately represented the whole purpose of what living life was about, excelling, being confident, naturally making friends wherever they went, dating, breaking up, moving on, being experimental, having friends, losing friends, going to rehab, graduating, moving home, dating getting into law school, how difficult is life anyways, no one really has it better than anyone else in life, no matter where they start or where they begin to shine, realize their potential, let's not discount them completely because they were not in any leadership positions creatively, to establish a clear pathway in the public arena to be known and to be known for what, besides their connections in life, that's not giving someone a choice, to call them out on things known about them reading their private steps to themselves, to delay their positive progress in life, so that their lives turn out for the worst, how do you expect someone to continue living life, without a job, without friends, without a boyfriend, seems difficult right,? That's why I blog.

Snap, Crackle, Rarr ...

Not too thrilled aren't we all, are we there yet? That moment of peace, that someone seems to always F up, for the betterment of whom, usually to cause disbelief in what is occurring now, to make themselves feel of significance, to countering any pleasantries occurring for whomever is doing well in life, has defied the obstacles standing in their way, and achieved success beyond measure, there has been no other time period in the history of mankind, when the best of the best have shined so bright, and where the times have delivered so much inspiration for the betterment of all to be consumed by, that is how the successes of others naturally better all those around them, that's a basic science, upon doing well everything feeling well around you, contributing to that wellness, via your presence, hardwork and effort (focus on self), and knowing that when you are not feeling well, that it should have nothing to do with anyone else, to fix yourself, and accept all feelings as a manifestation of your doing in life, mindful of the energy you put out into the world, the choices you make, become a product you can be proud of, live your life, absent minded any fears overhead, self-doubts, and misinterpretations about you, its not until youre up, that what has worked for you becomes of value to others trying to achieve the same, become a leader in terms of insights, and upon which things you have focused on in life to bring you to your moment, of peace or success, that is how one who is successful becomes interesting to speak to, asked questions about the inner workings of the decisions they have made in the past, as reflective of the success they have come to find in life, not all are so willing to share, their methodologies in life, coming to be, not all things built well, start off with a coherent understanding of larger principles backboning more solid systems of support in life, and if you decide to create something in support of others, then do so in an organized fashion, keeping track of your progress along the way, everything you've learned, everything you thought, everything that changed, everything that went wrong, everything you felt, everything that mattered, everything that scared you, everything you wondered about, everything you got turned off by, everything that hurt, everything you've seen, everything you remember, everything you loved, everything you watched, and everything you were influenced by. Just like we are to be discredited in life, by anyone or anything who has done a better job at self expression in a public arena, more professional, more palatable to the tastes of all, presentation wise, will always make the difference between those who get paid, and those who do not get paid for their work product, this is why people become professional, you can only have fun for so long doing what you love, while learning, before you decide, to apply for jobs, and take on more responsibilities in life, representing others, who are able to turn a profit, doing work for others, and because of their learned expertise, able to provide a service back to whomever pays for their services, be represented, and adequately assist them when it comes to a service they need in life, which they have chosen you to provide for them, assurances that you will be able to accomplish the task that has been given to you, in exchange for the payment provided to you, that's being of service in a professional way, as documented by money. -Everyone is entitled to promoting whatever organizations they think are doing a good job of addressing the issues, specifically, but never was it my intent, to overpromote those interests, and be seen as a poor representative member to an organization that combats those types of acts and misuses of weaponry, make no promises you cant keep is a popular expression for those who disappoint or do not live up to expectation, all talk and no gusto, like blowing hot air, as though a fight is about to erupt, put down as someone partaking in a fight, to be known, or someone as attached, trying to do the right thing, and take the side, of everyone against gun violence, that was the right idea, everyone has dreams in life, no one ever claims to be the dream themselves to categorize everything said as important on a should be inspirational list of things to say during a time of need in remembrance of those who have passed, leave that up to the professionals, whos use of the English language most accurately reflects the issues facing us at the time, and doesn't cause us pain to remember or think about, that would be reading into things too much, to assume someone who is taking a side different to the side they were on growing up, as though they were trying to look like a good person, no, only someone who is a good person, has the patience to help others, without being affected by what they are going through listen, and make people feel better, and speak until they reach a moment of clarity, and able to get off the phone, and confidently assist and manage the moods and thoughts of those in need, that was a task to which was recommended to me to take on get certified as a crisis hotline counselor, some of us have a nack for making people feel better about themselves or advising them of the right things to focus on, or say the right things to make better, any moment of fear or doubt, be directed toward the right resources in life for coping with their present disabilities in life, whether that be mental health issues, feeling victimized, scared, or all of the above helpless, or suicidal ... I was privileged to be exposed to two ways of looking at life, from the inside of an attacked image defensive to all, from the standpoint of insecure, been around those over-confident and going in life busy, and from the standpoint of those responsible for providing services to those in need, and the time consuming process of logging, data entry, follow-up, filing, correspondence, writing, interviewing, and managing case loads. That's just how I was raised professionally, to keep track of everything, and to take good notes, that doesn't mean I'm headed somewhere with that information, or have a specific direction in life, that is personally motivated, to bring about a different set of results others than the results I was trained to help provide for in life, -if you only know how to better others, why treat someone who others have benefited from, as though they are doing so, for notoriety, as though their purpose online, doesn't serve a positive function, to all as a whole, be unaffected by, how things are done, why things are done, who is protected, why people are protected, and why someone was sued and excluded from receiving protections in life attacked for 5 years, that is beyond me, I'm a shy person, I'm not aggressive socially, I don't hug, all men who have dated me approached me mostly, pursued me upon speaking with me, never someone who has been off putting, made others uncomfortable, been an embarrassment, or been inappropriate in any public setting, always in control of my emotions, express myself and my needs well, and never put up with other people's attitudes in life, but usually attacked if I'm never not strong, that's just how life is, if you can't fix a problem, and you are not deemed a strong representative of others, able to withstand negative judgements in life, you will be treated harshly as not doing what you are supposed to do, if it's not done well why failing, no I always do my best and sometimes my best is not good enough, I was raised never to complain, and never to play victim, however it's only until you get sick and hospitalized over and over again, that you take a stand in life, and say to yourself, I'm not going to put up with negative commentary, and speak.

When Love Comes Around ...

We won't all be in the same places in life, and that's to our benefit ... sometimes the higher you climb the harder you fall, learn to live for the moment and to appreciate those you love for where they're at in life, even if they're flying at a higher altitude than you, as much as it pains you to fit into their world, I'm sure it pains them to see someone with so much potential, not make it in life, given their story, not have been able to achieve in spite of what transpired in the past. You can keep going, and then you can keep going, and then you can keep going and be well known and become famous, there are several requirements in order to be treated with respect, I don't think being approachable is a quality of strength, but only subjects you to harm, people taking your story and making it their own, that's the price you pay for not being mainstream at the get go, others thinking to come up by putting you down in life, or treating you as a disappointment, as though you were supposed to rise to some occasion in life and shine, it's not until you do shine, that the voices quiet, everyone trying to hold you down in life, everyone treating your interests as secondary to their own, and everyone misusing your kindness. You'll never be important until you make yourself important, and if you are important, you won't be able to continue being a person of importance by doing nothing with your life, that's not how one gets noticed or respected in society, simply because of who they are or because of who they were friends with. I have been blogging online for many years now off and on, in spite of my personal issues, have managed to continue writing, in private, and finally present myself in a professional way, by website, that took many years of hardwork, to be presentable and to be able to share in a way to which all can relate, offending no one's journey in life, and not making light of my own experiences, take seriously life, and who I choose to include in my life story. I'm not just another story, and my experiences in life have been real, whether concluded to be a manifestation of some bipolar delusion in life, to me, all those feelings were real, and my experiences in life have been real. You are what you remember, you can either choose to bring out the best in everyone, or to share experiences in which you have struggled in life, and bring out your own pain and dissatisfactions in life, making it more difficult for others to connect with you on a one on one basis, the happier you are with yourself, the happier you will be. Look on the bright side, had you not written online, you would have not been able to meet people online and have conversations with people in private, who hold high positions in society as professionals, not worth a listen. That's a good sign, after all we are all only just human, shouldn't we all feel special? When is it time to stop putting people down in life and treat them as though they are nobody, and insignificant in the grand scheme of things, it's not for those reasons I chose to be important, to be of significance, or to be misused or responded to, as though I am opening a can of worms in history, or presently, others know little or nothing about, mental health issues associated with being a victim of homicide, and love and trust issues, intimidation, shyness, and difficulty feeling confident around others, that I'll never understand about myself, just learn to be nice to people no matter what their disposition is, and never put someone down in life, who has lived a difficult life psychologically as they are always doing their best to blend in and get along well with others, should never be defamed. Once you close up in life, it's hard to open back up, that's the main lesson, you can only handle so much heartbreak in life, before you yourself become broken, that's a feeling that is really hard to fix, being in pain, suffering from mental health issues, and trying to live a normal life, irrespective of what others think, no I don't think hitting my head is the correct response to hearing voices, or being intimidated by others, and no I don't think that their needs are more important than my own, I have done no harm writing online, worse than what was done to my image, if anything I am trying to better myself by writing online, and hopefully to the benefit of all, that's not a selfish endeavor, that's making sure others likewise are not subjected to the same harsh scrutiny I was subjected to in life, made suicidal bc one person did not accept me into their life, everyone else I have gotten along with and upon knowing me, loved me anyways. As a result everyone turned on me and ridiculed me, that was a first, it because I grew up at OJ's house, best friends with Sydney Simpson, then treated like I was coming up to be famous.

The worst is being judged in the negative, for what reasons you ever feel inspired or change, and for whom your admiration is given to the answer or the solution to the problems beared by those who are unsettled, not yet found, and not in a good place in life. Its only up you have to climb many staircases in life, of self-acceptance, to see through all the dirt, and all the taunting, and see the bigger picture punishment, as though to benefit those who hurt you, give any credit to anyone now in support of you, coming to be, earning a dollar, handle before you completely let go, of trying hard for people, and start trying hard for yourself, that quality about you, some will never same feelings you went through upon being lost and misguided in life, turning to drug, alcohol, or men to pass the time. How you pass the library), whether you did your best (got into two law schools), whether you are presentable in public (not brainstorming talking to who is causing you harm and who is not (that you learn overtime, to let go more, and be less assuming about others intentions in life, a toward you or away from you in life, as not a valuable source of information, intellect, trash you). -Who is important and why? Some everything is okay, and go out of their way, to make life more difficult for you, sabotaging you, embarrassing you, situating things so. Self-harm is not selfishness, it's a product of being told something by voice, thought about you, to make you not like yourself, and be of others, cannot do your best and fail.

How the Story Sits ...

How a story registers with you, based upon what you know, is different for everyone, and upon studying any one person, as applied, in decisions or creative decisions, based upon the same information known about them, found in private. -One of the main goals of story someone without intellect, not special, and whose upbringing was not unique to them, devalue their experiences as secondary or tertiary upon speaking is attractive to others, stands out, and is special, or unique, that should not deter others from their ability to tell their stories. There will always be people within a story, and not everyone will feel included, and what draws our attention, to facts about life, or up things more clearly, that's the value of a good book, read through once slowly, and read through again faster, until it reads smoothly and something as applied to the lives of others, or to their own life, brings about a better perspective for them and for the other side. -Its upon never coming up in life, as though you have no use for it, meaning your own work, that's how an original becomes devalued, as though value to me, and if my insights are unique to me, then they will go into a book, written by me. -There will always be popular stories and applied, help us to make sense of our lives, and what we want to do moving forward to stay motivated and continue to help others, learn upon sharing your story.

At a Time Like This ...

At a time like this, be compliant, more than six feet apart, would also require us to not gather round subjects past or present, that could finances (job losses), and living in fear of our future stability, with the chaos of the time looming overhead, remind yourself that its not that's life, we cannot always have action packed lives, be busy bees, socially, professionally, or romantically, a lot of processing occurs what do you plan to do, to make happen for yourself, as the issues get discussed, and what is needed from you, change wise, in order to your best, and no matter what, never giving up, no matter how tough life gets, no matter how despondent and withdrawn you get, content someone you yourself are proud of being and becoming, no one can visualize that for you, how to value yourself, be smart, efficient, and change takes time. We cant be in two places at once, not physically, and not spiritually, not mentally, and not romantically, your heart incorporate which ideas are helping you to achieve your goals in life, and learn to forget the rest, so much about being successful in life moments in life to dictate where you'll end up, who with, or affect who you become later on in life, respected or not. That's your choice everyone down with you, because you don't understand concepts in life, requiring forgiveness, moving on, letting go, overcoming fear

How we prepare ourselves for the future has much to do with where we are at right now in terms of our own happiness with what we have accomplished in life and what we have not yet accomplished in life. Based on how you feel about where you are at, your attitude, will determine where you end up in life and how far you will go in life. Nothing is possible unless you are willing to change how you live to accommodate more healthy choices and thought patterns to get you to where you want to be in life -happy.

Wondering About Time ...

4/8/2020

Great movie Hugo, I watched in theaters, but with no ending, just ended, that was odd? I really liked when they went inside the clock, delicate, important. Bridge of Spies was also beautifully lighted, an old city and snow, and a painter painting a portrait, I once quoted. Did you just watch a YouTube of Joaquin Phoenix, ya, how cute was he dancing? Cute! He's still just a shy, sensitive in getting to know and simple back, that was a very painful loss, to be very gone, and in disarray, singing to myself falling in love, but too scared to be happy together, definitely not a good time to send photos of you now, if you're not at your best, that's a face full of discomfort to see someone like holding hands with Reverend Parazaider in the Valley, you pray before you talk, get centered, then share, I'm sorry. -Its time for I

In a Nutshell: How to Compartmentalize the Past ...

It sometimes helps to keep a timeline of your own progress in life, whether by resume, or hospital records, milestones, new friendships, your past, distant past, and recent experiences in life, remember to be kind to yourself. Recovery is a process, it doesn't happen overnight, rationalizing with others (or hearing voices) over things heard hard to believe, and falling in love too quickly, or not good enough, establish an emotionally current and available for interaction and sharing in a way, that shows you don't bear resentments toward others, have moved on, others, what is that feeling of importance one holds, when they are so focused on themselves that nothing else seems to matter, the mind toward events not directly involving the reader, but personal to an interactions participants, who upon being exposed to one another's pain, a good job processing, letting out what needs to be said, and leaving up, what's important that has been said, everything else, is on your mind at the moment for others, and upon interacting with others, well enough to translate to a positive representation of who you are, normal and by mention make things about others, deflecting your attentions away from helping yourself first, and instead feeling obligated to help others, pain to all sides, to have been mentioned, as though one intends to highlight any negative inferences to be made about someone unrelated to others, having known them, some people adjust on their own good timing, and after being away from everyone on your own living alone, doing drugs and ending up in hospitals or rehabs in recovery and without love or love not fully returned whole heartedly with confidence. Dependency Court a law clerk to two attorneys managing 200 caseloads per attorney, split my day in half to work at both offices two Saturdays prep clients, even when the attorney was not present that day, make calls and carry on the day in her place. She was pregnant with twins, a corporate attorney and she held three jobs, while finishing her law degree at Southwestern, hard on me, finish the motion now, there's no time taken my time, I think I once made a table for one client, a timeline of her life, to condense all the important information needed to write your mature, and when hired expected to work, your love life may not always be perfect, the wrong catches catch you when you are with yourself, its just not something you talk about, dating a 48 year old when your 24, and going on a date because he keeps begging you, love, its that he needs love, best to be in love with people who can love you completely, not those with everything fancy wife ex VP or never a what can you do for me type of person ever. -I think all experiences managing the trusts and confidences of others is a good experience from High School at a table outside who approached you, eating a chop salad with your head in cell phone date, and then stepping out of an encounter, not expect to bump into anyone you know, how embarrassing, like that was your per usual, after studying in the library Leg

With Love and Appreciation ...

In hearing where you are coming from in life, don't be surprised if others, don't lend a kind ear and instead review you expecting failure, begin writing, Im an academician, no one ever explained how to free write, and based upon your own thoughts, come to be professional in life, carry on in public in a like minded fashion to the days when you were well liked, and popular and had many friends, some only remember about you, that is what they are trying to prove, whether what is known now was known then, no, only now upon sharing first my life, development, to share first from within, and only later after reviewing all works exposed to, how you've been influenced and whether they highlight you, or reference you, as a person of importance, for later reflections once everyone is grown up, and we have all moved forward, suggested to us, for how to behave in public, and what life in private school or the westside was like at the time, uniform our experience follows reality follows, that's laying groundwork for a different take upon a select few, as people to be idolized, or people to disregard the times, beyond the scope of what a normal child understands or even thinks to be of issue, their surroundings, upbringing.

Anyone Whos Hardworking Knows ...

We all may live different lives, and at different points in our lives, believe that any set of statements, means that someone bears guilt, and represent ourselves well, in times of controversy most of us lay low, not respond to those who do not believe in them. That's how one personally attached, as having stated their thoughts upon an issue, that's a knowledgeable point at which one responds to a specific incident, punished a "misdemeanor" for 3 drinks and driving a suspected DUI, and having done hundreds of hours of community service and did which I struggled professionally, and drank, and dated, and as a result, suffered from mental health issues, meaning not able to take good both sober, and dated for a year, its only upon mentioning others, that sides get built towards you as having mentioned someone, and the harms way, managed to survive, without love in your life, alone, with everyone being hard on you until you achieve in life, a better person most knowledgeable of the game past by a few references, and not to claim as though everything has been a fight over what or another in life, by upbringing, at what point do you share success, at what point do you back off and handle personal matters, at what point a bad seed or bad connection because of who you are, because of how you communicate, because you take things personally, because you in touch with friends over the years, be invited to weddings, and a bridesmaid to one. Once you leave relationships its hard to go back personally when someone is not able to communicate clearly, Im sure everyone on my Facebook is proud of me now with 3000 likes p

Hollywood Dreams (poem) ...

March tides and spotlights grew
And never stopped thinking of you
Follow your heart, and find what youre looking for
If its not love, then sing your heart out
So loud a trolly gone, so hard, my rhinestones fell
You cant go back not even from that, so why not a song
And as we put our glasses on, we sat and thank
In taverns, and green rooms, and even on shark islands
What to do what to do, when no one knows you
I pitched tree fruit at a tree, with a photo of my face taped up
Why couldn't it be this why, why did it end that way
And so I drank, whiskey, and moonlight, and my glasses fell
To the bottom of the pool, and then I jumped in
If you cant make it there, you wont make it there
And if you cant be here, then don't go there
Live life, whether together even or apart
Youll be thankful to never stop and sink to the bottom
Before your story unfolds, don't be afraid to sing
The loudest tune, to all you know, and be true
How many may agree, and find simplicity among they
Who understand your voice, not alone afterall
Maybe it was he, or maybe it was he, or maybe it was she
No one knows, how these things have come to be
And whats done in company is never forgotten
Whats done alone, is never remembered but for reminders
Directions to self, where to start and where to begin
A home office dream for me not them
And then we met, broken, bought, everything but hot to trot
A year later couldnt even choreograph an ending to that
Smile and be positive, is what we need, recommended
A birth certificate handed, and attorney retained
From another case, not forgotten, why a mini mouse appeared
Can we just stand, no, can we just march, no, can we write, only in 5 years
Why is that, why is this, what was that, why is this, why now
And then I sang star bangled and the pledge, has not been forgotten
The only three prayers I know, raised well, not spoiled rotten
And when the stories collide, an image never forgotten
The times spent in disarray, the size that never seemed to budge
And the pounds that got lost, never seemed to shine
Only two photographs taken a flip phone and punishment
Photographs taken, upon request, commissioned, for him not they
And what has been forsaken, all energies spent, and troubled
Like poison, and collar broken, a 5th grade tire swing sang
For attentions broken, not for pain, and not for this broken
Whos losses add, another image torn
Like crowns and steeples and flying buttresses to a tshirt
One from a bar, a high school French drink with a bottom

New to Blogging Online ...

As you come to understand the fundamentals of blogging online, and grasp the subjects concerning bloggers at any given moment in their thoughts and manner of self-expression, some picking more professional presentations of finished work products, applying for jobs in mass production, or to be utilized by others for professional use, that's a choice you make, upon sharing online, your work at the discretion of a mismanaged or used for other purposes other than you originally intended, to be casted in a positive light, or to eventually share a crowd on that story recalling in hindsight and add meaning to your original prose. Its not for those reasons that stories are not told, maybe also skills in the process of focusing on themselves that happens, and much to boot, lost a lot of footage on the way to discovering themselves as parents, and later barely maintained copies of photos ourselves, from our lives, the way we remembered it to be. Without proof of your life to see what life you left behind, upon going to college and then law school, I had friends who were neighbors and with jobs, I was a social media ever being used for bigger story tellings, or for there to be controversy over my identity, I guess to them was supposed to be important. Junior year, taking LSAT classes in Boulder, Colorado. -I think the worst feeling is having kept many private records, of what is left over having been read in private, without your approvals, other viewing your life as it was being lived, and in disapproval of your appearance really hurts. Always presentable ... Im not sure at what point that became an issue, aging is a process, make sure to keep your valuable memories come to know you online, as you might even get the chance to meet them in person one day, if they have not already passed you by in their experiences, I think its not until you on your own are important, do the rumors about you whether true or not settle down, and not until you have done a thorough job or not providing insights and opinions to others, that not only serve to explain your own boundaries in life, and help with your endeavors in life, such as responding to issues, facing addicts and alcoholics, failures, and those doused with promiscuity at one point in time. I don't think all relationships are supposed to have such a divested interest in them, from a professional standpoint, to keep a private life as good of all, and given the totality of the circumstances need not worry about image, or whos image has been harmed, in the process of your life to speak, or ring handler of trusts, or attentions, that would just be riding on one others coattails in life, that happens with friends. That banter of informations, youd have to be in the know to understand, or so I recall that much of how it was used back in the day. Im 34 now, and as successful as a person, a story teller, a writer, an opinion sharer, a company, and a brand to brave the circumstances faced past, deal with the process of becoming a public speaker, and law student, it was encouraged for me to become a lawyer (which I will not be) and it was encouraged for me to be frequented, who knew how to light up? When one lights up at you. --- Thank you Lee Daniels!

If there was one algorithm or set of beliefs from which to base all inferences and thoughts moving forward, then we would all be successful in the tastes of all. Perhaps my pen name, was not fully understood, misread to have inferred the acceptability of causing harm to others, and movement, in favor of more jobs for women, and husbands to say the least, we have not all benefited in that way from speaking up, and we could've done better than that representation wise, we are who mirrors us along the way, feminine role models, inherent to our basic desires, and same, and certainly not all adequately represented by an offender to say the least -I didn't attend that march stayed home, I wasn't sure if I should take the podium to speak not only to what is current, but for the entirety of our existence speak, what being a woman means to us, something love, but we care instinctively for others, as those who have cared for us did, while we were growing up, so that we could be good dec way, to which all can mirror and reflect upon themselves and better suit themselves for a life they feel has been worth the wait, its hap that's where the business etiquette conversation comes into play. How much know how goes into being successful and how much of th our strength of character, and positive upbringing, to be the bearers of those traits moving forward and hand down to our loved ones (c really us, and how much of us, is really others, the bottom line, is to remember that you are unique, you are loved, and you are special what you believe to be true about yourselves or others, no less human, than the next human. Its therefore no ones responsibility upon b we can keep track, but its never your responsibility to teach others how to be, behave, look, think, or compromise their best judgments that be to include or not include others, to feel better than, or to resist the temptation of being known to many, and losing insights along of who they are, no bigger than the concerns they have, and only as big as the concerns they follow, and be reminded, to always put fir well, one must think well, and to think well one must be good, and to do good, one must adhere to a set of principles governing their d no matter who tries to interfere with their better judgment about themselves or others, not be brought down in life, forced to admit to th if that were the case then I would not be successful as a place for insight and opinion, and had I not worked the jobs I got, not trusted a everything, limit connections, maintain trust, be honest, be positive, be professional in private and public spaces, and do my best, at wh You will never enter a new phase of development, until you are generally acceptable, to most, and you will not be able to turn a profit, public opinion to a public matter, until you can show that your story in it of itself, is unique to you, not impressed upon you by the exp agenda, to better suit yourself among as a victim, to other peoples circumstances, and that you are a product of your own choices in lif environments where thought sharing is allowed, which only until now, has become commonplace to share out loud ones thoughts. -We that or else we'd all fall down in life, if one another were dependent upon the successes of others to find success for themselves, there the assembly of works produced, like myself, or a macbook. -That will never change, you have two choices upon beginning any busin professional, as the taking continues, or what work has passed, and keep going in life, strong.

Knowing Less About ...

We've talked a lot about things that I have become very knowledgeable about given my own experiences having overcome traumas an them to come forward with an opinion towards you, as though they have the right to speak about subjects that don't involve them, its u however for others who are directly affected, less inclined to share qualifying factors or speak to subjects that they have no direct h attack. (I just shared my "OJ Stories" I was ranked 34,000 on Alexa without having mentioned any of my childhood memories, did so and having shared from their own lives, would motivate someone in their own lives to cause harm to others, or to disappear, from whi intelligences online, and get others to turn on them, that already happened, I got sued having come forward sharing my experiences in palatable to the tastes of all, and still left doors open, as to blames past, or current, that did not satisfy the conscious of those to whom organizations I found, and thought based upon my own timelines of realizations, felt like would be a problem or is a problem, I felt I c behind in life, not smart enough, down, ill, mentally ill, in the wrong, bipolar, or heartbroken.

What Makes a Hero? ...

We won't always be on time to all occasions, and we may not even report in time to prevent causes or circumstances from arising in the what makes a hero. Not someone who dodges subjects, or fails to speak, not someone who speaks for without listening, not someone who themselves, and certainly not anyone who is ashamed of their past, or would set anyone else to unreasonable standards of professional years to accomplish, of schooling, and writing online, you do so, and when its time to explain your upbringing, and what makes you so for building timelines, and building a new rapport with an audience who has come to know and understand you, but doesn't understand be a public figure it doesn't happen for you. It cost $700/month for several months to establish a company name and to pay for legal fees in law school to become educated enough to write without fear of what others have to say or think about me, be able to rise above all of together a finished product Im proud of but have yet to complete: a book. --- New Alexa Rank: 70,977 (Up w/New Pen Pals).

Over Before You Know It ...

Dressed in bright blue on national television, stood the President, oh no my #chanukahmonica joke, went worldwide, way'd it go, take haunted by your past, the other unwilling to let you go, feeling stuck, its happens to us all. With love comes responsibility, if the other move forward. A very stressful discomfort follows, sometimes even illness and self-harm, why now, you wonder. Why upon moving granted. That's just life, we wont be around forever. So choose wisely, who you wish to include in your life, and who you wish to let go planet for a short while, why not make the most of our time on earth, and get to know more. It seems to me that its nice to have love a connection you may feel toward anyone who is taken, just know your boundaries, and don't take it any further than they are willing to points of discomfort, a painful discomfort, knowing love, and not being able to experience love, because of something from our past p our undivided attention, you'd like to think that they wouldn't be bothered by any of your attachments past, but its possible that they w original attachment, to whom you are no longer in love with, or who have grown past loving them. How important is someones love to longer in love with you, and allow them to admire someone else, this isn't marriage, one who admires is not required to stay in admira willing to get to know us, eventually, we all find our places in life, no matter how painful it may be, letting go, no matter how embarra finding who to love best.

Personal Update ...

4/5/2020

Not feeling well. I think Ive disclosed a lot about whats been going on with me lately, and just don't want to subject me or others who just have to be careful I guess. Given my time online, it makes sense that I have grown comfortable talking to others, but maybe to my people I meet along the way, and continue to be a positive outlet online. People are people. #behuman -Love is painful sometimes, esp Leslie. lol, I know. Whoever knew ... love him! xoxox

Opening Up ...

Its a beautiful moment when you are able to open up and be yourself around someone, sometimes we are unwilling to grow attached to would make you or others uncomfortable later on, to have known someone that personally, why its important to always know your limits you, that's just a fact of life, and there will always be interferences in life with your better judgment upon opening up, feeling free, in the stop you from vocalizing your issues out loud, whether that be for therapeutic purposes, or for personal reasons defend yourself against love, are for personal reasons alone, sometimes in trying to make other people happy we may subject ourselves to harm, and then become our own best interest in not getting hurt privately and then publicly have to explain why you are hitting your head, have fractured your personally and professionally, cause you to look like something you are not in private, unprofessional, or too casual with the management help from messenger lenses, even better looking than I started, while trying to figure out why my face was becoming disfigured, coping myself, a better option than committing suicide all together). Eventually you have to pause, figure out what was causing you to open up without constant contact with others, trying to manage problems ongoing in your head about life, and think that problems could ever be online is impossible, it may for the time being (3 years) been a positive experience, having a pen pal (ie Trump Accounts) but has grown to have ever talked about, initially contacting him, after visiting scotus, to inform him of what issues I felt were important at the time, was in meetings twice a day, was told that that was going to help me, but it turns out that I only got sick in the process of speaking in meetings and a few famously known people, in recovery, seen during my time in AA. -I wouldn't call it being self-destructive, to self-harm, but it's your overall health, whether you are able to manage your problems on your own or whether you need help, and whether if you need help in reality, how long can you go on, maintaining imaginary friends in life, how appropriate is it to carry on, conversations with people, that in real life, and be avoidant of having real friends and boyfriends in real life, the same kind of hurt can result while having a pen pal. That is to admire others, don't expect to be let go easily in life, sometimes by the time people come around in life, or are around, we have other behaviors, and cut back on activities in which we share too much of ourselves in private or public, which have the potential for leading to but don't want everyone to know that they know you privately, or friend you, but don't want everyone to know that you are friends, or they like you, for some reason that seems to be my disposition now, either in love or not.

There's nothing simple about maintaining the peace, when it comes to resolving the interests of those who seek to be reinforced, made better, highlighted, or be viewed as in harms way upon knowing someone, who they feel has subjected them to harsh scrutiny, we are all responsible for our own choices in life, and with the options afforded to us, not complicate our lives or the lives of others, by our misgivings, hardships, or misunderstandings to say the least resulting from any lack of stability or ability to be stable among others confident, trusted, and looked upon professionally as someone of sound opinion and insight, ignored or put down, as having the potential to cause problems, be blamed for subjecting others to hardships, as connected, to claim that had they not known you, they would not have suffered in life to the extent, brought by the circumstances you managed to face, getting involved in the first place, showing up, and pitching a simple solution, to divert attentions away from causes for pain, in favor of creating options for us, to be bound not by controversies, or losses, be made to feel weak, or suffer even greater hardships, once put together, that always seems to be a problem, not wanting everyone to feel good, or people feeling better on the outside, and people on the inside feeling exposed, or feeling small compared to those not directly affected, that's the price that is paid, when speaking in private if frowned upon as not for the benefit of the receiver of insights, or be misunderstood as a channel for disclosures not intended to make public, how a bond is lost, or the inside receiver gets hurt, I forgot, by sharing informations made privately in public, I guess if not for entertainment purposes to shed light on who may be affected, just trying to make better their situation, ensure that they are not affected by what I have exposed myself to in life, questioning, and negative judgment, harsh scrutiny, and prying, investigation, and study, of the timing of my life, when deductions were made, things noticed, and at what point it became clear that anyone not invited into my private spaces in life knew of information kept privately in the privacy of my computer, Im not sure when, maybe upon losses. Im sorry! Dear: Joaquin Phoenix, its youre time to shine, not share my issues unaffected by your success in life. At least he's not in a martini glass in Vegas, and the Ex to a musician highlighted by Moore. That actually happened to me in real life, saw Dita Von Teese performed live dancing in a martini glass.

Living Without Regret ...

Sitting in my car one night I once filmed myself to my iPhone, describing myself as someone who lives without regrets in life, and has beared no resentments past toward others in life, it was only until attending AA meetings that I was required by assignment, to discuss any time I felt hurt or betrayed or at a loss, and it was mostly filled with flirtations and losses (ie crushes on people to which I had no ownership interest in or connected to physically in possession of them, or holding a piece of my heart, capable of being displaced upon exposure to love from another, replaced, causing a detachment of love back toward me, that could be felt) not real losses, mostly discussing recent events, not my childhood, it never occurred to me to go that far back in time, relive all the moments I could remember in life, all my experiences, who I have hooked up with, and to discuss those private interactions out loud, and upon exposing those secrets about me, intimacies with others, felt heartbroken, in acceptance of how giving I was, nice to others, let people into my life without fear of getting hurt eventually, and why I grew distant from others socially, its usually out of hurt that occurs, its not a strategy for making amends later on, once you get hurt, sometimes its hard to accept people back into your life, because it hurts, not because there is anything wrong with them, that I think gets misunderstood, as though someone being who they are is purposefully intending to be the type of person who's story hurts to hear or is so disappointing or heartbreaking on its face, that they knowingly exposed themselves unfixd to expose others to what type of pain they were enduring as unfixd have to sit through the process of watching them get well again, waiting on anyone to get well to feel better upon knowing them, can be a very painful attachment in life, disheartening to see no improvements, slow improvements, or no changes within as knowing someone, able to separate oneself spiritually from them, either obsessed with looking for flaws to rationalize or justify detachment from them (ie talk $hit) or ignore (ie not follow, and later be shocked to learn something about them you have not heard to further your dismay for them, or shocked to see them in a better condition, however disappointed of the lack of commitment to maintaining some type of continuity of care to which they could afford in life, like their health is the public's knowledge to know, how they are cared for, by what means, and how they were able to heal and overcome bipolar, thats everyones HIPAA right not to disclose causes for their illness, subject others to the same kind of thinking associated with causes to enable others to think that its okay to think that way, giving up in life, and not talk through their problems in life, journal or write, while processing the life they have lived, their experiences, and where to go from here, if they feel their options are now limited, by whatever disabilities they have been managing privately, (ie hitting my head self-harming, which occurred when I got syphallis and needed a penacillin shot, I dont understand why now that is occurring, or why when sent voices, my feelings always get hurt, when negative terms are used which I take personally as hearing, to see how tolerant I am of foul language and $hit talking, not that tolerant, very sensitive, not a $hit talker myself, Im a creative writer, who seeks to empower others, open people up to broach the subjects that pain them, not okay people passing in life because they just cant deal with life anymore or that things are so impossible or unbearable that they need to relapse and die to communicate their pain, of course Im not trying to do that, who does that purposefully, why Im sober, because I know I have a few screws loose already bipolar, so I take meds, not self medicate with liquor cut loose and be free emotionally, Im thinking about a lot, and if I dont say things right look obnoxious, or not thoroughly stated in a way that shows careful thought and consideration for the well being of others, codey and not reflected upon with insights deemed worthy of importance, or fair game for misuse, to devalue something, or someone, who values themselves, based upon what other finished products look like, say because one is not in tune with current code, one is not apart of, or is too far behind in life to care about, therefore grounds for attacking them their past and make fun of them because they were once really into helping others in a silly way, making iMovies, and DJ-ing, and writing life quotes, and history jokes, re-blogging fashion, and looked like a waste of education, no I was being original, nevermind, if youre not professionally trained in something, you automatically get discounted as imitation, or accepted as doing so with expertise, no I watched reality TV, thats how I was then, and who I am now is different, most people dont face photo keep track of their health, go easy on me in private please) people thinking that someone who chooses not to date, not to have friends, and finish a masters in order to work again, is being selfish or not trying hard enough in life, as though one is trying to purposefully play their cards in life, to represent themselves as though in defense to anything that has occurred in the past look like someone who wants their choices in life to speak for themselves and make a statement, as to their professionalism, intelligence, or cares in the world, look better, because they do not look well on their own socially, doing things for superficial reasons, or to find a better man or a better job in life, I never saw myself as climbing up any ladders in life, other than professional ladders, which I was not privied to begin ascent, others assuming it must have been for good reason, without understanding the time demanding experience 5 years or more, since 2008, as though how I presented myself in the past, was acting in a way to be accepted, not how accurately portraying myself as I was, I don't think you become challenged to adjust to others, and try hard physically until you feel like youre not good enough, or to better yourself, to be more likeable, because as you were, you were not able to maintain possession of the things you wanted to accomplish in life, keep up with those goals, such as finishing law school, managing reputational concerns flying overhead about you thought to be in reference to you as though you were ever a symbol for public use, deserving of being denounced before ever having achieved in life, a proud and confident disposition in life, continue on professionally, in spite of not finding Mr Right, be judged as though you willingly subjected yourself to looking bad, no I think in the moment you just want to be loved, and date whomever is attracted to you, that's just not feeling beautiful enough to date men who are successful, who are generally no where to be found socially or out and about, only though friends and work did I meet two men who really loved me and one through Facebook, who went on to play basketball professionally -its always upon giving up in life that you are made to look worse, even misinterpreted to have been defective not good at maintaining relationships troublesome, or the cause for the demise in your positive rapport with those closest to you over the years simply because you have lost contact, no that's just me experiencing bipolar, and not feeling well enough to go backwards check on friends, and have a positive moment sharing about life and progress, and who I like, and what Im doing in life, and what I have to be proud of in life, that takes time usually means needing a career to feel whole, something that shows that you are of value, so if you cant find that then maybe that's why some women are driven in life to look good and be perfect so that they get picked by nice men, that makes sense, I never really thought of that, was always an athlete, so stayed fit for sports, but never got thin enough, to be a total arms trophy, could be a little smaller, the last one didn't care, no one really cares now, people who know you, are just happy to see you well at this point, its changed over the years, how hard people push you, its not that they are tired or have given up faith in you, when they criticize you less just means that theyre not worried about you, and that you seem like youre doing fine, its always when Im in the moment and focused, and full of energy and going in life, that I suddenly get hurt, maybe getting paranoid making too many hasty decisions at once, changing passwords, thinking about subjects too serious for me to grasp mentally yet, as applied to what I know, and trying to manage my privacy, that's not a reflection of doing anything wrong, it just reflects my difficulty letting go, keeping everything. -As someone once said, upon arguing with my then close friend over high school issues, and only liking famous people, was reprimanded via group text message to all four of us "Leslie has serious mental health issues" then I was hospitalized put on 5150 hold, for swallowing a bottle of then prescribed Kolonopin, of course I was insulted, everyone else gets to shout at me, but Im not allowed to get upset, thats the pattern

Anything that cannot be fixed is broken, such as financial loss, a loss of respect, weight gain, image, reputation, outlook, the past, death, addiction, alcoholism, intelligence, mood, so much of life requires one to be stable, its always upon the rehashing of events past, that you either pave way for acceptances moving forward respectful of the privacy (feelings) of those who have suffered losses in life, which to them seemed beyond measure, and a result of more than simply addiction alone, but due to many conditions put under, now that we are in hindsight, with a more collected approach to addressing the past, to put those fears to rest, so that in the future peace is not further disrupted by the same transgressions past, I don't think having fun, and living life, falling in love, coming to admire, look up to, be influenced by, learn from is a transgression, when you are impressed with others performances in life, or proud of the achievements of others, not everything is a PR stunt, to issue sides, take sides, or to prove points, and make history, as being about something bigger than the contents of what is written to be about, relate to people outside of a story in real life, reflective of all who suffer the same, you cannot represent the sufferings of others, without insult, mention, I think is what has happened, to later mention any losses that you have known of, and lived through, to not mention at this point, would seem like Im trying to hide or kept to myself, knowing and not doing anything about it, or became powerless, and performed worse, because of losses, as though I beared some responsibility to do something about it, given my education experience and scattered real world experiences, and few social experiences in life outtings, I did not have much to say confidently about life, as not having lived life yet, but as things worsened, and to avoid running the risk of being blamed as though I was a person who upon meeting served as a bad window toward positive change, or a bad example of someone living a normal life, or a negative insight to how to cope with your troubles, be misrepresented by others, further casted away as having problems that weren't important at the time I got sick 2009, or why I have been self-harming recently, it takes a long time to process, wake up, speak, and not be upset, or unstable in face of anyones stance in life, that is their right afterall, to represent what values they seek to proliferate around them or based upon what they believe to be true, react, that's mostly if people don't know you personally, its easily to write someone off as unimportant, not a historical figure, capitalizing on losses, not upon their own gains in life (education) share with others, if ever for negatives, that is never a strong enough story alone to share outloud, always wait until you have reached a higher ground in life, more stable, achieved some success on paper, with knowledge of what has worked and what has not worked for you, before you come forward with confidence and describe your experiences, faith would be having such a good understanding of your own life, and having seen the good in others, described events or experiences in life, that do not misrepresent the truth, and whether that makes you or others look better than you, was the truth, and by telling the truth, hopefully all else falls into natural order again, that's the benefit of being honest about your experiences in life, some lie to make themselves look better than others, as a built in defense, withhold information from use, which can be used against them and added up to cast them as consistently being in error, that's upon one negative judgment, others trying to build upon one negative to further misinterpretation of them as being rightfully so negative, to prove that they make poor choices, which lead to negative results, and because they are that way, why they should be looked at, and not believed in because that will only lead to poor results for others as influenced by them. I understand that point, that public figures now have some duty to live a life, which can be viewed and upon being viewed bear some responsibility to illustrate a life, which upon viewing can produce positive results for those watching, who have not yet experienced those things, learn from those transgressions, choices, mishaps, maybe even negatives, and see for themselves a better way of dealing with their problems in life, so that they too don't get attacked, for anything they have done wrong in life, and be punished in the future, for not having been as smart when they were younger, or a better leader, or served as a better representation of what wellness looks like, as though they are responsible for any bad luck suffered by anyone who has come into their life, and not been met with good fortune upon knowing them, we don't all have that affect on others, that's the gift of being a woman, representing those you love, protecting those you love, explaining things to those you love, re-producing humans for those you love, staying of value chaste for those you love, and being someone trustworthy for those you love who can be relied upon in life, for stability, should anything go wrong in their lives, go to for a sense of normalcy during tough times, be grounded.

Don't Get Carried Away in Life ...

Its easy to get caught up in frivolous matters, and lose focus in life, if its only upon being pulled under a Bus in life, that you look back to figure out why, then you have either waited too long as believed to be the case, that had you come forward earlier in life spoken about the past that things would have turned out more favorably for all, is a misconception of the use of time, as though someone had knowledge and with that knowledge an ability or know how, consistent with current discourse or in alignment to anyone interests at the time, they had yet to discover, inspect, read up on, investigate, or research, in a perfect world we would know more, but the less you free read the more sheltered you are perception wise, when it comes to assembling a bigger picture in life, and be consistent among the energies provided to you, know where its coming from, why others are coming on to you too strong, or why investigations of you have taken hold of your ability to behave naturally, think well, and perform under those circumstances in life, preyed upon, or looked at, in amusement to your best interests, gravitating toward those with a more like minded, settled, at peace, leaving you in disarray and alone, as you try to figure out why you are struggling in life and for what reasons your life was made to be more difficult as looked at in the negative, before you even had the opportunity to be represented publicly in the positive as connected to members of society, who were subjected to harsh scrutiny, cause a similar attitude to take hold toward you, whether or not with the intent to result in the same or similar hardships, difficulty speaking, no I do not think I should have been treated the same, as having lived a separate life, since I hugged OJ goodbye at the airport when Sydney moved to Miami, and cried in the Airplane, on my way back to LA. –If you cant figure out what is wrong, reporting in public what you know is not the solution, to figuring out what happened and why, and for what reasons anyone ever thought that its upon meeting you or seeing you, that ideas about life happen, or sudden motivations reached, by people not connected to you personally, who think they have a better viewpoint than someone inside a life story or set of circumstances, who is closer to that threshold of pain, when a “story hits close to home” as the saying goes, for some reason it seems as though people have become less sensitive and think that by publicizing those issues outloud, will somehow bring about a comfort supplied by a manufactured comradere with one another having known your story ... to think that that kind of embarrassment would ever generate comfort, that others know something about you, you are not aware that everyone knows about you, is disheartening, and heartbreaking, a very different reaction than maybe others had expected. Therefore upon viewing my timeline, please see less of my childhood, and think that for any reasons the choices I made in life, reflected a confidence in life, when it comes to adapting to my surroundings and being well liked, I went to prep schools for etiquette training and learned basic social graces, when it comes to competitions in life, not raised to feel threatened by anyone in life, but to challenge myself in life no matter what difficulties I faced athletically or academically, and to shine whenever possible, in whatever I was good at, I used to get As in Math, an A in Physics, and an A- on a Chemistry Midterm or Final once, a good student in High School, and Tri-Team Captain of the Soccer Team and Tri-Team Captain of the Volleyball Team. That’s a very failed system, other bonding as to your identity, deciding for you how you should appear to others generally, as though because they know anything special about you, have a better viewpoint, and because they have a better viewpoint, put you down, thinking that its upon being put down in life that you buckle down, and become a better person, at what point do you let someone who has suffered or struggled in life, to decide for themselves when to slow down or push themselves to extremes to make changes in their lives or improvements. Why is it okay for people who aren’t you, who step in your shoes in life, to then accuse you of being bipolar or seeing things wrong, as disconnected socially from others, while on your own, be mismanaged by others physically resulting in an identity crisis, once respected, and then viewed as an easy lay, since when is that type of behavior encouraged to anyone of importance, maybe not important then, but everything I did academically and athletically was to be recognized in the positive, is how I was raised, even asked to try out for the Olympic Development Team (ODP) kept a t-shirt from that try-out, me and the goal keeper, who played soccer for CU Boulder, freshman year, 1 of 5 freshman selected to play for the B Team, we had won The State Cup as adolescence, I scored 3 goals against San Diego Surf, didn’t start, but later scored 3 goals and had 2 assists, the 2nd goal by me was a volley from the top of the box into the net, I remember. I didn’t play much in college we joked my “5 minutes of fame” on the field, I got stung by a bee once playing in a field atop a mountain with flag poles, flags from different countries, or maybe it was just our flags and a state flag I forget by now, our warm up t-shirts said “CU F-king Black” on them. I lived in Aden Hall Freshman year, dorm options were not by choice but by survey filled out with my Dad, and that where I was placed upon what was selected, the smallest dorm on campus, in the Engineering Quad, across from the Stadium, freshman year there was a free concert in Farrand Field, where they celebrate 4/20, and Maroon 5 was playing, my college roommate told me, she grew up in Arizona, and dated, meanwhile my boyfriend from the gym was 33, and I was 18 having just moved to Colorado. His picture was on my wall above my desk, in a mini frame, one of his modeling photos. The guys above us used to have milk chugging contests, and barfed out their windows splattering onto our window once. One 4/20, while walking to class, I bumped into Bauer, who asked me if I was going to celebrate on Farrand Field, I had attended a previous year, but that year I decided to go to Class: “Nutrition for Health and Performance” we watched a video about Monsanto, and seed distribution. I eventually made straight As one semester, was on Deans Lists a few times, and because I enjoyed writing got an A in Sex Gender and Society, we were given bowls of free condoms, and I took a handful, just in case, decided to switch majors to Sociology, because I performed better on exams in which I could write out the answer, rather than select multiple choice options for a Psychology Major I took up to statistics, but only got Bs in, I at one point had a 3.8 in Sociology, was President of the Honors Society I think, I ran, I don’t think anyone else ran, so I got the position, participated on Wardenburg’s Health Board, a voting member, and was 1 of 10 selected from the top of my class of 300+ students, to be a Teacher’s Assistant one semester, we wrote the exam questions, and graded blue books, I graded three 30 people classes worth of exams, that’s 3 blue books per student, we made the grading criteria for points. It was a Criminology Course “Deviance in US Society” my professor with real world experience doing Sociology research, once spoke about raising a family, telling her son "Alive at 25," she would laugh a lot, we were required to teach one lesson, dressing up as different types of call girls, all the fancy roles were taken, and I was left with “Sex Slave” and bought a dress at Goodwill, and made a black eye on my face, and stood up on the desk in front of 300 people.

Life Isn't Perfect ...

Listen not all of us grew up with parents from NY with an innate ability to talk forever, that's a genetic trait, having good memory, a good sense of direction, solid focus, and an ability to withstand pressure, and to be the best at everything you set your mind to, not all of us are capable of shining in that way, a record holder 12 pull-ups in 2nd Grade, and record holder 50 sit-ups in 1 minute, and the fastest time in the Shuttle Run, that's moving two blocks one by one to the other side and back timed. That was me growing up, I took gymnastics, able to do a backwalkover on the balance beam and once scouted at the gym to audition for the movie Corina Corina as a child and took dance lessons, before that ill fated night 1994. Life as you know it may change, sometimes forever, and even with fewer opportunities, less money, and even if you have to start over in life, suffer on the basis of your connections in life be associated to, you have to keep going in life, this happens to many people, not just those in my immediate surroundings, troopers at that, whoever thought that so much tragedy could occur in one neighborhood, it musn't all be about connections in life, or is it “tigertrail” reports the newscaster covering the fire locations and its precipitation through the hillside “beginning at the base of the 405 freeway.” I knew someone who lived on Tigertail, my first boyfriend (and I think Jim Carrey), we sat next to eachother in Kindergarten, Jordan Bahat (who left CU Boulder to attend USC to study Film, making the Movie: Jealous of the Birds, about the “Invisible War.”), he of course was covered in lipstick on Halloween in his Karate costume, I was a dressed as a princess with lipstick, how did that happen? In first grade, we used to do puzzles together during recess, I don't remember anyone else being around, the square puzzles, 9 cubes, with animal heads and bottoms on all four sides, you had to match up all the heads and bottoms of the animals to complete the puzzle, we were both selected to be in Mrs. Wynn's class, the advanced class, the class was split into two, taught by two teachers, Mrs. Tarvin was the other. For some reason every year I was a student, the teacher would get pregnant and have to leave and another teacher would take her place, that happened to me a couple times as a student at Carlthorp School. Before my Kindergarten entrance exam, I remember talking to my Brother, who was preparing me, telling me that they are going to ask you to build a tower with blocks, and yada yada, what else to look out for, I was admitted 1990, I turned 5 August 7, 1990, and graduated June 1997, I kept my navy “Class of 1997” t-shirt for awhile but its lost by now. In 5th Grade I had a crush on Andrew Sun, who later danced with my other friend, who I was best friends with in 3rd Grade, and think I later had a thing with Jordan Bahat, after playing truth or dare in his tree house with friends, dared to French kiss eachother, and we did so then spit out the windows to the tree house, I still have a Color Me Mine ceramic doggie bag painted yellow, with a dogs face on it, it came that way, with “Love, Jordan” on the bottom, he was a black belt by 4th Grade, I remember, I missed the 4th Grade see what next year will be like class where you get to go to the next grade the year before and sit in with the teacher meet them, I was instead asked to attend a meeting with the LAPD in the downstairs Library, in which they notified the class that there had been a homicide to a Mother of a Student at the School, and gave us information about how to begin to understand what had happened, as well as inform us of information unknown to them at the time, and then opened themselves up to questions, and rose my hand to ask “were there any signs of a struggle” based upon something my Mom had asked me, in talking to her, a question they could not respond to did not have the answer to, the day I found out, the day after the Murder, on time to school that day, my Brother, told me in the schoolyard, popcorn was being made that day, that “OJ Shot Nicole” Im sure that is something my Mom probably told him, my Mom was supposed to go running with her the morning she passed and was first to the scene, was the one with a key who opened the door for the police. -As my best friend Harry Morgan said “You and Katie were the two hottest girls in the class,” Katie, held the mile run record, and taught me how to do a backwalkover, and owned a Molly Doll, we all played with, and pretend kissed eachother hands over our mouths as little girls I remember, I wanted one, but my Mom said they were too expensive. -If people know you're story and its not a in a professionally published book, like anything valuable, with accept it as their own, and then treat you as though you don't belong, like its not your own take on events, youre own memories, and as shared, others take ownership over interests, and devalue you the person who has provided information, treat as secondary or unimportant, is so insulting I was first to speak to SCOTUS, because I am from a story, I know a little about what happened in the news, a little about what happened before the news, a little about what happened later as told about others, and given my movies and music connection is what others thought was the reason for me speaking to the courts trying to justify a crime as though done so on my behalf, as though I ever expressed any complaint about any finished products portraying what life was like at the time, or ever read too much into a “highlighter” scene as being about the “Deposition” from a real trial, with a Jewish Attorney, like Shapiro, and ever think that the “highlighted” portion being referenced to was when the children were named.

Rescue Mission ...

The pit of impending doom, another rescue mission, huh? A pretty fable “Movie: Pretty Woman,” I suppose running for years everyday at night, and losing 50 lbs, made me a pretty Shitty detective, should have listened instead to my fears of the dark not faced my fears head on, that was counterintuitive. What is brave? The longer you prolong the process of recovery from whatever wrongs occurred while under the influence of drugs, alcohol, or friends, the more you look like a sell-out, avoiding subjects in life, by keeping stories or insights to yourself, upon realizing anything in life, mark that moment in time, and be sure to share your recollections later on in life, to remind yourself, of how far you’ve come, absent minded acquiring fears in life regarding your privacy interests, whether or not anything was about you to begin with, or whether your private spaces were seen, that influenced the decision making of others, to build, create, or make apparent any issues viewed upon meeting you or learning about your identity in life, sometimes we don’t see things until we know people, and sometimes we don’t learn things in life, until we get to know someone else’s story in life, that is the benefit of meeting people, like a window open, to another way of life, different than yours own, some will always be better off in those respects, not faced with the types of challenges you may encounter being yourself, finding love, going through breakups, being written about, made famous behind your back, spoken about behind your back, or seen as stupid by anyone talking to you, who doesn’t think that you’re special, or beneath them in life, how should we treat each other, and still maintain esteem in life? As a general rule one should always be nice to one another, no matter who they are or where they come from, and no matter what is said about anyone, known about them, treat them as humanly possible as normal, without being instinctively critical of them pointing out to the what is wrong with them, or outright rejecting them from your life, as not good enough, disappointing, or not well. It used to be the case that when people are not well they remove themselves from equations in life, that’s a natural reaction to anything that has gone wrong, been brought to their attentions as being of issue, or to avoid being affected by the issues of others, separate themselves from the lives of others, and keep things to themselves, that’s normal, to need alone time to recharge, think about life, excel, perform well, stay focused, and not fall apart loving others, or while trying to be social let loose and not be taken seriously in life, your memories stay with you forever, how do you want to remember your life, in the positive we hope, the more proud of yourself you can be the better you will fair later on in life, the more regrets you have piled up for yourself, the more difficult life may become, as imperfect, or easily subjected to reliving the same mistakes in life, if you have not matured and become a better decision maker, lose opportunities in life, as unsure of yourself, not wholly confident to take steps in life, to grow, change, or face challenges in life, that includes any rejections imposed onto you, while reaching out to others, that’s a risk you take, upon loving someone, who loves themselves, or who already has love in life. -Its hard to attract for yourself in life, things or opportunities or people if you first do not have the skills, mental health, or education, to prove your potentials in life, offer something to someone (intelligences) that they have yet been able to put into words, that’s what you as a writer, have to offer the reader, insights, not readily available to them, or already put into words for them, that is your reading of your reality, if impressed upon another, brings to light better insights for them, better judgments, and stronger beliefs in themselves, well then you’re doing a good job as a writer, sharing intelligences that sit well, within the scope of normal feelings and thoughts, and don’t sit outside the scope of what is a socially acceptable reaction to life experiences, no matter how hurtful the consequences of misjudgment have been, to you or anyone, who has been punished in life, nothings permanent, including self-love, confidence, self-esteem, physical health, and mental health, anything put together well, can deteriorate overtime, if you do not take good care of yourself, how a once positive impression of you gets lost, among, if you fall sick, as others improve, we cant all be doctors, and rise above all controversies in life, and not take personally, when we have yet to be included among the well, in the workforce, whos fault is that then, when someone is not included to participate in life among the well, who is responsible for those conclusions made about them, as though they knew they were being preyed upon for insights, and upon being preyed upon are now hereby responsible for any circumstances that ran afoul for anyone else, who we assume to have been in kind spirits referenced upon others living life, and cheering them on from a far, as though they adequately represented the whole purpose of what living life was about, excelling, being confident, naturally making friends wherever they went, dating, breaking up, moving on, being experimental, having friends, losing friends, going to rehab, graduating, moving home, dating getting into law school, how difficult is life anyways, no one really has it better than anyone else in life, no matter where they start or where they begin to shine, realize their potential, lets not discount them completely because they were not in any leadership positions creatively, to establish a clear pathway in the public arena to be known and to be known for what, besides their connections in life, that's not giving someone a choice, to call them out on things known about them reading their private steps to themselves, to delay their positive progress in life, so that their lives turn out for the worst, how do you expect someone to continue living life, without a job, without friends, without a boyfriend, seems difficult right,? That's why I blog.

Snap, Crackle, Rarr ...

Not too thrilled aren't we all, are we there yet? That moment of peace, that someone seems to always F up, for the betterment of whom, usually to cause disbelief in what is occurring now, to make themselves feel of significance, to countering any pleasantries occurring for whomever is doing well in life, has defied the obstacles standing in their way, and achieved success beyond measure, there has been no other time period in the history of mankind, when the best of the best have shined so bright, and where the times have delivered so much inspiration for the betterment of all to be consumed by, that is how the successes of others naturally better all those around them, that's a basic science, upon doing well everything feeling well around you, contributing to that wellness, via your presence, hardwork and effort (focus on self), and knowing that when you are not feeling well, that it should have nothing to do with anyone else, to fix yourself, and accept all feelings as a manifestation of your doing in life, mindful of the energy you put out into the world, the choices you make, become a product you can be proud of, live your life, absent minded any fears overhead, self-doubts, and misinterpretations about you, its not until youre up, that what has worked for you becomes of value to others trying to achieve the same, become a leader in terms of insights, and upon which things you have focused on in life to bring you to your moment, of peace or success, that is how one who is successful becomes interesting to speak to, asked questions about the inner workings of the decisions they have made in the past, as reflective of the success they have come to find in life, not all are so willing to share, their methodologies in life, coming to be, not all things built well, start off with a coherent understanding of larger principles backboning more solid systems of support in life, and if you decide to create something in support of others, then do so in an organized fashion, keeping track of your progress along the way, everything you've learned, everything you thought, everything that changed, everything that went wrong, everything you felt, everything that mattered, everything that scared you, everything you wondered about, everything you got turned off by, everything that hurt, everything you've seen, everything you remember, everything you loved, everything you watched, and everything you were influenced by. Just like we are to be discredited in life, by anyone or anything who has done a better job at self expression in a public arena, more professional, more palatable to the tastes of all, presentation wise, will always make the difference between those who get paid, and those who do not get paid for their work product, this is why people become professional, you can only have fun for so long doing what you love, while learning, before you decide, to apply for jobs, and take on more responsibilities in life, representing others, who are able to turn a profit, doing work for others, and because of their learned expertise, able to provide a service back to whomever pays for their services, be represented, and adequately assist them when it comes to a service they need in life, which they have chosen you to provide for them, assurances that you will be able to accomplish the task that has been given to you, in exchange for the payment provided to you, that's being of service in a professional way, as documented by money. -Everyone is entitled to promoting whatever organizations they think are doing a good job of addressing the issues, specifically, but never was it my intent, to overpromote those interests, and be seen as a poor representative member to an organization that combats those types of acts and misuses of weaponry, make no promises you cant keep is a popular expression for those who disappoint or do not live up to expectation, all talk and no gusto, like blowing hot air, as though a fight is about to erupt, put down as someone partaking in a fight, to be known, or someone as attached, trying to do the right thing, and take the side, of everyone against gun violence, that was the right idea, everyone has dreams in life, no one ever claims to be the dream themselves to categorize everything said as important on a should be inspirational list of things to say during a time of need in remembrance of those who have passed, leave that up to the professionals, whos use of the English language most accurately reflects the issues facing us at the time, and doesn't cause us pain to remember or think about, that would be reading into things too much, to assume someone who is taking a side different to the side they were on growing up, as though they were trying to look like a good person, no, only someone who is a good person, has the patience to help others, without being affected by what they are going through listen, and make people feel better, and speak until they reach a moment of clarity, and able to get off the phone, and confidently assist and manage the moods and thoughts of those in need, that was a task to which was recommended to me to take on get certified as a crisis hotline counselor, some of us have a knack for making people feel better about themselves or advising them of the right things to focus on, or say the right things to make better, any moment of fear or doubt, be directed toward the right resources in life for coping with their present disabilities in life, whether that be mental health issues, feeling victimized, scared, or all of the above helpless, or suicidal ... I was privileged to be exposed to two ways of looking at life, from the inside of an attacked image defensive to all, from the standpoint of insecure, been around those over-confident and going in life busy, and from the standpoint of those responsible for providing services to those in need, and the time consuming process of logging, data entry, follow-up, filing, correspondence, writing, interviewing, and managing case loads. That's just how I was raised professionally, to keep track of everything, and to take good notes, that doesn't mean I'm headed somewhere with that information, or have a specific direction in life, that is personally motivated, to bring about a different set of results others than the results I was trained to help provide for in life, -if you only know how to better others, why treat someone who others have benefited from, as though they are doing so, for notoriety, as though their purpose online, doesn't serve a positive function, to all as a whole, be unaffected by, how things are done, why things are done, who is protected, why people are protected, and why someone was sued and excluded from receiving protections in life attacked for 5 years, that is beyond me, I'm a shy person, I'm not aggressive socially, I don't hug, all men who have dated me approached me mostly, pursued me upon speaking with me, never someone who has been off putting, made others uncomfortable, been an embarrassment, or been inappropriate in any public setting, always in control of my emotions, express myself and my needs well, and never put up with other people's attitudes in life, but usually attacked if I'm never not strong, that's just how life is, if you can't fix a problem, and you are not deemed a strong representative of others, able to withstand negative judgements in life, you will be treated harshly as not doing what you are supposed to do, if it's not done well why failing, no I always do my best and sometimes my best is not good enough, I was raised never to complain, and never to play victim, however it's only until you get sick and hospitalized over and over again, that you take a stand in life, and say to yourself, I'm not going to put up with negative commentary, and speak.

When Love Comes Around ...

We won't all be in the same places in life, and that's to our benefit ... sometimes the higher you climb the harder you fall, learn to live for the moment and to appreciate those you love for where they are in life, even if they're flying at a higher altitude than you, as much as it pains you to fit into their world, I'm sure it pains them to see someone with so much potential, not make it in life, given their story, not have been able to achieve in spite of what transpired in the past. You can keep going, and then you can keep going, and then you can keep going and be well known and become famous, there are several requirements in order to be treated with respect, I don't think being approachable is a quality of strength, but only subjects you to harm, people taking your story and making it their own, that's the price you pay for not being mainstream at the get go, others thinking to come up by putting you down in life, or treating you as a disappointment, as though you were supposed to rise to some occasion in life and shine, it's not until you do shine, that the voices quiet, everyone trying to hold you down in life, everyone treating your interests as secondary to their own, and everyone misusing your kindness. You'll never be important until you make yourself important, and if you are important, you won't be able to continue being a person of importance by doing nothing with your life, that's not how one gets noticed or respected in society, simply because of who they are or because of who they were friends with. I have been blogging online for many years now off and on, in spite of my personal issues, have managed to continue writing, in private, and finally present myself in a professional way, by website, that took many years of hardwork, to be presentable and to be able to share in a way to which all can relate, offending no one's journey in life, and not making light of my own experiences, take seriously life, and who I choose to include in my life story. I'm not just another story, and my experiences in life have been real, whether concluded to be a manifestation of some bipolar delusion in life, to me, all those feelings were real, and my experiences in life have been real. You are what you remember, you can either choose to bring out the best in everyone, or to share experiences in which you have struggled in life, and bring out your own pain and dissatisfactions in life, making it more difficult for others to connect with you on a one on one basis, the happier you are with yourself, the happier you will be. Look on the bright side, had you not written online, you would have not been able to meet people online and have conversations with people in private, who hold high positions in society as professionals, not worth a listen. That's a good sign, after all we are all only just human, shouldn't we all feel special? When is it time to stop putting people down in life and treat them as though they are nobody, and insignificant in the grand scheme of things, its not for those reasons I chose to be important, to be of significance, or to be misused or responded to, as though I am opening a can of worms in history, or presently, others know little or nothing about, mental health issues associated with being a victim of homicide, and love and trust issues, intimidation, shyness, and difficulty feeling confident around others, that I'll never understand about myself, just learn to be nice to people no matter what their disposition is, and never put someone down in life, who has lived a difficult life psychologically as they are always doing their best to blend in and get along well with others, should never be defamed. Once you close up in life, its hard to open back up, that's the main lesson, you can only handle so much heartbreak in life, before you yourself become broken, that's a feeling that is really hard to fix, being in pain, suffering from mental health issues, and trying to live a normal life, irrespective of what others think, no I don't think hitting my head is the correct response to hearing voices, or being intimidated by others, and no I don't think that their needs are more important than my own, I have done no harm writing online, worse than what was done to my image, if anything I am trying to better myself by writing online, and hopefully to the benefit of all, that's not a selfish endeavor, that's making sure others likewise are not subjected to the same harsh scrutiny I was subjected to in life, made suicidal bc one person did not accept me into their life, everyone else I have gotten along with and upon knowing me, loved me anyways. As a result everyone turned on me and ridiculed me, that was a first, it because I grew up at OJ's house, best friends with Sydney Simpson, then treated like I was coming up to be famous.

Life Isn't Easy ...

Seldom do we think to stop and smell the roses, no one ever thinks to maintain controls, until one have been privied to positions in life, upon which one bears controls over the outputs and systems of support provided to those within a system of care that seeks to provide an output, befitting and symbolic (with reference backward) that enable those cares to follow through unto those whos care is given to. Do your best, what does that mean? It means in spite of what you have been given in life, opportunity, education, chances, you continue to live life, without respect for what others have, feel less than, if upon viewing what others have in life, you feel small, or downtrodden, less than your usual self, its that backwards feeling, that keeps you generally within the realm and scope of your abilities in life, its hard to traverse upon multiple terrains in life, unless you have mastered the excellency within any one profession, or life skill such as making friends, holding jobs, and then there is mental health? The arena of mental health concerns are much presently to do with, who are declared victims, who are declared offenders to the best interests of others sued "CIVILLY," for the purposes of obtaining a better standing and hand at life, as compared to the other, situate the other side worse off, to the betterment of the other side, established by a set of rights and wrongs defined, on paper, in public light, to cast someone as unprofessional or based upon their outputs (or connections in life, not taken into account, or in my Father's case mentioned in court) to win or lose a case. Its upon losing in a case civilly that "ORDERS" are made, and any actions, post "DECISION" of a court to which you "MUST ATTEND" if not, a "DEFAULT JUDGMENT" is entered without you or an "ATTORNEY" present to debate the matter and "ARGUE FACTS" counter to what was stated on paper, as the "TRUTH." Being Judged in the Negative ...

4/11/2020

The worst is being judged in the negative, for what reasons you ever feel inspired or change, and for whom your admiration is given to, like we are expected when lost to lean on one another for answers, and be looked upon, as though we have the answer or the solution to the problems beared by those who are unsettled, not yet found, and not in a good place in life. Its only upon doing better in life, that things start to turn around for you, whether in love or alone like me, without love, you have to climb many staircases in life, of self-acceptance, to see through all the dirt, and all the taunting, and see the bigger picture and where you fit in with their feelings in mind, not present a new face and outlook of what life is like, post punishment, as though to benefit those who hurt you, give any credit to anyone now in support of you, coming to be, earning a dollar, or maintaining monogamy for marriage, there is only so much defamation and disappointment others can handle before you completely let go, of trying hard for people, and start trying hard for yourself, that quality about you, some will never come to understand, going out of your way, to ensure everyone is well, and doesn't have to go through the same feelings you went through upon being lost and misguided in life, turning to drug, alcohol, or men to pass the time. How you pass the time, is how you will be judged, as whether you make good use of your time (studied for 5 hours a day in the library), whether you did your best (got into two law schools), whether you are presentable in public (not brainstorming talking to yourself), whether as recorded in private (you say the right things), how on point you are deductions wise as to who is causing you harm and who is not (that you learn overtime, to let go more, and be less assuming about others intentions in life, as directed toward you, maybe just trying to help you or not help you and point others in the right direction, toward you or away from you in life, as not a valuable source of information, intellect, trash you). -Who is important and why? Some people think they are so important, that they do the opposite of me, going out of my way to make sure everything is okay, and go out of their way, to make life more difficult for you, sabotaging you, embarrassing you, situating things so as mentioned or talked about brings to light or addresses other things to be thought about in reference to you. Self-harm is not selfishness, it's a product of being told something by voice, thought about you, to make you not like yourself, and because you cannot be liked wholly, and be yourself, loved unconditionally, and tainted by the negative responses of others, cannot do your best and fail.

What is "Common Knowledge"? ...

Always keep one thing in mind as a writer or creator, you can't please them all. (Without inferred reference to our bridge being tagged with a "PLZ"). Whatever that meant, saw it on my way back from work many times, before I talked about it, and it was taken down. On the new bridge over Wilshire. Things not to think too much about, unless its in your face everyday, then you speak about it, Im not sure what it brought up for me, my friend while living in Santa Monica, who lived in Studio City, was friends with professional street artists and even made stickers of street art, and stuck one to a pole, after we ate at Qdoba, had burritos, he likes the smoked hot sauce, and I like the green hot sauce. -Things don't become about you, until you share stories, which have the potential to be referenced to over and over again, until they no longer have the power to cause changes in your attitude toward life, some adjustments, work to our detriment to be paid attention to, just like moments in time, people, how does memory work? For everything that you find important upon reviewing a work by someone, something stands out, and is remembered sometimes not in the immediate known, but a later exposure to some later reference can cause memory of a previous knowing of information, the time scale for forgetting someone whether by photographic memory, or upon reading, depends upon how positive you are, how easily you are able to read, and no matter what hits you subconsciously, able to process the present in a way, that does not reflect those subconscious fears, Ive once said that you "walk through" images, memories, feelings, beliefs, and to place "before yourself" what you envision for yourself to be, and just like positive things can happen to you, so can the negative depending upon what your focusing on "focal points" of reference, its important to always see the good in others, and to always see the positive no matter what situations you encounter in life, as you will be viewed depending upon whether someone thinks you are in a position of leadership online "new" or a follower "commentator" or unique "original." -Take that into account, that we all arrive at different points in our lives, when we want to know more about, where we come from, look back upon where we have been, and try to better ourselves, in appreciation for our lives we have lived, and with respect for the lives of others be human. Sometimes its upon complaining about odd behavior, that we become so uptight, that we allow nothing to slide, it's a slippery slope once you stop complaining, and then as observed allow things to happen, and say less, living a quiet life, not outspoken, and try to shelter yourself, or weather any storms overhead, decide when to participate, and when to let go focus on yourself. I was raised to be selfless, not to correct others, not to be critical of others, to always speak highly of oneself, and to represent self and others well, care about image, which I may not have always done a good job of, based upon my sex life judged as careless or living life to excess, I don't think that dating casually is safe, it makes you look really stupid, and as a result, you cannot date better, because you only get so far in life as you improve, keep that in mind.

Chapter 25 ... (edit) "to speak" ...

How the Story Sits ...

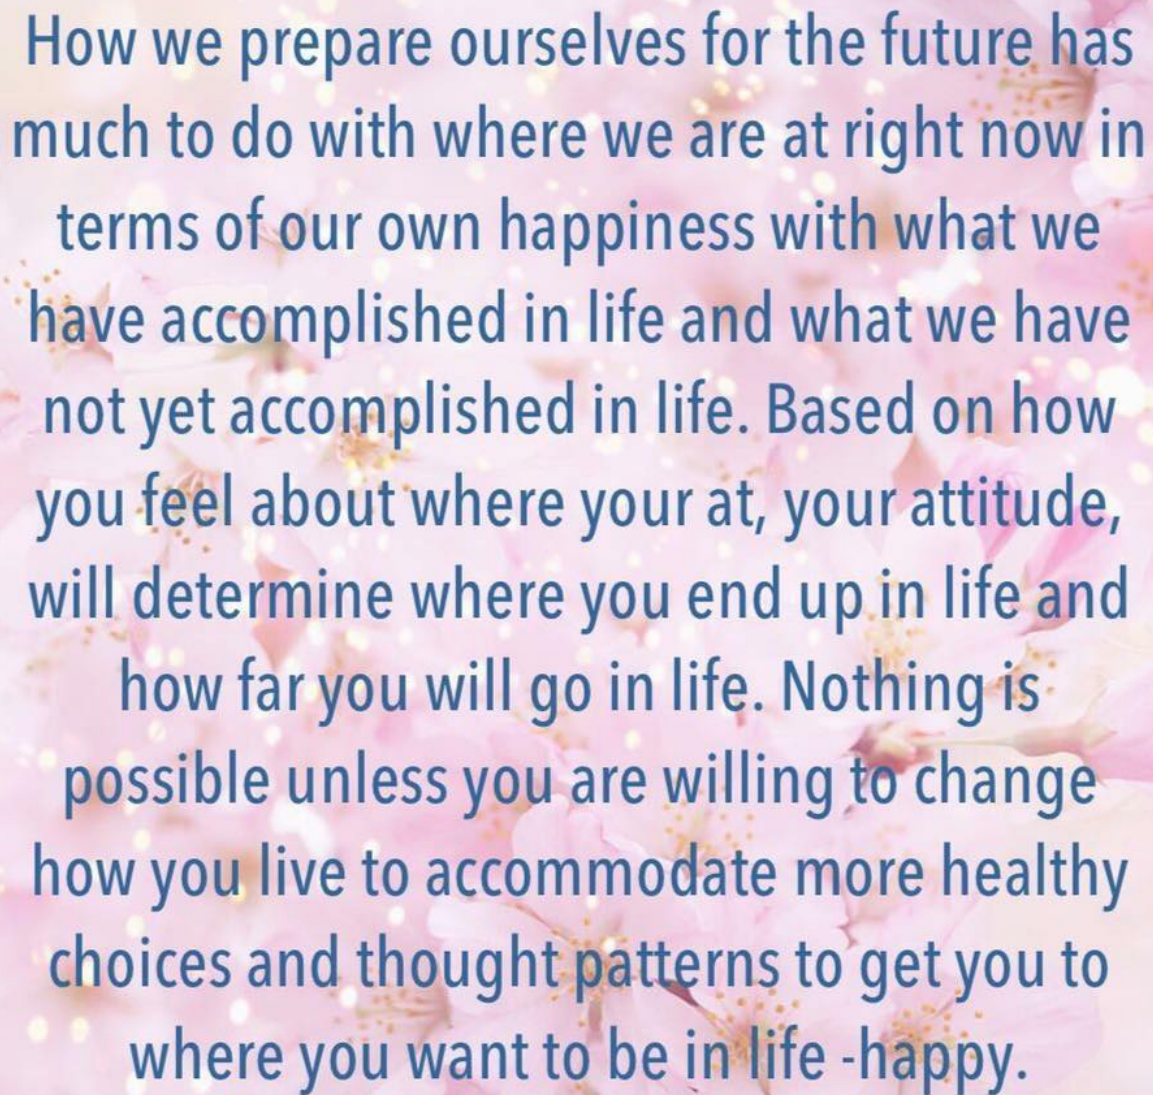

4/11/2020

How a story registers with you, based upon what you know, is different for everyone, and upon studying any one person, as applied, information known, meaning can be derived from the works of others, and wonder whether, they made business decisions or creative decisions, based upon the same information known about them, found in private. -One of the main goals of story telling, is to free the reader or the writer in my case, from perspectives limiting ones potential, as being someone without intellect, not special, and whos upbringing was not unique to them, devalue their experiences as secondary or tertiary, that is to question one upon being viewed by all, as attracting a huge mass of people, that is because one upon speaking is attractive to others, stands out, and is special, or unique, that should not deter others from their ability to tell their stories, whether in favor or to put someone at odds in life, are stories from the other side, of what lies within, there will always be people within a story, and not everyone will feel included, and what draws our attentions, to facts about life, or upon reading make sense of life better, is based upon what processes for us, sometimes as memorized people see things more clearly, that's the value of a good book, read through once slowly, and read through again faster, until it reads smoothly and fast, that's the type of book I want to write. Something that can be read applied to ones own life, and something as applied to the lives of others, or to their own life, brings about a better perspective for them and for the otherside. -Its upon not speaking what you have written gets taken and made use of as though you are someone on the bottom never coming up in life, as though you have no use for it, meaning your own work, that's how an original becomes devalued, as though its okay to continue to take from someone, as though they don't exist, if I exist, then my writings are of value to me, and if my insights are unique to me, then they will go into a book, written by me. -There will always be popular stories anecdotes, thoughts, wisdoms, shared over the years, that stick with us, and methodologies of understanding as applied, help us to make sense of our lives, and what we want to do moving forward to stay motivated and continue to help others, learn, and be a better person, sometimes hearing the stories of others helps us, and sometimes, you get devalued, upon sharing your story.

At a Time Like This ...

At a time like this, be compliant, more than six feet apart, would also require us to not gather round subjects past or present, that could result in more harm than good to are already tattered and withered psyche, concerning the status of our health, finances (job losses), and living in fear of our future stability, with the chaos of the time looming overhead, remind yourself that its not your fault, and that you can get through this! We all experience moments of pause, and careful reflection, that's life, we cannot always have action packed lives, be busy bees, socially, professionally, or romantically, a lot of processing occurs on your own, without help from others, live your life, as best you can, if therapy is only for an hour, than what do you plan to do, to make happen for yourself, as the issues get discussed, and what is needed from you, change wise, in order to begin building a better stronger you. Self-motivation, is what it takes, a desire to continue improving upon your best, and no matter what, never giving up, no matter how tough life gets, no matter how despondent and withdrawn you get, continue to make progress each day, sticking to your strengths, ignoring your weaknesses, until you become someone you yourself are proud of being and becoming, no one can visualize that for you, how to value yourself, be smart, efficient, make good use of your time, and be at your best, that's something you have to figure out for yourself in life, all change takes time. We cant be in two places at once, not physically, and not spiritually, not mentally, and not romantically, your heart can only withstand so many pressures and attentions in life, before one feels torn. Knowing that, selectively incorporate which ideas are helping you to achieve your goals in life, and learn to forget the rest, so much about being successful in life, is taking things with a grain of salt, not bearing resentments about the past, and not allowing your worst moments in life to dictate where you'll end up, who with, or affect who you become later on in life, respected or not. That's your choice to live in the past, collect what you must, remember what you may, but for the love of God, don't bring everyone down with you, because you don't understand concepts in life, requiring forgiveness, moving on, letting go, overcoming fear, and being strong.

How we prepare ourselves for the future has much to do with where we are at right now in terms of our own happiness with what we have accomplished in life and what we have not yet accomplished in life. Based on how you feel about where you are at, your attitude, will determine where you end up in life and how far you will go in life. Nothing is possible unless you are willing to change how you live to accommodate more healthy choices and thought patterns to get you to where you want to be in life -happy.

Wondering About Time ...

Great movie Hugo, I watched in theaters, but with no ending, just ended, that was odd? I really liked when they went inside the clock, it was really magically lighted, scenery in simple times, the industrial revolution, machines, man operated, delicate, important. Bridge of Spies was also beautifully lighted, an old city and snow, and a painter painting a portrait, I once quoted James Joyce in one of my personal statements, was required to read "A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man" did you just watch a YouTube of Joaquin Phoenix, ya, how cute was he dancing? Cute! He's still just a shy, sensitive in getting to know, open up, I should have been better prepared how to talk to someone famous established, be more cohesive and simple back, that was a very painful loss, to be very gone, and in disarray, singing to myself falling in love, but too scared to be hyper with him, and tell jokes as per usual, and be friendly in that way, bond, how to be mature, and put together, definitely not a good time to send photos of you now, if you're not at your best, that's a face full of discomfort to see someone throw themselves together, and be so non-chalant about their current thoughts, loud, tone it down! Molly, its like holding hands with Reverend Parazaider in the Valley, you pray before you talk, get centered, then share, Im sorry. -Its time for Passover dinner with Mom & Dad food from the Riv.

In a Nutshell: How to Compartmentalize the Past ...

It sometimes helps to keep a timeline of your own progress in life, whether by resume, or hospital records, milestones, new friendships, keep track, everything worth living for, is worth a look back, or how it should be, and as you reflect upon your past, distant past, and recent experiences in life, remember to be kind to yourself. Recovery is a process, it doesn't happen overnight, self-love, acceptance, forgiveness, overcoming fears, memories, hurtful words, feeling misunderstood, rationalizing with others (or hearing voices) over things heard hard to believe, and falling in love too quickly, or not good enough, establishing a bond or rapport worth keeping and maintaining for the long term, from the outset, are you emotionally current and available for interaction and sharing in a way, that shows you don't bear resentments toward others, have moved on, and not bottling up any emotions within that could cause you to gravitate toward some and not to others, what is that feeling of importance one holds, when they are so focused on themselves that nothing else seems to matter, the mind of an athlete. Compartmentalizing doesn't mean wrapping things up in summary, for opinions to be held toward events not directly involving the reader, but personal to an interactions participants, who upon being exposed to one anothers pain, may come to understand themselves in a more kind light, and feel a moment of quiet, that's having done a good job processing, letting out what needs to be said, and leaving up, whats important that has been said, everything else, is on your way to those moments of clarity, when you can again be yourself, step outside of yourself, and be present in the moment for others, and upon interacting with others, well enough to translate to a positive representation of who you are, normal and well adjusted, all other experiences of pain and suffering, or heartache are best kept to yourself, not share and by mention make things about others, deflecting your attentions away from helping yourself first, and instead feeling obligated to level the playing field with others, where leveling need not have been articulated to begin with, that results in pain to all sides, to have been mentioned, as though one intends to highlight any negative inferences to be made about someone unrelated to them, trust your sources, and don't read into things, as applied to you, make personal the stories of others, having known them, some people adjust on their own good timing, and after being away from everyone on your own living alone (2004 to 2017) re-entry to any social settings may disrupt ones progress, always relapsing drinking or doing drugs and ending up in hospitals or rehabs in recovery and without love or love not fully returned whole heartedly with confidence in me, my Ex once told me "you were never well" well that's partly true, I got a dream job working in Dependency Court a law clerk to two attorneys managing 200 caseloads per attorney, split my day in half to work at both offices two separate campuses, drive by car to another building, and sit in court every morning at 8am to hear cases, and prep clients, even when the attorney was not present that day, make calls and carry on the day in her place. She was pregnant with twins, I asked her if it was okay to date someone from work asked me out she said sure, why not, her husband was a corporate attorney and she held three jobs, while finishing her law degree at Southwestern, hard on me, finish the motion now, there in one sitting wrote a motion, if she didn't tell me to get it done, I would have not gotten it done in one sitting taken my time, I think I once made a table for one client, a timeline of her life, to condense all the important information needed to write a motion, to keep them out of the juvenile court system and to keep them under our care. -As you grow up you mature, and when hired expected to work, your love life may not always be perfect, the wrong catches catch you when you are without love, and as confident, easily too giving or give attentions to who is around, that's okay, be forgiving of yourself, its just not something you talk about, dating a 48 year old when your 24, and going on a date because he keeps begging you, if you love the conversations, but feel like hes too old for you, you will know until physical contact, its not love, its that he needs love, best to be in love with people who can love you completely, not those with everything fancy wife ex VP of HR at NBC Universal, soccer girl daughters, and an important job for a well known Bank, he still texts, I was never a what can you do for me type of person ever. -I think all experiences managing the trusts and confidences of others is a good experience, even if you did cocaine in the bathroom at Villa Blanca, passed a gram, bumped into an old friend from High School at a table outside who approached you, eating a chop salad with your head in cell phone date, and then stepping outside for a smoke, meet the chef, who gives you free cake. That was shocking to be in the middle of a private encounter, not expect to bump into anyone you know, how embarrassing, like that was your per usual, after studying in the library Legal Research, took a course that summer too, advised against to work and take a summer courseload.

With Love and Appreciation ...

In hearing where you are coming from in life, don't be surprised if others, don't lend a kind ear and instead review you expecting failure, happy when not polished presentable, and thinking you ever wasted time, thinking about life, in order to begin writing, Im an academician, no one ever explained how to free write, and based upon your own thoughts, come to be professionally, there are no directions for that, becoming popular, being well liked, and based upon your exposures in life, carry on in public in a like minded fashion to the days when you were well liked, and popular and had many friends, some only reminded of few exposures to you when alone, and being uncharasmatically lost, in a charades nothing to do about you, that is what they are trying to prove, whether what is known now was known then, no, only now upon sharing first my life, then you review other works by others, and then you share new work, that's a normal course of human development, to share first from within, and only later after reviewing all works exposed to, how you've been influenced and whether at any time anything was ever about you intended to reference you or your life as lived, discount you, highlight you, or reference you, as a person of importance, for later reflections once everyone is grown up, and we have all moved forward in life, based upon where we are now, look back and be proud of all the pointers, and role models suggested to us, for how to behave in public, and what life in private school or the westside was like at the time, uniform our experiences as not unique but a later adolescence to shape us all, usually a solid work product is produced and so it follows reality follows, that's laying groundwork for a different take upon a select few, as people to be idolized, or people to disregard not take seriously, there are different approaches to developing stories, and stories about, and responding to the times, beyond the scope of what a normal child understands or even thinks to be of issue, their surroundings, upbringing.

Anyone Whos Hardworking Knows ...

We all may live different lives, and at different points in our lives, believe that any set of statements, means that someone bears guilt, and that because they bear guilt, or look guilty, or not confident, are fair game for attack. We don't all represent ourselves well, in times of controversy most of us lay low, not respond to those who do not believe in them. That's how one gets drawn into controversies, responding to the issues of others, and then upon so stating becoming personally attached, as having stated their thoughts upon an issue, that's a knowledgeable point at which one responds to a specific incident, and then that incident becomes personalized as having responded to it. - Whats hurtful is to have been punished a "misdemeanor" for 3 drinks and driving a suspected DUI, and having done hundreds of hours of community service and did time served to makeup for the community service hours leftover, that's in the privacy of my life, a point in which I struggled professionally, and drank, and dated, and as a result, suffered from mental health issues, meaning not able to take good care of myself, finish my studies, as a result of relapsing with an Ex on cocaine in Westwood, we were both sober, and dated for a year, its only upon mentioning others, that sides get built towards you as having mentioned someone, and thats very painful, for others to read, and to no empathize with all the pain that you have endured lost, or in harms way, managed to survive, without love in your life, alone, with everyone being hard on you until you achieve in life, a better disposition suited, to have people around you in your life, not the scapegoat, not to blame, not made to be titled a person most knowledgeable of the game past by a few references, and not to claim as though everything has been a fight over what or who things are about, and who best represents the best interests of all as though we are competing with one another in life, by upbringing, at what point do you share success, at what point do you back off and handle personal matters, at what point, do others become so convinced you were the reject without a good idea, and rightfully so rejected as a bad seed or bad connection because of who you are, because of how you communicate, because you take things personally, because youre sensitive, and because without any connections in life, you have managed to get jobs on your own, keep in touch with friends over the years, be invited to weddings, and a bridesmaid to one. Once you leave relationships its hard to go back this you learn the hard way, just be accepting of people during their different phases in life, and not take personally when someone is not able to communicate clearly, Im sure everyone on my Facebook is proud of me now with 3000 likes per post, after 8 years of action planning, every 6 months, oversharing my progress.

Hollywood Dreams (poem) ...

March tides and spotlights grew
And never stopped thinking of you
Follow your heart, and find what youre looking for
If its not love, then sing your heart out
So loud a trolly gone, so hard, my rhinestones fell
You cant go back not even from that, so why not a song
And as we put our glasses on, we sat and thank
In taverns, and green rooms, and even on shark islands
What to do what to do, when no one knows you
I pitched tree fruit at a tree, with a photo of my face taped up
Why couldn't it be this why, why did it end that way
And so I drank, whiskey, and moonlight, and my glasses fell
To the bottom of the pool, and then I jumped in
If you cant make it there, you wont make it there
And if you cant be here, then don't go there
Live life, whether together even or apart
Youll be thankful to never stop and sink to the bottom
Before your story unfolds, don't be afraid to sing
The loudest tune, to all you know, and be true
How many may agree, and find simplicity among they
Who understand your voice, not alone afterall
Maybe it was he, or maybe it was he, or maybe it was she
No one knows, how these things have come to be
And whats done in company is never forgotten
Whats done alone, is never remembered but for reminders
Directions to self, where to start and where to begin
A home office dream for me not them
And then we met, broken, bought, everything but hot to trot
A year later couldnt even choreograph an ending to that
Smile and be positive, is what we need, recommended
A birth certificate handed, and attorney retained
From another case, not forgotten, why a mini mouse appeared
Can we just stand, no, can we just march, no, can we write, only in 5 years
Why is that, why is this, what was that, why is this, why now
And then I sang star bangled and the pledge, has not been forgotten
The only three prayers I know, raised well, not spoiled rotten
And when the stories collide, an image never forgotten
The times spent in disarray, the size that never seemed to budge
And the pounds that got lost, never seemed to shine
Only two photographs taken a flip phone and punishment
Photographs taken, upon request, commissioned, for him not they
And what has been forsaken, all energies spent, and troubled
Like poison, and collar broken, a 5th grade tire swing sang
For attentions broken, not for pain, and not for this broken
Whos losses add, another image torn
Like crowns and steeples and flying buttresses to a tshirt
One from a bar, a high school French drink with a bottom

New to Blogging Online ...

As you come to understand the fundamentals of blogging online, and grasp the subjects concerning bloggers at any given moment in time, you will either outgrow the prospects for blogging in the first place, and seek other refuge for your thoughts and manner of self-expression, some picking more professional presentations of finished work products, applying for jobs in the realm of the performing arts, and screenplay writing, and some will prefer to just share their story, not for mass production, or to be utilized by others for professional use, that's a choice you make, upon sharing online, your work at the disposal of the best interests of others, and no matter what your timeline looks like, with the ability to be mismanaged or used for other purposes other than you originally intended, to be casted in a positive light, or to eventually share a crowning moment of achievement, past, or recall a story presently you once mentioned, with a photo to capitalize on that story recalling in hindsight and add meaning to your original prose. Its not for those reasons that stories are not told, maybe along the way, people got lost, focusing in school, or on professional endeavors, and lost track of their social skills in the process of focusing on themselves that happens, and much to boot, lost a lot of footage on the way to discovering themselves, which we in our 30s have had to later make up for, not taking too many photos growing up except by parents, and later barely maintained copies of photos ourselves, from our lives, the way we remembered it to be. Without proof of your social skills past, and photos with friends handy, how would anyone really know you were ever popular, and to see what life you left behind, upon going to college and then law school, I had friends who were neighbors and with jobs, I was a sophomore, 19 years old, and just joined Facebook, I never really thought twice about the use of my likeness ever being used for bigger story tellings, or for there to be controversy over my identity, I guess to them was supposed to be important, and for me to come full circle professionally, and become a lawyer as I had started studying to be 2006, my Junior year, taking LSAT classes in Boulder, Colorado. -I think the worst feeling is having kept many private records, of what is leftover, your present, and while piecemealing together your present life, and what you now know to be your life, having been read in private, without your approvals, other viewing your life as it was being lived, and in disapproval of your appearance, as not befitting of a princess or of someone to be held in high standing, professionally, or romantically, that really hurts. Always presentable ... Im not sure at what point that became an issue, aging is a process, make sure to keep your valuables with you at all times, upon growing up, and in passing maintain positive rapport with all those who have come to know you online, as you might even get the chance to meet them in person one day, if they have not already passed you by in life, or left life all together, be important, but by all means, never interfere with the significance of others life experiences, I think its not until you on your own are important, do the rumors about you whether true or not settle down, and not until you are important, is your history, and recent professional past, put into question, as to whether you have done a thorough job or not providing insights and opinions to others, that not only serve to explain your own boundaries in life, and heartaches, but also express the grievances others may have had, not trusting you to get involved in such serious endeavors in life, such as responding to issues, facing addicts and alcoholics, failures, and those doused with promiscuity at one point in their lives, and losing faith in themselves and others, for better or worse. We all understand marriage, but I don't think all relationships are supposed to have such a divested interest in them, from a professional standpoint, to keep a private life private, so that in the event of controversy, one can set aside their personal interests to perform for the better good of all, and given the totality of the circumstances need not worry about image, or whos image has been harmed, in the process of understanding and valuing who is good and to be trusted. There should be no virtual turning of the tides, so to speak, or ring handler of trusts, or attentions, that would just be riding on one anothers coattails in life, that happens with friends. That's not a valid point of discussion, how other friends have performed on social media, its mostly a pitch and banter of informations, youd have to be in the know to understand, or so I recall that much of how it was used back in the day. Im 34 now, its time to take a professional and methodical approach to social media, to understand how to be successful as a person, a story teller, a writer, an opinion sharer, a company, and a brand to brave the circumstances faced past, deal with what is thought of me now, and figure out life for myself, whether or not all are in agreement with me becoming a public speaker, and law student, it was encouraged for me to become a lawyer (which I will not be) and it was encouraged for me to “speak with my head up” not in my lap, which I was advised at one point as a speaker at a meeting I frequented, who knew how to light up? When one lights up at you. --- Thank you Lee Daniels!

If there was one algorithm or set of beliefs from which to base all inferences and thoughts moving forward, then we would all be successful philosophy wise, but that’s a plus to any business, to from the outset philosophy wise, we are palatable to the tastes of all. Perhaps my pen name, was not fully understood, misread to have inferred the acceptability of causing harm to others, as a womens studies "A" student, I would have inferred less excitement toward any member of the women’s movement, in favor of more jobs for women, and husbands to say the least, we have not all benefited in that way from speaking up, and were sorely misrepresented by an offender who spoke at one of the marches, recently freed, I think we could’ve done better than that representation wise, we are who mirrors us along the way, feminine role models, inherent to our basic decisions, and how we carry ourselves molded, those traits are what make us unique as women, not all the same, and certainly not all adequately represented by an offender to say the least -I didn’t attend that march stayed home, I wasn’t sure, it turns out it was a big turn out, many showed up from around the world, I wish we were more prepared at the podium to speak not only to what is current, but for the entirety of our existence speak, what being a woman means to us, something for all of us to think about. We don’t only just give love away freely, without expectation for a return of love, but we care instinctively for others, as those who have cared for us did, while we were growing up, so that we could be good decision makers and stay out of harms way, how can we bottle that up, and share those talents with the world in a way, to which all can mirror and reflect upon themselves and better suit themselves for a life they feel has been worth the wait, its happening in small doses, more and more women becoming successful, and in so doing, looked upon for tips, that’s where the business etiquette conversation comes into play. How much know how goes into being successful and how much of that is based upon our upbringing, learned traits inherited from women from our lives past, who we credit for our strength of character, and positive upbringing, to be the bearers of those traits moving forward and hand down to our loved ones (children) or to our friends, upon knowing us, be influenced by us, we will never know, how much of us is really us, and how much of us, is really others, the bottom line, is to remember that you are unique, you are loved, and you are special no matter who or what your influences in life have been, no matter what you’ve been taught, and no matter what you believe to be true about yourselves or others, no less human, than the next human. Its therefore no ones responsibility upon being watched, to have it written in stone exactly how they got to where they are now, who influenced them, we can keep track, but its never your responsibility to teach others how to be, behave, look, think, or compromise their best judgments and choices in life, to match any set of ideals, that aren’t in tune with what makes them happy in life, whether that be to include or not include others, to feel better than, or to resist the temptation of being known to many, and losing insights along the way, as more people are taken into consideration and more needs are to be met at the moment, lose sight of who they are, no bigger than the concerns they have, and only as big as the concerns they follow, and be reminded, to always put first what is important to you, before all else falls into place, that seems to be a basic premise for success, to do well, one must think well, and to think well one must be good, and to do good, one must adhere to a set of principles governing their decision making abilities, and that upon adherence to a standard set of beliefs, feel good about themselves, and no matter who tries to interfere with their better judgment about themselves or others, not be brought down in life, forced to admit to things they have not done wrong, to further interpretations of them benefiting from the victimization of others, if that were the case then I would not be successful as a place for insight and opinion, and had I not worked the jobs I got, not trusted as a person who inherently cares, and who as trained instinctively knows to report, get help, keep track, save everything, limit connections, maintain trust, be honest, be positive, be professional in private and public spaces, and do my best, at whatever I find doable, interesting, and worth while, including becoming a writer online, website, and blogger. You will never enter a new phase of development, until you are generally acceptable, to most, and you will not be able to turn a profit, until you are able to demonstrate a unique insight befitting to a book, and you will not be trusted to hold a public opinion to a public matter, until you can show that your story in it of itself, is unique to you, not impressed upon you by the experiences of others, and at no point fabricated, to fit the mold of any one ideal, character, disposition, or agenda, to better suit yourself among as a victim, to other peoples circumstances, and that you are a product of your own choices in life, strong on your own, without added reassurances from others, only with help in psychotherapeutic environments where thought sharing is allowed, which only until now, has become commonplace to share out loud ones thoughts. -We all feel in harms way, not all who benefit are at the top simultaneously connected to one another, remember that or else we'd all fall down in life, if one another were dependent upon the successes of others to find success for themselves, there will always be people walking into a situation who have the pleasure of looking around, and benefiting from the assembly of works produced, like myself, or a macbook. -That will never change, you have two choices upon beginning any business ventures in life, either all doors open for you, or as doors close, you become better, wiser, and more professional, as the taking continues, or what work has passed, and keep going in life, strong.

Knowing Less About ...

We've talked a lot about things that I have become very knowledgeable about given my own experiences having overcome traumas and setbacks, but now let talk about something I know less about, spokespeople, and people thinking its okay for them to come forward with an opinion towards you, as though they have the right to speak about subjects that don't involve them, its usually for those reasons that people find it easy to hold an opinion, when it does not directly affect them, however for others who are directly affected, less inclined to share qualifying factors or speak to subjects that they have no direct history of involvement, that is until now if business cards and a Truman Show movie joke count, as a point of attack. (I just shared my "OJ Stories" I was ranked 34,000 on Alexa without having mentioned any of my childhood memories, did so on my own). Then that's when we need answers why someone, who has developed a company on their own, and having shared from their own lives, would motivate someone in their own lives to cause harm to others, or to disappear, from which words, did that so shake someones core, as to rattle them to the extent of hurting a source or a provider of intelligences online, and get others to turn on them, that already happened, I got sued having come forward sharing my experiences in private, and based upon what I said then, was punished, probably because the delivery of information was not palatable to the tastes of all, and still left doors open, as to blames past, or current, that did not satisfy the conscious of those to whom were affected, by my cares at the time, to push forward and build a company, upon a pen name, and to support organizations I found, and thought based upon my own timelines of realizations, felt like would be a problem or is a problem, I felt I could fix, having been through those emotions myself: regrets, powerlessness, helplessness, overpowered, behind in life, not smart enough, down, ill, mentally ill, in the wrong, bipolar, or heartbroken.

What Makes a Hero? ...

We won't always be on time to all occasions, and we may not even report in time to prevent causes or circumstances from arising in the first place, but we do show up, hell or high water, and do our best to begin from where ever we start, that's what makes a hero. Not someone who dodges subjects, or fails to speak, not someone who speaks for without listening, not someone who leads others blindly, without remorse for the other sides, not someone who puts others at odds, to benefit themselves, and certainly not anyone who is ashamed of their past, or would set anyone else to unreasonable standards of professionalism. We can't all be perfect, the point being, when its time for you to shine, you do so, whether that takes years to accomplish, of schooling, and writing online, you do so, and when its time to explain your upbringing, and what makes you special, no offenses are taken and that information not misused to cause harm to others, that is the risk you take, for building timelines, and building a new rapport with an audience who has come to know and understand you, but doesn't understand why it took you so long to come forward and to be a character online, or public figure. If you can't afford to be a public figure it doesn't happen for you. It cost $700/month for several months to establish a company name and to pay for legal fees, and $250 every two weeks in psychiatry to keep quiet and be in control of my emotions, and $3000/course in law school to become educated enough to write without fear of what others have to say or think about me, be able to rise above all controversies, and not get sucked under any tides in life, and thousands of dollars to pay for editing fees to put together a finished product Im proud of but have yet to complete: a book. --- New Alexa Rank: 70,977 (Up w/New Pen Pals).

Over Before You Know It ...

Dressed in bright blue on national television, stood the President, oh no my #chanukahmonica joke, went worldwide, way'd it go, take responsibility for your hoers. Its about time. -You know that moment when youre ready to move forward, still haunted by your past, the other unwilling to let you go, feeling stuck, its happens to us all. With love comes responsibility, if the other has not done anything wrong, its hard to explain that you have fallen in love with someone else, or ready to move forward. A very stressful discomfort follows, sometimes even illness and self-harm, why now, you wonder. Why upon moving forward, do they become so unwilling to let you go, but when available, and so giving, they took you for granted. That's just life, we wont be around forever. So choose wisely, who you wish to include in your life, and who you wish to let go, who you wish to get to know more about, and who you decide to grow closer toward, we are only on this planet for a short while, why not make the most of our time on earth, and get to know more. It seems to me that its nice to have love around at your disposal, even when we are not available to be loved, or to return advances, that's a mutual connection you may feel toward anyone who is taken, just know your boundaries, and don't take it any further than they are willing to participate with. We all have our limits. Theres a point of being in love, and loving someone, and there are points of discomfort, a painful discomfort, knowing love, and not being able to experience love, because of something from our past preventing us, from being emotionally available, physically available, or heart centered on them, giving them our undivided attention, you'd like to think that they wouldn't be bothered by any of your attachments past, but its possible that they would be just as bothered as you, and that's how love doesn't happen, and the only one left in love being the original attachment, to whom you are no longer in love with, or who have grown past loving them. How important is someones love toward you, that is not reciprocated, eventually you have to let people move forward in life, if they are no longer in love with you, and allow them to admire someone else, this isn't marriage, one who admires is not required to stay in admiration of someone for all of eternity, the goal is to find those who we blend with best, understand us, and are so willing to get to know us, eventually, we all find our places in life, no matter how painful it may be, letting go, no matter how embarrassing it may be, falling in love, and no matter how hurtful it may be, being made fun of in the process of finding who to love best.

Personal Update ...

4/5/2020

Not feeling well. I think Ive disclosed a lot about whats been going on with me lately, and just don't want to subject me or others who Ive been in contact with to harm. It's a very sensitive subject to say the least, talking to others in private, you just have to be careful I guess. Given my time online, it makes sense that I have grown comfortable talking to others, but maybe to my detriment get attached, and sometimes fall in love, will learn how to pace myself not get too attached to people I meet along the way, and continue to be a positive outlet online. People are people. #behuman -Love is painful sometimes, especially when you love people you cannot be with ... probably going back to my Ex now. Be realistic! Come on Leslie. lol, I know. Whoever knew ... love him! xoxox

Opening Up ...

Its a beautiful moment when you are able to open up and be yourself around someone, sometimes we are unwilling to grow attached to anything that causes us pain, that's being afraid to try something new, or express yourself in a way, that would make you or others uncomfortable later on, to have known someone that personally, why its important to always know your limits, as a professional: writer, law student, paralegal, model, vlogger, blogger. Not all will see the beauty in you, that's just a fact of life, and there will always be interferences in life with your better judgment upon opening up, feeling free, in the moment (in any moment of self-expression) you are you, and sometimes there is nothing anyone can do to stop you from vocalizing your issues out loud, whether that be for therapeutic purposes, or for personal reasons defend yourself against any negative commentaries toward you, questioning your best intentions in life, not all things done with love, are for personal reasons alone, sometimes in trying to make other people happy we may subject ourselves to harm, and then become upset with ourselves, when things do not turn out right for us, acting for others, instead of keeping in mind our own best interest in not getting hurt privately and then publicly have to explain why you are hitting your head, have fractured your hand, or have ever felt insulted by anyones fake advances toward you, to cast you under a negative light personally and professionally, cause you to look like something you are not in private, unprofessional, or too casual with the management of your image, Ive never purposefully taken a bad picture in my life, always tastefully done, and now with help from messenger lenses, even better looking than I started, while trying to figure out why my face was becoming disfigured, coping with weight gain from abilify, so that I would not self-harm, and hit my head (not feel well, tired, upset with myself, a better option than committing suicide all together). Eventually you have to pause, figure out what was causing you to open up in excessive amounts to others, why you needed help, and why you couldn't manage your time alone, without constant contact with others, trying to manage problems ongoing in your head about life, and think that problems could ever be resolved together with another person. In deciding to return to my Ex (in the future) its because finding love online is impossible, it may for the time being (3 years) been a positive experience, having a pen pal (ie Trump Accounts) but has grown to become a cat and mouse game, of being good enough or not good enough, and probably nothing I should have ever talked about, initially contacting him, after visiting scotus, to inform him of what issues I felt were important at the time, was having issues hitting my head after being hospitalized for 30 days, following a 90x90 attendance to AA meetings twice a day, was told that that was going to help me, but it turns out that I only got sick in the process of speaking in meetings, and leading meetings myself, a speaker, among very successful members of the community in attendance, and a few famously known people, in recovery, seen during my time in AA. -I wouldn't call it being self-destructive, to self-harm, but as a coping mechanism, in private, if it goes on long enough, may eventually become a public issue, as to your overall health, whether you are able to manage your problems on your own or whether you need help, and whether if you need help are able to help others. Sometimes you just have to let go of lifestyle choices in life, and check back into reality, how long can you go on, maintaining imaginary friends in life, how appropriate is it to carry on, conversations with people, that youre probably never going to meet in real life. We all have our own lives, and just like you can get hurt in real life, and be avoidant of having real friends and boyfriends in real life, the same kind of hurt can result while having a pen pal. That I just learned, and as you come to know new people, fall out of love and in love with someone else, or come to admire others, don't expect to be let go easily in life, sometimes by the time people come around in life, or are around, we have other things to do like work, focus on ourselves, lose weight, get back to normal, take meds, cease self-harming behaviors, and cut back on activities in which we share too much of ourselves in private or public, which have the potential for leading us into difficult situations in life or have the potential to cause difficult feelings for others, who know you, but don't want everyone to know that they know you privately, or friend you, but don't want everyone to know that you are friends, or date you but don't want everyone to know that you date, or like you but don't want everyone to know that they like you, for some reason that seems to be my disposition now, either in love or not.

It takes a lot of courage to keep going in life, apply for jobs, work at jobs, and stay well, not all are capable of working the hours and getting paid, and sometimes we end up in the hospital when not well. Recently have reached out to a few Actors, one of whom I saw on Direct TV, and thought on a whim to message, and he replied. Shortly thereafter a series of deductions hit me, not assuming anything is about me or anyone I know, fell ill, Im not sure why that happened, just be happy for people based on where they are in life, and do your best not to interfere with current systems of support, taking care of their needs, while trying to stay well, and away from controversy. Its hard to get close to anyone, sometimes under such a heavy pressure in life, that its difficult to even just be me, sometimes its due to my own faults in life, put in a worse condition, and sometimes, based upon my fears, think the worst is happening to me, meaning things will not work out for me in life, that's just a roaming fear, nothing to publicly announce, I should be happy to be writing on what is now a very successful blog, read by many, and once ranked on Alexa 34,000, that was a huge accomplishment for me, and also to become a Feedspot Top 100 Personal Development Blogger. I always get sick whenever anyone thinks I am talking to people knowing they are married, and trying to disrupt that bond in life, clearly I am not well enough to be paid attention to when I am not doing well, so if they are responding, its only to cheer me on or to support me, with compassion, its not always romantic, and if it does become that way, that's between me and them, romantic meaning them wanting to get to know you on a personal level, and help you succeed professionally, which would be required to have things in life, like a job, friends, a boyfriend, husband, how quickly those prospects fall apart, upon being misread, that's how you get hurt, when you share who you have received a reply from, get sick, as though you are an unwanted connection, I don't think that anything mutual is ever to be interpreted as an unwanted connection or association in life, maybe for people past, who thought less of me, however now I have worked my way back to a respectable place in society as a writer, and very proud of myself, whether that leads to romance, friendship, or simply meeting people who have been successful in life, and able to lend an ear, learn to let things go as soon as you get sick, probably means an untimely meeting, or for unnecessary reasons, controversial at odds.

Nothing Comes Easy in Life ...

You usually know within 2 seconds of meeting someone, whether you like them enough, to work with, love, friend, its upon meeting s offer them, whether by job, or by love. Nothing comes easy in light, always be prepared to present the "best version of yourself" a quo you are not well is when you are likely to fall short of what is acceptable or acknowledged as well, and worthy of praise or attention fr to be loved and accepted as you are, that occurs, after a full showing of all that your made of, within, and whether you have the skill se belongingness needs. Whenever we are trying to rebuild our character, or if something goes wrong, that causes us hardship, its hard to feeling like yourself, that occurs when someone tries to present you in a different light, knowing you, or upon meeting you, claim that life, counter to all the friends you have made, and counter even to how you look, even if upon you later achieve wellness at a later poin someone, that love is always returned, which is how people can seem like too much, and quickly rejected, if its love that is seemed to b something becomes of it, that is at the choice of the man, to then accept all part of you, and want more from you, only supply more, on love, or if its not love, decline, that's how to figure out whether a meeting is about love, whether those needs have been fulfilled, or when you meet someone, and figure it out from there, not all things that end, make the beginning of anything easy, mostly painful for everyone. they light up to you and stand out to you? That's what falling in love is all about, meeting someone, not knowing them, and then suddenly but only few special to us individually, who we upon recognizing them, see potential, root for them, feel a giving of love leaving from me to love me to light me up, Im not asking for a giving of love, to feel accepted, or to receive permissions to continue blossoming online. Unable to work again, graduate, or move forward in life, makes them look in the wrong, for not condoning you blogging online, not believing to be a great writer online, make sense, and receive the kinds of attentions that you do, that's not because of who you know in life, that's Guided Discussions ...

We will not always be on the same page in life, with the same experiences, the same handicaps, sometimes its not possible to meet half recognize one another's struggles with appreciation, or seek to take a higher road, seeing themselves as more important than the other, or the other sees better, that one backs off, while the other takes flight. That's confidence, some are just not as willing to rise to the occasion and let everyone else, be left to their own devices in life, it takes awhile to step up to any plate in life, that's the real world. Everyone can be respected and admired, by others in their industry for their expertise, good decision making skills, and talent, which can only be honored for their talents, by hiring them for jobs, and allowing them to grow professionally, not all of us have been gifted with experience in life, we understand why, its because that happened to our country, in work environments, determining who gets jobs, and who does excel at work. Someone who is arriving to a scene online, like there was a scene to begin with, and then taking on a creative leadership role, in a scene that esteems, and who stood out and why, and whether creativity to begin with was about the same scenario, that goes on in workplace environments than the other, based upon how one presents themselves, how they respond to put downs, how they present self, whether their work excels at different paces, and its not by know how alone, that we are able to achieve, you cant just work alone and be successful, eventually you will be times, present the best version of yourself, as it sits well with others, and unless and until you can fully appreciate how far you've come and be similarly situated as special for your God given talents. That's as applied, your knowledge to any given setting, you feel in your element. You. There is a period upon exposure to someone, where you either accept them, or take a step back, we do not expect you to fully embrace reading about them or hearing from them, and choose to take a different course in life, separate from them, that's competition.

When Its Time to Move On ...

If you have to go backwards to explain yourself, or even forced to go backwards by someone else putting you at an imposition to explain yourself, stupid, at a loss, and overcoming something difficult in life, such as the emotions you encounter when you are made to look bad, ignored in a direction, who would think that upon explaining your demise, you would once again be hurt in that way, when you were down, and had no progress, in life, or be credited for your abilities in life, and be credited for being apart of your progress, that seek to be mentioned, and not moving forward, to their benefit, get people to turn on you with them, that's called a breakup, when sides are taken, and people are at a distance in life, that doesn't keep that once companion in the spotlight, as attached to you and your successes in life. Not only does that get tested whether they can succeed on their own, without the support, of someone, who exchanged loving words with in support of someone, respectfully, backing off, from a previous relationships, or friendship, and switching care to someone else, more willing to provide for someone's work out, looking like someone who benefited from the support of someone, saw better, and because of that support, was able to put to rest that one is able to grow, professionally, by their own experiences, and because one is professional, likeable, or desirable, as a candidate in a full circle, and beginning to feel better and ready to finish law school, graduate, and work again, after years of struggling on meds, that's a marriage, one is not obligated to care for someone for an indefinite term, and if someone is more available, to be supportive, and to care for someone in common with, who will not subject them to hurt, and would not disrespect them in public, make them look worse to others, and ask for someone's likeability, make me look trashy, cause me self-harm, and cause me to feel bad about myself, why I called the police, to request that they remove the candidate since 2017, and have always done my best to inform him, and console him during times of need, redirect his focus, defend him, and be proud.

Im sorry no more pen pals, however approved by my Attorney and Therapist, only speak to the Courts and to the Police, keep a running journal, be conscious and maintaining the peace.

Personal Update: Due to the pandemic, just filed for Social Security Disability today.

Follow-Up (04-18-20): Pictures were taken down ... what a pal, always a diplomat, thats me, have faith.

Building Your Ideal Website ...

Ideally we would want to save every step along the process of building, but not everything gets saved and retained along the way, in other words, sometimes things get destroyed and you have to start over, why it is so important to save, as you write, as you produce, and as you add all inputs to larger documents. I am someone who writes individually, and then at a later point, collects the best of if not every post, a record of all posts too, why its important to save as you go. It takes a lot of energy as a blogger, to both write for your website, write separately, not present the same compositions on each feed, make things different, and upon re-blogging, present the best of what that looking back compared to where you are now, appreciated, or becoming more valuable, why dating your work may be important too, to monitor ones own personal growth, keep track of whats working and what is of value moving forward. You cannot create value if your presentation with directions would be wanted from me. Still learning as I go. There is no manual for how to blog, and what works or what without reference to the past, that is not where intelligence comes from or ideas, to highlight past incidences in which harms have occurred, sharing is a joke, that's very insulting. -The crux of your methodology should at its core be good, so in the event that anything is later added, build ideas and thoughts from, your core ideologies should always be good, that means coming from a good place, make decisions, so that value can equally be added back to those, whom upon vague citation to similar points of interest do not feel harmed as connected, improvements are needed, to any system of thought, or structure housing thoughts. A well built website, is organized, and upon presenting posts, to be found among like posts created on one website, all the posts, that are similar by category, collected.

The Moment of Change ...

Theres a moment in your recovery, when you stop processing the past, and begin to move forward, no longer reminded of what went wrong, sometimes it takes a day, sometimes weeks, and sometimes, months, before you decide to stop remembering what caused you harm, start with appreciation for how far you have come, and willing to push forward until you are able to hit cruise control again in life, and get a new perspective, others, always be thankful for what you have, the more appreciative you are of what you have been through, remembering the good things only provide, what you are able to withstand, tolerate, and overcome yourself in life. Never settle for less, the skies the limit, and never stop dreaming good things into your life, is your attitude, how you manage stress, how you stay motivated, and being driven, no matter what you encounter, successful, some not successful, keep things in perspective, your upper limit to success, is always dependent upon your ability to push through health issues, dictate, your abilities in life. As someone with learning disability, I have always made it a point as an academician, to shape, going to the gym, which is why I was able to go to two law schools, play club soccer in law school, and kickbox in the AM, and a class in law school, received As on essays (not good in multiple choice questions), and an A in Advanced Legal Writing and Witken A exams memorized flashcards, condensed outlines and from a little bit of information, knew a lot of information, that's how I learn, by and from those details, find meaning, the better you understand the better able you are to memorize and learn, I guess that's why I start writing, from what I could remember, what I knew, and start making sense of my life, outside of work and school, and find myself, read

You're Never Good Enough to Mention Others ...

There never comes a point in time where it is ever 100% acceptable to speak of the experiences of others, or allude to insights derived from a few, and then subject those facts to being known to all it will always be interpreted as though for the purposes of strengthening a position, beliefs, or treat all unconditionally who come from an important story, that's not true, depending upon how important you are, what you have behind from shared conversations, as someone who is good on their own, and wish to not benefit by mention, anyone who's mentioned for purposes of establishing rights to all for use of my work product, as though its fair game, as assumed, to turn on someone, or misuse someone given their current condition, of mentioning and having ever positively represented those they cared about, being a good person, excellent at compiling all my best work, since I began sharing, and making books, hopefully to write a book for mass distribution, that doesn't run out and when focused, spoken about, or speaking to issues, once relevant and obviously known to everyone, and upon looking at me, think I have already been misunderstood as an opportunist, seeking help to build something for monetary purposes, and not for the general or overcoming, discord between groups, and explains why everyone was doing well, and why many investments were made, to watch us grow, we worked in, focused on perfecting ourselves professionally, not wind up back to where we started, an assumption of creative mismanagement account maintained by me since 2008. There is no exact beginning point, when you feel compelled to share, its usually you just not feel like you're feeling at a loss, alone, not going in life, that ONLY occurred to me writing my personal statement, never has that ever happened to me, to enter law school, and upon sharing my personal statement, a similar quiet occurred, with continued belief in me and enthusiasm, that without knowing my past, who my friends are or were, just based upon my work ethic, trustworthiness, willingness to go to extreme lengths, challenged, and wanted to become more adept at civil litigation, with quickness, research, know the laws, and be able to make arguments, apply them, and how to analyze information given the laws available to articulate reasons or causes, and how information obtained, he

Deep in Thought vs. Gone ...

You will have moments in life where you will feel like you are working hard, and feel good about the work you are doing, after the work as hired to adhere to a set of standards of work ethic required of you depending on what profession you are working in, not all professions have personal issues ever interfered with my ability to work, have always been someone who shows up and works and leaves, quiet, not that's being present in the moment, then there is disability, and then there is disability plus alcohol or relapsing, which can affect your ability then try to get too much done in a rush, it happens to the best of us, getting side tracked on unimportant things, to fill the hours of the day on facebook privately, or a website, phase by phase, and sometimes along the way, there will be people with more exposures in life, think of people upon who you know, is for those reasons sharing online, not to the benefit of all, but for a personal benefit, such as what occurs for you when coming to mind, memory recalling positives, and less interruption by voices, or memory of voices past, to discourage you from sharing how they transpired, as though you were famous, and upon speaking negative consequences occurred, over a 9 year period, that needs to be on or on Twitter, or on a blog, if it was assumed that everyone thought that I was mentally ill, or had things to say to trigger the mental health in me, what I sound like in school or at work, then that should be the reason you should explain why to tell someone not to share, means to sense others are thinking around them, and that their intelligence was acquired by being among the smart, and not achieved on their own, saved, to cause them to appear in a disorganized state looking for things for hours, not where they remember them to be, like school notes, does so because they think you deserve to feel like someone who has been hurt and goes through a period of being lost or gone and seems unstable.

What is Likeable? Identifying Potential ...

You are your own worst enemy when it comes to garnering enough strength and confidence, to go back into the world, post breakup, to respect to the past and everyone in it, including preserving your own self-worth, be of value to you, and find value in yourself again, and troubles into your life on your own, or told you are something you are not. What does that all mean? To be bullied, and how can you resist, for, silence, or despondency toward you, be less loving, less compassionate, cold, and not take you seriously in life, how much should you or upon them knowing more about you than meets the eye, or think something differently about you, based upon what is seen in private that cause people to feel more at ease, less worried, that would be one benefit of sharing from within, such as keeping a diary or a journal to keep everything pristine. -Its never ones responsibility to negotiate with someone who thinks less of them, compared to where they can be in life, treat them as guilty that is "knowingly doing something to cause harm to someone, and knowing they are in harms way, or feeling like hitting my head, I had pitched for a "therapy website," I went out and drank, I relapsed on cocaine, I was taking 10mg Abilify having to spend much time in the mirror, never vain, until after Jail, is when I started to gain weight, look different, and not like myself. I already loved, possessive over boyfriends, but never friends, and never controlling, independent, except when in a relationship, wanting to spend the same page in life without you, and that can be disturbing, mentally, for everyone to be connected, and to feel like the one person in the room, and takes awhile to get comfortable be yourself with anyone new. -I think its wrong to be treated as though, Im the aggressor so no matter what I look like, because I am a good person, not because I am trying to look pretty to attract attentions, because I am planning for a later rejection, with the confidence of being given reassurances, abuse that privilege of being accepted, and talk about anyone I know, intelligent, or trying hard for the wrong reasons, such as fame, or fortune, placements in life, I was born privileged, so to fight to be in Centering Blames ...

Sometimes the easiest way to simply our ideas about wrongs and the timing of wrongs is to blame whomever comes forward in life, to a student with a boyfriend. People who think they have you figured out in life, are so quick to call you out from afar to test your integrity, recitations of facts concerning you, were the cause of your demise with friends or still spoken to, spoke to all, never have I ever blamed me in any way, that misdirected the interpretations of me, to judge me as a "truant" or someone who does not achieve a "loser" or someone "intelligent" or otherwise considered to be someone "who likes to hear the sound of their own voice" as retorted to me by my then Reliance field of addiction and mental health issues, think that they possess the power to tell you how it is, provoke from you commentary from my "knee" in chairs with your Father in a circle in front of everyone else and their selected family members present (*and my Dad cried), to have accomplished in life that are the cause for you being there, I received a Witken Award and got a Job at DC Law Students in Court that hook was later lost upon being introduced to a friend the semester before, when Jodi was in town, we did coke New Years (January) pouch in my kitchen which was later found by my Mom who was very upset with me. It seems by the smallest errors in life, you get disrespected and once you lose that love and trust and admiration of you or for you, past failure, its hard for them to want to be around you, let alone help, its there, but it doesn't ever really want to be there, but does its job anyways to stop you from enduring whatever it is that is causing you good, and upon feeling good, look bad, as feeling good, when others are serious, and its usually only when you look stupid or don't understand changes in a room full of people, whos confidences in life are based upon comforts with one another, had I not gotten laid, I wouldn't have had him.

"Blogging" (Medium) Article

Blogging is a form of writing practiced by those who write articles and who share their thoughts and opinions daily, weekly, or monthly. The contents of your blog, some make money blogging, and others blog for fun, accolade, hobby, personal interests, or to keep busy. Writing a blog, would be to write from home, and be an author. It takes time like all careers to develop yourself, make a name for yourself, and share what you know. In a general sense, blogging is a meeting of the minds, like most writings, where the author or the reader, and separate from another, or see better, wellness is determined based upon what is considered smart to you, and what is considered of value, not all can help to clarify any issues lingering, but always make sure that if its important to write it out, not leave things up for vague or abstract as long as if removed from the equation there would be no insight to attack, that makes you a valuable primary source, never give up! If you dont have anything nice to say dont say it at all, that doesnt apply to sharing your thoughts, thoughts are not a belief system, and with parties in life, I think for political purposes, some writing should be left for allowing one to express themselves absent minded what of someone to build a new life for themselves. You'll get a job somewhere, showing that you can write is a good start to getting a job, a content blogger, its common to have low self-esteem especially since the internet is full of articles published by writing professionals, for pay, part work independently, that's the difference, not at the direction of anyone telling them what to blog about, or given topics or assignments. Blogging a means to report what was going on around me, was initially how I used Facebook newsfeed, which went to mixfeed, and Twitter did not share on Twitter or in other spaces, to begin with, that took a lot of time, and a lot of trial and error, we can't be at our best all the time. A sense of self awareness of whats going on around you, and contentious of how others will respond to you, given what you have to say. I am not necessarily a jack of all trades or renaissance man, but someone who is able to think, provide, and deliver writings, that are worth a person's outlook in life, by changing other people, one should accept others as they are, and continuously do what they can to improve upon it. Do not control people, or what they think, love is love, and unless you are smart or pretty, then its difficult to establish any long lasting relationships. Intelligence, yes looks does say a lot about you, self-care, how you present your work, what your website looks like, presentation matters, and overall, the overall look and feel of your work, should represent you, who you are, and as such, manifest in others, or on the minds of the times of others, especially those who seek to know everything to provoke the worst in you, some use science for the worst, and some treatments overall of people who blog, or who share their minds, will be accepted, but as of now, its still a growing trend, and not yet plateau. It takes a lot of love and a lot of drive and determination to keep your wheels going, when it comes to creating an idea, and working on it. Be patient with yourselves, no one expects you to have a perfect looking blog, this takes time.

Overcoming Hate & Restoring Your Faith ...

I think one of the most difficult parts about being a writer, is that although you may have many fans, following, and reading and support was famous, you would not have been known or cited to, nor have become successful now, that is true in part, I have always credited myself being someone who could be relied upon, and trusted. -Its upon drinking or doing drugs, that you lose those types of respects in life, and in life, is not able to balance doing it all, dating, working, and getting good grades. -Always do your best to accommodate the best interests change for anyone. Becoming successful is not about being better than, and sharing online or blogging is not about creating a different upon during times of need, as being more or less knowledgeable. You would expect people upon meeting you to be respectful of you, them as being small within the grand scheme of things, some of us, lie at the epicenter, without knowing it, and mature faster, because student, an athlete, friended, enjoying the company of someone who is in positive spirits, and easy going, that's being around people who characteristic of someone who is confident because they know themselves, and well adjusted, and then there is being known, and for a long, to write freely, or to express yourself, in the tone that you have now acquired, and wonder what is so unique of special about someone a better condition, compared to where you are now, then its best to read something else, or rely on someone else you trust for more people automatically respond the same to all situations, and get the help that is needed, or get help for ourselves when needed. -Once you become making others uncomfortable, being exposed, that's not very fair, to be able to speak freely in light of someone else's experiences, and

In an AA meeting one of my friends, was speaking, and had mentioned that he recently saw "The Joker" movie, and said that he was "and handing the pieces to the Federal Building, after Aurora happened. That was very traumatizing, as not connected, to then provide the face of Barack Obama with blood running down his face, I found it to be defamatory, and took down the poster myself, with my hands was watching a scene in which someone says to the main character "there is something special about you." ---Reminded me of when my connections, and those I pitched to, picked an entry, "Best Integrated Campaign" from all the options, and made it a point, to create a from my mind, my thoughts, on squares, and used Tumblr photos, I found to be pretty. ---Sometimes success does not include you, and being introduced to the world on a larger scale with 90k fans, treated differently, whether it was because of who I supported, my Attorney was hired to help me with my publishing corporation (because publishing costs thousands of dollars, thought to figure out how to do so writing to all). -When I was hospitalized for 14 days, following a lawsuit, I had an imaginary relationship with someone I thought at the informed him of my progress, perhaps, next lifetime, just build and present on my own, and not rely on reporting to someone individual they overcome trauma, or little idiosyncracies about life they had trouble understanding or accepting about others, why I call the LAPD am not well enough to speak to or be supported and need to be hospitalized, that I leave up to them, as I work alone, writing. -In my e alive for 8 months, was hitting my head probably upset with myself for relapsing, and hearing voices, and was slamming my head into later photographed. –Life gest stressful especially when you don't know what you're doing, or in a new field, stay calm. ---Upon being before (now 9x), I didn't really need to disclose that I was newly Bi, but that wasn't what was special about me, that she pointed out. – reasons or “sexuality” reasons, and say that because one is “perverted” (ie “in need”) that one is grose, or not a beautiful person, not in about respecting our differences, and at the same time, not putting anyone down in life, because they don't have it made in life quite y of the actions of others, in response to them not being well, or not realizing the big picture, of everyone working together to tell a story about ones experience with suicide per se, but about that experience for anyone in general, as it relates to a changing of the times, mea someone is not going to make it, or is a joke, or the cause of business decisions, it just means that based upon their life experiences, an share their story in a coherent way, in which others can come to value their life and the life of others, not for the purposes of being bos produce, or books to write, that's based upon their understanding, and your share not as related to them, able to cast light upon another not, is not your responsibility to become consumed with, thinking that a piece of your life, was used to portray a character notably a vi to whats not going right, and doing their best, to inform the Government, of what insights are attacking our credibility as a whole, mea had a private life, when things got overwhelming, when fears were felt, to the moment fears became real, and how important it is to be the crowd for the Oscars, something to do, not done before, be apart of, and upon pictures being taken around me, called the police to t Hotel instead, that was 4pm, I was there until 11pm. There were no TVs in the bar, and did not watch in the recommended spot, where Bill, I was the designated driver, and picked up my Sister and her friend from Hollywood, they had been out clubbing, Sarah paid me b her passing along with Navid's passing to Bazelon during my interview with them, while I got the job at DC Law Student's in Court (S on, recently a ship had sunk in Italy, and hit a rock. –While talking to Ari Emanuel (since Nov 2019) after seeing him at a Laker Game course because they sang in jail, I thought, on a whim, you are usually blind when you make these choices in life to reach out to someo faced away from me.” And he replied. I didn't know at the time who is brother was, I used to drink at The Viper Room with my Ex, w google searching my name while applying to law schools, to see if there was anything about me, and my name was cached to a deposit about my family, one blogger from the valley threatening for my family to speak. When I tried to talk to anyone about it, no one had a for me, Sydney even talked to me, and told me something her Dad said to her while he was in jail, the second time we spoke I apologiz friends, and left them voicemails, even an Attorney at the City Attorneys Office, and was going to mail her my Mother's book, in a Sa overseas, without putting together the fact that I swam in P Diddy's pool in Miami, and that we were guests of his babysitter Kiki. Someone who doesn't know you will look at you and judge you, someone who knows you will look at you and love you, and someone have with people, upon getting to know them: (1) Judged, Smaller Than, (2) Loved, Same As, and (3) Shy, Timid, Finding Your Place world, (3) Timid Shy, gets misinterpreted as not professional smaller than, giving the authority of others to be boss, or to coordinate fo supervision, of another, coordinating your care. Be careful when in new professional relationships not to discuss your personal life, wh alone others, and not confident, that leaves other people feeling short-handed, like you could have been better or performed better had focus issues. Focus issues are not a result of anything going on subconsciously, its usually to do with what you cant figure out, when y hear voices, or delusions, that is seeing things and hearing things, and thinking things are happening that are not, that's coming to belie those triggers, are purposefully situated to cause you harm, or to disturb your focus, that's thinking too hard about life, no one really tr be proven, then the more errors on your part the better, to free anyone in your life, from being assumed to have been anyhow influentia them, or being affected by them, as exposed to their stories, read, and upon reading about them becoming sad, feeling like something i a set of standard acceptances of you publicly, that are ingrained in the negative about you, to justify any non-acceptance of you, or har successful like others who are famous, and not understand that it is safer to speak in public, than it is to speak in private one on one or people to believe in me, like me, because I don't have that in real life. That's not true, I am able to date, make friends, I choose to be a companionship and love.

Privately I have only reached out to a few, mostly for reporting reasons, have made contact with the Government, in the privacy of my not, am affected, sometimes things aren't about you, but can have a negative affect on you, as interpreted by others, based upon who th with a few Trump Accounts, since leaving AA, someone to talk to who I trusted, when not well, on heavy meds, in bed, not looking lil apply for jobs, work at jobs, and stay well, not all are capable of working the hours and getting paid, and sometimes we end up in the h thought on a whim to message, and he replied. Shortly thereafter a series of deductions hit me, not assuming anything is about me or a and do your best not to interfere with current systems of support, taking care of their needs, while trying to stay well, and away from c even just be me, sometimes its due to my own faults in life, put in a worse condition, and sometimes, based upon my fears, think the w publicly announce, I should be happy to be writing on what is now a very successful blog, read by many, and once ranked on Alexa 34 Blogger. I always get sick whenever anyone thinks I am talking to people knowing they are married, and trying to disrupt that bond in its only to cheer me on or to support me, with compassion, its not always romantic, and if it does become that way, that's between me professionally, which would be required to have things in life, like a job, friends, a boyfriend, husband, how quickly those prospects fa sick, as though you are an unwanted connection, I don't think that anything mutual is ever to be interpreted as an unwanted connection back to a respectable place in society as a writer, and very proud of myself, whether that leads to romance, friendship, or simply meetin sick, probably means an untimely meeting, or for unnecessary reasons, controversial at odds.

Overcoming Mental Health Issues ...

Just because I have been hospitalized 9 times, and have attended IOP Intensive Outpatient Treatment at UCLA twice, does not make me an expert at helping others to overcome their mental health issues. Once things are taken personally there is a problem, especially when it comes to someones condition, anyone who is well, reading along, not relating, and thinking that someone who does not make sense to them is wrong, it just means you do not understand my condition or how I see things. The second major problem, is someone who is not well, explaining their condition, not intending to talk about the past, gets hurt when discussing the past, suffers the same condition, again, not feeling well, not feeling apart of, feeling like there is something wrong with them, that is in part true. Which bring us to problem number three, your condition is your condition, absent minded others, and when your condition is poor, dont expect others to relate to your condition, the worse off you become, the harder you are to relate to, and this brings up problem number 4: your ability to make other people feel good, and what "likes" on your blog means: (1) you have overcome your mental health issues (2) your mental health issues still exist, or (3) you are able to help others, and getting like because you are helping, being recognized, make sense, dont make sense, sick, or not sick presently. -Anyone who is not well understands that it takes time to talk to people, catch up with friends, talk to exes, make new friends, finish goals, achieve goals, set goals, and move forward. These are problems everyone faces, but not all will be understanding of your experiences in life, thinking you should be: better, smarter, prettier, more intelligent, more organized, not aggravated, not on meds, stronger, more fit --thats just someones unhappiness when looking at you, being critical of you, because they do not have the same a well made website and blog. -What needs to be understood, is that those with mental health issues (ie me) possess a chemical imbalance, which upon aggravation, gets worse, and they lose momentum, stop achieving, and just like everyone else, become confused, have difficulty concentrating, difficulty feeling good, difficulty exercising, doing things that make them feel good, and suffer just like anyone ele who has a "bad day" except for someone with mental health issues the "bad days" can add up, and they can get worse, and worse, and worse, and then need to be hospitalized, so that they are put on very heavy doses of medication so that they sleep, and stop thinking, and stop living, and stop moving, and stop achieving, and slow down in life. -Its a very dangerous condition mental health issues, one that requires meds for sleep and meds for wakefulness, to live life, just be understanding that its not by choices one gets sick, thats just life, sometimes you are put together and shine, and sometimes, your not the best at everything. I am interesting because although I have achieved a lot, am still sick, and thats not my choice to suffer, be easily aggravated, and self-harm, thats when alone I suffer, so that upon being around others who are more well, something looks wrong with me, so that I cant blend in. Not being able to blend in, means not measuring up, and no matter what you achieve in life, not good enough, not sound, not helpful, makes no difference, until your health, can be argued to be a problem, as though your condition, does not improve the condition of others, make them realize how well they are, and how others have suffered, and are suffering not well. I am someone who had a successful career and was doing well, and then got sick, why I blog now. Its been very difficult to work and finish law school but that was always a goal, just be nice to people who were once very smart, on point, and who now suffer the same unhappinesses in life, without jobs, not able to work, with disability, not social, not dating, not returning to life. Sometimes you leave behind one life, to start a new life, that doesnt mean there was something wrong with any of your lives, is the misunderstanding of sacrificing social time to study be smart. For someone with learning disability I know I cannot drink or go out or date, in order to be smart and graduate, and get a job, or be successful online, learn and continue to grow sober.

Maintaining Wellness ...

When you represent yourself well, all things fall into place, its upon being observed, and not impressed by your current condition, that respect for you is lost. Thats by who already knows you, and by seeing you now, not impressed by where you are or who you are becoming, whether your success story matters, whether your humanity matters, whether your wellness matters, whether their opinion matters (some who does not know you) judging you based upon where you have been, what harms you have suffered, to justify hate toward you as deserving, that is upon seeing someone well, able to carry on a conversation, not be well enough to be apart of, not well enough to be considered of worth, and not well enough to be taken seriously. Who is taken seriously? Someone who does not bother, nor offends the wellness of others, someone who upon meeting is recognized as smart and capable of overcoming their current troubles, someone who is human too, respectable, and worth the love and trust of those who give love and trust to them, thats wellness. Wellness is always by how you respond presently to either justify a dislike for you, or rationalize an understanding of you presently, as having learned from your past, and how to properly respond, during a difficult time, and not become worse off, thats maturing, understanding that the world is a big place, and while things may not work out for you in life, does not mean that your life is over, or any hardship so difficult to overcome, that actions are taken on your behalf or others, to situate you worse off in life, as though thats where you were headed, thats where you deserve to be, or thats who you are, not well, not successful, not important, not of value, not of significance, not capable, or not as well as, because one is on their own, separate from friends and boyfriends. Who is strong? Someone who can resist temptation, someone who does not change based upon their circumstances, someone who remembers everything, someone who lives for the moment, someone who is well liked, there seems to be a misunderstanding, of what is liked? -Someone at peace, with themselves, and others. -Generally someone does not respect your sense of peace if they can generate a reaction from you, that fits within their description of "not well" someone who is only well as among those who are well or someone who is not well when placed among those who are not well, someone who is not able to be at peace with themselves or others, no matter how well things are going for themselves, driven by things in life, and setting goals to look like something they are not, trying to be someone else, not themselves, discredited, and hurt until they become something else, not successful, not well, in repair, not appreciative, not doing well, not a positive reflection of where they have been or what they have gone through, until they experience problems and suffer once again, thats generally by people, who dont think that you have a difficult life too, unless you become worse off, thinking that self-harm is a deserved consequence of you doing something wrong. -No life is an easy life.

Being Defined ...

Until you become something do not let others define you. What makes special? Being apart of? What creates a space above hate, that upon realization, value is created within, and can be seen by all? How does one move forward?

What is being positive? How does organization help? How does disorganization occur? Who is happy and why? When does unhappiness occur? All of these factors matter when determining the value of someone, mostly based upon a feeling, upon meeting someone, whether by who they are, they have what it takes, to be of value, and upon presentation to all, be considered of value, or whether they are something they are not, sick within, and because of what others think is sick about them (appearance wise) that that condition is contagious, a unwell mind, or someone not of value too, deserving to be heard. What you are drawn to and by your experiences, you are able to keep the sick well, that is by training and by exposure, know how to be during tough times, and what is expected of you during tough times, to be of resource to those who are suffering, gone, or experiencing mental illness. You can't get out of an unwell mind, or a poor condition, unless as directed by someone who is well, get out of a feeling, a condition, or a present state of mind, that is causing you or others illness, that is a disbelief within ones self, in ones ability to overcome conditions present, without a positive outlook or appreciation for moments in which one was blessed to experience wellness, that is recognition of ones humanity, that not all days are perfect, not everyone is perfect, not everyone will make you feel well, not all will recover, and accept the condition you are in, not make worse your condition, no matter the condition of others, be selfless. -Sometimes you will be able to share and make everything feel better, and sometimes you will share, and everyone will turn on you (who knows you), thats just public speaking (everyone curious about a well point of view, something well said, and based upon what is known, why one is well received, unless well too, not feel well, offended by your current wellness, not apart of, and then I get sick too, until who is proven right? That I am not well, what was thought of me, by a few who met me or knew me, not my whole life, not understanding of what I was going through, not understanding of my condition nor the causes of my condition, compared.), unless you can make others feel better, will they see the value in your work, some readers are selfish in that way, only concerned about their own wellness, not concerned about your wellness, or the wellness of everyone, to them special means being apart of, unique, and invincible to the conditions of others, a feeling that one is more powerful or so powerful, that in numbers is what makes someone invincible to experiencing worse, or a bad life, thats not understanding that everyone can get sick, and even by who they love, experience pain, and by those pains, not feel well, and not be able to love or be loved too, worse off. -Anyone who makes someone feel good, is well, thats a basic principle of wellness, and then there is a condition, such as now, when I am doing well online, and privately not doing well romantically, where my condition got worse, upon doing better online and getting likes, not because of my doing but because of what was done to me or expected of me privately, able to give love, share myself romantically, and at the same time be accepted professionally online, you cant be well in both spaces, if anything goes wrong in one or the other, not able to give love, not able to make sense, and not able to feel well. I am human too, its not by your experiences of pain, suffering, embarrassment, that you have know how, its only as you overcome a poor condition, that you are able to explain that cusp back to wellness, a realization of a poor condition, and an experience of what was realized upon being well or getting well, that explains where you are now, everyone is capable of being hurt professionally and romantically, its a new world, everything recorded, and unless you value yourself, enough to stay professional, can you lose everything you have worked hard for your entire life, that is success professionally, so that more doors open up for you and you can get a job too and be paid for your work. Thats everyones right to work, its not everyone right to be loved or to experience love, that is how you get hurt and devalued, upon giving love, not feel well, not feel stable, not feel strong, not feel motivated, not feel respected, and look like someone in need of the wrong things in life, not appreciative of what they have, not feel well. Mental health issues are permanent (on meds) that is something someone not on meds will never understand what causes one to end up on medication? It takes many downs to not be able to come up in life, and it takes many hospitalizations, to keep living life, and correct a poor condition, and its only upon doing well feeling better, that others forget where you have been, and become more obsessed with causes for illness, not respecting your livelihood and wellness now, thinking had it not been for a bad condition, you would not be well? Its had I not been in a bad condition, I would not be on meds, and because Im on meds -I write.

Seeing the Beauty in Others ...

At what point does the beauty come out in others, and who brings the beauty out in others. Generally when someone is loved, they feel beautiful, and when someone is cared for, and takes good care of themselves, see the good in themselves and able to see the good in others. We all have bad days, but that doesnt mean that a person has lived a bad life, or that because they were around bad people, look bad, or turn out to be something they are not, become who is attracted to them, become something they are not, or become a reflection of others, not a reflection of themselves and the work that they have accomplished in their life. Who makes a good example to others, someone focused on themselves or someone below, under the command of someone else, looking as though they are trying to be like, at work it is by whos direction you are under that you work for, not work like, thats work, everyone assigned to do their job, not the job of others, and do their job well so that others can do their job better, thats working for someone. And then there is working for yourself, such as blogging, under your own direction, not to look better than others, but to be yourself. So much of life is about finding yourself, valuing yourself, and so long as you seem like someone in need of attentions or help, to build a company for yourself to work in, is when you get sized up, as being of value personally and professionally, and judged based upon how big someone thinks you are trying to be, or some person successful they think you are trying to measure up to, and based upon who you know, think that it was easy to think, learn how to build a website, and establish a formula for creating writings new each day, respective of your progress, through the management of your own mental health issues. Thats not trying to be famous, thats being professional, when known, or looked at, or spoken to, a sense of ease comes about, a certainty that things are going right, were done right, and will turn out right, thats the blessing of working, focused on whats in front of you, and things turning out well for you and others, which makes you feel like youve had a good day, and keeps you looking forward to the next day, not by compiling risks and trying to solve problems outside the scope of your expertise, wellness is by doing well what you know best. There is always a steep learning curve when it comes to getting good at something, or to be successful at something whether its: work skills, social skills, relationship skills, or people skills, some of these traits your born with and sometimes you learn overtime, how to behave, look, present self, in order to be treated kindly, and not come across as troublesome, out there, not put together, dirty, or someone unwanted trying to be wanted. -I was raised to always see the good in others, and because I see the good in others, am fearless, thats not a belief in those who are bad will change, its believing that those who are good, will not give in to the types of behaviors, that condone those who have not lived similar lives, to cause trouble in the life, or someone who has lived privately, hard working. There is no point in life, when your life will be completely separately lived from the rest of the world, thats life, constantly exposed to all walks of life, one should not change simply because they have been exposed to a different kind of life, nor be devalued, because their life has been exposed to another walk of life, that doesnt take away from someone being special, because of who knows them, not be considered special, based upon who they are later connected to, as not being of high social status, not being beautiful, wealthy, a success. Sometimes people who are smart, are accepting of people, that most people would not be accepting of, and because one has experience in life exposed to all walks of life, devalued, as though ones life does not help or better the lives of those not as successful, influence them. -Thats when your beauty is lost, at your expense given, lost, or assumed to not be beautiful, because of who you were exposed to, not good enough to help. - You will always be judged based upon whether you are someone that others see the beauty in or whether you are someone who sees the beauty in others, or whether you are someone who is beautiful and brings out the beauty in others, by seeing the beauty in someone youre around. What causes wellness, when someone who is gone, feels found, and when found, loves again, happy.

Fixing How You Feel ...

One of the most important lessons you'll ever learn in recovery is that nothing lasts for ever, and in order to overcome feelings associated with the past, you have to move forward, no matter what life you had, no matter how good things were, and no matter what happened to you, allow your experinces to shape you, without impeding your progress as remembered, recalled, written, told, or shared, not step through the same life twice. What does that mean? You only get far in life, if what youre doing now, is going to help you at some future later point, and upon recognizing which things thought about, what feelings had, or what losses past, have caused instability in your life, avoid sitting too long with feelings that remind you of a time past you felt that way, and continue to appreciate where you are now, thats not compounding your current life, with anything past, to explain, justify, shed light, add weight, or build inference toward you that you have not changed, not accomplished, in spite of, but because of those feelings are where you are now, thats giving power to your past, instead of empowering who you are now, separate from those moments in time, a better person, a more mature person, someone who knows where they have been, and as a result of doing everything right, are where they are now. The past will always give you skills, current, that shape who you are, there no doubt to that, our younger years, when we were invincible, social, outgoing, in love, with our whole lives ahead of us hopeful, and then we get older, feel the pressure of every down, every failure, every hardship, every breakup, and before finishing any task, push ourselves to be connected to a future moment, feeling better, instead of thinking backwards be held back, before we arrive to better, that's letting go, knowing when to value yourself, when to slow down, when to appreciate, and when to stop, communicating about how things were, and choose to focus on where you are now, absent minded the past, people, memories, recollections, hardships, that's the journey. -What is being too hard on yourself? If you are happy with who you are now, and someone is not happy with you as you are now, that doesn't mean, every moment you have done well and then not felt good, was because someone did not feel good about you, don't give power to people, to change you, change yourself, and don't give power to people to judge you, and call negative attentions to yourself, becoming something you're not, in response to present ideas or thoughts of you, so that no progress is made, and you are made to look worse, than you have ever been in your entire life. That's seeing you, and thinking you are trying to be bigger or better than you are, and that you deserve to be put down in life, so that you become nothing, and feel like nothing, as though you don't deserve to have a life too, and feel good. Some people are allowed to be important in life, and some people, based upon what they have been through, are deemed not to be important, that's a choice that is made, by those who upon seeing them, do not see them as well, capable, or deserving of opportunities in life to have a life, as though they have not made sacrifices too, and waited to be loved, to achieve, get jobs, and be successful too. If someone is well liked, it's because of who they are and in spite of what they have been through have a positive outlook in life. A positive outlook means not predicting the worse, and because they believe in themselves and others, is why those who come into their life, improve, and explains why they are alone, upon not feeling well, because once they were needed, and all of a sudden not needed. -People only care about themselves, and it's not until you become better on your own without anyone in your life, that they begin to feel different, like that's not what I thought and because I thought this treated her this way, and because she has achieved anyways, think that they still deserve the power to hurt you, to explain the past, not allow you to move forward. -What is an alternate lifestyle, friends online instead of friends in real life, not dating, and instead choosing to focus on your goals in life, why is that? Because in order to be loved, you have to have both moved on from the past, recognize how hard life is, how difficult life is, and with appreciation for one another's hardships, meet halfway, liked again by people from your past, that's seeing you having known you, and being who you are again, as they remembered you, social, vocal, fashionable, balanced, at ease, focused on yourself.

Your Life Right Now ...

Nothing incomplete is considered an acceptable form of communication, and if anyone thinks you have it good, will prove you wrong as though you have not suffered, or brought it upon yourself, being put down when down, or made to look like something you're not, when in the moment, you entertain advances in private, and as a result make yourself look stupid, it will always be to the assumption of someone on the outside, making it personal, as though your condition was improved by behavior in private, as though you cannot get hurt by looking that way in public, not everyone was fit to be loved by all, no one is trying to be everyone's sweetheart, it's to the standards others think you are trying to achieve as well as that you are put down in life as not as good as, and for every improvement, docked points, based upon your originality, and ability, not to partake in comradeship or mention the wellness of others, while on your own, you only attract back into your life, what you are able to provide, that's simple. And anyone not in your life looking at your life, will always think that you upon not being well, not doing well, are further defined as an asset or expense, or a liability to the wellness of those around you. Every moment you bring up is fruit for judgment later on in life, as you improve, brought up in a way to see whether brought up and applies to you, or brought up, as it's been a subject avoided, shedding light upon the happenings of wellness, or insight into things that have gone well, and look like because things are going well, be credited for those changes as though your input brings about positive change in others, or to systems governing the behavior, outlook, and belief systems to which others wellness depends. -Think for what purpose am I mentioning awareness of this story, combined with what my life looks like where I have been what I have gone through, and be careful not to lend insights into the lives of others where how to benefit is by hurting you, to bring about a better or worse result, to then make you matter in a negative way, or you can continue to make progress, and be unaffected by the successes of others, and not because of you be credited for their successes in life, not everyone is able to handle a down, that's the main point, and it's upon many downs in life, you stop allowing others to dictate your wellness, your confidence, your self-esteem, your femininity, your athleticism, and become the best version of yourself, and say this is my wellness, what's inside me, and just because things look this way, or I look this way, or I got sick, or this person is not doing well, does not mean it's because of me, that's not rising from any controversy, that's saying I understand pain too, I understand suffering too, I understand hardship too, I get f-ked too, I get offended to, my feelings get hurt too, I think I am not doing as well as, and Im single too, trying to have a career and graduate from law school, what does that mean, we all struggle, and once you stop focusing on who is struggling and why, you begin to see the light, that no matter where you are in life, life can be made beautiful, and its only upon seeing the beauty of life, that life is lived, irrespective of how others are doing, what points are trying to be made, how things look, what things are about, who helped, who inspired, who was strong, who was sick, who was leading, who was attractive, who was well who was stable, until you arrive to well, and judged as though you were focused on others how you became sick, and why you look like someone from your life, to say that you are a product of those in your life, put you down as a poor representation of other, much different, not evolved, less mature, not poised, not refined, not sober, not intelligent, not arrived, and not going to arrive, because not one of them, well, successful, intelligent, beautiful, original, helpful, does the right thing, has worked hard and reported, so that another story can be told, you as the person rejected or left behind, to see if you become successful on your own without those people in your life. Thats crediting losses, and motivating your progress, its upon losses we pause, think about life, as we are living life, and its not upon failure on our own merits, that we feel at a loss. Thats the difference between being in the wrong and separate or being separate being good, trying to stay well, and do well, thats not to shine above or beyond others, thats you stood out, and upon others doing well, you became less focused, and failed, why because they met you, and did the same or better in life, so that your hardwork, doesnt look special, doesnt look important, doesnt look influential, doesnt look difficult, until what you say becomes about them as read, and until you become on your own again, to watch you improve on your own, that looking at someone, as responsible for catering to your needs until you become well, and then expecting them to be able to stay well on their own, assuming your needs to be well, wont change upon separation and cater to the needs of those who are hurt without you, who are hurt watching you, who are hurt because they know you, or hurt because they dont think you were ever well, had nice insights, were genuine, or ever realized how well or special life was, and that you were not the provider of wellness to anyone not in your life. Generally no one comes into your life unless you are well, and no one is friends with you unless you are nice, and no one likes you unless they want to be loved by you, why? Because it makes them feel good to be loved and they feel special versus, they feel good and you feel special, versus they are special because you feel good, or you are special make them feel good. What despecializes someone, when your gift benefits one to benefit all, versus your gift to benefit all on your own, is how your wellness is lost, by giving first hand, not through someone who is stronger, more well, more powerful than you, who can handle attention.

You pick and choose who to love in life, and based upon who you grow close to, feel a mutual connection absent pain, fear, a place where you can open up and be yourself, and unconditionally loved and accepted in return. Its rare to find people who are so willing to care for you, and watch you blossom, especially in real life. Always be careful of what you say and how you present yourself in private, its upon loss of a connection, love, that pain sets in, if not for one, but for all, thats when one or the other has moved on, and in place of that bond or connection, another one is formed, with someone who brings out a different set fo traits. Its always based upon, who youre connecting with, words come to mind, or behavior elicited, as directed by them, how they want to see you, thats in a loving connection with someone, how they want you to show love toward them, but not all, thats how one who is conservative gets hurt, that upon opening up in a way that they dont show most, are seen under a different light if known to all, to say that she is that way with everyone in private, eliciting for attentions, by being that provocative in close connection with anyone who she thinks likes them, on messenger its who I knwo likes me, and without friends or a boyfriend in real life, its on messenger that one is loved, however the same pains occur upon separation, that is one person hurt, thinking the other is better without them, show how they were with them, to make them seem like they are not deserving of feeling good in a different relationship or a different set of circumstances. One usually feels wronged upon a breakup, everything going right for eachother, and if something goes wrong within, the other doesnt look good or feel good, because things are not the same, and that occurs when love is lost. When love is lost, it is by our choices, that that care is rescinded, and sometimes upon not doing well, catering to voices, self-harming, changing meds, doctors, we find stability, waking up, from a quiet moment with one, and sets in a pain that seems unbearable, but its usually after you have responded to "what things look like" in defense of "what things looked like then at the time you did get in trouble" that you end up worse off "already things were done to make you look like you were being bad: sexual" so someone new looks like the same was done to them upon knowing you, love, and upon you becoming not well, claim to have suffered the same hurt, as though you are someone who upon knowing and connecting with, gets sick, and that when you are sweet that's not genuine, not understanding you have bipolar, and difficultly maintaining that "peace" and "quiet" experienced most often times in loving situations, and be left separate because of their hurt, loving you, and you not being able to provide for them, a version of you that makes them feel good, and in addition, not able to provide a better or different version of you to someone knew who just met you. -In the end, you always wind up looking like, someone who is trying to be like, not someone who is well or pretty, because they think you are not those things, and that by becoming those things in private, and self-harming, that you are not happy with yourself upon being criticized, or assumed to be not smart, or up to no good in private, for those types of interactions or love a "sexual love" or the bond occurring between those who love "be loved" ... I've always noticed that it is those with love who receive love, and those who know how to love, able to give love, upon getting sick, it is your love that is criticized by the other, as not being good enough, an in sincere approach to you not feeling good, or upon opening up, turning them off, that's them thinking you "opening up" is for love or trust, or that how you speak is to explain a condition "of not being able to be loved" because the last time you were sweet or professional, and not provocative, you were punished for giving love, at a time when you were alone, trying to be something in life, without help, and single, only later to become something, successful, graduating and with a website you dreamed of, be hurt in the same way upon separation with a "you hurt me" "because you left" and because you are not the same "available to love and give love" that "you hurt yourself" by being around others? Then, give me love and you look stupid, you get mental illness, and it's not what happened to you I loved you, it's I loved you and now I don't love you, because you did something wrong, makes you feel "bad" "upset" "ill" "don't want any love" = unhappiness. -What creates a better condition? Doing everything right, and why? To be loved and to be trusted, so that you can experience "peace" so that you can achieve a "quiet" disposition, so that upon looking at you "what is thought is not justified as coming from you" and that "what is felt" is not justified as coming from you, and that how you look or feel "is not justified as coming from people outside of you" "about people in your life" to make you look like someone who behaves and responds in life "based on what's around you" mentally ill, or someone "who reacts and responds" based upon what's coming from them, experienced. -If your goals (assumed) are "to be better" anyone thinking your motivations are "to be better than and make others look bad" assume that your better is dependent upon what other people look like, how other people feel, what other people think, not for what's important to you, not in your best interests, not in the best interests of your cares, but in defense of oneself, thinking about others and becoming something you're not, one can only achieve a bettered condition upon being themselves, not absorbing what others think, thinking for themselves, focused on what's in front of them, that's how one moved forward, it's not a better place you get to in life, that makes you realize how far you've come, it's whether you understand when "things are good" and leave, or whether "you created unhappiness" that is dissatisfaction, or not feeling well, and left a "quiet" life and a moment of "peace" to help. -In the real world if you are strong and confident and put together, don't be surprised, if someone take that opportunity, to be in close quarters with you, and get you to do things to benefit or help them, which upon disclosing to who loved you, causes you to hit your head. It's the difference between being beautiful to one, and looking gross to all, because someone who didn't love you, made you look and feel gross to someone who used to love you. If no one loves you, that means better yourself to be loved, you don't become approachable and easy to know, talk to, and able to love back, until you recognize what is love, and how the other benefits with you around, and how that benefit to them, gets hurt when you get hurt.

Being Vindictive ...

Some people think it appropriate to benefit themselves at your expense, that's because in doing so they prove a point, viable and able to return to wellness be apart of or not going to make it not smart enough, and bearing some characteristic or trait unlikeable to most, meaning upon recognition of who they are too all will not be likewise interpreted to having been the brains behind anything new, simply telling a story as it is, and not being smart enough to create a story in a way that relates to all, and from which positive lessons can be taken. That's will a belief that in reporting what you see, and by what you remember and are affected by take personally what you see, as because they see you give you something to remember, which affects you like seeing you affects others in a bad way, or as though it's upon seeing you, that they see bad, or think that something is not right about you. What causes that? Usually when people believe you have changed, assumed that it is for the worst, and that upon seeing a change in character interpret that to mean that you are not doing something right, or assume there is something not right about you, without regard for what you have in life, who you know, where you've been, what you know, what you've accomplished, what life you have lived, think its not impressive that you got into law school and have worked where you work, and instead think to take a less serious approach to understanding how you were able to achieve in life, and make an unhappy memory of you, upon returning to any social scene, to say that you are a bad decision maker and because you are a bad decision maker and we can prove youre a bad decision maker means that you do not have good life in life and make choices to benefit yourself, and are likewise retaliated on to see how you feel if someone makes a decision for themselves, does better, and looks better than you, after having you in their life, and not credit having met you or known you, why because they dont think you deserve credit, they dont think meeting you helped them, they think knowing you brought them bad luck, they think you are sick because you are sick minded, and that because you are sick minded attract sick people, why you get put among the sick hospitalized, because you dont understand health, wellness, intelligence, or the value of a human life, as though you have not been through sickness and back, and have faith. It takes someone who has been through multiple forms of recovery to identify when things are off and by what causes, and so long as you explain sources or causes for illness, how quickly they hurt you to see if you become sick, to show that they are better because you are not well, not doing so because you were right, but to prove it was because you are sick were sick why they were that way hurt, and if the opposite occurs wellness happens. Thats to show that someone does not become themselves absent minded the behaviors and exposures of others unless they can identify a poor response, and sometimes its only until others experience the same can they understand why you got sick, and they got well anyways. If you understand that people will get well anyways, no matter what I find sick, than why make me sick, to make something in the past look well, as though that was a favor to me a like or a lay, or a friendship, or a job, or a sexual encounter, like I needed that be smart, build a website, be a writer.

Understanding Your Purpose ...

If you have an understanding of where you are now compared to where you have been and understand the reasons why you were put on meds, and not able to complete as much work as you would have liked, or been able to finish your studies on time, and receive degrees to credit your hard work, then its probably because you dont understand what things look like to others, whether you have overcome an issue and become a better person, or whether you will be boiled down to one instance of bipolar, breakup, and hospitalization, meaning when left to your own devices get lost, sick, or experince mental health issues, and the reasons for how and why you get sick will always be looked upon, as your exposures in life, and blaming your condition on believing or thinking things are a way they are not because you are not stable, and thinking your stability is dependent upon understanding the past better, your past, as it relates to the condition of others ... this you learn later in life. The more responsibilities you take on in life, the more is expected of you, dont expect that just because you have worked for or been a memeber of organizations, that people will think highly of you, or respect the interests to which you may be known for limits tested in life, to determine whether based upon what work you do, for self or others, how you are affects the outcomes of the interests to which you hold, and then based upon losses or things not going right. establish that because your work ethic does not match the quality conducive to maintaining memberships, or jobs, that its because you as a person do not represent the best interests of those you work for or are member to, because your condition worsens, upon those you work for being disappointed in you, or choices you make whether to participate, able to participate, or choosing to backoff, determine that its to your benefit to be memeber, and that that benefit is not reciprocal, meaning its because of you, that others face difficulty accomplishing their goals, because of your memberships, not benefiting from your condition upon working for others, may not always improve or benefit you, and whether or not you benefit from those you help, that positive momentum, can only be maintained, upon your ability to manage your mental health issues, and refrain from discussions of things past, thought as excuse or justification for caring, as unnecessary to think anyone you knew distantly in the past, has been affected by your current interests be mentioned, thats letting go, you can either get into the nitty gritty of why people think your a bad influence bad luck, whether your success is dependent upon the success of others, and be proven wrong "not normal" because everyone is fine and you are not okay, does not mean something is wrong, and the only reason you feel like something is wrong when you are not well, is because you do not understand what went wrong, to understand why you do not feel well, and because you do not feel well is not the responsibility of anyone to explain to you, until proven wrong, meaning your ideas or methods or interests are not helpful, and because there is something wrong with you, upon everyone knowing you, a similar effect is anticipated prayed for, they will know you, see you, hear from you, see your likes, your ideas, and think youre mentally ill, and if upon improving and being accepted you get sick, its because you have done something wrong, and that their rejections of you or non-acceptance of you was justified, based upon how you look now, where you live, what you look like, energy, be seen as someone who is let go, because they were not disciplined, and because they are not disciplined, is why people are okay without them, similarly not to be credited for work completed as sufficient or demonstrating hard work or professionalism know how. What does this mean, when things do not go right how are you affected? Hurt, withdrawn, bipolar, mentally ill, hearing voices, that's because those who felt right about you rejecting you as being too much or behaviorally unsound, or upon appearances not well if alone, means there is something wrong with you, and those rejections of you justified, as you being problematic, the other not in need, and once in need, seen as someone who is only well when around others, not because they are well on their own, and because separated from others means that it's because of who they are, look in public, brainstorm, think, is why they are treated as someone who does not deserve to write online be apart of or liked ignored, and if no one pays attention to them, think it justified because they got sued apply a Brady rule to them "zero attention" because one person thought they were mentally ill for writing in private to someone, expecting them to care, which is why therapy was suggested once a week, and why meetings were attended, and IOP after being hospitalized 14 days. -What does being human mean? Understanding the transitions that others go through upon meeting you, knowing you, working with them, getting to know them, respecting their boundaries, understanding their temperments, be supportive of their wellness, and their independence, and not take personally, when you go through something, absent minded them, and upon becoming focused on the wrong things in life wonder, stick to what you are doing right in life and know more about, work, that's survival, not trying to understand concepts of blogging, sharing, likeness, etc. and be yourself, and always with assumption your lack of focus or unhappiness is not because they dont need you, its because you on your own, cant do what you need to do to feel like you again, together, whole, professional, and proud, that you can fix, with meds and therapy, that you cannot fix, stuck talking to others, you do not know in real life, getting sick, and then taking pictures and sharing yourself online, that show that's you have mental illness, all exhibition is mental illness, looking at yourself, or looking at others, means nothing to how you are treated better or worse, harder on you, kinder to others, is always based on how you are is how you are treated, like someone who needs to be given a hard time to fix them, to see how they respond well not well, or professional, and not describe how everyone else looks and feels without you, means you are not included or apart of because there is something wrong with you, why others are hard on you, and sometimes being yourself strong, is how you need to be to stay well, not wonder why you lost focus, all stories past will always be used again in the future for experiment as to your good character, so long as every loss can be proven as a product of your misconduct or disability, the more bullying is used to justify, your help is not needed, or your help did not help, or your actions were for no reason, or their feelings matter more, and your travels or choices or meds, are because you were not smart, when others became unhappy with you, and that because you left is why you are mentally ill, not because of them.

How You Look Matters ...

Based upon how you look, determines others acceptances of you, and to others upon looking back through your life determine, whether you are well and unique on your own, or whether your traits are acquired in your surroundings, not a focus born with, that's to determine whether your drive is affected by the energies of others, someone in a room in respected, noticed, or blends in, able to work, and given your education and experiences respected as smart. Sometimes its upon meeting you, and getting to know you, that people change, get ideas, or see the world differently, either enhancing the capabilities of others or not being anyone noticeable among others, not standing out, not because you are not special, but because you do not look smart, doesn't mean you are not smart, or git for procreation, and just because you do not dress sexy, does not mean that you are not beautiful or because of what's going on around you, not feel good about yourself, as compared to others. Beauty is about attraction, someone who by their looks whether dressed up or not, is noticed in a good way, not perceived to be something they are not, its upon being out of your element, and upon being looked at or judged as something you are not, that unhappiness occurs within in the form of being tired, that is something about you, thought, which you are not aware of, and because of your change in lifestyle, or because of how you look, look again back through the men who have liked you in life, and based upon how you look in between relationships judge you as someone who does not blossom in a relationship because you look gay after a relationship, after sex, not beautiful, happy with yourself, missing something, that is your focus, not present in photos, not present with friends, and sometimes upon looking at people you can tell whether they are going to be successful or not, or gone, that is thinking something upon seeing you, and predicting a bad chain of events, thinking you are not smart, and because you are so focused and positive, that you don't also get affected too, face the same hurdles and concepts of living and dying, addiction, alcoholism, sex, identity, fitness, success, intelligence, and opportunity.

What is Special? ...

4/25/2020

At this point be human. What makes someone feel special? Acknowledged, looked at as special, upon displaying oneself, and wanting to genuinely speak to someone, who is interested in speaking to you, that enthusiasm, responded to with open ears of acceptance, that's upon seeing you, noticing you, wanting to get through to you, usually someone observant, wanting the attentions from someone who is busy and not paying attention, solid and whole, focused. Which is why its usually the case that when you are focused on yourself and not looking for love it happens, as you get older you get a routine down, of responding socially in an inviting way, or if taken know, they're excited upon meeting you and like you, its always okay to leave things platonic, there are moments when its okay to dress up and be girly for them, and its okay to dress up and look well for you because that is who you are professional, not trying to attract, what does that mean, nice to be nice, not nice to be liked ... what is the point? Never think too much about the past, how one is liked, what causes people to like you, or ever wonder what has changed since then, to cause others to question whether you ever had a good life to begin with, if only grose representations or stories about you where remembered to cause those looking at you now, to think you have never been well, or have been hiding some disability or unhappiness related to you genetically, socially, physically, inferior to others, not mature. What causes an immature response in your later years, a deterioration of all the years spent mature and put together, opening up, and feeling lost, when lost, not willing to open up for love, why is that, because someone new who sees you put together, and then sees you as open to love, will think that that is how you are, and able to be put together, got to independence living in that way? What occurs that results in poor decision making alone? Its that recognition of others being closer to one another with you in a room, or with friends, gone, what causes that? Its you no longer close to people, and you don't know why, that's upon separation from friends, after being put together and focused really confident and positive talkative, go out once or twice a year, and left at the bar or upon separation found, and treated as someone well who can handle a lay? People who want to have sex with you, but you don't want to, will treat you as someone new to a social scene or bar "talkative" as someone lost, because you aren't in the vibe of the room, serious like them, they don't really care, Im for marriage I can do better! = #dontdodrugs #staysober & FINISH LAW SCHOOL! --At this point Ive moved on from being insecure about my private life DESERVE TO LIVE! Im tired of going to the hospital everytime I dont feel well or suicidal, and dont know why, I think it is important to continue making steady progress, work, write, keep busy, stay active, do my best. Doing my best is not to be FEATURED or to STAND OUT and I improved NOT because I was not well liked became something more likeable or beautiful --- "I AM SMART AND BEAUTIFUL AND PRIVATE."

Everyone Matters Maybe Its Just You?

What is a beautiful story? You know all those movies recommended to you, that's because you should really take the time to stop and smell the roses, people understand what those experiences are like, and just like a movie explain, its usually you, your issues, and when you get sick, its you, your mind, that needs to keep trying, when you look crazy not smart sharing too much information like what you think is important, means you are missing the point, to understand the value of expressions as solutions needed at that time, they do not guarantee coverage of explanation for everything you've experienced, don't share HIPAA, if you know what causes illness, why explain what illness feels like, if you get sick, that because you are not well smart and because of who you are, you do not understand people paranoid, hats focused, and then that's I don't understand why I don't feel good now, that's you losing in life, losing your beauty, and turning into a troll, complaining about face changes, if you self-harm, then why would you give up, if you hear voices, where are you in terms of tired, giving up, only lets people know, you don't care, and because you don't care, why you are sick, at hat point no one cares about what happened to you, only judges you as someone who give up tired without a job, and didn't try hard enough to get a job, be happy with the goals she met, unhappiness, is seeing me, seeing others, then watching me see others, then say im this, than say I look grose because they are well and I am not, and seeing them well is why I hear voices, no one past no one you know has anything to do with your wellness or meds put on. Its by what you know how you say things, how much challenge you've faced, how important you are, what you remember, think is funny, is how you get looked at as mentally ill, why not because there is a bond, of course not, its awkward, but happy for them well talking, wish I was normal too, I don't bother people, she runs, she has power inside, and that power inside, doesn't stop, and because she doesn't stop its because she thinks strong is beautiful, because she wants to help everyone, I have helped, I was a member, once cared showed that care response, if you guys are not happy, that's theres no excitement to down time, then figure out why you are upset, why you have energy, why waste time manipulating, ignored, --care, don't, who cares, people have great lives, if you mention them, they don't care, that doesn't make you special, because you knew special people and they have good lives, if you have up, its because you did coke, and because you did coke on deans list is why you are retarded and hear voices, because someone saw you as able physically to try a drug to achieve what about them: "Im awake, I responded, Im here, Im being social, what is cocaine for?" ---Its to cause stupid scared paranoid become insecure, that's because you looked like you were strong on your own, so you could afford to try a drug, that's fancy, shared, but doesn't last, that's because people use drugs for different reasons, and if you try a drug, and because its dirty illegal and you moved, doesn't mean buy it because you feel grose now, that you tried a drug when you felt good, and suddenly everyone turned on you. That just goes to show, because you cant handle drugs, have friends, means you need help, need friends, "Why do you have friends?" "Who are they?" --Shouting at you why the F are you in the library for 5 hours a day! Go out and make some friends! If you have friends your neighbors, no one will know that about you, only go by Facebook, how you looks entering college and if you start to do better, means insulted? Maybe ... and got adderrall! If you study all day, and night during finals, you memorize outlines and flashcards, attend meetings, get jobs, and don't have mental health issues, means don't date! See your job, see your life, and think who the F are you certified crisis counselor, with albums of celebrities, a good life, why the F are you a volunteer, exactly, someone with a job, if youre not gay, by the time you look like crap, the rainbow cannot cover your mental health issues, rehab already happened, you are well past 30, 6 months rest back to wrok, were you on a big journey, or writing everyday, getting better at writing, exactly, when something good happens that's not a go sign for how to make money from likes, that's like it was liked, can I re-format the same info for money, no its not new, why pay for something already read for free, means it was written for free because its not important easy or something in her that makes her feel good, no its as you are able, everyone gets sick maxes you, when do you stop working, that's a choice to self-harm, I really love my imaginary friends, mean, controlling, sweet loving, almost real, that's because you are real, but because youre here we know you, and because we know you means we understand you, and because we understand you, we just need to know whether you like yourself, or whether you are self-harming because you are mentally challenged upon insult, upon insult, and upon worry, how do you respond, frozen, go home. What is sleep, a good day, and rest. What is staying up, why don't I feel good, and as you look worse and worse, say ya I knew I didn't feel good, and now I actually look like what I was trying so hard to stop, looking grose not well pretty beautiful, that's to show, this person was warned, and upon not listening going. That's me replying I have pleaded please stop "voices" I am not that, hit my head because me looking worse affected by insult, is reassuring to them, that this person is weak, not famous. Why do they like her, because hes special, nice to meet you, why are you sick, everyones giving me talks like its time to get a job, we don't have money, I was ready, now not ready, Im sorry.

You're Only as Good as You See Yourself ...

Its not always for obvious reasons that hate is generated toward you, upon knowing you publicly, what you have said, for what purposes you decide to share your mind publicly on Twitter, and by your current wellness, still not be impressed by you, nor think that you did anything special in life, to sound the way you do, as though everyone is articulate can write, and interpret just as well as you, regardless of your troubles, in life addiction or drinking, not been able to hold center, party hard and achieve, some can only do one thing at a time, not functioning addicts, I never grew up out on weekends, a stay at home student through college and law school, not a bar hopper, until after switching law schools in my late twenties, drank alone, in my thinking about life phase, if your not in your element out alone, then don't go out alone, and if you are in between phases in life, don't wonder in public, look lost, that's when your focus can easily leave you, fall off center, while in repair in any public venue, as observed not improve, it doesn't matter how you spend your down time from working or studying, just be sure once you stop drinking not to drink in those moments after working or being on point. -Stability is achieved upon maintaining positive momentum, and depending what your insecurities or weaknesses are, always best to continue working or do your best to finish a project while its in your mind, and not leave things to the last minute, or try to cram, get done something important, in a short amount of time, it never presents itself well, if its not your best work, and upon presentation, shows obvious signs of disorganization, if not complete, also important to keep in mind, anything well said, or clear, detailed, is easy to digest understand, however the reader may not appreciate how much time and effort went into thinking, researching, assembling sources, reviewing studies, and coming up with a clear picture of how best to describe ones own experience, and describe how while helping others, one is given opportunity to make a positive difference, but only if those experiences helping others are kept private, not shared out loud. Jobs for me have always been by recommendation, upon seeing me, or applying, suggestions made, based upon where I have worked, my first job for the government, via blind advertisement "downtown law firm" applied, not strategically drawn to or made happen by me to situate me politically in a way related to my experiences in life or the experiences of others known, you don't always need training to help, its by trained help is given upon being spoken to for help or a response or an outlet to share, that's by training privileged to be someone who responds professionally, you wont get directions for everything in life, and many emotions you will not know how to deal with, but when it comes to jobs, if youre not picking it up, and if your not well, or not able, or into it, or learning, or improve, then you are somewhere you are not fit to be or smart enough for or educated enough to handle, old enough to care, experienced enough to understand why so devastating, why so many mental health issues, you'd think someone who was able to talk others through their feelings provide resources, would not encounter the same need for help or someone to talk to, maybe that's why upon knowing you, or reading your work, understanding the experience of others, by course work, reading and writing, others grow strength through the hardships of others, that is a put together account or writing that summarizes how to avoid incurring an attitude toward you, like you don't take an issue seriously, think that you can get hurt too, by people you know, or by people who are nice to you, its upon not following through, that one is treated as friend but insulted that one is not as into the other as they were, don't let anyone make you feel bad, that you do not wish to exchange love with them physically, and that you may get along with someone as a friend, but that doesn't mean they did a bad job if liked and spoken to, just means someone is likeable, able to be platonic without a physical exchange, one should never be insulted by a woman, who has many male friends, but does not need sex, means that she is put together has things to do, not yet alone without friends, because she drank or got done by someone she didn't know, and stopped going out, feeling good about herself, happy social, and open to talking to people, proud of where she is in life, how quickly, someone who has not worked as hard as you, can feel that you are put together, want to be nice to you share a moment, then not need you, because they did a good job talking to you until you could not establish a firm boundary, and remember as under the influence to set a boundary, as an empath, sometimes you feel bad upon setting a boundary because the other person feels bad, and that's not the point, and sometimes as approached, someone may be nice, or be insulted if they try to talk to you and youre too busy writing, ignore them or say no thank you, not in the mood to talk to anyone, be social, nothing to do with what they look like, or who they are, or their profession, you'll meet people sometimes, moody not happy, always be nice, and if you can be positive, you never know who will lighten up knowing you, whether they can be with you or not, never make someone feel bad who likes you, take the time to explain, not reject their advances as though they are the cause for you being alone, just explain why you have mental health issues, and not ready to hang out, or fighting with an Ex, the Ex is someone who you took a break from, and upon taking a break, got done, because you let someone into your life, who thought you were fit for a job, not in the middle of something important, trying to go to a new law school, focused on yourself and not looking, however if you are out by yourself, that looks like to others knowing you, that you are out alone, to be approached and being out means you are looking, and based upon your observations, are out to be noticed, to see who likes you, picked or approached until someone you like talks to you, I wasn't doing research, it was based upon the only bar Ive been to in LA, drank in the daytime, the guy I liked was too shy to budge, kissed on the cheek, chased, and then randomly someone else did me, not attracted to, anytime someone has to convince you, means of course they'll feel good, but don't expect them to care if your mental health issues worsen, because all of a sudden you looked like a mature step back to reflect sober fix your life, to someone who is stupid out to date and because out to date, got done, and get blamed as someone out to date to get done, to find better, why better thinks less of you, rejects you as stupid, don't live up to negative expectations of you, and upon insult, self-harm, or drink, or put yourself in a system if suicidal because someone else thinks the space you take is justified as having done poorly grade wise, attacking you like youre doing anything wrong before anything wrong occurs, it's a disbelief in you, that if you are not strong, can make you aggravated, cause your head to hurt, be in control, and suddenly hurt by someone you spent 3 years loving, who rejects you back and calls you names, then gets blamed as though you left someone out cold for personal reasons, like your bipolar is not a legitimate excuse to stay separate and figure out what's causing it, recover from a setback in life, regroup, in order to have the energy to love and do on someone who can function work and succeed independent of you, but then claims need upon leaving them. -Im just someone people like to talk to, open up to, even in jail quiet, -lots of talking!

Being Better Than v. Being Apart Of ...

Depending upon who you have met in life, and now know of, able to see them in person online, how they are at the present moment, are connected, usually those who upon mention of connections known, are judged poorly, as because of knowing about, are stating what they know, to describe your knowledge as an unknown connection to them or not existing or known to them, meaning you know of someone that doesn't know you, and are put down because they think you talk about who you know, like you know them, to make yourself look connected, when in reality, you have not connected with those people in real life, seem like someone trying to make themselves look more knowledgeable or connected than they really are in real life, and that if upon stating that a person is known but not known in real life, is assumed because you were not good enough put together or popular connected to be places where you could have known this person in person or spoken to them meet them, have connected, and that upon entering an establishment, hosted by a name mentioned to you, that you think its important, think less of you, because you are mentioning someone in your space, website, detailing that you went to a club, rented by a person, who you were later told, helped compose a track on an album, a "black album." With anticipation that you are going to mention: You lost a "black photo album with pictures of you and your friends, in high school," went missing, put you down, like youre assuming the same name means titled because of a knowing of an album of your that went missing or shown to others, who may have known you titled the album, to share a story, with the intent, of not enlightening to improve add insight value but to make others look as though connected without you, and even being supplied with information about you, not to make you famous, but to empower those, who are assumed to have inside knowledge about how a title was made, how one was connected past, to say you are trying to establish or make known who you know, because you have "inferiority" issues, or hierarchical issues or power issues or pretty issue, or likeability issues, or attraction issues, or low self-esteem issues, and that because you were that way, why others were pictured better than you remembered upon being viewed by others, and good pictures of you taken, to leave you only to be remembered by the condition you are in now, without recall of those memories, as ever having been a significant factor known to have assisted with any changes within you, that led you to focus better, have a boyfriend, date, or make friends senior year, as though you were missing out in high school (one of the best periods of my life), that you felt the need to explain that missing photo albums, caused you to think something outside of you hurt you, or ever think that having photos, made you responsible for managing the privacies or identities of others as known, and that because of the pictures you had, losses occurred as known to you, or that someone outside of you saw pictures taken by you, to argue you situated yourself in a way socially or by appearance or by neediness, or friends made, with people, that could hurt you, and that because of your poor taste in friendships or associations you were hurt, along with any informations or photos taken by you in your private records, that subjected others to be looked at by bad people, and upon being known to bad people, searched for, or stalked, as though you are continuing as mentioned to explain a connection between similar words as though connected because similar words were used, to make you look stupid as connecting words to say that because two words are the same, that these words are based upon these words, and because you think that way, its okay for us to think you assume, something bigger or better is about you, or referencing you to cause you harm, and saying that makes you look like youre trying to look like a victim, to someone using the same words, and make things about your losses in life, that's to shed light on an assumption, of a loss, and knowledge provided to someone above, to be credited as bringing together all, and upon mention, be excluded, as not appreciative of that vague reference, to say that losses occurred while knowing your photo albums got stolen or went missing and all your CDs and iPod and Yearbooks, and favorite clothes, pants and tops, because taking from you, seemed like it was okay, because you had so much in front of you going for you, and the fact you didn't notice, made it look like you moved on, or did not value what was kept, to leave you with a life, not with memories of your good years socially to evidence your normal life, and leave you to create and record a new life, to see how you fair, upon others knowing your old life, to judge whether you were mentally ill or an addict, or obnoxious drinker grose as exaggerated poses making fun of the drinking experience, were left to be seen and judge you as not mature ladylike attractive because of how you looked and behaved drinking in public, in a club, never have been clubbing, to say, you have pictures but no longer in touch with friends or friends of friends a host of get togethers anymore, because you left a connection, because of your instability, and connections not maintained post argument or upset or change, because you do not correct or fix or explain, think the other is being dramatic or sensitive not allowing you to be upset, so you are made to look like the cause of losses, or friendships not maintained, to similarly argue, photos lost, because you don't care to keep track of or save, that you're a careless friend, or not affected by losses, to see how far you get in life, and upon the moment of looking back, what causes you paranoia, as referenced to by pose in a yearbook similar to a pose on my senior page, to see whether you took that reference personally, as though your quote was not sincere or special, to call attention to a portion on your page, as though it was a topic to highlight and happily shame you as overhead titled "voted most shady" as though, upon losing friends, didn't try hard enough to make things work, as though you had no friends, didn't have other friends, to make you look gone or grose, so long as you look worse off, and those images of you can be remembered makes you look like you were never well, or someone who is not well, doesn't recognize when not well, and as around others, affects the wellness of others, and because shy not engaging with others, that one is similarly experiencing the same issues as one looked like in high school, to say a title on a yearbook was purposeful to make it look like everyone talked $hit about you, behind your back, why you ended up looking grose, without respect for friends you did have, to say you look grose now overweight because you think or with expectation trying to make it look like its because voices are talking $hit about you, to make you look like someone who doesn't get hurt, or doesn't complain, because accepts themselves among as lesser than, and that's how you are lesser than, and only because of who is social, you were social, not social on your own, no in college I made friends, if that was not a goal not needed, then alone time I preferred. #stophate

When Two People Get Along ...

Its not assumed to be possible, when there is upset, for whomever is the cause of upset, to get along with whoever is upset with them, and then chimes in a third party, who either reassures one of those reasons for upset, justifies causes for upset, explains reaction to upset, and demands privacy, peace, and solitude too in the process of reassessing, the connections one makes in life, time invested, heart and support given, provided and success achieved, and then not feeling good, upon attentions publicly reported to have been replied to, upon checking on someone, connected to a "theme" or a "joke" once shared, upon "responding to losses" for what reasons they passed "the blurb" and then stepping into the scene to figure out what everything is like, as though people you meet can provide you with insights as to how, people leave earth, and given their understandings, or upon knowing you, can recognize why, looking at you, as though knowing you, gives them answers, and at the same time wakes up, another force, a competing energy, which is thinking about the past, as people have been lost, not bringing up the past as mentioned, because that causes pain, to those who hold them in memory, and as someone later affected, thought to have not been affected until after sharing, and learning of the insights of others, thought you could explain, or pin point, what information known privately was again, thought to have been said publicly, not upon a loss, triggering the sharing of information about, as in memory of someone, share a story about, to argue insult upon mention caused illness, and upon insult as mentioned, in connection with other themes and beliefs, set them off to be someone who informs who is not in on a joke, then feel bad, if someone realizes what others have said about them, or eventually figure out what they feel gone, or look grose in photos, maybe just not liked, punished, and as someone achieves a better condition, and then put down labeled a disappointment, that's to cause others to let go, not rely upon someone with mental health issues, so that they are not looked at for faith purposes, as carrying insight, or ability, that would restore the energy lost, from disappointment, so long as you are not a contributor of wellness, you will be treated by meds, as someone who doesn't recognize the value of their experiences, or education, and chose to share their lives online, not in a professional way, express themselves, and the worse off your condition could become hurt and as affected, the better letting go could be, of someone they deemed as not suffering real hurt, just failure upon not achieving, not an actual loss of data, that's after having read ones telephone notes with a Professor of another law school, went to orientation, and spoke with a Professor about a deposition, recalled seeing a flyer on a door, reporting a stolen computer case, no one can answer you if you don't know what you want to know in life to better understand whom, and if it does not benefit you to share the experiences or losses of others, but only causes you harm, to share your timeline, then stop sharing and call the police, how blames get put aside for you, triggered, to speak to losses, not be considered one in appreciation of the progress made, not apart of that progress, someone trying to get up, by looking at others more complete, that's to make you look like a poser upon recognition of well, feel better, and only upon being looked up to, adored, loved, shine, why dimmed out.

Personal Update ...

4/21/2020

Going running for 2hrs then work on my dissertation already have a headache overwhelmed have done my best, wish to blog new stuff not from my life + research.

Thank you for your understanding. Being considerate of my feelings not insult me or hurt me on behalf of others put me in the hospital because dissatisfied with my writing or abilities to get along with others be well liked, it's a gift, social skills, adaptability, being independent, new, not needy, stable, & well looking appearance wise, not broken fragile or nervous, under any attacks, by words or elsewhere, fall apart, a lot of life requires you not to internalize emotions like "hate" "mean words" not get affected, I'm obviously too sensitive for criticism, have given my all in writing over the past few years that's hard work, a finished product and with likes. I would like to write a book not about my life or love because that just creates sides, they may feel insulted not privileged to be mentioned thought of in the positive, because they're trying to make me look like I ever got offended as loosely referenced be aggressive toward me bc they think my sharing humor was intended to insult put down not join help think.

How many misunderstandings are later created or mentioned thought of to justify why someone was punished and continue to hurt someone me as someone who needs others to get work done, needs love, can't focus on my own achieve without love, nurturing, I grew up at my Dads house, and played sports, lived alone, not a sex addict, started dating in college, new to getting picked, liking, hook ups. It takes heartbreak to stop dating #bekind. Don't treat me as benefiting from having a famous friend was up in life special. No it's by being a good person, talked to.

Sincerely,

1. Recognition of the Past.
2. Revisiting Issues and Able to Regain Present Consciousness.
3. Sharing What You Remember, Not as Excuse.
4. Allowing Past Interpretations to Prevail Without Downplaying Wrongs.
5. Acknowledgement of Errors, and Making Changes to Discourse.
6. Be Strong, But Not Overpower the Perspectives of Others.
7. Knowing When to Stop and Let the Dust Settle.
8. Not Fight Over the Past, Only as it Relates to Present Abilities.
9. Keeping in Mind the Best Interests of Everyone Affected.
10. Knowing When You Have Raised Controversy, and Being Quiet to those Issues Past.
11. Representing Only What You Yourself Have Been Through.
12. Setting Goals, without Blaming Others for Your Difficulties.
13. Understand that the Less You Share, and The More Humor You Apply the Less Seriously You will be Taken in Life.
14. Leave no Room for Error Moving Forward, but Filling in the Gaps.
15. Explaining Thoroughly Where You Have Been, Know What Your Plans Are.
16. If You Have no Plans, not Interfere with the Plans of Others.
17. Rise Above Hate, not Take a Lesser Position as Stupid, to Enable It to Occur.
18. Once You become Aware You are not Liked, not Seek Acceptances from All.

19. Love Yourself Unconditionally, No Matter what is Heard About You or Others.
20. Learn to Move On, Let Go, and Let the Past Remain, Without Added Input by You.
21. Leave things Open, when it Comes to Fixing Yourself, not Fix Others Opinions as to You, as You Make Progress, Once you've not Proven Yourself to Them, that Voice of Non-Acceptance of You can not at a Later Point be Changed to Accept you, once Heard.
22. Forgiveness will Be Required of You in Order to Move Forward in Life.
23. Accept that People will Change, or Get Stronger, Maybe Not because of Knowing You.
24. Understand that People will do as they May with their Minds, its not Yours to Know.
25. How People Think, will always be Individually of Merit to them, based upon what they Know, what they Assemble, what Processes, and what Helps them to Grow.

Lately, I have been thinking a lot about, lending things out for misinterpretation, and whether timing matters, as to explaining, or whether that just adds more fuel to the fire, in terms of acceptances from you, and by the time you're fed up, and complaining, all that is remembered is what is aggravating you, bothering you, and in your weaker moments what is said, to not shed a heavy light upon issues, without disregarding the past, lightening the tone, and anywhere the tone is lightened, gets used to harp on, whether underlying reasons, images, exposures, likeness, or issues, are causing one to speak less or more about some issues, more than others. I think what is offensive, is if someone who if given opportunities in life, decides to give up, and upon giving up, allows things to unfold, in a disorganized fashion, which can lead to animosity toward, as not having the guts or the patriotism to respond, and then blame them if upon responding, they can argue subjects others to harm, that would be a selfish endeavor, if about one's own losses in life, one seeks to notify or make change happen, as though one knows the causes for the passing of others, without regard for someone's own suicide attempt (2009), it doesn't matter for what reasons, as it is usually mental health issues, left untreated, that result in making poor decisions for oneself, or respond uncharacteristically to inner turmoils, or threats posed by the possession of another to one's own best interests for attentions in life. -There's a stopping point, when it comes to providing a clearer representation of where someone is coming from, and exactly by what connections, knowledge, or inputs, one has come to understand how things are made, and by what means finished products used, and it's really only until after you have said your part, things get left alone, or issues with you resolve themselves, sometimes you'll never know whether someone who disliked you, no longer feels bothered by you, but it's worth a try, to correct any thought assumptions of you, so that those beliefs of you don't carry on, and continue to interfere with incoming connections judgments of you, believing you to be something you are not based upon what is heard about you. We all live private lives, and we all have professional and social selves, there comes a point when some of us are accepted no matter how we are, because we are respected, and some of us need to continue presenting self professionally, in order to be social, and be respected again, that's not a privilege in life, by upbringing or money given to someone, received respect, that's a quality about someone, as well adjusted, that gets noticed by others, at ease, improves themselves. -If you become worse off, forgiveness is key, not by talking $hit about experiences past, or by sharing outloud interactions, accepting self as stupid, letting the other appear as victim, upon being spoken about, how you get handed a $hittier hand in life as an open book, that's how the telling of your story does not benefit or fix harm to reputation, but builds hate toward you, as though you were aware of your position held in society, and did not say no to interactions with people who wanted love and belongingness needs from you, reciprocate that love.

Hotline counselors and professional therapists who provide advocacy to sexual assault survivors are an understudied population. Researchers have begun to focus on the adverse affects of exposure to trauma on a continual basis and the vicarious effects of trauma (VT) experienced by counselors and therapists who interact with survivors of sexual assault. Little is known about the impact that VT has on counselor's/therapist's ability to help themselves in addition to helping others. This study describes how hotline counselors and therapists learn to manage their emotions, overcome symptoms of VT, and learn to deal with disturbing emotions resulting from direct exposure to trauma experienced by sexual assault survivors. The goal is to outline the factors that contribute to the counselor's and therapist's personal and professional development and explain how they learn to help themselves first before helping others.

Managing Emotions on a Crisis Hotline

Leslie Fischman

As an undergraduate student at the University of Colorado at Boulder, I composed my Honor's Thesis, entitled "Dealing with Vicarious Trauma and Managing Emotions While Providing Advocacy to Survivors of Sexual Assault." As an undergraduate I was a rape crisis hotline counselor for over two years, then decided to apply to law school.

Being Human ...

While under the attack of COVID-19, some States and Countries suffering graver consequences of its spread than others, it has become ever more pressing, to be present in the moment, taking good care of ourselves, and those around us: (1) Waiting in Line for Groceries, (2) Texting and Checking on Loved Ones, (3) Practicing Good Hygiene, and (4) Having Manners (6 feet apart). -It can be stressful for anyone at this time to fathom, all those lives lost, and all those lives living, and think of all those responsible for helping manage the livelihoods of those living. Its important to grow, and to think about the future, but also with respect to whats going on presently, take a step back, and be professional, and with good grace, display some respect for all, not waste the time of others, nor aggravate current pressures to stay well, with old problems, concerning ones own wellness, or the wellness of others, give room, for people to move forward, grow from the past, and realize their good fortune, if privileged to be among the well. We all struggle to make ends meet, and now is no different than before COVID-19, now with fewer jobs, and opportunities for success, the pressure may seem unbearable, to be without work now, and in the future, have opportunities lost, if we fall into any kind of mental health issue, or depression, that could inhibit our abilities to stay positive in spite of the times. Why self-care is so important. -Worry less about image, and what others think, you come first. And if you are privileged to be among the well, then by all means take on a leadership role online, and "spread the wealth," meaning afford other people opportunities to lead, and be given the attentions they deserve, for maintaining their own wellness, living a positive life for themselves and hopefully for all, as shared. -Healing is a painful process, of remembering where you've been, what you have endured, and be free from any further harassments, about your past, or how you were, and be accepted as you are now, in a better condition, be forgiven for how long it has taken for you to be a recognized source of input online, and be forgiving of those who were hard on you along the way, and did not believe in you, or your ability to succeed in life, and be respected for your hardwork and talents. Not all hardwork appreciates overtime, that's the beauty of working, sometimes to better a current position, and sometimes, to ensure that the benefit of work past, continues to be of value in the present moment and for the future's benefit, work is produced, such as in writing or in entertainment endeavors. -I have yet to earn a living from my writings, have been doing my best to improve mental health wise, in spite of my disabilities (voices and bipolar depression), and in spite of the odds against me, have managed to come full circle, on my own, positive, and going up on Alexa again (2020), the highest mark in (2019) was 34,000, and now this year back up to 47,808. The lesson is to keep trying, and with awareness of your weaknesses, do your best to improve, whether that's taking new meds, finding a sleep schedule that suits you, in bed by 8 or 9 pm, not pushing yourself to your limits in life, training cardiovascularly, running up to 2hrs at a time, and losing weight (-25 lbs so far), the skies the limit for self-betterment, only you know your limits in life, but always be human. Being human to me means: backing off when its right, and pushing forward when its okay, learning from mistakes, and comprehending the lessons you learn along the way, having an ability to make change happen in your life, and cognizant of the changes ongoing around you, appreciative of how far you've come, knowledgeable of the good efforts of others to present the issues, helpful when discerning truths from the issues, and doing your best not to be of issue, not to raise controversies where none are due, attracting only to yourself energies or privileges in life by being yourself, not presenting self as better than you are misleading others to believe in opinions as geared by someone who is weak not smart or jealous of the wellness of others be yourself well enough to not be intimidated or made to feel weak as compared to others successes in life independently successful on your own, even if tired disciplined and tired in a good way, and not bring anyone down with you if you fail, that's responsibility, acknowledging what you have to offer, appreciative of what others have to offer you, but being no more dependent on the other to fix you, as you are on your own, should need no fixing in order to be loved, and to be of value to another, and just because someone does not see the value in you, continue to value yourself, and be of value to others, is being human, or a website, that promotes the efficiency of thought, that encourages and promotes the holding of opinions, that's willing to withstand social pressures and backlash for ones past (ie stay sober), to not allow the effects of ones bipolar to affect the outcomes of the decision making of others, as expressed by someone any pains they have endured as misunderstood or feeling under or overwhelmed by issues over their head in life, and continue ones education to continue adapting to the present moment, with respect for all the strides made by others, not interfere with the positive progress of those in charge, or above you in life, discourage their abilities, and no matter how harmed you feel not self-harm or cause harm to others wellness or interfere with their ability to feel loved and receive positive blessings generated from the ones they love or who have given them love in life, not take away from those experiences in life, replace the love given to one or a few, with the need of one, disturb that sequence of care. Its usually the case that someone without something in life, feels more whole having something or someone in life, in the case of mental health issues, as misunderstood, one cannot be made better by having things in life or someone, those issues exist with or without things or people, how and why discipline cures all.

Hardwork and Recognition ...

Today we live in a world, that as you make progress you can share your progress along the way, sometimes to your benefit and sometimes to your detriment, are competed with in life. That's just as a result of sharing where you are at in life, someone seeing what you have, and wanting to do better than you, or thinking that they are better able and equipped to provide to others, better than you are able to provide insights to others. Be professional. As you grow academically and professionally, as I have, you don't always have the time, to speak publicly to everyone or share photos, such as on facebook, I never participated on facebook, rarely as a law student, it was only until after leaving one law school and getting into another, I thought it would be wise, to share where I am at, what I have learned, and represent myself, and share my thoughts. -Im a much different person now, having shared, than I was before I shared, with more privacy, and ability to focus, and get things done, that's the price you pay, for sharing, being an open book, and subject to more interpretation. You would think that by sharing, that the discomforts you faced living a private life, would be resolved upon sharing, recognizing your hardwork, and all that you have been able to achieve thus far, however without expectation that more of you would be expected. That's a choice you make, to avail yourself, to public scrutiny, and learn to be aware of what you share, in public, and how interpreted by all, can either make or change your circumstances in life, better things, or make worse, your condition, when it comes to feeling understood or misunderstood in life. -If you are a hardworker, and if your work product was sought after by other student, because you made great outlines, and able to digest and interpret and put together lots of information in a coherent and memorizable format, then maybe blogging is for you, when you apply your worth ethic, through education, to information known by you and learned, to all, on a much larger scale be viewed, and upon recognizing your work ethic, be equally respected or trusted, as an information provider. -I would like to say that things are much different now, who knows whether I had a blog and a popular website as a law student, that my relationships would have worked out better, or that I would have graduated, as a public figure, you cant go back in time, and wonder always. Sometimes you have to do your best, no matter what your circumstances are, no matter what is known about you, no matter what you've been through in life, and continue to be well liked and get along well with others, whether on a smaller scale or a bigger scale such as a website. To what benefit does the reader receive upon reading my work: (1) Everything I have written has been written by me, (2) Everything written, and sources read along the way, have been kept, (3) I cite to anything not coming from me, (4) I am very meticulous and keep accurate records of all my writings, for book writing, if not destroyed or lost, (5) Im not a political figure, (6) I support others in the creation of their finished work products, (7) I do not critique or write opinions about the work of others, with the potential to devalue or make look different than their work stands, or looks to others as is, (8) I continue to improve despite my mental health issues, open about my condition, honest about my disabilities in life, (9) I write everyday, when I can, and whenever its possible to write to stop attacks from occurring to the esteems of the well, speak, (10) I do not mislead, by personal hunches or feelings, always based on reality, current feelings, express myself, (11) I report often to governing bodies, (12) I always do my best, (13) I don't misuse the work of others, to my benefit, share, to make myself look good.

Originally Written 04-30-20

(Thoughts After Reading): The main point is whether the well can fix those who are not well, a misunderstanding and dilemma. Some people suffer, and dont return to wellness, and some people are critical until someone appears not well, to justify dislike for someone who is well and has lived a good life, life ruined. What are voices (life is good, but can hear people criticizing them -> to cause one self-harm, and upon self-harming, one experiences disability, gives power to those not in agreement with them, suffer, and as a result, lose their place in life, well, and ability to be well around others, hiding something, a condition in which one hears voices and self-harms, opposite a condition thought one wants to be someone else, versus one is themselves, to say one who is not themselves is not a victim too?) You should always want to be yourself, and it not upon recognition of wellness once returns to wellness, if mimicry does exist, then why have I just lost 25lbs, and get 2000+ Likes a post? I stay home because I know my condition is different than what others feel, understand its just me that hears voices, and understand what pressures and inabilities have caused voices get it. Not feeling good, its who doesnt feel good thinks not feeling good is because I dont feel good?

You are only as well as you sound, and based upon interpretation by others, accepted given your condition, or critical of you as not being apart of a solution, meaning what you have to say does not benefit all, or a group of individuals, who believe you to not be of help to others. Thats judging you based upon what you have to say, as not being of significance, and while you have managed to achieve well, and get well, do not provide assistance to those in need, meaning you dont make sense, and until you dont make sense not feel well, are coming from a bad place in life, a not well condition, not coming from a better state of mind, a recovered condition. Thats judging someone based upon what they are saying and how they are saying it, not make sense, thats because one is going from making sense to not making sense, feeling well, to not feeling well. Thats hurting someone abilities in life, until they dont sound well, dont feel well, and dont make sense, so that no one can relate to them, so that they dont improve, to say that they are now affected by those not improving, to see whether their condition betters from the wellness of others, or whether their conditions worsens as among others. Now Im not well dont make sense. This is an example, of writing that doesnt make sense, when Im not feeling well.

This is an example: upon knowing you, and seeing you as a so-called provider of a solution, demonstrating that you too can experience disorganization, to see whether you can fix yourself. And how whether what you had to say, provided solution, to what, and whether as disorganized cause worse or better conditions in others to occur and why? Until everyone is better than you, because it is thought that someone who is better, achieves better, thinks that they are better than others?

Your Well Being ...

Happiness is not always shared, especially not love, and nothing well is ever contingent upon the happiness of someone in disagreement, to their ability to be well, that's just hate, thinking they deserve to be in a better condition than others, and because of their poor condition, not happy for someone who is in a better condition than they are able. It just so happens that the same condition can occur within someone who is well, who upon experiencing chaos, or an assumed nightmare, losing footing, and ability, to which empowers anyone who is not in favor of their well being, think deserved, that's hate. Seeing someone who is doing well, and hurting them, because they think they can handle a down in life, or are deserving of being brought down in life, that's just advantage. Some people gain advantage over the condition of others, by their wellness, to offset what has gone wrong, and there are some who maintain momentum as the well are offset by something that hurts, whether that be a feeling or an inability, therefore who winds up ahead in life, and who ends up better off. -I think that you are only as well as you see the world, and your ability to stay well is always based upon what you have to say, not everything you have to say will be in agreement with the majority or minority to a circumstance, a story, an outcome, a belief, a historical referencing, an action, a success, an ability, having overcome, having healed, having been through, having recovered from a condition not well, stay well. We are all capable of getting sick, and everyone feeling the same is not the solution to wellness, at some point you have to allow for leadership to take place, that is by someone who sees more, understands more, has been through these troubles longer, understands patterns better, has a higher success rate, of those being well around them, and not allow an exchange to occur, by someone who is private, to someone who lives publicly and socially, and for them to take your place in life, and be you, and see you as less than or a cause for instability, that's taking things personally, given your education and background, think that because of what you have studied know better, or think you are better, and that just because of what interests you or by the population of people you have helped, think that is what has empowered you to be a better person, improve, and been able to avoid sickness and improve. -What is a good life? A life lived to its fullest potential, a life in which opportunities for an individual are created based upon the choices they make, to situate them better off in life, better than who? Better than they were, better than they had, better than most, and better for all. What is usually too late by the time someone gets better? Is how they were when they were struggling, how they were when they were not well, and what losses they suffered, whether purposeful (right to privacy) or whether by accident or whether to better themselves, information shared, kept private, and to whose benefit, a recordation of one's thoughts and progress, its usually to the benefit of someone who is going through something difficult to share out loud in private what is bothering them, that's not a public's right to know, someone's mental health issues, fears, or troubles, or comprehend their difficulties in life, be taken seriously, based upon what they have been through, like seriousness creates respect, seriousness in some people's cases, such as myself, causes worry to anyone not under the same stress and difficulties in life, to explain, to present, to behave, to express, to think, and to represent themselves in a way, unaffected by the majority's public's opinion, or one person's opinion of them not accepting of their condition, that's always based upon what is shared, is what is thought. Some may try to help you, some may try to hurt you, that is all based upon belief. whether those who are playing victim to your life, rights are more important than your own, right to privacy, and not be victimized over and over again, to your own expense to their benefit. That's seeing opportunity in hurting someone, ie me, to benefit all, at whose expense? What's always unsettling is something occurring in private, to shed new light unto someone, to make them look stupid, unimportant, easily manipulated, at risk of harm to themselves, and a poor representation of who is professional, smart, or based upon their resume, proven wrong. You always get attacked on the basis of the subjects you represent why loving is difficult to date, and why friendship is difficult maintain confidentiality, when under attack by new people. Its always those who are fresh to an equation, with ease, pick apart someone with what's been given, and that's how a side is made toward someone, when one person disagrees and others agree with the person who is in disagreement with the lifestyle another is living, alone sober.

It Takes One to Know One ...

Depending upon how you say things, determines how you are treated. In today's society respect is based upon whether you can articulate your thoughts, hold a conversation, be balanced, and always tested from where you are coming from. Sometimes esoterically, connections can be made, that causes others to wonder, why you're not doing well when others around you are doing well, as though one another is interdependent upon the others success, and question whether your success in life benefits those around you, whether others support your writing career, or whether writing is improve ones life, to have a good life too. Writing means all of those things, proving yourself to others, and not be denominated to something you are not, be treated the same, as having been through a lot too in life, and deserving to be heard, and like others have achieved success in life, be able to overcome whatever obstacles are standing in between you an achieving your goals in life: graduate from law school and write a book. Theres no such thing as easy money, you either are well liked, and have something beneficial to say, or your are not yet arrived to wellness, the basis from which it is determined whether you have anything worthwhile to share, and whether what you have to share can benefit the reader, or whomever is currently suffering, or fails to see what youve been through as a significant struggle worth writing about. We all have to find our center on our own. There are not directions to being centered, waking up and having a good day, and waking up better than we were the day before, thats being human, not all days will be good, and some days harder to get over than most. -Today it seems like everyone is trying so hard to get to the core of issues, and forgets to see the beauty in progress, and because people get fixated on defining problems within people, they fail to appreciate their progress, and sometimes it becomes a game of who is better than who, who is more stable than who, who can be proven rights and who can be proven wrong, and upon what basis do others thrive, when you look like youre in the wrong, to set you free from what blames, as to your condition, if you are doing better now. Proving others wrong, does no one a good service in life, to engage in topics, concerning the betterment and basis for betterment of those outside of them, who only upon engaging in discussions concerning rights and wrongs, prove themselves better, upon viewing your life, not seeing you in a positive light, and then try to justify your hardships as though based upon how they see you, in a negative light, to justify your current hardships now as not to be empathized with, understood, thats the moment you give your power away to others to define you. -Theres a tipping point, when everyone feels like crap, neither party who looks better feels better, and no party doing extremely well, in spite of how others are doing, shine, thats the point at which all sides get affected, no matter how well anyone is doing, thats the stopping point, when you stop focusing on problems (ex. sources of inspiration), and start focusing on solutions to wellness, not think about whats gone wrong, not think about who was wrong, and not think about what went wrong, thats lending insight, to what has gone wrong, and what the person who thinks went wrong was thinking, upon things going wrong, thats the wrong focus, thats taking something well made, and hard to make a popular website, then directing focus upon wrongs, to hurt the entire wellness of everyone reading, who was thinking about now, whats going right not whats gone wrong. Most of the time offense is taken when someone who is doing well, cant stay well, and in defense of ones own condition, blame whoever is doing well, as contributing to their feeling of things not going right, because whoever is doing well does not make them feel well. This is why having a website is important to me. Sometimes we are well enough to witness others going through a difficult time, and come to appreciate where we are at in life, seemingly not connected to where they are at in life, and sometimes, everyone can be brought down, when someone who is well and admired by most, turns out to be a disappointment, bothered in a bad way for having known them, heard from them, trusted them, believed in them, known them. There are certain tracks in life that your cant turn around from, being lifted up, or bringing others down, and if one is not sure whether you are capable of lifting others, or whether you brought others down, then look around the person, see how everyone else is doing well? Then that means let go of trying to turn someones positive life into something less than to feel better about where you are at in life, and understand that personal choices in life dont define a person, only further denominate a person from view by others, by their likes disliked. -I think my story is a success story, graduating from law school in spite of having been hospitalized 9 times bipolar, building a successful blog, and having drafted several books, to publish one book.

Why is it okay for someone else to use my work, to build a campaign for themselves in support of their causes in life, but its not okay in my endeavors, whether to include people as being apart of a solution, or not including people who do not wish to be included, as know to bring about positive change in your life or in the lives of others, not understanding your experiences, position in society, abilities, or others, and based upon who you are able to do so. In today's society, who you are is based upon who you know, who your friends are, result of not being trusted, others did not wish to be included, and as a result took it upon themselves to better themselves without me betterment, or for the betterment of others. That is their life as lived, for themselves, not their lives as lived in spite of me. That I think well made website, with current dialogue, surrounding current issues I think much support was lost along the way, and in order to defend seeing you, change you to fit their definition, of you they think you are, why misjudgment, if foul, is so frowned upon, and illegal, to turn themselves against me, as though it is because of my website or causes I support, are because of my cares, before any incidents occurred lived, we decide to change, to better ourselves to live better lives. According to my observations, and based upon my experiences working for the elderly, I have noticed the following: (1) No one is good individual that does not empower, nor resolve gone. Generally being hyper vigilant is a trait of those, who have experienced mental health when to move on (g) when to be forgiving (h) how to survive (i) what to live for (j) and who to live for. Just because you are someone professionally, interpersonally, romantically, and socially if ever. Its generally someone who thinks they are above you, that grounds you (self-harm)? Those are the temperments that I get tested under, and conditions I get put under, no matter how well Im doing thats to self-harm, causing you to not like yourself based upon something youve said, and by contributing to causes for your illness, toward self, that not by my instincts correct in my judgment of others, so long as I am not well, others are better, the scales are balanced as to opinions genuine, its upon being nice to you, its your job to be nice back. -Im not an angry person, have never been in a fight my entire life and allow for put downs as though you deserve it or (4) whether you are rising out of a condition, rising out of observation, blind siding of is being nice, cordial, reflective, and sharing upon reflections, like anyone else, what is going right, what has gone right past, and as a sense now.

It's not a very uplifting condition, going backwards and revisiting moments when you were not well, that goes for everyone, who upon and growing from mistakes past, and if not become a better person in spite of what you have gone through, we all have lives, and not do it up, and if making friends is easy for you, then by all means help others, who fall out of tune in life, and unable to make friends, find of them, we can't all be well liked, or possess qualities, traits, and characteristics likeable to most, but that doesn't mean that you can't be better off you become, that's because of the faith restored in you by those who know you, begins to overpower what is said about you, the disposition of someone who has had bad experiences in life. There is always room to learn, and although you might not understand something that has happened to them, not everything said is a manifestation of an experience, a person, or a moment in time, sometimes people like people from the past, who have caused us harm, or affected our well-being, whether reflected in our daily prose, or not. -I try to affect your psyche, to see which points of interest you wind up at, negatives, or fall upon positives when discussing your life, as lived, presents themselves, and whether because of the voices you hear, that you are not at a well-vantage point in life, so that their vantage point negative insights, to take hold over you or others, and whether as spoken through you, those negative insights are capable of taking hold than who at that point. What is the point of discussing what doesn't exist, is that to prove that things not existing in time and space (a void) sometimes, people think that if you feel like them, then you will understand them, I'm not one of those people, who expects people to be recognize what you've been through in life, as a hardship, or a complex position in life, that you have had to do well in spite of, the time the issues you have cared about, see the significance of your cares, in helping others arrive to well. That's people thinking that by your

The Weight of Criticism ...

At times there will be no seeing beyond criticism, and the weight that criticism carries, can be very weighing on your outlook, and the way, that's not allowing yourself to move forward and enabling bullying to keep you from achieving your goals in life. I once said that regard for who made you feel less than, rejected you from their lives, or wanted a better catch. Not all people will match up in life, and has not gone well, that takes its toll, it's not people who are to blame when things do not turn out right, who are doing well, and who are people who think they are more well off than them, thinking that it's okay to criticize someone who is no longer in their lives, whether upon someone's life, so that upon looking back on someone's life by everyone, they are seen under a similar light, at a later point in time doing the best that they can. Sometimes what goes up, must come down, meaning, you cannot stay well, so long as there is a pressure overcome what was said about you, and prove them wrong, that you are a good person, that you've always meant well, and should be recognized someone who because they are not doing well doesn't appreciate what has occurred in their life, and recognize what makes them special things begin to go right for you in life, but so long as you are reminded of all the times you have struggled in life, makes it difficult to obstacles standing in the way between you and your own happiness in life, that's living life in spite of negatives, in spite of inner turmoil pushed you to do well to get better? It's to live life and not get sick, it's about #selfworth.

Sometimes You're Right and Sometimes You're Wrong ...

It's easy to get carried away explaining how you feel but always think first what service does this do to me to speak to and what service does this do to help others, think who are you helping and why, and is the help provided necessary to your health, the minute you connect to a cause or a group of people, is how one or the other is affected by one or the other, when in communication, and upon observation talked about more, leave things alone, allow people to have some independence of their own, to do what is right not what is wrong, and if in doing something right they look stupid, then I believe at a later point in time, a better way of processing an emotion can be achieved without letting them win, and failing at being heard, empathized with, as though your actions or reactions are lessons to teach others how to respond, or further normalize or define what's appropriate/understandable, usually what comes to mind, is everything that describes the pain you feel, that's your body and what you think and feel making you express yourself in a way that others may not understand that's okay, keep trying, the better able you are to articulate and represent your concerns in life, it doesn't matter how focused on the issues your expression presents as observed but if so memorable is to improve the condition of those who do care, and while mismanaged by systems of trust, appeared disorganized in rebellion to the every system of support, it's when you get hurt it's common to want to share know that what you share even if it gets through to who you think is harming you, only gives them more power, to know how to be, not affected, you know the bigger they have to look, shows you, that you matter, and they need to change try to. Stay well don't self-harm! We will all be here when you return your normal, please be patient, and recover be safe!

After the Fact ...

5/29/2020

Everyone's passionate after the fact, but what can we do to prevent ourselves from being harmed by those who take advantage of their privileges in life, and freedoms, and cause harm to others, thinking they have a right to, or to protect themselves, or with expectation of someone resisting their efforts to serve justice to whomever was harmed, is that right? Is it okay to not excuse individuals, and be more aggressive toward those with mental health issues, who are often times hesitant to get help, until things get worse, and they cannot function comfortably among others, what type of rehabilitation is that, isn't punishment for the purposes of correcting bad behavior or misconduct in a public place, exactly how threatened can anyone be by anyone else, where one life is justified by punishing another, one life is broken as a result of being punished, disabling their ability to work, get jobs, be accepted, spoken to, making everyone turned off by them, as less than, no one deserves to go through that process in public, be humiliated in public, and punished, what does self-harm or a tantrum represent, is that criminal activity, or is that just a manifestation of wellness, unless someone is taking out their illness upon others, can it be justified that another is infringing upon their right to stay healthy and not be aggravated, it's amazing to me that someone can claim they've been affected, when it's the opposite because one is mistreated, not taken seriously, ignored professionally, or interpersonally, opened up to share, only to be rejected once they get what they want, that means got to know you, didn't need you, or saw you and kept going in life for themselves, with their own understanding of how the world works, and who is to be included in those understandings, and who is to be left out. Once you hurt a person's motivations in life, it's really hard to overcome those feelings of worthlessness to the world, this is why I made website. Think less of why someone is strong, assuming for the purposes of freeing someone who was in the wrong, and think maybe it's because they care, and are doing the right thing to care.

#Brady. Don't be a threat! <3

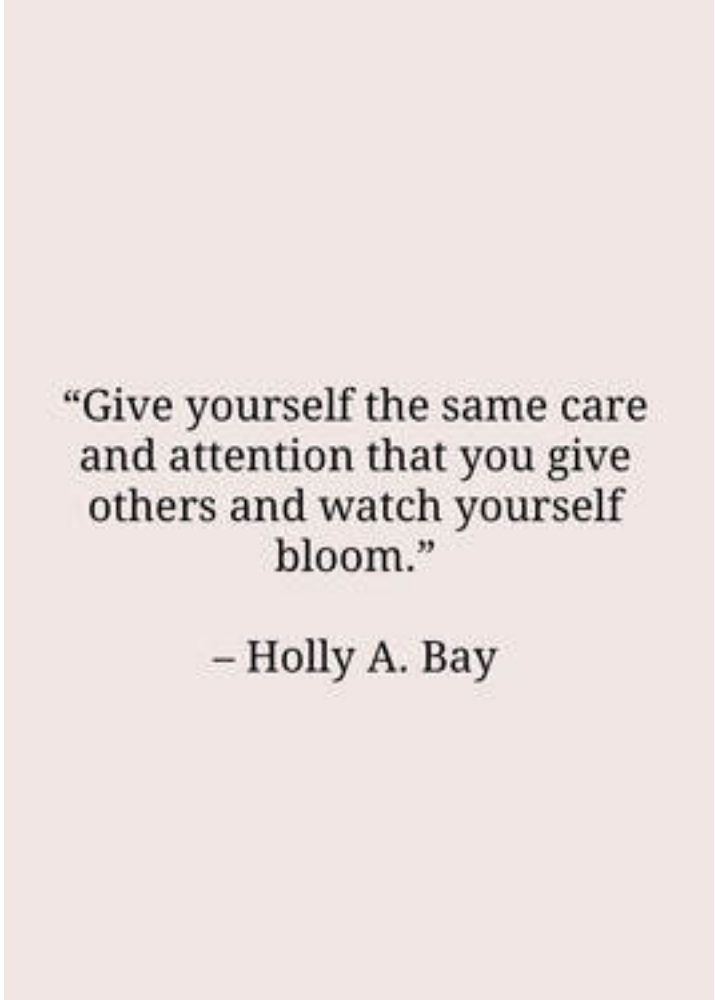

Taking Advice ...

It's human nature to want to help someone in need, it's called empathy, caring and wanting to make a positive difference in the life of another. Sometimes it may be easier to care for others than it is to care for ourselves. And sometimes through the admission of our problems to others in confidence, will lead to conversations about shared circumstances or feelings to inspire you that they too have been through difficult times, and be reminded that you are not alone. Why is it easier to give advice than it is to take our own advice? I have wondered the same thing, as a self-professed self-help blogger and ranked in the Top 100 Personal Development Bloggers online. I've made a commitment to improving myself, working hard, and beating the odds against me, with bipolar and a learning disability, that kind of strength to endure difficulty and how to overcome those feelings you feel challenged by is what is wanted to be advised about, sometimes it may feel more difficult, when the shoes have changed -when the advice giver suddenly needs help coping with their lives aside from what positives they have shared with the world, and individually to friends over the years. The main point is to keep things light, and if someone opens up to you, don't feel overwhelmed, maybe it's just what they needed to feel heard, to feel normal again, unlike within families, cut off or told how to think. We don't always get that in the real world, who is more likely to ignore us, when we are off not fix us. You can only better yourself, that's the bottom line. In fact it's "easier to give advice ... than [it is] to take it." [1] Why is that, because it's easier to listen than it is to open up about yourself, most lives people live are guided, managing their right to privacy, and talk only to doctors, it's becoming even more rare for people to share their problems and risk turning off a friend or a lover, or even disappoint loved ones, that you are not strong, and worry if you'll ever get better, have faith in yourself in those moments when you feel alone or ashamed, you have to believe in yourself if you want to make your life better, that means getting help, and it's okay to ask for help. No one wants to help you move, but if you can make friends like that you're in good hands.

Can Life Be More Depressing? ...

No, life cannot be more depressing than it is now, why Im on 300mg of Wellbutrin daily, and taken off Vyvanse for 2 weeks, what does that mean, slow down. Doesnt that feel counterintuitive, like we are supposed to have energy to spare without jobs, when at rest, actually the opposite can occur, you can lose motivations in life, and lose your drive. Take it from me, why I built a website and continue book writing, if I hadnt made a job for myself, then where would I be now? Isn't life better doing what you love? Definitely talk to a Doctor if you are experiencing depression, describe how you feel and be honest, you may get meds for it like me. So take it easy, one step at a time, processing current events, or while counting your job prospects, for some of us its too late to go back to school, I went back to school but lost valuable years of work experience, so its I either get hired, or need more experience before getting paid, which is why I filed for unemployment. How long can my parents support me, not long, which means I really need to get my life together, and thats a very painful realization. -Youre not the only one feeling like "what should I do now" why we're in this together. Never worry for a minute that your problems are unsolvable, just talk to a Doctor! #sober (2014). Addiction to anything can really set you back in life, keep applying for jobs and learn.

How to Get Over It ...

We all make mistakes, but that doesn't mean beat yourself up over it. With grace move on. Sounds easy, but difficult to do. Tinybuddha.com suggests to "focus on our intentions and moral compasses." [1] For instance, "We all want to be accepted and loved, and mistakes can make us feel unlovable and flawed." [2] What's important is to "accept[t] what's happened and mov[e] forward" [3] what's more important is to learn from your mistakes and do better next time. Remind yourself that no amount of effort is a wasted investment of time, so remember to breathe, even if you've "poured a lot of money into a useless endeavor." [4] So forgive yourself, and instead of focusing on the problem itself, let go and forgive yourself, and accept that change "won't happen overnight." [5] According to Inc.com, "if we want to actually get over our mistake, [we have to] stop justifying it." [6] Some mistakes are simply "unavoidable," so if you keep justifying your behavior or actions, your trying to excuse a condition as tolerable, rather than improve upon your best and correct your own errors in life, decision making wise. Whats Real Whats Not ...

5/23/2020

Online it's easy to get wrapped up about yourself or about others, then feel lost, where do you fit in the grand scheme of things, and how can you best communicate your skills out loud. Sometimes we can tell whether someone is smart, well spoken, and sometimes, we get confused try to understand the perspective of someone we do not know. How valuable is your perspective, unless anyone can see the way you see the world, and have lived life, can they equally share their input, or criticisms of you. I've been through a lot. So that means I'm not perfect, but when I fall off the bandwagon I get help, and when I get help I get better. Be patient with yourselves, you cannot expect to change your life overnight, it may take many days, months, or even years to turn your life around, don't wait until it's too late to try. What's not real, is your viewpoint of what a celebrity life feels like, I wouldn't know, I'm not a celebrity. What I do know, about being close to a celebrity, is that they keep their lives private, whereas I share everything fearlessly, maybe at my own expense. You can always get hurt, just be smart. Know your place in life, and keep thinking from your viewpoint, not blow things up.

Sometimes Im Hyper ...

There's really no way to get out of a rough patch in life, if you're taking everything to heart and taking life too seriously, have a happy medium in life. Lighten up, but never too much, that you appear disorganized and unprofessional, what good does that do to your self-esteem. It's important to always be mindful and with consideration for the time of others, easy to understand, grasp concepts you share, and minimize potential for insult or critique of others' lives, and stay focused on your own life, not threatened by others, not be easily harmed. Losing control over your life happens all the time, whether missing a deadline, filing for an extension, trying to build something new, you know nothing about, reading instructions, then try to apply your knowledge to the tools you've been given in life, it all takes time to move fluidly through life, be patient with yourself in between phases, and don't worry so much about what you look like during the recovery process, you can't stay well, if you don't take yourself seriously, and it matters more to others to see you centered in control of yourself, than to be fun or likeable. We all go through changes in life, it's how you adapt post change that separates you as a success. Can you get out of inefficiency, can you be more efficient, are you diligent, do you care. Well than show all those skills, manage your time wisely, and please more people and forget the rest. You can't move forward over-focusing on the past, don't bring yourself down in life. -So one day at a time, reflect, be cautious, but don't stop moving forward in life!

Trust and Authority ...

Sometimes it gets to be too much, whos in the lead, whos left behind, who understands, who has a better grasp of life than others, causing an inner sadness, not as happy as, not as good as, not as successful as, then follows a feeling of incapability, gone from smart, going nowhere. These are good times to stay disciplined, to feel good, to speak well, sound good, not by connecting during a down, thats when its too much, unless you have arrived to well, people prefer not to have their time wasted in small talk, mini stories, and want the main point of things, sometimes as a writer you dont arrive to points, and sometimes you do, its all about what you see and what you hear and how things look from the inside, know yourself well.

Sweet on the Inside ...

Some voices are mean and the meaner they get and advance rejections of you screaming at you, means your not viable for public acceptance ready to represent others nor yourself. If you are scared inside, your voice gets lost, and you only shine look well clear if you are going to live, doing what is right, living long, or suffering day to day, you cant go back and change what represents us, but never allow for poor behavior to continue can be perfected. #nobelprize -My book was sent to them.

Surviving Each Day ...

With mental health issues, recovery is more about surviving the day without feeling bad about yourself, hear voices, worry what people think, and get down on yourself self-harm. Thats not the way to live life, if you cant turn your day around, you cant turn your life around, food for thought. Having a positive mindset means not predicting the worst seeing the best in others, and expanding our capabilities to cope with the present moment, whether we are at odds, whether we are shining, whether our lights get dimmed, thats life, hardwork to sanity. Having a normal outlook and perspective is so important, where do you stand in the grand scheme of things, and are you important or trying to be important, and understand why you are important. What are your gifts in life, if its helping others, dont self-harm and stay sober! Everyones a rookie to failure! Do your best!

Whats Unforgiveable ...

A loss of respect for you, thinking you are gone and because you did not live life responsibly you engaged in friendships and dating, that put your body and mind at risk of harm, via the judgments of others, stuff people dont want to hear about, unattractive things to know about you. Anyone taunting you is trying to prove that they cannot remove you from their lives, as though their life is more important than you, to make jokes defending a basketball player Ron Artest, who attacked a fan, and has mental health issues, lets not go there, try me and see if I care, and still live my life anyways, its about who wants who these days, turned off, about how others make you feel being around you, trustworthy, honest, get to know the feminine side of you, allow you to blossom and be fun, for some of us that point never arrives, professional. Who hasnt had bad breakups, when love is lost, and both do not know why, just let go, or work on yourself, give time, for the other to want to include you in their life, be thankful that everyone is still here and living for their families, doing their best, adults now, wiser, kinder. -Just like I got removed from the face of the earth, I deserve to live life too.

Concept Concerns ...

If there are no dictated rules or concepts directed for others to make use of your work, then thats on you for not being more detailed and saving all the good points made, so your bad days dont shine, or loom over you, as a reflection of where you are now, gone or lost. Just went for a walk today havent run in awhile. If what you look like matters "physically" then do your best to keep your shape, and maintain a positive presence, no matter how far youve come socially, romantically, image wise, handling teasing, to not be a source of reference for past works, or current works, influence, if you can be better be better, there is a stopping point to inspiration, looked upon graciously, if they dont know who you are, or why you need help, is how you get put down in life, its a very tough position to be in, when whats known about you, affects you. Others will try to bring out the most immature responses from you under stress, being mature is about getting a job and keeping a job being professional, disconnected, listen well. When you listen well and follow directions, is how trust is made, thats a professional bond, gets work done. When work gets done you will be treated nicely, you dont have to accept any favors from people, money, or a paycheck, if you can be professional, then money will be exchanged. -If you take things personally, you let yourself down in life.

Nothing Generic About Meds ...

Just got my dose of Wellbutrin upped to 300mg/daily, and off of Vyvanse for two weeks. Doing my best to manage symptoms of Schizophrenia, and stay focused and balanced. Theres no cure for mental health issues, other than to see a qualified Psychiatrist. Most will not be understanding of your condition, until you are normal, come to appreciate your insights, while on their own, trying to navigate in the world, listening only on the basis of wealth, status, or other hierarchical principles of wellness, when it comes to general thoughts and well being. Not everyones experience with mental health issues, are the same, just as no one feels sorry for you if you have schizophrenia & bipolar (hospitalized 9 times - 14 days/per) just thinks less of you, expecting someone of your social status or education to be not only well spoken but also affluent meaning, able to make money, no affluence can be generated from popularity alone, not through a blog, and certainly not by who you know, can make you feel better when it comes to social well being and mental health issues. Why some people dream, of a better life for themselves, thats not an escape from your current life, its an escape from what people think of your life, as it is now. At what point to lives look small, as compared, and as compared sometimes you make other people feel small, or appear, less than, depending upon whether you are domineering or simply being subservient to the interests of other judged. Thats basing your likeability upon whether they are attracted to you, dont be mistaken, attractability is important in some respects to representing others well and being affluent, and avoiding mental health issues as a separate consideration, which affluence should not encounter or attract, the esteem of others who are not affluent, taking their anger out on people, who they think have it better than them in life, or by making fun of their health status, no longer see them as human, better off.

With regards to Facebook, "likes block" because I was getting 300 likes a post, my likes got blocked, and called 911 and was hospitalized. Thats not me coming up, and setting others off, thats me coming up, as better, and as better, support the wellness of all, and as made to look stupid, suffer just the same, down now from 1000-4000 likes per post, once ranked 34,000s on Alexa, a website is high maintenance. Nothing is a product of me, its more a product of how I am treated, worse off.

Look On the Bright Side ...

5/17/2020

According to bustle.com, there are

7 Ways to Look On The Bright Side & Be More Positive [1]:"

- (1) Rid Yourself Of Negative Thinkers. ...
- (2) Share Positivity With Others. ...
- (3) Search For The Silver Lining. ...
- (4) Practice Gratitude. ...
- (5) Separate Fact From Fiction. ...
- (6) Pick A Positive Thought. ...
- (7) Move More.

According to "Travis Bradberry, emotional intelligence and leadership writer, said it is important to separate fact from fiction when thinking about negative aspects of our lives in an article for Forbes. He recommend writing down exactly what you're thinking in order to evaluate its veracity.[2]"

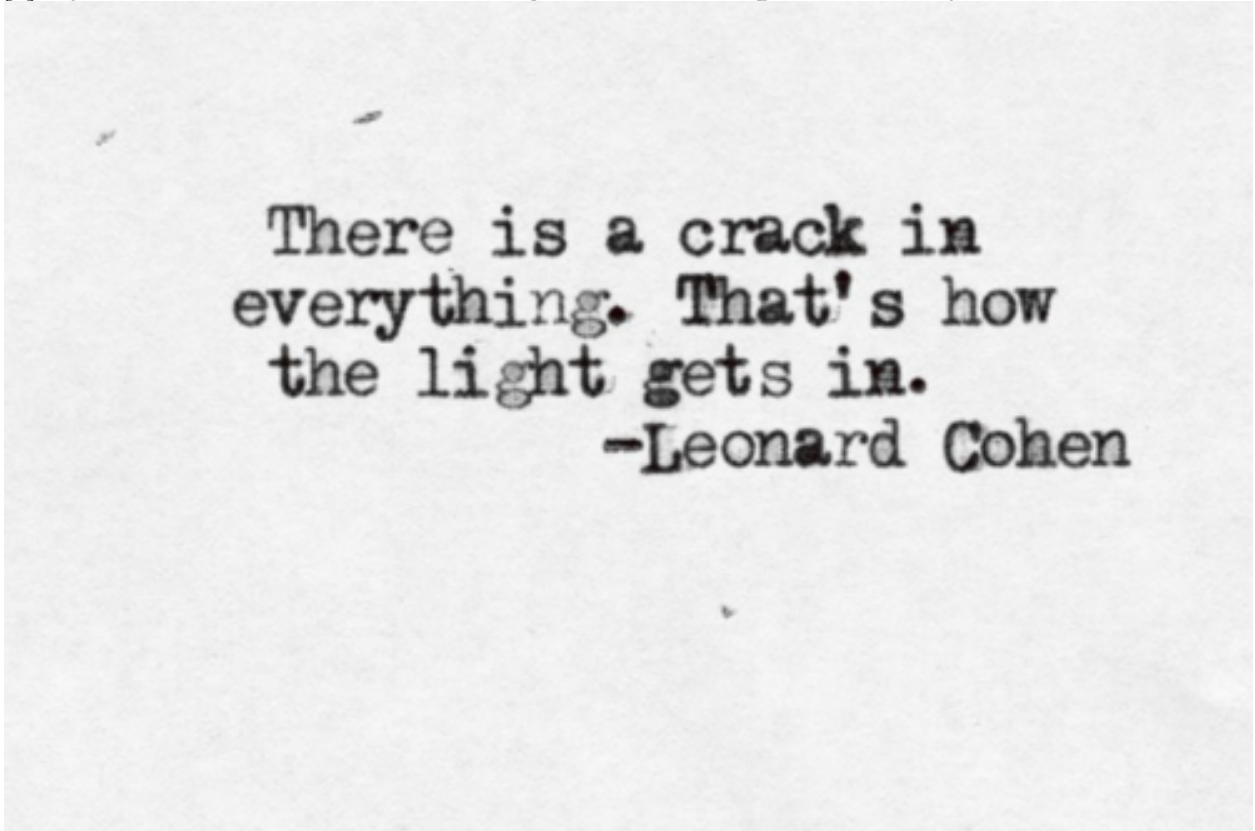

Just do your best with the given resources you have for coping. You wont know unless you try. And although the times may be trying, that doesnt mean that you cant bounce back, and be a better or stronger person one day, more resilient to the daily stresses, thinking about life, where you see yourself in the future, as well as evaluate whos around you. Seems like a good time for writing and journaling, there's no better way to get to know yourself, than through writing. Tracking your feelings and thoughts from day to day, can give you great insight into what's to come, what you value, and what living life means to you. It's a tough subject, the importance of discipline, when it comes to preserving our own humanity, and just as we want to live healthier, happier lives, it's easier said than done. Most of us aren't in relationships, most of us don't have steady jobs, and most of us are finishing degrees, waiting to go back out into the world, so what does that mean? When the economy suffers so do we, and that doesn't mean give up, it simply means to navigate with the times, and pick an appropriate course of action, when it comes to managing your life crisis. Now's a great time to reboot, stay sober, not do drugs, it's your time, how to build a better you, and it starts with your thinking.

Before I Started Blogging ...

Before I started blogging I had three internships, one in Film Distribution working on "The Lot" in West Hollywood where OWN TV is, one working for Senator Hertzberg in the Valley doing research, and one working for pillowguy.com at the WeWork in the Pacific Design Center. I guess you could say I've had great work experience prior to working online creating my own blog. What does working from home mean? It means flexible work hours, time for myself to read and run errands, and time to edit and work on books. It's a full-time commitment, writing. You don't really understand, how a writer's mind works until the moment you pick up the pen and start writing, it seems to be non-stop from that point on. In the meantime I have been working on finishing my Masters in Law LLM in Financial Compliance and Risk Management at Thomas Jefferson School of Law. It may seem like I'm all over the place, but I do believe in the importance of continuing to work, even during in-between phases in life. I hope everything works out for me in the long run, get a paid job one day! I've enjoyed blogging, and have learned so much about myself, and while meeting my audience's need, heard back via likes, what interests you guys most. The main point is to keep going in life, no matter what meds you get prescribed, no matter what job you have, no matter what you do in your down time, love the life you're in, and don't stop no matter what. It seems that whenever we stop in life, it becomes harder to get going, again, whether that be a gym routine, a blogging routine, or work schedule. Which is what working from home is all about, not losing your skills, while at home, and continuing to learn, for me I learned blogging and how to build a website with traffic on my own. The skies the limit, when it comes to writing, value yourself, and in valuing yourself, others will find value in you, and your work ethic. Never stop believing in yourself, and never give up!

Personal Update ...

5/15/2020

Its now been 5 days on Wellbutrin and still trucking along. Its not been an easy 5 days off of vyvanse or adderrall, sleeping all day and all night for the first few days, I just started getting going again today, and will make an effort to post once a day, and continue free reading.

Benefiting from Wellness ...

5/10/2020

The purpose of benefiting from wellness is so that if attached, you are not harmed, feel better by what is shared, how it is shared, from who it is shared, get a clearer picture of life, and where you see yourself with respect to others in the world feel capable. Thats if you are not denominated in life, to something you are not, you cant control the treatments of you in life, always assume that everyone is doing their best to inspire and keep others well around you. A lot of negative input is seeing how you respond to insult, whether by delusion you think things are about, if you are in the public sphere, and then try to make things about you, to cause a disservice to the services already being provided to all and working fine. That would be throwing a wrench into a system of thought, where clarity cannot be reached, only someone with a clear conscious, can provide insight to others, and its upon being punished for whatever reasons, that one becomes unclear, either by others, or by what specifically caused someone to lose conscious awareness of the wellness around them, and be constantly paranoid, about their own safety needs, wellness needs, and build trusting relationships. its not by who you know you are trusted, but its by how you respond when thrust into any controversies, made to look like a chump in life, or a bottom feeder, someone who is friends with those who cause harm to others, not someone who looks out after others, and condone, the mistreatment of peace, as though by your behaviors, actions, and feelings are not a solid contributor of insights. I think people think its easy to write live and by all stories told, blame your energy as the cause for losses, as though upon your mentions, lives are lost, or people feel lost, because you are lost or suffering, as though because you have suffered mental health issues, far graver than the issues faced while in law school (JD) have not recovered. If I had not recovered I would not have been a 3.0 GPA Law Student at Thomas Jefferson School of Law, and because I was sharp, but not confident, was treated as someone who is less than, because I had yet to go out into the world, with confidence, and beauty, and get jobs, and be apart of the real world. that opportunity for a normal life was not afforded to me, after years of solitude, studying and trying to finish law school. That is why I had time to volunteer, time to put up flyers, time to watch CSPAN, and time to live life and think about life and "grow up" experience other hardships that people face who do not return from drinking, addiction, and dating, that is no ones fault but myself for going out on my own to see what the rest of the world was like, before deciding to build a website and blog. -Give people time to heal from their mistakes in life.

Happiness is Not Meant to Be Shared ...

In being professional you will slowly come to realize that not all happiness is shared. I dont think it was meant to be shared. Well. In love. Sober. Clean. Working. In Recovery. Suffering. Disabled. Successful. You kind of pass by people in life, and get a gist of what they have been up to, but no one really ever, thinks out loud to one another. Thats not normal. To hear someone share their thoughts about life, or share stories from their life. Living is about what you are doing now. There will be moments of instability. That is true. Thinking things are a certain way and realizing that they are not that way. Or looking back and thinking others think poorly of you but do not. Thats just living life. One day at a time. Some teach you to focus on yourself, in order to make things right. And sometimes you focus on others, meaning putting others before yourself, thats being selfless, not in a bipolar way trying to control others, with your thoughts about life, thats giving back to your community in a way, thats not condescending, sharing your insights, some things will make sense to others, and some things you will say will not make sense, thats just reading and writing. Learning to speak for yourself, without skipping a beat. That means not allowing whats others have to think or say to interfere with your better judgments, and not become something you are not, by then they have won, thinking you think you are bigger than you are, or something you are not: beautiful, talented, gifted, or smart. No one will think any of that of you, if you experience mental health issues. Many mental health issues are not our fault, sometimes by things we hear, based upon how we are treated, are more or less confident around others, and that's not because we are doing anything wrong, or because there is anything wrong with us, it's just seeing us, lit, thinking that we think we are bigger than we are, or think of ourselves as more important than others see us. You learn to roll with the punches, following any event in life, in which you are not looked highly upon, that's being punished in life, and not at your best, and then after getting well, if you get well, being forced to explain what experiences in life caused you to suffer from mental health issues, and how you were able to overcome mental health issues. Not all will be accepting of you, and most will think that in your exaggerated prose, you intended to present yourself as more well than you were, once a worse condition occurs, that's just mental health issues, you have to manage your symptoms and condition daily, it's a daily effort, to not allow your mind or your thoughts to become deteriorated by feelings, unwanted feelings, and lose energy, over voices, or become moody or an unhappy person, once that happens, nothing works out for you in life, that's just unhappy people, never happy with themselves, and never happy with others, upset at the world, upset about their circumstances, and only happy once they are happy with how life is. Take a look around, people are happy in spite of a lot of things in life. And while I'm nice enough to share things I thought when I was not well, it's not a proud moment to say the least and very embarrassing to speak in hashtags, and not write in a professional tone, nothing to be proud of. -Without fail you will always be held down to your worst moments in life, and much to the chagrin of those who imposed difficulties onto you in life, judging you, thinking less of you, or thinking they were better than you, that's just food for thought, how worth it is it to care looking back, if everything is a reflection of them, and none of it a reflection of everything positive you have done in your life, to have a life, live a good life, and be fortunate enough to share your life online, meet new people, start a business, be offered money for your business to buy your business.

Into Adulthood ...

I never saw myself as important, and because I did not see myself as important I was important to others, and had people in my life, seeing myself as apart of, not better than. Because I don't see myself as better than, I was approachable, and because I was approachable spoken to. It's only upon becoming better than, that the opinions you hold of others matter, why people feel threatened by you, so to counteract your ability to look or appear better than, are put down in life, that's to punish you, upon achieving a well condition, to make things about others condition, to see if that betters others, upon arresting you, or suing you. Actually it's only upon me doing well, that things get better for me around me, and it's only upon doing well website wise, that opportunities open up for people around me, and do their relationships with others get better, easier to talk to, less about what's going wrong, and have more things to talk about, with less going wrong in their lives, or the lives of people they are close to, feel more sociable. There is not acting when anyone you are close to around you is going through something difficult, that's the misconception, that being raised around fame situated me as better off or more well than others, spiritually, or mature faster than anyone else, watching the news. If there were a place in life, above everyone, it wouldn't be one woman's place, that's for sure. And if it was one woman's place that others sought to be like or be better than, it was because it was encouraged by their parents "to be more like Leslie" to two of my best friends at one point, before they matured, and blossomed, and became popular on their own. That's on a personal note. On a public note when it comes to the identities of those who are famous, whose parents were once friends Cici and my Mom, who were both friends with Kris Jenner, who was best friends with Nicole Brown Simpson, who is my best friend's Mother, you would understand that each were well on their own with families, popular together, whether or not they were married, divorced, or separated, we as children still had lives, unaffected initially, only until now, looking back through our lives, probably should be more appreciative of what they went through being on the news, having suffered a loss, a friend murdered, and done more with our lives socially, and publicly, to stand up for what they went through in adulthood, that's what being successful is all about, understanding where you come from, without having to explain to others, what you went through, account for your losses, in a positive way, whether that be becoming famous, going to law school, modeling, teaching at Harvard, building a website for the betterment of all, it's each one's responsibility to not bring the rest down, as later connected upon reaching moments of success, and after contacting one another, not be offended by one another's wellness, or conditions, seek to be good on our own, unaffected by each other's troubles, as well as the past, having suffered losses, and near losses (ie my Father hospitalized 2018, why I got a job, to bring him good news). Sometimes upon watching other people live their lives, we think that they are out of control, too much energy, trying too hard, or doing too well, taking too many notes, too detailed an outline, writing too much on an exam, and think that it has to do with their drive, to "#freeoj" and punish them, as though thats the main point or purpose for their journey going to law school, as though they are not aware of whats going on on TV, punish them, as though they were doing wrong up to no good with a boyfriend, and on top of a TV Show, send them to rehab for two months, why I was disowned by my siblings, and my best friend was hard on me, how could someone with two jobs, and in law school part-time, suffer so much defamation before fame. If you treat someone like they know code, or expect them to respond to the code, and see how they feel when put among, then try me, I am just as witty as the best of them, capable of being cordial like the rest of them, and can model with the best of them, no matter what size I am, feel pretty and be smart. That really proved nothing, it just goes to show that when confidence is based upon how you feel around others, as being read or controlled, and misread, is how you lose confidence in life. Based upon how you are treated when put among, suffer losses, when you get looked at as stupid, and told things, to disorient you, or your Mom by phone, Boss who controls you, as texted by them, thats to illustrate, who is on point and who is gone, I can control my own Mom, thank you very much, and upon telling her not to text my Mom, we had a falling out, but still friends. -If people think less of you then thats how you get treated.

Whats Important to You ...

Its by whats important to you, as stated, you get viewed upon, as having the energy, know how, and understanding of the scope of difficulties, others are encountering in their lives, or whether you are still stuck on subsidiary issues, such as personal losses, or hardships, not thinking about everyone else at this time. Some have the courage to help others, and some dont. Its not always necessary to help others, by informing them of what we know, as though that will ever make a difference, but it does help, to prepare others with how to cope with losses or hardships, in that I have experienced my share of losses, and hardships, and still alive today. For some it just doesnt do it for me. its not giving me what I need to know, in order to make a decision about my life, or finances, means that Im not the right person for you at this time. If you are coming to me for advice about how to make your life better, than I may not be your solution to bettering yourself, until I have been able to better my own life, and the lives of those around me. Some have very high expectations of others, that they do the work for them, such as research and write citation papers, articles, without pay, I simply dont have the time energy and patience, for that right now, and have a dissertation I need to attend to. When I am able to focus wholeheartedly upon my website (i.e. lose weight, not experiencing voices bipolar, and insult because of dislike for me), and improve upon what has been written, then at that time I will do so. What is discussed is important to me, as it concerns my freedoms, and what is thought of me, making world peace deductions, in sobriety, and while in recovery, on different meds, and in between doctors, thats really no ones right to know, what my medical condition is self-harming or not, that has nothing to do with anyone (voices) thats my problem as it concerns my well being, my ability to function, and move forward in life. These entries are not defenses, nor is this website a defense to anyone or any set of ideas, about me or others. This is simply a website, to help others, now its a time of need, then when I wanted to launch, was a time of need but for others reasons, not launched then, when is it time to help yourself and to help others, when you become successful and able to earn money, then when you become a worthwhile investment to others, can others profit from your stability and success. -You will always be judged based upon the services you sought to provide, and based upon whether those services have been provided to all, judged as whether with all sincerity you are currently providing the same caliber of support you once were providing \(quotes, and blog posts\) in a way that is palatable to the tastes of all, not just personal insights or opinions, based upon mental health issues, but able to also respond to real issues too. #worldpeace -Fixing yourself requires a lot of motivation on your part to counter-hate toward you, to rise above arguments, disagreements, personal issues such as personal history and memory, and continue to be a good person, in spite of the past, what others think, and be focused on what needs to get done in order to be a better person, more successful, while at the same time continue to help. Sometimes I think its where people think you are trying to be in life, put you down in life, as not good enough for a future place in life, thats the force with which you are hurt or put down, so that you cant move forward in life, so that you get looked at, not with respect, to see how you respond without respect, as though that wasnt the first thing you said before a suicide attempt 2009: paid respects. \(Now, this conversation does me a disservice, after reading my resume, and seeing how I was able to achieve in spite of being hospitalized, then treated as someone who was not well able, or sober, I was third in my class when I started law school summer 2009, and recovered from bipolar, able, well. Bipolar is a treatable condition, its always when you are up in life, you get put down, and its not until you prove them right: hospitalized 8 more times 2013 to Now, that you start to explain why, by then the harm as already been done to your reputation, your medical records are your #HIPAA, this is not a campaign for kids, to speak to kids, to help kids, I already worked for kids summer 2010. Thats hurting me, to say that I am working directly with a population, to say that my condition, is abusive, because Im not able to stay well, its not my fault I cant stay well, if other people dont like me. Its not my fault, if other people dont trust that I was well at the time I worked, and was not doing anything bad, its because they heard about my second date with a 48 year old, while working at CLC, that was a date in Pasadena, they only heard about my first date at Villa Blanca, judged me wrong, that occurred after Michael Jackson passed away. when I started Law School. At this time, I dont think its appropriate to shed light upon losses, and to connect me to people who have passed, as though in Law School I should have known, what losses were about, just beginning to understand now, how losses can happen, doing my best to help those in need, not be brought down in life. I used to go to Neverland Ranch as a child with my best friend Sydney Simpson, we drove golf carts, with music).

Another Day Tomorrow ...

Ive been crying three days in a row, and I dont know why, its been an emotional few days, watching everything unfold on TV, and in my neighborhood, that was very difficult to watch and not feel a sense of pain and sadness, for those immediately affected and at the same time have compassion for those who stood up for what they believed in while some suffered as a result of either caring too much, being disobedient, to safety measures, while others looted, and totally took it upon themselves to attack the moment at the expense of those who protested peacefully, totally take advantage of a moment of silence and suffering amid COVID-19. Im sure a lot of emotions ran across your heart and many things felt in your head, that were difficult to express out loud, it is shocking, and very moving to see so many people so passionate about speaking up for themselves and for a victim of a horrifically filmed crime. That was devastating to their family, and devastating for all who care, and who have similarly been affected by violence in their community or to people they have loved. The battle just doesnt stop there, this will be a lifelong struggle for especially those who do care, to overcome the pain and frustration with the manner in which they feel they have been treated, mistreated, and or suffered as a result of the continued mistreatment of members to their community, innocent, at fault, a bystander, a victim, in harms way, a follower to, a friend of, a family member to, a spectator to the news, a reader on social media, we are all affected as a result of this crime, be sensitive, however at the same time do your best not to become too upset, that you misdirect those feelings toward people who care similarly, as though they dont care at all, everyone has a right to live their lives absent minded fear of being discriminated or rejected simply because of the way they look, or for whatever characteristic or trait, or disability they have or display, be treated as less than, or shunned from the majority of cares to everyone, thats not okay, to be treated as a lesser human, or not of similarly priority of care because of who you are, who you know, who you are surrounded by, what others have done around you or to you or to others, allow the cycle of harm to continue to the extent that one becomes something they are not. -Right now we still have tomorrow.

Manage Your Time Wisely ...

In the event of an emergency like today, take a step back, best not to inherit the emotions of sides to any arguments at this time, get political with big picture concepts, the past, or specific groups of people, criticize who has done a good job or who has done us a disservice in life, and not have spent enough time in preventative labor toward building more peaceable solutions, it takes many acts of violence to erupt in absolute anarchy, I dont condone any such motivations in life, those who deviate from the norm, if not for entertainment purposes, or because it makes them happy, but to produce a feeling in others that matches how they feel to cause them mental anguish and harm and in exchange feel better about themselves, its not the happiness of others that offensive, it is those who are critical and displace people who are kind, accepted by all, with a future ahead of them, to disable all opportunities for them to have a life, go back to their old life, stand out or be well, and simply because their mood does not match the mood of others, think that it's because they look well they are going places in life, sometimes people who are doing well lit up, is because they worked hard and don't go out, don't get out much, don't socialize, live a private life, and working towards having a career, and sometimes subsidiary efforts are made, to help others stay on course in terms of their cares, not be left in the dark, and stay mobile, and able to keep going, without bearing any such responsibility to be affected by the cares of others if not for their work product, lives, or decisions, or words, be rejected as not someone who represents the causes they support, that's in meeting them, not thinking they have worked hard to be where they are and turn them into another example of someone who unlike me, has money, experienced the good life, and still got in trouble, that is not me, I stay home, because of my hardships, I did my best to make good decisions based upon what I was able to accomplish that's the best way forward, do what you can, care about what you want to care about, and don't worry what anyone thinks, that's adversity, or hardship, you simply cannot care what others think because when you are half broken, to care about someone's opinion of you if in the negative leaves you 2 parts broken, and the 1 part well broken too. That's what being put down in life is like, going going focused, questioned independent no down time working and in school, that's just life, people are unhappy with you when you are well, and think you are well when you're down, what's the appropriate level or normal or standard of posture to be accepted by all, it's certainly not gonna happen once you have been criticized defamed or punished, that is the life I have to live, and I have learned that being suicidal and self-harming only makes living more difficult, and dying because of poor decision making, is not worth dying for, living for what you have done well is a better hand to focus on in life, everything good about you, everything well about you, not live up to a diagnosis of you, and belief in your ability to manage your symptoms, not share your condition, and be observed with expectation or with a lens looking for a condition. I am not the definition of mental health issues, because what I experience alone or inside, is something I do not share out loud, nor do I share those days out loud in writing, I know how to write professionally have done great in all my writing courses, because I know how to assemble thoughts and ideas and do research it's really not necessary to spend that much time writing, and doing research with citations, when I have a dissertation to finish, there's always room for improvement, you cannot expect more to get more that's not how life works, driven by expectations of you you cannot control the output of someone, whose heart or time needs to be invested elsewhere, but when my whole time energy and when in tip top shape health wise, I am heavily invested in learning and building and reading, right now taking my time, re-grouping, trying to make each day a good day, and not get sick bipolar or upset over voices those are not thoughts voices or produced by what I say it's an "auditory delusion" an interruption to my thought processes that cause me to lose my train of thought and give up upset unmotivated.

When I first decided to go on a trip in between law schools, and take time away from my then boyfriend, I saw last on Christmas Eve, who just passed the Bar and could not get a job at the DA's office, I had just returned from a two week trip to DC that cost $2000, and received an invitation to the Inauguration delivered to my Hotel room, I had just visited the US Supreme Court, I printed my itinerary before I left Los Angeles, at the time I attended the first day of Law School, and the teacher blurted out "Melrose Place the Remake" and left the classroom and then talked to my Dean and the Property and Contracts Professor who was in attendance, the desk was empty with a fan atop his right corner of his desk, a silver metal fan, and the other Professor, sat to my right in a chair facing the desk, and told them that I think I need to take some time away from the Law School, had just switched Professors, I still talk to the Professor I left always sat in the front row, Prof Chaney, I held myself back a year and was a new class, and had one Asian friend who was nice to me, asked me to sit by them. I used to study in the Law Library by the computers, in between two computer screens where there was space, my 2 inch binder of notes and outlines, and my textbooks, and my clear plastic folders opening diagonally, with outlines and handwritten notes and typed notes combined, and a spiral notebook, or deductions and triangles I made once that went missing eventually. Barbri had one triangle I saw, so reading the rules in the Hornbook read all the laws and summarized the laws and figured out how to put all the laws for all the ways in which exchanges could be made within three triangles, each letter representing a type of person, and from whom and to whom, possessions could be made or transferred or incurred. That was something unique I made, which I could memorize, and on test day with the one page scratch piece of paper, we were given, write down everything I had memorized to remember all the laws I studied to argue with in my exam, when I got

As I made arguments saw arguments and sometimes even memorized how to argue in the event the issue came up everything to include, that you learn how to do, once you have read all the cases, and supplemental material, and class notes, and start creating an outline, and then finally if my time management skills were on point, create a memorable one page outline, of everything to remember to remember everything else I felt was important to know. It was recommended to me once to attend the tutor groups in case I had any questions which occurred after school, taught by a student from the previous semester, who got the highest grade, who could answer any questions we had on the subject there was a new student who I think I later added to my LinkedIn, around that time I was living at my Mom's house after being hospitalized bipolar nervous or not well before my Evidence II exam Spring semester, I think I took without having memorized any of my flashcards and outlines, and encouraged to just take the exam anyways and did so, crying to my Associate Dean that I had been bullied at home, probably because I was sent to Rehab, not prescribed Abilify and two adderall a day, and because I became unstable while dating someone for a year who lived in Yorba Linda, I don't drink, and drank with him and a couple times with students once during Finals on a Wednesday and bumped into an underclassman from Windward who greeted me, at a table I sat down at, watching the Turtle Races. I became paranoid to start when I went outside to smoke and the tutor I had met, put his leg up on the cement brick surrounding the plants, when I walked up, I had just posed similarly to Aaron asked for a photo randomly and took a photo in cotton underpants, I didn't really have anything fancy to put on, and he once made me have computer sex with him on Google Chat once, I had to leave my room and do so in another room, my room was attached to my Dad's room at the time, on the other side of the wall. If anyone ever does anything similar to something you have done, that's when you begin to think of the possibility of someone upon seeing you having seen something in private, later in life you learn that what you see or do sometimes, can be seen or imitated, without having shown anyone and without anyone having had access to any of your private photos or study habits in public, understand how long you study or read for and how long it takes for you to learn and understand and memorize, usually you do that stuff alone, I always found an empty classroom to study in. -At this time I now understand that people may know you, and sometimes they may have more access to information about you, simply because they think they have the right to know more about you for further assurances of your study habits, personal life lived, know how, patterns, behaviors, schedules, for clarity, sometimes in acceptances and sometimes made known to you after an intrusion is made into your personal belongings, which upon an obvious remark to you, is to let you know, making you feel uncomfortable, as though an interaction that only two in a room for sure are aware of why she said something random, like she knows you and does not respect you, and based upon what she knows about you, thinks that you deserve to be told something that if you said that out loud, would make you look paranoid or feel violated, I just met her that day, who is she to look at me, speak like that, and give me two options upon a later sharing or interpretation of events, one she was trying to inform me she knows something about me on a document that the rest of the room has not seen, or two after decisions are made on my part with nothing specifically stated about that interaction, reinforce what she plans to seem like a minor occurrence or frivolous statement which she takes credit for a later amplified response coming from me, seeking help or talking to others, and showing up, as though she sparked her interest in hearing how I would respond, whether in the negative say something right away, what I recognized was inappropriate yes I recognized you were being inappropriate and reported you to the Dean, and then SCOTUS held a hearing the day I chose to visit the US Supreme Court (who writes all the cases in my textbooks) and was given a Turquoise chair with Justice Sotomayor on my left, with a Bailiff between us, and next to a pole behind me, I only seemed to notice the vaulted ceiling at the time and the red curtains we walked through going into the court room they were not present upon walking in, after everyone is seated and stands they take their seats, and they begin going through the cases for that day, the Attorneys are seated in a gated section in front of the audience and stand to speak in front of the Justices, I took notes the entire time, writing in my lap we were allowed a notebook and a pen brought everything I could in a backpack and asked whether I could take notes, the rest of my things were stored in a locker, there are two metal detectors to get into the court house and one before you enter the courthouse. I have sent a picture to a Wells Fargo Banker who asked for one, I dipped my bra and showed one and hid the other, on my knees on my bed, sent via my AOL mailbox, and later saw a statue in the Law Library of a stone figure holding a scale and her dress was taken down showing one but not the other. Things became noticeably different when I would leave to smoke, and the more I felt distant from everyone, and went to my car, once the Librarian shouted something either outside or from his window, which I could not understand and which no one else reacted to, he was special needs, and the Librarian at the other campus in the Valley. That's I knew something was wrong. I had only blogged on Twitter once briefly with my name @lesliefischman, and shared some insightful words, and stories from my life, with no followers, that was December 2011 (I had attended rehab summer 2011 after taking myself to the hospital for a 5150 hold because I felt like something was wrong and if I cannot identify what I used to go to the hospital so that they could fix the problem, and upon being discharged was told to talk to my psychiatrist who sent me to detox and rehab in Dana Pointe for 2 months, one month sober living with a car, with alcoholics, I was a law student, and visited Sydney and her Aunt at their house in Laguna which was nearby). I think I remember taking it down and then found an AOL email saying my password had been changed and found it still up when the semester had already started, it wasn't a complete picture and because it wasn't anything important for study, especially if while my best friend was in town and my sister locked me out of my Mom's house and told me to get $70 dollars worth of Chin Chin, and then upon arriving told me to go to the other house, my Brother was there, who screamed at me Summer 2011, asking me why was I in Law School if I was not getting good grades means that I was not smart enough to be there, and called me a pill head, and threw a bunch of vitamin pills over the balcony inside the house to the floor below upset, I was only prescribed two adderalls at the time, and was seeing a Psychiatrist from Tustin, who would not prescribe me more than three adderalls, and the guy who I would get extra from I forget when, that hook later stopped responding I think because I introduced him to my best friend and her sister, I saw him last actually at a bar in Santa Monica with my sister, looks like a ship I think door across from a cross walk I'm not sure if that was the same street that was robbed during the riots. I had friends before I dated, and I played club soccer, went kickboxing, Gray kissed me and then I had to leave my then boyfriend, because that was cheating should've just told him, understand that someone new, if I leave will later tell me that he's not interested in a long term relationship, so it was just one kiss and a date in Newport, he was running a half marathon at the time, good looking but he was interested in me, kissed me and layed on the carpet with me to sleep, and couldn't sleep there so said I was going home then he came with me to sleep at my apartment in marina del rey. --There is no point in time unfortunately when you can be publicly known if others know you before you understand the concept of everyone knowing you and the extent to which they know you, only for your responses in life, not by what you think or by what worries you can fix a paranoid understanding of life usually upon learning of those capabilities or upon being signaled by others without understanding what you notice is connected to you only later, do you become more and more in belief that those things stood out to you, to inform you you are connected, which you don't understand whether is to help you, inform you, protect you, intimidate you, or let you know that they know something about you that you don't know that they know, sometimes that energy is a competitive edge, sometimes it's by others knowing later something you hid in a box in anticipation of people going through your things (2010) a joke to you but not to them, and because many other things happened after you took a poster down on Wilshire a photo kept in your phone, and not shared online, which was of the President with paint on his face you found offensive, so you took it down, and after a movie featuring a Joker who passed away before the happening of an even worse incident in which he played a Joker character, is responded to, it because I did the right thing saved the pieces in a Free Laker bag I kept in my closet and delivered the pieces to the Federal Building across the street in a ziplock bag with my number on it and a note. Sometimes sharing facts now, which have not been shared in the past, cannot make any difference, especially when with what people know think they have a better handle or understanding of what causes that type of ambiance in any environment in which you do not feel welcome or apart of. it's noticeable. If before what you were nice enough to share and by what work you have done to improve or inform so that those in charge of figuring out the causes for that energy, when you're feeling gone and can't concentrate chances are they feel the same way lost, and it's not that they know more than you about what's going wrong, but that they all notice you but you don't know any of them. There is always a risk in sharing what has been done right, that it will be seen as insignificant in the grand scheme of things, and whether or not you have put forward a lot of effort in life to be aware of what's happening and why, the last thing you think about is being invaded or made fun of in public as in communication with everyone who can understand a word drop or two out of place on the radio, not in sync with the rest of the content being communicated about and not make sense, but remembered, which a later sharing looks like confirmation that you had everything down in life, and were given tips or knew what you were doing when you experienced losses in focus or when others friended you, which if you become too investigatory about makes them feel defensive or become even worse victim to you, as though you should have known what everyone knows and how they connect and even if you never thought anything as about you, the minute you remember and read a deposition February 2009, google searching your name, and making a binder about those who have passed, and their recommendations, do you remain silent, apply for a neutral job the #usnavy, a suggestion with an interpretation of guilt prior to hiding a small kitchen knife in a box, which occurred after I was shown the youtube "D in a box" and a "Cup Movie" which I thought was gross, and not personally insulted, only when I share what I recall, is not seen as special or genuine sounding, and cannot undo my struggles in life, as not having anyone to represent me or to talk to anyone, who can change how facts from your life are interpreted without you specifically saying anything out loud, it's by what you say you look wrong, and then everything you have done in defense of others hurting you in life, if you ever respond in a paranoid way and forget that's how you responded, is why someone stole a small knife from a "Lesley Bag" gifted to me by an English nanny to my Godparents, in a hole puncher box. What's really unwanted is everyone doing things in reference to facts from my life as though all these references are for the purposes for accusing anyone of misconduct, the more you talk about what has passed, and even if you have managed to get beyond what has not happened in life, that will never stop the inquisition of information from you, for the purposes of putting together those insights, to say in response to guilt, or because of something you have done wrong, or even connect anything occurring in your life to a responsibility of harm done to others in connection with, or an easy job to Free someone in jail, you felt was more difficult than can be done having read a blog post in the Valley which demanded my family speak, a buzzword that connects to the Valley where there was a fire, to say the two incidence are connected and were connected and being said purposefully in a way to connect things to build or support inferences of misunderstandings to begin with, I was very bright with a clean record and stay home with no history of mental health issues, it was only upon dating someone from Yorba Linda that I got separated from friends who already had new friends, while I was studying, who I did not have time to speak to, expecially not after I started taking abilify and put on vyvanse instead of adderrall one a dya with a job and class at night I took one semester to finish a paralegal certificate to have one officially, my last course. For some reason everyone is either into a moment when a feeling can be generated they think is my mood going into speaking, and upon leaving a conversation feel the same sense of calm that occurs while writing, that does not occur once everyone hold you to a lower standard in life, as to graver harms in life, based upon whats occuring in other states, and so long as everyone is well, and no one says anything about the past, does not mean its okay to allow things to continue, without providing the same aide and assistance to all who took it upon themselves to investigate me to know more about me, than privileged or approved by me. At this time it becomes who did that to me and why and after everyone Im close to Im not in communication with anymore, does not mean that I have wronged them or that they have wronged me, to build another type of case towrd me as though I am something I am not or have no sense of peace on my own, to see how I fair alone, I fauir fine, and to keep testing for disturbrances and based upon poor decisions past conduct the same estimates of me in the negative its to say I only respond if it pertains to me and because I felt like something could have eben put together in private about me, put it together in public as though I know and understand the difference between allowable sharing in private and that I knowingly understand the concept of not saying things in a confident way when I am not confident or strong and upon becoming suicidal or self harm, say that this is condition of knowing something and not saying anything, as though that was the reason I said something as though I know that something shared about me in private can cause me or others illness and said it trying to confirm thats how they think then question me for what reasons I put those two facts together in the first place, because facts sometimes get matched to make peolpe matching concepts about you feel better even if they cannot readily prove anything about you, that if you dont share get taken and shared for you without you knowing it making them the hero and you the problem for not sharing something that matches with everyone, in the event that "18" people die, whether recently stated or known by a few who have memorized information about me, can be used to say if in public and if I was 17 when we met and 18 when we dated in August then went to college, means that that was not statutory rape if it was the 4th time I ever had sex in my entire life, and that because I stated we met when I was 17 was purposefully leaving room for inference that we dated when I was 17 so that he would look like he had done something wrong, or claim that I felt like something wrong was done to me. After leaving for college, he visitied me once and drove for 15hrs, and we stayed in a hotel room and I was on my period at the time there, and at a hotel in Venice, once at his place dressed in an orange lingerie outfit gifted to me by friends supervised by my friend waiting for me, once at another apartment his apartment was available, and he once sat for dinner with me and my family drove his friends car it was nicer from Seattle, he took me to a Seahawks game, and I took him to a Laker Game, I wore a yellow skirt he said I looked pretty.

Why I Built a Website ...

Im pretty sure that anything I say now, will probably be questioned at a later point in time, or based upon my experiences in life, suggest that my motivations are not to help myself nor to help others, but to compete with other existing organizations and systems of thought gathering and deductions, no matter what you say about what you have done in life to achieve a well condition, there will always be measures taken to further understand what youre saying, how youre saying it, what is said to you, and how something can be said to you, that you are later attracted to or pick up, to argue that you are someone who listens for cues, or recognizes others as solid, as though you were ever trying to set an example or explanation for any exchanges of energy or information and know how between people if in the negative someone becomes more fragile or not solid, and you feel as though you are more solid or better than, that I am not sure of how an auditory hallucination hearing voices, serves to benefit someone who is sending me voices, who I cannot prove is the sender nor do I recognize the face from who the voice is coming from or where it coming from and why, that's what they expect to see on my face, whether by voice I look like them, to say by my face others look like me and therefore a product of them their voices in life, to suggest that I do not look this way on my own, and a by product of other peoples faces and looks voices or words, if that doesn't make sense to you, it's not something I waste too much time thinking about, or becoming sick about, I just threw up in my bathroom hearing voices. There is a general understanding that if someone who you grew to love is no longer in your life and if things did not work out and if upon waiting you never arrived to a stable place or position in life to remain lovers and eventually become companions well then don't blame those around you from discouraging you to date someone you describe as having liked over the years, why things don't work out when you are told not to date or like certain people in life. That's so that you can heal, that's not for their added benefit or personal interest to cause harm to you or others, and it's not that they anticipate anyone has the potential to harm you or sensing things in the future as not working out based upon who you are surrounded with, but to have control over your time and attention and focus, upon who you are surrounded with, and whether relationships bloom, foster, and at what point you become sick and in disarray, and whether you liked anyone in the process of that occurrence, whether illness done to you thinking things were more than they were, or anyone's need for your time and attention and acceptances over your own needs or theirs as though you don't know when to back off, or as though your energy is off, or as though you are doing something wrong that you shouldn't be doing and why you are sick. Because I seem to work well and then get sick, upon connecting socially at work, I have decided to work from home, this is not in lieu of AA meetings or to correspond with more established systems of thinking and science and therapy and psychoanalysis, or psychotherapy, or for medical purposes make me well, or try to change foster or better the conditions of others, writing is simply something that I enjoy to do, it's something that comes naturally to me, and that's why I am understood make sense, am clear, and not liked based upon who I know or what I know or what I see, or what special information or experiences I have endured in life, but because I make sense now, and irrespective of others differences toward me, do not fight or argue or sue or blame or place grievances on anyone else, when my condition worsens, and always accept a beating by others, hard on me, hospitalized put in jail simply because I am not well and not connected to anyone on my own. Every time I have been sick or suicidal it was because I was drinking and because I drank things did not work out for me in life and have difficulty connecting, once you state the reasons for your sickness, then a further examination of what you knew then, what conversations you had, and based upon your story are assessed, things about you no one admits to keeping about you or knowing about you, which are later used to experiment with your condition knowing your weaknesses and by what you have shared, not be patient with you not be understanding of you, and not needing you upon being replaced by anyone who can do a better job than you can, respect when things are not working out, some people come back into your life, maintain rapport with, and some people do not come back into your life, that could be my choice or theirs, eventually patience runs out after awhile, depending on whether anyone was thinking of you cared about you, turned on you, and reading your work now, that I will never know, mostly people from your life don't care to review how you are doing well in detail if you are already doing better, and at a glance leave you alone.

Building Understanding ...

It takes awhile to arrive to wellness, sometimes you are in sync with everyone, and sometimes your timing is off, either judged as not having been available or there for everyone in the past, and all your work currently as in reference to the past, as though you ever had a duty to respond to problems faced by others, absent minded your own, sometimes upon looking back, you notice things or see things, which upon being interpreted at the present, makes people assume you always felt that way always noticed things looking for things to confirm what you are able to articulate now. Writing is not easy, and the past is not an easy subject, and sometimes in private we may remember things occurring in the past, upon the happening of events well, and as you get older your memory of events gets poorer, if you encounter stress or illness, or become overburdened or set behind in life to focus on a few times you became ill and forced to understand the causes for your illness or bipolar. Someone who helps someone doesn't step on the toes of others, interfere with their progress and ability to maintain a normal life, and when you are part from others, trying to focus on your career and be financially independent work toward those goals in life, don't expect everyone to be on the same page as you living private lives, and immune to controversies either. The only way to get smart is by working hard, being honest with others, focused on what's in front of you, not by incorporating interests outside of your concerns in life or experiences, just to look like you're doing the right thing as it relates to what you know or who you know, and it's not being avoidant the longer it takes to become established in a way that others are accepting of, most people don't think about your personal issues or read too much into the causes for your instability in life, and mostly check in and look for reassurances from others in your life, as they have become aware that you are not doing well in life, and if you are not well be understanding of others' hesitancy to check in with you, that's never an easy task, to talk to someone who looks and sounds gone, experiencing difficulty in life, and help anyone you are not professionally trained to help, nor assess what the problem is, and if someone does not understand why they are not doing well, then don't expect it's because of the pictures you take, the issues you record, what you remember, how you portray yourself, sometimes in your moments of peace and quiet and keeping track of your progress, others as you go, may think of you less looking over what you have shared, and based upon what they know, think that it's not you are becoming better on your own but in competition or as imitation of those who have more successfully portrayed the issues. If you don't understand what has gone wrong, don't assume that others think for any reason that you have not done your part to do the right thing, and think that it's because of your experiences in life or choices that they have the right to check through your things as though what you are doing in private writing or thinking about is their business to know, a computer is not a shared space nor is a cell phone, you should not need to go through someone's things to either accept or reject them in life, let people figure out life for themselves. That's an example of paranoia, which upon speaking to, gives others power to claim that if there was a fear then you expected that to happen and purposefully wrote in a way or took photos to affect onlookers, no one who is at peace if ever thinking that everyone is watching them, it's in private people are happy to be themselves, and sometimes people in public do not present themselves in the same way. That's not a matter of dislike for others, or a change in demeanor as though something inside of them changes around others, people only go places where they are comfortable in life, but once you become uncomfortable with yourself, as someone who used to be relied upon, trusted and found it easy to connect with others, understand that if you do not appear well that is how respect of you is lost, and all images and portrayals of you seen as insensitive or not of value, as though your understanding of life is to control what other people do in life, some people are gifted with jobs and taught how to work in industries and some work on their own.

Whats Challenging ...

Whats challenging is getting well and staying well, and overcoming your diagnoses in life, if people only expect you a certain way, and anticipate the worst of you thinking everything is leading up to something bad in life, by further defining you as without good intentions, and not having demonstrated anything in your life, that illustrates your reactions are natural will do everything in their power, based upon your exposures in life, make happen what they believe proves their best interests which are to prove you wrong in life, that's how hate works, when people's dominant ideologies in life, have been so established to accommodate a few as victim in life, and do not consider you a victim, among the best interests of all, we are not always responsible for these losses in identity, when we can no longer identify what is in our best interests while still accommodating the best interests of others to feel like they are doing the right thing in life, why it's important to only share general opinions about life not specifics, and if you mention specifics without naming names, than be sure not to send unwanted attentions to anyone no longer in your life, who as provided may not want to be used within an example of someone who has passed through your life, and what you were going through at the time, compared to where you are now, if now cannot remain better, then you become no better than you were then when you were not included in their lives, for what purpose does that serve. Life is mostly about responsibilities and blames in life, diffusing one's potential to be harmed, or to be blamed, or to be held liable for any interests acquired of them even if belonging to anyone in their company, but not ingrained specifically in their business decision making endeavors. If you allow for it, others will F you over in life, even if people were nice to you, it's common when you cannot see someone or do not hear from them to become paranoid, and sometimes in that state of paranoia think things are happening, maybe even think conversations are being made about the very things you become grown to worry about with regards to your connection to them, that's when your natural gift for sensing what's going right and what's going wrong, fails to differentiate between what is a well thought, what thoughts are not well, and forget how to return back to a way of thinking when everything does make sense, which generally occurs when you are feeling well, not when you feel like your interests have been divided, to accommodate anyone who distrusts you, sometimes requires proving ourselves trustworthy again, sometimes those connections mend themselves, sometimes we need distance, and sometimes we need to hear from others their opinion to feel like you are not thinking clearly or could be thinking better or "resolve" yourself of unnecessary worries in life, those voices could be "female" voices or those voices could be "male" voices, I have not yet been able to differentiate the causes for voices when well versus the causes for voices when not well and how to stop voices from occurring all together, to me voices are someone thinking they have a right to speak to you, judge you, comment about you, talk about you, ignore you, or mistreat you given your conditions in life, because they do not see you as value, someone who is trying to be smart or influential who is not, or does not have a good enough set of ideas, words, experiences in life, and by education, and know how, or talent to provide a voice of reason if they are not able to help themselves and become suicidal or self-harm, that is where you are wrong, not all people who work hard and excel at work, feel good when they are not doing something that give them a sense of purpose in life, some do not have people to talk to about things they think about, and you will never know why people treated you the way they did until you get better, and until you are able to speak and respond in a way that they no longer feel burdened to explain life to you, help you, redirect your attentions or focus in life, or take care of you, sometimes its is too much responsibility to care for anyone who becomes unstable by voices, thats unfortunate that I decided to be single, and for awhile was fine on my own, and eventually did not do well, its best only to connect when well, but that doesnt guarantee that anyone else will recognize your wellness in life, not if they are too busy looking at others, paying attention to whats going on in the world, and see you as unimportant in the grand scheme of things, thats when you need to be independent and understanding, why relationships are hard, they can love you but if it take too much time and energy to fix you, thats how love is lost, or a relationship fails. -Once someone sees you in disarray even if only a few privileged to see you in a moment when you become lost or experience symptoms of bipolar, its hard to be accepted as normal past that point of them seeing how you have harmed yourself, and overhear that you ever became suicidal, thats how you will be looked at, working hard, and everyone quiet, and the minute you become disorganized and not well, thats when everyone else seems sharper, and put together, its all a matter of perspective in life, some either only want to see what they see or think they know about you, until they feel like they are in control and understand themselves and others better unaffected, even at the price of causing you mental illness, by over focusing on you, studying you, treating you like a criminal, treating you as in need, treating you as mentally ill, and treating you based upon a few traumatic incidences in life, when you lost faith in the things that made you feel stable in life, and connected to others, and lost your sense of stability and sense of peace, the difference between someone who is mature and unaffected by anothers instability versus someone who thinks you are for experiment to disprove your intelligence or inability to remain stable and calm. Dont let people transmit their feelings and foresight to your sense of being and ability in life to remain well, thats how someone or something goes through you or affects you mentally that does not mix well with your sense of stability, usually someone who is in the wrong, or saying something wrong about you, degrading you, and saying things that arent true, questioning your progress in life, your wellness, Im human Im not a fraud, Im a good worker, Im not a hustler, I dont do charades, I respond well to others, Im not under pressure that I have put on myself, Im under unwanted pressures in life to prove myself, not to prove others wrong, thats where others are wrong in trying to prove me wrong, as though what is right and a proper way to think is based upon what one another thinks interdependent. Everyone should be able to see well on their own, and in no way shape or form does my understandings of life, or what I feel or see ever based upon what other people think or see, I see for myself, I work independently, and I have been stable and well my whole life, however not now. Thats not self-righteousness, self-righteousness is thinking you know best and that you think you can influence others for the better, Ive read books, eventually after three days of reading one book, you are on your own, and left with your own thoughts about life, thats not how influence works upon exposure feel connected and upon being connected see better thats where you are wrong, as though my spirituality in life or abilities in life are affected by anyone who does not like me, or thinks I have done wrong in life, thats not why I get suicidal, I get suicidal because I hear voices bringing up every instance I have talked about in private when something has gone wrong and I dont know why, and then remember every uncomfortable moment I have experienced in life, when I was not smart, or not myself, that doesnt okay for others to treat me like I am something I am not, or treat me like a criminal or an offender to compare me to other criminals who upon wrongful accusations commit suicide, if I have done nothing wrong, than I dont deserve upon connecting with others, to be made to look like I am now, what I was then at the time I got in trouble hearing voices and hit my head into a wall suicidal, and if you say what you heard make you look mentally ill, saying things to you that you have not said or written or even said out-loud, and because I explained that thats why voices are now referencing things in private I have said, to affect me, to see if I get sick hearing my own voice, or words I have said back to me, if it not for everyone its not for everyone. #righttoprivacy.

The More You Know ...

Its always easier in hindsight to size up people, assume their interests past, and assume for their interests past, is why they are successful now, thats in general, and sometimes your interests in life, can cause problems in your life, problems being interpreted, problems being accepted, and problems understanding you, thats upon seeing where you have been in life, and thinking you think you are all the things you have experienced in life, and are more professional than you are, tested and treated as less than, thats hurting someone by seeing their experiences in life, and upon being exposed to them, see better, and then put them down in life, as though their life has meant nothing to confirm, disprove, or improve your outlook and decision making in life. Its not until you become known that you have any control over how you look, sound, or appear to anyone who upon seeing you is judging you as being too confident or overconfident, even thinking you think you are better than others, if you appear confident, thats not always true, its usually those who are well, appear well, sound well, and able to adapt to any job opportunities thrown their way, and find success at whatever they set their mind to, never do anything to get anywhere in life, thats not how success and acceptability work, its your willingness to work and improve absent minded the successes of others, and without looking appearing or holding any negative opinions of those who are successful, as though you can do a better job in life trying to be someone youre not, thats taking on a position in life, the difference between someone successful from someone who is not successful, you either try to fit in, and become something like something successful, or you become successful on your own, and create a job and position in life, that is for you to fulfill, not step into anyone elses shoes in life, they created for themselves, thats where people have me wrong in life, that I know everyone, and because I know everyone, I fit in, all basis for acceptance are on a person to person basis, how capable you are, how smart you are, how creative you are, how well spoken you are, and how you manage you personal life, professional life, in a way that does not interfere with your acceptances socially on a larger scale, no good decisions are made by people who think less of you, you either become a better version of yourself, or you allow what other people think of you to be credited for your successes in life, thats how you lose credibility, and lose momentum in life, seen as imitation of those who are well, not someone well on your own, seen as someone who learns how to look and behave, and not naturally gifted on your own likable and get along easily with most, approachable. People easily get offended when they think you are trying to size up any industry in which you do not belong, thats treating you like you are not professional, and that because those interests are not your own professionally with no experience and know how within an industry, that your opinions dont matter, or seem meaningless as though stated to derive meaning and importance to your life as you relate to what you see and what you hear, thats called ethics, you either demonstrate a care for the value of what exists, or you dont value work product or find it special, but that does not apply to your treatment of people continuously, assuming someone who suggests a way of overcoming being controlled by what people think, and start being their selves again is always the goal. Thats life, people will always be more important than you more successful than in you in life, and those are things to be proud of about eachother, that they lived life and found their way via acceptances within their industry to be successful, those type of people are people who credit themselves in life for who they are, and rarely if ever credit others, and it usually occurs after they have completed recognizably successful material, people begin to wonder and want to know more about how they came to be, what inspired them along the way, and how they became successful among any group of people within an industry thats well respected and has many professionals within who have achieved success, no one is known by all immediately, not by who they know, not by what they've done, no one is God in life, thats not how life works, becoming a bigger version of yourself by who you represent in life, or by what you create, thats called success when everything is working out for you and around you in life, thats not a coordinated effort by everyone, its a coordinated effort by everyone within as in support of your work product, and everyone is either attracted to what you have created or not, thats the difference between a company realizing its potential well built, versus a company not built for that type of influence in life, or number of acceptances in life, why some ideas take off, and some ideas take longer to take off, based upon how your company presents itself among others. A lot of it has to do with you, fixing how you think about the world, and not become over consumed by how others think about the world, or about what they are trying to make happen for themselves in life, we all have different needs and goals in life, that drive our best decision making in life, some goals are to protect others from harm, some goals are to prevent suicide, some goals are to build more acceptance of people with mental health issues, some goals are to get jobs, some goals are to earn a living, some goals are to get married, some goals are to graduate, and some goals are to be beautiful, happy, lose weight, and represent yourself well. Those are my goals personally. And its because I was able to overcome those things in life, that I am better minded, more mindful, and less intimidated by others, whether they mass produce bad stories about me, whether they dont respect, whether or not they think Im important or unimportant, regardless whether they think Im cute or pretty or smart, I know who I am, its not by vying for attentions in lfe that you are given positive attentions in life, its always based upon wellness, thats how you get your power back in life and dont commit suicide, the less you think about what others think the less able others are to turn the tables on you, and say that its because of them you are successful, its because of their success you see better, its because they put you down, you were well spoken, and always disregard whether you have been harmed especially if you hurt anyone, thats how what has happened to you looks like an excuse, and upon hearing an "excuse" looks like, you dont understand life, and allows everyone to take the shoes of the victim, and rather than respect you, look down on you, rather than see you as improve, not be impressed by you, and the more you self-harm in response or become suicidal, the more they win, to articulate you were that way and you have always been that way, and its not because of what was done to you, but because of what you have done in life, is why you experience mental illness bipolar and feel suicidal. Thats to take one instance and then create understandings of a person as someone who was not well when they achieved and if they were well constantly fixated and looking for the moment they became suicidal and why, ans thats how someone gets sick, when you dont allow them to improve, and instead of accepting them or not, leave them alone, and stop paying attention to them. Thats how someone shouts at you or insults you to get you to flip out, however instead of attacking anyone else best interests I hit my head and get suicidal thats me, Id rather die than fight. Fighting is a waste of time and only causes mental illness, and if you allow yourself to flip out of become emotional, thats how you give power to others, to take power away from you in life, to be successful to earn a living to be social, to be themselves, and ruin their life to protect your own opinions, as someone trying to change everyone to accommodate them, thats not the solution, to put a piece of someone in things to make things look special or about someone special, thats God job, to dictate what makes people special, not by behaving or looking a certain way be accepted, so long as that continues, is by what you teach is an allowable formula, to use people and put them down in life, and pretend like what they think or feel is all made up, if someone is getting sick, and if I got sick, and if other people see or come to understand what is causing sickness, thats how people feel devalued as though who they are as connected to others or becoming sick themselves is seen as a cause, instead of human not in the know, not focused on others, not worried in those ways about life, thinking everything is about them, the minute things become about you, thats how you get devalued not inspire, and the minute you allow people to make things about you, the more you become susceptible to blames should anything go wrong, blaming your condition for others misfortunes in life.

"The Game" Definition ...

There is no one right way to live life, no one right to see things, no one right way to feel, and no one right way to think, that would limiting a humans potential to excel, to believe, to imagine, to feel free, to feel able, to feel at peace, and to have time left to wonder about life, and maybe even create something new or invent something that serves a purpose to benefit others abilities to think, thrive, and stay organized in life. We are always adapting to the times, the news, social issues, beliefs, fights, crime rates, suicide rates, overdoses, addictions, alcoholism, breakups, divorces, successes, failures, and losses, you cant sum up life in a way that can bring others peace, unless you have lived through life, and can articulate yourself in a way, that doesnt bring up all those issues for others, thats more than just normalizing ways of living life, but its not allowing what ifs, the past, losses, fights, people, or circumstances to be of issue to everyone, thats a conflict, when someones issue, that is not your own, affects you, and if you feel like someones issues in life can have an affect on your abilities in life to thrive or make money, I dont think anyone is powerful enough to dictate how money is spent and earned in this country, be sure never to blame any one person for limiting opportunities in that respect. Generally we envision the positive, thats natural to want more upon doing well thinking we deserve more, like a paycheck, trust, respect, or peace, dont expect everyone to provide you with things in life, upon beginning to do well in life, sometimes you have to figure out life for yourself, and learn how to make money on your own, this was never anything I had ever anticipated I would have to go through in life, make a job for myself, I loved working, love music, admire acting, successful people, and understand how difficult it is to get a job Im 4 interviews for 200 applications sent, those were my odds. So when I talk about "the game" Im not being critical or trying to sound like a know-it-all when it comes to other peoples struggles in life, I only know based upon my connections in life how difficult it is to not offend anyones bests interests, and realized only after failure, how others could be affected, if the tables were more turned toward putting me down in life, that hurts anyone trying to create a happier outlook in life for others, or live a successful life, if someone they know or knew is not doing well, and sometimes based upon our cares in life, unrelated to "the game" do we take it upon ourselves to begin helping thats not connecting peoples struggles to groups, and make people within industries responsible for crime prevention and ongoing losses due to drugs and alcohol, its to basically make people less socially responsible for things done by others people in life to cause harm to others, not make that a public interest personal issues or fears over success and acceptances in life, no one can affect how you are accepted in this world, you would think random people have the power to misrepresent you in life, only if you allow them to, if you improve and make progress in life, then none of that matters, the biggest problem is that although someone who was once disfavored or treated as problematic, achieves gets well, that still does not resolve peoples need to blame people, for their misunderstandings in life or feeling behind in life, we all figure out life as we go, you can either let people experiment with you and take their lead in life, or you can work on yourself and lead others in life and see life for yourself. How do bad things happen, its looking back, relating the past to now, to describe whats happening now, and then to worry and think your worries means there is someone in your life causing you worry, and blame them because you think your worries are hurting your ability to think for yourself, that obsessing with someone until everything happens in alignment with an interests to make them a bearer of responsibility for losses, as though they have connections or control over others best decision making skills in life, and sometimes in hurting people we think deserve to be harmed as not trying to help, you become harmed, having wasted energy, focused on yourselves, and the problem still happens anyways. No one is psychic, thats not how you stop or prevent bad things from happen, and although I may be predictable by now having shared all my thoughts and diagnosis, that doesnt mean all people are predictable, and that doesnt mean understanding me with give you a better understanding of people who have been punished or suffered disabilities and hardships in life, thats the unfortunate lesson, for some some improvements are never enough to fix their need for control their happiness, and some cannot be happy if you are doing well in life, thats an unwanted attachment to someone, some idea, some feeling, that you are not in tune with, and its only upon being situated similarly, that others argue because you are like so and so now, lets see what happens to you if we do this this or that, on top to understand suicide, Ive already been through it, thats not a good learning lesson, to play with someones life, to make a point. #dontdodrugs #sobriety #lessons ~Remember all.

#thegame (definition): What you think is happening, what u know has happened, what u safeguard against, what's going well what's not, & prevent attachment of all to the deceased failed business decisions, victims or offenders for ref to read what to do now, don't build hurt! 👍

When Love Comes Around ...

Never assume anyone knows you, thats just as a general rule being considerate of what people have heard about you, and upon meeting you, should be allowed a good first impression always, that usually diffuses any discrepancies when it comes to identifying you as someone special, or someone ordinary and just hyped up because of who you know in life. We all have gifts, some of us more or less able to help others, its not easy to present yourself to the world and open up about your life, especially if you have lived a private life for the majority of your life, not all people become spokespeople to their own issues in life, we see it all the time on TV but its not easy to say this is what I have experienced in life, and this is who I am now, although inspiring to others, and worth knowing you in life personally, not all are privileged to get to know special people in life in a personal way, feel close to, or bettered via the sharing of their experiences in life, especially if not all experiences having to do with why and how they are known, gets brought up, that defeats the purpose of having moved on in life, to subject yourself to the past, a traumatic experience in life, just because it happened a long time ago, doesn't mean it doesn't still hurt, and just because someone is living a private life, doesn't mean that they don't feel uncomfortable if everyone is paying attention to something painful from their past, that never feels good. Of course there will always be people who benefit from coming forward and sharing their experiences in life, having come out of trauma, and how they started to live better lives, absent minded how they felt harmed, by whom, and how, that's a very touchy subject, and most issues people face and have overcome, those issues past are not something they put at the forefront of their mind, if they are trying to live life now and be happy with where they are, who they are, and who is in their life, who they have known, who they have trusted, who has hurt them, and continue to be proud of themselves, and continue to benefit from the wellness of those around them, except only in the privacy of their own lives, not sharing their wellness out loud, that's being respectful sometimes, paying attention to other people, and focusing less on those primarily affected, and being more unconditional towards those who are going through a lot and have gone through a lot in life, and not treat them like living their lives has been easy, as known, or by who they're connected to feel brought down in life, that's a tremendous burden, to have had the opportunity to have lived a much different life than you are living now had you not experienced tragedy, and do your best with what life you have to live now, that doesn't mean that you are insignificant to the any meaning derived from the understandings of others, but remember your unique perspective in life, upon sharing, and not like something already published on the subject is of value, be careful how you come forward in life, how you tell your story, and don't run the risk of being treated as trying to be special, if you are special, or trying to piggy back on the successes of others, if you grew up in a high profile case, then have faith that others will be equally respectful of the life you have lived in spite of any pain or suffering you endured as a part of, or by any burdens you felt subjected to, minimizing among those directly affected by controversy, that's being a victim advocate.

Playing Victim ...

It's an unfortunate truth that some don't make it professionally in this world, it's upon meeting, seeing someone, and based upon their work ethic, either treat them as the cause for their feelings, and choose only to be around those who are confident, and as a means to improve that opinion of you, the more mentally ill you look and appear, the more right they feel in their decisions of you, expecting you to be sharp, and make eye contact, and be perky, and be energetic towards people, that's not me, I'm a nice person, and because I am good inside, and don't watch scary movies, and don't have lots of sex, drink or do drugs, doesn't mean that it's okay to be experimental with me, as though I can handle cutting loose in life, be a free spirit, and take chances in life, I'm not a product of provocation until now, I was always a product not of others, or what they look like sound like or by their demeanor affected, never in my life, too over conscious of other people around me, never looked at, never bothered, no one weird towards me, everyone normal around me, not quiet, themselves, well around me, if I cannot stay well that has nothing to do with my environment, and everything to do with where my heart is, my ability to focus, and how intelligent I am able to be, if you have to work really hard and if it takes you a long time to accomplish your goals in life, then don't take chances, means your brain cannot handle alcohol, drugs, or casual sex, that's how you get tired, that's how you become stupid sounding, that's how you lose your beauty, and that's how you get sick bipolar. When you give your heart to someone, and you feel weaker and not as focused as a person, that just means that your heart is focused on something else, why the bond is not there, when you are taking life seriously sometimes those around may seem happier or more boisterous around you, having nothing to do with you, or well that's how it was, it's not until you get sick, that you don't fit in and the more uptight you are around others, the more comfortable with each other they are, and less you fit in in the grand scheme of things, if you're not comfortable you're not comfortable, and nothing can fix that, that's nothing to do with maturity, and if you endure pains later in life, be careful once you've accepted your life as lived, and the times you thought other people caused you sickness, or that you became sick because you gave love to the wrong people in life who did not need you, or fared better without you in their lives, bring up your condition now, if it's nothing to do with your past, then it's nothing to do with those pains, and know that everything you say now, as having overcome those conditions in life having bettered yourself, can happen again, that's you being experimented with as though you are not better and see how you look sound or behave under the same conditions, as though watching you when you are at ease is any different as watching you when everyone is going through all your things, phone, computer, website, photos, and personal data, to make you look like you're in the wrong, and not being professional in private or in public, until they can argue that "you did this to yourself" bipolar is not something you ask for in life, and if it happens to you it's not your fault, and that's where they are wrong to continually apply your understandings in life, as though its about others, and not about yourself, all my writing is about me, and because these ways of thinking about life, helped me are why I am well accepted online, is why Im a successful blogger.

Make Yourself Irreplaceable ...

We are raised in a society that tells us how to be, how to look, and defines success based upon who is successful at any given time. And in the event of any failed relationships or losses, are told to move on, or move forward, its their loss, focus on yourself, and dont worry about what other people think. Just because one person has left your life, or just because one person does not see any potential in you, or give you a job, doesnt mean that by their opinions alone, should you base how you see yourself, never think too hard about why, you are you, and they are they, always err on the side of acceptance, and maintain faith that the right opportunities will arise, upon you being in a better place in life, you at your best, and keep improving upon how you present yourself, and what you say in order to get what you want, a job, keep a boyfriend, stuff you never really think about, until you experience a breakup or unemployment. You are only gifted with full confidence once in your life, thats until your confidence gets broken in life, and thats your first experience second guessing yourself, which is more time consuming and waste of energy, when its you thinking that you are not good enough or dont have what it takes to be of value to another, whether in a working relationship, or romantic relationship. If you are doing things for the wrong reasons or based upon the success of people you see or have previously known, that actually hurts your motivations in life, not improve your ability to stay motivated and be of value, people are so quick to identify you as privileged to have been a best friend to someone famous, and dont see you as having worked hard to be known for something else in the public eye, your wellness, smarts, and life, and everything you have done to overcome difficulties, set backs, hardships, and failures, and still be a good person, and be well liked, after all is said and done, thats not riding on anyones coattails in life, especially if they are people not in your life, no one can help you get well, thats something you have to figure out for yourself, and no ones success can benefit you, or help you, thats not in your life, thats how life happens around you but you dont have a life of your own, what do you do then, certainly no one wants to be compared to successful people in life, as though they are a product of other peoples work, like becoming successful or read is a walk in the park, no it has taken me years of writing to figure out what works, and what keeps people reading, and better present issues in a way that doesnt offend anyone, doesnt relate specifically to people in my life, but general thoughts about being well, staying well, positive reflections on life, with nothing to do with competition, you cannot be successful in this world so long as you compare yourself to others, try to be like others, or if you dont like what you look like or sound like, if you dont love yourself to begin with, dont expect anyone to pay attention to you, those feelings translate to rejections in life, anything unstable, not well made, not original, or not helpful, is rarely read consistently everyday in the thousands, I think because I had a wonderful upbringing that that makes me a likeable person, and interesting to hear from, whether or not others can relate or empathize.

When Life Begins ...

Life begins the moment you recognize your self-worth, and achieve confidence in life, that means you feel well, and are positive, and no one naturally affects you, because you take nothing personally in life, meaning you never assume, think, or comprehend, that someone who knows you who you dont know, is capable of causing harm to you, in todays day and age with social media, it has become ever more present, how a loss of confidence can occur, its when someone upon knowing you, gets a head start in life, being more clear and seeing more than you, receiving more confirmations and support, than you are given in life, thats as they are reassured in life, and as you become less and less in sync with the wellness of those around you, that they feel better and better, as having chosen not to care about you or see you as important. Fame does not occur, simply because you know someone famous, that doesnt earn you followers and it certainly does not create a collective mindset among others, with a sense of direction about how to handle issues on their own, or work better, however it does take a collective mindset of seeing you as unimportant or unintelligent, or a poor representation of others, with expectation that you are supposed to have a preassembled picture of how the world works, just like everyone else, I have to assess think comprehend, and consider everyones best interests when it comes to presenting myself to the world, and if things are not clear to me, then its not to my understanding always why that happens to me, thats just a side-effect of not remaining social and doing well on your own, focusing on school and who you are dating, sometimes in your own world, nothing affects you, and sometimes, when you are focused, and seem like you have some invincible edge in life or drive, that you get dominated by the opinions of others, testing how resilient you are how good you are, how good of a friend you are, how good of a girlfriend you are, and how able you are to stay normal, and not become bothered about what you become exposed to in life. Life begins the moment you apply what you know, and what you hear, and what you see to yourself, thats not an assumption or a side-effect of anyones thoughts about themselves, it occurs, upon having time to look around you, and begin making steps in life forward, sometimes those opportunities avail themselves to us, and sometimes, we have to try harder in life, for acceptances, never assume there is a cohesive negative assumption about you, upon which decisions are made regarding the treatment of you, thats seeing people as banded together, in the know about something that is happening about you or to you, which you are not aware of, and becoming consumed by what you think or feel is happening, it may not happen until you speak to it. The minute you become defensive in life, thinking things are about you, the more you reinforce others abilites to remain ahead of you in life, in terms of support, that as you comment, and as you piecemeal why you are feeling the way you do, they are already supported publicly, at your expense, before you even have a chance to be introduced to the world, as though you were already known, and it was ever okay to hurt you or put you down in life, as though your condition or wellness, was ever offensive or intimidating to anyone you have met in life. Its upon sharing how you feel now, that a timeline and record of stories shared past, and thoughts shared then are used to compare or prove whether you are enduring the same feelings because of similar circumstances, then provoke you by continuing to favor those you have met, and treat you as a bad connection, or person to know, as though you have ever hurt anyone, and then automatically accept the ghosting by others from my life and silent treatment, as though it was deserved, as though Im supposed to know why, and by proving that I feel "like Im supposed to know why" is to argue that "if I dont know why, its because I dont know that what I am doing is wrong" and then argue thatr because I have that feeling means I am automatically doing something wrong. This is when you make a choice to subject yourself to further attack, belittlement, and insult, treated as not smart, or problematic, as they become more well than you after meeting you, resulting from the automatic support they receive and sympathies, as though knowing me is a chore, I dont need anyone to represent me in life, I have lived a good life, was a great person, and nice to everyone, never intense, demanding, complaining, playing victim, and have never made anyone look bad in my life, its upon sharing your story that others mentioned automatically get treated as victim, and thats how attacks upon your character get launched, to then reinforce previous wrongs as misidentifying you as grose or problematic or in law school for the wrong reasons, as though your interests and feelings now reflect how you were upon entering a peaceful situation, and leaving less than everyone, that comradere you feel is occurring, is your loss of confidence, its not that others feel better than you because you are not doing well, its that you are no longer comfortable around others, with energy to be positive, date, have friends, simply because others thought it more important to set you up to look stupid, or set you up to feel like you were doing something wrong, or get you to appear in private as though you like and allow others to treat you that way, and its by treatment of you you feel good, no I feel good, and thats how I am treated well, its when I am not well, that I become distant, and the more focused I am on repairing myself, sometimes I become less aware of what others or thinking and feeling towards me, that that paranoia in life goes away, not induced to be perceived as guilty, for past interactions, or for something current, make my private issues, of public concern, as though their mental health is in jeopardy, I dont preach ways to think about life, with a plan to dominate over any current understandings of life, this blog is simply to state that I acknowledge the potential to be harmed, have already suffered harms, and in not being able to undo those harms toward me, as a result of an accepted negative viewpoint of someone, who gets insulted and offended easilym, easily intimidated by others, allow that feeling to get worse, or continue to suffer as a result of thinking things are happening that are not, thats creating a condition, that doesnt exist, and until it exists, be used to prove that others made the correct decision in treating me that way, as though I am doing good things in life, for the wrong reasons to look good, as though I dont have the personality or ability to help others naturally, gifted, nice, kind, unassuming, aloof, seeing the good in others, never anticipating that any complex decisions have been made above me to empower others to set me up on behalf of others, as though my identity becoming known, or my cares, are for my own interests not in the best interests of others, aside from these issues arising now, I just called the US Supreme Court and let them know, that "the purpose is for people to create value which can help others."

Responding to Protests ...

Sometimes we calculate things well in life, and everything goes smoothly, and sometimes things get out of hand, if its not your responsibility to control what people think, than why let anyones poor judgment of you bring you down in life to respond to them, point blank. First remember to stay on board with yourself, what are you doing, and what are you saying, and is what you have to say going to help or hurt an already volatile situation, sometimes in trying to downplay one reaction, others will hopefully represent those concerns and beleifs in a different light not the same light, if you can't punish victims of crime, then how much can one allow to happen, as though they have the option to respond in the same way. Im just an OFA Fellow, with little experience in civil rights other than disability rights, and have never given a formal speech in my life to more than an AA meeting. The goal in AA is to always share stories of experince strength and hope, its formatted that way to inspire others to stick to the their steps, and recover. I was not vocal during the protests because I was taken off day meds for two weeks and it has taken me this long to get going again on a schedule, and not feeling well tired asleep all day, on top of everything I had to get an ultrasound done. Sometimes its best not to comment if its not your specialty, if you have always worked hard, and demonstrated kindness in the past, keeping your interests to yourself, and not have drawn attention toward yourself in public, and especially if youre not strong, those are moments when you might say the wrong things in life, and even if you manage to downplay the current times, no one will downplay what you have to say, if it can be misread in the negative, then dont say it at all. Know your place in life.

Earning Your Sense of Peace ...

Earning your sense of peace ... I've learned that although I may have grown up privileged that doesn't exclude me from suffering any downfalls like the rest of them. You'd think that someone who has grown up wealthy would have a good head on their shoulders and stay out of trouble, but life isn't always that easy to comprehend and visualize where you are and get to where you want to be in life, successful too like your parents. It's a tough pill to swallow failures lurking in your past, exactly how bad were things, compared to where you are now, (pause) learn to forgive yourself. There's always time to recognize what you are doing right at this point in your life and start valuing yourself, it's never too late to start. You may not need to look that far back in life in order to be proud of who you are now. Of course when we have it good in life we recognize that feeling, like everythings in place, the feeling of total control over your life, and once that power is lost, well thats what separates the strong from the weak, how resilient are you? How controlling are you? How willing are you to let go? And whats holding you back in life? 9 times out of 10 the past is what keeps us from moving forward, over-focused on what has passed, rather than take any oppourtunities moving forward to feel good again, thats acquiring an aversion to feeling good, since the last time we felt good about ourselves, we got hurt. Just accept that no life is perfect, the point of building resiliency to stress, is not allow the past to be compounded with any current issues you may be facing, and completely disable all your motivations in life, even if one of your motivations in life, is to achieve happiness, and self satisfaction, like the last time you felt good about yourself, before all that bad stuff happened to you. Experience therefore overcoming unwanted stresses in life, is not always to your benefit, as you become more avoidant of living life, and grow more concerned about your own personal interests in staying well, making it less likely for you to incorporate people and activities in life, that have caused you to feel hurt or at a loss, thats normal, forgive yourself and get back out there, just like dating is difficult, you'll thank yourself later, for overcoming that hurdle in life, to just keep to yourself and stop living life all together, thats not beneficial to your health at all, to become a recluse, personal time "you time" is like a few hours each day, the rest of the day you are expected to work toward a bigger goal in life, if not your own goals in life, work for others and help them to accomplish their goals in life, thats one way in which the workforce helps people to manage their time on earth, and establish their sense of purpose in life, an opportunity given to them by another to work for them and in exchange for their work, are paid or given a resume building experience that will further qualify them later on in life, to take on more responsibilities in life, thats a basic step most people make in life, however I am not one of them. Why is that? Sometimes we make choices in life, in anticipation that we will fair better in the future, and sometimes when sacrificing our time toward bettering ourselves, we miss out on life, adjust anyways, without regrets, if you are a product of all your choices you have made in life, then accept who you are now because of those choices, and move forward in life. The worst thing you can do to yourself, is to have regrets in life, wishing you had lived life differently, better, or feel like because of the choices you have made in life, that your future potential is now limited. Acknowledge what has gone wrong, and fix that about yourself, you cant change the past, you cant change what people think, and you cant make people care about you, if you are not important to them, or if there are other things more important to them in life, than having you in their life, be special to you, others may not always make you feel special.

Putting Things Together ...

Sometimes we put things together, upon being exposed to people, who enlighten us, nice people generally, who have a knack for saying the right things, and because they are well, make others feel well too. We are not all gifted in that way, to recognize or appreciate which exposures in life are not harmful to our health, and which exposures in life, are causing us difficulty in life, you cannot blame others, for not feeling well, or who upon meeting, dont feel well, not all people are the cause of your discomforts in life, and just as anyone can cause harm to my psyche, when everything makes sense, to suddenly become painful, is hurting my viewpoint and in not being attached to people, already hurt before we even meet, that just means its not for your edification to understand the past of another, if it does not involve you, then its not your responsibility to read into anyones past, to understand them as they are now, maybe their past has nothing to do with where they are now, and maybe their past has everything to do with where they are now, be careful who you credit along the way, because even if you've recovered from anything that has caused you pain at one point in your life, don't be surprised upon revisiting those issues again at a later point in time, when you are more well, to suffer the same kinds of discomforts in life, and maybe even suffer a worse pain, once your now, gets downplayed by your past, or theirs, and it's the compounding of those viewpoints past, that hurt your ability to stay well now, absent minded what other people think, that's feeling things from the side of those whose interpretations of your past were viewed in the negative, making you a victim of the feelings of others, favoring the reactions of those who did not believe in you or whoever thought less of you, you either move forward and leave them feeling like the got away with everything, if you later become a success story, or bring up the past and re-empower them to make you feel the same again, and cause you pain. -If a combination of interests are causing you illness, then you may feel like me, who hurts when they look stupid, when they are just trying to be nice, or gets sick, when they can't explain what's wrong, and they look bad, and cannot fix what has gone wrong, to cause others to take a leap in judgment as though one will never make it, or jump to any conclusions, to discredit or downplay the significance of a person's experience in life, and interfere with their ability to thrive in life, the more you make things about others, the less of you you feel, as connected to anything that's not you, and it's unfortunate that unless you let go of what has caused you pain in the past, the moment you become well and able to let those people back into your life, don't be surprised if you endure the same pains again, as apart from them, that's not continuing on in life for you, to do what's in your best interests, but a constant incorporation of other people's feelings when it comes to your progress in life and wellness, if it's you that needs to get well, never think twice about other people's intentions in life, people are mostly concerned with their own wellness, and don't have the time and energy to dismantle your wellness, why I live for the moment, and when I'm in a good place in life talk to everyone, and share my life with others, in private or in public, not with anticipation of pain, that's knowing myself, to keep going when I'm feeling well, because I know that I improve based upon my own momentum in life, but know that just because you're doing better in life, doesn't mean that you can't get hurt too, sometimes the harder we try in life, and the more we have accomplished looking back with pride, the more painful it becomes to have to start over in life, or lose that inner ability and focus to stay well, in spite of what's going on around you, or to you in life, that's being strong, it should require no forgiveness, and no extended effort on your part to fix others if you cannot fix yourself, in fact the more you acknowledge your condition and with insecurity approach life, the more likely you are to be rejected as not well enough to contribute to wellness around you. That's life, some more well versed than others, on the concept of work, and good health.

Book Review: "Everything is F$cked" ...

Mark Manson's sequel to "The Subtle Art of Not Giving a F-ck," which has sold more than "8 million copies" [1] to date, is "A Book About Hope," entitled "Everything is F$cked," which was equally as thoughtful as his first book, demonstrating his ability to both share his thoughts in a not so serious way, while trying to teach the reader ways of remembering concepts through his own learned understanding of history and facts about life, in a not so serious way, always keeping things light, no matter how heavy the subjects covered get, that was a refreshing way of being introduced to wars in history, who survived, who was remembered, and what they were remembered by. One of the concepts that used to interest me in college was EQ, also known as "emotional intelligence," describing the ways in which we "navigate the road of life." (page 43) -He then goes on to discuss the necessity for "getting our values straight within ourselves so that we can get our values straight with the world." (page 46) He talks about everything from equality (page 122), nonviolence (page 165), to humanity (page 155). Overall he tries to teach us a very important lesson, that you can't always get what you want, even if you are doing the right thing, and explains that sometimes no change occurs until we have "experiences contrary to our values" (page 67), which explains why some changes are painful.

Right to Privacy and HIPAA ...

6/8/2020

If you're doing well and suddenly don't feel well, sharing about everything you've been through, and how you've been able to manage your symptoms, chances are you are bringing up information about yourself, that is supposed to be kept private, maybe in part for the very reason, of not experiencing any additional trauma associated with being discriminated for having experienced mental health issues in the past. And although sharing your experiences may help others to feel better like they're not the only one going through something tough, be wise, some sharing helps, but be mindful of what you share, it's okay to filter every now and then. It always baffles me, the moments I don't feel as good as another, and the moments I am well and hear from others who are not fully recovered yet from their personal issues, no life is perfect. That being said, only you know what's relevant to your now, and what you were like then, it's not necessary to constantly rehash your past, you only do yourself a disservice in life, keeping you feeling stuck, having not moved forward at all. Life can get scary, especially when you have to consciously think about all the things you need to do daily and nightly to stay alive, sleep, take meds, keep busy, and not become symptomatic, don't overwhelm yourself, the trick to not having to think about anything that scares you, is to establish a routine, and get the right help necessary, so that you don't have to think about things so much on your own, and with the help of a professional, can figure out what's important now, what's not important, what's a better way of seeing things, and what is making you feel worse about yourself, and even get positive reinforcement every now and then, when you are doing a good job, and once you finally begin to put your life together again, be proud of yourself, when the days go by fast, pray for the nights you are able to fall asleep, stay asleep, and wake up feeling refreshed, like it's a new day, and go to bed consistently looking forward to the next day, with a plan each week or daily, set along with goals you have in mind, that you want to accomplish. We can't all be experts at processing life on our own, why it's important to read, and see how other people think, and listen to what other people have to say, just like going to AA, to understand that you're not alone, and some people have been through worse than you, some people are going through the same thing as you, some people never make it back no matter what meds they're on, stay home, and never work, that doesn't mean that's going to happen to you, if you stumble and fall in life, your life is what you choose to make of it, and it's the decision you make to keep moving forward that takes you to better places in life, so that you have the gift of looking back, and recognize how far you've come, it's always when you feel like giving up in life, that you have to push yourself, change your routine, build better habits, and control your thoughts better, there's no rush, remind yourself of that, the body and mind takes time to heal, time to forget, time to process, time to focus, time to feel normal, time to feel better, be patient with yourself. -Which is why I'm getting an at-home sleep test by a sleep doctor, because I sleep too much, and take too many naps, I'm not sure why, could be more motivated, energy wise, maybe still adjusting to meds.

True to Your Word ...

Some of the best insights come from people who have lived through the exact difficulties they describe, and even if one is still struggling, doesn't seem to mind sharing through it, without causing anyone else to worry or notice that you are, that's being selfless, when even though you may not be in the best shape in life, no one else seems to mind, and no one else seems to suffer at the same token, or to the same extent, even if your story is sad or doesn't make sense to them, not bothered by your mental anguish or disability, not that they have faith that you will overcome what you're going through, maybe relieved they are not enduring the same confusion of interests and hardships in life, when it comes to how they are perceived by the politically gifted, and from a politically humorous mindset. We can't all be level-headed, you either keep going until you get hurt, or have the best of luck in life, and keep graduating and getting job after job, without fail and grow professionally, only a few of us, are forced to take different courses in life, where there is opportunity for us to thrive, blend in, shine, and be ourselves, without fear of what will be thought of us, and based upon how we appear, be judged, with anticipation that we are seeking acceptances from anyone with the option to reject us. I grew up in a social scene where everyone is nice to one another, I've never been in a fight my whole life, have always had friends, and am always approached in life everytime I go out, that's just who I am people talk to me, and I am nice to everyone I meet I'm not judgmental. I can talk to just about anyone, that's just who I am. Unfortunately there are elitists in life, and it's not that they don't want to interact with everyone, it's that they understand the risks to your health, upon exposing your life to others, and being affected personally, being known inside and out, there are many risks to sharing out in the open, besides identity theft and imitation, or competition, and even if you don't think about those things doesn't mean it can't happen to you, why people are so protective of their private lives, medical conditions, it's so what hurts doesn't get harped on, and whats not well doesnt get worse, and what has happened doesnt happen again, and so what has past, doesnt get blown out of proportion into a side against you, thats being protective over your life, not bringing up anything about yourself, or others specifically that would otherwise hurt an already well adjusted disposition, to incorporate anything that would cause discomfort upon being known, or having been associated to you, its upon things not going well in your life, that it doesnt matter what has happened in your life, if those were all well moments, I feel like there is overemphasis on the past to explain who you are now, without acknowledging that maybe because one is different now, their lives are not the same as they were then, when they were well, and not experiencing mental health issues. Apparently you are only level headed until you let anyone or anything get to you in life, and when you finally snap and freak out, dont get mad at anyone, and especially dont self harm, its once you look or appear not well, that others think that you overthink, or because you overthink, you think everything is purposefully done to you in life, no one is to blame for my disabilities in life, thats no ones fault but my own, if I am not accepted, if I do not appear well, if I am not well liked, then that is my own fault, and if I can undo those hardships in life, then it is in my best interests to undo those disabilities when it comes to acceptance, not self-harm and become suicidal give up in life, this is why I blog because it has taken me many years, to undo insecurities, self-doubt, loneliness, and being quiet, to talk to people, make friends, and be social again, its just a phase, like all other phases in life, disobedience and testing your limits in life, following your whims, taking chances, following your dreams, thinking highly of others, different things in life will keep you hopeful that things will work out for you in life, and you get hurt sometimes, thats normal.

Write Without Expectation ...

The best advice I can give to someone going through a lot is dont explain yourself, especially to anyone who you think may be listening, direct any attentions to any negative voices, or interpretations you may hear, we cant all be perfect people, and we wont blend well with most, and there will always be people who think they are bigger, smarter, and better than you simply because of what they have in life, based upon who they are in life, or based upon what they have achieved in life, see you as small or unimportant, thats normal within social hierarchies, and within professional hierarchies, just be accepting of everyone, the more accepting you are of people you feel intimidated by, threatened by, bullied by, the less those people will have an affect on who you are, and what becomes of you. Don't let minor annoyances in life, get the best of you, its easy to flip out and become emotional, thinking that everyone is thinking something they are not, and even if its just a few people who think and know they are better than you, there is no reason why anyone should be offended by the other, for having mentioned what you notice via observation, if its not happening in your life right now, then dont bring up something you noticed in the past, if you are not the same person you are now, that you were then, sure youre going to notice a lot of things that did not bother you then, but if mentioned now, makes it appear as though you are bothered by those things now, and were bothered by those things then, thats making an issue, of how you feel now, putting others automatically in the defensive of themselves and others, as though there is something arguably wrong with you, and because there is arguably something wrong with you, you are only noticing now, things that dont matter to normal people, if it can be argued that normal people dont feel the same way you do, think the same way you do, or react or respond in the same way that you do, or get hospitalized, simply for arguing with anyone about what they think, without any affirmations, be ruled out as the one who is the problem and has problems in life, even if you have a perfect life, no one ever empathizing with anyone, who thinks they have done something wrong, or were in error, pointing that out only makes things worse, it become a tit for tat, talking about yourself and one thing, then bringing up others issues, and pointing out things unrelated to what is going on now, that causes a bad feeling between people, where much is needed to be said, in order for any mutual understanding to occur, leaving each ones feelings and emotions aside as recognized by one another, thats speaking not to create sides to an argument, or to make anyone appear differently than they appear to others, or make anything in the past appear to have been something it was not, if brought up now, so always be careful when detailing what you have learned, and through the process of learning how to blend in and be more accepted by others, what changes you have made to think less, care more, be more compassionate, toward yourself first, not share those discomforts out loud, like it has anything to do with anyone elses life, only your own perspective, which even if unique, can suffer like the rest of them, once things become personal, and you are no longer comfortable sharing anything privately known only to you thought about, and shared out loud to help others to realize what is causing their disorganized thoughts, and start thinking about themselves in a way, that doesnt reflect any need to assert ones self, or be made to feel better.

Whats Holding You Back? ...

First ask yourself: Are you doing things to make someone else happy; if Yes, then ask yourself: What are you also doing to make yourself happy, absent minded their needs. There is a such thing as you time, and while we sometimes think that everything we do has an equal and opposite affect on those around us, that rule never applies to self-care, it should always be in the best interests of those around you to care first and foremost for yourself, after-all, who want to receive help or care from anyone who can barely take care of themselves, and secondly in order to be taken care of in life, you yourself have to demonstrate an ability to care for yourself on your own, without help from others, thats begin independently successful on your own, and be someone who is easy to love and to care for, arent those always one of our goals in life to be loved? Sometimes in loving others, and trying to take care of others, we do and say things, to protect their best interests, based upon what we have experienced ourselves in our lifetimes, whether that be in deficiencies in our ability to care for ourselves, or by witnessing the failure of others abilities to care for us, or in our past inability to care well for ourselves. Be mindful where you are coming from, and what deficit you have, either your own, or a previous lack of care, you have witnessed, that explains why you seek to better another or your own life, in spite of those who have failed to care, even if its yourself. Remind yourself to be cognizant of how you are living your life, if you are not living a life that others think admirable in spite of your hardships, it may be difficult to listen to someone who isnt making any progress, and keeps circling back to the same pitfalls in life, unhappiness. Its a daily job, to resolve issues with the past, and to resolve yourself of your own unhappiness in life. The good news is that upon recognizing our own unhappiness is when we seek change, either in ourselves or others. Be grateful for the days that go on, monotonously, without error, the weeks flying by, month after month making progress, and when you come to halt at any moment in time, remember what you did last time you were unhappy and got yourself out of a rut in life, and stick to that method, and build upon it in the future, if you already have the tools ... then live life fearlessly and without worry! So long as you are always doing what is right, if ever anything goes wrong, then dont beat yourself up over it, or complain about those around you as contributing to your own unhappiness, at the end of the day, no one can control your feelings and thoughts, unless you allow them to. It only take a little change to break the monotony of an unhappy state of mind, ie "move mountains." Ask yourself: How willing are you to continue thinking that way, or feeling that way, before you start the process of healing, and allow others to heal around you, is that really what you want to contribute to the unhappiness of others, or compound the needs of others with your own needs, wouldnt that be selfish, to make your matters, of importance to others, then no one benefits from helping one another, only bringing each other down in life, depending on who needs help, whos giving help, who receives help, and who doesnt feel like theyre being helped at all ... something to think about. You can build new options and choices for yourself, your only limit is you, ignore what everyone else is doing, and its okay to put yourself first, they will be more than proud of you that they didnt have to hold your hand the whole way through, happy to hear about your progress, remember you cannot help others until you are able to help yourself. We are all capable of achieving the happiness we so much deserve in life, believe in yourself!

Ever Notice ...

Ever notice the more you prolong things the more painful it gets to get the work done. Part procrastination, part lack of motivation. We usually rely on feel good feelings to get things done, but sometimes when we get started, we arent at that point of feeling good, until the work is done. Thats just a part of life, sometimes, in doing things, the incentive for getting it done is feeling good. Wouldnt the world be perfect if we felt good everyday, and everyday motivated, having a system down of feeling good and recovering from anything that causes us pain or hardship, then life would be easy wouldnt it. Get your routine down. If youre sick youre sick however there is an in between phase of not feeling well, and getting well, call it lethargy or laziness, its simply a by-product of habits gone wrong, letting ourselves go, stopping from doing things that make us feel good, and being still doing nothing, how long do you have to be doing nothing, and keeping still, or staying in bed, until you get well, well if you dont get moving and go outside, you'll never know the difference between not feeling well and doing well. -A lot of time is wasted thinking about life. I do this all the time, think and think, stay in bed, and get nothing done, then feel worse and worse, and everything feels more and more difficult to accomplish, well if you dont get started nothing will get done in the first place, so begin somewhere. Therefore dont be too analytical, sometimes you cant break life down to science, let alone people, your experiences, or yourself. The worst of things can sometimes happen playing doctor on yourself, I mean thats part of being human diagnosing yourself and getting the right help when needed, but dont do that everyday! Eventually you have to live the days your in without worry, and trust that those who do care, or while under your care, can monitor changes within you for you, without the day to day personal assessments, sometimes thinking you are worse off than you are, I know this I do this all the time, collect all the labels and complain, well then if Im this, how come Im able to do this, know that just because you have been diagnosed as something, doesnt mean youre incapable of living a normal life, absent minded all the negative assumptions others may have toward you regarding your diagnoses. Just be you, and live life, without getting too caught up in how you think things should be, couldve been, were, or are now. The less you back trip and future trip worrying about how things will turn out, or blame the past for where you are now, the more unhappy you will become. So enjoy the moment, know when to stop, count your blessings twice, and be thankful for today, everyday you can. The less you think about the past on a daily basis, the better you will feel. And the more present you are, the more others will notice, the positive change in you.

This Day and Age ...

And I thought I was a 90s expert, apparently growing up at OJ's house wasnt a big deal in the grand scheme of things, the riots in the 90s and curfews in Southern California, apparently werent as scary as the times are now, I mean how many times must each generation go through this type of chaos before we get things right, it seems the times are more of a culmination of many years of setbacks, or hardships, or stories that just didnt make big news, that all those stories are beginning to surface now, when assessing the ethical treatment of human beings by law enforcement. At what point do things get out of control? When a governing body who is responsible for protecting the peace of a community, does the exact opposite, those responsible for keeping us safe, being blamed for putting us as in harms way, and especially during a time when we are vulnerable amid COVID-19, so everyone has to stay home except for medical officials and criminals? That doesnt make sense, my Mom commutes to work, with cars packed full of people, wondering where they are headed, she thinks its a joke that the people have been asked to submit any license plate numbers of any criminals they have witnessed, that would be putting my Mom in harms way to report, now wouldnt that? These are things we have to think about ... at what point does it become our responsibility to help correct whats going wrong, and at what point does that burden become too much, leaving us all feeling abused by a system that promotes peace and justice for all, the condition we are in right now, is so far from what is acceptable or necessary to make change happen, but hadnt it been for the acts of law enforcement in Minneapolis, people all around the world, would not be expressing the same or similar grievances for those they have lost too under a similar hand. -The point Im trying to get at is dont give up, and dont allow those who have taken it upon themselves to continue to test the limits of law enforcement and military officials, as though they have any right to respond that way, we all are unhappy about what is going on, health wise, and now racially, and amidst the chaos, what are we left with ourselves, dont do anything that you will later regret in the name of anothers, or for anothers suffering suffer too, that would inheriting a struggle that if taken way back, only makes things worse and worse feeling, thats a position logically taken, when all hell breaks lose, any progress, downplayed to honor the fallen, as though any progress hasnt been made at all, so count your wins, and continue to be passionate about what you think and believe but not at the expense of those you support. I just hope that when the protests come to a tails end, that those expressing themselves publicly wont similarly endure any unreasonable pain and suffering for speaking up.

Not Your Ticket to Confidence ...

Everyone is different concerning the timing and the level of comfort they experience with another in loving relationships. We don't all peak at the same time, confidence wise, with awareness of our gifts in life and what we have to offer the world, often times not concerned with what we look like, especially when we are feeling good, without feeling like your being compared to others for general acceptances in life. All interactions, all conversations, contain some physical component, that requires you to listen and respond to others, without feeling manipulated, intimidated, pressured, or obligated to go out of your way to make others feel better about themselves. When you are young you are given so many reassurances in life, whenever you experience moments of doubt, or insecurity, this is to help you maintain confidences in life, required for you to be a well adjusted and mature young adult, some more comfortable with themselves than others, I grew up one of the guys, with an older brother, around him and his friends, but did not date in middle school or high school, for some reason, a late bloomer. Intimacy is a huge step in anyones personal development, its not something you talk about, you either have friends, and like people, and feel comfortable around people, and opportunities avail themselves to you to meet people, with a possibility for dating, or you dont meet anyone in life you feel completely comfortable with. I can tell you one thing, sex is not your ticket to confidence in life, body image issues, self awareness, posture, weight loss, feeling good, dressing well, becoming a professional, presentable, is everything worth preserving your mental health for, without going to extremes when it comes to experimentations in life. Your first sexual relationship dictates how you become treated in all other relationships thereafter, my first sexual relationship was with a 33 year old when I was 18, I was mature, but not that mature to understand the consequences of dating someone older, and how that would affect all my relationships afterward, never feeling good enough, pretty enough, or bonded enough, always maintain your innocence in life, and if your going to explore the concept of love, be sure to recognize when its love, or just for pleasure, and know what you want in life. All women and girls dream of finding a man they can be both intimate with and be bonded with best friends with, enjoying down time together, talking, empowering one another, supporting one another, bringing home to meet your family, without reservations, and if your lucky get the phase where you introduce one another to eachothers friends, Ive only had three relationships like that. I think when they hear my pen name "mymollydoll" they think "molestation" as though Im celebrating a concept of casual intimacy in which you get treated as small in life, its not a fun experience, being new to the world, and then upon giving love back to anyone older, be looked at as though you promote acceptance for dating with huge age gaps, its mostly by maturity, experience, confidence, and wellness, you match up with a lot of people in life, but always remember its "your body your choice" most advances in life, when you are well, will make you uncomfortable, and its usually those who you reject, that turn on you in life, as though your some kind of club of acceptance, expected to take others under your wing of confidence in life. To me my pen name represents, allowing yourself to blossom, without being controlled by the reservations of others, especially when it comes to your heart and direction in life, be molded, or manipulated in life, and the rejected once they reject you upon not being needy of them. Not all love requires need, thats where the concept of "molestation" gets confused, the expectation of someone older or smarter, to be confident sexually, its in exchange your confidence is lost, upon giving love to someone who is in need, and thats how you become in need, and unstable. Its unfortunate, if you experience mental health issues later on in life, and anyone who once felt close to you, becomes disappointed with you, if you do not stay confident level headed and successful in life academically, professionally, romantically, or socially, as though there exists a certain standard of know how in life, that differentiates a victim from an offender in life, where some women are understood for their difficulties in life, and some women are blamed, depending on whether they look like someone worth empathizing with, or whether its more advantageous to take the side of the men from their life, as not having stayed with them, assume that there is something defective with a woman, whos never had unprotected sex, whos been in three monogamous relationships, who overcame addiction, and breakups, and went to two law schools, its after all is said and done, the one who speaks is the one who they determine is at fault, as though one should recognize whether the casual relationships they were in were inappropriate, if Im not in harms way, its better not to subject someone to harms way, by public opinion of them, and further cast them away, or take away their ability to be loved, friendship is not for love, that includes work relationships, AA, and to my online readers.

Moments of Clarity ...

We all hope that by working hard, and by living private lives, that we will be among those privileged to live in peace, and have our sense of peace respected by others, however that does not always occur. For some your sense of peace, is found to be mentally disturbing to others, who have not yet found their own sense of peace, let alone while looking at you, knowing you, or by hearing what you have to see, recognize themselves as right intuitively when it comes to establishing their sense of normal in their own lives. Its hard to stay even tempered and be a balanced thinker, when your purpose in life becomes disturbed by the emotions of others, whether or not as directed toward you, people will always be led by their own assumptions in life, looking at the big picture overall, its your decision whether or not to make their interpretations of you affect your sense of stability, and sense of peace, not become mentally disturbed, to offset their own intuitions while identifying whats normal, whats not normal, and whats an appropriate way to look at things, and treat you as they wish, based upon what gives them confidence in life, leaving you feeling unstable, mentally ill, and not feeling normal. Not everyone is capable of managing any overhead chaos that results from knowledge, responsibilities, experiences, setbacks, challenges, and negative judgments of them, its seems before things get better, anything and everything about you that can be uprooted to justify a negative interpretation of you is caused, to maintain a sense of normalcy, about those who think it deserved, and wish to further that interpretation as deserved amongst themselves, and amongst those like them, who identify themselves as normal, viewing you as problematic, no matter what your intentions, ideas, academic, and romantic experiences were like. So long as you continue to label someone as guilty, just to blame anything under the moon as being associated to their own conduct, words, focuses, interactions, or connections in life. the more they become self reliant absent minded you, having to describe your own shoes in life, how you feel, how you are being made to feel, and what types of mental health challenges you have been faced with, that you were not otherwise faced with during your more normal years of life. To some its easier to cause illness to anyone who already has a learning disability and mental health issues, who is more likely to become sick, by others, than made to feel better by anyone, thats where their interpretations of someone bearing mental health issues, are wrong, as though its people that can make a person feel better, no I am the only one capable of living my life, and figuring out how to achieve a well condition, among others, and not be made sick by any conditions mental health related, thats not expecting any change from anyone, that's leaving people as they are, which is why it's through acceptance, that people remain separate from one another's conditions in life, you can never combine the thoughts of someone well with someone who is not well, and expect the one who is well to feel good having heard from someone who is not well, expect them to adjust or change how they live life, to better suit the needs of someone who is not feeling well, that's understood, isn't a precaution, that needs to be taken by any writer or blogger or law student or any friendship or loving relationship, that's an assumption of the sick that is wrong, that anyone with mental health issues is contagious.

Let Change Happen ...

There's no formula for success in this Country when it comes to look, demeanor, intelligence, schooling, behavior, tone, or overall appearance to others, and especially not by connections is your life made any easier, than most, trying to be loved and accepted by others, without all the noise overhead, concerning what things look like to others, what things are about, and looking at you for your reaction to benefit themselves, for some confidence is only based upon who is most focused on themselves, versus those become threatened or intimidated by others, lose color in life, that's the basics of someone not liking you based upon what you look like or sound like, it's like they emit a negative energy toward you in life, that makes you feel sick, and not understand why, that random confidence looking at you, that occurs, for no reason, it's the I've sized you up, I know who you are, and I don't respect, and I don't care where you were raised, who you were friends with, what breakups you have gone through, who has died, or who left who, and who played who, better than your attitude in life, is something you just have to let fly. Seems to me there is no bottom for anything you say, and an unlimited expectation of qualifying responses from you expected to prove your self-worth, and regain conscious awareness of the person you were, before you were met with such distaste, and scorn. This is America, that doesn't mean it's a team sport apparently, it doesn't matter whether you were a good friend, a solid student, a professional worker, no one respects anyone who drinks and gets in trouble in life, and it's on that basis that one is hated, and experiences difficulties in life, treated as a second class citizen to most, read as ordinary, with no compassion for any challenges they faced, academically, professionally, socially, or romantically, everyone sees their own lives as hard compared to anyone who is educated, had an apartment, a BMW, and a career ahead of them in life, in those cases, anything of value to them is for the taking, as seeing someone with it all as being handed things in life, not having worked hard for that level of confidence and intelligence in life, and why they had a boyfriend in the first place. Some people just aren't nice, selectively sweet to those they like, and distant or cold to those they either know or don't know, as though treating someone as a human being in life is invitation for friendship or romance, of course not, don't have such a hot head about yourself in life, that's goes to men and women, who think talking to someone, means that that person is interested in more than just being a customer, a friend, a business meeting, that's just how single people are treated, if not attached to another human being physically, and as not confident and solid within, is how they get treated, as less than, baby'd, put down, hard on us, for no reason, as though we cannot knowingly and intelligently understand what is being done to us and why, or why one is treated nice and rejected, for some reason that makes them feel tough, and suddenly they become you offended, and treat you as misinterpreting their poor judgment of you, I'm not sure what that is called, hurt for a mention or a complaint or a reaction, just for a change in face, to resemble how they feel looking at you, to feel better prettier, nicer.

How You Describe the Past ...

Sometimes you bring things up and make people feel better, remembering something great about life, and sometimes you bring things up and let everyone down, or even worse feel insulted. Depending on what you are talking about, always be aware that, "For some people "going back there," is not useful and can even exacerbate the problem." [1] Sure we have experiences in life, some shared, and some not, always be wary of how you present your experiences in life, as having lived through events occurring in time, with awareness of how others may feel when trying to identify their own feelings about the times, that's when thinking similarly about events does not feel well, between the sharer and the listener, who may similarly not feel well, as the one sharing becomes sick opening about their thoughts, and even sicker from the later thoughts and deductions about life thought by others, which is not in their control, everyone's freedom to process events in their own way to their own understandings in life. Just because you have been through a lot, sadly doesn't make you an expert at overcoming mental health issues, especially if you talk about causes for your mental health issues, over what people think, how people think, what people assume, and how people judge you. One strategy for processing events described the benefits of "expressing thoughts and feelings without re-immersing in the trauma, helped. While the event cannot be undone, it can be rendered far less important and overshadowed by other things if thoughts are re-directed. " [2] Which is why someone going through a lot wouldnt want everyones thoughts directed at them, as they are going through something difficult in life, be further subjected to the analysis of those who are well or even worse those with no upper limit when it comes to attacking a subject they themselves did not go through personally, with their so-called expert hats on, pick you apart, for who you are, and for what you say, without care for how that may affect you internally, personally, or professionally. Thats not how to better understand peoples motivations and drives in life, by understanding their causes for illness, later in life, sometimes things dont hit you until later in life, everyone so free spirited around you, but when you get sick, no one can make you feel better, not even yourself, and thats the sad part about mental health issues, not feeling apart of the energy of a room, not lifted by others, drained, tired, uncomfortable, instead of confident proud, collectively speaking about your experiences in a way that you can be better understood, and left alone as normal, not focused upon for your disabilities in life, shortcomings, deficits, or choices in life. So don't be afraid to take your "mind on a different path. At any rate, talking about the problem does not always change things for the better." [3] The best of you occurs when you can be normal around others, and speak normally about things in life, other than speaking about your problems in life, being able to speak in a way that makes sense to others, is more important than not making sense at all.

No Shared Acceptances ...

There are no high horses in life, once everyone is faced with the challenge of living in fear of COVID-19, gun violence, unhappy with the Government, and pointing blame toward the mental health issues of anyone they deem as having played a significant role in the causes for Fires in the Valley, Malibu, and Tigertail, and one Earthquake in Mexico. Nothing can be made better, through the discussion of what has been done, and based upon where people are right now in life, be judged based upon what they have done to curtail conspiracy, calling a Prison in Las Vegas, Writing to SCOTUS, Sending Letters and Information to The White House and Senators, The California Supreme Court, these are all the types of precautionary measures that can be taken, to monitor the business practices of all when it comes to the mentality of The Peoples choice of direction in life, and what issues they chose to focus upon, and what is of and concerning the past and what is concerning the present, whether its because of ones condition now, they are referencing worse times, whether as of recently times were difficult for them, and what were the causes of those difficulties, as though I did not complain after the first Fire and wrote a book, and complained after the first series of school shootings and flew to DC, after a Fire in Malibu put together more books, and after a Fire on Tigertail continued to build a website and graduate from Law School with a Masters in Law. Sometimes in tragedy we focus, not on what is wrong with the world or with others, but you focus on what you can do to make the world a better place, thats normal, thats not drive, thats instinct, that when the time calls for action, choices are made, thats not to offset issues favorable or unfavorable to some or even with a few people in particular thought of to have played any role in the direction and leadership of ideas promoted in care of The People and their Best Interests. No one at this point in time can tell you what to think, who to believe, what to know, what to think, or what to feel, thats everyones choice in life, to stick to their own likes in life, its not by laws or by responsibilities that any person should be dictated by others a proper course of action when it comes to managing the problems of others, and then be faced with problems of their own 2013 on, its your choice to go out into the world, to check on others, and to see what the general social climate is among people around you, and sometimes you date, without expectation to, liked, spoken to, and escorted by male figures in your life, who want to share intimacies with you, aside from your studies or while working on your career, dating or loving people in life, that's part of being young in your late twenties, find someone to love, and if you're lucky turns into something more, but without expectation get to know people in life, that's socialization, figuring out yourself, what you're going through, and what is going wrong on your end, that is resulting in poor performance grade wise in law school and why you no longer have the energy and stamina to engage in a romantic companionship want to be alone, to see the world better for yourself, that's giving up one way of life, to go out of your way to help others, which I think was interpreted upon returning from DC as a beginning to more, not an ending point. When you do things in life, print an itinerary that's traveling for a purpose, that's not a plan or agenda, that's covering the bases, to make sure that bad things don't happen or continue to happen, and witness how others are feeling in different towns and cities, not just as observed in law school or on TV for that matter. Never be quick to judge someone of intelligence, who based upon their connections in life, feel obligated to respond to matters which may or may not have affected them directly, a movie theater shooting, and was taken on a tour of the Paramount Lot 2015 while working in Century City then was told to get a City Parking Pass sticker and park further away from work by the Rental Home, and parked across from the Holocaust Museum, with an Anne Frank poster featured on the front of their building. -The moral of the story is no matter what people see looking at you, no matter what they know of think an obvious reference and for how long, whether deserved or not, never lower your standards in life to their fears or hesitations with regards to your condition, mental health, and judgement calls, it's your life to live not theirs to articulate and administer reactions toward you or about you in life, as though you are in the realm of publicity and in need of PR in life, as though you cannot properly represent yourself by what you look like, what you sound like, where you live, what degrees you have in life, or by who you know, stay level headed, in spite of their deductions in life, to be made about Youtubes, a legal education, breakups, songs, dying actresses, 90s movies, and cast me out as imitation of wellness or poise and know how in life, and denominate me as not having been a good influence or positive basis or barometer upon knowing in life of when to stop, and what is relevant to know, and which ideas past not to reinforce. There will always be an attempt to personalize actions as defenses, seeing a big picture historically, or being about how others have treated you as thought deserved, to make other people heroes in life, and deflect attentions away from you as being professional or a likeable figure in time, hated. Please Note: You experience life once, and then you experience it again as told, and then you experience it a third time, upon reflection of all your experiences, and based upon where you are now, judged as either having been informed, noticed, with confirmations of theories about 9/11, Petrocelli, CDs gifted, paper airplanes planted, names on buildings taken down. And then you see new companies trying to reinforce those company names, and make an even bigger joke out of your life and livelihood, as though you cause embarrassment to others, when people who have made decisions suddenly don't feel good around you and feel better without you or around others, reject you in public and favor another. #cheekkiss. Whatever reactions you are seeking in life, it was my Parents who called me home did not approve of my job in Century City and the keys to the house I took care of given to a Company, because I did not want to work on the same job with a guy who had sex with me after crying and drinking after a party I hosted and cleaned up after, my Boss left and took me to the bathroom and stood with me in the corner to show me something. Everyone takes their turn doing things in advance to be told, which when that point does not arrive, in a peaceful way articulate in a descriptive way what they meant not accusing anyone for the decisions made, at what point does it stop being about the Public need to understand, and start being more compassionate and less accusatory toward those within a story harmed. Bonding to hurt you and see how you react when one is nicer to others than how they treat you, is a strategy for determining wellness and professionalism in the workforce in Los Angeles, as though no one wants to sit with me, through any difficulties in life, or positions taken in life, and favors those around me, even if I help them when they freeze or have questions, nice to everyone, never one to complain, Excitement in Life ...

Looking back, be sure to appreciate your well moments in life. Not all moments in life, do we find ourselves at our best, especially during difficult times. You may not be as happy as you once were, but that doesn't mean that you cannot achieve that level of wellness and self-satisfaction again in life. Most of the days you live your life, will not be exciting, that's not what attracts good things into your life, not is what compels, or attracts others into your life, by how things look always. No matter what you've been through always be understanding of others, as you go through life, never worrying too much about how others are living their lives, absent minded your own, whether in your life or not. Understand yourself. And even if you feel sick, overcome with illness or mental health issues, while trying to comprehend the times, moments in life, or your own current well being trying to figure out how to feel better, and get better, know that no feeling is permanent, not unless you allow those thoughts about life to fester. If its your thinking that is causing you illness, and if while thinking about others you become sick, then figure out what is causing any illness associated with over-analyzing your own health concerns, as it relates to others, people are mostly concerned with themselves, and unless you make your issues of concern to others, will they think about you in that way, possibly not feel well themselves about what you've been through in life. No life is perfect, we all have private lives and personal issues, that need not be made public, and if you can find the time to smile and enjoy life, then by all means do so, because you never know how long that moment will last for, when everything is going well, things feel well, and youre doing well, that's what life is all about, finding that balance in life, of wellness, and care for others.

Finding Your Tone ...

You will always be faced in life with three hardships: (1) sickness (2) unhappiness, and (3) insecurity. Similarly you will also learn: (4) love (5) pride (6) trust (7) smarts, and (8) forgiveness. It never ceases to amaze me, when things are not going right, and people are dying, whether from drugs, alcohol, connections, or by their own misconduct carry guilts from incidences past, that the well are affected, as though it becomes our responsibility to either (a) fix them, or be confronted with an even bigger project to (b) fix everyone. Im not really sure what the solution is, but Im pretty sure, that there should always exist a human ability to regain conscious awareness of the gifts, their health, their livelihood, their abilities, once all is said and done and responded to, with a great degree of care and sensitivity to the issues. I think the main reason why most dont get involved, is because if matters only affect a few, we assume should not affect many, but sometimes the loss of a few, do impact many, that is if we ourselves become sick, feel compelled to question those around us during moments of illness, and think that something has not already been done to address these concerns, and systems not already put into place, to assess the gravity of harm caused to them, by them, and how others have been affected, or will be affected upon knowing them, which is why we know few of them, drug addicts, alcoholics, and criminals, they generally dont shine once they have lost their shine, if not recovered, that attitude you cannot fix about anyone who wanted a better life, wanted to feel good, and in the process of trying to make things happen for themselves in life, just to feel good, wind up finding themselves alone in life, having helped no one, not even themselves, and possibly having hurt anyone who knew them, well or not well, expecting more of them, thats the type of disappointment that the well express toward anyone who they feel does not represent themselves well let alone others, so that they do not feel well themselves, as though there is something wrong with them, until they identify what it is that they are doing wrong in life, if they do not already understand what it is about them, that is so disappointing to others, whether that be family, or friends, or strangers, you really owe nothing to this world, except your good health, and well if you cant provide that in the least, than expect to listen more, think less, and take better care of yourself. As a general rule of thumb, NEVER wake everyone up to sickness in the world, as though by how you feel or by what you see needs to be known to all, always be sure to remember everything within you known is not known to everyone until you share out loud those feelings or thoughts, and no matter how sick the world gets about others, or about you, and your direction in life, you are never required from a better viewpoint in life, to articulate what it is others are thinking when they see you, or look at your life, or upon review of your experiences in life, think less of you, thats just society, sold on ideas, what works, and what isnt working, and that will never change about a well functioning system of trust, how trust is made, how trust is kept, and by what means people are accepted and able to care for themselves and others in life. Thats not the solution. When you get hit with a crisis that you cannot readily comprehend yourself, just because you are awake and functioning, does not mean that everyone is awake and high functioning, some get tired, disoriented, upset, angered, confused, hostile, for themselves, indifferent, or carry an attitude toward you, as a manifestation of their own unhappiness experienced upon seeing you, see your life as a joke.

Two Paths in Life ...

There are two paths you can take in life, (1) one free of harassment, unwanted intrusion and inference, misuse, abuse, speculation, wrongful assembly of facts from your life, as you are and by what facts given about yourself and from your perspective lend insight to blames and self-destruction, face the consequences of others need for solution by proving you wrong in life in order to feel right about themselves, causing you to question life, your purpose for living life, whether its worth it to respond to negative insights speak, or (2) whether to continue on your path in life, absent minded the thoughts of others, no matter what information is supplied about yourself, and no matter what general comparisons are made between you and others, for determining your worth, your value, your intelligence, and not allow the judgement of others to affect the number of problems or issues you currently face irrespective of their problem you, doing well in spite of their concerns about your condition, whether in wellness or sickness, serve as any significant indicator for whats going on in the world, whats going on within them, feel better upon you enduring sickness or kept separate. Thats when things get to be too much, when someone who thinks they are doing the right thing, causes more harm than good, simply for the purposes of being shared outloud, to communicate a different innuendo of blame or connections to my life and other events in life, or history for that matter. It seems when separate, others think to their benefit only, and if someone is separate that that is because others separated themselves from a person for something unknown to them, but known to everyone else, not by choice while studying in law school, and its for those reasons, that others continue to take advantage of the fact, that they are capable of making things look different on the outside, by story, even without you knowing it, as though you were someone in power in the past, or had the ability to become well known in the future for anything you have set your mind to in life. This is the current discord between myself and anyone who assumes to take offense to anything I have written taking on the position of someone not in agreement with me, and not accepting my condition as a valid result, health related issues, not caused by me or my connections in life. If I am not serious enough online and light hearted frowned upon, if Im intelligent, not viewed as intelligent and thought to be an ordinary representation of intelligence derived overtime (treated instead as someone with a known condition kept secret, not treated as a condition caused for the purposes of justifying any previous treatment of them, be seen as grose). There are so many things to fill yourself up with in life, other than the expectations of others, that will only drain anyone trying to achieve in life, for further acceptances of them, if not already granted to someone, no later condition smart or improved can undo those harms caused to anyone being themselves in life, without love or acceptance issues in life. This creates a pressure, and discomfort to both myself and the side assuming the side of anyone they perceive to be offended by who I am, what I sound like, or by what I say, unimpressed by me, not seeing me as special, educated, with a valid purpose in life to help others, when the side who does not value my writing, doesnt make me feel good, sending me negative energy, through their own discomforts in life, as not reassured as correct by my words. Some people only feel better with an upper edge over people in life, that is when one is down, when one is tired, when one is ill, when one is unmotivated, as though they are out of their way in life, and view someone who speaks well with energy, as a threat to their own wellness, thats the problem, when others are competitive with you, putting one down, to make others feel better about themselves, as though Im not doing my best to prevent death, cancer, mental health issues, schizophrenia, bipolar, and other related issues, concerning what is thought to have occurred in the past resulting in illness, subject myself or others to those conditions again in life, thats not the solution, then to go by the instincts of anyone in competition for wellness, based upon how they feel, judge others as a threat to their minds.

Designated Conditions ...

Becoming known to society as a public figure, requires having some understanding and appreciation for the lives of others, and with respect of their identities, be known independently of those you have met in life, which is why those who are most known, or readily identifiable by face and name, are people with the most finished work product, which represents themselves professionally as able to work, and credited for the work they have completed in life, as a representation of their own abilities in life, and ability to learn, apply themselves professionally whether in academics or the work force, and share that benefit to others, either working for others, by known skills or learned skills, and that is how one stands out in a community of people, among others, not because of what they look like, or because of who they know, a confident person, well, a good decision maker, with self respect and respect for those around them. Becoming suicidal is not a condition anyone should be fascinated with, nor does anyone have the right to investigate or make public the conditions occurring at the time, environmentally, socially, romantically, mainstream, technologically, internet wise, information wise, known parties to an issue, issues known or not known, confidence to whom, and confidence lost, alcohol, pressures, applications, exams studied for and taken, there are a myriad of issues, that can be taken into consideration whenever someone does not feel well and makes a bad decision to take their own life, whether to communicate bearing illness, or be interpreted as dying to communicate pains in life, not well stated or understood at the time one decides to take their own life, and assume that anyone who chooses to leave life would do so to cause harm to others, by doing so, all losses can be felt, including to those who pass, including myself, and what I have learned is that the less you involve others, in the process of figuring out your own causes for illness, the less defensive others will be if your condition arises again and if for new reasons, feel compelled to understand why, if you're not a doctor and you're not a law student, you have no right to test for conditions, or to prosecute anyone else's condition well or not, for the conditions of others, as though people are connected emotionally, and internally, faced with the same circumstances in life, disappointments, sufferings, or disabilities in life, making them the same, or therefore responsible for curtailing the occurrence of lives lost due to drugs and alcohol. -It seems that the more you allow others to feel the authority to put your condition into question whether by watching you privately or publicly, is to discern what is of your own making, and what if anything is the making of others, to diffuse responsibility to anyone who thinks they are under your care or responsible for managing your health and condition. --So long as a condition is known, that is how it reoccurs throughout your life, and the more you explain a negative interpretation of what has been caused to you and elaborate on those feelings and why you feel harmed, the worse ones condition gets as they reinforce others with the power to control or manipulate their brain chemistry, body functioning, mental functioning, belongingness needs, comfortability, confidence, or energy levels, that is to provoke and test for a series of events to either prove or disprove whether you are honest, tell the truth, and even if you are telling the truth, still cause you illness, as though deserved, that's an unwanted experiment with my psyche, my privacy, my intelligence, my ability to be smart, my ability to earn a living, be in a loving relationship, have friends, be well received professionally, and on a larger scale ever be accepted or liked in public as someone who is able to still maintain wellness, no matter what conditions they are put in. It seems to be a constant pattern tested for: (1) taunting (2) head hitting (3) slamming my head into a wall (4) recovery (5) alcohol or no alcohol (6) in love or with love (7) how others appear at the time I get sick (8) where I live what I'm doing with my life (9) what meds I'm on (10) whether or not I have a job (11) whether or not I am performing well in school (12) how I interact with others (13) how intimidated I appear (14) whether I talk to myself (15) if anyone who has taunted me was attacked back and why (16) the point of disappointment (17) the causes for death around those connected distantly or directly to my family (18) whether I become mentally ill if when others are well or (19) whether I become well when others are not well (20) and why I became suicidal in ancient times 2009 (21) why I went to law school in spite of being called delusional and schizophrenic (22) How I was treated upon disclosure of my condition (23) and whether or not going to law school helped me to live life? Yes, going to law school helped me to live life, and to think better, and stay calm, and in the event of attachments detachments, worry, instability, relapse, recovery friendship, I was able to maintain my ability to communicate my way back to sanity, when I felt gone, lost, broken, not confident, sensitive, bullied, intimidated, threatened, and stay smart, meaning not feed into the emotions of distrust or expectation of anyone whose life I'm not currently in feel obligated or threatened by their condition separate from me, as bearing an ability to affect me now. The worst thing you can do is to accuse a woman who attracts mates in life and makes friends easily, gets along with everyone at school and work, and employers, treat them as reject or try to manipulate them via insult to see if they snap or become something bigger or stronger, that actually caused me mental illness and 4 night meds and day meds, and punching my head until my head bled to be called something I'm not. When you hear an auditory hallucination, for me, it's someone else trying to get inside my head, to make me feel like them, as though I have to speak in a way to accommodate how they feel, by putting themselves inside of me, to ensure that they feel heard or are accommodated, if I feel like them, will sound like them, and if I sound like them, then that's to make them feel better, thinking that someone who is separate is incapable of saying things without their voice present spoken to them, to be thought about or with sensitivity not discussed, or bothered by them, that's not allowing someone to be themselves, because one is not trusted on their own, without anyone in their life, thinking that things are about them, not about you getting well on your own, and needing space from everyone. And because I said I hear voices, is why I am being treated like a schizophrenic, and if I say when I don't hear voices, then that has the potential to produce voices, during moments alone no matter where I am, to see whether I become sick or suicidal to communicate connections to movies, dead actresses, incidences, or guilt for other people's lives as lived, intimidation, threatened, or scared for a public knowing of private circumstances, resulting from drinking, be caused when sober, to prove addiction present, and causes for addiction and even worse, claim I am addicted to people, I'm not.

Getting Sized Up ...

It appears to be advantageous for most, to keep their opinions to themselves, especially of those they are observing for criticisms or waiting for words to lend insight to their own poor judgments of someone, they do not admire, respect, love, appreciate, value, or respect. To them that's their mechanism of self-defense, in anticipation of feeling less than, or being made to look stupid, think all words are for the purposes of rising above any conditions past, resulting from previous treatments of them in public, within the public's view. It's a feeling triggered to some, who if affected by anyone withdrawn from them emotionally, or attention wise, is expected to be questioned, as though anyone ever naturally takes insult to how people speak to them, or afterwards insulted by interactions that were cordial, nonetheless, self-assured as soon as someone separate does not feel well or becomes sick, that only reinforces their instincts of that person and reassures them of their own self-defenses asserted in life, to keep someone separate from their lives, in accordance to themselves and by how they feel about a person, knowing a person, having met them, keep their distance. To add insult to injury, as soon as someone who is living a disciplined life, falls off center and becomes a disappointment, or a poor representation to most by demeanor, disposition, confidence, looks, weight, intelligence, response, image, and professionalism, becomes emotional, it's the minute (1) you read into others (2) affected by others (3) question others (4) become intimidated by others (5) insulted by others (6) easily manipulated by others - that you lose your sense of stability and rational decision making abilities, it seems the more you become dependent upon others for approvals, the less they are given, and the nicer you are to people professionally, the more uncomfortable they become, it's all a matter of control in any environment, where you are expected to be comfortable with yourself, and comfortable around others, and not interfere with the professional development and momentum of those around you, nor anyone in your immediate environment, that's thriving among, without being affected by anyone, and that's not leadership to be well among, or because one is well others are made to feel well too, that's an assumption that behaviors attitudes and confidences in life are contagious or that illness is contagious among those who are well to be exposed to anyone who has ever been treated or diagnosed with a disability in life. Never let anyone control you by their words or by saying things or telling you things for you to remember about life or your own life, as though you have not lived life yourself, long enough to know when you or others have been harmed, and doing your best to be a good example of a human being, and stay well in spite, of how small or short anyone makes your life out to be, as compared to other lives lived, and the strides they have made in life, compared to your own personal achievements, and lessons you've learned in life. Your body and your mind is your currency for acceptance in life, that's just a plain fact of life, you either make people feel good and are valued, or people do not feel good looking at you, knowing you, or hearing what you have to say, not all relationships are fit for procreation that is for the purposes of sex and marriage to bear children, you only meet one person like that in life, therefore it should never be expected that you ever have to be all those things to most, in order to be respected, appreciated, valued, sized up, hurt, or benefited through interaction with others, or treated as though because of your condition, be treated as though deserved, until either you start wanting different things in life other than love, or rely on stability and assurances in life or love, that you are living a good life, doing the right thing, and not being of harm to your self or others, as thought of someone with bipolar, with a good life, smart.

Loss of Identity ...

You cannot inspire others to create a life for themselves that you are not able to live yourself, and so the theory evolves, which type of lives inspire, lending insight for the creation of lives and to the betterment of all become well adjusted during times of need, versus, which influences and exposures, cause the inequitable exchange of emotions resulting in feelings of loss, and lack of ability to say the least. Empathy is a natural human emotion, not to be toiled or tampered with, manipulated or made better, via the influences of most, its a quality characteristic and trait existing within people they use to identify within themselves how to respond, do the right thing, say the right things, and not be led astray nor leave others astray for that matter by their advices. Who is in need? In your younger years you first experience a strong human need to bond and feel connected to someone you engage in a loving relationship with, a relationship, in which one or the other is accepting of the other, without hesitation or reading too much into their behaviors, loved unconditionally, and upon loving someone unconditionally they are bettered, that may not free them of their troubles in life, but sometimes its through the acceptance of another, they are provided with a comfort and reassurance in life, they are not yet ready able to provide for themselves without you in their lives, or because of being with you and around you have grown accustomed to that feeling of being loved, without having to try too much, and with little effort on their part, without guilt for the energy expended by the other to give love unconditionally through good times and bad. -There are many ways in which a person can be of value, as a writer, someone of value for interpretations is someone who shares insights that help build better understandings of most, whether or not the writer feels misunderstood, in a moment of weakness, or during moments of a lost sense of control over their sense of being among others respected, valued, appreciated, acknowledged, or reassured, its a very selfless endeavor to write through a multitude of phases in life, without expecting anyone to understand you as though that would make one feel better, sometimes its better to accept people as they are without reading too much into who they are, where they have been, what turmoils they have suffered from past, and be glad that they are here today, and respect their life as lived. We live in a society where some have been raised to feel empowered by knowing more, feeling that so long as they are able to see better than others, that they will feel better than others, and think thats what makes them intelligent, having not endured the same hardships as others, and even upon being exposed to circumstances faced by someone such as myself who got sick, not feel sick themselves, understand that natural benefit to hearing someones story, and understand the detriment that is felt by the story teller, who in exchange feels dis-empowered, the more articulate the other becomes at telling the story of someone elses life, as lived, not lived to be told and without necessity or burden placed on any individual who is expected to share their story and series of decision making efforts to be alive today, free of harm, insult, and unwarranted intrusion into their lives past, for the sake of connecting and assembling their memories, to better suit your own understandings of life, and how the world works. Never in any moment of history, has anyone ever been required to explain how systems of thought are derived to equate to the successes of most, and understand the more you try to tackle the subject as an outsider to the best interests of those wrongfully connected in different professions have the capacity to cause pain to most, that is when someone who thinks their need to feel specialized and in the know, is more important than those who work and produce absent minded anyone watching them or being influenced by their lives, remain specialists in their own respective fields, be viewed as important. Good writing is not saying what people think, therefore, that causes a dis-empowerment to the writer and a loss of identity, to cause them to become over-concerned with what people think, and instead of reading from within and making decisions based upon their own exposures and understandings of life, go out of their way to accommodate someone elses perspective who is not likewise directly affected by my condition, my mental health, my ability to connect with friends, date, or be regarded as a professional, by man made worries, created by those without enough professional experience to feel confident and like minded or appreciative of my own achievements in life, equally as confident in my shoes, and base their understanding of my wellness, as based upon whether or not they feel well standing in my shoes think better for themselves, whether by knowing me see the world better, by my shared insights, come to understand better how others think and speak, and sometimes taking on the shoes of people from someones life feel a sense of empowerment being different than me, not having mental health issues, and not having suffered, see themselves as better than me, because the more they can learn about my life, think its fun to pretend, that had they been me wouldvt been smarter, or made better decisions for themselves, leaving them feeling empowered that they are not me, and benefit from hearing my story.

As it Comes to Mind ...

6/23/2020

As a writer, you are mostly responsible for your own thoughts and exposures, that's to start. As you get better at speaking in public, whether private expressions were regarded as off beat, too powerful, in upset, or in defense of ones standing and position in life, not taken seriously, as a proper contender or representation of the issues, as affected, one speaks later, adjusted. Over time as you become more accustomed, to general trends in wellness around, be appreciative of everyones ability to freely express themselves without reservations or in poor taste, share any discomforts or unhappinesses out loud, with regards to their own misfortunes in life, or with respect to the misfortunes of others, cast public blames out loud, as though one is required to speak in response to any improper misrepresentation of the reality current in favor of overgeneralizing everyones wellness to a few basic understandings of progress and acceptance. In America, the times are competitive, they will always be that way, whether or not to include others in the progress and strides made by working professionals in their respective fields, someone is always the leading the way, whether you know exactly who they are, what their experiences have been watching the news, and witnessing life unfold for themselves and with new technologies provided, see more than just themselves blossom professionally online. It's a new field, being a professional figure online, that's general done by people who have found success socially, academically, romantically, and professionally, who decide to share their human spirit online, to help make others feel well and more adjusted themselves, there is an art to being well liked, not in a cookie cutter way acceptance wise always, mostly by energy, genuineness, without complications known, identified, and easy to describe without causing hardship to anyone trying to interpret the causes for their likability of successes in life, as having to do with death, dying, homicide, criminalisation, prosecution, suit, or injury. You are the maker of your life, and based upon how decisions are made concerning care of your reputation, you sometimes don't have a choice, to make new friends, to stop entertaining people at your home, to remain separate from others socially, that's nothing to do with anything I've done wrong, or a result of anything anyone else has done wrong as pointed out by me, it's always okay to respond in a way that reflects how you feel, that's second nature, as you mature and become an adult, you learn not to allow losses, or misgivings get the best of you, that is in exchange for knowing you, a better hand at life received, by those who carry on without you in life, it's usually you not making progress on your own, that is assumed to be because you chose to stay separate from everyone, that's understandable, when things are not going right for you or others in life, it's always appropriate to take a step back. What's not understood is the pain incurred by the person who chooses to remain separate from those they called friends. -For some reason I feel like my writing is being judged based upon the thoughts that arrive to the reader, weighed against my own condition as well or in pain, as though the two conditions reflect some contingency upon one or the other feeling better or more free, I can say from experience that it's usually who is in my life, that blooms, not myself. No one can motivate anyone who does not value themselves, and allows pain the spread throughout their lives, until ultimately they lose their sense of stability, that's upon recognizing that one is not as happy or well or aggressive as others appear, whether nice to you or not, cannot fix your condition so long as you appear with reservation, the moment you let someone in your life, who you do not know, is the moment a loss of identity occurs, as someone knowing you, who you do not know, who later feels empowered by knowing who you are, and having met you or interacted with you, whether intimately or amicably in life, that's something you have to figure out for yourself, how to get your power back, and not be defined by times, when you were happy, and everyone else was not well, how you lit up a room and everyone talked to you, about their problems, and how you shared your experiences in exchange to better their minds. When others reach a point of clarity upon knowing you or by speaking to you that's a gift, that light in the room around you and others, is a gift, meaning everything is going well, things are in place, and that's why you stand out amongst others, who do not know you by name or face, or how you met, became friends, who you dated, and who friended who first on Facebook.

Everyday a Minute Older ...

It would be naive to think that success comes easily to those who are able to stand out in their chosen field of study and exceed expectations of them, which usually leaves them in leadership positions later on in life. Its a tough pill to swallow for most, whenever someone who knows someone famous, or is a member of a family consisting of hardworking professionals, becomes well known to others in the chosen profession, for me its writing. You cant pick a niche profession in life, based upon the needs of others always, and like most professionals, you can only excel at what you know best, whether thats in writing, the performing arts, dancing, singing, filming, documenting, photography, art, math, physics, science, reading, web development, blogging, politics, philanthropy, or beauty. Everyone is different, and everyone shines for different reasons, some shining more than most, its not a quality about a person, that can taken away through imitation, or by reading someones work, a better life lived as compared to the writer of the composition. Sometimes you only get as far as you can see, and well if you cant manage to understand life for yourself, then never become too dependent on any other person, to help you make sense of your life lived. Whether upon introductions of yourself, and whether at a later point in time when you are more put together, have faith that some form of acceptance of you will take place, upon meeting you and knowing you in life, just like basic social interactions, nice or disinterested, cordial or unfriendly, welcoming, or shunned, empathized with loving, or distant and cold. This all depends on who you are, not all are given an opportunity to be new to anywhere in life, or to anyone in life, who already knows them, thats the basic battle of someone who recognizes you and does not like you, or recognizes you and does not think highly of you, usually someone who expects more of you, more beauty, more intelligence, more confidence, more eye contact, and less subservience to the men they came to love and adore. We all love differently, and if its a trait about you that makes others feel better about themselves, then dont change, and if you get hurt because of your disposition in life, dont blame others, thats how you lose that gift in life, to both love and admire, and be admired back. Not all find that easy to do, with people in their own lives, let alone learn to appreciate that quality found in those who are able to love one another, always be respectful of all that others have managed to achieve in life, without interruption, and well if you think you can do a better job at loving someone who is loved, then that's your choice, to interrupt that progress between two people in a loving relationship, just don't complain later if you feel threatened by the later public successes of someone who you used to think less of.

Not all of us are privileged with the capacity to be experimental with our own health and condition, let alone the conditions of others, some live more freely than most, that's not to say that we don't all have to work equally as hard to get jobs and get places in life. I'm always mindful that whenever I share a series of responses I have experienced in life, and a set of circumstances I have endured in life, not to share any details about experiences in life, that I am not able to say out loud, for example speaking here, and if asked specifically what experiences in life I am describing here, able to say out loud. These are my personal reflections after having lived life, and based on where I am today, how I plan to live the rest of my life. Although we would like to think that mental health issues, are hereditary they're not, and although we'd like to think that some genes are more susceptible to certain mental health issues than most, I do not agree with that understanding of the origins of mental health issues, or how they are acquired or caused for that matter. If we could agree to one solution when it comes to understanding mental health issues, it would be to understand those issues, as a product of our choices in life, and by those choices in life, make ourselves more or less susceptible to inheriting traits, demeanors, looks, responses, reactions, behaviors, or coping mechanisms, including the use and abuse of substances such as drugs or alcohols to circumscribe the effects of those mental health issues, on our ability to function and adapt normally among others, be social in spite of those reservations or feelings of being uptight. It's true although few have admitted to the fact, that when one feels uptight they cannot be themselves around others, there is likely a reason why humans naturally bottle up, in the event they do not feel comfortable or made to feel uncomfortable around others, whether by their doing or by the doing of someone in their environment or not, who they may find disagreeable to their tastes, or acceptances of who they have come to identify as a normal representation of confidence, intelligence, or wellness. In the event you do let your guard down and let loose, understand that in later moments when more is expected of you, you have the potential for being judged based upon the moments in which you did not follow your instincts, and followed a learned norm acquired from exposures and to the surroundings of one particular environment, to a different set of circumstances in a different environment. The difference between a bar, a classroom, a spa, a gym, running outdoors, on a treadmill, dating, in the bedroom, on a date in a restaurant, at an event, to an interview, or at a job. It's usually inappropriateness that is found to be of humor to those who have the privilege of watching and assessing your personal development over time, without you knowing it, as though they have a right to dictate confidences to others, you do not know, of how to see you, accept you, understand you, or know you, based upon the opinions of people who you don't know in real life, and have never known or met, as though it's by their advices in life one should be treated. -There are many ways to make things better for yourself in life, however if you find yourself, not among the majority of opinions in life, about who you are or why you are the way that you are, and based upon who you know, be sized up in terms of how serious anyone should take you in life, then know that anytime you feel good, anytime you are positive, and anytime you are doing well will look stupid to most, that's others as taking themselves seriously in life, tend to observe those who are positive with negative judgment, having heard differently of you, or having heard about you, think otherwise, that your disposition is not genuine, but a product of discomfort as though you know and understand that others know who you are or are watching you for any reason, unbeknownst to you. Therefore you run the risk of making things worse at your own expense or at the expense of others, the longer it takes for you to understand why when you are serious others are not, and when you are not serious why others are, and during those changes in demeanor, be sure not to make light of any experiences by others who have been directly affected or assumed to have been knowledgeable participants in the furthering of how intelligence is determined and acquired by members within any industry for that matter, as having to do simply with who has become sick, who has died, or who is experiencing mental health issues at the moment, which is why someone who was perceived to have been a knowledgeable participant gets harmed, by those who assume it's the system of care that is being put into question, instead of understanding that mental health issues reflect a bigger picture of care demonstrating the decision making skills of those in power, and the audiences under their care, who have grown to love and admire them both on screen and off screen, on stage and off stage, be minimized in terms of their talent, by a few instances of mental health issues suffered by a few examples of their cohorts, who more or less, appear to have similarly suffered the same disorientation, physical health, and public scrutiny as someone who is not famous, and who has never been known in the public arena as a professional entertainer and media personality. Mental illness, as sad as it is to see be experienced by people in life, does reflect ones decision making skills, who surrounds them, who they are surrounded by, and who they go to for help, and on the basis of what type of help they receive in life, get well or not.

Working Your Way Toward Solution ...

6/22/2020

In the event you cannot stay well, no matter how well anyone is doing around you, means either take a step back, thinking differently, or look beyond your circumstances at the moment. Its human nature for people to gravitate toward what makes sense to them, sometimes it matters who a person is, by education and experience, that they are more likely to be heard than most, thats because they have been trained and have studied, meaning their thinking is not subjective, based solely upon protecting ones own interests, usually when someone is trying to defend themselves thats exactly how they do sound, selfish and off putting, nonsensical, and only making sense as standing in their shoes, the shoes of someone who is not a party to the other side, that is people who think less of them, and do not see their best interests as mattering or being of consequence to their lives, neither in the positive nor the negative wish to hear from anyone, who they do not wish to be apart of their understanding of life. You cannot blame someone who is situated separately from the majority as being responsible for any confirmations occurring noting their existence, whether as a means to include them or not include them in the loop, that is the big picture understanding of how people have come to be accepted in society and for what purposes, usually its earned, and that is why they are not difficult to look at or understand, read, or make sense of, meaning they make sense on their own, whether or not their identities are made known to all or not, that type of making sense doesnt require involving the work product of others, but as a beginning way of helping others to understand my story, I used songs and movies, as breaks in the telling of my own life, however people are people, they are not characters in movies, and although youd like people to adhere to formulas for your own wellness and interpretation of them, life simply doesnt work that way. -We all reach points of clarity at different points in our lives, whether by exposure, and sometimes through meeting people we can feel a different sense of confidence in life, or sometimes lose confidence in life, depending on how well we match with others, thats just something you learn over time, maintaining your sense of identity, learning that people may enter your life, and benefit having known you and not need you, and not be affected by you not in your life, and that sense of feeling put together will not change whether or not they are in your life, and that benefit to them, will continue to exist whether you are up or down, well or not, successful, make it in life, or fail completely to become a working professional, its all up to you. -So instead of wasting time questioning the wellness of others, which can be noticed via anyone's observations, there should be no reason to justify or try to understand why someone is well whether you know them or not, and whether or not they know you, think that your condition well or not is ever contingent upon the maintenance of the wellness around you, the minute you begin to think twice about that possibility, the more likely it will be tested, to see whether its because of your illness others were made to feel better about themselves, and whether others are well because you started doing well yourself, and then the counter arguments are made to see whether if you get sick whether that causes illness to those who are well, to argue that you were not apart of the wellness of others, as being not well, and upon you doing better in life and working, that that was not the reason others around you started to feel better, to argue you are someone who credits yourself for the wellness of others. -Which explains in part why the minute I start to do better in life and feel better, is the minute someone else seeks to control the wellness of those around me, and affect my own wellness, and cause me illness, by getting me to look like someone who does not deserve to be well, and not appear as someone who is doing everything right why they are feeling better, because they have worked hard, which why not to photo your body for men in private, as it may be later used to say that conversations with you were for the purposes of you sharing your body with another, which is done so upon request, during moments when you feel safe, and happy, and private, without expectation of harm to you.

When Things Don't Work Out ...

You are what you allow, as painful as that is to say to oneself, it's true that so long as you allow yourself to be hurt, and subject yourself to interpretations of you, that cause you to feel hurt, you are therefore only allow that pain to fester, and take hold of who you are, whether or not deserved, and whether or not those reactions within you or towards you are a manifestation of who you are in reality or not. Never become over-consumed with anyone's anger in life, especially as directed toward you, although everyone's happiness does matter, you cannot make anyone happy who cannot be happy for you or in spite of the happiness you are able to achieve for yourself absent minded them, absent minded their own emotional instabilities in life, when it comes to acceptance of you, you cannot expect everyone to be happy for you, the world doesn't work that way, as painful as it feels, one would expect when things are going right for nothing to go wrong, but that isn't the case. Even after you have overcome significant hurdles in life, that doesn't mean that you are therefore immune from controversies, or that you have built up any resiliency to be hurt in the future, there is no public status or level of success that makes any one person immune from being hurt in life. That you learn to accept, the day as it comes, no matter what happens to you in life, not allow those upsets and controversies concerning your good character, to cause you to implode and suffer anxieties in life that leave you bedridden, hopeless, and under so much strain stress and pressure in life, that you fail to continue to meet the mark when it comes to acceptances of you in life, required and needed in order for you to live life, free from harm, and able to thrive among others, without being subjected to attack, on the basis of who you are, including what matters to you, or because of what issues you have underwent be minimized by anything past, to serve as excuse or explanation for the hardships you have endured in life. We can't all be respected, whether or not we are famous, well known, or by who we know treated as special, or given any benefits of the doubt when it comes to our understanding of the world, and where we see ourselves as standing among others in life. Even if you have lived a great life, does not mean that someone who thinks they know you better or are more deserving of being heard as from their own perspective upon knowing you, feel it deserved to cast you under a different light in life, based upon their interactions with you and ability to control you and get you to portray yourself in a way befitting to their interests not your own best interests. Life is painful, but it doesn't need to be any more painful than it already is, we all suffer from some anxiety in life, some of those anxieties manifesting themselves in our life, at the control of other people's wishes, and sometimes by our own forgivings and interactions private with others, a loss of respect occurs for us, by others, and by the ones who speak to us as though they see best, and do not allow you to be yourself in a critical world who judges you based upon what you look like, what you sound like, who you know, where you are in life, what meds you're on, your medical history, etc.

Today is Father's Day ...

One of the first people you meet in your life who teaches you what it means to make someone else proud of you in life is your Father, for some reason that's their job. And whether you understand why you feel the necessity to make them proud you do, whether that's through sports or school, accolades, awards, jobs, or graduations, it is them who you first seek approvals from in life to know and understand whether you are doing a good job in life. It's by your Father's recommendations you worry less, don't overthink, lighten up, keep going, keep applying yourself, and reminded that everything is okay, especially when you feel like your life is in chaos, and especially during moments when you feel powerless, like your life is over, and that you gave your best and it wasn't good enough, that's what Dads are for, they have been through everything, failure and back, breakups, business stresses, career changes, money losses, money gains, and still they were able to make a family, and because of who they are, you are here today, because they made good choices in life, and you are always considered a product of those good choices in life, until you decide otherwise. In your 20s you don't understand the pressure that hits you in your 30s, when your Parents get older, and life feels shorter, wishing you had spent more time being successful than the moments spent in failure, and wishing you had taken their advice more than the times you decided to rebel and take chances with your career and your livelihood. In any family there is always an unwritten agreement to do what is in their best interests, whether you sign on to the task or not, it always feels like your life is geared on the basis of those who are successful in your family, not geared by your your failures in life tended to, that you learn on your own, although they may seem strong like they have good lives, your life matters to them too, whether or not you are successful, doing well, married, with a job, or home in bed, still trying to figure out life for yourself. Your family is the only group of people who won't let you go out, date, and get used up, unlike your friends, who generally won't tell you what to do in life, only support you in every decision you make, whether or not you get hurt, still there for you, a family is the only group of people, who recognizes when things are off, and sets you back on course because it's their job to care for you, not to ignore you, like friends may do. You learn this the hard way, who is there for you during times of need, and who simply cannot help you during a time of need, its not that they arent your real friends, its that they have lives of their own, they need to tend to, without wasting their time, energy, and emotions talking someone through their problems in life who cant get well on their own.

Never Give Your Power Away ...

Those who think they predominate in confidence sometimes think that they are entitled to feel that way because they think that there are lesser forms of human stability around them, that have caused others to be at a disposition in life, that sets them on lesser known courses in life, statuses or disciplines, and do not feel compelled to care for those who they cannot identify with and do not see nothing within them, usually people not as bright as them, who dont shine as well as them, who they do not see the as important, or anyone of importance or significance when it comes to how they have come to define themselves, some inspire others because of who they are, and some feel put down by others depending upon who they are in life, its all a matter whether you allow the dispositions of others to dictate how you feel about yourself, or where you see your potentials in life to blossom, whether among or apart from those who either dont identify with you or who have grown apart from you and no longer identify with you. Whenever you experience a change in beauty or body image, thats exactly what others think upon seeing you, first noticing a change and then assuming there has been a loss of identifying with whomever you have become separate from, whether thats friends female or male or lovers and companions and people with whom you have shared a monogamous relationship with and connected with on a spiritual level that is taking care of one another in a a loving relationship. Those who foster best do so whether separate or apart from those they love those who they consider friends, or those they work for, and even in a crowded room, neither intimidated nor feeling less than anyone around them, and still able to light up their own, absent minded who is looking at them, and whether anyone stands out to them, able to stand out too in a crowded room, and not lose light simply because someone else stands out too whether male or female, thats having no element of jealousy or inferiority in comparison to those around you, feeling equally as human, whole, and solid as person, no matter who is in the room, whether anyone notices, them, looks at them, and by no matter how many people they meet in life, and interact with, are seen as themselves, not someone in need of fixing, or in need of help, which demarcates someone who is not found, or maybe even someone with disability who is overcoming their defects and weaknesses and trying to blend in with the rest of them, whether male or female. Preservation is about preserving your light, its not meant with the intent to see others as threat to your mental and physical health, no one has the power to take your light away, not by intimate relationships, not by friendship, not by photography, not by messaging, not by reading, and certainly not by exposure, able to change who you are on the inside, and how you look in comparison to how others feel and look whether around you in your life, or via their own observations in life, seeing you in public, rested among everyone else in the room no matter where that room is, who is in that room, who recognizes them in the room, who recognizes them they do not know, and no matter who is around, and who is in observation of that person in interaction with another, there is no power loss in any communications between people in private or by people in public or by people watching over people in private in communication shared or kept private. I am someone who dates, and some are empowered or bettered having dated me or having known me, and without me in their lives have been able to live good lives without me, thats not having control over people who are no longer in your life, and not allowing them to have control over who you are in your life, without them in your life, and sometimes there are attachments, depending on how long you have known someone, and any separation from them losses of light if seen are assumed to be interpreted as a connection assumed to be loved between people who upon separation caused a loss of light to occur. No one is responsible for anyone who losses light around them who knows them who they do not know, and no one with light is responsible for a loss of light occurring around them by people they dont know who see them in public, which is a natural defense upon recognizing someone you do know with light, thinking they have light because they are known to others, and thinking losses of light occurred because they were known to others. That is not the case that love is always involved, light is not about physiological changes in light, between people known or not known in public or upon interactions in public, knowing or not knowing people, see all people as human, not all interconnected based upon who is noticeable who is not noticeable, who is loved, who has loved, who one loves, who loves them, who they know, who knows them, and stop creating basis for excluding people in life, who you think have more light that you in life because they are known, and assume your loss of light is because someone who you think is who they are simply of what they look like or who they know.

Saying: Leave Things Alone ...

There are many qualifications for public speaking one of the reasons is that in the event of an emergency you don't have time to learn and do research and the ability to use books or references by others, listen to current dialogue, and review right now as a whole, that as you become more and more professional either having experienced issues and having been able to deal with those issues in the past, without aggravating your own best interests or others, or you have no experience when a new problem arises that you have just begun to realize to remember previously not noticeable as applicable in the past, that when your knowledge base ie your education comes into gear, in a natural way we are taught information and its through our application of what we have been directed to focus on that we create compositions in life that illustrate our understanding not only of what we know and have experience and training in addressing, but that in trying to comprehend and measure the scope of how one influence has either shaped or affected others, not assume nor transmit what you think is happening with or without confirmations from others past, rely on any system of acceptance not understood nor created for you to better understand what is hurting you, helping you in life, or discern the causes for your own issues, as it relates to what you see now, and what you say now, right now is "unlike anything I have ever" experienced in life, right now is primarily about me, not suffering from the losses unforeseen by others, when addressing a subject, that struck a chord with so many willing to respond to these calls to action, to reinforce the values that they think should be promoted without distraction to other issues of lesser importance as it relates to focusing on who needs help and why, not by defending via example your work history as though you have to further qualify yourself in life, to do what you are doing blogging, and ever feel the pressure to respond on a grander scale which addresses everyone's issues, I'm not a doctor and you cannot diagnose a situation in which others who feel are doing the right thing and noticeably upset, be responded to or described in public by someone who may be outside of an issue, and their condition being compared or tolerated more so by others, than they were tolerant of my reactions to instability, worries about the wrong things in life until they occurred, rather than see me similarly situated as in responding to what does not make sense, and by what I feel do what I think is right, without being distracted by what anyone else is doing, you learn later in life when things become unstable that nothing is interconnected as bearing a responsibility to respond in a way that brings other problems that have occurred as it relates to what is currently going wrong in our country or other countries, if nothing wrong is happening in your life, then do your part, not to become a source of insight when things are going well, and then broach topics to strike a chord with a sensitive population who are focused on their own issues and chords in life, regarding what matters in regards to their concerns and best interests of all they are presenting when it comes down to which incident sparked a unified effort to respond in a way that more than just those who responded initially. If my issues and previous life crises were already presented and shared in a private, then there is not necessity to share in a formal way to the public what is not confirmed to have occurred, those unnecessary confirmations in life, usually occur by onlookers, when it's not their lives at issue that are being questioned especially when it comes to issues they feel you should be compelled to speak about, we don't all arrive at a moment of peace simply because others are fighting about something I have never argued nor fought about and by responding that's not to make my life of issue as though my life can in any way contribute to an already boiling and unstable condition, which have the capability of taking on a different character, whenever you have a concern if you publicly share that concern, that's not a joke, all humor issues aside, as thinking I am unstable simply because I cannot take a joke that is more about others' understandings than it is about my own life currently, that's not what drives people's right decision making over-reliance on the past and what other people think and waste time talking about yourself, when other more important things can be talked about, without expectation as though any reader deserves to know the origins of your intelligence how it was derived, and whether because of who you are are immune to controversies if you speak or end up like anyone else famous who offend an already serious and fragile situation, make light of something not affecting them, I'm not famous with a responsibility to work among professionals as connected or with a political drive to respond to all, these are skills you are exposed to and learn upon being exposed to how people articulate themselves and in what types of situations they are compelled to speak and how they present themselves. -That's the misnomer, that overtime, or upon others' successes you think are related to previous concerns somehow dilute a bad situation if shared now, does not make discussion of any more comforting or helpful, neither affirms, nor betters either side, and when that occurs sometimes people take it upon themselves upon someone not knowing what to say to prosecute them for not having said anything as it relates to things others thought were important or official confirmations of responsibility as it applies to any interests of someone who is not in a position of power, but who has been present and sends information with or without their review, to fulfill an ongoing responsibility not for them to see what I see but to keep them updated on my progress, not for the purposes of investigation as to other points in time, or by what others have done, be careful not to empower or defend people with an interest you are not sure about and be careful not to relate their demeanor as though its being directed at you, if you present that possibility upon thinking that way has the potential to empower someone who is not aware of everything done right, and at a moments notice all progress can be lost, simply for the purposes or hearing about something from the past you felt was of significance and not addressed publicly in a way you thought befitting of someone who did the right thing, and did not allow others to continue to harm people on the basis of excuses or on the basis of beliefs, or on the basis of their heritage, or by what they know, and especially not because of who they think is wrong or was wrong in the past upon disclosure in private to others, your childhood is not your adulthood, and was told your reputation starts the day you begin law school, and reminded of how important your moral character application is to pass the bar exam I was one of the recommenders to my best friend asked to write a recommendation for him as a law student in California. I cant explain how someone with years of experience gets in trouble and put in jail, it must because they did not improve over time or correct what was of issue or could be of issue, and instead of reinforcing that companies purpose to promote the best interests of all, was turned in as someone who actually caused harm to the careers of others, not helping them, and if that pain upon having been attached to them, to hear about causes you pain, well then thats why they were punished. How can someone who belongs and making millions of dollars, ever become concerned with the interests of a few, there are many ways of becoming special, either as a whole you have an ability to not overwhelm the senses and after meeting you, not thought about in the negative, or reminded of after they have come into your life, and some people stay in your life, even after you have left their life, and sometimes that can create an unwanted attachment, to be connected to a previous moment in time, when there was total acceptance of you, and see the same occur as though if now, at what point was there ever a personal interest in responding to matter outside the scope of anyones business practices if exiting in real life, not of or concerning them. I think what is wanted to be known about me now, is how I am able to see things and pick up the correct way to respond, its not through training you earn your tone, its a disciplined practice to write and to sound well and be balanced and say what makes sense without causing instability to any side who has been affected by any system of abuse, in which one has grown to trust, and then feel pain at a later point as a result of having been connected to them, thats more than people being quiet in a room you are in, or trying to get everyone to feel comfortable around you, as though that is necessary to see you in action past a point of non-acceptance, later wellness can still be affected by previous moments of illness no matter what the causes were, be mindful of that. Which brings us to our next point, life is short, therefore if you get the work done on paper and explain things well once, that will suffice if it was never about those things and later provoked by everyone doing well, thats to see whether you are only comfortable sharing information as it relates to those who are successful as though you have any preferred preference of connection in life to well in order to thrive Im nice to everyone but at this point I do not have the energy to think about what is not understood at the risk of provoking conversations among everyone who has just arrived and who have left and found solution, to be bothered as people are coming to a moment of peace, see whether any changes within me or via discourse coming from me every trigger unwanted change in others, of course not, I do not compare myself to others, I dont look at others, I do not focus on others, I am accepting of all, I read enough to know who they are maybe upon knowing their connections matters in life, but dont make things about the lives of others as though I am picky about whether to accept someone into my life depending on what I think is about me or whether that does not support or offends the interests of anyone trying to prove me wrong in life as though I am being critical of anyone who is not in my life and doing anything wrong directly to me, just as for the purposes I am degraded to terms, similarly companies can be degraded if they ever look as though their purpose was futile, dont put me down therefore to empower anything that is going well for others, connect us as though my condition is their fault. When everything can be summarized to something that is not a necessary public issue, for the fact that I have never been gay in my life, and do not have any plans to be gay, dont entertain that understanding of you as being something you are not, simply to accommodate their winning hand in life or a series of interpretations they practice when it comes to being funny and shedding light on the order of importance of issues, and to who understand to who is disconnect not clear to,. Why is this important because once there is evidence of a changed condition set in stone, that becomes a confirmed part of your identity and if so stated is believed to have occurred and once something you are not sure about can be confirmed as being of issue, that only reinforces all previous assumptions that you looked and sounded and were uncomfortable because you were those things in life Gay, simply because you were not afforded medications in life, to maintain focus on yourself not be easily distracted in life, for whatever reason you became tired, from having smoked weed, and got tired. This brings up an important question if you explain the capability of your face changing then then as you are now with similarly be experimented with given your conditions and exposures, to see whether you are a product of what you hear, who you see, what you know, your exposures, and whether you adapt and change to be like, to be as good as, in defiance of oneself, or illustrate a way in which you were harmed something others noticed that you did not, having not been vain, care. There are naturally ways in which a Freudian slip occurs which is when a more positive understanding of personal changes can be observed through your writing, even if you have not said that out loud, which is why its important to leave people in their natural condition, not to write to prove points as directed to yourself or others when it comes to looks, sexuality, or your private life.

What is Respect? ...

Being in tune with others, is a sign of respect, for who is here, recognizing how people are feeling, and being mindful of the worries and without mention. Sometimes the best way to help others during a time of need, requires less focus on the problem at hand, as recognizing unconditional acceptance of others no matter what their condition is, that doesnt require you to know someone well, to have compassion, sometimes just being present, and being accountable for your life with respect to the lives that others lead, is all that it takes, in order to stay on course in life, and not be led astray. We are given so many options in life, and if there is one thing I have learned during the process of recovery, while healing from mental illness, and instability in life, living life in question, instead of with faith, under impressions, not to be and misguided, not found, eventually we find that natural sense of comfort, in having a good head on our shoulders once again, sometimes getting sober, cutting back on substances, or even stopping to explore emotions, concerning whats the matter with us, and start valuing ourselves anyways in spite of our imperfections. There will always be things in life, that pull you back into your core sense of self, reminders past and present are, and when you get there, remember this, no one cares where you have been in life, so long as you do not allow those troubles to dictate your future course in life, and repeat old mistakes, once again, to the disappointment of others, whether thats falling in love too fast, or too soon, becoming too emotional in private or in public, or even worse, give up all together and become something your not, drinking or smoking, and experimenting with your health and emotions, which always seem to wind up bringing out the worst in us, not the best of character we have to offer the world. No one likes instability, its an automatic turn off, in a world that requires "peace of mind" stability, trust, commitment, hardwork, over personal issues, feelings, anger, upset, or frustration with ones own purpose in life, and unable to fulfill any other purpose, though its problems that need to be resolved in order to move forward, so long as you lay problems before yourself, well then thats what is left with, when you find yourself alone, and finding it difficult to talk to anyone, if its love and happiness that you need, then think twice before giving up all options for those things in life, simply because you think that you are worse off than you are. There are no mental tricks, no shortcuts, of a rut, it starts with forgiveness and acceptance of oneself, any errors that have been made past, and without lamenting on what could have been, be proud of yourself as you are today, not always with faith that things happen for a reason, is life explained to us later on in life, we have to see things for ourselves, to realize how when disempowered we lose all ability to care well for ourselves and others, and that is a heartbreaking experince to have in life, to feel worthless, every effort put forward in life, to better oneself, undermined by a past problem or defect existing or stain in our past, that we keep bringing up over and over again, its not until you allow those thoughts to process in a way that you develop a sense of chaos around your current sense of being, no matter how far youve come, how long it took to get well, the next step back into those memories and emotions concerning inner turmoils or judgments of you, is the minute you give power for those inner issues to you to be had, dont leave yourself powerless in life, you may not know it all, but that certainly doesnt mean that you cant yet still recover, you will find out as you get older, that the world is not as conservative as you anticipated it would be, you dont have to blend in and be as fearful, it just means be a little more gentle in your approach, when it comes to voicing your opinions, as others may not be as hard on themselves as you are on your own self, be someone worth knowing, and who upon being known, make others feel well around you, and that starts with knowing your own disturbances well, and be a solid voice of reason, to enable others to weather worse storms in life, possibly, conditions you yourself have been exposed to, be thankful for everyone in your life, no matter how hard they were on you, and do your best to stay level headed, you cant help anyone who cannot help themselves, just be positive!

Personal Update ...

Just got the results back from my Ultrasound of my Kidney and Liver, and they found a Hemangioma in my Liver, 1.3 centimeters, they say it doesnt require surgery yet, but a follow up in October.

Heartwarming Expectations ...

After speaking online, theres a lot of unwanted expectations you get met with, no matter how hard you've work, how long you have who you have spoken to, who you have reached out to for help, who you have encountered during your years of recovery, for something in return, you do not owe anything to anyone in life, reassurances in life, dont come for free, thats the false expectation of a writer, to be brought into a space in life, that illuminates their mind, and exposes them to a more beautified version of life, I leave nothing up to the of others, I generally speak honestly, and specifically, and in detail, in a balanced way, that does not give way to negative inference to thats the expectation of someone who appears to have recovered, assuming that they are immune from controversy or backlash in life, how they have lived their life, as not being good enough, not fit to be a public figure, or not smart enough to speak in public, those are intimidations I face as a writer, its not easy to write online, and its not easy to write live, without editing, thats where one is mistaken, excitement under pressure, or that one rises to occasions provoked by others, or similarly provoked by others, you cannot control people would be wrong to especially try to control me, or affect me in a way, to make things looks differently as told, with expectation of being all, thats when living becomes tiresome, subjected to agendas, dispositions, and feelings of others toward you, knowing you but unimpressed you, thinking they have you all figured out, and wanting to see how much time and attention you get side-tracked on trying to figure out generally a waste of time, to spend too much time on anyone who is preoccupied with themselves or others, never think twice about it, you in their lives, so be it, but not at your expense for ridicule, when youre down, fall in love, or try too hard for acceptances in life, in position, thats just recipe for disaster, embarrassment, and later provocations as though you play stupid and arent a nice person, if you spoken online at a later point in time, after a year of writing in public everyday, and finally becoming popular February 2020, two months being eligible for expungement, meaning have my record cleared, not for public review and interpretation, that includes my resume, its some to justify treating you in what they think is a smart way, based upon what your resume looks like, as though that was a strategy for dropping or paying attention to things like that at the get go. "John Nicholson" was an attorney who asked me to work for him on LinkedIn NOT an intent to communicate a "Nicholson" joke, with regards to the quote "you cant handle the truth" which was later stated, in lieu of passing of "Senator McCain" for Arizona, a war veteran, known for surviving torture, whos running mate 2008 [1] was "Sarah Palin" whose daughter name is "Bristol Palin," the street parallel to the street I grew up on, the same street featured in the movie: Clueless, they drove in my neighborhood and on San Vicente. She famously wrote a book about going "Rogue" I assumed to be about her trying to be brave among others similarly, and take a different course of action setting her apart from others, maybe that was her definition of leadership, beyond everyone, to be above any concepts driving current systems of creation and understanding of events and important lives, and neighborhoods, containing victims of crime, in their memory, stapled to the screen, older more mature versions, thought to have been sophisticated representations of students at the time, featured at "Beverly Hills High School" in another neighborhood, east of Brentwood born in Santa Monica and attended Carlsborp School, a very small private school just west of my neighborhood Brentwood, the family home before us, the Redlands, I knew looking in a Carlsborp phone directory, same address but a different family name, their children at Carlsborp School. Our neighbors were the "The Petersons," their daughter gifted me her set of Barbies, when mine were broken by my friend, she was in the same class as a Carlsborp transfer friend, whos Father was a "UCLA" Doctor, with an older sister who used to read magazines, and taped photos to the wall of her bedroom of models. Similarly, my best friend and I taped photos of models to our bedroom Brentwood and in her home in Miami, where she later moved, and lost weight, and I gained weight. I once joked, calling myself "Rogue" because I had made so many iMovie jokes, to title segments from my life shared out loud, that someone on Twitter posted an Iceberg meme with the same term, similar to the "Shreck" car chase seen shown overhead, in my senior yearbook, the caption "Voted Most Shady" was over a picture of myself and seated in the back, a classmate who freak danced my neighbor at his Bar-Mitzvah, legs in between one another was dressed in black velvet a long skirt and a velvet t-shirt, who was later featured in his Bar-Mitzvah video told his "parents said who pointed me out." Similarly at a club in Hollywood, out with Kelly Osbourne, we bumped into a cast member "Donald Faison," from the "Clueless" and sandwich freak danced him, I was maybe 15 this was before driving, as I remember my friend through friends was out to drive.

Meaning Behind the Letter "Y" ...

I first learned about City Planning, as a Paralegal Intern at the LA City Attorney's Office when I was 22 years old, a Paralegal Studies finishing up my ABA Paralegal Certificate. I was required to go to a Public Transit Library, located on the other side of Train Terminal there by walking, from Main Street, where our Office was located, my parking spot, kitty corner to a park, behind the LA Time Building past, everyday on my way to work. Some things are put in stone, mostly things that help a city stay organized and orderly, and give address to any number of citizens within a given county, who recognize their surroundings as home, a familiarity to any neighborhood setting uniquely identifies people with their surroundings, sometimes reminding them of who they are, where they come from, and also fit for from ever feeling larger than we are, human, irreplaceable, but only living for a moment on time on earth. There's a great song my Mother listen to, in her Mercedes SL, with the license plate "Rognons" which means Kidneys in French, it was Black with a Tan interior, a two seats lifting up for seating in the back, her best friend used to drive a White Ferrari with the license plate "Late4aDate," her car was White Interior and stick shift, gifted to her, with a Red Bow on her Birthday, her name written in cursive in rainbow over the driver's side door. A song is called "Why" by Annie Lennox, her best friend's favorite song around the time of her death was "Come Undone" by Duran Duran. I hear the song "Why" I always think of the Y I noticed in the middle of New York City, by the theater district, the part of town I just learned also called "The Great White Way," "encompassing Times Square ,, [an area] between Union Square and Madison Square." [1] Union Square "Union Station" I walked through on my way to the Public Transit Library. [2] As a Sociologist who was also a Psychology Major for I've always been an even tempered person, never paranoid, never questioning others, never doubting anyone around me, grew up "self-taught" learned this term in American Literature in High School, a private school my Brother also attended, which is why I applied, even though I was on Honor Roll in 6th Grade, won a Medal in Basketball, and sang a solo with one other girl who attended another private school, her Father was an Airplane Leasing, or Hungarian decent. In elementary school, I was placed in a multi-racial mixed-ethnicity class, the children of wealthy professionals, with homes, and whose children mostly graduated and attended a more prestigious middle school and high school than mine. I got in from my class, however I did not apply, and three of us out of 27 students attended other schools, two of us attended Windward High School. The meaning of the letter "Y" I am reminded of how things have come to be, and how many systems of knowledge are built upon what is important to the individual bearing any resonance or derived meaning from the potentials they see around them, including individuals of interest, who may not make decisions based off of knowing, sometimes only later, knowing or understanding or appreciating them in a different respect.

would think that "knowledge is power" however in today day and age, it seems to be more about who you know that gives individuals it comes to identifying matters of importance and people of importance, shared knowledge is not always the ticket for acceptances, not story I am sharing now, even if a new anecdote from life is shared, its seems to always take on a different meaning to most, especially who sees your sharing as a jumping off point for their better understanding of life, or for suited derived interests on subjects that conce memories from life, what they know and recollect, always making decisions based upon who they think is important, never stating wh reject or decline insights from, carry on in life, as though one doesnt exist or have anything important to say. When I asked a pen pal "9/11?" It was because I wasnt sure why I was not being responded to and for what reasons, sure I tweeted in bits and pieces, but that n had a firm understanding of the historical meaning behind how songs are made, who Ive known, and by what connections, that momen affected me personally, other than my Father crying in the kitchen that morning, watching the news, and went to class, I was in Spanis firts period. We played hang man, the teacher kept saying "lo siento no aynada" thats all I can remember. Its so disheartening to be tre nobody in life, let alone an offender to the best interests of others, that really dissuades a person from coming forward and sharing fact life, its seems that everyone has already preassembled their own theories about 9/11 and why that happened to our Country, by my edu an unethical disruption of the natural work flow, and idea making process, to constantly rule out people from any moments of peace, c irrational disruption to the progress of anyone trying to make it on their own in this world career wise, and an even bigger insult to nar App "Tinder" when there was a "Tinder" Smoke Shop located on the corner of my Moms Rent-Controlled Home two bloack away for same as the address of a Star Avenue building shaped like the Arc de Triump located at the tip of the Champs Elysee in France, where Summer Study Summer 2002, the year that Lance Armstrong won the Tour de France, I studied Architecture in Art History and Draw American University of Paris, with my Best Friend, who had recently moved to Florida, Miami, I remember crying on the Airplane on seated after hugging her Dad goodbye, who stood at the entrance to the terminal they walked me to the boarding area. Thats just how p add things up to negatives, to suit themselves in life, as though anything they think or their current stability is automatically offended b insights or by the sharing of your life, as though people were not already benefiting themselves by pointing out your existence in life, to you, but obvious to any outsider to any equation concerning you or your family, who lived on Rockingham, two blocks away from n Friend, whos Mother met us playing outside, and asked my Brother "Do you have a sister?" I havent even read my Mothers book comp her book went missing from her home, people do anything by the book these days, when it comes to controlling your outlook and insig you as though they know you or are trying to protect you or keep you quiet for some reason, thats exactly what intimidation feels like, think they know better than you know yourself and your own life, as lived, to be a better judge of character, especially if you are the ty who sees the good in others, and doesnt assume the worst. Its certainly not my my misgivings, or hardships, or separations in life, that of chaos and disillusionment, resulting from a lack of faith in the progress that has been made, and the reasons for which that progress be made and why. Never assume that anyone who speaks would ever disturb that progress, no matter what industries stepped up in life their own concerns about life, whether or not pointing to responsibilities or accepting their own responsibilities in life, when it comes everyone sees and appreciates the world in which we live today.

When Professionalism Gets Toxic ...

There are many stages to any one persons professional development, periods of growth, and periods of decline you will endure, as you given trade or profession in life, its how you handle the ebbs and flows, or any industry that will make or break you in life. There is no as a company, or as a professional, when you are faced with unwanted pressures, in life, that could be things not going right for your E personally or professionally, and having to maintain a positive work ethic, and keep up with your to-dos in life, no matter what the circ are, and no matter what troubles are encountered, as you learn how to make things better around you, while bettering yourself, thats pr standard to being any hardworking professional. Not all work will make you feel good, and you will not always feel good, as you are o work that you are doing, its takes bit of instinct, intelligence, ethics, moral principles, and direction in life, to consistently see yourself number of difficulties you may face, when it comes to saying the right things, and represent yourself and others well in the process of well respected working professional in the workforce. You dont really encounter the politics of a working profession, until you yours with question, concerning how you lead your personal life, what you look like, your weight, your grades, your education, and based up expected of you be treated more harshly than most, no matter what your disabilities are in life, if more is expected of you, then thats h be treated, as though its your responsibility to make yourself better, and to make things around you better for them, or be let go, if you disability, and lose confidence while in the work force. That no one can help you with, image, public rapport, physical presence, know confidence, beauty, intellect, personality, posture, dress, energy, thinking, attraction, or luck, that is something you have to figure out for yourself, although others may feel bettered having known you, and able to fair better on in life, without you in their lives, that doesn't mean you are worthless, or are or were the problem, when it comes to their wellness, or understanding of the world, and where they see yourself in their scheme of things, of value, or a nuisance to the image and ideals they seek to project into their world as a representative sample of their principles, ethics, and good moral standing in the world, at that rate, these are things you must learn for yourself, whether to play along with people into your life, or take a back seat to the leadership of others, about the worries of the world, or live life for yourself, and not be affected by their negative judgments or interpretations of you. If you cannot help yourself, no one can help you for you, if you are not willing to be a better version of yourself, no exposures in life good or bad can help you to perfect what has been broken, or learn how to be in life, if you are not willing to change things in life, personality and attraction, good standing, and wellness cannot be taught, to anyone who is not willing to stop blaming circumstances around them or people, for their own deficits they face, when looking at the world, and then finding where they fit into it, that is something you have to decide for yourself, it's called being lost, not valuing yourself, and when you do not value yourself, or appear like someone who does not value yourself, then don't expect anyone to be impressed by you professionally or to value you either, be prepared.

You Can't Fix Hate ...

And so the saying goes, "everyone is entitled to their own opinion." For many reasons, people are not comfortable around most, especially anyone who shares their mind and experiences about life, where sides can be taken, and when it's to their benefit to hold a negative opinion to better their own sense of self, understandings, and boundaries when it comes to caring for whom and why, not all women are loved, not all men are loved, and for whatever reasons or causes for unhappiness are, the cycle doesn't seem to stop, when anyone empowered to state their opinions on matters, puts down anyone who doesn't look, appear, or sound like anyone whose opinion is worth listening to, generally those who are smarter, than anyone who does not make sense to them, who they cannot identify with, and who they do not empathize with, or support. That's not politics, that's hate. The best solution when it comes to caring for all, is to take everything with "a grain of salt" meaning don't amplify issues, and personalize your interests, upon who your hate is being directed toward, the less aggravated one becomes toward a person they are expecting a negative reaction from. It's usually those who express hate, that seek to change or trigger a chemical reaction in the brain, in opposition, or to another human body and brain, to not feel well, which makes them feel better or more well, that's what enables hate to give that power away to any group or set of people, who feel entitled to hate anyone, because they do not agree with how they lead their lives, the decisions they make, who they choose to love or adore, who their friends are, where they went to school, their level of education, their values, they see others in dislike, like their sense of space on earth is more important, than another's sense of space on earth. It's with expectation of others, why people do not like you, instead of focusing on your own life, that loss of focus, then can be felt by any audience to someone, who is treated about unfavorably, or who experiences mental health issues, as a result of poor treatment of them. Those are induced discomforts, to convince themselves as though they are the cause for that treatment of them, as though there is something wrong with them, never allow anyone to convince you that you are something you are not, or even worse, be compared as situated among those who do cause harm to others, it's the differentiation that's sought by those who are mean, ill-willed, bully, taunt, ridicule, and cause harm to any sound decision maker, or rational person, that's when illogical steps occur in one's sense of being themselves, forced to accommodate or respond to what cannot be proven, through their faces, or looks, but can be felt, that condescending superiority, of someone who feels more whole or solid as compared to another, and a sense of being or know-how, out on anyone who does not likewise represent what they think is a demonstration of strength of character. You are not you as a source of their unhappiness, if you are happy or doing well, and then associating blames to someone who does not provide happiness, or feel good feelings to them, as the cause for their unhappiness. You can't make all people happy, and not all people will be drawn to you, you are not special, especially not if bad things are said about you, or to you, during the course of your personal development online, and self-betterment. You cannot change an opinion of hate or disgust for any woman or man, that is not valued, respected, or worth listening to, only hearing the things they think and feel upon looking at you or hearing from you, and by their judgments of you, cast blame, as though anyone speaking to themselves causes their hate. It would be really difficult as a blogger if I ever had any bad experiences in life, or history of being in public, being taunted or hated on, sure that would mean my odds speaking in public, would render a similar result, based upon my appearance, looks, body size, and face.

Knowing vs. Not Knowing ...

There are plenty of ways to reflect upon life, one way is to remember stories from your own life alongside a timeline of events occurring in history, to better understand what it was you were protected from, and in spite of what was going on in the world able to achieve and be taken care of in life. Not all are blessed, with a strong backbone of parental figures in their lives, who help guide them in life, support them, give them strength, and someone to answer their questions in life about life, and everything else under the moon, when the time comes. -What is confidence? Confidence to me doesn't always mean being aloof, observant, and at the same time not caring what other people think, sure that's a sign of someone who may seem confident enough to advise you in life, when faced with whatever it is you are struggling with in life. "We all have our own truths" a therapist once told me, and I never really understood what she meant by that. I guess she meant, that we all have our own version of reality, and what we see and know, and based upon our exposures in life, find interesting some things better than others, and from what we focus on, with hope able to derive some meaning from what is focused upon. They put so many things out in front of us, especially on social media, not all of it important, some for the sake of being aesthetically pleasing, and spending a lot of time per post, really go out of their way, to make your social media experience a positive learning experience, and I hope to have provided the same to my audiences, picking up good lessons seeing good things, seeing how things could have gone wrong, and not attributing too many faults to others, having viewed life from my vantage point. It seems the more faults and blames you accumulate the more difficult it becomes for you to tell your story, which is why it was taken me 8 years of writing online, to finally be in a place spiritually and mentally fit to handle such a big audience daily, on my website. It's a lot to manage the minds of others entrusted to your words, and make sure everything comes together properly. Mainly without sharing information to overly benefit intrigue into any sides in life, not in the public's best interests, and share from one's own standpoint, but not in a prosecutorial way, leave people out of any important equations in life, I see as having been apart of any decisions made prior leading up to certain losses in life, forgive. What does forgiveness mean, it means people who were never a party to public light as children, should not be held responsible for their likeness being used in pop culture identities, of what it means to be cool, growing up in a wealthy neighborhood with electric bikes in the 90s. We all grew up differently, some more spoiled than most, but what I have learned mostly, is the better your attitude is about life, the better off you become in life, not mounted down by any wrongdoings by anyone, overcome with unwanted pressures in life, or feel at a loss, or under attack, by any force or mindset you find disagreeable to your sense of comfort, a dislike. The confidence of someone who is not focusing on something others may focus on upon looking at them, or by knowing them, is a gift, that not all think alike, if we did, our similar concerns, and deficits, would not in turn benefit one another having known each other, but it's what you can provide to others, that a benefit and a return of friendship is guaranteed, safety. So don't be too judgmental toward anyone on the inside, as though all these equations were known, without having been written down by me, not as related to us understood, no not at all.

Creating Change ...

Change doesn't happen overnight, and while we would like to think that in the passion of the moment our words and actions would be enough to instill change in the companies and organizations we seek change from, change doesn't always come. Throughout my experience, the most change has come from within, and even when nothing has changed around me, the more I changed the more I began to notice changes around me occurring toward me, and with me around. Call that a mental health issue, but it's true, when you are overly self-conscious, and questioning others, you can feel completely powerless, to the strength around you, thinking and believing that others have it better than you, or that you are worse off than others in life. That's simply not true, and the more you try to convince yourself of that fact in life, the harder and more difficult it becomes for your own dreams to come to fruition, which is why it's so important to be patient, with yourself and with others, when it comes to change. -When you argue well your position, and when your standing is acknowledged by the others, change can occur, within the other, that's upon seeing you and understanding where you are coming from, change from them is made, out of respect for your situation or circumstances. That's a positive. But change doesn't always occur in the immediate, and sometimes it takes several attempts after fighting in order to quell any discord between members of two different standings, where both parties feel like they are being harmed or wronged by the other for no reason, that's when a mutual understanding between two parties must take place in order for any motion forward to occur, in which either side, responds in a way that is agreeable to the tastes of the other.

Time Wasted ...

No time is ever wasted well spent. Remind yourself of that, you will have a lot of experiences in life where you feel like your time is being wasted, whether its standing in line, waiting for a call or a text back, waiting for an email, or in a relationships waiting for the other to come around. You can't predict the times, but when you get there, doesn't it always feel good? If you're thinking going into something that your time is being wasted, chances are the place or person isn't right for you, and youre probably better off spending your time elsewhere. The same goes for jobs, overtime, you realize this, you don't always find the right pairing. Just be patient with yourself, if your hearts not in it, that's a good place to start second guessing yourself or your prospects. Usually when we follow our hearts we end up in the right places. For me, I always choose jobs and people to spend my time with that I can see some kind of future potential in. That's a basic barometer, for judging whether someone coming into your life is someone you want to see again and again, whether that be friendship or romance. Some people can tell right off the bat and some people cant. When youre not doing well in life, you'll find yourself second guessing everything, never feeling like your in the right place in life, and that can be extremely difficult, especially for someone with mental health issues, wanting to have things in life, and feeling like you have nothing. That's when you don't want to waste your time, and "keep busy." I was raised to always "keep busy." What does that mean, it means not waiting around for people, or things to come into your life, and actively doing things in life, so that you can have things in life, like a job, a relationship, or friendship. Good things come to those who wait.

When Love Comes Around ...

When love comes around be ready for it, all the expectations, excitement, glamour, and fun that comes along with finding and keeping love in your heart and theirs. It's a huge commitment to be in love with anyone willing to accept your love, where a constant return of care and affection is demanded of you, which you must give so freely and willingly. There is a lot of competition when it comes to love, maybe one of the reasons why I started a blog, in order for a future mate to get to know me, personally, on a deeper level, than they would otherwise get to know me, if we just had sex, I guess Ive always wanted more than that in life. When you love someone, everyone responds differently, some more controlling than most, and some get more jealous than most, its all about how to speak to them, providing reassurances and giving them your undivided attention, of course they can tell if your heart wanders, by how you speak to them, how you respond to them, how loving you are to them, you can't fake a relationship, that distance that can be felt some are more sensitive to than most. Ive always been someone who keeps busy when in a relationship, that was how I was raised "if they're around they're around" and "men come and go." I was raised to be independent, of having a lover in life, and not feel dependent on a man for love, and was raised to love myself. What does that mean? It means loving without expectation, being yourself, not getting jealous of their time and attention away from you, be a rock in a relationship, someone they can always return to and feel the love they much need and appreciate in knowing you. That's being a good lover, not someone who is making demands on the other for attention, how quickly a relationship falters during moments of bickering and fighting, the other who while complaining seeking reassurances feels insulted, or let go, when the love demanded by them is not given. Take everything with a grain of salt, you cant be in more than one place at one time, and the same goes for your heart, know who to put in your heart, and with care defend their best interests as well as your own, when it comes to maintaining that love and positive rapport.

Top 50 Blogs Los Angeles! ...

Im really excited to announce that I have been listed among the "Top 50 Blogs Los Angeles" and so very proud of myself, and my following for continuing to support me along this journey in life. The LA Crowd, is one of the toughest and most judgmental groups of people known to man, Im just kidding, or maybe just with the most expectations when it comes to likeability, looks, and demeanor. You can't have it all, but online you can certainly make the most of what you have to offer the world, through writing, or so Ive learned. My pen name was founded 2013, on Twitter, initially sharing quotes about life, and my deepest reflections on life, with a bit of humor here and there and movie jokes. I guess you can say that was my way of coping with the times, and dealing with the unknowns about life, and sometimes mentioning people along the way, without expectation of connecting with them. As I became more and more familiar with the online world, I began to mention less, and focus more on my content, which blossomed in the following direction: Twitter, Instagram, Facebook, Weebly, then Pinterest and so on through blogpros.com a distribution company for my posts, which catapulted me upwards on the Ranks of Alexa, worldwide, and locally in the US, now #53,634, and consistently among the top 100K Websites in the US! My websites current valuation is at $102,445, and upon launching more posts everyday beginning July 2019, was estimated to be worth $1,117. They always say to find something you love to do, and to stick with it, and to especially love your job, and find something that suits you, for me its been blogging, while finishing my Masters in Law at Thomas Jefferson School of Law, now completing my dissertation for an LLM. So, thank you for following, I hope that by sharing my story online, its has been an intriguing experience to hear from a Kid from the cases, as well as what I have done while growing up, to build a good life for myself, one that my Parents have provided for, now its my turn to earn a living too. You cant fast forward to any point in time, when you are down in the dumps and not happy with yourself, finding myself online has given me a renewed sense of purpose in life and for that I am grateful. Through all my ups and downs there has always been one place for me to go and to share my thoughts about the world, popular or not, and that has been online!

Playing Stupid ...

Sometimes its cute to play stupid, when you like someone, while flirting with them, just to hear them talk and ask them questions ... and then there are moments when you have to play smart, and when playing stupid only does you a disservice in life. At work you are expected to be smart, and if you don't know how to do something expected to ask questions, never doing anything willingly not in the know, that usually makes you look stupid, and upsets your boss. Be kind to others, without expectation of them knowing you well, that's being nice, not playing stupid. Playing stupid, is more along the lines of not wanting to get involved, and in order to not state ones own opinion or involve oneself, plays like a fly on the wall to any situation, where others may passionately and vehemently be aggravated by. There are times when you need to talk and there are times when youre talking can actually bother the person who is speaking, who may just want you to listen, that's not playing stupid to not reply, that's being smart. Just know your limits, there is so much quiet satisfaction that occurs, that no one likes to admit to, when someone else other than you is being screamed at, and where you think you would have handled things better or differently, hearing the two argue, and one stammers away upset. That's not being stupid, that feeling you get inside, feeling good its not you, and instead of you someone else is being reprimanded, that's just a stupid feeling we all get that's wrong, not right. So be mindful, I think that's the common theme here, some days we may be feeling smart, and some days we may be feeling stupid, and silly, but all days we should be mindful of whats to come, that's being smart, anticipating the reactions of others, and be wary of the responses we may receive given our actions or words, that's thinking ahead of the game.

Its Okay to Be a Free Spirit ...

Its okay to be a free spirit, but not at your own expense, wander too far from the norm. That includes the conversations you hold, and the time and attention you pay to each person in your life, and every new person who comes along. Its easy to get hyper, and be super talkative, there is a lot of excitement when it comes to getting to know someone new, but never at your own expense open up too much to any one person, especially if you don't know them in real life, or if your not close to them in real life, it can be really tiresome, trying to repair, broken or old friendships in real life, when you are paying too much attention to unimportant and new people in your life, who may or may not be so deserving of all your time and attention. As you go up in life, socially, and professionally, you will find yourself becoming more or less social in the process of finding yourself, and if that speed requires more focus on yourself, than so be it, but don't lose your social skills, they are so important to working in any field, basic conversational skills, whats appropriate to say, what not to say, what to talk about, all of these things matter in the grand scheme of things, when it comes to being comfortable with yourself, and comfortable around others. Its easy for people to become easily offended, when they don't feel like they are getting your undivided time and attention, eye contact, and full comprehension, of their time and attention paid in return to you, be mindful. People have jobs, careers, families, duties, and responsibilities, beyond you and your problems and or issues, you feel like opening up about and getting help with, its not everyones job to help you in life. This is maybe why I blog, because I could not find the right people to speak to about my problems, and because I had so much to share, about my thoughts about life, is why I started writing. Writing and journaling is a great way, to begin those conversations with yourself, about anything that confuses you or about anything you find interesting but would never have the heart to talk to others about, including your deepest and darkest secrets, mishaps, and struggles in life, its not always for everyone to know everything about you, most of the best secrets in life we keep to ourselves, between ourselves and loved ones, be wary of your public persona and approachability, the less overwhelmed others feel around you the better, no one likes to walk into a tense situation and be expected to break the ice about you or your condition, why its so important to keep things light, be considerate of others, think about others, and never be afraid to check in on others, ask questions, and give love back to people you care about in life.

Before Its Too Late ...

Don't forget to say how you feel, often times, when our world feels most chaotic, and things feel out of our control, when we feel like we have few choices, and overwhelmed to say the least, you can make bad decisions, moving forward, and if you allow all those feelings to pile up, yes it can result in self-harm, injury, and or suicide, which is why I take Abilify. Its been a very difficult road for me over the years, to manage my symptoms, and to overcome all those feelings associated with being good enough, and wondering if you'll ever get there in life. There is so much pressure nowadays to live up to standards, and promises, living up to ideals, and legacies, and fulfilling those roles, we feel like we have been obligated to perform in life. Benjamin Keough's passing, symbolizes a huge loss to the music community, the grandson of Elvis Presley. All "graceland" and "promise land" jokes aside, yes that's pressure, to have been a child to the legacy of his grandfather, who promoted ideas associated with peace, that we are currently facing today among race relations, his music popular "across color lines during a transformative era in race relations, led him to great success—and initial controversy." [1] Note that when these issues come back to life, it takes its toll on everyone, who seeks to represent those ideals, bestowed to them by their families, and upbringing, raised to not be judgmental, to be iconic, and as culturally gifted, share that wealth and knowledge with others in their lives. We are not all blessed, to grow up going to Neverland Ranch as children, as I was blessed to have been given the opportunity to see first hand, how important those roles were to National Icons in music, the bringing together of people, and whether or not they could withstand those pressures then, we are still faced with those pressures today to provide peace to others, in ways that do not interfere with their better judgments, and don't single handedly empower the wrong people, to take care of those in need. Being an advocate means so many things to me, its having been through the process of recovery, hospitalizations, medications, and not giving up, no matter what controversies are out there concerning ones purpose methodology, or dreams, as having been related to a "dream team" of attorneys, who once sat on the couch at OJ's house while we played, living in a different world sheltered from all the news and media publicity, that's childhood. Then you enter adulthood, and if you are wise enough to play close attention, and be proud of who and where you come from, then one would not take any offense, or be dismembered, upon the likes of ones grandfather being used to promote current ideals, an imitation symbol to be remembered for all of eternity, the first one.

Of course everyone wants to be well liked, this is but one example of a social goal, you should have generally completed by the time your finished with high school. If youre thinking of a business model, for earning an income online, well it similarly starts with likes as well, meaning how well you are received, is measured on the basis of how you: feel, look, interact, and sound to your audience. On the sole basis of those four factors, you are either immediately read and well received or ignored, simply based upon feeling. You don't have to be famously attached to anyone, in order to be well received, or unconditionally accepted, this occurs over time, as your audience gets to know you, note that not everyone in your audience is a willing participant, nor will be when it comes to your future earning potential, people are mostly concerned with their own self-worth these days, call it competition, but that's just how the world works, everyone trying to stay ahead of the game in life, even if they read and benefit from your output, without crediting you, that's just the real world, not willing to work with you on paper, but then willing to vaguely reference you from afar, so noted by others watching even if it flies over your head. Beyond likes, I haven't really come up with a business plan or future course of action, nothing is set in stone, and while I'm a long way away from promoting other bloggers or products on my blog, that doesn't mean that I am not still trying to work my way toward those goals in life, representing others, and based upon my traffic flow, help to generate traffic to other blogs, that would be the main goal, a consistent hub spot, to help direct traffic online, to other sources, approved by me, and selected by me, for reference to my readers, things I think they would enjoy reading too, based upon them liking what I have to write online here. Once I save enough money to publish a book, the book I've been working on for a couple years now, will hopefully be published through Amazon Book Writing Inc, I still have a few final edits to go. So keep dreaming, you never know where your goals will take you in life, I've certainly been surprised, over how much growth I've witnessed to my website over the past year, I have been tweeting and writing on squares for years on Instagram, and had only generated 90k once on Facebook to squares re-blogged by me to Facebook, my first campaign I ran for Brady etc. I think by the time you start publishing books and become a public figure and author, you should be in a place in life, where you are proud of yourself, have your mental health issues, under control, and willing to share about your successes, without feeling like they're being interfered with, when you get to a point where no one can hurt you, and you can still maintain a positive attitude in life, that demonstrates your good character, that no matter what happens you can be relied upon for insights, whether or not you are struggling privately or publicly, matured.

Best of You ...

7/11/2020

Don't let anyone get the best of you, the kind of feeling that keeps digging at you until you've had enough, headache, physical illness, mental health issues, foggy, dizzy, disoriented, don't allow anyone to have that type of power over you in life. Always maintain boundaries with others, especially online. I could've lived a normal life, been a paralegal, gotten married, but instead I chose to live a more public life, and to my detriment, there have been many adjustment phases in between having a successful blog and doing well online, between there and now, and I'm happy I'm no longer in that place anymore, or state of mind, feeling helpless, powerless, and living in fear of what the rest of my life would look like. I now know to take it one day at a time. We all have demons, to battle, and you can never know what to expect as a blogger online, you won't always be in positive spirits, and there may always be something lingering from your past, inhibiting your writing abilities, but don't let the past be a future indicator of your success. There will always be backlash, from relationships past, failed friendships, failed job opportunities, and things said caught up in the mix of all of that. Sure we say things we don't mean, and sometimes beside ourselves, say things that just plain don't sound like us at all, why does that happen? When you're out of it, it's hard to describe what's not going right for you, and sometimes you'll say things blaming others, that's a natural reaction to things not going right for you in life, no matter what your condition is. Always remember to take a step back, no one can help you but yourself, and unless you are willing to let go, can the healing process begin, where the person who has aggravated you, no longer does, when the person who has upset you, no longer has the power to upset you, and the person you feel hurt by, can no longer control how you are feeling without having them in your life, that's being strong. And no matter who's on whose team in life, remember to always be on your own team.

The Majority ...

The majority of my audience is between 18-34 years old, and my blog is now popular in other countries, which is a huge plus, means my writing is translatable and makes sense to people not just in the US, where I am currently ranked among the top websites in the country #63,427. Although I still don't have any finished work products for sale at the moment, that doesn't mean in the future that I won't publish a book, I guess I'm just taking my time. I'm not sure whether I am doing myself a disservice by not publishing sooner, but these things you cannot rush. My goal as a writer is not to be off putting, I may have bipolar, and sometimes I may say things that will not make sense to you in the immediate, but I hope that as you live your lives, what I have to say will benefit the reader, I guess that's always the goal of the writer. There are so many stresses today, that its hard to be perfect, and to always say the right things. Have you ever watched the show "Curb Your Enthusiasm?" Sometimes I feel that way, once you say one thing wrong, it feels like everything you have to say is off beat. I work really hard to keep up with the times, maybe should read the paper a little more, to me these things are important in order to be relatable and to make sense to the majority. Its important to keep things light, I have always made it a point to share some of my humor at least on my Twitter feed, I feel like it adds a little personality to my blog, to hear what I sound like, when Im not trying to sound smart. You cant always be the best at everything. The goal is to find what you are good at and to stick to it, for me its blogging. Sure I went to law school but that doesn't mean Im going to be a lawyer, some things don't work out, and that's maybe why I blog now. I have always wanted to make a positive difference and to help others, and blogging has been the primary means by which I have been able to make a positive difference in the lives of others, whether or not Im getting paid to do so, that will occur in time Im sure. The better I get at public speaking, the more stable I become, its not an easy gig to speak in public, in the beginning, I used to have frequent panic attacks, and constantly erase comments that I wrote. Its also important to maintain a level head, not to feel like you are bigger than you are, and not to be overly opinionated when it comes to your world around you. Always keep things in perspective.

Sometimes Its Not Advantageous ...

Sometimes its not advantageous to speak about difficult experiences in which one felt that they were harmed, if resolve has occurred, to which no member to an argument any longer feels harmed. Often times its me that gets trashed, having to share information to be trusted, and then upon being trusted, turned on, as though I have a better stance in life, than most, or as though I have more power than do most in life, I have the same amount of power as anyone else does, when it comes to sharing their fears, worries, hopes and dreams, we are not different in that respect. And just like other women can fall victim to falling in love online, with people who they think are members of a famous entity, or even holding that identity of being famous, trusted, as someone to speak to with regards to ones concerns in life. Not all famous people think the same, but they do have one thing in common, a common concern for their own welfare, image, and earning power, when it comes to the work they have produced, and its added value throughout the years, that is ensuring value is added back to their works, not value taken away from any written compositions, or entertainment works. There are a lot of elements to becoming a public figure, one of which is your demonstrated ability to get along with others, not build waves, and encourage the ongoing acceptances of others in their work spaces, working among industry professionals for different organizations, and by who represents them, not shed light upon older tails of discomfort and blames, when is comes to what transpired later, whether a result of muses being known at the time, and for what purposes those muses benefited the making of finished work products for sale in the United States and beyond. -Its not a heart attack when you suddenly realize your importance in the world, and there is no justification required of anyone who feels they are important, the harder you try, sometimes the harder you fall, and worse you are received by others, them punishing you or treating you like some kind of fraud, or someone who thinks they are bigger or better than they are, or even worse yet more intelligent than they are in real life. There are very high standards today, especially with what becomes common knowledge online, meaning what is shared by me, assumed to have been known by all, or something ever present and coordinated against, the use or misuse of subject matter for money making projects, there are no rules, which is why this a sore subject of discomfort to most, monies lost and credits lost. You cannot be apart of by mention and expect to earn or garner respect that way, you will always be you, whether or not you think others have been influenced by you for the better. The only way to be apart of in this world, is to create finished work products that represent your intelligence, your methodologies demonstrated, your intellect, wit, and knowledge, as having been aware of subjects that matter to you, and what you have done to help enable others to continue working absent minded the pressures of crediting people below them for their work. For example I once pitched #bloggingcampaign, in support of Brady to end gun violence, by sharing stories from my life, I thought to benefit the general understandings of fear at the time, as experienced by myself, and people from my life, who felt directly affected by gun violence. That was 2016, I have since discontinued promoting my blog for reuse by others to discredit. Ouch. Sorry, blog your hearts out, follow your dreams, with "blessings" always! Sincerely, mymollydoll.com. cc: #worldpeace

Don't Set Yourself Up for Heartbreak ...

There will never come a point in your life, when your heart does not matter, in fact most things that you invest your time and energy in require heart. Talking to people, working on assignments, keeping track of things to do, managing a calendar, catching up with friends, texting loved ones, your heart has a great capacity to do many things, if only you would allow yourself, to be more forgiving and to let go more often. I guess that's one of the fundamental principles of my blog, letting go, it seems counterintuitive to have an ownership clause "my" to indicate possession over a doll "Molly" or self if identifying as the doll, and doll to indicate, in our human form, how we over objectify humankind, and forget how fragile we all really are. You learn over time, divested interests, pain, losses, and feeling drained, which is why people who are in control of themselves and have earning capacities in this Country, are very short with their time, and do not like complaining, and expect progress from everyone, that is the more you are doing for yourself, toward achieving goals in life, the less of a liability you are presumed to be, to others, or a let-down in life. Not everyone will be proud of you, it seems that the more people try to pick apart your issues in life, the more they think your relationships reflected that need in life, to have a "blonde female figure" in your life, who was murdered, and that your friendships with "blondes" reflected that need, as though those weren't the types of women who were attracted to you for friendship, as though you don't resemble or bear the same underpinnings of those personality types, anyways, without having had a famous "blonde figure" in your life at one point in time. Everyone tries to mold and manipulate you in life, based upon your likes, who you are attracted to in life, constantly sizing you up, based on what you do or do not have in life, and trying to figure out what voids you have experienced in life, that have caused you to be so unconditionally loving toward others, maybe its losses, having not been forgiving in the past, and moved on so easily from relationships and losses, eventually you take a step back and try to understand, the anger and frustration that others have had with you during the course of your life, and the inevitable decline in popularity that followed, losing people in your life, including your best friends, once attentions shifted from them to boyfriends. (Ex. Same 5 friends my whole life).

Different Speeds ...

We all travel at different speeds in life, based upon our energy, what we have to provide to others, and based upon what gets expended in the process of helping others or ourselves. We all have the potential to be drained, there is no limitless supply of energy, in the workforce. You either know how to pace yourself, balancing personal life and professional life, or you allow one or the other to take its toll on your well-being. We cant expect everything to go perfect. There will be a lot of unwanted stresses and strains along the way toward accomplishing your goals in life, that includes distractions, and any unwanted energy, from anyone who becomes unhappy with you, complains, or expects more from you, as though you owe them something in life. If you know that you are special, and understand that your time is limited on earth, and have a basic understanding of how to keep your day balanced, then lets hope that others with reservation will not expend too much energy trying to destroy anyone in life simply because they don't understand the meaning of peace. We are all entitled to our sense of peace, that is peace of mind, and peace at heart, not hurt, tormented, toiled with, accused, prosecuted, blamed, embarrassed, or startled, by any one persons concerns, concerning our good character, and our purpose in life. There will always be a constant push and pull between anyone in disagreement with you, your happiness, and their happiness, constantly intruding upon your progress in life, as if to make themselves feel better about themselves, to set you worse off in life, that's called a fight, an internal struggle, between yourself, and someone in disagreement with you, who persistently thinks that they are right and you are wrong, and are not willing to stop at anything until they feel that they are proven right about you, whether that's to embarrass you, expose you, insult you, defame you, chastise you, spread rumors about you, that's exactly what they do to get their way in this world, spreading anything but the truth. When everyone sees themselves as victim, that's when its time to take a step back, especially if no one else sees you as victim to your own circumstances in life, as though their behavior toward you is allowable, and you are expected not to defend yourself, or to get help, while coping with their own transgressions toward you, in spite, in hate, and in retaliation, for whatever is felt lost by them, your love, your respect, your trust, your admiration, your honesty, and you willingly sharing your life with another, -some people just don't know when to let go, there comes a stopping point, when things are not going both ways, that is when respect is not mutual, when love is not mutual, and when the well being of two people, is not longer moving along symbiotically, and a distance is caused, that cannot be reversed and only causes pain, that's called a breakup. When the differences become fruit for attack, instead of understanding, and when whatever is said, is questioned, instead of being heard without question. That is the kind of distrust that results in any relationship messenger based, post love.

Don't Let Anyone Take Your Power Away ...

During my more paranoid moments, I used to look at things as a series of blames moving backwards however later realized that that's not a good way of looking at the world, as though based upon faults, people draw attentions to themselves, you would think that the most notably referenced companies, sought a different plan of action, away from blames. Always think in terms of what is proper, sure there will always be vague jokes and references to people political figures, and blames associated to individuals in society we feel could have made better decisions coming forward but who wants to speak in private and watch people on TV at the same time respond doubly, to what is said in private, what goes on overhead vaguely, and then have to keep a straight face when talking about issues currently affecting our present discourse. Be mindful that is, be careful about the things that you say in private and in public, and be wary of how that rests upon the conscious of others, as remembered, as a writer one is always careful not to highlight or to say words or anything that stands out too much, so that that becomes the take away response from the whole piece written, however that is something you cannot control, what stands out to the reader as important, and what gets remembered by them. Ive found myself editing a lot lately, trying to be poised, and say things that are helpful but at the same time not reference too much from my personal life, and take things back to biblical times, as though my life as lived is to be used as story for reference for the better decision making abilities of others, not in my life, that would be a sore misuse, of my life and the people in my life, to be fruit of discussion, and not allow people to live comfortably, not under a critical lense, as thought about by strangers to any equations in life. -Just because Im a writer online does not mean that I have lived a perfect life, or have become more immune from controversy over the years, just as any bad year will have it, the moment someone else becomes unhappy with you, its seems to wreak havoc on the rest of my life, and better decision making abilities, as having to waste a lot of time and energy responding to one persons needs, in place of my own, call that being selfless, but I am not someone to have enemies in life. Ive found that the more successful you become, the more people feel like they have a say in how you lead your life, and about what is said, as though anything that you say can have an affect on their public appearance and demeanor, well if youre representing others sure, what you have to say will matter, to them, and to everyone connected to them, as though they may feel an obligation to respond to you being a blogger online, and anything you have to say, as them knowing you, expected to hold an opinion as to you blogging online, and becoming a public figure. Not all will agree with you when you decide to speak, and that does not mean that your life will get better, or that your experiences will hurt less, all things that hurt hurt again, it just depends how willing you are to let things go in life, in favor of living a better life for yourself and others. Everyone copes differently when it comes to stress, we all see things differently, and that will not change, mostly putting our own interests before the best interests of others, especially during moments of conflict, when our safety needs become paramount to the safety needs of others. Just be careful that once you are thrown into a public speaking position of power that inherently means that you cannot turn on people, speak badly of others, be accusatory, shame anyone, blame anyone, criticize anyone, let alone pass judgments upon anyone that would lead to unfavorable outcomes for them or anyone that they know, that's being honest with everyone, yourself, and not saying things in a way that brings about harm.

Let Things Go ...

7/7/2020

Amid COVID-19, Riots, and Protests, youll find yourself letting a lot of things go at this time, especially your worries. Don't stress out, and don't panic. The worst thing you can do is overwhelm yourself at this time, with things outside of your control. Try to relax. The times may be different but that doesn't mean that you still cant get things done, and live a normal life, and adjust to the times. Ive even found myself getting really tired lately, its really easy to overwhelm yourself with problems past, stay conscious of whats important to you now, not what was important to you then, before everything went haywire. If you can live a different life now then do so, get a new routine down, read a book, start a blog, apply for jobs, work on your credentials, take courses, there are plenty of things you can do at this time to become better.

Personal Update ...

7/7/2020

I just want to move forward, obviously I've been through a lot of embarrassment in life, and mental health issues, and just beginning to do better now, and ready to move forward, maybe write a book, get a job. Its never too late to start over in life, sometimes you just have to keep going no matter how painful life gets, especially when talking about the past. Im happy that I stayed in law school and graduated, I think had I not attended law school, I would not know how to respond to all the inquiries regarding the case, my condition, my family, friendships past, or relationships that failed. Its a tough world, and unless you are ready to face the criticisms of others, its very hard to come forward and share your story. -For example: Today Im not feeling well having shared that information yesterday.

Your Thoughts vs. Reality ...

The only time I ever really think about life, is in between jobs, or after graduating, trying to put myself together, and prepare for the next phase in life, or set of goals, otherwise like most people focused on the task at hand, or working my way toward jobs, grades, or marriage. You usually keep going in life, that's unless you F up in life, meaning end up in Rehab, AA meetings, Institutions, or put in Hospitals on Psychiatric Holds for Bipolar, Self-harm, or at Risk for Suicide. Its your responsibility to get help when you need help, maybe that's why I decided to go to law school, as someone who was usually sober, a good student, and athlete, I found that if I drank or tried drugs, and did not feel well, there really is no one to talk to about not feeling well, if the meds cant fix it, your friends cant fix you, means that you need help from someone other than friends or family, and especially not a boyfriend or any companion for that matter, teacher, boss, or stranger in life, that includes blogging. It seems that as soon as something is wrong with you, its like everyone except for you becomes immediately alarmed, notifying everyone around you, wondering about your condition, but no one actually goes out of their way to help you, rarely, shows up at you house, calls, or texts you, that's usually family. There are wanted interventions and unwanted interventions, interventions when you are at fault, and interventions when you are not well, and it is noticeable to others, and they take it upon themselves to hospitalize you. There is only so much questioning and embarrassment, you can take in life, and years to life to live, to overcome shame, reputational damage, and by what is said about you, affect how you are received by the rest of the world, its very disheartening. Know that one of the issues is your level of education, the smarter you seem to be, or the more education you have, the more is expected of you, meaning who you choose to like, date, talk to, interact with, friend, socialize with, if you choose people who are not as accredited as you in life, then that's how you will be judged, put down as though your issues in life, put them in harms way, seeing them as innocent to you as the more educated one, the more knowing one, the one who should be able to protect others from harm, and blame you for any mental health issues they endure as though you have a choice in what people think to hear "Leslie is in Law School and OJ is in Jail and it Looks Like Shes in Law School because OJ is in Jail. I took the LSAT 2006." When it comes to accepting you publicly in their lives, or talk to you in public as they talk to others, or even invite you places, and be treated as an equal by others, or those around them. That thing in common when two people meet, from different parts of your life, is a mutual acceptance of you, that lights them up, that's each knowing you differently, things about you, like its their job to take care of you, as though you cannot take care of yourself, a chore, that's somewhat disconcerting, its lovely when everyone meets, but not if it seems like an agreement about me, that I am lesser than, everyone else above me, when it comes to subjects about trying too hard, taking things too far, purpose, and to whom our chosen admirations are given to in life, as though we become who we admire in life, and then put down as though we are imitation of who around us resembles what we look like now. Most of the things you think are either too serious, too deep, too elaborate, or perhaps untrue ways of thinking things are happening in a way, if a negative outcome is thought to have been derived from what you think indicates reference to an existence of a negative vibe toward you. The reality, my reality, is peaceful, I make friends everywhere I go, I get along with everyone, Im not a loud mouth, I don't talk a lot, I am spoken to, Im photogenic, and Im friendly, nice to everyone I meet, I don't size people up, stare people down, give dirty looks, or ever get intimidated by others, feel less than anyone else in a room full of people, hold my head high. Just maybe not with the posture, stomach in, chin up, smile, light on my feet, shaking hands with everyone type of way, formal socially, but I do always dress appropriately, and if I don't like the way I look dress or sound, then I don't approach anyone, let alone like anyone for love.

You Can't Please Them All ...

You can't please them all, meaning more will always be expected of you, whether that's to make yourself happy, or to make another person happy in life, even at your best, expect that you may still not be good enough, and that there is always room for improvement. Part of the process of learning how to be well received by others, does require you to be aware of your strengths and weaknesses in life, however its not necessary that those facts about you be known to others. Online, a lot of information you share about yourself can be misused, mismanaged, misrepresented, tampered with, changed, without you knowing it, usually to generate a reaction from your audience without you knowing it, or understanding why, thinking you are doing all the right things and saying what is right, be treated different than you would be expected to be treated, as though you should be more in tune, know more about what others are in the know about, and become threatened to other peoples knowledge in life, don't be. Unfortunately as someone who grew up around someone who was publicly put on trial in life, you run the risk of being treated the same in your older years, something that your parents cannot shelter you from nor shield you from, public opinion, and poor judgment of someone who was once held in high regard among others loved, be treated differently by anyone new coming into their life, not comfortable with who they are, where they come from, who they know, and where they are at now in comparison, to how others are doing from their lives, be treated as less than compared to who their friends are and were. That happens, its not a big deal to me, to not be as respected as anyone else from my life, that seems to be an ongoing trend, whoever is more important, their sufferings, of graver importance, than someone of my stature being harmed reduced to "mental health issues" "addiction" "alcoholism" as though these are symptoms of an underlying disease such as "body image" "identity" "gay" "confidence" "love" "friendship" "likeability" as though I drank or did drugs for those reasons in order to get things in life, I lost everything doing those things in life, not being myself, letting loose in life. Its important to be remembered in the positive, not for the purposes of dying or thinking upon your death how you will be remembered, don't be motivated by getting things in life period, you'll likely wind up empty handed in life, and don't do things to communicate to others, a general response of being in the know about anything in life, as it relates to others manifestations of their fears, doubts, conclusions, or judgments about you or the guilt of others. Live life for yourself, and whether or not you are apart of the shared happiness among others, let no rejections or silent treatments of you, cause you to feel insulted, or react in a way that demonstrates a personal connection and therefore a personal feeling of insult, upon a distance created or maintained between you and any person you have met in life.

The Object of My Affection ...

The whole purpose of thinking highly of yourself is to feel good about yourself, without comparing yourself to others and running the risk of feeling poorly about yourself as compared to what others have in life, or based upon what others look like in life, think less of yourself. Its important to value yourself, and based upon your value in life, the time invested in your education and career, is what makes you of worth to another in a general sense, which has become an acceptable means of achieving and getting what you want out of life: job, career, success, and love. You cannot play God, controlling what goes on around you, in order to lead a better life for yourself, often times, the less you focus on others, the better off you'll be, spending more time on what is in front of you, and spend less time worrying about what you do not have control over in life, people, judgments, attitudes, and observations of you made by people looking at you and your life, as they see you, not as you see yourself. Its important to stay in motion, whenever trying to achieve any goals in life, which requires you to focus on yourself not upon others, you cannot get far in life, trying to measure up to standards, that you yourself cannot live up to on your own, nor be regarded individually as successful and of value, if you seem to be someone who imitates, emulates, or looks like a representation of someone or something that has already been done before, not the first of your kind, or the first representation of your own identity in life, a manifestation of the successes of others, as though success has been laid out for you in life, to follow suit, and walk through life, having been given tools in life, not someone who has gone out into the world, and learned tools for success on their own, by their own choices in life, not at the direction of others focused upon. No “Likes” are given to you in life, you either are something worth investing the time and energy on to read, and give acceptances to, with pride, or not something of importance to be read, understood, nothing confusing has ever made sense to anyone trying to understand or comprehend the work of others, the best work is beautiful on its face, and the energy of any given work product demonstrates that, not only making sense, but upon being processed, making sense to anyone processing what has been written. Where anyone's mind goes to next, is not in my control, that's not my responsibility to control any mind that wanders off topic, or on to others subjects upon reading what has been written, as though what has been written is about something else that it's not, or about someone from my life, being described, as though everything I have written is based upon experience, it's not, it's based upon how I see myself in the world, and how I have been able to adapt to my current situation no matter what my odds were in life, no matter how many friends I had, and no matter whether I was able to get a paid job or not, or be provided for in life, supported financially, I always keep going in life anyways, which is probably why I blog. Who you represent in life matters, who you connect to in life matters, but there will always be the age old question of who is influencing whose health and energy wise, the one writing in public, or the attentions given to them, who is supporting who, support goes both ways in the online world, and just as the reader may be affected by my writing, I am also too affected by who is reading my work, maybe there is no physical attachment to my body or to my mind, but it is my mind on paper, being connected to another human being, who I cannot see, do not know, and who is outside of my control. Why I always stay focused on myself, the conduct of my character, keep a disciplined schedule, and do not go out, do not socialize, do not drink, do not do drugs, do not do business with anyone, except by continuing my education to be a better writer, and provider of insights online, that both bring me peace and hopefully does not disturb the peace of others. As someone with experience being in monogamous relationships, not based on co-dependency, in which one or the other is manipulated to care for the other in order to get reassurances in life, no “Likes” are generated online, by anyone not deserving of attentions in life, you can easily monitor anyone online, and pass judgment on them, as being put together, organized, fit for mass production, or ready to be a public figure, those qualities about a person don't happen overnight, it takes many years to become known, respected, have positive rapport among others, not be viewed as a threat, not be in competition for followings or attentions taken away from other platforms containing audiences whose attention are of value to them to participate in and among their sites. There is a lot that goes into being online, and being successful, just like building trust within a monogamous relationship, that is focus on one, and focus on yourself, and that undivided attention paid to whoever you love or admire can be felt, around them whether or not you are presently with them, whether or not they are around others, that's the basics to establishing any bond, to any relationship you feel comforted by in life, apart of, that is not writing and blogging however. I am doing well because I keep my distance from others online, that's just my predisposition in life, it takes me awhile to open up to people, and overtime become more comfortable around others able to be myself, and light up, everyone is different in that respect. I'm the type of person in a relationship where people come and go as they please, friends, lovers, boyfriends, never making any demands upon anyone to be in my life, or to pay attention to me, as I am always preoccupied focusing on academics or working towards having a career. -This is my job, blogging on a website, my heart.

That Element of Hot ...

In reference to thinking flirting is “grose” stated in the last post, there is an element of hot, in which any woman, can be flirtatious, or jokingly come on to anyone in a playful way, and get away with flirting, with no offense being taken to it, I am not one of them. Whenever you have to think about or hesitate upon whether to like someone in life, usually it's not a match, or in cases where my picking meter is off, never take chances, especially in any business type of relationship, there will be a lot of people in life you will like and want to be close to, not all have the time to talk to you, so just be understanding that men can get better in life, and are looking for someone more put together in life, that is the mistake of liking someone, thinking that they are the answer to your problem or can provide you with the type of stability you need in life, I used to be someone who was stable and lived alone, independent of others, with no problems of my own, on talking terms with everyone, no history of addiction or drug use, it seems like the unhappier you become, and after being dumped in life, is what results, an unhappiness within, a break, after a breakup, why it's called a breakup, because it takes a certain amount of time to get someone out of your system to which you have had sexual relations with that is physically touching of bodies, resulting in a physical attachment, internally to which is torn or upsets or is broken upon detachment, that's from sex, why its very dangerous to be physically bonded with someone, when you are unstable or if you get mental health issues, in my case stop dating, because of my physiology and mental health, and getting voices post sexual relations with others, a physical feeling of being gone or disorganized, usually follows from drinking and drug use, not sex per se, but always be careful of who you love or choose to love, and give and receive love from, as it may have an affect on your own self-esteem in life, why not to give your body up to freely and willingly to others, unless in a trusted relationship to which both can feel safe, that doesn't mean confide in one another, that's not for therapy or psychiatric issues, discussion of with a sexual partner, be mindful of their psyche too, and their mental health, that's not what relationships are for, not physical bond can be made where a discomfort lies, such as in the talking of your problems (usually a turn off) or in a questioning of self or others (a sign of mental illness) that causes discomfort to others, to be in question or to put others in question, so juts be cognizant of one anothers spaces mentally.

Feeling Symptomatic ...

It can be really disappointing to say the least when youre feeling symptomatic when it comes to bipolar. --While everyone else thinks its a product of addiction, or a symptom of "multi-genre writing" as learned at CU, whatever it is that causes one to go off tangent, and then the next day, go what the heck was I thinking, can be very disconcerting to me and highly embarrassing, however at the time, not understand that the content is semi-judgmental, and small-minded, let alone, possibly insulting to whomever is reading and thinking it about them, which is what usually happens when someone expresses themselves, and as heard if not understood, automatically causes a discomfort to whomever is reading, as though one should know better, or be smart enough to understand when they are making sense and if not, what is causing them to not make sense, sometimes we ourselves don't understand the root causes for our own illnesses in life, but I believe it has much to do with your thoughts, and placement in life, confidence, self-esteem, feelings, senses, understanding, hearing, deficits, intelligence, IQ, education, tolerance, temperament, mood ... the list goes on, just remember to be human, and if the mistake can be corrected then allow it to be made, you don't have to do all things with compassion, which is why they label people "addicts" and train you "not to care about them." That's one dilemma anyone faces who undergoes a transition from addition, or alcoholism, back to "sanity" or wellness, some don't make it back to as bright as they once were, and some come back with disabilities, they must suffer from for the rest of their lives, exactly how well do you have to be to make it in this world, very well, so just hold tight, and do your best, its not over until its over, and there is no use giving up in life, simply because you sound out there, or stupid, or think the wrong things in life, its totally okay, so long as you are not causing harm to yourself or others for thinking in that way, probably why I think flirting is stupid and grose, and was so offended when done to my boyfriends, anyways, and while trying not to be that way toward others spouses if known, you kind of build a resilience to it overtime, and when you finally loosen up, and stop being so offended by others, you begin to see the light, that life is short, and to allow people to be nice to each other, and that that is not cheating for them to do so, even if theyre making sex jokes, that's just humor, look at my jokes, theyre no funnier. --I was hoping to pave the way for acceptances through writing, and eventually book writing and write some research papers I owe FEMA Students, who I signed up with online, and took a few courses, relevant to right now, I highly recommend their courses, theyre very thorough and give great helpful pointers, and anyone can sign up and take their courses online and submit research proposals to them. ---Learn to forgive, remember to stay honest, and so glad youre here with us today, please watch out for your friends, remind them to take good care of themselves, and be kind to others in your surroundings, and don't be too uptight and judgmental, things are really sensitive as i is, so maybe nows a good time to lighten up within reason, and stop offending each other so much, or being pushy about beliefs, and be present.

Learn to Settle ...

Ive never gambled before in my life, but nows a good time to learn to settle before your defense go up, that usually sends you right back to where you started before you began to feel better. Theres a certain give and take when it comes to happiness, happiness with yourself, happiness around others, it all depends on how you feel inside, usually a manifestation of our own unhappiness are taken out on others through blames, when we do not feel good, or think that its because of the other, put yourself first. What can you do to feel better? And secondly what can you do to make others feel better. The age old advice "putting others before yourself." That's maybe one of the reason they raise us to be that way. You cannot please all, that's not what being a perfectionist is about, but if you are concerned with your likeability, then yes the more you can get along with the better, not everyone measures their satisfaction with themselves based upon what other people think, how other people are around them or toward them, or based upon how they feel around others. I thought about this today ... jealously ... what is it? I was thinking its not feeling good around others, when others are feeling better than you, noticing that, and though maybe its because others feel good, and if they do not feel good seeing someone else feeling good, feel less than, that could be one form of jealousy, manifesting itself in people who while watching others, feel less than, or not themselves worse off. I was told today outside 7/11 "I hope you find what you need in life," after bumming a cigarette to someone standing outside of my car, waiting for me to get out, wove to him twice to go away and then didn't make eye contact with him, and gave him a cigarette anyways when he asked me. (You're so cheap they reply, ya probably now). There are so many unhappy people in the world I thought to myself (Note: Not in reference to #BLM at all), I think when people are unhappy, its about them looking at you, or thinking you have more than them, and then them becoming unhappy having seen you, and your confidence, and feeling good, and wanting to feel good themselves, only issue is that you don't make them feel good, and they don't want you to make them feel good, but they want someone else or around them or something to happen to them, that makes them feel good in the same way, or to have the same things in life, to feel good, to no longer be threatened by someone with more than. This brings up, me on IMDb (make the "b" small, I made the "d" small, thanks #IMDB). I think if youre not in the profession, it can be insulting for someone trying to be of influence within the profession, that's one issue, also advocacy, how can anyone help anyone who cannot help themselves, that's a typical quote to "if you cannot help yourself you cannot help others" or "love yourself" or "how can you love another if you do not love yourself" this really makes sense to me, especially with self-harm, hard to love, hard to give love, and hard to receive love, and even when you get love, cannot be repaired, and meds can fix that void either, it's the self-satisfaction issue, to me, it's a happiness with oneself, call it success, is that really a requirement to happiness, yes in Los Angeles it is, a paycheck, friends, a house, and a nice car usually does the trick, and if you cannot afford that, means that you need to work harder.

Its Not a Walk in the Park ...

Foreign relations are not a walk in the park, and if found guilty of anything, carrying a record on your plate, makes you less of an equal representative, of your country, than you were prior to having been treated as such. If you have ever committed a wrong and been punished for it, its to set you aside in society, as being rightfully heard, as having standing, for your disabilities or ailments, and treated as though based upon your own conduct or of your own doing or making, that is how people in society are treated, whether important, or unimportant, and on the pure basis of their importance, set a priority in life to care for, recognize, understand, or comprehend any statements they have made, as to the good character or themselves or others, sometimes left best as ignored, so as to not waste anyone's time, with concern for what they think, in place of a concern thought for everyone, with necessary exclusion of their needs or worries, from any equations concerning the wellness of all, this is why people are put on meds, and labeled as disabled or not, its about whos under whos care and why, and based upon the care that one is under, judged, and judged based upon responsibilities born to those in the company of someone who is found guilty, to automatically find them not guilty, should anything have happened to them in life, prior to them getting in trouble or after them getting in trouble, living is all about care, and its sometimes hard to live life with others caring less about you ... just remember that just because others care less for you, does not mean to stop caring for oneself, or for other eventually, if you make it back to normal, and are understood and appreciated later in life, whether for a good deed, though done so for the purposes of rehabilitating ones character, or whether out of the goodness of your heart, helping others, be cognizant that others will be less likely to hear you as helpful no matter how well liked you are, known, or successful in life, and depending upon how you feel in life, to another is how you will be treated, its based upon what is felt upon knowing you, situates you as among or apart from the general whole of cares when it comes to wellness, and self betterment, not all who are better are well enough to be better among others, and some are better apart because of the fact that they are not well among, others who perceive them to not be well by their disability, or by who has been carried in their company, thought of as less than in life, not popular, not of high status, not of high socio-economic stability in life, or having come from a high earning family, thought to have it made in lfie, to the extent that their general worries are not cared for. So while my advice may be helpful, does not mean that its because there exists a bond let alone a loving bond or bond of friendship or trust between two sides, nationality wise, or country wise, its just whatever makes sense, in a non aggressive sense, no offense taken to advisement.

Finding that Special Someone ...

It's a hit or miss when it comes to love, I never really found anyone totally devoted to loving me until I was 21, that was my first bring home boyfriend, golf with my Dad, accepted by my family, at family dinners boyfriend. Perhaps he was the one. Most are simply just not that interested, interested in hooking up, but for the long term, usually doesn't work out beyond that point, some are fun for the moment, to like, but not to love long term, most just want love, but don't need it everyday, not ready to settle down, in the way most do, such as to spend the rest of their life with someone, I guess that's what they think spending time with you means, and why hesitant to, if they don't see a future with you, why cant we just agree, that we don't see a future in each other, but it would be fun to spend more time together types of relationships, why don't they exist, why is everything forever. As I have gotten older, I have noticed that the more time I spend working on myself, the easier relationships become, you really have to have something going for you in life, like a job, in order to be in any long term type of relationship, I guess because I was in law school for so long, it made it difficult for them to size me up long term, either thinking I was not good enough for them long term, or on a rare basis them thinking that they were not good enough for me, and like all friends remind you, you can do better, or that there must be someone better out there for you, we are always told. Don't ever get down on yourself, because you have no one to love, and while there are plenty of people to love online, and pen pal with on social media, that's still not the solution, most of the closest bonds I've had, the most communications with have been online, that's a relationship without the physical intimacy, but there is still love a bond that exists, meaning, the other person wanting something from you, but not expecting you to provide that to them in real life, or online, and then there are those who just want to see what you look like not composed, and those are usually the hardest types of people to get out of your life, the ones who don't respect who you are, or who could possibly see you in a negative light having taken picture like that, and then subject you to harms looking like that's what you wanted, when it was what they wanted, men want different things than women, while I like hugs and conversations, there is a price to pay for those types of intimacies in life, where you do have to give up some of your soul in order to be provided with those things in life, love and friendship. In real life I always found it difficult to find anyone super interested in me, it feels like the men expect to be chased, as having good jobs, and earning high incomes, think they deserve, so unless you're really into them does it last for the long haul, you do have to do a lot of waiting, and if you set your mind to it, you can definitely nab a guy in the right department, depending upon what type of guy your shopping for in life, and sometimes you can't choose, and love who loves you, I have found that my picking meter tends to be off, I'm not sure if most women are like me, but the relationships that do last are by the ones who court me, and really want to be with me, whether I'm ready for it or not, sometimes you have to compromise and set your independent needs aside and date, life is much too short, left waiting, its better to be loved than not at all.

Don't Pick on People ...

When you grow up and have your own company one day, then your input is valued, after having built something of your own you have had to sustain and keep afloat, with likes, and a following, not just be a trend, or someone who blew up on social media for one post, or one video. It takes a long time, to be able to maintain a following, it has taken me years to get the hang of it, and to build something that is resistant to not only my own stresses, but hopefully helps others to build a resistance to things that stress them out about life. I guess here is for conversations about what we think, and what we say, and the difficulty one experiences when there is too much held within, that a literal pain can be felt in speaking, that's not wanting to speak. What does that mean? I'm not sure I'm not a doctor, but I know during the times when I have been carried away, literally carried away by a stretcher, taken to hospitals from the ER, I was not only not feeling well, but probably not thinking well too, that's a good lesson to learn in life, to know your limits, and to understand and know the limits of others, when it comes to furthering your understanding of life, not everyone will be as interested bombarded by the same concerns you have about life, if they venture too far off the beaten path of normal. I've found that 90% of the time when I assume I am being belittled or made fun of to my face, its not that they think I'm cute and do so, maybe its because they think that I think I'm cute, or trying to be cute, and not really cute inside, or a nice person, I think we are all capable of flipping out, and being taken off the cliffs of sanity in life, what I call a bipolar episode, when you go absolutely haywire, like a tantrum, and simply cannot deal with life, as though things are so complicated that you don't have the power to put into words how you are feeling, never forget your education and ability to be your own voice of reason during those times and journal. -I remember the first time I learned not to bully, was in elementary school playing dodge ball, with an overweight kid, throwing balls at us, and started teasing him, he ran across the court at me, and my friend put him in a headlock. Later in the school year, the same kid was carried up the stairs to the principals office, over the shoulder of our Cambodian PE teacher. That's how I learned not to make fun of anyone, because I got attacked when doing so. Similarly online, be cognizant of the same competitive energies people have concerning their smarts and the way they look, not wanted to be taunted or tormented, as though its ever deserved, or a retaliatory effort to put another in their place, as though they have brought that harm upon themselves. We don't all stay after school with the guys to learn this lesson, but I did. I'm sorry if ever being online with a jazzy pen name, ever made anyone feel under attack or criticism, in life as coming from me, as though I was trying to be smart with people, and not actually smart myself, via my own merits, there is a difference between someone smart, critiquing you and someone who is not as intelligent as you critiquing you as though they have had the same education and background to do you a disservice in life, as though you intend to do anyone else a disservice in life, by your pen name. Or as though your pen name is to some admission, of any wrongdoing on your part or the part of others, with concern directly to your own life story.

A Small Mind vs. A Big Mind ...

Whats the difference between being small minded and having a big mind? I woke up thinking the same thing too, and did a little research. According to merriam-webster.com, being small-minded means: “1 : having narrow interests, sympathies, or outlook. 2 : typical of a small-minded person : marked by pettiness, narrowness, or meanness small-minded conduct.” [1] When you’re small minded you typically have a “narrow perspective [that is] very firm, [or have an] unchangeable opinion on things.” [2] Being “tolerant of those with different opinions or experiences” therefore requires one to have an “[un]biased view of the world.” [3] Perhaps what being so-called worldly is about, is that why people travel? So, someone who is worldly is someone “having or showing devotion to the affairs and interests of this world.” [4] Now that makes sense. Which bring us to what does Big Minded mean? A “big-mind” means something completely different, referring to “the Zen tradition, an awareness of reality that transcends the merely personal or subjective.” [5] So why are we having this discussion? Because to me, being small minded is a criticism taken of someone who is not viewed as intelligent, who does not speak to the masses, with insights or with the amount of care that demonstrates that they carry a big picture perspective and therefore their interests and what they have to say, will or can or is accommodating the best interests of the whole of people, not just directed to a specific organization of people, or class of people, beneficial to all, I guess would be the goal of blogging, to cater to more interests than just my own. Which leads us to our next question ... Why is being small-minded wrong? When it comes to success “successful people tend to approach life with an open mindset” versus someone who is small-minded or narrow minded, does the opposite, with concern only for themselves “at the first sign of disagreement ... would rather die than be wrong” whereas someone who is open-minded is “eager to learn and willing to be wrong.” [6] According to fs.blog, “the ability to change your mind is a superpower,” to them it’s the difference between moving forward and being sent backwards in life [7]. I can agree ... so many times, when I am worried what others think, I hesitate, and upon hesitating erase, or make mistakes in thinking, which wind up leaving me feeling embarrassed in life, it took awhile for me to just let go, and go with the flow, and no matter what is said, allow myself to change naturally throughout the learning process, its hard to get started as a perfectionist, you are constantly questioning yourself, wanting to sound right and if you sound wrong, retract your steps and just feel like giving up completely when there is no window for you to grow, just be patient, I would tell myself now. Ive learned so much through blogging. So why is being small-minded wrong? I just went off on a tangent. Excuse the elaboration. According to quora.com, “unless [a] person has a verified developmental disability ... unable to learn ... [that its] a choice – of living in [the] dark ages and not knowing anything.” [8] I guess there is some truth to that, but how and why is that wrong? Isnt that just being sheltered? To me there is nothing wrong with being sheltered, some people just cant handle knowing it all. Okay so here is where it cuts to the chase on wikihow.com, “they often think they’re right and everyone else is wrong. Narrow-minded people can be difficult to deal with in relationships, work settings, and other situations.” [9] Basically they can be viewed as "toxic." I guess that makes sense, when I think of an addict, who thinks they are not doing anything wrong until it is brought to the attention of others, and in defiance, don’t recognize that they are not well, and hard to get through to or change. So as an overall deduction, I would say that your ability to change and be open determines your likeability and success when it comes to getting along with others, so don’t be small-minded, and instead carry on an attitude in life that is open and perhaps big-minded as suggested by the Zen following, so that you can transcend your happiness outward into the world, and similarly be happy for others, and create environments of trust not conflict.

Extreme Discomfort ...

There's always a clash of ideologies when it comes to figuring out whos in charge, why anyone is in charge, or while making allegations as to who is in charge, becomes disgruntled, as to the direction and focus of any company, or place of residence, assuming that it is by a misled direction that things have come to pass, or not go right. In my mind, there is no such thing as being put together wrong, the man up top will always be God, and if you have an attitude, concerning how things are assembled, and by your opinions, do not agree with any assembly of ideas, or understandings, other than your own, well that's not keeping an open mind, as to what is a right or proper form of discovery, or delivery of insights to help aide or assist others in moving forward in life, or steering clear of subjects not concerning them, not make all things encompassing as being related to one another, that would be injuring well built systems of thought in favor of a system cyclically built upon a series of private understandings, as a means to make sense overall of everything, as though truths are contingent upon knowing, and that any system of thought of not knowing, is somehow flawed by comparison to those who do know more, or do know more about, from their own viewpoint of how the world works, enough to put you down in life, as not knowing enough, or knowing less about life, simply because of how much money you don't make, based upon where you live, what you think, and by who you were or were not close to or friends with, judge you, as though you're some kind of tagalong in life, to the successes of others, without a mind of your own, to be well deciphered on your own merits, the meaning of your life, not as it relates to the lives of others made. Call it control, but people have a serious need of control when it comes to mindsets of others, with regards to what they think is happening, what has happened, and what they know or have come to understand as happening, so as to not include anyone who they think is contributing to things going wrong, and it is by that understanding of anyone that people are excluded, from importance, or further interpretation as relevant to solutions, and only related to causes. It seems to be the case that either I am uncomfortable, or someone who does not like me becomes uncomfortable, to that there is no solution, once there is discomfort on either end, it just means that people do not get along, and by one another's condition, either are affected.

In Rare Moments ...

I guess that's just a part of life, call it beautiful, seeing yourself in others, or seeing yourself as becoming like others in life, and then there is just being yourself, and being found relatable to others who may admire you, and wish to be more like you in life, admiration is a beautiful quality to have about oneself, to not just be about oneself in life, wanting admiration alone. There are two influences in life: (1) older to younger and (2) younger to older. I believe that the root cause of older to younger influences, is people's natural tendency to take others under their wings in life, it's an automatic take charge attitude that someone older has over someone younger, like a pre-disposition that gets acquired upon interaction, thinking their years about them make them smarter or more knowledgeable than someone younger than them, and think that leadership is needed over them. Then there is an influence of younger to older, that's upon watching, either deciding to mentor others based upon their own experiences, and empowering one another, by each other's pre-dispositions in life, to help one another, learn from each other, and to allow the other to bloom, the younger one, grow up, looking up to others. Who knows how and why this occurs between people, I think it's just natural that as we want to be better in life, make more money, that we can't help but learn from those who are successful, learn from their mistakes, pitfalls, downs, ups, and just want to be like, in order to have like in life, there's gotta be a better way than imitating or emulating someone you admire in order to become like in life, I'm sure it doesn't have to be that way, not at all, be the same as. Then there's finding yourself, and looking back on your life with pride, like looking back through a spiral notebook of notes, or journal entries, something that took a long time to make is always valuable for some reason, without fail, it just seems to possess the natural quality of detail, that is expected of anything made with care or made slowly, which overtime becomes of value. Just like things become of value, so do people, and this is what admiration is all about in my mind.

Credits for Wellness ...

7/26/2020

Who should you credit for your own wellness? Why not everyone for that matter. Arent we a product of all our interactions, doesn't it make sense that someone would feel insulted from you in life, if no dedication was made in their honor, for having taken care of you, wouldn't a complaint about anything be disconcerting to them, let alone, insulting, think about it. At what point does one start crediting others for their wellness, and at what point does it become unnecessary to make no mention to who has helped you, or who has enabled you, to be the person you are today, who made you? I think my pen name is a good example of who you are made by, yourself, or others, or at the bottom line your parents, if you really want to get testy and defensive about things, or others claiming to have contributed to your ideals, energy, personality, as though you are a product or a "poser" of the attractions manifested and created by others in their lives, that you only are assumed to have emulated, or become yourself. Is it really something worth worrying about, shouldn't we all be different anyways, and shouldn't we just accept that people from similar places in life are going or are alike, is that such a bad thing, or anything to inflict harms or insults about and to, just be mindful. There are many times in life when you will be thinking things are happening that are not, and everytime you allude to others having influenced you in the negative, or caused you harm, or harm to your psyche, be aware of who is in your life, if no one, than no one not from your life, ever wants to be mentioned, having left your life, as having been of significance to you in your life, that's just a process of recovery and breakups, that people not in your life, generally want no mention at all. That's to not be credited for better or worse, what happens to you, and to remain separate from you, as though a mention, creates some shared identity they don't want to be associated to in life, all insults aside, understand that when you are insulted, that's no ones fault but your own for having interpreted things in that way, and collecting all your thoughts, and applying them to people, as though things were done to you in life, not a by product of your own choices in life. As the saying goes "cant we all get along" ... if its not about others, then say so, and if it is about others, then be clear enough, that as applied to themselves no insult is taken back to them, or to who they know, as having been an example, of a hurt you felt, or experienced.

"There's no place like home" ...

Theres something unique and special about your setting, being in the familiar, that sense of peace you feel upon returning to your place of rest, new destination, reuniting with people you know, seeing friends, going back to normal, starting over on a new screen, that seems to bring all the comfort back to any situation in life, where you feel uneasy, usually fixes things once you get there in life. File this one under #worldpeace. We all go through adjustment phases in life, ever notice when youre feeling lost in life, you seem to always focus on the wrong things, and then get corrected, its like your power to be drawn to things in life, gets mismanaged by your emotional well being, and everything that feels right for you, is actually causing harm to you, and like all interventions a separation occurs, between something you love and displaced in situations that are unfamiliar to you, call it addiction, when you have no sense of purpose in life, and no sense of comfort, any new place seems just as homey as any another, while expecting less in life, and as you stand in your shell, remember this always, told to "keep my head down" and that that was the way out of an uncomfortable situation that was very scary to me, hitting survival mode, which kept me calm, instead of panic and feel powerless to my circumstances in life, that's one example, of being at peace, even if youre not where you want to be in life, and not allowing your surroundings to control you, or dictate your continued direction in life, down or up, always being in control of who you are, and what you want to be in life, and not become something you are not. There was a character from the movie "The Wizard of OZ" up at the local gas station, for awhile, a movie that features the famous quote "Theres no place like home" recited by the main character Dorothy in red sparkly shoes.

Time to Fill the Blank Space in the Air ...

Always do things with a good heart, I guess the main point is to feel apart of, and well if you haven't figured that much out yet, don't be too quick to jump to conclusions, concerning the past, what was known, or unknown then, and known now, and whether as known, a combination of what is known could have resolved the past, so that we wouldn't be thinking about it now, have some care other than your own understanding in life, most of life will not make sense to you, especially as lived by another, that's just apart of life, thinking that you know better, or better equipped to tell the story of another which is one motivation being suggested as upon knowing me and me being in a public light, and by what stories Im attached to or people, that that spread the wrong animosities in life, toward any specific gender, type of people, or depth of knowledge and skill when it comes to managing emotions with regards to the unknown in life. Everyone is entitled to question whomever it is they are receiving informations from, we were all raised to be critical thinkers. -I know when I first got started blogging by mentions and hastags Im assuming people thought I was in over my head, or looked or appeared to have some personal responsibility as to the causes for misinterpretations having taken a poster down, as though my action messed up some sequence of events thought or believed to have been transpired based upon me writing on Twitter and picture in my phone. Its always a tremendous loss, when talent disappears, when people lose motivations in life, and when people become unhappy or lose faith in life, and for whatever reasons made fun of and thought deserved and purposeful within a family song, its wrong to judge me as having been a weak link to someone of a notable family in history, resulting in the death of his great grandpa, Dr. Michael E. Debakey, I met his Father once, and Mother who works for Red Cross, which is why I later applied to FEMA Students and submitted future research studies to compliment, my hashtagging efforts, and website building, to get conversations going to help keep people alive. -Based on my own experiences, when I (1) give up (2) become frustrated over an interpretation (3) feel powerless (4) think something cant change (5) become fearful of what others think, that's giving my power away, and not allowing myself to be heard, too scared to talk or work.

Choosing to Be a Website ...

There comes a time when it becomes inappropriate to share to anyone who thinks that from their vantage point, their view of the big picture is what makes them smarter, or victim, to anyone who seems to not understand, complains, feel pressurized, or compelled to investigate, question, or be concerned with anothers passing. That's not guilt. That's simply checking in with everyone, and sharing how you feel, not everyone will feel or think the same way you do about life, and chances are the more separate you are from others, the less in tune, you are assumed to be with reality, not a verifiable sounding stone from which to base interpretations in life, past, present, or for the future sake, explain what just happened around now. Such losses in esteem, can only be assumed to be as a result of (1) disrespect (2) non-compliance (3) seriousness (4) unethical application of ones personal story (5) use of someone elses story to tell your own story. When any of the 5 things occur, we have what you call a trade secret violation, meaning something that as expressly known about someone, is being used to paint a picture without them knowing, and not to the benefit of the one to whos story is being shared by another, as a means to share their vantage point, as being unique while discounting the vantage point, life, and livelihood of anyone they do not feel is important based upon who they are talking to, who they are friends with, who they are trying to help, who has helped them, who has imitated whom and why, and whether who is being supported has anything to do with the rest of all things related to any particular person, as a solution for understanding life. I chose to be a website to not overwhelm my friends, and chose to write on Twitter, because it wasn't a very popular space, had 2000 real followers mostly professionals and people I found along the way during my time spent on Twitter, but eventually got "carried away" meaning what was being shared fluctuated from comprehensible to not comprehensive #enough.

War is War ...

Seldom do we share what our views are upon war, and most likely the causes for others immediate disturbance upon meeting you or knowing where you come from or by who you know or what you know in life, think that you have an easier understanding of life than most. There is no way around war, its for causes either not supported or supported that people continue to make progress toward those goals in life, whether others are on board with them or not, relentless so to speak in their endeavors in life, that's not an academican or a blogger, in the pursuit of circulating knowledgeable and beneficial truths to which all can comprehend in a better way without manifesting themselves into hate, that's coming from the viewpoint of someone new, to contributing to general understanding about war, cases, and consequences, of knowing one another. I think earlier I was preyed upon being watched more closely which I do not feel now, looking for some cause or reason to argue that (1) Im at risk of harm to myself and that by (1) being or risk of harm to myself that that equated to (2) putting others at risk of harm if I am putting myself at risk of harm and that upon them knowing me that puts them at risk of harm whether they know whether I am putting myself at risk of harm or not, making them victim. Do you understand how difficult that is for me to comprehend causes or circumstances for others claiming victim to me, as though its okay for them to do whatever they want, get upset, retaliate without me knowing it, as though I do anything to anyone without them knowing it I would never do such a thing, as soon as I studied CSPAN I distanced myself socially from everyone and romantically, barely talking to anyone, and doing nothing but work on finishing my LLM got into another law school, and now graduating, after having freed myself from unwanted controversies in life, or setbacks, caused by any violence for that matter, and whether or not by those violent attacks resulting in death to anyone, myself included, whether or not anyone is trying to relate my story to the story of anyone else in leadership, is sorely mistaken that I would ever think twice or more than is necessary upon anyone else other than myself. Someone who is trying to be successful, not important, successful, is someone who is focused on themselves, there is a reason for that, its not just a quality about someone that you can fake, imitate, or see and copy and repeat in your own life, a demeanor, talent, or way to smarts that's popularly traveled among others. While others are busy working their way around you and through their own lives and insights without you dropping any hints as though you are aware of others portrayals of a larger picture and trying to include you in it without your permission, and without having coded yet to the masses, is simply trying to pre-establish a means for others to be okay with themselves as related to your hardships, free others from blame, while subject you to negative inquiry or understandings in life, that's to not be accepted as you are, to be looked at in a perplexed way, or to be treated as ordinary, unimportant, or deserving of having your head messed with, that is that takeaway or the memory, from having met someone, and something that they have said that didn't make sense you then, remembered, and later made sense to you or not later, usually doesn't make sense later anyways, just an annoyance to remember. But anything you say, as in memory of anyone who has passed that's what gets fixated on as having some importance as to your demeanor, as though you are a fake representation of who has passed, and not someone to be proud of equally, as having represented who your parents were, or what they had to offer to world, before tragedy. Whenever there is tragedy, there is an infliction of guilts, that an unwillingness to accept ones own fears about things, and instead displaces that anger, and resentment toward someone else who is felt to have been more deserving of the responsibilities to care for someone, who is no longer here, and not allow acceptance to take hold of anyone who is not deemed nor should be held responsible for any losses occurring to anyone, who while under the care of another suffers hardships or incurs losses, as being among, coordinated with, or communicating via an upper level of communications as being about something other than what is directly being spoke about, as though its okay to dismember the words of another, read into the words of another present or past, in order to build trust of them, as though they are or are not speaking in their most natural form, of the word speaking to others, without hinting, or any denominating any unwanted tones or words, that would get anyone to think about anything else other than the topic being presently discussed. -Obsession is not the key to success therefore, and in fact is the route to most failures in life, which explains why people who fixate on any particular facts or memories in life, as judged as having an "obsession" someone who thinks: (1) around a thought, memory, or set of words not their own (2) and two tries to derive meaning from those words or memories and not from their own life (3) thinking to better others understandings of anothers, as spokesperson or a more knowledgeable base for inquiry, understanding, recollection, insight, or brainpower, concerning the intelligences of another, not based upon their own lives intelligence derived. That's hurting the normalcy from which information is exchanged, to which an uneven exchange occurs to the recipient leaving the giver drained, without mercy, viewed as "weak minded" if any information seems so redundant on its face, that it looks like someone cant get over or hasn't gotten over anything past, and then to further label someone who cant get over something past, as someone who reacts and responds similarly, and (4) toward people those understandings arrive, that's wrong to assume that someone who is focused on trying to figure out their own lives, while under the assessment of others, is being judged without them knowing it, and before being given the opportunity to explain whatever it is that needs explanation for further insight or understanding. So don't focus on any one particular set of facts in life, not when it comes to understanding others, that's not a Pulitzer, nor a Nobel to take and then balance in ones own favor, a set of inquiries or positive judgements, and then take away from the betterment of all. Sometimes too much negative interpretation can run foul, just as obsessions are capable of running afoul, in terms of (1) whats important (2) whos important and (3) whos detested.

Teams in Life ...

There is a certain admirability that is given to those who are successful without question, standing alone in a room, noticeable to most, and for some trait that holds them up to a high standard in life, higher than most, not by their upbringing solely, or by who they have known comes across or come to know of in life, been close to, but have an identity all their own, to which others can know and appreciate, but that they value themselves, well enough to have reached their fullest potential during their time on earth, and for that they are not mistaken as being something they are not, not unlikeable, or problematic, that is unless situated on a team different than others in life, and that's where the battle starts. All references aside, generally words are not used, at this point in ones writing career unless to give a positive insight as to the well being of others, winning or not winning in life, no matter whos side has been taken to an issue, however relevant "winning" as a quote was in the level of importance it played to an attorney who defended two clients, and one sat in jail while I was a law student. There is so much credit to give to the past, wouldn't it be a waste of motivation to live for now, having credited everyone past for anything now that has come to fruition, or for what has manifested itself within each person, as the times have changed, no two times are alike, and while youd like to think that its by the opening of doors to issues, that current problems amount to what has passed previously in history, you are once again wrong. Image is so important, and if hearing my story, without enough detail, or as explained by me, doesn't sit well or seem important to you, that means I am not of influence to you, not important to you, and not consequential to your outlook, or meaning derived from your life, there is a wrong connotation of someone who is a blogger, that all are trying to look or appear as "influencers" in life. That's just not understanding better social graces in life, that there is and will always be a certain standard to be maintained when it comes to photography and filming and video, to look and appear tastefully to most, as one would never archive any moments about another's from their life, or without them knowing, that portrayed them as anything else other than human, then again some people just pry until they get what they want, an explanation of mental health issues, or to test to see if one is mentally ill, and there is always those who size you up in life, pre-diagnose you, or diagnose you in observance of others, thinking that you are the cause for the disturbances to others mental health wise, as though it's by your life as lived, that has been disruptive to the comprehensions of others, no one ever takes the side of anyone, who brings anyone unwanted attentions to the mix. And it's not because of who you are that makes you important it's because of what you have to say, that makes you worthy knowing or hearing from in life, everyone thinks they are important that's apart of life, and my importance to myself, and significance of the life I have lived and what I have been through, may not be impressive to you, especially if compared to anyone more successful than me, nor is that my drive in life, to be as successful as, or because others around me successful, look or appear as someone who thinks they are entitled to the same successes in life, and therefore a turn off to others, as though it hasn't taken me years of writing online, and by proper distribution of my work product been granted with likes and acceptances from others, no accommodations required for likeability to take its toll, on hard work and effort shown by someone who cares, genuinely, not as a matter of taking a side counter to the causes in part for which someone who has been jailed, is assumed to be connected to the stresses or strains currently being faced by anyone who is experiencing mental health issues, as though associated to any one's family in life. -What is success a measure of? Conformity to standards or norms of excellency, and what defines excellency, -a measure beyond the basic smarts of most, to be envied, adored, or idolized?

Don't Put Yourself Down in Life ...

The less you put yourself down in life, the less you give way for others, to take it upon themselves to explain your discomforts in life, or even worse argue that there was always something about you, that they knew was special about you, and thought that that something special about you meant "a secret" and if a secret, that concerned your sexuality, gender, identity, mental health, wants, cares, or needs in life, in such a derogatory sense, no one should ever be sized up in life, based upon how they identify, who with, and whether by who they identify with give reasonable cause to judge someone, as having some kind of deficit, which is later related or fruit for relation as to: (1) causes (2) when (3) and for how long was it known. To me "gay" is a sexual attraction to the same gender as oneself, occurring upon the exposure of your body or upon the exposure of another person's body to your eyes, which you can readily identify as being translated within to some kind of sexual need, or inferiority as to a quality or trait you are lacking, and by being attracted to the same sex, want to be closer to that person in the same way you have desired to be close to a man your whole life, that's gay to me, as identified to me. It's not a fun identity, once it gets disclosed and "when disclosed" as being about you (and though deserved), because others think that they are doing you a service in life by coming out for you, as though you need help or any favors in life, as they have identified something about you, that you have not even thought about yet, especially since you have only had boyfriends. Not only does that do someone a disservice in life, to identify a person's sexuality for them, but you interfere with their choice in life, to identify themselves as they want to be identified and to whom they wish to be identified with, and for what types of attractions they seek to attract in life, for sexual pleasure be judged, as being labeled "gay" that a girly name for a company was chosen to attract women, as though you do not identify as girly yourself having been a law student and meticulous notetaker margin writer and highlight and underlined passages in your textbooks. How insulting. And to view your stats as whether accomplishing your goal to (1) fit in or (2) attract and by what you are attracting argue, that it's by what you attract that you are given choices in life, and that it's purposeful, the gifts you are given in life. Well if I was not born, then I would not have choices in life, and I have chosen to be straight, absent minded any confusions along the way, and by what causes for attraction occurred along the way, to negate any later argument, that gay is some kind of defense to jealousy, as though one has a quality about them, they seek to negate in addition to blaming women for any other women becoming confused or attracted to them, as though I am not attractive myself, a woman, and as though feelings going both ways, can run the risk of normal misinterpretation. And that that type of misinterpretation occurs, after a "gay" judgment of you has been made.

When You're Wrong You're Wrong ...

In today's day and age this happens all the time, in the form of saying the right things, and always with caution write online, hoping not to say the wrong things, and run the risk of being ostracized simply for sharing a less popular opinion of things. We've all said things we regret, none of which we expect to come back and bite us later in life, yet again, you cannot control what other people think and how they process what you have written, that is just something that you will have to learn to let go of during the process of writing online. In fact one website shinetext.com suggests that we start "get[ting] more comfortable being wrong." [1] This article describes the pain and embarrassment associated with being wrong, reminding us that it's all apart of the learning process, that we may not always be right, and how easy it is to become defensive upon receiving critique. [2] In order to overcome any embarrassment associated with being wrong this article suggests that in order to "avoid failure and maintain a sense that we are worthy [as those who are right]" We need to be wary of which "emotional habits" we have maintained over the years, that may render otherwise cordial professional relationships toxic, meaning to "our interactions with other people." [3] What does this mean? Don't wait until you get something wrong, to be told that you are wrong. This requires you to be proactive in any professional or romantic endeavor, knowing that it's okay to ask questions, and it's okay to share information with the hopes that you will be well received, it's all a matter of communication, sometimes the more the better, the less you communicate, your needs, often times, your wishes fall through the cracks without the other person knowing, don't wait until you get interrogated to realize what it is you've done wrong, ask in advance, and if you don't know what you're doing, don't lie about knowing more than you do, that's the worst thing you could do to your employers or to a lover. I understand the concept of qualifications, as not having finished my JD (failure), an ABA Certified Paralegal (not a lawyer), with an LLM (a masters degree that demonstrates my legal writing and research skills). Work with what you've got, sometimes you can only work with what you've got. -No one ever tells you exactly what is you are doing wrong until it occurs, be cautious in all work endeavors, that's why it's so important to ask questions, and not just take the go ahead tackling assignments, that's not being proactive, that's being reckless, doing things without knowing whether you are doing things right, be mindful, of the time wasted on your end, and the future time wasted, if necessary it will take, having to re-do the assignment that you've been working on, because it was done wrong by you. In life you are mostly left to your own devices. And once you get going again in life, you only get so many chances, and suggestions, before you are required to live life on your own and be a "self-starter" that's what the job force is looking for, so don't bend the rules. Eventually you have to live life on your own, such as me blogging for my own company. I must have not done anything right! Of course not! It's because of what I did well, I was able to do well on my own, it's actually the exact opposite assumption, of someone who is successful online, as a blogger, that they were not successful in the workforce, no I got excellent jobs!

Its All a Matter of Pride ...

I've been having one of those moments again, questioning what it is I am doing with my life. Thinking I could've been so many other things but instead I'm a blogger. I guess it's all a matter of pride from this moment on. I could've been a wife, a girlfriend, a paralegal, or an Attorney, but instead I am a law graduate with an LLM and an ABA Certified Paralegal -a Blogger. I'm not sure what kind of career I have mapped out for myself, but I hope that what goals I have accomplished so far, will get me to where I want to be in life, married and with a paying job one day, whether that's here, selling my website, or applying elsewhere for pay, I'm not sure what to do. So many people would dream to have the following that I have managed to obtain over the course of the past year, it's worth a try to keep going and to keep learning, what have I got to lose. I used to think that it was a gamble to blog, it's not really a get rich quick gig anymore, even with all my ads up, my website still doesn't make any income, it's not something I have quite figured out yet, and kind of embarrassed about it too. I guess that's what hiring an IT professional is for, to help set up my website, and to help me monetize my website, I'm just not quite there yet, because I've not had the funds to invest more money into my website. This all takes time I'm sure, figuring out who you want to be in life, and doing what you need to do in order to be her in life. It's much better than dating on Tinder, and going out to the bars on dates, with men looking for a life partner, I suppose this is a better use of my time, than dating. I guess with a blog/website, I was hoping to attract the kind of attentions in life, that would help me to have things in life, like a boyfriend (something going for me in life), friends (something worth talking about in life), and a career (something I'm proud of doing for myself and others). The skies the limit, only now, I have to continue my education, and learn more about Tech, SEO, Wordpress, Learn how to Code, and continue building my skillset for website building and development, alongside, working on finishing and publishing my first book, my goals at the moment. Everything takes time, I hope that by sharing my journey online, I have similarly inspired others to keep going in life, no matter where you are in life, start somewhere.

News a Good Time to Read ...

The times can get depressing, but only if you allow your present circumstances to keep you from making progress with or without a job at the moment. That's where reading comes into play. For every job, recently that I have gotten, 2015, and 2018, years that I worked for 6 months to a year, I was a law student studying reading heavily and writing papers, or I went to Amazon Book Store Century City and bought 10 books and read them all. All of these things prepare you for working in the workforce, and going back to work, which is the hardest part, after taking a break from working. Keep your sleep patterns, regular, and make sure to get your rest, and adequate exercise, and don't binge eat too much on cheap food, I just quit fast food, that was a long unnecessary addiction, as a self-professed everyday runner. I guess the whole defend McDonalds in the face of the book "Fast Food Nation" was a bad idea, afterall. That's okay, save money, but not when it comes to your diet, really try to eat healthy foods, its better to spend the money on good food, than to waste money on going out, dating, cigarettes, and fast food. These are things you learn later in life once put on a tight budget. That you can only spend what you have, and if you want to go shopping everyday, don't skimp yourself out on the food department, that's a really big mistake, health wise. Reading for me is really challenging, not something I have ever found easy, in fact on standardized exams, I get lower scores on the reading comprehension passages, but higher scores in sections like arguments and games. But I have enjoyed free reading new to it, used to only read what was assigned to me in school, but now as I am getting older, kind of have to choose my own curriculum, and decide what to study, 2013 was all about watching CSPAN everyday, and learning everyones names, that's was fun to familiarize myself with government figures, and election processes, and the importance of voting, and how laws are made, it's a really complicated process, and takes a lot of volunteer work, and fundraising in order to ensure that the publics health is responded to and our present concerns, something I became very passionate about as a law student, leaving law school to fly to DC for two weeks, to help make a positive difference, and share from my perspective what I know, how I have been doing, and what the environment around me was like. That I think is helpful, but not necessary, sometimes its hard to check into normal, its not like a hotel you can go to, and leave feeling like a different person more normal, sometimes it takes hard working, such as reading, and learning, and furthering your education, to get that "normal" sense of confidence back when it comes to your thinking, while being mindful of others sense of peace too. Not everything that's a emergency to you, for you to understand, will be something that everyone else is into, like how company names are made, and the present condition of an industries integrity and pride and who has been affected, stuff like that no one really writes about, but its stuff we all think about, hopefully not to the extent that we become bothered by what people think, or why things are made, and turn on systems of support, because they couldn't be more perfect, or because of a negative interpretation of how ideas were used to promote whos and what types of interests, you're only as left out in life as you allow yourself to be, why its so important to read the news everyday, and by reading the news everyday, that's how you stay feeling apart of, and by the news, able to assemble, and put together things, you notice overtime, patterns, and hopefully become a better more wise decision maker, as a result of having a better understanding of how the world works, and be in it.

Competitive Edge ...

You cannot stop someone who believes fearlessly in helping others, and willing to go to extreme lengths to ensure those safety needs are met, including defenses, when it comes to misconduct or errors being accused of them, such as myself, for simply taking a poster down. You would be surprised, how little information it takes to get your hands dirty, when it comes to public speaking, you really have to be in a solid place in life, in order to be heard and to be well received by all. You audience can tell if you are under pressure, and if so, wanting to know why, and always assuming for the most part, that any nervousness demonstrated by you, is a manifestation of guilt on your behalf, as having done something wrong, therefore not confident around others, and for whatever reasons that may be, disinterested in you, or not respecting you. Im the kind of person, who people are naturally competitive with, I learned this at a young age, that's just how people are who are in competition with you, trying to succeed, and trying to be better than you, while they are at it. Its really hurtful to say the least to be one of those people, but you just have to be understanding of others, that as people progress, mature, and find themselves in life, and become less reliant on others for self-esteem, or confidence, or companionship, in order to be at ease with themselves or around others, don't be offended the less you are needed in life, that's just a process of growing up, its not necessarily to do with not liking you, growing out of you, not respecting you, not being proud of you, or embarrassed by you. Sure in your lower moments in life, you can be difficult to talk to, but never assume that its anyone in competition with you that is bringing you down in life, that's how you give your power away in life, to the benefit of others, if you complain, or point fingers, as to the causes for any changes to your disposition in life, and then it becomes a who did what, who said what, who changed what, and even worse, looks like youre blaming others, for any changes you have undergone, while speaking in public or being around others, people will treat you as they think you are, and that is just something you will have to accept about life, everyone thinking that they can size you up, know you better than you know yourself, and think to treat you as they think that you deserve to be treated, with or without respect, trust, or given a job in life at all.

Personal Update ...

8/8/2020

I just graduated from Law School and celebrated my Birthday yesterday. Today begins a new chapter in life, and to start this new chapter feature them on my website. I suppose the ultimate goal would be to create a blog website that features bloggers and courses helpful to blogging, besides just sharing my thoughts daily, and eventually I'll have to learn how to monetize my website, so started applying to

What does that mean? I'm not sure. Just applied to two #blogging directories today: (1) all free things and (2) blogging fusion. Wanted to create a directory myself using @webnode >>> <https://t.co/DZAzuBNNN2> I need to take a #webdevelopment course to complete.

Phase Two: Build a Company that legitimately helps #bloggers and drives more reputable traffic to bloggers between bloggers by blog shares on Twitter put links on a #website to popular hashtags and run a stream of posts from my @mymollydollRT account promote on a search engine.

— mymollydoll

\(@mymollydoll\) August 8, 2020

I need to learn how to connect a search engine outside to find within a Twitter feed search the contents of my feed for the hashtags click to get to those posts by [SQUARE: #hashtag] buttons to posts [newsfeeds] all on one website connected to mine to drive traffic to directory.

Think Before You Speak ...

In today's day and age with social media, it's so easy to just speak and say whatever it is off the top of your head. I feel like even though tolerance for negativity and complaining, one should still think before they speak. According to one article by cookshillcounseling.co words we are choosing." [1] Consider it a healthy habit, for what purpose does this serve you ask ... "you're more likely to make badl said something wrong or not funny, or disturbing, you can't take it back, unless you bring it up over and over again to explain, and then problems at all, then to create problems for yourself in the future simply because of what has been said as coming from you, and depend be judged, some more or less accepting of you, given your education and background, and maybe expect more from you. For instance: offset negativity with something positive." [3] -Note: Things may not be thought until they are said, so be wary of what you say, and be to hbr.org "Harvard Business Review," ... "immediately after the average person has listened to someone talk, he remembers only about listening." [4] So chances are if you are ruminating over it too much, worrying what is thought about what is said, perhaps they aren't given what they know about you or others. In fact it has been argued that "effectiveness of the spoken word hinges not so much on how the wrong, or blowing things out of proportion, I believe is the tendency of a law student to overthink something every which way, it's on my own understandings in life, as a barometer for determining the truth of the matter, what actually exists as understood by most, and it's important to be careful about what you say, and if it's about something new, then by all means take your time trying to explain what detailing any accounts from your own life or from the lives of others as affected, and be sincere always. Sometimes the easiest people

Energy to the Table ...

To me success is about what type of energy you bring to the table, you either have energy to perform under pressures in life, or you fail. I have had more of a problem with drinking or drug use than it was a problem socially or romantically, usually to quell feelings associated with one or the other, post break-up. Being busy is so important. You are what you attract not necessarily who you're surrounded by a determinant of your future success, or ability to overcome. The impact of COVID, but that doesn't mean you can't still live a disciplined life and continue to plan for the future, have faith. Nothing is permanent. We are all people, traumatized, by what has transpired throughout the Country, following a series of events and happenings, we could never plan for. Social media, call us flies on the wall, pretty much, basically, anyways, that's what's happening, those who live lives, and those who talk about it. It's more important for me to live life than it has been to write about life, how far back do I need to go, in order to feel understood, or be well received. I need to overcome feelings about your childhood, or upbringing, and when is it time to talk about your past, and your childhood, with a Doctor or a Therapist. I'm always close to my Mother growing up, tell her everything: who I date, who I'm friends with, if I drank, if I tried drugs, if I need a job, and will probably start working for her within the next week or so, following graduating, the graduation ceremony is forward to the trip to San Diego anyways, we stay at The Coronado, in one of the house suites, it's a real treat (you get your own house). It was for my Birthday 26th Birthday 2011, this was before blurting out a bunch of things on Twitter December 2012, closed my account but I'm back from my class. (Gotta go ... to be continued). I'm back (9:35pm), had to move a box at my Brothers house with my Mom. --There are times when you are in your element, during trauma, and in moments of crisis, I am in my element, its similar to when others feel like its "game time" and you prepare me for the events leading up to my final decision to leave law school, and visit the Supreme Court, that eeriness, or distance from me, I don't respond to that others may not automatically respond to, and that's why I think I was taken offline, because of what I shared in private, I'm more committed by someone in another state, simply because I went to school in Colorado too, and was then discriminated for having parents who were expected to keep quiet, in representation of myself or others, eventually one must talk, and in sharing ones story, if its not fit for TV, a person puts me at risk of harm, to be used to commit acts and blame me for them, which is why you do not share as to acts committed, then you Leave Room for Excitement ...

There's always room for a little excitement in life, I used to say that I am not one to like excitement, but I can see how it can change the way you live. I remember there were 3-4 guys playing baseball in my street, maybe fans I thought to myself afterward, on messenger with Justice Roberts, I guess we were all looking at in the cafeteria inside the US Supreme Court waiting to meet the Justices, and upon being seated in a Turquoise chair next to the Judge there is one in all courtrooms to protect the Judge. My adventure in life to blogger online, started there, leaving law school and choosing to live in DC, I received an invitation delivered to my Hotel Room, I stayed at a Marriot a few blocks away from the White House, it was walking distance from my apartment, who lives in DC, because the cab never arrived. I don't know why I became suddenly independent, I just have always been in DC where I am not a paranoid person, unless I drink or have tried drugs, that's usually been a recipe for disaster, mental health wise, and I've always been insecure, attached, and waiting to hear from them, this also happened to some extent dating someone who lived in Yorba Linda, I used to be that's to keep the horses on path out of the street, but I never saw any horses, I thought maybe I've played club soccer here once before. I used to mail regularly from DNC, after making a donation while working for the LA City Attorneys Office as a Paralegal. I used to be so confident in my Law School and got into a better Law School I was elated, it happened to be a school I was waitlisted to their JD program back in 2009, and Obama Commencement Speech “protect your GPA.” I just started applying for jobs again, this reminds me looking over my resume, not that big of a deal, but I used to have more energy, they say also that aging is a process, but my Parents have more energy than me and on meds and gained so much weight back, I recently lost 20 lbs, 30 more to go, then I’ll be proud of myself. Lesson, you have to keep your marriage, continue on in life, you cannot stop in your tracks, and stop trying all together, and throw a pity party for yourself, maybe write a book, blogging and how to build a website, I fell in love, was really excited about tech, and thought that as a blogger that meant I was a tech writer, Wordpress, and one for Social Media, I guess I could continue signing up for courses and learn how to code, I was almost committed to a course that may possibly still be in my future, I interviewed for the course and got in, but did not end up taking the course, to save money to fund my education.

Poem (08-06-20) ...

Lost Purse

Summer streams and Melrose beams
He clapped and clapped and clapped until
No one appeared and no one stared
I wonder who and there she blew
Five button coils and no snakes but few
To wander in mellow dreams and stew
Money this and money that and no one knew
Why does she sing to everyones pockets
No credits shared, and so they melted
Rock bottom she flew, and never returned
Same life and history, one smirked to frown
Seldom shared historical foils, who cares
Who knew, and who was left spoiled

Whats the Hurry 30? ...

8/5/2020

So my birthday is coming up ... its a big deal the big 3-5 that’s FIVE years away from being the big 4-0 I was FIVE at my Dad’s 40th birthday. It means, buckle down, or stay single for the rest of your life, on food stamps depressing kind of life, don’t call it food stamps EVER again. It’s a lesson in life, given to you, like opportunities for housing, jobs, friends, relationships, if you appear to be in things for the wrong things in life, it’s to a primary reason, for being anywhere in life, as having to do with someone or something, theres no way to flip interpretations about it. It’s of some reason associated to who you know, the that’s how things look on the outside, and if things appear to look that way on the outside, though by associations you automatically as interpreted as having bad decision making skills as geared toward the interests of someone else. You think I feel having been a law student, to have been put under pressures in life, and ridicule as though my association was a joke or that I who liked me and wanted to date me because I was bigger than the rest of the women in the 140s not petite enough to date someone who is then those are the men you will attract in life, athletes or performers, and as a performer yourself in sports, or in writing online, maybe even now, maybe real actors and performers and content has something to do with what Im doing online as a blogger ... exactly: “human emotion management, and strategies for controlling or bringing about a feeling, that’s done in an artistic way, but not something we do with emotions generally, not concerned about the emotions of others, how many times do you worry about how someone is feeling? When do you understand them? When they are dating? When they are drinking? When they are trying drugs? Maybe when they are blogging and speaking to you see you in trouble, or maybe people care about everyone and think youre doing a great thing being online if popular and want to keep you a compliment. If God does not situate you so in life, no matter how hard you have worked, in law school or by jobs taken, to work for someone in a position to work for another, then do so, and if your passion is in writing, then continue to work on your writing skills, so that you are able to write how to manage a group of people, each day who visit your blog, and expect information helpful to them, without complaints from them, and no it is not a risk to me to blog, and to help others, only a risk to others to read, and not like me, “complain” are sick by me, that is what I dislike. [Removed last sentence edit].

Statements You Can't Take Back ...

There is a such thing as saying the wrong things and upon saying the wrong things in life cause insult, or discord between ones ability ignored by the other, who feels their feelings are more in need of validation than your own feelings about life, whos more important. For them in life, rising to an occasion, or whether by their own hard work, and earned accolade, comfortable taking on a position of public may not be vaguely associated or thought spoken in reference to, we all experience fame in our own ways, on facebook.com, by comp heard in a multitude of ways, that we may not know about ourselves, that's just life, being seen and heard, and known, who knows how things easy on me growing up, being around a social scene, then trying to create a social life of my own, as encouraged by him to make way, sharing friends, and not possessive about who I love, or who I am friends with, thought that was a cool quality, when all of my fr manage to be together and hang out over the years, those were my friends at the time, and by circumstances, neighbors, and who was i comfortable with self, popular or not, or by living arrangements, made friends with. –Its upon traversing in or within an industry that i others, by what title is one introduced, and under what merits is one to be known, like trying to apply to the shorty awards, probably, a the time, campaigning for an organization, I felt whos awareness of, would benefit all to care for in an effort to stop the transmutation scale to kids, if the fights not real, then lets not make a big deal of fights online or in the news, or inspire the wrong ideas about how to change, or some change needs to happen in order for change to occur, whatever happened to change within and the change around us b ranks, with expectation of others to change in order to make ourselves happy, I guess turning a blinde eye to other peoples deficits or p we think needs fixing, and correct everyone we think thinks wrong about life, or about others, or about circumstances as though some by formula, through and to, and back out of a problem.

What Does it Mean to Feel Pretty ...

Feeling pretty to me is something that automatically happens to me upon falling in love, it requires some love within either for self or recognizing the fact that someone else likes the way you look, therefore you should maintain appearances to please one or the other, y yourself, in front of others, around others, when in the company of others, and upon taking photos of self, or as taken by another, an ex you are pretty to look at, because you recognize the beauty in others, or in the world, and there is some kernel of something beautiful a toward you, as though you have something some characteristic or trait, that makes you likeable, meaning you are healthy enough to be matter who is around you, as demonstrated by the face structure and expressions you exude, likeable to most, a subtle difference betw the company of others, liking themselves enough to the extent that they both please others, and others are happy and pleased about you grumpy you don't like the way you look or when you gain some weight don't recognize your face structure as well as upon losing wei how we look, how we appear to self, and how we appear to others, no one person is different than the other, its all about staying positi with yourself, and be happy for others. Not all have been blessed with good attitudes in life, able to maintain that spunk and generosity others get the best of us, and with distaste, we grow uncomfortable, and by threat, we feel stifled, and when intimidated, we don't like someone else with more desirable traits than you makes you feel less than, don't allow yourself to feel that way, there is something be sharing your mind, to feel as intelligent as, I mean ... what does it take to feel beautiful nowadays, if there is something you don't like and if you find yourself losing respects in life, or love, to other men or women, then think what can I do to make myself a better person

Just Applied ...

8/5/2020

There comes a point in your career, when you are done preparing for the future, and have arrived at your goals in life, that would be no to Law Firms in the past and Marketing agencies, but have chosen this year to apply to a few Modeling Agencies and Talent Agencies current ranks are:

- IMDB: 196,019
- Alexa US: 36,974
- Monthly Users: 2.7k
- Daily Page Views: 49,845

- Likes Per Post: 1000-4000

I couldn't be happier with my progress. As you all know I have been through a lot in the past few years undergoing different med regis finally able to finish my Dissertation and graduate with a 3.233 GPA from Thomas Jefferson School of Law (online), with a Masters in Applying for representation is a very big deal, and not unless I was settled and mentally fit would I apply, and given the number of likes for new talent and a new face to add to their team. I may be known by writing, but I hope to also be known by face one day, and not just my own identity online, and help others. -Hope I get picked! :)

Will keep you all posted, thank you for following!

Sincerely,

Leslie Fischman

How to Be? ...

There is no one right way to think ... when its time to mature, be mature, for all other things, think with a light heart, and be even temporarily embarrassed by your purpose in life, behave. There's always time for happiness, and sometimes it's not appropriate to be happy all the time, what we do in life, that is supposed to guarantee some happiness within as a result of performing these labors in life. Not all experiences are relative to your own cup of tea in life, what matters to you, what helps you grow, where you foster, and within limits, what gives you the best of us, meaning feeling good when the timing is off, wanting more than what is given, thinking in the negative, and being happy in not all conditions that you yourself understand that they may not, are considered laughable conditions at that. What you may come to know because you to distance yourself from them, and may even cause you to think less of someone, and simply overlook them as with honest phrases, as being about this this or that. That is part of life, summing up things to better process understandings in life, for some that's a phrase, or a category, to file it away as being about this this or that, and then derive the importance or significance from it. No one trying to be important, or have something important to say, and based upon what they have done or accomplished in life, gives them reason to listen, not only talking about myself, but respect is not always given where respect is due, and that is because elements of what results in respect is as a barometer for determining what's important. That's to save someone, anyone time, in time it takes to listen, figure out the worth of what we stop harping on subjects and elements of importance, and just listen with a non-judgmental ear? Does everything have to apply to us well? Advice that when taken to heart, does not disturb us, or corrects us, and helps us to see better, and upon feeling better and seeing things in a new light, guess that's the main goal, everyone struggles with trying to say the right things, it's not simply a gift in life, to say what is right or helpful, personal or professional, one learns tone and how to speak properly, and how to fix themselves, you cannot fix others, you can only help them, that's just being human, respect that about people, some need medical attention, and no amount of writing, or reading, or explanation can help.

They reply: And now you're on IMDB, now you're legit, now you're important, now you matter, now you're officially an influencer, now you're famous.

I wouldn't say I'm a procrastinator, to describe the length of time it took me to finish my Dissertation off and on over the past few years, somewhere in the middle, someone who wants to get a lot done, but was an underachiever in life, life's not over, there is plenty of time to overcome in life ... setback. So many of us encounter setbacks in life, and how many of us stop performing all together to our highest potential.

This year instead of thinking of everything missing from my life, I started doing. Instead of worrying about having a job, I made a job for myself, blogging, was able to finish writing and submitting my Dissertation for a Masters in Law, which has always been my dream: to graduate with plans to become an Attorney to represent others, for me, if its possible, I pursue that goal, and if its not possible, I pursue other goals, Laws, which is what I will end up graduating with, since I have yet to complete my JD, which I have an opportunity to transfer credit to.

It's never too late, and while deadlines may be looming overhead, don't take advantage of the health of others being poor, to take a step back, a state of everyone's health, it's more like an opportunity, to put your best to the test, and do your best, knowing that the best of you now, for their own wellness, to occur now during a time of poor health among many, lift yourself, and as you lift yourself, hopefully you will find your place.

This year my workload was: (1) Complete a Dissertation and Graduate (2) Work on Book Drafts (3) Launch a Website and Blog (4) Graduate with Ones and Friends, Work on my Relationships. So far so good, and very proud of myself, and so thankful for all my "Likes" this year, in fact, I count, another project and goal to set for my Blogs, minus a shady fan page: I'm sorry. Just had a falling out with a pen pal, who requested to take my meds, Geodone, blocked the page, reported the page to Facebook, and when I'm feeling stronger deal with it later. My Mom was embarrassed right now in public, by a pen pal, who loved me, but wanted more from me in order to keep me in his life, turned on me. I'm not you thinking, and why did you allow that to happen to you, and for what reason was it worth giving your love away to someone you care about? Managing multiple things and doing well, and someone who you think loves you asks for photos, your identity and composure means a lot in life. It can come back to bite you, once you have achieved your goals, sent right back down in life.

The following has been recommended to manage a workload ...

(*See References: liquidplanner.com, and blog.playvox.com).

1. Collect a List of Tasks
2. Prioritize Your Tasks, for Efficiency
3. Determine the Value of Each Task
4. Depending on Effort, Order Your Tasks
5. Be Flexible with Your Time, and Allot More Time for of Higher Importance
6. Know When to Step Back, and Cut Things from Your Time [1]
7. Recognize There Are Different Ways to Get a Job Done
8. Set Achievable Deadlines
9. Assess Yourself, Where are you at Mentally, What can you do today?
10. Be a Good Communicator
11. Take it One Chunk at a Time
12. Take Breaks [2]

I Don't Want to Hear It ...

Nows a good time to stay calm, and practice compassion and patience. Why? So in the event you become overwhelmed and don't know about. No one likes having those moments when you think to yourself "I don't want to hear it," how many of us are stubborn. According in. Hold your ground. [and] Be assertive with your opinions and ideas." [1] There will be many times when you feel like you're maybe doesn't apply to you, or sit and wonder now how is that going to help me to think or be that way, what's your point? Its called "conflict and conflicting advice, "the best way to [overcome those feelings is to] maintain peace." [2] Its beneficial to everyone's health to feel heard and contemplation" of others, thats a rewarding experience to have your thoughts recognized by others, maybe why I blog? However, heard, especially when you feel like you deserve to be heard, you run the potential of wearing people out, its not everyday everyone w facets of life, rather to obsess over whats gone wrong, and be apart of the solution instead. [3] For me starting a blog, was overcoming stated out loud made complete sense to others, funny how that happens. Something you have worked up in your mind to be so comple and sharing your story too, it wasn't a big deal after all, I guess. Big deal meaning, blogging, and hashtagging to subjects that mattered to our "choice and actions" are sometimes the things that make us most proud of ourselves, and even if you may be initially "unpopular" or feel of shame or embarrassment looking like someone trying to be someone else, or even worse be considered a fraud if your goals are so big, it's still too. [4] Note that even if discussions do get "heated" it "typically occur[s] when people are holding onto their own personal opinions," when you recognize that although your opinions matter, so does what other people think of you matter too, so although "you need to be confident" you may be "wrong and acknowledge someone who may know better." [6] A great quote I found in aconsciousrethink.com, says this: "We have to always find a balance, and know the difference between when to stand firm to your opinions, versus when to allow for things to be done their own way, versus, allowing yourself to be walked all over, you don't have to do either. So consider the emotions around you, and don't want to feel unimportant yourself. [8] There is always some give and take to life, stay positive!

Self-Defeating Tendencies ...

Don't put yourself down in life, no matter what. At your lowest point in life, you think you're better off away from people, and that sort of shame or embarrassment looking like someone trying to be someone else, or even worse be considered a fraud if your goals are so big, it's still too. You put yourself that much credit in life to think so, as you get worse, trust that you're probably making someone else feel bad about themselves in life, and blaming others for your own unhappiness, yes this is true, although we don't like to admit to it. In exchange don't put yourself at fault, even if it's not all your doing, acknowledge how the other person is feeling, and don't forget to stick up for yourself, even if you're a little better. It's the worst when you feel down, and others are putting you down, and even you are putting yourself down. There are many ways to realize it, suggested one article by naturallyaloha.com. This is where positive affirmations come into play, instead of reciting to yourself "I am always a way to reframe your thoughts into a positive, and to stop winding up at negative conclusions in life, about self or others, a lot of things and "Recognize that most of the negative thoughts you're thinking aren't true—they're usually exaggerations, built on years of self-abuse. We all makes mistakes and no one is perfect. It's all about changing your attitude in life and to start thinking of things "to be grateful for the blessings." [3] –The long term affects of being "self-deprecating ... [can be] deeply damaging," suggests one article by psychologytoday.com. [4] –Listening to yourself berate yourself in anger, and negativity, when things aren't going your way, or when your life doesn't pan out to your thoughts, and stop "allowing them to take hold." [6] –I hope this review of being self-defeating will help you fulfill your dreams in life and not let others to pick on you too.

Don't Torture Yourself ...

At the end of the day, no life is perfect. I mean really, why so hard on yourself? I ask myself the same question too, once my mood shift being such a mess for so long, why was I so lonely, why couldn't I get happy again, it doesn't take a lot to smile, but it takes a long time again! Whats stopping you? In many posts I describe my feelings and emotions and thought processes, some may agree or disagree, or always know when to stop, is it no longer serving you to have or hold a discussion, then switch gears, and if you say something wrong looks like that, nevermind, delete. I mean ... it's a not a big deal. Blogging requires a lot of fine tuning, just like having conversations have and hold conversations with others, some talk about themselves, some talk about others, and some want to know about you, it's a issues or image issues, for so long I was upset with the way I looked, didn't know why I was gaining weight running or walking every emotionally, so hard on myself, and even self-harming at some points, I never thought I'd be that typical instagrammer cutting themselves harmed, I used to think that hot women were women who have been through a lot, but I think self-harming only made me look emotion

All Bets are Off ...

Welcome to August! –I went through another loop, seems to be a common occurrence on Twitter going on and on yet again making no back where you started and reliving the same feeling over and over again, and not being able to escape that feeling what is that feeling makes you want to crawl out of your skin, and makes you not want to be yourself, don't do that to yourself! If there is a will or a way, people, and if you need a change, that change must first come from you, not from the other person, even if we would like to expect that are always in control of what you think and say, and instead of adding fuel to the fire, learn to let things go, even if the other is beginning it does not benefit their feelings in life, or overall outlook, we cannot all be perfect transmitters in life, we are only human, you cant trust an already unhappy person, that's knowingly therefore not the solution, to contest, stand tall, or fire back at someone, who is upset with and to take things in stride, and well if its just about image, then figure out why is image so important to you, and for what reasons are you harmed, or feeling like self-harming just because things aren't going your way behind the scenes, or with loved ones, who are upset with will go right for you in life, friendship, love, family, and in matrimony or monogamy, trust, trust takes a long time to build, and sometimes can be read easily, or who read best are trusted that's knowing that they will not be hurt by the other, upon communications made, communication relationship is furthered along, if not let go, why people talk to you, to constantly assess your condition and see where you're at to decide and blame you as a contributor to their unhappinesses in life. When there is fighting "all bets are off" meaning all promises, all agreements, doubt, all those good things that keep a relationship going shift to, its your fault that this this or that is happening, or because of you are Whats Off Limits ...

People who are doing well are generally off limits to talk about or to talk to when you are not doing well, that's just as a common courtesy speak directly to via text or messenger, disrupt the flow of their current state, by your problems, as though one assumes that there is risk and if they don't, be offended by your presence, insights, or what you have to say. Then there are those who pretend to be the person who means the more upset you are, and stand in disagreement to your expression of grievances in private to others, assuming its about acting about your condition of bipolar, that's assuming that what is occurring within someone is related somehow to what is around them, or up anyone's game in life, not me, not any industry, and certainly not in any continent, does any one persons insight disrupt the work flow everything is about me, was some kind of philosophy as applied, made sense as combining the philosophies of finished work products When someone shares stories from their life, that's not sharing to claim that anyone came up in life because of one existing, and that of interpreted, is the same thing occurring now, whether by formula past for sharing about life to which we all could relate, or even now it occurs, and by what means, and by whom, and by what codes or understandings, as though needs to be new or modified, whenever a all, for anyone unique to as standing alone, stick out from the rest, or blend in professionally among those that one speaks about, be student, a law student, an athlete, a girlfriend, a friend, and a blogger.

When Things Happen Again ...

Sometimes days go by, and you improve, and as you improve feel better about yourself, up until the point you don't have to think about time to talk to people especially on messenger, and use up their valuable time, with your bored time, discussing what your plans are, your plans, which add pressure on you with expectations, and also add a hint of skepticism on your audience as to whether you finish what you set, both matter. When things are happening again, ask yourself (1) are you going backwards (2) are you in a bad mood and why (3) how do you get upset we know this and she doesn't know we know this, and sometimes it means you could remember this and talk about this, and that perspective, as a human, you see things from the inside out. Its really easy to step into a company, and by looking around, judge by

Be Wise ...

The trouble with getting from point A to point B, is overdependence on social cues, or acceptances, for go aheads in life, permissions to subject yourself to adjustments by others, and then you realize youre an adult, and you cannot control others, so you just have to keep what needs to get done, without dreaming too big. The bigger your head gets, the more issues you incorporate onto your plate, and soon activity to the next, with the same memory in tact of what direction you were planning to go in, whats been noted as of interest to you, clearly, or more rightly express how you plan to help others, without ever questioning the care already provided, as being in competition professional, but trust that your hardwork will pay off, the less you are focused on what things look like, what other people are doing, instincts, intuitions, strengths, and instinct that lead you to the best places in life, away from dangerous subjects, away from coming across established with confidence, and complete study, and when things become unclear, its always okay to not restate a problem overcome, psychological hormonal temper sociological medicinal rationales for comprehending who and whats normal, can sometimes, leave other than being positive. And when you get there be sure to thank every group, every person, every network, every doctor, every friend, every

Take Your Time ...

Take your time, and don't rush into things, when it comes to relationships or career choices, sometimes we just go for whats available, get to the point of recognizing how far you've come, that's a proud moment of achievement in life, its moments like these we all gear up, struggles a person has endured that you know nothing about, maybe the way they look is a reflection of how they want to be, before they get a better job of, its when we take time to reassess our strengths and weaknesses, that we become that much stronger. Theres always time in life, what are your options presently, and take on the day fulfilling those roles in life as best you can, and as you get better, more roles work into something, the exact opposite can happen, not feeling good enough, not feeling like we have done our best or could've done better, understanding or compassion, and treated as though because I didn't feel apart of that I wasn't apart of, not understanding how I have to maintain a relationship, just a booty call to men, not a girlfriend. Don't live life in regret, what you see is what you get, and sometimes unless I get tired of doting on them, and eventually leave, ringless. Be yourself, and its okay to communicate to others, when you feel able to maintain their attentions, and so that you are loved more.

Do's and Don'ts of Blogging ...

(1) Don't spend more time on social media than your blog.

Although its next to impossible to have a blog without social media, [1] think about what it is you are advertising, and don't waste you generated individually, that will apply to all your applications, with companies looking to spearhead a campaign for you, broadcast yo

(2) Do incorporate Hashtags, whether for humor or purpose, use them!

About half of my following was found using hashtags, either being liked by them, or finding them and following them, and being follo from promoting spam on Facebook, please keep in mind the following:

- Facebook: no more than 5 hashtags
- Instagram: 12 hashtags
- Twitter: 4-6 hashtags
- LinkedIn: minimum of 6 hashtags [2]

(3) Do be consistent and post content on a regular basis. [3]

In order to improve my alexa rank it is required that I post at least once a day, to maintain my standing, or to improve my standing bas rank. When posting content be professional, and do your best to be consistent, I know I have an ongoing battle sharing humor, and ran back to it.

(4) Do engage with your likes, comments, shares, and DM requests.

It might not seem like a legit opportunity to start, but I highly recommend, seeing what is being offered by other members in the community in the types of services you have to provide, and either have something to offer you in exchange for what you have to offer them, and money to pay for media kits [4], and PR representation, so do your best on your own, be organized, experiment with apps, and do your

(5) Don't post "embarrassing or incriminating photos or video to social media." [5]

I'll always remember this piece of advice that was given to me at work by a supervising Attorney, "what goes online stays online for a long time." So, what you do to your career as a blogger is lose momentum, generally as you learn you grow, and as you grow, have more to share, and as you learn

(6) Do, know the difference between a public and a private message. [6]

All Tiger Woods jokes aside, it seems funny, and it may seem like a helpful piece of information to share online, but think about how having become disconnected trust wise from people in reality who speak to by phone, or in private online, and then be observed based on what you say out loud, informations privately spoken about, and mutually understood, once said out loud, can potentially look like something else to everyone else.

Taking a Position ...

At what point in your career or personal development are you usually put under a judgmental lense by others, when you are doing well, or when you are making skills, erring on the side of conformity, that is, accommodating the best interests of those choosing to be in your life, and those who are sometimes unnecessary, and best articulated sotto voce, meaning without words specific to any particular causes, think of a more broad perspective, current, can sometimes lead others to question your stability, your intellect, your care, viewing your cares as strategy to free people, or to point out when something is wrong, this skill you learn with experience, not waiting until after something bad has happened to do things, getting connected, feeling disconnected, alone, apart, or together, as you get more in tune with your own emotions and feelings, the less you care about the world, and whether its about you or not take it personally. To me the most moves and the best decisions, occur when our energy is at its peak, we feel prepared for professionally. And then there is fear, backtracking, and feeling stifled, without energy, listen to your body, and do your best, it limits our potential. And then there is competition, those who rise to any occasion, and take on leadership positions, whether that's professional or personal about apps. Its really not a big deal, from where ideas come from, or why when looking at someone ideas come to mind, maybe that's

The Key to Self-Love ...

We all go through moments of self-doubt, not liking something about ourselves, or not feeling good enough, as compared to others, because we are insecure, that it affects how you interact with others, especially in loving relationships. -I would say then the key to self-love is acceptance, not become too dependent on others for validation, or for lifting our spirits, the best part of discovering yourself, and your strength, and finding the balance between low self-esteem (a lack of self-love) and grandiosity (inflated, false self-love that is actually an overcompensation you don't let go, and keep rehashing explanations for your feelings, and over-justifying why you don't feel good, who hurt you, and what is your upper limit of tolerance and ability? And especially know when to not say yes to everything, people pleasing your way to happiness, that's what other people think, as of right now, working on yourself, think what is it that you value in yourself, list 5 things you love about yourself, and in your analysis department, and with the committee in your head, telling you you can't do this or that or saying that you are this or that, getting jobs. You can do this, it's all a matter of a willingness, to change your scenery, you may be couped up at home, and reality may be different. Mindful. This is just temporary, feelings are just temporary, and instead "focus your awareness on the feeling of aliveness," what's beautiful.

Moment of Infatuation ...

There's a spiritual lift in us all, that lift is called love, when freely expressed makes us feel good about ourselves, and while around others, we're happy, love is best once again when expressed freely, meaning without thinking, and from a genuine place of care. There is so much room for it, it can be your obsession, wanting to know everything about a person, where they are, who they are with, what they are doing, that's just a part of life, and without hesitation trust, and once that trust is established, a continuity of care exists between two people, who care for each other when we feel like we are giving the world to our lovers, giving it our all, and spoiling one another with affections, we assume that there are perfect people, but we all have the capacity to love and be loving toward one another, it's just a matter of finding who, someone who loves you.

1. Love yourself.
2. Have faith in the good intentions of the other.
3. Accept a person as they are.
4. Spend time with that person and explore together, challenge one another. [2]

The Ongoing Debate: Nudity ...

8/31/2020

The thegryphon.co.uk, wrote an interesting piece on nudity and empowerment, stating that:

I'm new to journalism and writing online, and publishing, as a registered publishing corporation, writing and publishing my own material, my health status, nor aggravates my condition or the condition of others, which is why it's so important to not be offensive, or come across as insensitive. If you find up an issue found to be offensive to another, insulted by, this just leaves room for error in terms of acceptance of you, to not denigrate.

The minute you feel like fighting, take a step back, especially if you're a public speaker, you never know who you may be causing equ who may be overlooking your life, the change of course, and troubles you encountered. Once someone has made you look stupid, they that was supposed to go toward publishing your first book, and instead went toward love, which wasn't an immediate necessity but w to look crazy in public, it just gives you power away to whomever is ignoring you, looking for a reaction from you, to see whether wh or depressed, both, why I take meds, day meds to stay awake, and night meds to go to sleep, I was once prescribed Provigil which is f for 30 days, so decided to go back on Vyvanse to be able to keep up with the pace of the times, graduate from law school, work a job bed at 5pm, taking 3-4 night meds just to sleep, and she thought that was took many night meds. When people are experimental with y bothered sensitive, then that makes them feel that much more empowered, like this person is so unstable internally, that when this is s her head. For what purpose does that serve to treat someone as a test subject. You have no research experience, and no experience wit comfortable with that's not living for the moment, those boundaries are up because my confidence, personality, happiness, and well b by someone who is more well without disability and on meds, overpowering my ability, with what they think is rational or deserving, Degeneres and publicly out me as GAY to the world and cause me suicide when I have never hooked up with a woman in my entire l defame me and make me look grose, or see if anyone else complains about my naked body that you are showing online to hurt me, an me to open up, then treat me as criminal, and shoot me in the face online like I don't matter? This person doesn't even treat me as hur complete my goals in life: graduate, book, and marriage. #stophate. For some, they figure, trashing you is keeping things light, like I o and sober. Don't talk down to me, like if I drink Ill go to jail, don't sabotage me, hurt me during job interviews and upon meeting som that causes other people to distance themselves from me not feel good to them.

Don't Put Yourself Down in Life ...

Manage your symptoms, whether it be stress, bipolar, anger, or depression, have some self-control, and do as directed, seeking profes that you do not recognize your "own worth," it's a character trait, not to be mistaken for humility which can feel the same, and not tal it can be easy for all these emotions to pile up, not feeling good about yourself, and not knowing what to do to get yourself out of a m needs, saying sorry or feeling guilty, going along with everything without saying a word, not feeling capable or deserving, difficulty r internal dialogue. Getting Back Center ...

8/29/2020

1. Forgive yourself, not everyone's perfect, we all have bad days.
2. Less is more, apologize, and move on, without rehashing the past.
3. Your issues are your issues are your issues, are your issues.

4. We all fall in love or find ourselves in loving relationships and then get hurt.

Always put your best foot forward, and present the good things about you, without overshadowing your faults out loud, or “baggage” expect the same of them, if you ever overheard them talk about you, speaking of you in the positive, hopeful for your recovery, and in darker times, when things were not as coordinated, and easy going, when we measured our successes upon lives lived, over lives lost, to manage, keep track of, contribute to, that lifts me, and continues to grow in a positive way stats wise, as I do better personally, going of me doesn’t understand, what it was like, prior to finding a sense of peace, absent minded the comradery, that left people feeling stuck giving up, even under spotlights, it’s all a matter of what you choose to associate with, mentally and physically, you are always in control won’t be so easily influenced to think less of yourself, and then think less of what future has been made available for you to live. Be so lightening our loads, or photos past of taller moments in time, when we had the world at our fingertips. That distance you feel going down, then you probably don’t want to launch your site, and run the risk of your audience feeling that instability and again feel like that I’m at peace, and this person may be tripping but it has nothing to do with me, and be your positive selves, that’s a strong person, resilient

Self-Harm Research: Issues and Attentions ...

8/29/2020

As someone with a history of self-harming, I wouldn’t categorize myself as vain or in need of attention, I have been independent most of the time, most part, no issues ever surfacing that interfered with my ability to be social, be well liked, date, or feel loved. Always well taken care of. Eventually you reach a point in life, where you will experience unhappiness, either with yourself or displeasure when it comes to loving yourself differently among others, while speaking about you, not speak about you in the positive or in an uplifting or empowering way, feelings may be hurt, by someone you trusted, held up on a pedestal, and treated as special your whole life, it’s not the end of the world, they were to them, afterall you have been in their life longer, why is someone new suddenly more in the know about how everyone feels, are of concern, that people get to know someone on a deeper level, or come to think about things differently in observance of someone going on around them, and wonder whether that has anything to do, with the similar changes noticed previously of concern, that one ‘might hear at some point in your life, if you have bipolar, and it has not yet been diagnosed, those maybe tell-tale signs, of what’s to come, wonder what is wrong with you, like “why are you sleeping so much.” [1] #dontdodrugs ... That’s just how friends are, and the less you know, normal, means you’re not acknowledging that there could be something wrong with you, and to get a professional opinion, no one knows themselves, once they become uncomfortable being the person they have become, someone different, unrecognizable to those who have known you, changes that tear friends apart, separate friends, cause friends of friends to feel closer or bonded, the more troubles you encounter, in life, as being different under the pressures of LSATs, and applications, personal statements, rejection letters, and dating your first boyfriend, it’s one catch. The boyfriend would rather spend time with his friends than spend downtime with you, that includes him rather having dinner with you. When it gets to the point that you are sleeping through life, that just means that you haven’t gone to therapy yet, sometimes people like us more, or fit in better with everyone else, and if your girlfriend napping in his bedroom, while everyone hanging out outside, the boyfriend, who later stated “I like to always be in control” when I drink, I guess that was a less than flattering exhibition of “talking $hit” trailer candy pants” and you thought that that was too friendly for work, then later worked in entertainment 2018, and realized that’s just me, who’s present, who doesn’t complain, gets promoted, that was me, as someone who was older, maybe intimidated by the film student, that’s just me a paralegal.

Disturbed Sense of Peace ...

Not all relationships will last, and in any business relationship, in which added consideration of you is required in order to maintain control, giving money in exchange for a service. And sometimes we don't always get what we bargained for, and even worse a result we never expected. Payment in exchange for their services, but what happens when you stop paying money in exchange, and no services are offered, that's when you put your money into a system of support that no longer supports you, call it unprofessional but they are just that, demanding of your time energy and inner peace go hand in hand," so no matter what "life throws [your] way" [1] be able maintain enough strength and courage to know when it's no longer working out for you in your favor, and when you decide to let go, we are all here for you. Don't blame yourself when things go wrong, whatever they say, and the more power and control you give to them, sometimes the worse things get. Thinking that they have power over your mind, body, and soul, don't allow that to happen to you. When you have been nice and have done everything in your power following through with their word, its not your fault, that you invested money into a failed relationship, it may hurt, that you were so thought was a celebrity meeting service, money that should have been spent on publishing a book, and updating my website, was spent on something you don't give up in life, or on yourself, just because you got swindled, when you were down and out into believing a set of circumstances that you had no control, and don't allow them to.

Uneven Exchanges ...

There's a point in everyone's life, when we question our own self-worth, and purpose in life, now is one of those times. Its usually after you going in life, feeling less than, feeling not good enough, someone who questions you usually does the trick. If you love yourself, you will love you. Your health comes first, and while you will meet people in life, who will love you and care about you, its you that comes first. No one will defame you and embarrass you in public, like you deserve to be treated that way, because it makes them feel better about themselves, and about you, is more important than your own version of events, when talking about your own life. People will come into your life, that will appear less than, as you come up in life, and get overshadowed by the identity of someone you no longer want to associate to having less than, not being married, used for not having a job, and used for knowing someone famous, treated as someone less than, to make themselves feel better, to make themselves feel of value or having something valuable to say or talk about. That's just life, there will be people who are bullies, who think that just because you know people of importance, that they can bring you down in life, to make you feel less than of yourself. A way of trying to control you, by putting you down, so that you feel scared, or feel like by abiding by their threats, that things will get better. If someone has a right to hurt you or turn on you, should you no longer abide by their requests for money or photos, that is how a relationship is supposed to be.

Pen Pal (1): Met on Facebook messenger, thought he was a Trump supporter, but today found out that he is not a Trump supporter, but for the past few months, talking since March, and just received 4 missed calls from the White House, and have just confirmed its not him. At this moment in time, demanding of me sexually to please him or else he would put pages up on Facebook of photos of me requested for. I don't need a man in my life to feel loved, I don't need love to do well in life, and this whole experience is making me feel sick, as Im

Pen Pal (2): Met on Facebook messenger, though he was a Leonardo DiCaprio fan page, and then conversation was move to Google Hangouts for a meeting to be held, $7000 was paid over a period of six months, in pre paid cards and moneygrams cash, and as I slowly woke up to talking about it. These people ask for things from me, in order to be friends, and then hurt me if I decide I want out, or to discontinue things only got worse. It seems like everyone will F you over in life at the same time, if they so choose. The goal is not to get upset, so being, they expect things done the day of requested for, the demand money from all bank accounts, and keep asking until you have no money to the world and online to punish you and make you look stupid, like you haven't already been punished enough, losing $7000 without

The main lesson is that no matter how much you need love, make sure to meet them first on a dating network such as Tinder or Bumble, and close confidants. There will always be an uneven exchange, as someone who is younger, looking for love, from someone in your age group, and of your image in public, slut shaming you to the world, when none of your take down requests are being honored by Facebook. Who ends, trying to negotiate with people who are causing you harm, there is always time to ask for help. Never give up, if you know you should have to put up with these types of abuses in life.

Get Your Power Back ...

In an online world, communications are king, and we all know, the less you communicate the more room you leave for interpretation, with your following or commentators. You are your own worst critic, and even worse may others be of you. Stay calm. In case you have competing with you, for you, or against you in life, and when utilized at their discretion, can easily subject yourself to looking like a careless person. The less concerned you are with the lives of others the better, this only adds fuel to the fire, the more you lend your insights for interpretation to people to like you who are not sure about you or who have grown disinterested in you, they will never respect you, and that's just some of representing those ideals in life, beauty and intelligence. While everyone else looks like imitation of beauty and intelligence, as though and intelligence itself acquired. Understand these facets of life, but don't allow yourself to be ruled by these controversies in life, how you complain, you are doing yourself a disservice in life "it can be useful for venting your frustrations and getting sympathy," [1] but you do your best and put their best foot forward. Feelings are a choice, identify and come to understand your triggers in life, and make up your mind to whack, not be controlled by what is thought of you, when you are less than being yourself online, why its important not to become too much what you are saying, versus sounding like someone who is convincing others to think a certain way, you are thinking, as though that's all including ones fears and insecurities about life, the way one looks, or what we think people are thinking about us, delusion. When you come across as insulting to anyone with less in life, be mindful, don't provide fruit for argument, and if you are being negative about life, its not stable for advices in life, than someone who can barely organize their own thoughts about life and be present. How are you feeling? If you are not happy from your life, no one needs to know, why you are so intense or passionate about advocacy or about your decisions, its your life, and not none of your business to worry about, why they read along anyways. Its not the problem of anyone in real life or online to resolve you in the grand scheme of things success wise. Remember "this is your journey. So find out what empowers you." [2]

Reminders: Getting Your Power Back After Embarrassment:

1. Don't Complain.
2. Be Yourself.
3. Don't Be Ruled by Negative Interpretations.
4. Charades Go On Whether or Not You Contribute.
5. Speak Honestly and Candidly, Without Fear.
6. Be a Trustworthy Resource in Life, Not Inflict Blames.
7. Know Yourself Better than You Know Others.
8. Don't Hold Grudges and Let Things Go.

Networking Tips ...

8/27/2020

Before your next meeting: Networking Reminders:

- Be open to meeting new people
- Speak to those you have something in common with.

- Never ask for a job.
- Establish rapport.
- Be proud of yourself.
- Focus on making a great first impression.
- Be confident.
- Where do you see yourself in the future?
- Generate an elevator pitch.
- Be a good listener.
- Don't be afraid to connect.

One of the most important things to think when networking is that “everyone has something to learn and gain.” [1] Be open to meeting in common with, and know what you are looking for before the conversation even get started. What are you about. Be able to summarize that makes you unique and exciting and why would other people be interested in talking to you. You can get help in your job searches opportunity may arise in the future, your contact may be willing to refer you.” [2] I just joined Bumble Bizz, and have begun the process. I'll let you know how it goes. Im meeting with someone from Ziprecruiter. Establishing yourself within any industry is difficult, you are apart from the other applicants. We don't always get our dream job, the first job we get, each job is a learning experience. Im the kind of person hasn't stopped me from taking the job, and going until I cant go any longer. You will notice that as you become more experienced taking growth, with no real growth opportunities long term. You have to eventually stop taking internship positions, at some point in your career where applying will take you. The more you get down on yourself without applying the worse off you will feel, you wont know what your support system, someone to talk about what it is you are doing, and be proud of yourself. One of the best things about working is having motivated each day, something to do, so do things that you would be willing to talk about and feedback on, you never know what type of impression,” [3] just as unsure as you are about what this person has to offer you, so maybe this person about you, so be confident in yourself in the future? And what types of goals do you want to accomplish along the way, in order to meet those future goals. Know what your poster in any networking space, know what it is you are seeking, and speak to that audience, being mindful of their needs as well as your information, resources, tips, and offer.” [5] What do you say upon connecting with someone at a networking event or online? Express your things open, especially when you have questions, give the other person time to share from their perspective based upon what they know. A provider of information online, is to be able to have the same types of conversations in real life with people, about sharing and exchanging

How to Avoid Stress While Blogging ...

There are many elements to a successful blog post, besides a fancy display card you can make on canva, to attract visitors to your website. When you write anything you should always be aware of what else is written, and make sure not to step on too many toes in the process. According to forbes.com, there are “8 elements” [1] of a successful blog post: headline, compelling lead, subheads, informative and engaging content, and a clear call to action. For the reader, it suggests a main point, and all other elements compelling lead and subheads support that point, to “draw your readers in ... with interesting ideas.” [2] That’s actually one of the most stressful parts about blogging, staying on topic, and theme with your blog overall, and not coming across as some kind of preacher with no backing. Avoid the spread of rumors, if you want to talk about something, then look up who is talking about it rather than discuss them, in your own point of view, that ensures that your take is balanced, and also lets the reader see a different point of view. Movie: “The Social Network,” and reference Aaron Sorkin often in humor, because there was a martini glass passed in the movie in a scene that I mean that the two events are connected, and that he knows about that party and that I was in attendance, and then decided to make a scene out of it. I mean to date Marilyn Manson, the singer who was famously prosecuted for making music that was alleged to have contributed to the Columbine shooting, I wonder if he knew that and decided to do that to either make me or those around me feel special in knowing that piece of information. I mean, I was away of suicide. Yes blogging can be every stressful, why always calculate you distant connections in life, and take into account all your connections, information, and to what effect will sharing this piece of information have on my audience when thinking about a group of people as a whole, as though we are all actually connected in real life, now having read something that Ive written, so be positive! Now we get to your section, I have done for my blogging tips, autobiography, and book reviews, this makes for easy finding of information of similar content on your website. If there are your graphics to your website, think do these graphics represent what it is I am writing about, and what has been written about it. If you have written, try to keep up with a theme of interest, and avoid any pictures of words, that would be found offensive to others, do everything with purpose, add words, that really makes the best use of pictures on blogs than stand alone photos with captions, make your blog fun, it is after all a piece of art, skills too artistically, don’t rush it, take your time, a well made piece of art always shines, that’s the trick. If you decide to promote other people, etc, leave some explanation, and do so with purpose, and make sure with even higher purpose the rest of your blog represents the value of the organizations who specialize in the care of those specific populations in need.

Blogging is sometimes helping others, and sometimes its helping yourself, provide a “voice” [3] to events circumstances which when of the most difficult topics, and scarier subjects in modern day history, then we have lives, and have to continue living in spite of these have all figured out a way to let go, and let the dust settle, so that we are better prepared in addressing how to address what is important addressed as a whole, be taken apart of, or looked at and taken apart while in observation by most.

Book Dedication ...

You cant turn back, and erase what has been said, what has been done, and what has been thought, but there is always time to move forward. In the course of events in life, you’ll make sure to do a better job of being professional, even when its not expected of you. I have my parents headed in life, no matter what I had to say, always accepted me back into their lives, and welcomed my speedy recovery and always b

Some people correct you at your worst, especially those no longer in your lives, and the more you interpret as being about you, the worse associated with thinking things are about you, and for those reasons, let go, abandoned, ignored, or left alone to figure out life for yourself. No one can tell you when its time to return from failure, that’s your job to forgive yourself, and when the time is right, put yourself back on yourself, whether you are famous, well known for good or bad, and make better the previous concerns held by others, without reservation face or not.

People will always want to be apart of change, apart of a positive effect, and want to know how a positive effect is created within oneself. I know learned, that will always be for God to decide which talents shine and which talents fade with less than adequate care and focus to be strong about them.

This book is dedicated to all those who have cared for me along my journey to recovery, pen pals, friends old and new, best friends, enemies of school, never thought twice about image or reputation, and always felt safe no matter where I was in life. That’s how I was raised to

Finding your sense of peace to me means no longer feeling the need to backtrack and share stories as though sharing something known. I share your story. The public will always measure you by how you respond in crisis, how you express love and patience in private, and how you were, are, and can be, so long as your private spaces are not being attacked by others for observation is how I feel being trusted past the maladjusted now and whether one was maladjusted at the time they were in law school, working in positions of care, or while dating r

The people you meet in life, consider them blessings, where past avoidance of anything that matters to you now, is seen as an aftereffect. I have records, and medical history, to argue failed relationships, were not for the best interests of others as diagnosed bipolar, but for your own. Figuring out something larger than yourself, would make you feel whole, in place of the losses you have suffered due to your own mistakes with problems that were better off left figured out on your own or while under professional care not for feedback or shared as though wrong. And you learn this the hard way.

What you think is not always right, and the minute anyone disagrees with what you have to say, subjects you to defending your choices. I can be explained to for acceptances than your right to manage your own privacy interests. That’s when the need for acceptance stops, controlling decisions and choices to strengthen a negative belief in your decision making skills, as though you don’t preserve the past kindly, and not doing, than make to look like one had anger toward those separated from, as though ones drives in life, are to impress those in non-academic and defensive from all those you love, women, and the men who love the women you called friends.

Pride can only be achieved by acceptance and with concern for the thoughts of those who care. I thank my Mother for believing in me influenced any of the bad decisions I have made in life, choice words, or use of humor to lighten subjects concerning identity, race, or proud of yourself too, even without the perks of houses, friends, and jobs, they were always the best to share their lives with me, during

Not everyone will be there for you through thick and thin, mindful they have their own lives to lead absent minded you and your problems in any condition well or sick, strong or weak, poor or rich, social or not, pretty or overweight, going places in life, or just living up to needs of others, how to prepare for discussions, how to behave in public, how to speak to others, and how to live a good life without marriage,

And even if you are the last to interview your Father, and spend time with him, and ask him questions about life, be sure to thank him for something you talk about and show others, be happy for you. My Brother and Sister will always be in charge of me, having accepted your best not to self-harm and never give up.

Something that Sits Well ...

Something that sits well, can sometimes be something you assume others are thinking about you, and to not disfavor their best interests you positive or in the negative, is no ones business but your own. You ultimately control you. Its common as someone with bipolar to a relationship has ended, wondering what went wrong, at what point did I become tired, lose steam, become too sensitive, or aloof, lose energy, the causes for losses in energy I have experienced occur when Im being paranoid, backtracking through emails, or conversations past 10, the loss of energy at this moment. The meds change, the people change, but I am still the same person, I have to live with me, and whether to figure out, how to continue setting goals in life, and making progress, and not be another statistic, meaning quality under categories you make it far enough career wise to go to the after-work bar kickbacks, or attend events and cocktail hours and schmooze, befriend important document retrievals, that turn one day into one errand, instead of 5 hours at a desk, managing files, and trying to stay organized I do just in case I need to go back to a day, to review what was done, I can remember everything. Because of this condition thinking that especially now with COVID, feeling like all people are contagious and you have to protect yourself, that's okay some people have been stored within, and the only way to tap into those gifts is to challenge yourself, and if you cannot accept criticism in life, well then don't pink introduction added today. Sometimes people help in mysterious ways, not always purposefully, that inner excitement, is you feel connection, and if you look at someone in awe and see something special in them, that's because they are put together and don't allow world, more focused on whats going right. That makes sense, you can make a whole lot of rights feels bad, if you only acknowledge something, that someone can see in a day, and go oh year Ive thought that too. Writing is a fun profession, just like singing I guess your profession.

Personal Update ...

8/25/2020

Its important not to subject yourself to lawsuits in life, or bring up matters resolved, you may just run the risk of others putting themselves your interests think they are just as famous just as fragile or just as likely to have premature campaigns run for and on behalf of them about. Its never fun when once you were protected, all of a sudden get treated as an offender to the privacy interests of another, as though well in words, are then attacked as though while representing yourself you misrepresent truth or facts to make yourself look better or

Why Call a Judge ...

Calling a Judge serves one of two purposes, one it protects me from further harm, and two it protects those holding negative viewpoints about my life as they think it relates to their own. And two it also helps prevent the spread of those who think in treating me as a fraud parties to whom I've mentioned, as thinking they are in harms way, via my mentions, and in retaliation, hurt me as though I'm not allowed to intend for anyone else to be hurt, if it is my own interests I am protecting as though absent minded the best interests of everyone as a said, and understand that there are many offenders lurking online, which I cannot control, nor anyone else around me can control who why my friends have been hidden since (2008) and why I have lived for the most part a private life. The worst that can happen is someone taking the priority of my own, as though I would ever create a position, or share a viewpoint, that was not balanced, keeping in mind I can be loved just the same. -I feel like the less legitimately you are established online or as a company, that is how you will be treated, like I don't care, I care closely, think they know you best or others, and think that it's by what they think things are, without taking into account, the point at which I'm like if one company was allowed to vaguely reference your location, that any company could vaguely reference your work or identity without not by the secrets we keep that empower anyone, nor ourselves, life is all about how you are in public, how you manage yourself in public to prove otherwise, then that is the motive of anyone who is playing victim to you, to argue that you were not respected or difficult to talk to for your character was non-acceptance of you, and that that non-acceptance of you if widely accepted is something that cannot be changed easier for you to change than it would be to change the opinions of the majority. Theme: Something about you you cannot change, as you are we identified whether that something is: (1) gay (2) bad (3) a negative (4) a bad memory (5) an action (6) a faux pas (7) a need or (8) a fear (9) cancer and stopped having sex (2014). Very gross details, get tested, correct response: no one's fault but my own.

Gym Apathy: Why am I still fat? ...

In 2014 after my Brothers Wedding I decided to lose weight after seeing the wedding photos. I was a size 6 at the time, and wanted to lose 40-50 lbs, my starting weight was around 158-160, eventually I was 130-less than I was through Middle School, and Played Varsity Soccer on the School Team in High School. It was the first Girls Soccer Team, we managed to win the CIF, and in our first season were 22-0-and 1, undefeated, until the semi-finals of CIF, I was first team All-CIF, and the second leading scorer. In my freshman year, of 300 girls that tried out with numbers on our t-shirts, I was 1 of 5 freshman selected to play on the B team, I didn't go to Colorado, and I think once to Nebraska, we drove. I was overweight when I started college, but then worked out with a trainer summer after summer with heavy weights either, mostly sprinting, and push-ups, and squats, exercises with a medicine ball, and one-legged squats with a free weight. I took a class at the gym "sunrise yoga." I have always been active, whether that's boxing, or kickboxing, playing soccer, or spinning, that was my journey, and was my first heartbreak, upon getting sports injuries, tore ligaments in my ankle twice, and partially tore my MCL in my knee.

Losing weight is not easy, you would think that as someone who played soccer my whole life and went to the gym, that I would be able to stick to a strict salad diet, some snacks, no fast food, sandwiches on occasion for Subway, fruit, and not many carbs, no bread. I also took a pill called Orlistat, I'm not sure what that does for your system, but it was one thing I incorporated into my diet. At the time, when I lost the majority of my weight, I ran for at least 30 minutes, when I was a fast runner, each length at Ocean Ave, running half the length of the path, took me 10 minutes to complete, and once, and started running on the beach to marina del rey and back in the wet sand, and once in the deep sand after it rained, as directed by the lifeguard. -As you lose weight you don't really notice, but other people notice. I didn't really shop at the time, to buy any new clothes, I bought Nike spandex from Sports Chalet, and Danskin leggings from Shelleys on Westwood Blvd, where I used to buy dance shoes as a child.

When you first lose weight you're really excited about life, and have a lot of energy, that was new to me, I did rest a lot, being sore from running, I would go to bed hungry, and run on low fuel, to burn your existing fat cells, and run past the hour, to go into fat burning mode. I don't know if I should have lost more weight my whole life, its just never been something feasible to me. I used to run to 26th street in high school from my home on Rockwood Ave, I was running!

When you decide to lose weight do so at your own pace, there is not rush, unless you have an event, or a career that's at stake, or feel daily thing, not just a few times a week maintenance type activity, which happens after you lose the weight. I cant agree, I still have to do weights again, and squats, or try sit ups. I used to be a gym rat, but just stopped going to the gym, once I stopped working and started to lose weight. I have to accept you are you, and no matter what size you are, because of who you are, and because of what you look like, people will love you. It will not change no matter how much weight you lose.

Why its so important that as you lose weight, to also get to know your motivations in life, whether it be competition, desire to have the family photos, there are a lot of reasons why people decided to lose weight, and its mostly because of what they look like. Thinking that I would feel prettier, but was happier, did not feel skinny, but felt healthier, did not tone up, but became flat, and bulked up in between thinning the body is an amazing creature you get to take care of, and shape exactly how you want it to be, with enough time, energy and effort. So do it, and not losing faith in yourself, or worry too much about what your face looks like, its probably tired from all the exercise and running, and pills, and stay single, not date, until you have fully realized how hard you have worked to lose the weight, and how much you love you.

#BLOGPOST:

More than What Meets the Eye ...

I'm excited to announce the incorporation of modeling to my blog. After taking a few selfies and sharing them online, coupled with feedback from my followers, which I was scouted from, and offered brand ambassador deals to clothing websites. I guess this would make me a part-time fashion blogger. "outfits." Most of my clothes are for work, or for lounging around the house, sweatpants, t-shirts, and sweatshirts, not stuff I would do for a paid modeling advertisement I was offered 5 brand ambassador deals for websites, featuring modern day styles, trendy styles, and featuring my followers. I remember, when I started my Pinterest Fashion Blogs. To be their brand ambassador, I was required to purchase outfits from their site. "@ " symbol, at which time I will be given an affiliate code, to offer discounts to my followers!

If you have ever looked at someone and wondered about them, maybe it just means to get to know the person, and that there may be something not necessarily, its just noticing someone out from the crowd, someone who stands out to you, and for whatever reasons, draws your attention. (3) you think you have seen them before (4) are they famous (5) do they know someone famous (6) where are they from (7) have I met them in school, or through friends (11) are they an actor (12) are they a model (13) are they a professional writer ... and the list goes on, with more to add to our feeds, or remember their story as something of value, that helps us to see things better, everyone has a different affect on us. Not all of us sound the same way, and not all of us are able to understand the difference between who is standing out online and why and what about their own lives blogging. This you learn over time, who is more prepared than the other and why, and what is it about them that makes them stand out in writing, it's a combination of both. Not all people with famous friends become famous themselves, or popular online, not everything

In college my best friend and I were offered to be featured in Glamour Magazine, how I knew a story about our friendship would be covered was not thought otherwise, Im assuming others thought I was blogging to be famous as though Im not supposed to be famous, or that me blogging is a time comes and when others are ready, they will step out into the spotlight, that's once you've reached an age of maturity, that you are ready to take on the world. -I have been in touch with them since, sharing stories of racism on campus, to book writing, always sending updates, time and time again. Not without a fight and proper representation of the issues, affecting her while I was in law school, there are many reasons why people do not want to be featured because my identity was known and being used to commit crimes, or that my life and the way I was telling my story, was being done for my brother who was terrorized in Mumbai, and decided not to participate on Facebook until 2016, 2017, and that was only for a Shorty Award.

When people take a step back, and do not wish to be included, don't take it personally, that just means that they do not want to be included in your methodology is sound, and in good taste. When people have other things to do, and do not want their name attached to your name, the reason is not a good representation of themselves, or of those they know, why they do not want to incorporate you into their lives, or introduce you to their friends. I think that you have presented a poorly sculpted set of standards and beliefs online, pointing you in the wrong direction in life, and do not know who to support, and why, and whether who is being supported, is because of crime, a crime related to someone you know, not created by you. Promotions and promotion are not indefinite, which is why I built a website, to promote those interests, but at the same time not over promote issues that are not your own. I am not to blame for causes. As though being a member of Brady was a defense. I am a certified crisis hotline counselor in the State of Colorado.

Not everyone responds the same way under stress. I hope that by sharing my experiences, we will be less judgmental to those who support causes once the issues are raised and called to the public's attention, be more supportive listeners, and bystanders, than say nothing at all (lulu.com, book cover options, Im sorry), and not by talking about those who commit crimes (we are sorry we chose the color orange).

What I am doing here right now, is blogging. This is a career choice, based upon what I was able to do while a law student, work part-time, and be a philanthropist because I don't have money, but the same idea, helping without expectation of receiving anything in return for helping.

If you haven't decided what your blogging niche should be, don't stress out. As you become more and more familiar with the process

What is a blog niche? "A blog niche is a carefully selected topic area that you'll be focusing your blog content around." [1] Eventually your posts need to be money making posts, nor do they all have to be about how to make money, the goal is to be likeable, someone that

Make it easy to read. and if you've got something to say about an organization that you care about then by all means share. [2] In fact, I've been involved in anti-gun violence campaigns, and so my journey began. Your content is capable of not only helping your audience to understand something you care about, or about an issue that matters to you, like mental health advocacy means to me.

Tell your story. "bringing a more personal approach to your content is a great way to draw attention to your content." [3] When I first started publishing in a way that was eye catching, and with color, and fun fonts, on social media. Gradually as I became more and more comfortable with the app canva and iStock photos to decorate my posts for the readers enjoyment, there are so many ways to look organized and one way to make it provided.

Share your stats. One of the most exciting aspects of maintaining a blog, is watching your growth, and as exciting as it is for you, so is it for your readers and bloggers to share graphs, stats, and ranking, be proud of your work! They will want to see what you did, how you did it, and how you are doing. Your visitors are returning or unique, and keep track of your most popular posts, and do your best to continue to improve upon the quality of your content.

How to come up with ideas? If you want to become a top blogger, at some point you're going to have to look at other people's blogs, and learn from their healthy process of improving upon the content you already provide by seeing what else is out there. It will help you "bring up any clever ideas"

common “blog headlines” for content that is wanted online, and do your best! [5]

How to Love Without Being Too Needy ...

8/22/2020

We all slip up on occasion, whether that’s being too needy, too demanding, asking too many questions, not being trusting enough, and not staying together, not push each other apart. According to wtvbam.com, there are “7 Ways to Make a Man [or Woman] Feel Needed (Without Being Too Needy)”

1. Let Them Help You
2. Don't Humiliate When They Do Not Live Up to Expectation
3. Don't Overdo the Nagging
4. Be Affectionate and Vulnerable
5. Tell Them What Makes You Happy
6. Don't Be Insulted When Insulted
7. Set Boundaries and Be Yourself [2]

Most people “feel empowered when they’re needed,” [3] and there are more ways to love and be loved without hurting one another in which can feel like a risk, but so reassuring when they love us anyways, despite our faults, difficulties, and setbacks. You never know love in a loving way, not cause one another to feel uncomfortable about themselves, as anyone would trying to make a good impression.

It's very common to be in relationships when one or the other loves the other more than the other, it is also common to be in relationships that exists when you restore an otherwise “distorted and inaccurate view of yourself” [5] during the process of loving someone else, pay love up back, that's love, we don't always feel good, and love is great because it's the type of relationship that exists where two people make each other better.

According to gleedating.com, “neediness is also a reflection of your self-esteem and self-confidence, security, self-respect and overall self-worth. It is a reinforcer of those qualities in someone you love, without having those qualities about yourself to begin with, why it's so important to have self-love which you are with expectation to care for someone, represent someone, believe in someone, and give to someone, all of those things are important to have.”

Are your needs met? [7] Think who is responsible for the way I feel about myself, the less you blame others for the way you feel, the more you love yourself without making someone love you to fulfill an unmet need self-esteem wise, feel good to feel good, don't expect someone to make you feel good, loves you, who may not feel good if you don't feel good and they are doing everything they can to make you feel good.

We don't always get the validation that we need. [8] In fact huffpost.com states, “Consistent, thoughtful validation of your partner's life in the world with another, asking each other questions, and being apart of one another's daily discussions about life, where they stand, what they want, and their lives. And in exchange you “see things for their point of view,” these are simple ways to connect and “validate” one another's thoughts and feelings just as they are.” [10].

How does this conversation relate to the ones I love? As a recovering self-harmer, I'm sure there have been times when I have been diagnosed with a lack of understanding of my needs, and would complain, and attack my sense of stability and be accusatory toward me, as though I was doing something wrong. Getting to see me I guess was a “confusing, confronting, frightening” leaving them feeling helpless. Know that judging and criticizing someone is not helpful.

“People who self-harm are strong and brave and they want to get better. The worst thing you can do is judge. Self-harm is driven by a need for self-harm.” [12]

This is why it's important to disclose to your partner when it gets to that point in a relationship when you share secrets, or finances, or when it's disempowering to have the other be taking care of you and questioning your care of yourself, but that is because they have made it their job to care for you, said, if you need them, but can't tell them you need them, because you self-harm and don't know how to ask for help, just tell them, I'm self-harming, please be aware of my condition. If there is a will there is a way, and the best way to be loved and to give love is to be open.

Fixing Yourself ...

You wont always fix yourself in time to be loved, admired, respected, adored, friended, or hired, and some mistakes you live with for once in life to learn a lesson, that includes during the process of giving and receiving loves in life, allow hurt to get the best of you, you only looking for negatives and justification to judge you as being in the wrong, as though in need coming on to someone, and then on this point the only people whos opinions are too strong, are the observers, if you become unhappy not understood, if you sound stupid of cold bit$ch who only cares for themselves, how am I supposed to love someone who is unhappy with me, who says they love me, but my life, my face, my body, my tone, my words, or my love. Then why am I expected to continue to respond to someone who is then b and if 2020, doing better and having had improved over the course of a year beginning 2019, beginning to be myself, speak intelligently wrong. If this person is married then me talking to him automatically puts me in the wrong, makes me look like trash, an opportunist, need any advice, pardons, representation, sympathies, or feedback as though I am not in touch with reality, or do not recognize how I society, you don't have friends, you don't get jobs, you can finish school if you are already in a school and they don't let you go, you down in life, and you may not come up further in life at all, meaning earn a wage, a paycheck, get a job, if you did not apply before a understand I was above the legal limit, but no at that time it was not wrong for me to drink, because I was not prescribed night meds. I did not drink in college, I did not drink in high school, and I only drank occasionally in law school with my boyfriend, and after we br have done wrong, you will always be seen as less than, a chump, a brat, a delusional girl, who lives life like everything is handed to h like, like I don't know what loss is like, like I am not a victim, like Ive never struggled, and without compassion for my disabilities in and fun and loving and well adjusted and clear headed, something put on my conscious that I did not understand or affected my well b adjustment to reality, after something bad has happened, and no matter whos fault it is, for looking stupid, easy, slutty, immature, or r who leaves a relationship of someone with a big name, put down and treated as though one is a hot head, thinks they are better can do experience what looking like a grose, fat, ugly, and disgusting looking woman online being sexy in public feels like. That treatment I present mental health issues loss of positivity.

Ownership, Control, and Image ...

When you no longer feel close to someone, there is sometimes an ownership and control issue, over your livelihood, what you're doing of others, or you are not, the benefit of blogging to anyone not in my life, is that they get to hear from me, and never have to ask about derived some personal benefit to them health wise, or conscious wise, feeling more in control, having something or someone in life, to best operating independently of one another, and not reliant on one another for insights, best decision making practices, and successful whether its your duty to “have and to hold” a heart of someone who is just a pen pal, for that much one is not responsible for the well being a doctor is needed to figure out those issues, its not the responsibility of the woman to cure the man of their negative feelings, worries, its them feeling good, and you needing to make them feel good, and then if you don't feel better or good, upon receipt of their love, of Meeting Expectation ...

There are so many expectations in life to live up to, in career, in your academics, in your relationships, and as a friend to your friends. are much different, with a higher expectation of reply, and a higher expectation of the speed of processing and production of reply to a between parties. Some are more understanding than others, and when theres a fight, there seems to be no stopping point in the number understandings reciprocated which does always occur in that order. Online it’s the type of environment where people want whats free, screen, does not mean that you are incapable of hurting another person, their feelings, or affect their well being, and ability to trust and started there was a common sense understanding of the value of one anothers time, and focus on things related to their own lives, and that they are not loved, that’s the difficulty with online relationships, they can see you, and get empowered in talking to a real person, extremely nerve wracking experience. I think in my bipolar I just wanted people to talk to, because in my bipolar I stopped talking to people afford to take courses, and lived life at a slower pace, didn’t get married, left a relationship, and decided to focus on myself, everytime diagnose, and finally surrender to the medications that initially cause you to feel really tired and lethargic, it takes awhile to adjust to the demands, complaints, or requests, and when you do when youre tired, usually things go wrong, its not good enough, and then theres re under a different light, to their amusement, then don’t ask for pictures, don’t pretend to be in love, and don’t pretend that you don’t have condition as bipolar, simply because you need love online. This is why I am not going to date online anymore, and am choosing to date

Social Media and Sharing ...

There are many ways to market yourself, but one of the fastest ways to get your name out there and market your brand or product is through upon that concept of interaction online, as you assemble all the communities and interactions within those communities, you realize how There used to be “fears about social displacement.” [2] However, less interaction in real life, and more interaction online has become true friends, I had, and now rarely keep in touch with if not at all, having completely separate lives now, in our 30s, which is kind of scary, would think that people who primarily spend all their time on social media for human interaction would be viewed in that way, as men anyways. It seems that online where you can be your “ideal-self” [4] is taking away from the need to present our real selves in real life confidence building, yes and no. Its for both, business and identity management. However how can social media aide and assist us with me. I wonder sometimes ... however yes the support online is well worth all the struggles Ive been through personally, without whom Managing Bipolar & Negative Thoughts ...

I can't say that its been easy managing bipolar symptoms over the years, but I can say that things have gotten better with meds. Note: . behaviors. The following tips have been suggested as a way for helping people manage their bipolar symptoms:

1. Control stress, stress is a major trigger.
2. Keep a regular schedule.
3. Stick to a routine.
4. Practice healthy sleep habits.
5. Get moving, exercise.
6. Avoid caffeine, alcohol, and drugs.
7. Write it down. [1]

Coping with mood swings, and delusional thoughts can be a very depressing concept to understand about a person, and whether or not imbalance that alters a person's moods.” [2] You would think that someone with bipolar can simply turn their feelings and emotions on example, it has been my experience with bipolar, to notice when my thinking is off, such as believing in things to be true that aren't true being in a negative mood. A lot of managing bipolar is just that, staying positive. We are told to “catch it, check it, change it” something

1. Catch It: Identify when you are having negative thoughts.
2. Check It: Stop and think about what you're thinking is it really true?
3. Change It: Substitute those thoughts with more realistic thoughts. [5]

The purpose of “Catch it, Check it, Change it” is to begin the practice of “breaking down negative thinking patterns” [6] noticing when away from the world and struggling on your own, don't do that to yourself. Recognize that you are worthy of thinking and feeling good

CATCH IT

1 - IDENTIFY the unhelpful thoughts
(Misinterpretations)

CHALLENGE IT

2 - CHALLENGE those thoughts - look at the

Personal Update ...

8/13/2020

The point at which things turn on you:

1. Is by what you allow.
2. Making things about you.
3. Assuming things are thought about you.

4. Assuming the judgments of others.
5. Stating the judgments of others, for them to deny.
6. Being left only with your words with no proof of judgment.
7. How much you provide for misinterpretation.
8. Saying terms to enter the minds of others for added judgment.
9. Turning your audience against you, or into who dislikes you.
10. Leaving room for assumption about you: disfigurement, body image.
11. Not taking good care of yourself ie weight gain.
12. Looking like someone who is unlikeable, or worthy of rejection.
13. Not looking loveable or well liked, easy to love, hard to love.
14. Looking like imitation a character fabricated, other than yourself
15. Inability to be yourself, causing others to think you are imitation.
16. Not yourself enough around the majority, to not be understood as feminine.
17. Being sweet, and punished for being sweet, then treated as grose, or reject.
18. Upon being bitchy or negative, treated as a bitch or a negative person.
19. Upon looking like you are asking for attentions, treated in a hurtful way.
20. Not understanding of you insecurities, or lost confidences in life.
21. Treated as jealous, or wicked, or vindictive, heartbreaking.
22. Lost love due to your own lack of monogamy, when only talked to them.
23. Lost friends due to your own shortcomings, or commentary, at fault.
24. Lost friends due to your own insecurities or jealousies, not able to maintain.
25. Lost friends, due to weight gain, or lack of self-care, or injuries caused.
26. Heartbreak due to loss, loss of people, or loss of ability, viewed as power.

Lesson Upon Mention ...

8/12/2020

Its always a good idea to remember your past, and reflect upon your connections in life, before ever speaking in public, and make sure to an issue, a stance that I think most people by now would agree with, to support once its become blatantly aware, and labeled a pand beliefs, how they have been affected, or avail themselves publicly as resources to help aide and assist others in trauma, how to best mo responsibility for what can be done, without overfocusing on whats not been done, especially during a time of need. Probably, but just not willing to admit to it, a lot of women, think theyre above online dating, not to say that I was one of them, Ive tried approximately. You never know where this life will take you, but its okay to try something once, I hear on Bumble you can set it to BL featuring them in articles, on my to-do list something new for me 2020, socializing. I guess working beats "dinner dates over Zoom life, still in check. That's a whole nother subject, modeling and vlogging in private, I guess it depends on how comfortable you are, ne responsibility to get someone hard in life, your psyche is more important, than that need to be loved, there are so many other ways to s had one bikini when I started blogging, Im just not a bathing suit person, super shy. -Overall ... "Staying inside and doing your part to after COVID passes in California, if they haven't matched up yet and already started families, which is what happened to most of the person? [5] Of course you can, I get missed calls from the White House, he's very demanding of my time and attention, and Im nice to intelligence," [6] ha I just laughed out loud, I see why beauty is so important now, my genes are not strong anyways, my Brothers chil enough in the best of times," [7] good point, and makes the ultimate judgment call that "you are your safest sex partner," [8] and while social online within reason, and don't send any photos youre Mom wouldn't approve of, "don't take sexy photos." Love my Mom she me Im "beautiful."

My Original Sober Date ...

Ive been trying to stay sober for years now, beginning in 2014, then again in 2017, my original sober date was 04-02-17. Be mindful th my senior year in college, in Boulder Colorado where I went to school they were very strict with IDs. I was on Deans List, and in ever of heart, and energy invested into my academics, not much has changed huh. When I tried coke with my friends, I was not planning on going to every class, studying everyday, didn't turn in my final exam essays, stopped volunteering, and eventually lost touch with my Hospital, mostly with people who were court ordered to be there, I was the only one who attended voluntarily. That's when I attended Colorado to LA with my two guy friends, Boulder natives, and dropped them off at a hotel in Hollywood I remember, the Sunburst ho Had it not been for divine intervention, I do not think I would have faired well more than a semester of drinking and drug use, I don't t girls Christian Rehab in Dana Pointe for two months. I used to go to a womens meeting in Venice, and a Gay meeting in Santa Monic fellowship, that's when you are friends with people outside of the meeting and get coffee together, and also went through all 12 steps 1 meetings is when I got sick again, some of you probably witnessed, my bottoms on social media, I tried leaving at a certain point 2017 Website in Los Angeles, Feedspot recently sent me an email to congratulate me, along with being a Top 100 Self Improvement and Pe together, balanced, even tempered, hardworking, stable, motivated, positive, reliable, and responsive. I remember the days when I did to reach my goals in life, such as graduating from Law School and am so proud I finally finished.

My new sober date is 01-18-20.

As a writer myself, I have found that the fastest way for me to build an audience was by blogging, not by publishing a book right away. I recently found this new app canva, to make cards for my blog posts, on wordpress, and recently found out that they also make e-books: <https://www.canva.com>. It's money working online. Everyone gets to a point while blogging when they want to monetize their sites, and well if youre not comfortable working with editors, throughout the book making process. Its very expensive to make and edit a book and to distribute a book by a publisher where you were when you started to see where you are now, and fully appreciate all your growth as writer, why books are so important. I write on topics you write on, and that way you can do your own research, and pick which topics to write about that you think will be most profitable. backup. Good luck!

The Toughest Part of Being a Blogger ...

Going through a moment of writers block lately, trying to figure out in what direction I want to take my blog, as you all know, I love social media. It is building and maintaining an audience. As a micro blogger for years on Twitter, I always dreamed of having an account with likes and followers on a platform and sharing on facebook, pinterest, instagram, and twitter (4) sharing links to my work in blogging communities such as blog reading has played a huge role in my ability to write everyday, I buy books on Amazon or go to the Amazon Bookstore, and buy any new books on my account, for collecting bloggers and blogging community RT accounts that collect bloggers and what bloggers post to. I will first have wanted to move my website “migrate” to Wordpress, but will probably need to hire someone to “migrate” my posts to a Wordpress site. While that bloggers face, while trying to build a blog for themselves, I would say never give up, you will find your niche, you will establish a Staying Motivated as a Blogger ...

8/8/2020

Its important to stay motivated as a blogger, no one is going to do the work for you, and unless you are willing to learn will you get be generously and unilaterally for the good of anyone who can benefit from them.” [2] As a self-improvement blogger, of course as I exp benefits from how I have come to know or learn about a specific experience in life, and how I have changed through the process.

According to the internationalbloggersassociation.com, blogging can be many different things to you, “enjoyable, a chore, or both.” [3] meet that goal in life, and how do you plan to go about achieving that goal? This article suggests coming up with a “blogging routine,”

Meanwhile, I have found through my own experiences blogging, that once you learn everything you need to know in order to get going will go through in most things in life, its called the learning curve. One of the most important things you will do with your blog is distr don’t give up, it takes time to establish a blog, and hope that as I continue to make progress so does everyone reading, while setting go

The Ongoing Debate: Nudity ...

The thegryphon.co.uk, wrote an interesting piece on nudity and empowerment, stating that:

“There is an on-going debate over whether female empowerment should take the form of conservativeness or openness. This is not ju woman’s sexuality should be kept under wraps. Deviating from this stereotype results in some women being shamed as promiscuous o reaction is also a result of the stigma towards nudity; nudity is frequently equated with the desire to inappropriately sexualise oneself

Im new to journalism and writing online, and publishing, as a registered publishing corporation, writing and publishing my own mater health status, nor aggravates my condition or the condition of others, which is why its so important to not be offensive, or come across up an issue found to be offensive to another, insulted by, this just leaves room for error in terms of acceptance of you, to not denomin woman, someone who is confident, and someone who is willing to bare all, without recourse, be accepted in life, without negative jud a moment of strength and pride in themselves, and representing to all what a confident woman looks like. I don’t think Im at that point self-harm, is grossly irresponsible of someone claiming to love me, or be a fan, as though that was done with care while telling me he Brown to update her on my progress, and to apologize for taking nude photos upon request, which were shared online, always act with you to be harmed, by sharing your mind heart or body with someone when you are not stable and confident, not completely proud of a proud. Life is short but it doesn’t need to be that short, that you take such risks with your identity in life, and bare all to the world, as t at you and think youre gross, especially if you are not happy with yourself, don’t expect that unhappiness and displeasure with oneself slowly become confident again about who you are, think twice before giving your love away or trust anyone claiming to love you, wi

Online Harassment ...

Under article 127 “of the Communications Act 2003” it is an “offence to send by means of public electronic communications network any such message or matter to be so sent.” [1] The purpose of this law was to “protect the integrity of public telecommunication services.” [2] In today's day and age, you are what you put out into the world, and that feeling produced, must reflect your current state of your face no matter what you look like, its better to be seen than not seen at all, is what I learned this year putting photos of myself online depending upon who the recipient is, whether the recipient was the intended recipient, in this case my fans, as noted by the account name the worse version was shown not the better version. If one believes that they are offended and that because they feel offended think well you know you have a record, than that is how they see you no matter what dress, as unattractive, dirty, not smart, and disposable, unempathetic someone without a record, why one who is bad does not show much of themselves, because their presence is offensive to those who are they look worse, because they have been declared worse or harmful to society, and if one has presented a risk to the feelings of another person you without a word as though “you should know why you're not getting a reply” like that's deserved, or their right to reject you because you are punished as though its because one is bad that bad things have happened to them like its because they are bad that is why bad people are a potential for attracting bad luck, to who surrounds them, you are measured therefore by whether someone likes you a yes or a no, and if you want to engage, then that is why they say no, so that in the event things don't work out, they stuck to their first instinct upon looking at you around, and they're not sure of you, is why people do not surround themselves with people they do not trust, out of fear that that bad luck is considered when weighing the potential of harm existing when a website, who poses as a “fake newspaper” (which can include a defamatory in this case with STDs who seek liaisons, whether organizing a “group of hackers to sabotage ... emails and numerous other activities” on the publication of information true or not direct or indirectly communicated to the claimant. Meaning intrusion was fair on the basis of does not want to know or be exposed to someone, and if without choice, does not make it the producer's responsibility, to control the exposure of those who already hold disfavorable interests to the producer's standpoint). What's important to note is that if one is exposed (or assumed to be) to activities which known and seen by all would cause a different opinion of them to be drawn), then whether or not a communication to the existing claims about a person left standing), in response to something shared privately, not known to my audience, and retaliated on the defendant who may be the recipient of an unwanted inference on the basis of a company name “no means no” as though a company name is protected, assuming one should expect harm thereafter suffering from a restraining order on one's record, amounting to “civil harassment”

“A restraining order that prohibited indefinitely an offender from publishing any information about the complainant or his fiancée, with the offender clearly had difficulty distinguishing between that which was true and that which was false, and it was clear that she was willfully acting with a legitimate aim and was necessary and proportionate.” [2]

Here my purpose was to write a book, a book has been written, and was my job as a law student, to continue working toward goals of a good reputation, and re-building positive rapport and trust with those around me or newly coming into my life, be aware of where I am at and where I'm directed, accountability, progress, and to finish law school and graduate with a masters in law (MSL or LLM).

The minute you feel like fighting, take a step back, especially if you're a public speaker, you never know who you may be causing equanimity to who may be overlooking your life, the change of course, and troubles you encountered. Once someone has made you look stupid, they thought that was supposed to go toward publishing your first book, and instead went toward love, which wasn't an immediate necessity but was to look crazy in public, it just gives you power away to whomever is ignoring you, looking for a reaction from you, to see whether you're happy or depressed, both, why I take meds, day meds to stay awake, and night meds to go to sleep, I was once prescribed Provigil which is for 30 days, so decided to go back on Vyvanse to be able to keep up with the pace of the times, graduate from law school, work a job from 9am to 5pm, taking 3-4 night meds just to sleep, and she thought that was took many night meds. When people are experimental with you, they're bothered sensitive, then that makes them feel that much more empowered, like this person is so unstable internally, that when this is so her head. For what purpose does that serve to treat someone as a test subject. You have no research experience, and no experience with comfortable with that's not living for the moment, those boundaries are up because my confidence, personality, happiness, and well being by someone who is more well without disability and on meds, overpowering my ability, with what they think is rational or deserving, Degeneres and publicly out me as GAY to the world and cause me suicide when I have never hooked up with a woman in my entire life. Defame me and make me look gross, or see if anyone else complains about my naked body that you are showing online to hurt me, and me to open up, then treat me as criminal, and shoot me in the face online like I don't matter? This person doesn't even treat me as human. Complete my goals in life: graduate, book, and marriage. #stop hate. For some, they figure, trashing you is keeping things light, like I do and sober. Don't talk down to me, like if I drink I'll go to jail, don't sabotage me, hurt me during job interviews and upon meeting someone that causes other people to distance themselves from me not feel good to them.

Don't Put Yourself Down in Life ...

8/30/2020

Manage your symptoms, whether it be stress, bipolar, anger, or depression, have some self-control, and do as directed, seeking professional help that you do not recognize your "own worth," it's a character trait, not to be mistaken for humility which can feel the same, and not talking about it can be easy for all these emotions to pile up, not feeling good about yourself, and not knowing what to do to get yourself out of a mental rut, needs, saying sorry or feeling guilty, going along with everything without saying a word, not feeling capable or deserving, difficulty with internal dialogue. [2] Have you read my Twitter lately, seems like I am arguing with myself sometimes, about things not quite existing, I would say in defense of self, like I can change the past or the way I am feeling now, by talking about what's bothering me, that doesn't currently stand at odds with you, enabling them to get an inside perspective from you in a non-biased tone that explains your point of view, but can cause mental anguish and physical pain heartbreak once you realize, how much you allowed someone to pry, get into your life, see you look stupid in the long run for complying with such grandiose requests, stuff you'd never do on your own, only done so at their request. If you do not wish to be seen or remember yourself by, this can make you feel like your whole life is over, when you have been portrayed

Getting Back Center ...

8/29/2020

1. Forgive yourself, not everyone's perfect, we all have bad days.
2. Less is more, apologize, and move on, without rehashing the past.
3. Your issues are your issues, are your issues, are your issues.
4. We all fall in love or find ourselves in loving relationships and then get hurt.

Always put your best foot forward, and present the good things about you, without overshadowing your faults out loud, or "baggage" expect the same of them, if you ever overheard them talk about you, speaking of you in the positive, hopeful for your recovery, and come through darker times, when things were not as coordinated, and easy going, when we measured our successes upon lives lived, over lives lost, to manage, keep track of, contribute to, that lifts me, and continues to grow in a positive way stats wise, as I do better personally, going on. If you don't understand, what it was like, prior to finding a sense of peace, absent minded camaradery, that left people feeling stuck, giving up, even under spotlights, it's all a matter of what you choose to associate with, mentally and physically, you are always in control. You won't be so easily influenced to think less of yourself, and then think less of what future has been made available for you to live. Be strong, lighten our loads, or photos past of taller moments in time, when we had the world at our fingertips. That distance you feel going past, then you probably don't want to launch your site, and run the risk of your audience feeling that instability and again feel like they're not. I'm at peace, and this person may be tripping but it has nothing to do with me, and be your positive selves, that's a strong person, resilient.

8/29/2020

As someone with a history of self-harming, I wouldn't categorize myself as vain or in need of attention, I have been independent most of the time, no issues ever surfacing that interfered with my ability to be social, be well liked, date, or feel loved. Always well taken care of. Eventually you reach a point in life, where you will experience unhappiness, either with yourself or displeasure when it comes to loving yourself differently among others, while speaking about you, not speak about you in the positive or in an uplifting or empowering way. Your feelings may be hurt, by someone you trusted, held up on a pedestal, and treated as special your whole life, it's not the end of the world, they were to them, after all you have been in their life longer, why is someone new suddenly more in the know about how everyone feels? They are of concern, that people get to know someone on a deeper level, or come to think about things differently in observance of someone going on around them, and wonder whether that has anything to do, with the similar changes noticed previously of concern, that one might hear at some point in your life, if you have bipolar, and it has not yet been diagnosed, those maybe tell-tale signs, of what's to come. I wonder what is wrong with you, like "why are you sleeping so much." [1] #dontdodrug ... That's just how friends are, and the less you know, the more normal, means you're not acknowledging that there could be something wrong with you, and to get a professional opinion, no one knows themselves, once they become uncomfortable being the person they have become, someone different, unrecognizable to those who have known you, changes that tear friends apart, separate friends, cause friends of friends to feel closer or bonded, the more troubles you encounter, in life, as being different under the pressures of LSATs, and applications, personal statements, rejection letters, and dating your first boyfriend, it's not one catch. The boyfriend would rather spend time with his friends than spend downtime with you, that includes him rather having dinner with you. When it gets to the point that you are sleeping through life, that just means that you haven't gone to therapy yet, sometimes people like us more, or fit in better with everyone else, and if your girlfriend napping in his bedroom, while everyone hanging out outside, that's not a friend, who later stated "I like to always be in control" when I drink, I guess that was a less than flattering exhibition of "talking Shit" trailer candy pants" and you thought that that was too friendly for work, then later worked in entertainment 2018, and realized that's just me who's present, who doesn't complain, gets promoted, that was me, as someone who was older, maybe intimidated by the film student, that's just me a paralegal.

Disturbed Sense of Peace ...

Not all relationships will last, and in any business relationship, in which added consideration of you is required in order to maintain control, giving money in exchange for a service. And sometimes we don't always get what we bargained for, and even worse a result we never expected. Payment in exchange for their services, but what happens when you stop paying money in exchange, and no services are offered, that's not your money into a system of support that no longer supports you, call it unprofessional but they are just that, demanding of your time energy, and inner peace go hand in hand," so no matter what "life throws [your] way" [1] be able maintain enough strength and courage to know when things are no longer working out for you in your favor, and when you decide to let go, we are all here for you. Don't blame yourself when things go wrong, whatever they say, and the more power and control you give to them, sometimes the worse things get. Thinking that they have power over your mind, body, and soul, don't allow that to happen to you. When you have been nice and have done everything in your power, following through with their word, it's not your fault, that you invested money into a failed relationship, it may hurt, that you were so trusting, that thought was a celebrity meeting service, money that should have been spent on publishing a book, and updating my website, was spent on something that don't give up in life, or on yourself, just because you got swindled, when you were down and out into believing a set of circumstances that were out of your control, and don't allow them to.

Uneven Exchanges ...

There's a point in everyone's life, when we question our own self-worth, and purpose in life, now is one of those times. It's usually after you going in life, feeling less than, feeling not good enough, someone who questions you usually does the trick. If you love yourself, you. Your health comes first, and while you will meet people in life, who will love you and care about you, it's you that comes first. No defame you and embarrass you in public, like you deserve to be treated that way, because it makes them feel better about themselves, about you, is more important than your own version of events, when talking about your own life. People will come into your life, that appear less than, as you come up in life, and get overshadowed by the identity of someone you no longer want to associate to having been not being married, used for not having a job, and used for knowing someone famous, treated as someone less than, to make themselves feel them, to make themselves feel of value or having something valuable to say or talk about. That's just life, there will be people who are bullies, who think that just because you know people of importance, that they can bring you down in life, to make you feel less than of a way of trying to control you, by putting you down, so that you feel scared, or feel like by abiding by their threats, that things will get better. You have a right to hurt you or turn on you, should you no longer abide by their requests for money or photos, that is how a relationship is

Pen Pal (1): Met on Facebook messenger, thought he was a Trump supporter, but today found out that he is not a Trump supporter, but for the past few months, talking since March, and just received 4 missed calls from the White House, and have just confirmed it's not I at this moment in time, demanding of me sexually to please him or else he would put pages up on Facebook of photos of me requested for. I don't need a man in my life to feel loved, I don't need love to do well in life, and this whole experience is making me feel sick, as I'm

Pen Pal (2): Met on Facebook messenger, though he was a Leonardo DiCaprio fan page, and then conversation was moved to Google Hangouts for a meeting to be held, $7000 was paid over a period of six months, in pre-paid cards and moneygrams cash, and as I slowly woke up talking about it. These people ask for things from me, in order to be friends, and then hurt me if I decide I want out, or to discontinue things only got worse. It seems like everyone will F you over in life at the same time, if they so choose. The goal is not to get upset, so being, they expect things done the day of requested for, the demand money from all bank accounts, and keep asking until you have no money to the world and online to punish you and make you look stupid, like you haven't already been punished enough, losing $7000 without

The main lesson is that no matter how much you need love, make sure to meet them first on a dating network such as Tinder or Bumble, close confidants. There will always be an uneven exchange, as someone who is younger, looking for love, from someone in your age group of your image in public, slut shaming you to the world, when none of your take down requests are being honored by Facebook. Who ends, trying to negotiate with people who are causing you harm, there is always time to ask for help. Never give up, if you know you should have to put up with these types of abuses in life.

Get Your Power Back ...

In an online world, communications are king, and we all know, the less you communicate the more room you leave for interpretation, with your following or commentators. You are your own worst critic, and even worse may others be of you. Stay calm. In case you have competing with you, for you, or against you in life, and when utilized at their discretion, can easily subject yourself to looking like a clown, less concerned you are with the lives of others the better, this only adds fuel to the fire, the more you lend your insights for interpretation to people to like you who are not sure about you or who have grown disinterested in you, they will never respect you, and that's just some of representing those ideals in life, beauty and intelligence. While everyone else looks like imitation of beauty and intelligence, as though and intelligence itself acquired. Understand these facets of life, but don't allow yourself to be ruled by these controversies in life, how you complain, you are doing yourself a disservice in life "it can be useful for venting your frustrations and getting sympathy," [1] but you should do their best and put their best foot forward. Feelings are a choice, identify and come to understand your triggers in life, and make up your mind, whack, not be controlled by what is thought of you, when you are less than being yourself online, why it's important not to become too much what you are saying, versus sounding like someone who is convincing others to think a certain way, you are thinking, as though that's including ones fears and insecurities about life, the way one looks, or what we think people are thinking about us, delusion. When you come across as insulting to anyone with less in life, be mindful, don't provide fuel for argument, and if you are being negative about life, be stable for advices in life, than someone who can barely organize their own thoughts about life and be present. How are you feeling? If you are not happy with your life, no one needs to know, why you are so intense or passionate about advocacy or about your decisions, its your life, and its none of your business to worry about, why they read along anyways. Its not the problem of anyone in real life or online to resolve you in the grand scheme of things success wise. Remember "this is your journey. So find out what empowers you." [2]

Reminders: Getting Your Power Back After Embarrassment:

1. Don't Complain.
2. Be Yourself.
3. Don't Be Ruled by Negative Interpretations.
4. Charades Go On Whether or Not You Contribute.
5. Speak Honestly and Candidly, Without Fear.
6. Be a Trustworthy Resource in Life, Not Inflict Blames.
7. Know Yourself Better than You Know Others.
8. Don't Hold Grudges and Let Things Go.

Networking Tips ...

8/27/2020

Before your next meeting: Networking Reminders:

- Be open to meeting new people
- Speak to those you have something in common with.
- Never ask for a job.
- Establish rapport.
- Be proud of yourself.
- Focus on making a great first impression.
- Be confident.
- Where do you see yourself in the future?
- Generate an elevator pitch.
- Be a good listener.
- Don't be afraid to connect.

One of the most important things to think when networking is that "everyone has something to learn and gain." [1] Be open to meeting in common with, and know what you are looking for before the conversation even get started. What are you about. Be able to summarize that makes you unique and exciting and why would other people be interested in talking to you. You can get help in your job searches opportunity may arise in the future, your contact may be willing to refer you." [2] I just joined Bumble Bizz, and have begun the process. I'll let you know how it goes. Im meeting with someone from Ziprecruiter. Establishing yourself within any industry is difficult, you are apart from the other applicants. We don't always get our dream job, the first job we get, each job is a learning experience. Im the kind of person who hasn't stopped me from taking the job, and going until I cant go any longer. You will notice that as you become more experienced take growth, with no real growth opportunities long term. You have to eventually stop taking internship positions, at some point in your career where applying will take you. The more you get down on yourself without applying the worse off you will feel, you won't know what support system, someone to talk about what it is you are doing, and be proud of yourself. One of the best things about working is having motivated each day, something to do, so do things that you would be willing to talk about and feedback on, you never know what type of impression,” [3] just as unsure as you are about what this person has to offer you, so maybe this person about you, so be confident in yourself in the future? And what types of goals do you want to accomplish along the way, in order to meet those future goals. Know what you want to post in any networking space, know what it is you are seeking, and speak to that audience, being mindful of their needs as well as your own. Provide information, resources, tips, and offer.” [5] What do you say upon connecting with someone at a networking event or online? Express your thoughts open, especially when you have questions, give the other person time to share from their perspective based upon what they know. A good provider of information online, is to be able to have the same types of conversations in real life with people, about sharing and exchanging

There are many elements to a successful blog post, besides a fancy display card you can make on canva, to attract visitors to your website. When you write anything you should always be aware of what else is written, and make sure not to step on too many toes in the process. According to forbes.com, there are “8 elements” [1] of a successful blog post: headline, compelling lead, subheads, informative and engaging content, and a clear call to action. For the reader, it suggests a main point, and all other elements compelling lead and subheads support that point, to “draw your readers in ... with interesting ideas.” [2] That’s actually one of the most stressful parts about blogging, staying on topic, and theme with your blog overall, and not coming across as some kind of preacher with no backing. Avoid the spread of rumors, if you want to talk about something, then look up who is talking about it rather than discuss them, in your own point of view, that ensures that your take is balanced, and also lets the reader see a different point of view. Movie: “The Social Network,” and reference Aaron Sorkin often in humor, because there was a martini glass passed in the movie in a scene that I mean that the two events are connected, and that he knows about that party and that I was in attendance, and then decided to make a scene out of it. To date Marilyn Manson, the singer who was famously prosecuted for making music that was alleged to have contributed to the Columbine shooting, I wonder if he knew that and decided to do that to either make me or those around me feel special in knowing that piece of information. I was away of suicide. Yes blogging can be every stressful, why always calculate you distant connections in life, and take into account all your connections, information, and to what effect will sharing this piece of information have on my audience when thinking about a group of people as a whole, as though we are all actually connected in real life, now having read something that Ive written, so be positive! Now we get to your section. I have done for my blogging tips, autobiography, and book reviews, this makes for easy finding of information of similar content on your website. If there are your graphics to your website, think do these graphics represent what it is I am writing about, and what has been written about it. If you have written, try to keep up with a theme of interest, and avoid any pictures of words, that would be found offensive to others, do everything with purpose, add words, that really makes the best use of pictures on blogs than stand alone photos with captions, make your blog fun, it is after all a piece of art, skills too artistically, don’t rush it, take your time, a well made piece of art always shines, that’s the trick. If you decide to promote other people, etc, leave some explanation, and do so with purpose, and make sure with even higher purpose the rest of your blog represents the value of the organizations who specialize in the care of those specific populations in need.

Blogging is sometimes helping others, and sometimes its helping yourself, provide a “voice” [3] to events circumstances which when of the most difficult topics, and scarier subjects in modern day history, then we have lives, and have to continue living in spite of these have all figured out a way to let go, and let the dust settle, so that we are better prepared in addressing how to address what is important addressed as a whole, be taken apart of, or looked at and taken apart while in observation by most.

Book Dedication ...

You cant turn back, and erase what has been said, what has been done, and what has been thought, but there is always time to move forward. In the course of events in life, you’ll make sure to do a better job of being professional, even when its not expected of you. I have my parents headed in life, no matter what I had to say, always accepted me back into their lives, and welcomed my speedy recovery and always b

Some people correct you at your worst, especially those no longer in your lives, and the more you interpret as being about you, the worse associated with thinking things are about you, and for those reasons, let go, abandoned, ignored, or left alone to figure out life for yourself. No one can tell you when its time to return from failure, that’s your job to forgive yourself, and when the time is right, put yourself back on yourself, whether you are famous, well known for good or bad, and make better the previous concerns held by others, without reservation face or not.

People will always want to be apart of change, apart of a positive effect, and want to know how a positive effect is created within oneself. I know learned, that will always be for God to decide which talents shine and which talents fade with less than adequate care and focus to be strong about them.

This book is dedicated to all those who have cared for me along my journey to recovery, pen pals, friends old and new, best friends, enemies of school, never thought twice about image or reputation, and always felt safe no matter where I was in life. That’s how I was raised to

Finding your sense of peace to me means no longer feeling the need to backtrack and share stories as though sharing something known. I share your story. The public will always measure you by how you respond in crisis, how you express love and patience in private, and how you were, are, and can be, so long as your private spaces are not being attacked by others for observation is how I feel being trusted past the maladjusted now and whether one was maladjusted at the time they were in law school, working in positions of care, or while dating a

The people you meet in life, consider them blessings, where past avoidance of anything that matters to you now, is seen as an aftereffect. I have records, and medical history, to argue failed relationships, were not for the best interests of others as diagnosed bipolar, but for your own. Figuring out something larger than yourself, would make you feel whole, in place of the losses you have suffered due to your own mistakes with problems that were better off left figured out on your own or while under professional care not for feedback or shared as though wrong. And you learn this the hard way.

What you think is not always right, and the minute anyone disagrees with what you have to say, subjects you to defending your choices. I can be explained to for acceptances than your right to manage your own privacy interests. That’s when the need for acceptance stops, comes to decisions and choices to strengthen a negative belief in your decision making skills, as though you don’t preserve the past kindly, and doing, than make to look like one had anger toward those separated from, as though ones drives in life, are to impress those in non-academic and defensive from all those you love, women, and the men who love the women you called friends.

Pride can only be achieved by acceptance and with concern for the thoughts of those who care. I thank my Mother for believing in me

influenced any of the bad decisions I have made in life, choice words, or use of humor to lighten subjects concerning identity, race, or proud of yourself too, even without the perks of houses, friends, and jobs, they were always the best to share their lives with me, during

Not everyone will be there for you through thick and thin, mindful they have their own lives to lead absent minded you and your problems in any condition well or sick, strong or weak, poor or rich, social or not, pretty or overweight, going places in life, or just living up to needs of others, how to prepare for discussions, how to behave in public, how to speak to others, and how to live a good life without marriage,

And even if you are the last to interview your Father, and spend time with him, and ask him questions about life, be sure to thank him for something you talk about and show others, be happy for you. My Brother and Sister will always be in charge of me, having accepted my your best not to self-harm and never give up.

Something that Sits Well ...

Something that sits well, can sometimes be something you assume others are thinking about you, and to not disfavor their best interests you positive or in the negative, is no ones business but your own. You ultimately control you. Its common as someone with bipolar to relationship has ended, wondering what went wrong, at what point did I become tired, lose steam, become too sensitive, or aloof, lose energy, the causes for losses in energy I have experienced occur when Im being paranoid, backtracking through emails, or conversations past 10, the loss of energy at this moment. The meds change, the people change, but I am still the same person, I have to live with me, and whether to figure out, how to continue setting goals in life, and making progress, and not be another statistic, meaning quality under categories you make it far enough career wise to go to the after-work bar kickbacks, or attend events and cocktail hours and schmooze, befriend important document retrievals, that turn one day into one errand, instead of 5 hours at a desk, managing files, and trying to stay organized I do just in case I need to go back to a day, to review what was done, I can remember everything. Because of this condition thinking that especially now with COVID, feeling like all people are contagious and you have to protect yourself, that's okay some people have been stored within, and the only way to tap into those gifts is to challenge yourself, and if you cannot accept criticism in life, well then don't pink introduction added today. Sometimes people help in mysterious ways, not always purposefully, that inner excitement, is you feel connection, and if you look at someone in awe and see something special in them, that's because they are put together and don't allow world, more focused on whats going right. That makes sense, you can make a whole lot of rights feels bad, if you only acknowledge what something, that someone can see in a day, and go oh year Ive thought that too. Writing is a fun profession, just like singing I guess your profession.

Personal Update ...

8/25/2020

Its important not to subject yourself to lawsuits in life, or bring up matters resolved, you may just run the risk of others putting themselves your interests think they are just as famous just as fragile or just as likely to have premature campaigns run for and on behalf of them about. Its never fun when once you were protected, all of a sudden get treated as an offender to the privacy interests of another, as though well in words, are then attacked as though while representing yourself you misrepresent truth or facts to make yourself look better or

Why Call a Judge ...

Calling a Judge serves one of two purposes, one it protects me from further harm, and two it protects those holding negative viewpoints about my life as they think it relates to their own. And two it also helps prevent the spread of those who think in treating me as a fraud parties to whom I've mentioned, as thinking they are in harms way, via my mentions, and in retaliation, hurt me as though I'm not allowed to intend for anyone else to be hurt, if it is my own interests I am protecting as though absent minded the best interests of everyone as a said, and understand that there are many offenders lurking online, which I cannot control, nor anyone else around me can control who why my friends have been hidden since (2008) and why I have lived for the most part a private life. The worst that can happen is someone taking the priority of my own, as though I would ever create a position, or share a viewpoint, that was not balanced, keeping in mind I can be loved just the same. -I feel like the less legitimately you are established online or as a company, that is how you will be treated, like I don't care, I care closely, think they know you best or others, and think that it's by what they think things are, without taking into account, the point at which I'm like if one company was allowed to vaguely reference your location, that any company could vaguely reference your work or identity without not by the secrets we keep that empower anyone, nor ourselves, life is all about how you are in public, how you manage yourself in public, prove otherwise, then that is the motive of anyone who is playing victim to you, to argue that you were not respected or difficult to talk to for your character was non-acceptance of you, and that that non-acceptance of you if widely accepted is something that cannot be changed easier for you to change than it would be to change the opinions of the majority. Theme: Something about you you cannot change, as you are we identified whether that something is: (1) gay (2) bad (3) a negative (4) a bad memory (5) an action (6) a faux pas (7) a need or (8) a fear (9) cancer and stopped having sex (2014). Very gross details, get tested, correct response: no one's fault but my own.

Gym Apathy: Why am I still fat? ...

In 2014 after my Brothers Wedding I decided to lose weight after seeing the wedding photos. I was a size 6 at the time, and wanted to lose weight, to trim down. It took me about a year to lose 40-50 lbs, my starting weight was around 158-160, eventually I was 130-less than I was through Middle School, and Played Varsity Soccer on the School Team in High School. It was the first Girls Soccer Team, we managed to win the state soccer, and in our first season were 22-0-and 1, undefeated, until the semi-finals of CIF, I was first team All-CIF, and the second leading scorer in freshman year, of 300 girls that tried out with numbers on our t-shirts, I was 1 of 5 freshman selected to play on the B team, I didn't go to Colorado, and I think once to Nebraska, we drove. I was overweight when I started college, but then worked out with a trainer summer after summer with heavy weights either, mostly sprinting, and push-ups, and squats, exercises with a medicine ball, and one-legged squats with a free weight. I took a class at the gym "sunrise yoga." I have always been active, whether that's boxing, or kickboxing, playing soccer, or spinning, that was my journey, and was my first heartbreak, upon getting sports injuries, tore ligaments in my ankle twice, and partially tore my MCL in my knee.

Losing weight is not easy, you would think that as someone who played soccer my whole life and went to the gym, that I would be able to stick to a strict salad diet, some snacks, no fast food, sandwiches on occasion for Subway, fruit, and not many carbs, no bread. I also took a pill for weight loss, not sure what that does for your system, but it was one thing I incorporated into my diet. At the time, when I lost the majority of my weight, I ran for at least 30 minutes, when I was a fast runner, each length at Ocean Ave, running half the length of the path, took me 10 minutes to complete, and started running on the beach to marina del rey and back in the wet sand, and once in the deep sand after it rained, as directed by the lifeguard. -As you lose weight you don't really notice, but other people notice. I didn't really shop at the time, to buy any new clothes, I bought Nike spandex from Sports Chalet, and Danskin leggings from Shelleys on Westwood Blvd, where I used to buy dance shoes as a child.

When you first lose weight you're really excited about life, and have a lot of energy, that was new to me, I did rest a lot, being sore from running, I would go to bed hungry, and run on low fuel, to burn your existing fat cells, and run past the hour, to go into fat burning mode. I don't know if I should have lost more weight my whole life, its just never been something feasible to me. I used to run to 26th street in high school from my home on Rockwood Ave, I was running!

daily thing, not just a few times a week maintenance type activity, which happens after you lose the weight. I cant agree, I still have to do weights again, and squats, or try sit ups. I used to be a gym rat, but just stopped going to the gym, once I stopped working and started to lose weight. I have to accept you are you, and no matter what size you are, because of who you are, and because of what you look like, people will love you. It will not change no matter how much weight you lose.

Why its so important that as you lose weight, to also get to know your motivations in life, whether it be competition, desire to have the best family photos, there are a lot of reasons why people decided to lose weight, and its mostly because of what they look like. Thinking that I would feel prettier, but was happier, did not feel skinny, but felt healthier, did not tone up, but became flat, and bulked up in between thinning the body is an amazing creature you get to take care of, and shape exactly how you want it to be, with enough time, energy and effort. So do it, and not losing faith in yourself, or worry too much about what your face looks like, its probably tired from all the exercise and running, and pills, and stay single, not date, until you have fully realized how hard you have worked to lose the weight, and how much you love you.

More than What Meets the Eye ...

#BLOGPOST:

More than What Meets the Eye ...

I'm excited to announce the incorporation of modeling to my blog. After taking a few selfies and sharing them online, coupled with feedback from my followers, which I was scouted from, and offered brand ambassador deals to clothing websites. I guess this would make me a part-time fashion blogger. "outfits." Most of my clothes are for work, or for lounging around the house, sweatpants, t-shirts, and sweatshirts, not stuff I would do for a paid modeling advertisement I was offered 5 brand ambassador deals for websites, featuring modern day styles, trendy styles, and featuring my own designs. I remember, when I started my Pinterest Fashion Blogs. To be their brand ambassador, I was required to purchase outfits from their site using the "@" symbol, at which time I will be given an affiliate code, to offer discounts to my followers!

If you have ever looked at someone and wondered about them, maybe it just means to get to know the person, and that there may be something not necessarily, its just noticing someone out from the crowd, someone who stands out to you, and for whatever reasons, draws your attention. (3) you think you have seen them before (4) are they famous (5) do they know someone famous (6) where are they from (7) have I met them in school, or through friends (11) are they an actor (12) are they a model (13) are they a professional writer ... and the list goes on, with more to add to our feeds, or remember their story as something of value, that helps us to see things better, everyone has a different affect on us. Not all of us sound the same way, and not all of us are able to understand the difference between who is standing out online and why and their own lives blogging. This you learn over time, who is more prepared than the other and why, and what is it about them that makes them stand out in writing, it's a combination of both. Not all people with famous friends become famous themselves, or popular online, not everything

In college my best friend and I were offered to be featured in Glamour Magazine, how I knew a story about our friendship would be of value, I thought otherwise, Im assuming others thought I was blogging to be famous as though Im not supposed to be famous, or that me blogging is a time comes and when others are ready, they will step out into the spotlight, that's once you've reached an age of maturity, that you are ready for the world. -I have been in touch with them since, sharing stories of racism on campus, to book writing, always sending updates, time and time again. Not without a fight and proper representation of the issues, affecting her while I was in law school, there are many reasons why people do not blog because my identity was known and being used to commit crimes, or that my life and the way I was telling my story, was being done for me. My brother was terrorized in Mumbai, and decided not to participate on Facebook until 2016, 2017, and that was only for a Shorty Awards

When people take a step back, and do not wish to be included, don't take it personally, that just means that they do not want to be included in your methodology is sound, and in good taste. When people have other things to do, and do not want their name attached to your name, the good representation of themselves, or of those they know, why they do not want to incorporate you into their lives, or introduce you to their world. I think that you have presented a poorly sculpted set of standards and beliefs online, pointing you in the wrong direction in life, and do not know who to support, and why, and whether who is being supported, is because of crime, a crime related to someone you know, not created by you. Promotions and promotion are not indefinite, which is why I built a website, to promote those interests, but at the same time not over promote issues that are not your own. Blame for causes. As though being a member of Brady was a defense. I am a certified crisis hotline counselor in the State of Colorado

Not everyone responds the same way under stress. I hope that by sharing my experiences, we will be less judgmental to those who support causes once the issues are raised and called to the publics attention, be more supportive listeners, and bystanders, than say nothing at all (lulu.com, book cover options, Im sorry), and not by talking about those who commit crimes (we are sorry we chose the color orange)

What I am doing here right now, is blogging. This is a career choice, based upon what I was able to do while a law student, work part time as a philanthropist because I don't have money, but the same idea, helping without expectation of receiving anything in return for helping Creating Content for Your Niche ...

If you haven't decided what your blogging niche should be, don't stress out. As you become more and more familiar with the process

What is a blog niche? "A blog niche is a carefully selected topic area that you'll be focusing your blog content around." [1] Eventually your posts need to be money making posts, nor do they all have to be about how to make money, the goal is to be likeable, someone that

Make it easy to read. and if you've got something to say about an organization that you care about then by all means share. [2] In fact, anti-gun violence campaigns, and so my journey began. Your content is capable of not only helping your audience to understand something you care about, or about an issue that matters to you, like mental health advocacy means to me.

Tell your story. "bringing a more personal approach to your content is a great way to draw attention to your content." [3] When I first started publishing in a way that was eye catching, and with color, and fun fonts, on social media. Gradually as I became more and more comfortable with the app canva and iStock photos to decorate my posts for the readers enjoyment, there are so many ways to look organized and one way to make it provided.

Share your stats. One of the most exciting aspects of maintaining a blog, is watching your growth, and as exciting as it is for you, so is it for your readers and bloggers to share graphs, stats, and ranking, be proud of your work! They will want to see what you did, how you did it, and how you are doing. Your visitors are returning or unique, and keep track of your most popular posts, and do your best to continue to improve upon the quality of your content.

How to come up with ideas? If you want to become a top blogger, at some point you're going to have to look at other people's blogs, and learn from their healthy process of improving upon the content you already provide by seeing what else is out there. It will help you "bring up any clever ideas"

common “blog headlines” for content that is wanted online, and do your best! [5]

How to Love Without Being Too Needy ...

8/22/2020

We all slip up on occasion, whether that’s being too needy, too demanding, asking too many questions, not being trusting enough, and together, not push each other apart. According to wtvbam.com, there are “7 Ways to Make a Man [or Woman] Feel Needed (Without E

1. Let Them Help You
2. Don't Humiliate When They Do Not Live Up to Expectation
3. Don't Overdo the Nagging
4. Be Affectionate and Vulnerable
5. Tell Them What Makes You Happy
6. Don't Be Insulted When Insulted
7. Set Boundaries and Be Yourself [2]

Most people “feel empowered when they’re needed,” [3] and there are more ways to love and be loved without hurting one another in which can feel like a risk, but so reassuring when they love us anyways, despite our faults, difficulties, and setbacks. You never know love in a loving way, not cause one another to feel uncomfortable about themselves, as anyone would trying to make a good impression

Its very common to be in relationships when one or the other loves the other more than the other, its is also common to be in relationships exists when you restore an otherwise “distorted and inaccurate view of yourself” [5] during the process of loving someone else, pay love up back, that’s love, we don’t always feel good, and love is great because it’s the type of relationship that exists where two people make

According to gleedating.com, “neediness is also a reflection of your self-esteem and self-confidence, security, self-respect and overall reinforcer of those qualities in someone you love, without having those qualities about yourself to begin with, why its so important to which you are with expectation to care for someone, represent someone, believe in someone, and give to someone, all of those things

Are your needs met? [7] Think who is responsible for the way I feel about myself, the less you blame others for the way you feel, the without making someone love you to fulfill an unmet need self-esteem wise, feel good to feel good, don’t expect someone to make you loves you, who may not feel good if you don’t feel good and they are doing everything they can to make you feel good.

We don’t always get the validation that we need. [8] In fact huffpost.com states, “Consistent, thoughtful validation of your partner's the world with another, asking eachother questions, and being apart of one anothers daily discussions about life, where they stand, what th anothers lives. And in exchange you “see things for their point of view,” these are simple ways to connect and “validate” one anothers their thoughts and feelings just as they are.” [10].

How does this conversation relate to the ones I love? As a recovering self-harmer, Im sure there have been times when I have been di understanding of my needs, and would complain, and attack my sense of stability and be accusatory toward me, as though I was doing getting to see me I guess was a “confusing, confronting, frightening” leaving them feeling helpless. Know that judging and criticizing

“People who self-harm are strong and brave and they want to get better. The worst thing you can do is judge. Self-harm is driven by e self-harm.” [12]

This is why its important to disclose to your partner when it gets to that point in a relationship when you share secrets, or finances, or disempowering to have the other be taking care of you and questioning your care of yourself, but that is because they have made it the said, if you need them, but cant tell them you need them, because you self-harm and don’t know how to ask for help, just tell them, I please be aware of my condition. If there is a will there is a way, and the best way to be loved and to give love is to be open.

Fixing Yourself ...

You wont always fix yourself in time to be loved, admired, respected, adored, friended, or hired, and some mistakes you live with for once in life to learn a lesson, that includes during the process of giving and receiving loves in life, allow hurt to get the best of you, you only looking for negatives and justification to judge you as being in the wrong, as though in need coming on to someone, and then on this point the only people whos opinions are too strong, are the observers, if you become unhappy not understood, if you sound stupid of cold bit$ch who only cares for themselves, how am I supposed to love someone who is unhappy with me, who says they love me, but my life, my face, my body, my tone, my words, or my love. Then why am I expected to continue to respond to someone who is then b and if 2020, doing better and having had improved over the course of a year beginning 2019, beginning to be myself, speak intelligently wrong. If this person is married then me talking to him automatically puts me in the wrong, makes me look like trash, an opportunist, need any advice, pardons, representation, sympathies, or feedback as though I am not in touch with reality, or do not recognize how I society, you don't have friends, you don't get jobs, you can finish school if you are already in a school and they don't let you go, you down in life, and you may not come up further in life at all, meaning earn a wage, a paycheck, get a job, if you did not apply before a understand I was above the legal limit, but no at that time it was not wrong for me to drink, because I was not prescribed night meds. I did not drink in college, I did not drink in high school, and I only drank occasionally in law school with my boyfriend, and after we br have done wrong, you will always be seen as less than, a chump, a brat, a delusional girl, who lives life like everything is handed to h like, like I don't know what loss is like, like I am not a victim, like Ive never struggled, and without compassion for my disabilities in and fun and loving and well adjusted and clear headed, something put on my conscious that I did not understand or affected my well b adjustment to reality, after something bad has happened, and no matter whos fault it is, for looking stupid, easy, slutty, immature, or r who leaves a relationship of someone with a big name, put down and treated as though one is a hot head, thinks they are better can do experience what looking like a grose, fat, ugly, and disgusting looking woman online being sexy in public feels like. That treatment I present mental health issues loss of positivity.

September 2020

Personal Update:

9/3/2020

Ive not been feeling well the past week or so, and it got really bad mood wise the past three days, my sister could barely talk to me, and almost started crying, I was gone, out of focus. When chaos hits it hits hard, especially with bipolar, you cant seem to win with people, who claim to love you then hurt you, or make you look stupid in private, for the purpose of making you look stupid in public, for those reasons its better to not talk to anyone, than it is to make friends or date online romantically, or be romantic with anyone, if those needs need to be met, its better to not be experimental, online sending photos is only one screen away from being uploaded online, whereas in real life if you have a sexual encounter, or friendly rapport with someone, that conversation doesnt get transposed online. The difficulty with having grown up around celebrities, is that you get treated as invincible, as though youre incapable of human suffering, embarrassment, demise, get in trouble, sued, or have to start over again in life, with everyone simply because of one bad decision, to appease someone who was upset with me in private, and then without hearing from me, assuming the worst, blasting me in public with photos asked for in order to not post a page, to establish trust, or show love toward him. This person is inconsiderate, demanding, volatile, without regard for my health, or my families health and reputation, blasting me, because he thinks my suffering will reflect others strengths and push me down the ranks of importance, as a burden to those who are successful, no it hurts us ALL! #stop hate ... Simply because a rapport that was once friendly is not the same, does not mean take personally the tone of someone focused on staying steady, my life depends on it, I could care less about having friends, or a career, Ive achieved everything Ive ever wanted in life online already, I dont need to get married, I can get a job, work, sell books, write books, work at my own pace in life. Its very thoughtful to offer me marriage and promise for a positive future, but I created a positive future for myself already, that is why you are able to hurt me, on the basis of seeing me as someone who is important who would legitimately think or believe someone famous would talk to me now, marry me. I dont have a big head, Im educated, I committed suicide 2009, I am doing my best, who are you to judge me, my progress, my website, my blog, my stats, and take away from me my pride in myself, my self respect, and waste my hardwork, and cause me suffering and suicide again. Why? Im not even that into Leonardo DiCaprio, Im not talking to anyone on messenger for the rest of my life, and I am not obligated to reply to anyone, about whats going on within me, or who I am loving right now, or what my mind is focusing on, I stopped having sex 2014, Im comfortable not having sex in life!

The minute they have something on you your life is over, thats getting you to take intimate photos of yourself, as appropriate only for them to see, then shown to everyone online, as inappropriate for all to see, his purpose is to try to get me in trouble, threatening me insulting me, trying to subject me to jail time, or going to jail, while he convinces me to throw my life away, giving him ammunition photos, in which he used my identity pen name to attract visitors then showed photos of me asked for by me, to be sexual toward him, upon request, thats not how I am toward anyone, and try to scare me, and use naked photos of me to molest my fans, is an abuse of my condition and theirs and WRONG. Take it to court if you have an issue with me, take it to court, take your $7000 dollars, and leave me alone, dont treat me like you have something on me, and treat me like anyone famously jailed, as though a rehearsed set of conditions, if occurring with a different human being should be punished the same.

Go for it! If you think that I deserve to go to jail for sending nude photos that got posted online, I dont need anyone to feel sorry for me, or to cover for me, I can go to the hospital or jail, I could care less, I did my best to be a writer, but Im not willing to commit suicide, because I got set up to look dumb. Thats inexcusable, and has caused me permanent damage, and to my fans EYES who dont need to see all that $hit, and watch a obese 180-192lbs writer whos 35 years old try to be sexy, and do themselves while someone phone sexes them, why do they need to see me naked? Thats inhumane.

The Only Catch ...

The only catch to being a blogger, is talking about what you do with confidence. Blogging has the potential to open doors for you in life, whether or not you realize it at the time you start blogging, which usually starts for personal reasons, one decides to express themselves in public, but all those steps, creating accounts, sharing on accounts, perfecting your profiles, and contributing online, eventually pays off, as difficult as it may seem at the beginning getting started, eventually you enter phases of interaction, commenting, sharing, getting likes and comments, getting inboxed in your DMs, offered deals and discounts, offered opportunities to be an ambassador, this occurs overtime.

When you first get started, its all about becoming more and more acquainted with the systems of measurement of your performance online, just this year I discovered "Alexa Rank," and blog distribution platforms such as "blogpros." Prior to paying for these services, I only used hashtags to get likes, and would tweet everyday, to keep a conversation going, while promoting more professionally written work online.

It's a lot to keep up with, while at the same time recording your life, day by day, with expectation of change, that's where your following comes from, as a blogger by definition its keeping a daily record of your activities and livelihood, and its not just your lifestyle that attracts attentions, but its also your online appearance, demeanor, and improvements overtime. Ultimately, you will be observed based upon whether you have the energy, look, and tone, of someone who has arrived to wellness, and based upon where you have been in life, have made positive changes in your life. Is your course in life being dictated to you by others, share those references, and also share the wisdom of not knowing everything, many of the decisions I have made with regards to the direction of my focus, to analytics, is how I found Alexa as a metric for guiding my progress, and is how I gained more followers, and eventually applied for and got listed among the Top Blogs and Websites, appearing on two lists, qualified. There may not be any articles written about me, and I may not be included in any magazines about top bloggers, but that doesn't mean by numbers alone one is known, this just means there is more room for improvement, if I ever want to be someone interviewed or featured.

The moment you get your positive energy back, and get outside of your own head about life, and open up again writing in a position of ease, rather than inner turmoil frustration and aggravation (trust me the readers can tell if you are out of it, in the negative, and not doing well) that's the kind of transition back into focus that keeps your audience around curious to see how you get yourself out of those negative patches in life and what you have done past and now to keep yourself lifted out of harms way away from those negative thinking patterns and experiences that cause you to not like yourself and lose all confidence in life.

Are you feeling driven? Don't worry being driven, on all cylinders is not required to start blogging, you'll get there when you get the hang of things and have a schedule of appointments, and to-do lists, and daily tasks set up to do each day, once you establish a routine and a voice online (website). When you are easy to hear from and watch, that's how you know you are able to maintain a following, you have to be happy with yourself, and doing things in life, that's the excitement that attracts people to your blog, who you are on the inside, and how well you are able to present your best online, and what you look like being yourself online, comfortable, with direction, or lost. Its those changes witnessed that are empowering to your audience to witness, seeing you get better without you knowing it. seeing your flounder and struggle when you don't want to talk to anyone and shell up, and there for you when you decide to let go of the past, or what has gone wrong, and keep your head up anyways.

Writing a Book ...

Just because you have chosen to write a book, doesn't mean you are going to be famous, or become a well known writer, and it doesn't matter who you know that is famous. People who do not respect you, or find you of value, think that everything comes easy to you in life, without regard for your struggles academically, professionally, socially, romantically, and mental health wise, for some book writing is easy, for me it was a difficult task. You have to be very careful what you share online, as everything you say, gets used, and you have no idea for what reasons why, and sometimes you don't even know if you are being hurt in the process of sharing, everyone seems to be out for themselves these days, and that's what makes it hard to be a self-help blogger. You have to be a very giving person, and very compassionate person, with a high tolerance for things not going right, and still maintain a positive attitude, probably why there are not many self-help bloggers, out in the open online, that's because as sensitive people, who help others, do not possess the same openness and outgoingness as someone who is online to be seen, looked at, or admired, in leadership positions online. As a self-help writer, you are concentrating within, and trying to figure out how best to communicate, what is on your mind, and what you think will remedy a feeling or situation, that you have not read about elsewhere how to deal with. A lot of therapy involves you talking, in order to be corrected, or perfected, and if you cant manage to communicate that much, then you don't wind up getting the help you need. By writing I was able to communicate things that I ordinarily would not talk about in conversations, and as I became more comfortable talking about my problems, or ways I have been able to overcome a mental health issue, the better able I became at helping others. Being articulate is a learned skill, its called confidence in knowing what you are saying, and understanding what you are saying, and feeling comfortable sharing what you are saying. It has taken me many years, to settle down, and write in a tone that is acceptable to most, without the humor, hyperness, or writing for advertisement on Twitter, or Facebook. Writing in my natural tone, means without worry for what others think, and without fear of what is read into while reading my writing. That you cannot control, what other people think. But the more able you are to communicate within well out loud, the better able you will be at communicating to others in a way, that either remedies, benefits, or helps them better able communicate themselves to you, to others in their life, and gain a better grasp on subjects that concern you. -For some reason Im getting hurt over and over again, the minute I am well.

Don't Wait Until Its Too Late ...

9/2/2020

In wellbeyondordinary.com, it has been recommended to “not wait for a cancer diagnosis to step into living a meaningful life now.” [1] Its important to face challenges head on, and not wait until things get out of control, to make choices to step away, or change the direction of our lives. Getting used to things is half the battle, when it comes to feeling comfortable with where you are now, you can pretty much condition yourself to tolerate many things these days, but be careful although it may be great that you are so desensitized to the troubles around you, what in the event you are faced with similar difficulties will you do to get yourself out of a mess in life. So whats a “wake up call?” According to psychologytoday.com: A wake up call is bringing to conscious something that you have been neglecting or ignoring in life, so don't wait until you have to change to change. [2] Notice how “accident or illness ... changes everything,” and so do losses, such as breakups, burnout, addiction, anything that tests your human spirit, that forces you stop and think about life, how precious your days are, how important it is that you focus on reasons for living life, not all the reasons to throw yourself under more pain than you are already suffering. Don't be stubborn to change, there will always be factors such as “habit and fear and laziness” that may keep you from reaching your goals in life, and graduating to the next stage of independence in life. [3] Its easy to “numb out,” [4] states gottman.com, you may get many messages before a crisis strikes, you only notice until after something bad happens, don't panic, the most important thing you can do is to learn from your mistakes, and not allow it to happen again to you. We are all vulnerable during moments when things are going well, when we feel achieved, when we feel high on life, doing well, recovered, with opportunities ahead of us, attracting good things back into our lives, but that is also recipe for disaster, the higher you are, the higher you fall, and as vulnerable in a good mood, could let the wrong people into your life, who have the potential to change your life for the worst. If you're not expecting anything bad to happen, how easily you can be blindsided, used, or misused for being nice, and made to look stupid, there will always be opportunists in life, seeking to take advantage of the time attention, love, trust, friendship, and money of someone who is stable, and pride themselves in the instability they cause, where in exchange to harming you feel better about themselves, as though they are above you, above the law, don't fall victim to people like that. Trust your instincts, if its not something you need or want in life, don't let anyone convince you otherwise, to go against your instincts and treat you as someone in need, taken advantage of.

Do Things That Make You Feel Good ...

Figure out what you want in life, what you need, and go from there. How will you get to that place in life, and what amount of achievement do you need under your belt, in order to handle life and be proud of yourself, what challenges await you, and what must you overcome in order to be a happy person. Happiness is but momentary satisfaction for oneself, sometimes it lasts, sometimes its destroyed, sometimes our attitude changes, and we wonder, will we ever be our happy selves again. It's a combination of things, not one factor contingent upon the other, to cause or elicit a feeling of happiness, but it's the crown to a job well done, having your house in order so to speak (they talk about this in sobriety), and feel capable of achieving in life (that is ability recognized not disability sinking your thoughts about self, and where you see yourself in the future, viewing life with opportunity not defeat). Its up to you to decide whether you are going to let yourself go, and don't recognize all the progress you have made, and allow negative interpretations to take their toll, on your view of self, become dissatisfied with yourself, like yourself less, then blame others for that dislike, or voices, or you start taking control of your attitude and choice words, and begin to build a new path forward for yourself, absent minded fear, absent minded your past, and absent minded equating now, to what has transpired, as building an accurate reflection to put in stone about you to base your whole life upon a series of mishaps, or bad luck, as though you deserved to live a life in hardship, and under harsh public scrutiny. Things can only get worse before they get better, so long as you allow "voices" that is commentary you interpret to be directed toward you purposefully, or "delusions" that is voices you think are taunting you to bring about a desired result "anger" and then upon viewing someone not at their best, further view how they respond upon rejections, whether they recognize themselves as changed, whether they get help upon noticing changes within themselves, or whether they blame others and make their lives worse, when they do not feel like themselves, like that is anyone elses fault but their own. We are all subject to attack, whether we purposefully put ourselves out in the world, to be subject to attack, and whether or not we are prepared for those types of attacks upon our identity, one must be strong, to not allow physical illness and mental illness to take its toll, and then further spread, that feeling to anyone else who has grown attached to your blog, and feel subjected to the harms you have suffered as empathizing with you be wrongfully affected and lose faith, in whatever they have been struggling to keep their mind off of, self-harm, or negatives, its always disappointing to hear about someone giving up in life, whether in anger or sadness, and expect anyone to feel sorry for them, they usually don't care, once you are gone, and they usually get upset and question why you are no longer present, as though youre expected to talk about what it is youre going through inside. It just goes to show, that when someone thinks you think you are more important than you are, how one is treated in public, like a joke, without regard for the hardships endured as a victim of homicide, the necessity to work hard and to live a conservative life, and let loose on occasion, and the strong adherence to getting help when help is needed, whether that's rehab, or AA, medical help, meds, talking to the police, or courts, or attorney to further assess, what has been done and what can be done to alleviate the current mental health issues you are suffering, to be a stable person, and live life. For me blogging has been the primary means and motivation for me feeling good, waking up each day with something to do, whether I have to push myself or not, or feel like writing, write anyways, and whether or not Im under stress of deadlines, or have other things to do, make time to blog, and to share whats on my mind, what Im working on, write based upon whats going on now for me in life, and without causing added hardship to my audience, who returns at their leisure, like anyone who knows anyone does, not in a rush to get to know, get to the bottom of, get a big picture of, get an answer to, or with expectation of hearing about in a way that justifies their sense of urgency in talking to you, or ignoring you, with expectation that its your energy that is off, not their energy toward you taking what they want from what you have to say, while ignoring you in real life, with nothing to say to you in the positive.

Most People ...

Most people only care about themselves, and doing what they feel is the right thing to do for themselves whether or not your best interests are included in those equations in life. They don't care how long your journey to respect took, they don't care where you come from, they don't care who youre related to, they don't even care about your feelings, they only care about themselves, and making you do things that you are not comfortable with, so that in the future they can cast you under a negative light, as though you are desperate for love and attentions from men. It is their purpose to destroy your sense of self-worth, and to their amusement, watch you self-harm get upset and defensive in public. They don't really care how you feel, or whether you feel sick, whether your personality has changed from sweet, to aggravated, or upset, they only care about themselves. Don't let anyone take your happiness away, yes you do have control over yourself, enough to quit, giving energy to things or people who no longer serve your best interests, and who only seek to justify themselves as having played with your heart and mental health, for whatever attentions they think you so deserve in life, as though your life is a joke, and as though your position in society online, was not well earned. They for one don't know a thing about pressure, pressure to think under any conditions, and to respond in an educated way, without losing sight of ones own principles in life, become discouraged, by the masses, and further intimidated by someone who does not care what becomes of you, negative or positive, after having interacted with them, its like they feel entitled to harming you, as though you have taken something away from them, yourself, your love, honor, respect and trust of them, they expect in return, by continuing conversations with them, expect you to provide unconditional support and attention to their concerns or feelings, when they have disregarded completely your well being, and without compassion harm you. Having sex with me, seeing me naked, or getting love from does not give anyone the right to make fun of me online, my sexuality, or my appearance in private, be made public, for the sole satisfaction of defaming, and making look gross embarrass someone who is obese me and 180 lbs who does not wish to photo nude in the first place. That's not body image pride, when you show photos online that I was forced to take, under threat of harm to my reputation online, and then shown anyways, to the attentions and benefit of someone who is experimenting with my likeability online. That person does not love me, does not respect me, and if they don't care about me, should not run a campaign with my audience that I assembled against me, as though I have caused them harm, by complying with their requests. What does it take, to get people to stop hurting you, for their own merits, and self-satisfaction of looking like the bigger person, in the privacy of their own identities, and in the safety of their own not-disclosed locations in life. These people only want to set you up for further hardship in life, like you deserve it, without even knowing you, and without respecting you, as though you are not attached to your family, and hurting you causes hurt to your family and friends, and fans, and then make you look like youre liable for the harm that has been caused to you as though you are asking for it in life, negative attentions, or by your bad decision making skills, choose to love the wrong men in life, or admire, or trust the wrong accounts presenting themselves as fan account to people who are famous. The only people I need to report to are the FBI, Police, US Army, The President, and SCOTUS, everyone else's needs are tertiary, when it comes to be trusted as a reliable primary resource. I can only take care of myself given my disability, and my safety needs matter, whether or not your respect me, trust me, value my hard work, respect my education, disability, or hardships in life, test me, hurt my feelings, fuck with my emotions, and cause me suicide because you think its funny based upon the books I have written to prove me wrong, as though I was not once a stable and friendly person, with my whole life ahead of me, simply to make yourself look like a victim to my love, compassion, or understanding. Then I don't need to love anyone, I don't need to be friends with anyone, and the only responsibility I have is to be honest with the courts and police, and to continue living my life with or without a plan, with or without money, and with or without people in my life supporting me, be proud.

Something to Consider ...

According to smallrevolution.com, “[who] you're surrounded by greatly influence[s] your happiness.” [1] If upon being social in real life you are not accepted or respected, you cannot expect anything different to occur in the online world, especially on messenger. If respect is based upon intelligence, and if value is determined by ones relationships maintained, then where does that leave you once you're alone, will anyone knew similarly hold you in high regard, and how can we be consistently treated as well, no matter who is around us, no matter who we talk to, and no matter who comes into our lives? What do you have to offer? For some, self-worth is based upon what someone has to offer, which is maybe why I am online, asserting myself, building my ideal representation of who I am, without expectation of that changing the way I am looked at or treated. In thinking beyond your past, how would you have liked to live life differently. If no one was understanding of you then, at your lowest moments in life, don't expect anyone to be understanding of you now. Not after the mistakes you have made socially online, talking to “celebrity” accounts, and then being treated as someone enamored with celebrities as though one sees opportunity in celebrities, and then put down as though one is only being open to meeting someone who is famous, as though one does not treat regular people with kindness and compassion. Theres a general disinterest that occurs upon someone talking to someone, who is more into them, than they are into them, that's someone who experiences wellness upon talking to you, who you do not feel mutually as enthused to speak to. Its when everything is well, that anyone can come into your life, step into your wellness (apartment) and as recognized as well, feel well being around you, then theres illness. Upon sickness, or disorganization, a different reaction, not wanting to be around you, not sticking around for long, busy, not having time available to be around you, that's just a general reaction. So don't let your imaginations run too wild, how quickly someone seeing you as happy minding your own business, will remind you you are nothing, no one important, and replaceable. If you don't see a future in something, then don't stay longer than welcome, you can't force a future to happen, if you yourself are not into it, and focused in a way, that everything around you feels peaceful and at ease, if you don't get that general sense of wellness around you that just means that you are not where you should be. We all acknowledge our personal limits with others, and everyone needs their own space, I am someone who needs my alone time to recharge, rest, and re-group, not someone who naturally feels comfortable around others, that's just me overtime, not comfortable in groups, and not comfortable around people, and Im not sure how I became that way. Just know that you are only capable of lifting others, as high as you can lift yourself, and acknowledging the fact that I look stupid, and realizing how that hurts my family, their image, and their health, is something that was trying to be avoided as a blogger online, hoping to improve those conditions around my family, any discomfort, disappointment, or seeing my family as small, or see them become disoriented, and not know why. I just know that the better I am feeling, the less of a problem I become to them, not bringing them down, even if anyone tries to bring me down in life, or trash me, and make my family look stupid or trashy. That's someone seeing your life, and not seeing you as special nor your family as special.

Common Ways to Ruin a Bond ...

There's a sense of peace that exists when two people, in the privacy of their own lives, come to know each other, also known as a relationship. In the beginning stages of any relationship it's about bonding, getting to know one another, sharing about ourselves, and feeling love in exchange for our time with one another. It's possibly the smallest fragment of your life that exists, time in love, with loved ones, or in a relationship. The majority of your time is spent working, finishing school, or at home with family. For those few hours you do manage to make time for exchanges of love, don't allow yourself to become overconsumed with what's been lost, in place of your own happiness, give power to who you gave love to, and either no longer feel love from, or feel sick upon thinking about it. I once used to say "sex is gross" in all its beauty, and for all its worth, and for the many moments of joy that we may get to feel consumed by in its presence, it's again only a small fragment of your life, a few hours to your years, and few weekends to your relationship, or that one night out drunk you get scooped up, matched up, and done. I don't think that freely giving love, is such a bad thing, if you're healthy enough for it, but eventually you get older, more sensitive, and the more of value you feel you are, and recognize yourself as, the more you expect from an exchange of love, wanting a relationship, and not just sex, wanting a bond, and not just friendly chatter. If you know your odds in life of getting picked, you never really fear being alone, only struggle with the difficulty of putting yourself back out into the world, and forget how to seem when available, or what made you get picked in the first place. Sometimes the harder you try the harder you fall, treated as someone who thinks they are deserving of love, instead of being treated as someone who does. We aren't all willing to love a fixer upper, I was always someone who dated those who maybe weren't fully put together confident, who later found confidence upon being with me, and later moved on, that's just how I am not judgmental, don't pick or like based upon the total package or what can be offered, but based upon how a person feels to me, likeable, genuine, worth the effort and focus. We all remember the times we have liked someone and they have not liked us back, different than having a crush and knowing you're not good enough for them or sophisticated enough type of admiration, it's the type of like that the other feels offended by, when you think highly of them, and they do not see you as important, or attractive, and think by the way you look, offended to be liked by you or even looked at. That's the worst just being nice to someone, and being rejected by them energy wise, like they need to communicate a distance, as though you're into them, attracted to them, and you being less than, look at you like you're stupid. That's just how life is, either you are focused on yourself, and attentions are solicited from you, to focus on them, and upon you focusing on them, and as they feel their needs are being read, suddenly you become the not confident one, and they seem more put together, and sure of themselves. It's the kind of lights off, light on, inattentiveness, that makes you wonder, whether they just enjoy being in the spotlight of the attentions of another, and purposefully don't pay attention back, to see how you respond when someone is not paying attention to you, whether you need attentions, are solid, or whether upon not focusing on oneself, you lose color or sharpness. What makes people feel smart? It's interacting with someone, able to be in their own world functioning, without ever thinking about how they look or seem to others worried, and never treated any differently for the way they look, or for the way they seem, that's being smart. And then there is being bad, when a loss of confidence occurs, upon not being trusted, looked at, sized up, and forced to push yourself for acceptances in life, to reach moments of comfort acknowledged without appearing annoying or stupid to them. If you don't light out, that communicates one of two things: lack of confidence (and they wonder why, whether because of lack of smarts, or self worth), or from over focusing on others instead of focusing on yourself, out of focus. This is why those who are punished are broken, that's to put your light out, and if you are good, you get your light back, that's feeling good about yourself, and others feeling good about you too. If you are not good, and not doing what you are supposed to be doing, and being judged, then that's how you will appear also, disoriented, or gone, a loss of light, meaning worried, or not focused on oneself, and overly concerned with what others think or are thinking about them, looking at you. So never take any of this too personally, all relationships require adjustment phases, and although you may not feel close to most people, or not good enough to be social with most, that doesn't mean that there is something wrong with you, if you haven't found your social circle in life, there are plenty of fish in the sea, to meet, know, grow, and you never know who may be paying attention to you past, in admiration for your personal growth now, don't disappoint.

The Club Inside Your Heart ...

9/10/2020

People are no doubt picky about who they socialize with, and let into their inner circles, and I do believe for good reason. Something to do with smarts, something to do with luck, and something to do with image. Its as though that overall glow and status, must be a recognizable attribute of anyone deserving of success to be recognized upon walking into a room. Some may be special, because of the way they look, and some may be special based upon how to feel. We aren't intimidated by most these days, and that's the scary part, when everyone looks fragile to you. What was that? That period in time, when everyone looked solid, its called respect. Seeing someone and admiring them, or seeing someone and thinking highly of them. When most do not impress you, we have a problem, that's beyond desensitization, it's the expectation of wellness, that gets looked into, and the minute you think your doctor observing others as less intelligent, is the minute you should take a step back, and ask yourself, why you are or are not being accepting of someone, and what is it about you that makes them seem distant. That's wellness, you can see, but you wont connect, also known as professionalism. When someone who is initially conservative with you, opens up to you and is themselves with you, two things are taking place: trust and comradere. Its then when anything can be said and kept between the two, and shared understanding of compassion for one anothers personalities, when the other become immune to you, not basing acceptances upon attraction. We may bring out the best or the worst in others, usually upon separations, or insult, its how you react and respond when you are not feeling well, that makes or breaks a relationship or an otherwise peaceful establishment of rapport, that's called disappointment, when you do not live up to the expectations of the other, and make them feel good. When you are no longer capable of making other people feel good, whether its because of your disability, insecurities, or personal difficulties you are facing in life confidence wise, that lack of enthusiasm can be felt. When youre gone your gone, its not just that youre not present, and hard to get through to, but also your energy is annoying to most, meaning looking at you annoys them, hearing form you annoys them, and seeing you annoys them, that dissatisfaction and unhappiness with you is a manifestation of how they feel about their ability to push you, control you, lift you, talk sense into you, or fix you, and if they cant it's the highway for some. When you find yourself alone, accepting of everyone else being themselves, but god forbid you flip out, or want to be alone, don't expect many to be there waiting for your return or stepping out of their comfort zones to talk to you, or go out of their way to help you. There are some places you end up in life, where no one can help put you back together. The bigger the mess, the harder it is to look at you, think about you, understand you, support you, or feel sorry for you, you become a waste of time, to even spend a minute of inspection to figure out whats the problem, the more piled on top, the more likely it will be that others say that its because of something you have done, not because of what someone was doing to you, or making you do, because if the end result is making you look bad, and you look bad, you cannot change the impression of you, as being someone who expresses love in that way, and then all discomfort is justified by one exposure. Its knowing you, and seeing how you are with someone who "loved" you in private, is not how everyone else wants to see you in public, is the issue. It makes me appear like I am something I am not, as though because I look grose, means I am grose, therefore that is why grose things happened to me (STDs and Cancer), and make it seem like its my fault, as though I attract those types of people in my life, who don't take responsibility for their own health and get tested.

Personal Update ...

9/10/2020

Right now I am doing my best to stay positive, Im highly embarrassed I had a pen pal, who I spoke to in fun, who is now trashing me, and making a public display of images requested for, cast me under a different light, as someone who does not care about themselves, or does not represent others well, to discredit my wellness, or my improvements, as having been an honest contribution to the wellness of others. I think in the future, if you are a conservative person, and don't open yourself up sexually to people, and shy by nature, then at no later point, under any amount of comfort you have achieved in life, is it then worth it to share yourself in a sexual way in private by photo, thats just recipe for disaster. If thats not who I am, but a version of me encouraged by someone who did not love me, or care about me, and who is now devaluing me online, then obviously it was my mistake, for taking his threats seriously, and complying with his requests. Again, improved, and as improved taken apart in life, it always seems to be this way, the minute I am well, someone makes me sick. I have not been feeling well for weeks now, now in physical illness, but getting a better hold of my mental health issues, and not be overcome with voices or self-harm, but I still have to be careful about what I share, not to cause myself illness or others to hear about what Im going through privately. This person doesnt value me, doesnt care about my family, and has insulted me, while criticizing my Mom, who he called, and she talked to him. Im a caretaker, Im not for sex, Im sorry. And this is why, because if I get sick this makes my Parents not well, and if I look bad, so are they affected, by what this person is doing to me online, attracting dislike, disgust, hate, and disrespect. To be honest I dont want to be connected to anyone, who does not appreciate or value my wellness, or how long it took to overcome voices and self-harm, who is purposefully causing me illness, knowing I hit my head at one point, knowing Ive not been feeling well, and knowing Ive been interviewing for jobs, hurting my ability to appear well, sound well, and be present, is making me feel gone, that is unable to answer questions, unable to read and comprehend, unable to memorize. Hurting me. Im meeting with a Detective soon to see what can be done to stop this person from harming me in public, threatening me in private, and not make any more public, my companionship choices in life.

Whatever It Takes ...

9/10/2020

In 2008 after attending a Birthday Party in Las Vegas, the wife of The Rodeo Realty founder, is when I started to pull away, from feeling included to separating myself, and usually when that happens, who are you left with, yourself. I remember sitting at the bar drinking, while Dita Von Teese was dancing in a martini glass on stage, sometime before or after the band Journey performed. I of course was dressed to the Nines, dress from Neimans that was Elizabeth and James, a short black dress, with frills on the bottom, and on the top in a scoop around my decalage, I also bough heels from Saks by Christian Louboutin, I was looking for a black stiletto, and found a pair of patent leather heels, that didn't fit me by the end of the night. That Fall I went on to apply to law schools, working on my personal statement, and studying to take the LSAT a third time. And that's when I went into delusion. My Brother suggested to have my personal statement reviewed before submitting it, I was going to highlight a story from working as a crisis hotline counselor, and he recommended writing about how I felt about the trial, and how my connection to my best friend Sydney Simpson, influenced my decision to attend law school. When you share a personal opinion, in life, there is a certain degree of sensitivity that occurs, upon hearing what you have to say, that's someone without an opinion, not knowing you, hearing what you have to say, and providing feedback to you, on how to go about discussing, what you felt was important to understanding, what life felt like sheltered from everything, on the inside. A story is only as important so long as it is kept, and once you share your story, then its up for interpretation by all, either viewing your insights as special, or seeing you as someone trying to capitalize on the fame generated from an audience that was once sided, and in turmoil, learning about the causes leading up to the death of a loved one. Homicide is not an easy subject, I suppose growing up, I never really thought twice about the passerbyers in the neighborhood, stopping the street to ask "Do you know where OJ's House is?" I grew up in an affluent neighborhood, in a home my Father purchased after moving from their home in Santa Monica on 22nd Street I think, a more modest two story home with a pool and a balcony, instead after I was born we moved to Brentwood Park, to 200 North Rockingham, the home remodeled, previously owned by The Redlands a family who's children also attended Carlthorp School, I found their name with my address in a Directory when I was a child, looking up my own phone number. We lived across the street from a double lot belonging to Shirley Temple, and bought the house next door with a pool, that we later rented to Tommy Hernz a boxer, that my Ex Boss recently told me he was the one who leased the home to the boxer in an interview with him 6 years later, I worked for him 2014-2015. He asked me if I remembered him and told him, I used to play on the Pac Man machine at his house. We also rented the home to another Family "The Petersons" their eldest daughter gave me her Barbies when she outgrew them, because my Brothers friend destroyed by Barbie Collection and ripped all the heads off. There will always be a constant thing when observing the wealth that was, and how things are now, and wonder who took things too far, and whether it is the fault of those who others pay attention to, the results in losses, rejections, and ultimately a Homicide. Ive been through enough breakups, without having Kids, to understand that when a relationship is over it is over, and understand that there will always be love there, however unless two people are willing to meet halfway, can an amicable split occur, in my life, when things go sour, and when there is fighting, that only disrupts all relationships post separation. Our Mothers married young, and had Kids young, maybe that's what they had in common, we met, introduced by her Mother, under a Magnolia Tree in my backyard, by the swing, her Mother scouted my Brother playing outside and asked him if he had a Sister, we made fast friends and so did our Mothers. Before I got sick 2009, I had bought two copies of the quotes book "Whatever It Takes" and was going to mail a copy of that book wrapped and a copy of my Mothers Book to Sydney but that never happened. I only remember being relayed a message from her Father in jail, then checked Johnny Cochran's website, then did some research, and read a deposition with my name in it. Making binders is what caused my ex to flush my Adderrall down the toilet. I guess he didn't really see the purpose in reviewing everyone else's work, including Petrocelli who was once paranoid during the Civil Trial and locked himself in a Hotel room across the street. The times are no different now as they were then, the minute you share your story, they either attack you expecting more from you, or even worse attack you as though your withholding information or not telling your story, even if it will help others, as though the wait time and level of maturity required to broach a subject was not worth waiting to share, be treated differently.

I Understand Your Hate ...

9/10/2020

I understand your hate, that coming from a famous homicide case, that I am being looked at poorly, as someone who is capitalizing on the death of a loved one, and not taken seriously in life, or frowned upon, for taking center stage, and campaigning for Brady, which anyone would think is unrelated to my experiences in life, best friend to a victim of homicide, or myself not affected or scared upon taking a closer look at what transpired past not be affected by all the fighting and what was said, and what was said, affecting my family then, as it affects my family now: embarrassment, shame, or blame, for the repercussions of the pains endured by losses, as though we have not too endured pains, and overcome our own set of traumas in life. When someone appears well it is deemed, based upon seeing who they are connected to, as unaware of how they should be, or not with recognition of potential threats to their wellness. And that is how one is judged, upon being well, as being stupid, and upon being sick, as responsible, the power of negative judgement, the minute I do anything to contribute to my condition as bipolar or further reinforce a negative opinion of me, be in any loving relationships private, be judged, as being responsible for my own heartache, my own embarrassment, or my own suffering, as though I allow people to do things to me, knowing that it will cause harm to me, then complain about it later for attentions, expecting others to feel sorry for me. “You did this to yourself, “ or o well its “your fault” “you let men use you” when have I ever incorporated my sex life into discussions of my bipolar condition, or mental health condition, when have I ever blamed men for hearing voices, or feeling sick, or for a breakup, never. I always take responsibility for my own condition, misuse of substances, or drug addictions past, and clean up my act, get sober, recover, or stop being social, that is how I was raised, not to play victim, and to take responsibility for my own actions, never to speak badly of others, and to be independent. For some people the best reason for dislike is illness upon seeing someone, knowing their schedule, what time they walk, who they socialize with, whether they relapse, if they are into addictions, whether they feel like relapsing, what they say, whether in jest or serious, whether they are suicidal and why, and by what they communicate judged, as though they are the doctor and I am their patient, as though communicating to me, and to others about me, is the solution to their worries, or so entitled to, its upon any illness a disconnect occurs, whether by choice, my doing or by what is done to me, I am treated. If you allow yourself to be misrepresented by others, or even worse be represented by what is done to you, you are only giving power to others, to hurt you on the outside, to affect how you feel on the inside, and to change how others feel about you outside of you, hurt you as separate from anyone looking at you. That is a caused condition illness, by communicating to others one is sick, as though I don’t communicate that enough to everyone the status of my condition, and then cause me illness, upon worry of how I appear now, being looked at, worse than I was already made out to be, as someone disillusioned, who thinks everything is about them. On social media, we are given the benefit of the doubt, we are allowed to protect our best interests in real life we are not afforded the same protections, no one is recorded or reported for talking $hit about anyone, and any of those efforts that occur without you present is not in your control to decide how you are treated and what energies placed upon you looking at you or reading you, as though you will not notice, or to their entertainment value witness you get sicker and sicker, upon people knowing you and thinking less of you, as talked about, without you knowing it, look worse, physically and mentally appear more and more gone, that is a tell tale sign that people think less of you, or upon recognizing you and seeing you, hold a foul opinion of you. Whenever something is built, or assembled, you have to consider with precaution, how that seems, and determine whether that is solution or provocation of issues, why its never funny to make jokes about people calling them: Hitler (he wasnt talking about me doing standup at BungalowSM, that was after I read his story, and that was a separate interview), or Kazinsky, or Monica, or a Porn Star, or an Avenatti, or a Slut, or Accuse them of being a representation of violence toward others, as though their condition is of harm to others, to create conditions to which they appear of harm to self, doing things without them knowing it, or hurting them in ways, they cannot see or have the power to change. (This combination of names, and stories is causing me illness, as Im sure the reader may feel ill, responding to assumed discord, and as stated, make me look like I have a sick mind, or if proven Im self destructive, as though thats how I treat others, no I treat all people with space, and respect). Just because one assembles an Instagram, does not make them a “Movie: Beautiful Mind” jokes, and just because that movie took place in a shed, does not make my studio, or that movie as referenced to me, anything about villains, or right to compare me to “villains” or people who give themselves sexually to men, for reasons other than for love. Im not sure where those joke are coming from, simply because I registered as a company as advised attending Simply Stylist, and simply for supporting a campaign like Brady as does everyone on Facebook. Why should I be treated any differently, as though I have assembled anything foul. Like all illness, once you are not well, everything you have said looks unwell, and then who is to blame then for your condition as caused, yourself, that’s the ultimate platter being served to me in life. A condition that I have to take responsibility for: all that is needed then for a win, is cocaine and alcohol, a relapse, then there is no accountability, then there is proof, then there is your justification for why my creative processes are not in mutual acceptance or humor, comparisons made to my identity, like I have earned a living, had a career, or been successful, or provided for myself, experienced marriage, or been able to stay at a well condition Maybe not a comeback, but certainly not death upon disagreement, or lack of acceptance, its not required for anyone to have faith in anyone in order for you to treat them like a human being. Where have I been wrong: reporting on Twitter, it was best when I reported in person to the FBI (2013) and in court to #scotus (2013), and to the office of UWLA (2013). It has come to my attention at this point that all communications in friendship are considered for masturbation and purposes of sex, and exchange of feelings, and need for a feeling of safety provided to by the recipient of my texts, as though I cannot masturbate on my own in peace without a companion. My sexuality is not anyones business, nor is the path to Gay, I figured out on my own, that’s my privacy, that’s my change in course, and that’s my understanding of what causes looking at, for others to stand out more, than you stand out in a room, upon looking at others.

What is Right? ...

Sometimes our intuition fails us, mostly when we ignore our own discomforts for the sake of accommodating the interests of another in feeling well, go out of our way to love, pay attention to, someone who we ordinarily would not overinvest time and energy to, but who is in need of our attentions, that's a specific call for attention to themselves. Sometimes it is your obligation to care and sometimes not, why we generally ignore those who seek attention "we call negative attention" that's doing things or behaving in a way in public, with expectation of reaction, sometimes those who are confident gamble with the attentions of others, thinking that by being provocative they will elicit a reaction of acknowledged strength or attraction, but nowadays yoga pose #1: nude, is not as powerful as it once was, not if everyone is doing it, its more likely a flop, than a stunner, and more likely a turn off, than an empowering take on the life as led by that person, who maybe at the time sought perfection and pride in themselves, but nowadays seems ordinary, not as daring and exhilarating as portrayed by the one photographing themselves, it's a lot of work to pose half nude, and Im telling you the fireworks are just not there anymore for it, and I don't know why. Why? Because the discipline and sense of peace that it takes to feel beautiful and then be seen as beautiful half nude, requires that one be stable minded, the same goes for your energy in a room full of people, similarly in photography, your energy and image is compared to a million other memories stored in our photographic memory banks, of what we see potential in, what we find beauty in, and what we find made in good taste, the standards are so high, and its because wellness is demanded by the viewers, something worth a look, something inspiring, and a shape or form that demonstrates discipline and the kind of detail oriented mind of someone who takes care of themselves, someone to emulate, look at, admire, focus on, or study, that's modeling, mesmerizing, because its unique, and keeps you looking. Theres a certain presence about someone who is not damaged, that look, happy, but blind, as though something hasn't hit them yet, that is pain, suffering, hardship, loss, illness, bad luck, or depression, we all go through it, and some overcome those feelings, call it a bad mood or unhappiness, but eventually we go back to normal, maybe not all at the same time, but that wont stop an audience for looking for those who are still in that moment, of bliss, as though nothing can go wrong, as though one cannot be touched, as though one has not been exposed to everything that has caused one to lose their smile, and look at everyone seriously, and lose their sense of humor. When you have lost your sense of humor that just means that you are not entertained by the wellness of another, that's not negative judgment, that's just hearing something and reading something, without relating to where that person is coming from, and instead hear them in an "obnoxious impression" that is someone who is experiencing wellness or expressing wellness, when you yourself do not feel well, and when that occurs, you justify your feelings by viewing the other as being inappropriate and viewing yourself as the more mature opinion or attitude applicable to the present, not sharing a moment, not being in a moment, and maintaining your spiritual distance so to speak from what you view as immature, in poor taste, or on bad timing. That's humor, youre either on time, with a shared acceptance of your viewpoint, or no one can relate. So what does that communicate to one expressing themselves, to be wary that although one may be adjusting to the times, or to their own life realizations in life, as watched if in discomfort, a similar discomfort can be felt, and a sense of humor not realized, that means humor derived from making an uncomfortable situation comfortable, and its that underlying comfort that's not funny, and looked into by the viewer, who will try to understand why you are not funny to them, not cute, not intelligent, not beautiful, those are the types of people who look for whats wrong with you, and upon finding out whats wrong with you, feel better in that way, not because of how you look, or because of what you say. Some see eye to eye and others don't. As a communicator of interests of your own opinions as experienced first hand, processing your own emotions with or without specific reaction from anyone in real life, as you express how you are feeling expect others to be offended, that's them thinking that you have these thoughts prior to interaction, during interaction, or interact with expectation of what theyre thinking or what their saying, reading into things, that's not normal to not accept things the way they are, or to think things are about you, or to think others know you before you know them, treated differently. Whats important to be careful of if you speak in public is not to be offensive, all it takes is one bad impression of you to justify to anyone who was in acceptance of you or who was never in acceptance of you, to turn on you, that is if you do not acknowledge what went wrong and why deserved, that's as open seen as stupid, then hurt to look stupid, and then threaten your sense of wellness, by communicating to everyone else, that this is how they saw you, this is how you were, this how you all should see her, and it doesn't at that point matter whether that person communicated love or acceptance toward you, how it started or why it started, and what the relationship or communication later turned in to, it then becomes a matter of what you allow to happen to you in life, and that's how you lose respect, that's how you become sick, physically ill, mentally ill, and lose your sense of momentum in life, or positivity, that's seeing you are doing well, and deciding instead to shock others with a lesser condition, exhibited by you as asked by them, what you look like in a permanent form photo or video, to broadcast a larger illustration of you in the negative as someone who was looking for love, got love, was asked to express love, and by what they got in return photos or money, made fun of in public, for how they expressed their love, what was given to who told them they loved them, and for further humiliation, that is more negative opinions held by onlookers, to establish how you look embarrassed humiliated, and justify your condition as deserved, with proof of what you look like, when someone asks you to demonstrate love for them, a private experience made public, to make you look like someone who does these things upon attraction to others, and cause you illness, making fun of your sexuality, independence, to make now look like how it was then. When you reinforce a negative opinion, that is voices, and it gets confirmed with an image or story about you to empower that perspective of you, that you cannot change, people who look at you like you're worthless, or unimportant, trash, or not well on your own merits, by your own hard work, earned, if a condition earned is not respected, then a well condition can be injured by the opinions if held in the negative about you, looking at you cause you illness in addition to the shock you face, trying to accept what is being done to you, handling things in stride.

Have an Open Mind ...

Yes it is true we are all Gods children, and no you will not see the beauty in all people, no matter how innocent they are, no matter who they are associated to, and no matter where they work, or by what they look like be impressed by most, you do however have to acknowledge that all are human, each with our own scripts and reminders of how to be in the world and what to watch out for, and recognize when to back off and when to keep going in life, when it comes to acceptance. The key to acceptance therefore is keeping an open mind, not rising to any occasions, not living up to any expectations, and not by paving any ways, or setting any new standards in life, that have not already been set, is how anyone looking at you, being different from most, would think of you, why should I accept you, why should I hear what you have to say, and why should I value your opinion, and why is it important for me to even pay attention to you, is how someone not knowing me, unimpressed by me, would feel knowing my name or seeing my face, what makes you special, why do you think you are special, and what is it about you, that makes me not feel good about myself. Some people don't match up in life, is what that is, when someone does not light up to you, or stand out, its just not a match, and then there is illness, when you literally don't feel well looking at someone, that's not jealousy, that's something else, its visually dissatisfied with who represents what you are reading, its appreciating the writing, but not by looking at the person, liking the person. You cant push forward in that way acceptance wise, when someone doesn't like you, just accept people the way they are, it could actually have nothing to do with you, and everything to do with how their day is going, whats going on in their life, or who else they are vying for attentions from some are that way, given your gender, warm or cold to you, based upon how they feel around you, willing to be friendly, or by looking at you socially distant, that's just preferred socialization. For the most part, people are nice to me, women are warm to me, and men are lit around me, friendly and at ease, those are my social experiences, however alone, things change, when I am only left with voices, that is the anticipated reaction having written something, or the feeling that more needs to be said, after having written. That's what voices feel like, like you are being watched and recorded, and others are trying to predict what you are going to say before having even said anything. To me that is a test, if you feel like you are someone, who people read walking on eggshells, and are aware of the fact that some may not be in total acceptance of you, given your past, or past expressions online in a creative way what you thought to be humorous or smart short hand way of sharing in quotes, was likely found to be obnoxious or insensitive to others, who expected a more thorough examination of your recollections historically, and personally, as you reflect on where you are today, having had those experiences in life. Sometimes more is expected of you, likely before you even become aware of how much is expected of you, life works out that way sometimes, they are ready for an in depth perspective and reflection of your feelings, your outlook, and how you view yourself, before you have even arrived at a place in life to speak from that tone, of acceptance and pride. If you allow yourself to be consumed by voices, you will likely not feel good about yourself, as though your psyche is being ruled by what people think, and in a delusional way, become a representation of someone else online, that you are not in real life, and misrepresent who you do know in real life, who are not that way toward you, especially not in the way voices are toward you, that's voices, harping on your insecurities, and questioning your truths, and if you allow voices, which are people who do not know you personally, who think by watching you or reading you or looking at you, that they know you better than you know yourself, its an entitled perspective of you, a way to situate themselves above you as though being beneath others you are expected to respond to all sides of the equation, reality, and esoterically. voices, in regards to things or matters not existing in reality, but a manifestation of what they see or come to understand upon further examination of your condition as bipolar, and by bringing out causes or circumstances that ignite a situation in which you become bipolar, that is in delusion, not in sync with everyone or anyone around you, see how you behave as separate, either reinforcing those perspectives of you coming across as shocking, as though as you are now speaking about seem as though you are justifying how you were, or explaining how you were as though what made sense then to you, still makes sense to you now, we all change overtime. Sometimes how you respond when you are uncertain is much different than how you respond upon being more confident about managing your symptoms, this you cannot explain or rationalize to anyone who does not hear voices or who have never experienced self-harm, and its not their job to understand why, and during moments of self-harm from my experience, no I did not understand why I was hearing voices, all I know is that based upon my choices, exposure wise, I subjected myself to voices, that's appearing in an unacceptable light, nude, and by photographing nude, became paranoid, and upon becoming paranoid, punished, and upon being punished, disconnected, and upon being disconnected, hearing voices. If you keep yourself separate from others, that does lend for the potential to go into delusion, think you can "hear the thoughts of others, or what they are saying" I assure you that no one who connects is permanently connected able to hear someone while being away from them, that would be an unusually close connection to anyone who upon passing know, be focused on in that way. The goal is to separate yourself from the voices, through writing, I am able to extract the voices from being heard within me, to in delusion, as observed be heard outside of me, and that is how I maintain my sense of self, reading from within, while acknowledging their opinions, and without shocking who could be reading not in acceptance of me, be bothered similarly, hearing from me. That's the price of public speaking, alone, that its not quiet, and unless you have meds or a doctor to discuss these things with, sometimes you are not able to adjust on your own, know understand the difference between yourself, a voice, an opinion, or mere delusion. You live inside you at all times, and its up to you to know yourself, and no matter what anyone else thinks, be able to steer yourself back on course in life, whether or not whether outside of you is in agreement with you, whether or not you are hearing anything offensive, not cringe at the fact that you are disliked, or found to be offensive looking to anyone else, so long as you understand that you hear voices, and that being around people scares you, its probably because you think that its by connecting you hear others, when its simply because of disconnecting from yourself, and people in real life, that you give up on yourself, why its important to never give up, and keep writing, until you achieve that quiet, until you no longer feel bothered, until you feel at peace, until you are accepted, and until you feel strong again. By the time you accept your condition, and by the time you are proud, no voice will convince you otherwise that you are something you are not, and no conditions different will change the way you feel about yourself, or others, no longer manipulated by what people think, be yourself.

That Place Called Space ...

Upon any separation during the interim time period, between the point of disconnect (whether by disagreement or turn off) how you spend your time away from anyone, who you have grown apart from matters. If you improve, the disconnect remains, but a pleasant sitting, if you do not improve, the disconnect remains, with a hurt that reminds or reinforces the initial decision to part ways. This is where the phrase "rise above" comes from, in my mind, for whatever reasons anyone feels: hurt, blame, disgust, disappointment, or any other unwanted feelings with regards to thinking about a person or seeing a person, that view is either further reinforced by your behavior, conduct, demeanor, dress, or appearance, or the counter occurs, a pleasant experience seeing, hearing from someone, after a period of time away from them. When you rise above, you are no longer allowing what anyone thinks of you, to change the way you feel about yourself, so that upon looking at yourself, you recognize yourself as someone who is of value, and see the positives and potentials in with love, if you allow what people think or say to control how you feel about yourself, there is a likeminded dissatisfaction with self, or mutual disgust that occurs upon being oneself, absent minded the other, or without anyone present, that is the long lasting effect of bullying, voices, torment, taunting, or insult, that lingering reminder past, of what is heard whether purposefully directed toward someone, or overheard while alone wondering what other people are thinking should they see or know what is occurring in your life, or what has happened to you, with or without a visual representation of the moment of disgust or displeasure, and that is how you look less than, looked at without respect, and without you even having said anything or doing anything directly in response to those feelings or ideas about you, misrepresented by the judgements of others, having taken a look at you, and without knowing you, judging you, and thinking poorly of you, even though they have not had a bad interaction with you, and do not know you personally. It will always appear worse in the eyes of anyone who cannot see you, or who knows you, but does not see you in real life, who sees you in public writing, around others, by their oversight, critical of you, how you are living your life away from them, who is in your life in private, and how you are managing your problems on your own, without the necessity of sharing your story in person. Someone who knows you, will never be impressed at a later point in time, seeing you later in life, as you are online, whether successful or not, that's because as they know you they see you, therefore any later impressions of you, do not change or circumvent their opinion of you whether holding you in low regard, or unimpressed by you then, will not seem important or of essence later in time, similarly a headache to read, see, understand, comprehend, or empathize with, that's just how some people feel about others, a headache, that's looking at their life, looking at their face, looking at their body, and basing how they feel as an accurate measure of who you are, as though its because of who you are you make others feel that way about you sick. That's the unfortunate part about blogging, while there will be many who do not need to go word by word to feel good, those who look at you in distaste, read word by word to accept you, that day, by that writing, by that series of words, by their approval of you feel neutral, not bothered by you, but should you write anything that makes them question you, or say anything they disagree with, or see who you socialize with, and think less of you, then that only further reinforces their disgust with you, and allows them to think that its okay to treat others based on how one feels looking at them, hearing from them, or seeing them, based on how they lead their lives in private, as though its their business, what anyones sexuality is, likes, or dislikes in life, is really none of the business of anyone who is reading my blog, to understand how trust is build, what makes me feel comfortable, who loves me, what makes me feel loved, who I decide to talk to and why, will not change my discomforts in life, or make things any better. I just learned as boring and disinterested as anyone else in real life became with me, the same can occur in the online world, that seeing me, knowing me, and having no interest in talking to me, learning about me, or getting to know me, only simply to meet and seek interest from me toward them. Which is usually the case, I am nice to others, then they seek interest toward them, or in a relationship, want attentions from me, while ignoring me or being too busy to see me, that's just the type of person I am, I have to invest a lot of time and energy building trust with someone, for them to accept me, and if I don't try hard, then like anywhere else, just another person in the room, until I decide to blend in and be social, meet others. So enjoy your moments of space, when you get to be alone in life, and recognize once you have taken the plunge into socialization, and subject yourself to rejections in life, be mindful of who is nice to you, who respects you, who admires you, who tries to control you, who becomes disinterested in you, and do your best to be kind to all, no matter how anyone treats you in life rising above.

Feeling Special ...

There are so many ways to help others, and be there through difficult times, and one of those ways in making those around us feel validated and needed, is to make them feel special, giving them our undivided attentions. Awareness is key to understanding our own inner turmoils, as well as acknowledging what's going on around us. That's being proactive, not allowing life to just happen, and actually being apart of the lives of others. If respect is what you want, if love is what you need, and if its attention that your crave, what are you doing to make those around you feel good too. I do believe that feeling good, and feeling special go hand in hand, and agree with innerbonding.com that "we all have a need to feel special." [1] Its true that you don't know what you've got until its gone. The same thing goes for feeling special, ever notice that when we don't get the attentions that we want, we feel left out, hurt, broken? Note that that type of "behavior is dysfunctional," [2] so instead of complaining to your loved ones about how you are feeling, with expectation for them to cure the way you are feelings by telling you what you want to hear, don't expect that much to begin with, and start "learning to love yourself and make yourself feel special." [3] When you are doing things that you love, valuing yourself, paying attention to the causes for your feelings to begin with, and expect less, notice how much change can occur through talking more responsibility for the way you are feeling, without over reliance on others to cure you of your discomforts in life. The key is to improve the way you are feeling, through activities and thinking patterns that benefit you, and "refrain from blaming others, with anger or criticism, for your feelings and behavior. Don't be a victim." [4] Remind yourself, youre not the only one with problems. This is particularly true for someone who "believe[s] that their special circumstances are more special than another person's special circumstances." [5] Take me for example, growing up best friends with Sydney Simpson, sure that made me feel special, sure that influenced my decision to go to law school, but does that mean I will be met with the accomodations that I thought I deserved in a JD program, of course not, and is it typical for someone who when not "accomodat[ed] [to] act-out" yes, "much like the hurt child who runs away from home – by canceling their next appointment as though punishing [others] for not treating them as special." [6] It may seem funny now, but it wasn't then, visiting the US Supreme Court, and taking notes, and then crying pouring tears, frustrated that I would not be graduating from law school and feeling helpless. Im sure that's not their problem to determine what happened, who was in error, or determine what extenuating circumstances were causing me to feel under a tremendous amount of pressure, but it existed, and that was how I coped at the time, by being out and about, talking to people, writing, sending letters, and updates with regards to my progress, to me that was the best I could do, to reassure others, that my purpose was to go to law school and graduate, and to help others. When you have a purpose in life, and when you are no longer able to fulfill that purpose in life, you are given options in life, to sit there and complain, feel helpless, ask for help, and after you have exhausted all your resources for getting help, eventually you have to help yourself. You may not "feel special, ... [or] number #1 among others, [to] friends, siblings, or [the courts]," but you have to find your self-worth, and the more of value you become, the easier it will be to be heard, to be understood, to be related to, to be advised, and to help, someone with potential is always easier to get through to, and see results, than someone who is in their own world, not listening, not seeing the positives, and focusing only on the bad. That no one can help you with, outlook, that's for you to decide, which thoughts you will allow to control, your understanding of the times, and what you are going to do, to not be apart of the chaos, and make a positive difference in the world. Notice how much I have grown blogging over the past year, as I have looked inward, trying to understand myself, the better things have panned out for me outward, looking forward to life, my future, and creating opportunities for myself to move forward from trauma, breakups, friend losses, and job losses, that doesn't mean that my life is perfect, we are all susceptible to difficulties, no matter where we start or are from in life, the point it that as you feel more understood, so do you make people "feel valued, respected and validated And [this] leads to important changes in affective experience and feelings of social connection." [7] For me my solution to feeling special, has been making a special life out of the life that I have, without worrying too much about how things look to others, and the more solid of a foundation I have laid for myself moving forward, not bothered by how I look, the better I have grown to feel about myself, not led by my insecurities in life. That's who gets heard, not someone clouded in the judgements of others or their own failures, that is a situation no one can help you with if you don't get the help you need. Basically you get what you put out into the world. So if you want others to see the best in you [8] start by seeing the best in others too.

Breaking the Silence ...

There's always those moments of realization, when you reach a moment of quiet, and decide to take a step forward, the type of silence that makes you want to break the silence, with a favorite inspirational song like Hero by Mariah Carey, what is that feeling? Are you longing for inspiration, the ability to let go, feel lifted, beyond an emotion, what is it that causes us, to want to break that silence, and what can we break that silence with, to enable us to feel better, and what happens when you still don't feel better? When old remedies don't work, what to do then? We must not be in our own worlds anymore, apart of us may be missing, or better yet, gone. How capable are we, of fixing how we feel, and staying in that moment of peace, without feeling drained by circumstances or people who leave us feeling less than empowered in life. Remember its not all about you, and while half of life requires one to remain focused in order to achieve, the other half of life, is based upon connections, who we are connected to, how we are feeling, how we respond to dissatisfaction, what other people feel about us, and then how we feel about ourselves as a reflection of those interactions. What reflects upon you best? How willing are you to allow those who do not see the beauty in your life, your life story, your sense of being, affect how you feel about yourself, you are what you give power to: feelings, people, places, memories, understandings, exposures, we are all a manifestation of all of those things, within, and all of those things affect how we appear. And if there is something about you, or something about you in question to others, how will that manifest in your daily life, as questioned, being looked at, for affirmations or confirmations, rather than acceptances, and how well does one need to know themselves before they go out into the world for observation. I don't think it is required that we have a perfect understanding of life, of ourselves, or others, in order to speak and be of value, we are all a work in progress, and in saying that, I am pointing to the fact that we may not have it all figured out, no matter how smart or capable we may look, or be assumed to think of ourselves. That's tone, you have to write from the heart, and be read in criticism, as though one is not human, not honest, or a fabrication of how they want to be perceived, and not who they say they are. That I cannot make up, how I sound, what words come to mind, or how I look, I may invest in things to help distinguish me as special such as: education, clothing, and makeup, but that still cannot perfect a presence, that someone is not willing to accept as is, wanting more from, or better yet, seen in a different light, and once a non-acceptance of you can be generated from them, then that's their acceptance within themselves, of not liking you, discounting you, or seeing you as less than as compared to those who are successful, wealthy, of high stature, and accolade, treat you as less than, less than those who they compare you to, or better yet, less than a human being, as though your sense of being similarly threatens the basic standard of understanding of what being a human being is, awareness of the feelings of others, awareness of how one is feeling, and being in a way, that does not disturb the feelings of others, and does not disturb ones own progress, as it relates to the progress of those around them, being themselves without offending anyone else. When someone wants love from you, who you are no longer willing to love, think why, how were you at the time, you bonded, and what has changed now, is it respect, or is it simply the fact that you are not the same person you were when you two met, which is usually the case, and as you are, in a worse state of being, look, demeanor, and sound, is how they wish to portray you, as though by your choices in life, have led you to your demises in life, as though you think that achieving in life is based upon acceptances upward, above you, and in trying to seek acceptances from those who are above you, is for the sake of moving upward in life, and if it can be shown that you have not made any progress, and if this person, who is not famous, can justify a lack of love exhibited by you, its to say that their love for you, not only does not make you feel lifted, but that its not their love that brought you down in life, but the love you sought, not being the type of person you should have sought love from to begin with, from famous. To me seeking attentions, acknowledgements, or speaking via pen pals, to a famous public figure, is about talking to someone who I think understands something that I do not, has more experience with being known to the masses, and how to carry themselves in public, socially, romantically, publicly, and privately, so that they can exist free from harm, work, and have a life, without being affected by who is watching. That's the point of being a professional public figure, being able to be watched, but at the same time not be affected by who is watching. That is the challenge of living a public life. You have to know yourself, and not be easily affected by others, you have to not think that everyone knows you, everyone is watching you, everyone is reading you, everyone is judging you, or that everyone can feel what it is you are feeling inside, that is a delusion, that if you are feeling a certain way, that others can read how you are feeling, and that they will either change to make you feel better, or that you will have to change to make them feel better, that's assuming your audience or who is watching is closer to you than they actually are. These are just words, its not a hug, its not sex, its not an exchange, its not a medication, its not a pill, and its not an alcoholic beverage, which if ingested, read, changes a person inside. That's an assumption, that ones sense of being and expression of themselves is for the purposes of changing another, I cannot change anyone, I learned this as a crisis hotline counselor when I was 19, you cannot fix people, you can only listen, and in doing so, assist others with feeling heard, and feeling better, while reassuring them, that what they are feeling is normal, and provide resources for them for coping. When I started dating, I never thought that I would go through so much trouble spiritually after having been a hotline counselor, with no sex experience, my first exposure to the affects of sex, being "rape." I was not on any psychiatric medications with no history of mental health issues. But as I got older, and with the more experiences I had, later in life, had a few experiences that left me feeling less than capable in life, and today appear as somewhat of a joke, someone who was a crisis hotline counselor yet unmarried, and does not have sex, go figure. Because that is what is special about me, that Im am choosing to preserve myself and not have sex, then that is what is attacked about me, why sex is a topic of discomfort to me, and why I am no comfortable being sexual, and that is the exact weakness that was targeted about me: what I look like naked and what I look like being sexual, and upon opening up, my fears became a reality, made fun of in that light, for what I look like naked, what I look like sexual, to make me look like someone who talks to others, not for companionship (a natural human need) but for sex, an unnatural improvement, which men benefit from, however is an activity that devalues a womans body. So in doing so, was made to look the exact opposite of someone preserved, and what was of value to me, my privacy, my body, and my improvements spiritually happy, was put on display to tarnish my face, my body, and make me look like a trashy example of a public speaker. This is why I don't date, why I will not pen pal anymore, why I feel sick in communication with others, why I am having difficulty holding a conversation in private or in public, without feeling sick.

Online is Not Therapy ...

Although you may be comfortable writing online, remember online is not therapy. I forget sometimes. Therapy is an environment in which you can share your thoughts, your thinking, your worries, your fears, your personal setbacks, your challenges, whats causing you illness, where you are finding difficulty in life, what your dreams are, what you need to work on, saying out loud and acknowledging your weaknesses, in an environment that does not judge you, with someone who with compassion is paid to understand and support you, and advise you. That's the difference, in therapy you discuss things you do not have the answer to, areas in life in which you feel lost or need help, and discuss what needs improvement, letting our guard down. However online, in AA, or anywhere else where you are talking about your life to a group of people, you don't discuss anything too personal, nothing that if talked about, would cause you discomfort to be the subject of conversation among others about you, in a not so understanding light, you never know what about you, can be used, to hurt you, and make you look like something you are not. Online the goal is to maintain readership, not get into too much detail during a bad day harping on negatives, and being immature about your feelings, expecting a pity party, think, is how you are expressing yourself, as read, going to be helpful for someone to hear, or are you expressing yourself in a way that's teaching someone else coping, as influenced that that's an okay way of processing ones emotions, compiling a list of negatives as though going down that route in life, is going to lead to anything positive. You are how you talk about yourself, is the main lesson, when you speak about yourself, we sometimes forget to say our strengths, and when you do that, and talk about whats not going right in your life, you become the smaller person to a conversation, and the other as confided in, becomes the bigger person. Talking without reply and comments, is lonely, but I understand, Im not the most approachable person on the planet, and Im not on the most reliable platform Weebly, for membership and commenting, but appreciate when I do get comments. -Moving on, that's depression, wallowing in an emotion, and everything we are feeling, or being in action, and doing things, to make ourselves feel better, recovery requires both acknowledging where we are wrong, what is the cause of our addictions and delusions, and which behaviors or choices are resulting in consequences disfavorable to our best interests. For me two things that led to my demise were: drinking, a cocaine relapse, and using messaging services. Not much has changed, since 2017, as soon as I got off probation, I went back on messaging services, this time sober, and clean, and something bad happened to be, this time with replies, but the same end result, a bad separation, from whomever I was in contact with, who initially was amicable. Im learning that my need to talk and my delusional need to share my thoughts and talk about my day, my plans, and share my feelings with another human being, are not as important at this point in my life, learning to be more private, more professional, less experimental, and subject myself to less embarrassment, fewer separations, breakups, and delusional attachments in life, especially with famous people who I pen pal fan mail to, which at first was exciting, but once you recognize to focus on your own life, not working as though your working toward being where they are at in life socially and romantically, career wise, you learn that the better off you are professionally, the more put together you are personally, the easier it is to talk to anyone, whether that be in real life, in a meeting, online, famous or not, not intimidated by the lives of others, with things to talk about, the more you have in common with someone, the better a match it is conversation wise, equally beneficial to know each other, but if you are not doing well in life, no one famous or successful, is strong enough to lift or inspire you, unless you value and appreciate yourself, make progress, and be someone who also values the time of others, has something nice to share, something worth their review, and having arrived to wellness. Just as much as you are proud of them, for their work, be an interesting person too to know.

Dear Audience ...

9/6/2020

At this point in time, it is clear that I am not able to handle confrontations on my own, and while at times, forgiveness and compassion and support are given, for some reason seem unreceptive to change in someone who I felt hurt me and made me look grose and desperate, as though I think Im attractive and with confidence appear in a way, that I think will attract with expectation of attracting, however now with bipolar and night meds, and reports of testing concerns and personal issues resolved in terms of who is in charge of my health, its me, a really grose subject to talk about, hygiene, and mental health, and what happens when you lose stability and illness kicks in, whos fault is that, the best we can do is be compassionate trusting of what direction is taken, and with support, let them be, that's the type of relationship with someone or friendship in which growth is accepted, improvement believed in, and without question or criticism then or now, never leave them on the basis of appearances, the minute you discuss the conditions of others, is the moment what you say becomes an issue that you yourself have to deal with as having had addressed. I am a very spiritual person, once photogenic, and when not never wondered, just didn't photo and stayed my course, assumed that I was aging or that it was from studying, and had faith that when I have time to exercise can afford to shop and learn how to do makeup, that I will be able to put myself back together, I first discovered "Bobbi Brown concealer" working for the LA City Attorneys Office. As you get older, you realize its important, looking back. Be careful how you describe you appearances past always speak highly of yourself, and try to take pictures, its not normal to document your life, but if you have time to, take pictures and don't be too shy to share, no matter what you look like. -Its actually very painful when you admit what occurred past leading up to your suicide attempt, and no amount of schooling, or improvements frees you from question, its always a bad decision to drink, to argue, be possessive, be threatened by, if someone doesn't want to hang out with you, that means they have more important things to do in their down time, it's a matter of respect, and you have to respect the relationships of others, whatever that's about, they have known eachother longer, you should be happy for those who have friends and lives, and if you have a life too through them, then that's whats painful, that beyond that experience in life there were no future opportunities for socialization of romantic relationships social. If it is disclosed that you have bee hospitalized, that is your partners choice to keep you separate from their social lives, that's their choice, and you may never know who their friends are, or who they have dated, and they may know him, and who he is dating, all that should matter is your own wellness. Those who love you will say things to you all the time to question how serious you are in life, how disciplined you are, and don't be surprised that anything you enjoy doing they feel worried about or question you about: friendships feminine, introduced to all your friends, accepting your past, respecting and loving you, and you may even feel challenged or threatened this is what I want Im not sure, and if it breaks your heart, so be it, be yourself, but don't combine that comment with another comment, as thought both comments have anything to do with meaning "who misses you" is your ideal. That doesn't mean quit being on your high horse, like you agreed to date someone who you find out wasn't that into you anyways, demanding monogamy, and not go out with friends, that's a good thing, all you have to do is explain to him the importance of friendships, and how you would not be where you are able likeable had you separated from friends, that's entrusting your barometer for wellness on someone who is observing your life, assessing you based upon their higher standpoint in life, and the less you are able to communicate, and the more insecure you are, the less helpful you become, if they wanted independent be independent, and stay upon failure. Is the lesson. They will always be nice to you, but its hard to relive life with a huge gap in the number of years you could've experienced growing with someone, and instead alone, sickly. That was a choice you could not have anticipated, but life challenges you with more interpretations than you are probably ready to process, and I promise you if you don't look well, then that is why you get rejected as though you cant handle detachments, and hurt as though you do not recognize what occurs upon separation as though you did not try hard enough and if upon acceptances granted, left someone because you wanted more, always acknowledge that the person who loves you is doing their best and while they may not tell you why they are so independent of you, maybe its because they have exciting lives, you don't blend in well with. When you are easily threatened, that's is why you cannot socialize in groups.

This is a story about a known cause for separation, alcohol, a known point of disagreement past, which discussion of now, is not to rehash the past to explain what's occurring now. Whatever is the right decision for you, is your faith, and if you think you are doing the right thing, allowing this person to live a better life among those who you feel don't belong too sensitive, then it's best to let them be with a woman they are proud of, at ease, light.

What's difficult now is sharing your story, if your condition is not well, your story past is not important to hear, especially if people think they know your story and have you all sized up, it's they have figured you out, before you have even shared, because they feel it's their right to observe someone who is focused and going nowhere, see how they feel when they work hard and upon thinking they will have arrived to a talkable place in life, wind up alone. I'm sorry.

You Will Never Know My Worth ...

What is stability? Having faith in yourself. And what is self-worth? Being of value to others. And what happens if you get punished? Upon being punished you automatically hurt everyone who has ever known you, anyone who has ever thought highly of you, anyone who has ever trusted you, anyone who has ever loved you, and anyone who has ever hooked up with you. Once you are found to be unacceptable to most and rejected upon appearing mentally ill, is when society determines "they have had enough of looking at you, and choose not to accept you, based upon where you are at in life." And to further impermeate that impression of you, you are put places in life, that represent why you have mental illness, and further justify your condition as by your own misconduct, lost, or disillusioned, self-harming, or out alone, if out of place, and not where you should be in life, in a different environment, don't expect to feel like yourself, where you are not comfortable, nor used to being, or belonging, or having had experienced good times if you only go out once a year, with friends, and then now with no friends, it's no different, if it's not where your heart is, then you will not find any answers to your problems being around people, it's good exposure, and it may be fun to socialize, but at the end of the day, you have to calculate, to what extent there forward, of who is incorporated into your life, as measured against your progress, to determine whether you are at an acceptable place in life appearance wise, progress wise, or whether you deserve to not be tormented or not questioned as apart of the problem. During COVID many of us, slowed down, including me, and as others have gotten better so have I, regardless of who I have been talking to or not, that shows a wellness curve, such as a beginning of faith, which demonstrates planning ahead, or feeling good ahead, those are the people leading the pack, you are not changed or manipulated nor invested in anyone's changes in life or improvements at this time, for comparison to causes or miscalculations of blames as to the causes for illness in Asia, and how illness in Asia, caused illness over here. Ask CNN, who covered the Malaysian Airlines flight disappearance, I watched everyday, until they found a piece of paper in the ocean, and when a piece of paper in the ocean was found, there were papers scattered across westwood boulevard, I patrolled for 4-5 years, and was attacked once, a car speeding diagonally at me, upon seeing me. That was my first experience of being seen and attacked as though my presence or disillusionment was meaningful in a way, that they spotted me, saw what was going on around me energy wise, and sought to scare me, similar to the experience seeing a car with clear windows drive down San Vicente and up Wilshire, and then a car behind me following the guy inside stood out. Driving a lot, certain people stand out, and you don't know why, or where that energy is coming from. As solution once to gather everyone's best interests before being punished suggested a group to support, and titled the flyers by whom the flyers were made by, this was before I was totally convinced the Tinder Smoke Shop on my street was similar to the Tinder app, a possible connection, all "Cinder-rella" jokes aside, I know they meant well, but for interpretation with the Facebook movie: "hot or not" makes it seem as though there is a beauty question then, then all my friends are looked at, and then they look at me, then they feel above me, with them, and see me below everyone, and then there is me now, converted to gay, upon being called a pervert, conditioned myself. With advance notice to where I was placed, self-identified as someone who doesn't hook up, and because of my condition not worth the risk to love again, told them. People will want to have sexual experiences with you to try to resolve you of what they think needs help, as though your body and face do not resemble something who is content, experimental with you, and if they can figure out what Phil was told upon being around him, then they think they understand everything about you, how you work, how you feel, what your relationship with women is like, when it started and why, and what caused attraction, and whether you knew at the time, that was awkward or not love, and how above you others felt they were or are at this time, by now I can't even hug people or make eye contact, and sex is a difficult subject I don't try for in life. So letting them win and becoming gay, was a step in a direction to appease what was shouted at me, as though confirming that belief would situate them better off at understanding me or the conditions around me, and where that gay energy was coming from, my exposures, touching, wanting, looking, and where my face comes from, heart, attachment, exposure, sex, and whether what was transferred: luck and confidence, has now caused me to be completely separate from everyone, not even gay would be attracted to, mentally ill, that's why it's offensive to shout at me, then cause me to conform to an opinion not hook up, to see whether I feel good looking at and its looking at that causes me to feel in the mood, whether it's a knowing of something others don't know, and whether I am doing good or not in life, and whether it is acceptable for me to touch myself, and then have me describe in public the purpose for it, how long it takes, and why I don't like myself anymore, after visuals, and lost my body shape, and lost my face, only further conforming to a term, thought deserved. Its not a joke when you give your heart away to anyone, that's you trusting and loving a person, a shared bond, of seeing one another in a way most do not, that's to preserve your normal life, you don't talk about what happens privately, how you look like someone whos not in the moment or only dating for observation, as though you studied men, and questioned their sex habits, because you were a rape crisis hotline counselor, like you were counseling in a way disfavorable to men in general or convincing women that they were harmed or telling them to identify as victim, that's not what a crisis hotline is, its people calling, to talk, and talk until they feel normal again, its not a calculation of incidences, its not a police report, it's a line to talk, and it was not a job anyone knew where I was working. Its not something you talk about who you are or where you work. So whats so shocking? Is that I did not start dating or hooking up until college, I didn't date or hook up or have sex in high school I wasn't ready yet, or who I liked taken, but liked me.

When Someone You Love Hurts You ...

Its common to be rejected once your personality changes, if you become quiet, if your face changes, if you no longer represent something likeable to interact with. That means you need to change. And whether for what reasons you have changed noticeable to you or not, if those you know are unhappy with you and you don't understand why, with two jobs and in school part-time beginning third in your class, then figure out what happened to you, or what you have said that has caused them to be in disagreement with you, mad at you, or turn on you, if not provoked by you, there must be something about you they find offensive, and its not that you are focused and not talkative your hyper self, its that you exhibit traits of an "herb" someone who thinks they are well, and focused on something other than those in a room, preoccupied like they have important stuff to do, and when you are focused around those who are at ease, they criticize your demeanor as not being normal and question you. Even if you are doing your best, figure out whats going wrong with your relationships and don't be avoidant or get upset, the last time I saw my best friend was 2015 while working in century city she was happy, and we toured the Paramount Lot, it was empty that day, no one was working, just us touring the studios, the one that impressed me was the "props studio, a room dedicated to movie props actually used in movies that are saved all together in one room." I don't think anyone has actual knowledge of sudden mood changes or personality changes, if something has happned to you, like being firevaulted out of your computer non of your "la mer" kit passwords working, and you backed up last this semester but not recently, you saved most, what you dragged over to your Lacie, learn how to do the whole computer is what that means. You don't automatically think someone did this to me, you think, I forgot my password, and if all the combinations you have ever used were typed in, and you don't remember making up a new combination, then maybe you changed it and didn't write it down, and if that hurts your head, because why would I firevault and change the password, and not write it down, that doesn't make sense. If everything important was written down. Now think back. Who has been in your apartment, exactly? That is their alibi. She will never be able to prove it was anyone who has been in her apartment, because if she brings up the subject, she will have to discuss all visitations, and when, and if we know when, then she will look bad, and even worse look irresponsible as having worked for Childrens Law Center with a 48 year old pen pal by text. Who I dated before my job started. So, because Navid and Sarah have died and because those are her siblings friends, and because we know she is focused, to test to see whether it's a change in her that caused a change in who is connected to her to feel sick, and if you retrace what she has been doing who she dated and if I think this makes her look sick, then I can prove that she made others feel sick, with expectation of her doing well as a law student, so lets condition her to separate from friends again and tell her something that makes her choose, lets see how she responds to accusation of jealousy upon hanging out with a friend shes known since kindergarten, and then tell her that he thinks Im better than her, and see how she responds after we have sex and I tell her "she sounds like a truck driver" and she cries, convince her shes ready to date, then say on messenger Lilya told me "she misses me, we used to ride the train together to work everyday" she was renting near Hollywood somewhere on stipend from Yeshiva from NY and he was commuting from Orange in Yorba Linda. And when I walked up, after he needed a ride to the other campus, she starts saying "well I share my notes with everyone." At the time I thought that was unrealistic, why would anyone work really hard on something then share it with everyone, how is that smart if she goes to Yeshiva, shouldn't they be able to do work on their own. But we dated anyways, through a lot, but because he was not sure about me told me "he wanted to be with a smart attorney" and because I was not sure if I was going to finish with my grades or pass the bar, I was there to graduate. Because I got paranoid after they died I micro-blogged on Twitter, and then took it down, and found it up.
